
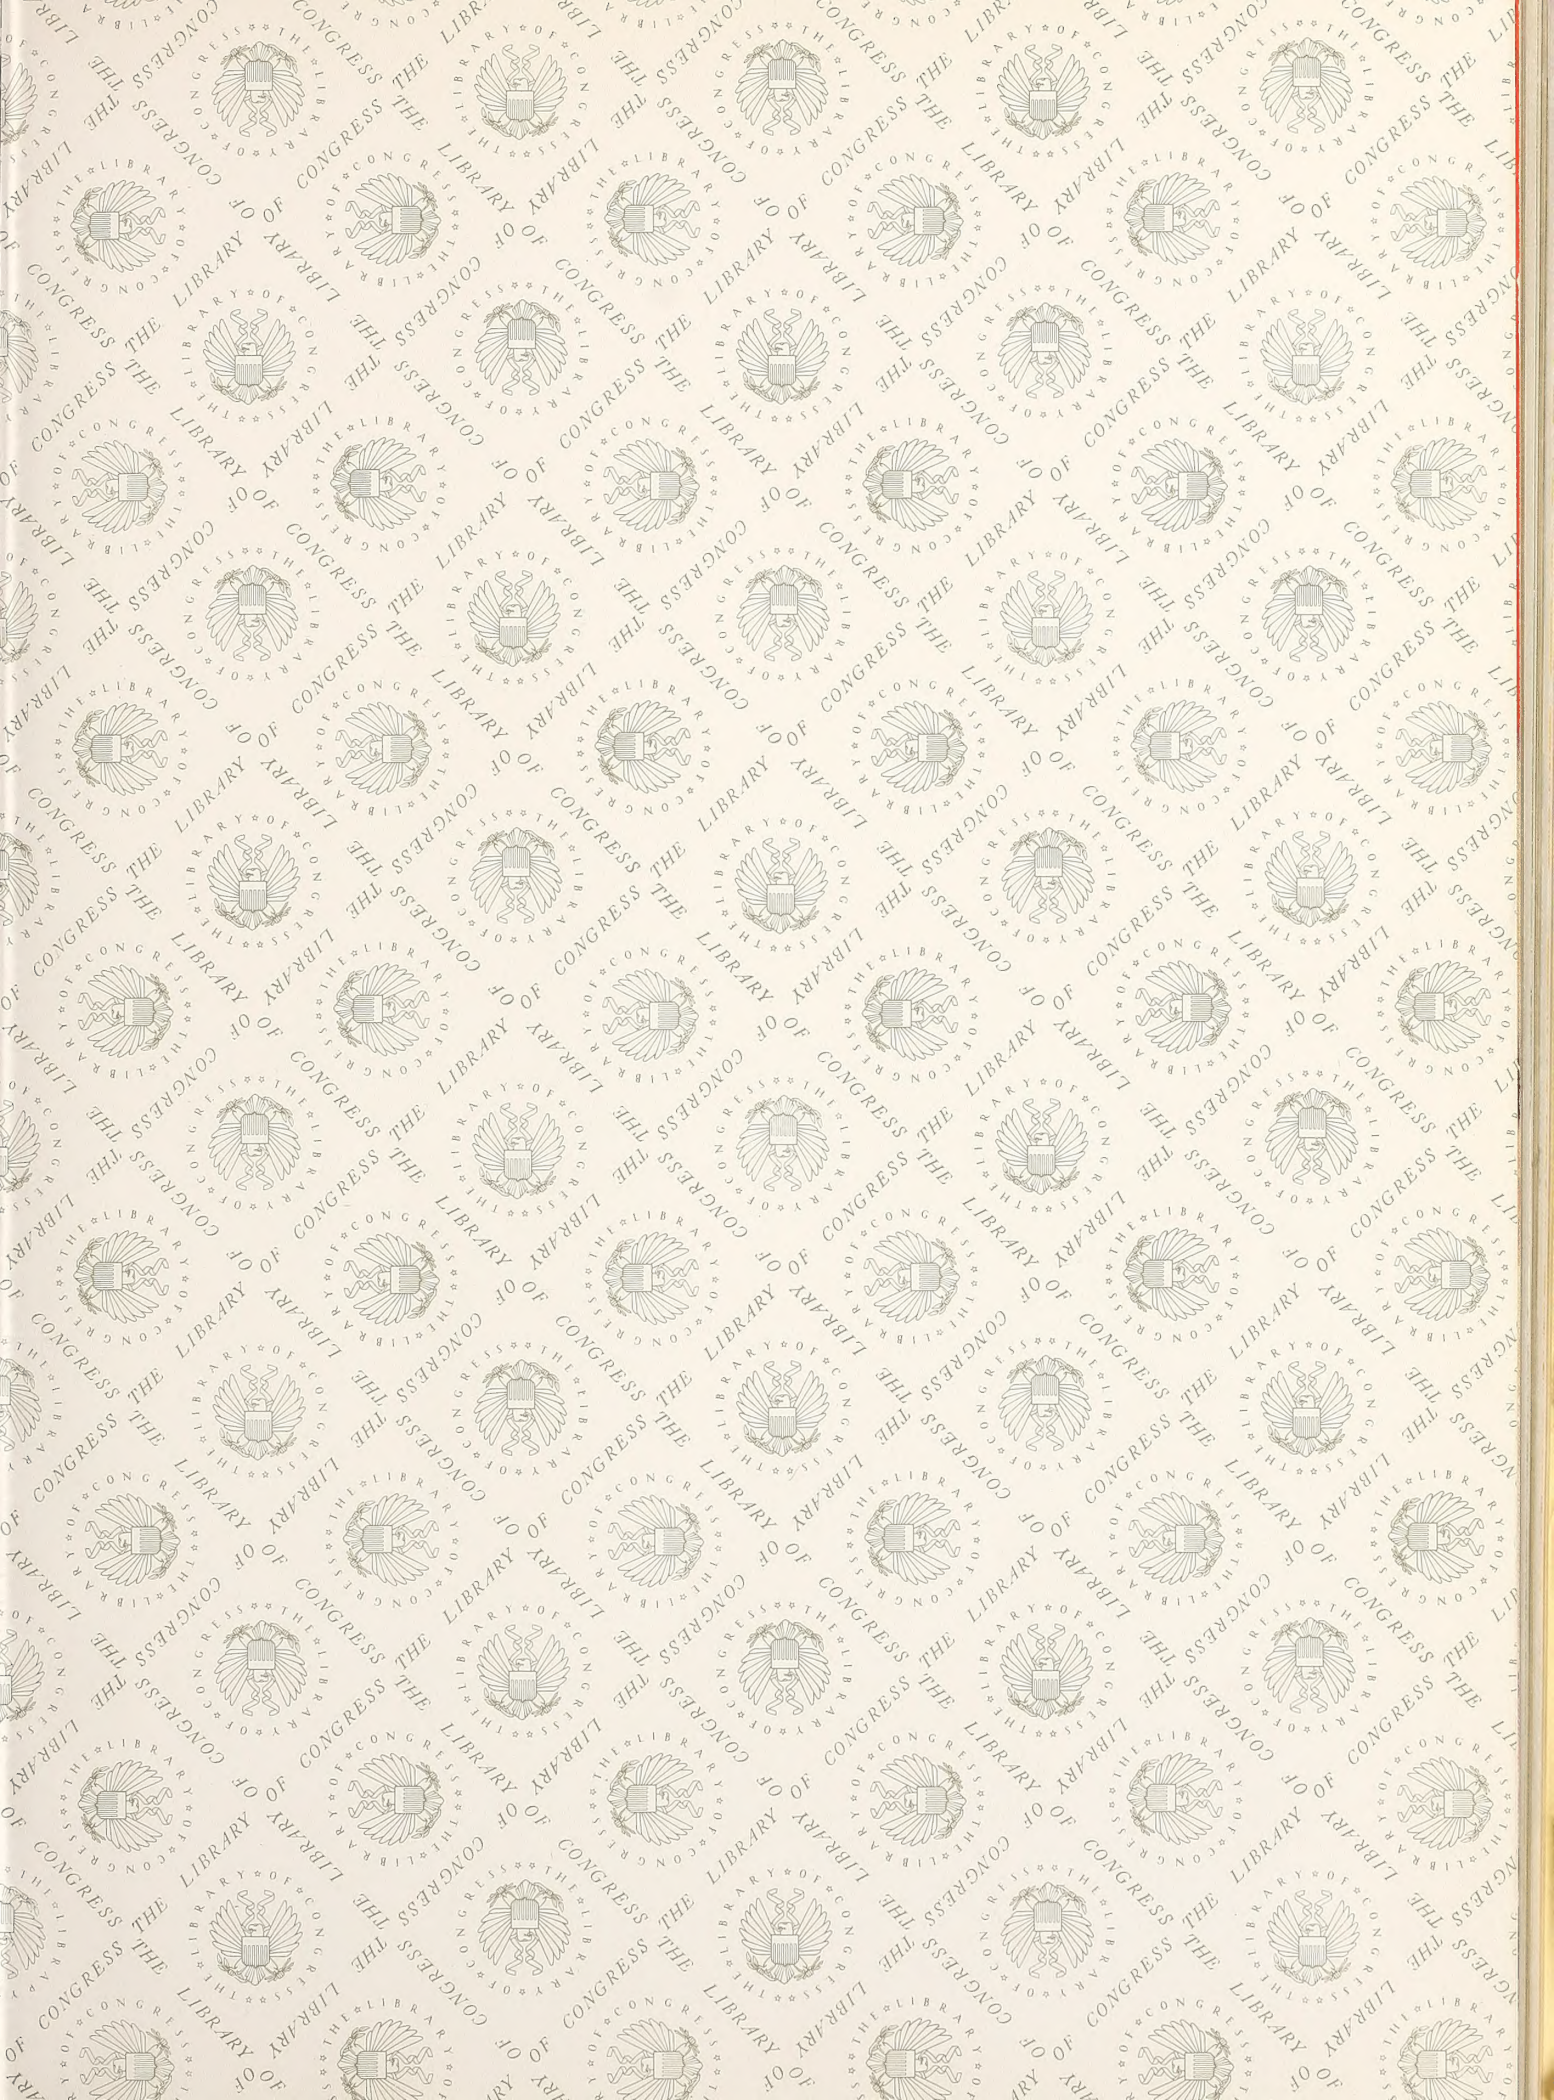
THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS



Scanned from the collections of
The Library of Congress

Packard Campus for Audio Visual Conservation www.loc.gov/avconservation

Motion Picture and Television Reading Room www.loc.gov/rr/mopic

Recorded Sound Reference Center
www.loc.gov/rr/record

THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

LARGEST GUARANTEED CIRCULATION OF ANY SCREEN MAGAZINE

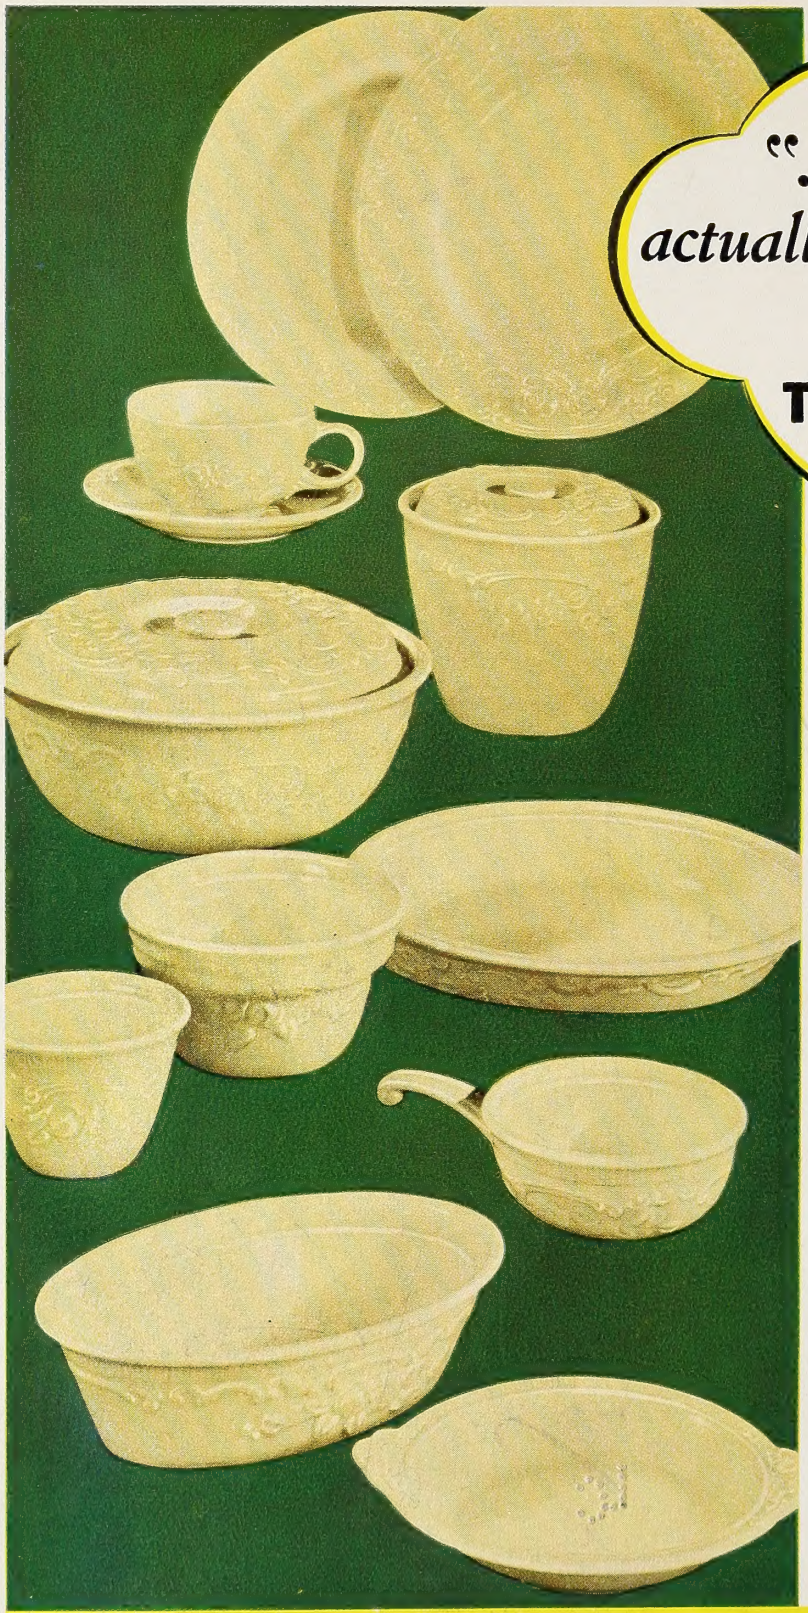
Modern Screen

ember 34

O

NTS

OCT 16 1934



HY

NE STAR

ates

OMEN

Jean Harlow

"...and you can actually OVENBAKE in these pretty TABLE DISHES!"

THAT'S the marvel of these OvenServe table dishes. Every single piece can be used in the oven! All the bowls and serving dishes, platters and saucy individual French casseroles, the pie plates and custard cups—even the cups, saucers and plates—stand oven heat, oven baking. The dishes don't get that brown, cooked look either. They don't "craze." The bright sunny yellow color remains fresh and new looking.

Is it beans for dinner? Then ovenbake them in the individual bean pots. Or how about a baked meat dish or scalloped vegetables, or any one of a dozen, or a hundred, other things? Cook them in these dishes and whisk them from oven to table in the same dishes. Simplifies serving enormously . . . not to mention the way it cuts down on the dishwashing.

And OvenServe dishes are simple to wash, too. No scraping; no scouring; just hot water, soap and the dishmop.

Cost a lot? No, ma'am! Just a fraction of the cost of the kitchen ovenwares you know about. And OvenServe dishes have the added advantage of being table dishes, not kitchen ware. Buy them by the piece.

Guaranteed
To Withstand Changes of Oven and Refrigerator Temperatures
OVENSERVE
"The Oven Ware for Table Service"
The Homer Laughlin China Co.
Newell, W. Va.

POPOVERS! Ummm!

One cup flour
¼ tsp. salt
⅞ cup milk
2 eggs
½ tsp. melted butter

Mix salt and flour, add milk gradually to make a smooth, thin batter. Beat eggs until light and add to mixture. Add butter. Beat hard. Fill buttered OvenServe custard cups two-thirds full. Bake 30-35 minutes, beginning with a hot oven (450° F.) and decreasing gradually to moderate oven (375°F.) as popovers begin to brown. Makes six popovers.

OVENSERVE

Sold at Kresge 5c & 10c stores and other 5c, 10c and $1.00 stores

PN1993
.M334

CARL LAEMMLE Presents

NIGHT LIFE OF THE GODS

For the Love of Mique!

MYTHOLOGY opens up and spills all the Greek gods and goddesses on Modern Broadway. Imagine Neptune, Venus, Mercury, Adonis, Apollo, Diana, Bacchus, Hercules swarming into a fashionable night club and stampeding the high-hats and low necks of today. That's the picture.

It is a hilarious novelty comedy [from the book by Thorne Smith] fantastic and odd—so unusual and so well directed by LOWELL SHERMAN that the whole world will love it.

Produced by Carl Laemmle, Jr.

IT'S A UNIVERSAL

©CIB 241829 OCT 31 1934

MODERN SCREEN

WHY I HATE WOMEN.....Bette Davis 26
A heart-breaking chapter from Bette's early life will tell you the reason

THE MOST ROMANTIC STORY EVER TOLD.....Katherine Albert 28
Beginning the thrilling story of the movies

"GIVE ME ONE YEAR," SAYS HELEN HAYES.....Mary Sharon 30
A brave but very tired little woman pleads for an interlude of happiness

SON OF TRAGEDY.....William French 34
A sincere and touching farewell to Russ Columbo

ON TRIAL.....Dorothy Manners 35
Anna Sten is the defendant. You are the jury. What is your verdict?

THE BIOGRAPHY OF A BACHELOR GIRL.....Regina Cannon 36
A witty and scintillating fictionization of the current picture

CANTOR'S RECIPE FOR HAPPINESS.....Hilary Lynn 38
Eddie and Ida know the recipe is fool-proof. They've used it for years

HOW TO BECOME AN ORCHID.....Dorothy Spensley 40
Fay Wray gives you many a sign to follow on the road to glamor

HOLLYWOOD THINKS HE'S NUTTY.....Martha Kerr 41
And Francis Lederer doesn't care. He continues to do as he pleases

I HAVE BEEN KEPT BY A MOVIE STAR..... 42
Concluding the unhappy adventures of "Mr. Famous Movie Star"

MY BIG SISTER RUBY.....Marjorie Keeler 44
The youngest Keeler gives the lowdown on her famous sister

HAVE YOU CHANGED IN THE LAST FIVE YEARS?.....Caroline Somers Hoyt 52
The movie stars are not ashamed that they're "not like they used to was"

THE GREAT LAUGHTON MYSTERY.....Robert Fender 54
Talk about your Garbos! Charlie Laughton has her beat off the boards

WHAT ADRIENNE FEARS.....Dora Albert 55
The Ames-Cabot marriage is fighting—desperately—against the Hollywood jinx

ADDING COMMON SENSE TO GLAMOR.....Virginia T. Lane 56
It's possible to combine the two! Little Jean Parker knows

Between You and Me..... 6
Their Studio Addresses..... 7
The Modern Hostess..... 8
The Report Card..... 10
Good News..... 12
They Visit New York..... 16
Exclusive Portraits..... 19 and 45
Many Happy Returns..... 32
Reviews..... 50
Modern Screen Patterns..... 61
All Joking Aside..... 62
Modern Screen Dramatic School..... 64
Beauty Advice..... 66
"Enter Madame!" Preview..... 68
The Information Desk..... 76

MARY BURGUM, Managing Editor

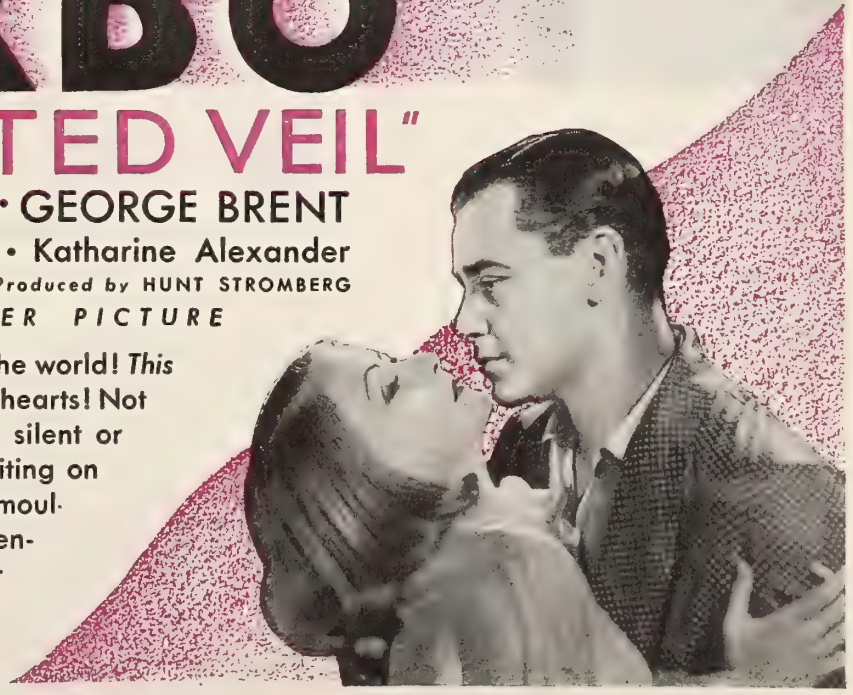
REGINA CANNON, Associate Editor ABRIL LAMARQUE, Art Editor WALTER RAMSEY, Western Representative

Published monthly and copyright 1934 by Dell Publishing Company, Incorporated. Office of publication at Washington and South Avenues, Dunellen, N. J. Executive and editorial offices, 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y. George T. Delacorte, Jr., President, H. Meyer, Vice-President, M. Delacorte, Secretary. Vol. 9, No. 1, December, 1934. Printed in the U. S. A. Price in the United States, $1.20 a year, 10c a copy. Canadian subscriptions, $2.40 a year. Foreign subscriptions, $2.20 a year. Entered as second-class matter, September 18, 1930, at the Post Office at Dunellen, New Jersey, under act of March 3, 1879. The publishers accept no responsibility for the return of unsolicited material.

GARBO

"THE PAINTED VEIL"

with HERBERT MARSHALL · GEORGE BRENT



Warner Oland • Jean Hersholt • Katharine Alexander

Directed by RICHARD BOLESLAWSKI • Produced by HUNT STROMBERG

A METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER PICTURE

This is the Garbo whose flame fires the world! This is the STAR who enthralls love-hungry hearts! Not in all her past successes whether in silent or talking pictures has she been so exciting on the screen as now in this story of a smoul-dering love, of high adventure, of ten-derness that yields tears. This is your Garbo, the Star of exquisite mys-tery and provocative romance!

Based on the novel by W. SOMERSET MAUGHAM

Between you & me

• Come join our "open forum" and let us know what is on your mind, cinematically speaking

The movies need more great lovers, say some of the folks.

Moody Lady

Every once in a while a benevolent mood descends upon me and I want to express my appreciation of the film personalities who intrigue me. This is one of the times and this time I yield to the mood.

I consider Garbo the most fascinating screen personality of all time, Novarro the most romantic male figure, Helen Mack the most interesting of the younger actresses, and Drue Leighton the most charming new blonde. The old-timer I miss most is elfin Betty Bronson. I've never understood why she vanished from the screen.

Sorry I can't mention more men, but honestly, I think most of the present screen men are a total loss. We need more great lovers, and not so many wise-cracking smart-alecks. See?—Mrs. R. L. Price, Midlothian, Ill.

(Just wait till the GableToneMcCrea-Crosby BolesMarchetcetera etcetera fans read your last paragraph! We're just a little bit glad we're not you.)

Fans Want the Truth

Congratulations on your very interesting and rather daring July issue. This is the first time in ten years that I have been able to read a story in a fan magazine without laughing at the apparent lies it told. Your stories are human and believable. It took courage to be the first to drop the milk and honey type that is usually offered to the gullible moving picture public. Keep up the good work.—Molly Kaplan, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Some More About Censorship

I am a woman fifty-five years old with strict views about right and wrong, and it is my belief that this war against the movies is most unfair. Moving pictures are the greatest thing in the form of entertainment that the world has ever had. Why crush them? Other arts are left alone but there is the everlasting "pickiness" at the movies. Of course, a vulgar picture is not desirable and occasionally one is "not so good," but why destroy such brilliant and enlightening entertainment for—well, for some reason or other.

Criticism of censorship goes on and on and on.

Our young folks are better off, too, in any theatre than in beer gardens and road houses. So, here is one so-called old-fashioned woman who says, don't take our movies from us. In my girlhood young folks, or any folks, were not so fortunate in seeing such splendid shows for so little money. We either had to pay two dollars to see John Drew or Viola Allen or be satisfied with Kitty Rhodes.—Mrs. H. L. F., Harrisburg, Pa.

I'm firmly in favor of movies that depict life—life in the raw or life in the sanest and most refined manner—and as long as the story is typical—though not necessarily symbolic—I'm stronger than ever. Let me add that I've never seen a movie that caused me any mental agony or blushes. When movies become so nasty that they're embarrassing then I, like numerous other fans, will cease going.

If only the nation realized that the average person goes to the movies for an escape—not to absorb vile, filthy ideas on sex or gangstering. They go to escape into a dream world where they are more entranced in the star of the story than symbolically self-identified with a certain character or background.

The movies didn't start Chicago gangstering, neither did they cause Lizzie Tish to run away with the last carnival show that hit town. The movies didn't turn John Dillinger into the underworld man he was. The newspapers did that for him. —Otis Cooper, Russellville, Ky.

Are we reverting to the Victorian era? In 1930 came the revival of the church-going custom and now comes another attempt to better our morals and lead us back to the straight and narrow path—the path which is strewn with ignorance, misery and superstition.

In the past few years motion pictures, knowingly or unknowingly, have been combating our greatest evil—ignorance. The pictures, while entertaining us, have depicted many pitfalls which face young people. By doing this, they have taught us to avoid the (Continued on page 115)

The Parker gal almost swept one reader off his feet.

Their Studio Addresses

Columbia Studios, 1438 Gower St., Hollywood, Calif.
Fox Studios, Movietone City, Westwood, Calif.
Samuel Goldwyn Studios, 7210 Santa Monica Blvd., Hollywood, Calif.
Mascot Studios, 6001 Santa Monica Blvd., Hollywood, Calif.
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios, Culver City, Calif.
Monogram Studios, 1040 N. Las Palmas Ave., Hollywood, Calif.
Paramount Studios, Hollywood, Calif.
RKO-Studios, 780 Gower St., Los Angeles, Calif.
Twentieth Century Studios, 1041 N. Formosa Ave., Hollywood, Calif.
United Artists Studios, 1041 N. Formosa Ave., Hollywood, Calif.
Universal Studios, Universal City, Calif.
Warner Bros.—First National Studios, Burbank, Calif.

AHERNE, BRIAN: RKO-Radio.
ALBERTSON, FRANK: Free lance. Write him at Paramount.
ALBRIGHT, HARDIE: Free lance. Write him at Mascot.
ALEXANDER, KATHERINE: Free lance. Write her at M-G-M.
ALEXANDER, TAD: M-G-M.
ALLAN, ELIZABETH: M-G-M.
ALLEN, GRACIE: Paramount.
ALLEN, JUDITH: Paramount.
ALLWYN, ASTRID: Free lance. Write her at Fox.
AMES, ADRIENNE: Free lance. Write her at Paramount.
AMES, ROSEMARY: Fox.
ANGEL, HEATHER: Universal.
ARLEN, RICHARD: Free lance. Write him at Paramount.
ARLISS, GEORGE: 20th Century.
ARMETTA, HENRY: Universal.
ARMSTRONG, ROBERT: Monogram.
ARTHUR, JEAN: Columbia.
ASTAIRE, FRED: RKO-Radio.
ASTHER, NILS: RKO-Radio.
ASTOR, MARY: Warner Bros.
ATES, ROSCOE: Free lance. Write him at Warners.
ATWILL, LIONEL: Monogram.
AYRES, LEW: Fox.
BAER, MAX: Paramount.
BANCROFT, GEORGE: Free lance. Write him at Paramount.
BARBIER, GEORGE: Paramount.
BARNES, BINNIE: Universal.
BARNETT, VINCE: Universal.
BARRAT, ROBERT: Warner Bros.
BARRIE, MONA: Fox.
BARRYMORE, JOHN: M-G-M.
BARRYMORE, LIONEL: M-G-M.
BARTHELMESS, RICHARD: Warner Bros.
BAXTER, JANE: United Artists.
BAXTER, WARNER: Fox.
BEAL, JOHN: RKO-Radio.
BEECHER, JANET: 20th Century.
BEERY, WALLACE: M-G-M.
BELLAMY, MADGE: Fox.
BELLAMY, RALPH: Free lance. Write him at Columbia.
BENNETT, CONSTANCE: 20th Century.
BENNETT, JOAN: Free lance. Write her at Paramount.
BERGNER, ELIZABETH: United Artists.
BEST, EDNA: Free lance. Write her at Warners.
BICKFORD, CHARLES: Free lance. Write him at Paramount.
BIRELL, TALA: Free lance. Write her at Columbia.
BLACKMER, SIDNEY: Free lance. Write him at RKO-Radio.
BLANE, SALLY: Columbia.
BLONDELL, JOAN: Warner Bros.
BLUE, MONTE: Free lance. Write him at M-G-M.
BOLAND, MARY: Paramount.
BOLES, GLEN: Warner Bros.
BOLES, JOHN: Fox.
BOURNE, WHITNEY: Paramount.
BOW, CLARA: Fox.
BOYER, CHARLES: Fox.

(Continued on page 108)

Women Must Avoid Harsh Laxatives

THE feminine sex must be particularly careful in the choice of a laxative.

Women should avoid a laxative that is too strong—that shocks the system—that weakens. They should avoid laxatives that are offered as cure-alls—treatments for a thousand ills. A laxative is intended for one purpose only—to relieve constipation.

Ex-Lax is offered for just what it is—a gentle, effective laxative.

Ex-Lax is effective—but it is mild. It acts gently yet thoroughly. It works over-night without over-action.

Ex-Lax will not form a habit—you take it just when you need a laxative. You don't have to keep on increasing the dose to get results.

For 28 years, Ex-Lax has had the confidence of doctors, nurses, druggists and the general public alike, because it is everything a laxative ought to be.

Children like to take Ex-Lax because they love its delicious chocolate flavor. Grown-ups, too, prefer to take Ex-Lax because they have found it thoroughly effective—without the disagreeable after-effects of harsh, nasty-tasting laxatives.

At all drug stores—in 10c and 25c boxes.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS!

Get genuine Ex-Lax—spelled E-X-L-A-X—to make sure of getting Ex-Lax results.

Keep "regular" with

EX-LAX

THE CHOCOLATED LAXATIVE

THE MODERN HOSTESS

BY MARJORIE DEEN

Packaged foods have a definite place on the well-planned menu. You'll agree when you learn why

Joan Crawford, Clark Gable and Otto Kruger dine together in a scene from "Chained."

A SUCCESSFUL scene in a movie and a delicious dinner served at home, at first glance seem to have little in common, yet both depend largely for their success upon the selfsame thing—the correct execution of a well laid plan. This was brought home to me forcibly, the other day, when I observed how Director Clarence Brown went about planning a scene in which Joan, Clark and Otto Kruger are shown eating a simple meal in their forthcoming picture, "Chained."

First, Director Brown told the assistant director what he wanted. The assistant in turn went into a huddle with the head of the property department, upon whom there now rested the responsibility of providing the necessary food, silver, linens and china, and a lovely informal basket of fresh fruit for the centerpiece. Once the table was set it became the duty of the script girl to list the items that appeared on it as well as the details of the costumes worn by the principals so that no error would creep in during the retakes. So you see, at the time Director Brown was ready to "shoot," the table was ready, and everybody was able to proceed with the making of the picture.

Now you, as a housewife, probably have no assistant—unless you are one of the favored few who has a maid in these parlous times—and you certainly have no script girl! But, just as certainly, you are director of your meals and as such you are personally responsible for the actions and expressions of those who partake of them. You would do well, therefore, to emulate some of the steps in meal preparation which make a well directed scene in a picture move with ease and a complete freedom from apparent effort.

The first thing then, as director in your home, is to make a plan. Naturally this plan will have to be sufficiently elastic to allow for (Continued on page 74)

The GIBSON FAMILY

MARTY, AS CLUB MAID, gives a good performance when she tells Jane to use Ivory Flakes for her stockings just as fine stores advise.

Good stores do tell you to use Ivory Flakes for your stockings. And here's why: The sheer silk of stockings is very sensitive. It needs a pure soap. Ivory Flakes are so pure that both the makers and sellers of fine stockings recommend them. These people know silk. They like the way Ivory Flakes are shaved up into tiny, curly wisps, too. Ivory Flakes won't flatten down on your stockings to cause soap spots and runs!

And here's a thought for you thrifty girls—Ivory Flakes cost less than other "silk stocking" soaps. There are lots more ounces in the box! Just hold on to that thought and the next time you're at your grocer's merely say, "A box of Ivory Flakes, please."

IVORY FLAKES · 99 44/100 % PURE

IN THE DRESSING-ROOM
" 'Scuse me, Miss Jane, but yo' sho' is luxurious on stockings. That soap yo' use must be pow'ful strong. Why doan yo' use nice gentle Ivory Flakes the way stores tell yo' to?"

"LADY, WHY YO' LEAVE dis chile wif me?" gasps Sam. "Yo' train goin' soon."

"Where's the station drug store? Where's my head?" demands Nurse Tippit. "Why did I forget to pack Jerry's cake of Ivory?"

"Lots o' time," says Sam, turning smooth as a chocolate custard, now that he knows the reason. Then he chuckles to Jerry, "So she's goin' to keep yo' 99 44/100% pure."

"PURE IVORY SOAP FOR BABIES" SAY DOCTORS

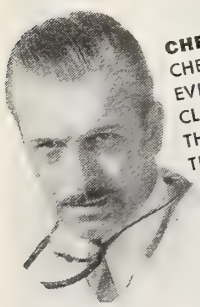
"REMEMBER THIS HAT, HENRY?" asks Mrs. Gibson softly.

"Sure!" says Mr. Gibson. "It chaperoned us on our honeymoon, Sara. And we knew we were made for each other because we'd both brought Ivory Soap!"

"It's still the finest complexion soap," declares Mrs. Gibson.

"Absolutely!" agrees Mr. Gibson. "Your complexion is as clear and fine as the day I first kissed it, 17 years ago!"

SENSITIVE SKINS ARE SAFE WITH IVORY SOAP



SICK HEADACHES were driving me CRAZY!

• I suffered intensely from sick headaches for years—until I wished my head would open to relieve the pain. Nothing seemed to help the constipation that caused them. When I was visiting my sister-in-law in Tacoma she gave me her favorite medicine, FEEN-A-MINT. I feel duty bound to let you know what a help FEEN-A-MINT has been. It cleansed out my system wonderfully—all the poisons went. And it keeps me so regular that I am a new woman. It doesn't cramp or gripe a person either. I've told all my friends about it.

The easy, pleasant way to combat constipation

Typical of hundreds of unsolicited letters in our files! Over 15,000,000 men and women have found that FEEN-A-MINT is the easy, pleasant way to combat constipation and all its attendant ills. It is thorough and at the same time gentle. Pleasant to take—children think it's just nice chewing gum. Because you chew it, it works more thoroughly than ordinary laxatives. Try it and see—15 and 25¢ at any druggist's.

CHEW YOUR LAXATIVE... CHEWING DISTRIBUTES IT EVENLY THROUGH THE CLOGGED INTESTINES SO THAT IT DOES A MORE THOROUGH JOB WITHOUT HARMFUL VIOLENCE. THAT IS WHY FEEN-A-MINT IS ESPECIALLY GOOD FOR WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

FOR EFFECTIVE RELIEF CHEW YOUR LAXATIVE

FEEN-A-MINT

THE CHEWING-GUM LAXATIVE

THE REPORT CARD

THESE PICTURES GET "A"

BABY TAKE A BOW (Fox).
Shirley Temple and Jimmy Dunn.

THE BARRETTS OF WIMPOLE STREET (M-G-M).
Something you don't want to miss. Norma Shearer, Charles Laughton and Fredric March score.

BELLE OF THE NINETIES (Paramount).
Mae West, peppy as ever, in spite of the censorship wave. With John Mack Brown, Roger Pryor and Katherine DeMille.

BULLDOG DRUMMOND STRIKES BACK (20th Century).
A mystery with laughs. Ronald Colman, Loretta Young and Charlie Butterworth (who, incidentally, is dee-vinely funny).

CHAINED (M-G-M).
While the story isn't tops, Gable, Crawford and Otto Kruger make it worth seeing. Crawford, in her lovely new gowns and tricky coiffures, looks more beautiful than ever.

CLEOPATRA (Paramount).
A DeMille special. With Claudette Colbert, Warren William and Henry Wilcoxon.

DAMES (Warners).
The musical of musicals, featuring Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler, Joan Blondell and ZaSu Pitts.

THE GIRL FROM MISSOURI (M-G-M).
In which Harlow crashes society. With Franchot Tone, Lionel Barrymore and Patsy Kelly in supporting roles.

THE GREAT FLIRTATION (Paramount).
A triumph for Elissa Landi. Adolphe Menjou and David Manners are fine, too.

HANDY ANDY (Fox).
Will Rogers at his best.

HAPPINESS AHEAD (First National)
Dick Powell's best work to date. With John Halliday, Frank McHugh and Josephine Hutchinson in supporting roles.

HOUSE OF ROTHSCHILD (20th Century).
George Arliss is superb as Baron Rothschild. Loretta Young and Robert Young do well in smaller roles.

THE HUMAN SIDE (Universal).
Adolphe Menjou as a theatrical producer. With Doris Kenyon, Reginald Owen, Dickie Moore and Charlotte Henry.

IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT (Columbia).
Don't fail to see this Colbert-Gable opus.

JANE EYRE (Monogram).
The Bronte novel brought to the screen, with Virginia Bruce and Colin Clive in leading roles.

JUDGE PRIEST (Fox).
Will Rogers does a great piece of work. Berton Churchill, Stepin Fetchit and Henry B. Walthall come in for their share of acting honors. Rochelle Hudson, Anita Louise and Tom Brown are among the younger folks.

THE LIFE OF VERGIE WINTERS (RKO).
Ann Harding and John Boles in a stirring drama.

LITTLE MAN, WHAT NOW? (Universal)
The story of a young couple, Doug Montgomery and Margaret Sullavan, and their struggle for existence.

LITTLE MISS MARKER (Paramount).
Shirley Temple proves what a grand little actress she is.

MADAME DU BARRY (Warners)
Very spectacular. With Dolores Del Rio and Victor Jory.

THE MERRY WIDOW (M-G-M).
Lavish production. Maurice Chevalier and Jeanette MacDonald are delightful.

MOULIN ROUGE (20th Century).
Entertainment plus. With Connie Bennett, Franchot Tone and Tullio Carminati.

MURDER AT THE VANITIES (Paramount).
Carl Brisson and Kitty Carlisle will keep you entertained in this musical-murder comedy.

NANA (Sam Goldwyn).
Anna Sten and a large cast.

ONE MORE RIVER (Universal)
Stirring drama that will hold your interest all the way through. Polished performances by Colin Clive, Diana Wynyard and Frank Lawton.

ONE NIGHT OF LOVE (Columbia).
Thrilling in every sense of the word. Grace Moore's singing is dee-vine.

OPERATOR 13 (M-G-M).
Marion Davies and Gary Cooper in a spy story.

THE PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS (Paramount).
Charming story about the Revolutionary days. Francis Lederer, Joan Bennett, Charlie Ruggles and Mary Boland.

RIPTIDE (M-G-M).
Sophisticated drama. With Norma Shearer, Bel Montgomery and Herbert Marshall

ROMANCE IN THE RAIN (Universal).
Roger Pryor, Heather Angel, Victor Moore and Esther Ralston in a fine comedy.

SADIE McKEE (M-G-M).
Crawford, Tone, Gene Raymond and Edward Arnold

SHE LOVES ME NOT (Paramount)
A rollicking comedy with Bing Crosby, Miriam Hopkins, Kitty Carlisle. Some wow tunes, too.

SPRINGTIME FOR HENRY (Fox).
Don't miss this delightful comedy. Nancy Carroll and Otto Kruger have the leads.

TARZAN AND HIS MATE (M-G-M).
Johnny Weissmuller and Maureen O'Sullivan.

THE THIN MAN (M-G-M).
A mystery superb. With Myrna Loy and Bill Powell.

THIRTY-DAY PRINCESS (Paramount).
Sylvia Sidney and Cary Grant.

TREASURE ISLAND (M-G-M).
The sort of thing the kids will eat up. Jackie Cooper, Wally Beery, Lewis Stone, Otto Kruger and Lionel Barrymore.

TWENTIETH CENTURY (Columbia).
John Barrymore and Carole Lombard in a tale about stagefolk. Don't miss it.

TWENTY MILLION SWEETHEARTS (Warners).
Behind-the-scenes of Radio Row with Dick Powell and Ginger Rogers. Don't miss Allen Jenkins' "Uncle Pete."

VIVA VILLA (M-G-M).
Wally Beery as Pancho Villa, the Mexican bandit. Katherine DeMille and Stu Erwin in supporting roles.

THESE PICTURES GET "B"

AFFAIRS OF A GENTLEMAN (Universal).
Paul Lukas in an exciting mystery. Leila Hyams, Lillian Bond, Onslow Stevens and Dorothy Burgess.

THE AGE OF INNOCENCE (RKO).
John Boles, Irene Dunne and Helen Westley in the screen version of Edith Wharton's novel. Nicely done.

BACHELOR BAIT (RKO).
Stu Erwin runs a matrimonial agency. Pert Kelton, Skeets Gallagher and Rochelle Hudson are in the cast.

BEYOND THE LAW (Columbia).
Plenty of action and suspense here. With Tim McCoy and Shirley Grey.

BIG HEARTED HERBERT (Warners).
Guy Kibbee, Aline MacMahon and Patricia Ellis in a comedy de luxe.

BY CANDLELIGHT (Universal).
Delightful drama. Paul Lukas, Elissa Landi and Nils Asther deserve much praise.

CARAVAN (Fox).
While there isn't much plot here, its delightful music carries it along nicely. In it are Loretta Young, Charles Boyer, Jean Parker and Phillips Holmes.

THE CAT'S PAW (Fox).
Another Harold Lloyd comedy at last. With Una Merkel, George Barbier and Nat Pendleton

CHANGE OF HEART (Fox).
A Gaynor-Farrell opus that should please their fans

THE CIRCUS CLOWN (Warners).
Joe E. Brown.

COCKEYED CAVALIERS (RKO).
Wheeler and Woolsey, Thelma Todd, Noah Beery and, of course, Dorothy Lee.

COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO (United Artists).
The Dumas classic brought to the screen with Elissa Landi, Robert Donat (you'll like him), Louis Calhern and Sidney Blackmer.

DANGEROUS CORNER (RKO-Radio).
Unusual story and a fine cast including Virginia Bruce, Conrad Nagel, Melvyn Douglas, Ian Keith and Erin O'Brien Moore

DESIRABLE (Warners).
A story that will hold your interest, nicely handled by George Brent, Verree Teasdale and Jean Muir.

DOUBLE DOOR (Paramount)
Mary Morris, Sir Guy Standing and Evelyn Venable.

EMBARRASSING MOMENTS (Universal)
Chester Morris and Marian Nixon in a gay little comedy

THE FIGHTING RANGER (Columbia).
A Buck Jones thriller.

FOG OVER FRISCO (First National).
A mystery, featuring Bette Davis, Donald Woods, Lyle Talbot and Margaret Lindsay.

HALF A SINNER (Universal).
Berton Churchill is outstanding. Joel McCrea and Sally Blane here, too.

HAPPY LANDINGS (Monogram).
Ray Walker, Bill Farnum and Noah Beery

HAT, COAT AND GLOVE (RKO).
Stirring drama, with fine performances by Ric Cortez, Barbara Robbins, John Beal and Dorothy Burgess.

HAVE A HEART (M-G-M).
Touching story about a cripple, beautifully enacted by Jean Parker, Jimmy Dunn, Una Merkel and Stu Erwin in the supporting cast

HERE COMES THE GROOM (Paramount).
A comedy, with Jack Haley and Mary Boland

HIDE-OUT (M-G-M).
Nice love story. With Bob Montgomery and Maureen O'Sullivan.

I'LL TELL THE WORLD (Universal).
Lee Tracy as a newspaperman.

JIMMY THE GENT (Warners).
Jimmy Cagney and Bette Davis.

KISS AND MAKE UP (Paramount).
A burlesque on beauty parlors. Cary Grant, Helen Mack, Genevieve Tobin and Edward Everett Horton.

(Continued on page 96)

The PICTURE of the MONTH

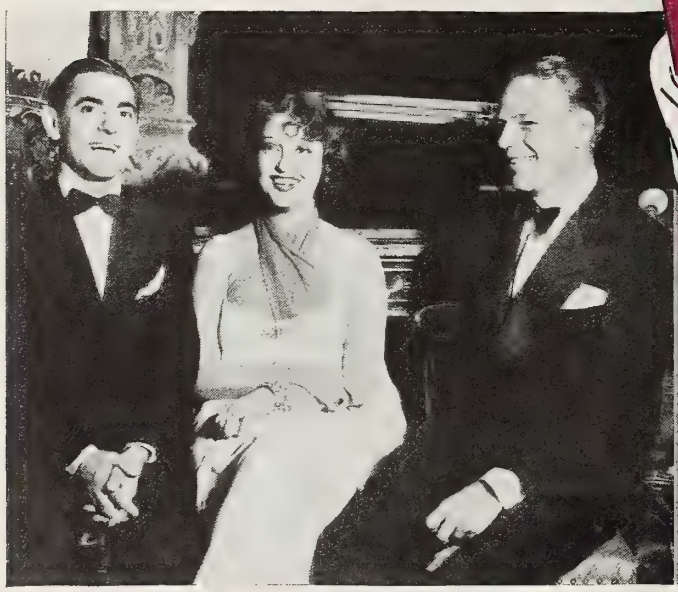
WE SALUTE

DICK POWELL and RUBY KEELER

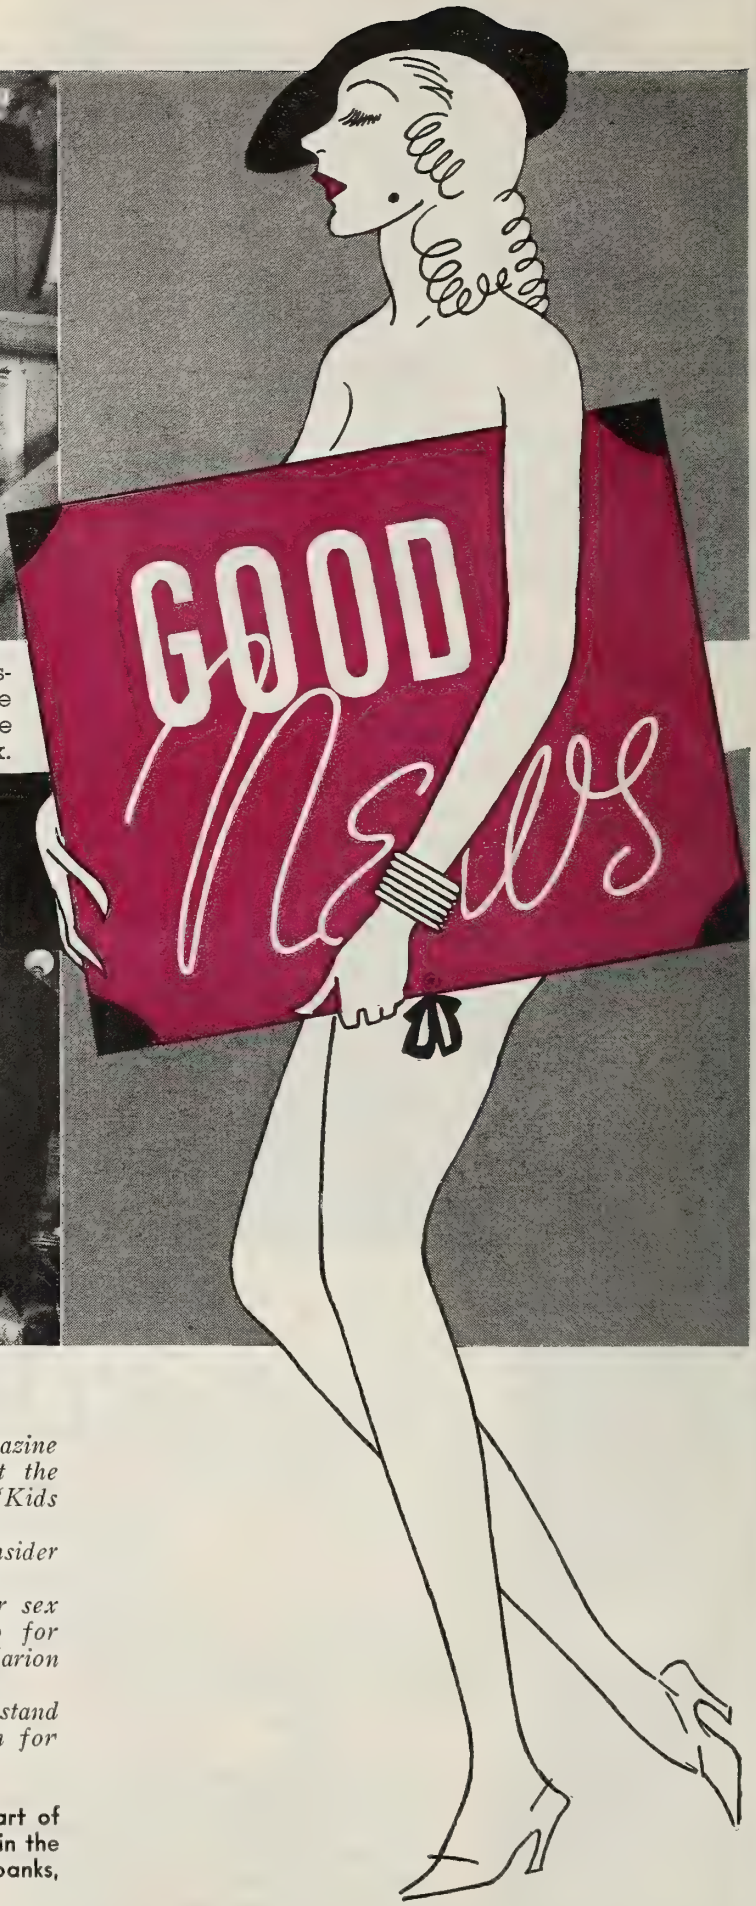
America's best-loved lovers in the screen's first great military musical!

Fifty million keyholers can't be wrong! They said "It's a knockout!" And an advance peek at Warner Bros.' new musical produced under the supervision of the U. S. Army proves they're right! So we pin this month's Croix de Guerre on "Flirtation Walk"—staged against the pulse-tingling background of West Point—for its thrilling stars and glorious love story—its stirring songs and grand girls—its fast fun and lavish production!

"Flirtation Walk"



heaps new honors on



DICK POWELL—RUBY KEELER

—PAT O'BRIEN; on FRANK BORZAGE for his best production; on Bobby Connolly of Ziegfeld Follies fame for his spectacular dance numbers; and on Warner Bros. for a grand all-round show.

Bill Powell and La Harlow at Reinhardt's presentation of "Midsummer Night's Dream" at the Hollywood Bowl. (Below) Eddie Cantor, Jeanette MacDonald and Bob Ritchie also took a box.

THE OLD M-G-M INFLUENCE

THE funniest story of the month concerns a magazine interviewer's session with Max Baer, who at the present moment is making a Paramount picture, "Kids On The Cuffs."

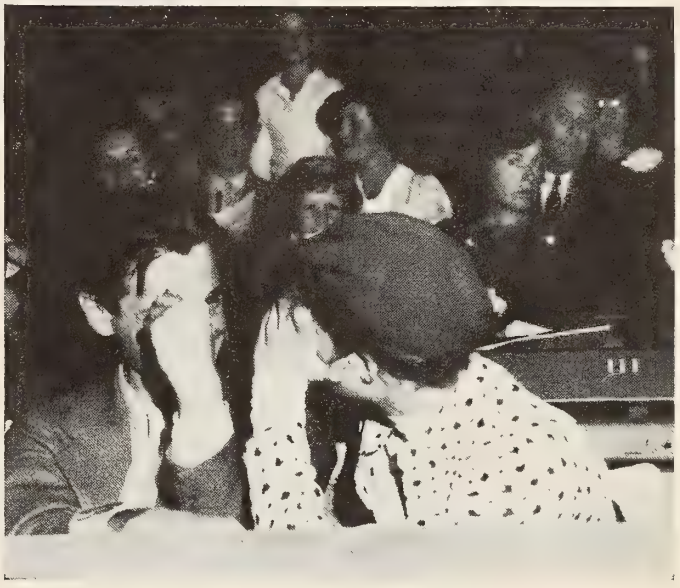
The interviewer asked Max: "Whom do you consider the most colorful personalities on the screen?"

"Well," drawled Max, "there's Jean Harlow for sex appeal, Norma Shearer for charm, Greta Garbo for glamor, Joan Crawford for physical beauty, Marion Davies for comedy . . ."

The director of publicity at Paramount couldn't stand it any longer and shouted, "And Marlene Dietrich for everything!"

At a recent Hollywood preview the professional part of the audience was amazed when the non-professionals in the unreserved seats gave a newsreel shot of Douglas Fairbanks,

Wuxtry! Wuxtry! All about the stars and their



Herbert Marshall and Gloria Swanson, the inseparables, contemplate the elaborate program and, below, we see the Gary Coopers and Virginia Bruce at the Trocadero opening.

Max Reinhardt, the impresario himself, poses with two of the film's most famous, Marlene Dietrich and Norma Shearer. (Below) Katie Hepburn saw the camera boys coming. So-o-o.

Sr., the well known Bronx cheer.

Believe it or not, two or three people actually hissed when Doug came over the sound-track saying, "It is so nice to be back heah in this country again!"

It looks as though Mr. Fairbanks is going to have to court the American public, along with America's Sweetheart, all over again.

VERY few celebrated visitors to Hollywood have the opportunity of meeting Greta Garbo. But even the illusive Swede was impressed by the idea of meeting Max Reinhardt and accepted a dinner invitation to the home of the Viertels, friends of hers, where a party was being given for the great man.

They say Greta arrived very late, talked with Reinhardt for ten or fifteen minutes and left almost immediately thereafter.

In her divorce suit against George Brent, Ruth Chatterton accused her actor-husband of being moody and sulky. For hours, and sometimes days at a time, she charged, Brent refused to talk to her or to the guests she invited to dine with them.

THERE are two new little boys in Hollywood. One is Joel McCrea, Jr., born to Frances Dee and Joel McCrea in September. The other is Harry Joe Brown, Jr., and his mother is none other than Sally Eilers. And Mrs. George Barnes (Joan Blondell to you) is "expecting," at this writing.

CROSBY CONTRACT NOTE

Bing Crosby has signed a secret four-year-without-options contract with Paramount. The secret is his salary which is said to be enormous.

satellites! Draw up your chairs and listen!

Mary Brian and Dick Powell took the Joe Penners (mitout duck) to the première of Dick's "Dames." (Right) The Thalbergs (she's Norma Shearer to us) aboard Joe Schenck's yacht for a cruise. Wotta life!

THE Sylvia Sidney-B. P. Schulberg romance rumors appear to be at an end. At least these two are no longer seen together at the popular spots but each one is seen with other people!

At the Clover Club the other dawning, Mr. Schulberg seemed very much taken up with Gertrude Michael, the Paramount charmer.

The tennis matches, which brought such internationally famous net stars as Fred Perry, Betty Nuthall, Elizabeth Ryan, George Lott, Frank Shields and dozens of others to the Los Angeles Tennis Club, was another favorite gathering place of the movie celebs lately.

William Powell and Richard Barthelmess shared a box. Connie Talmadge was there every day. Ditto for Bebe Daniels, Ben Lyon and Gene Raymond.

HOLLYWOOD AND THE CIRCUS

AND then the circus came to town! Peanuts, popcorn and pink lemonade. Did the Hollywooders have fun!

Even Marlene Dietrich seemed to be having a glorious time with her young daughter and her husband. Strangely enough, no one seemed to recognize Dietrich the evening we saw her there. Maybe that's the reason she had so much fun.

Anna Sten, in modern clothes for a change, sees "Midsummer Night's Dream" at the Bowl.

Mary Pickford, landing at the airport for the Cleveland air races. Roscoe Turner's with her.

(Left) Irene Dunne and Lionel Barrymore with Joseph Breen, (Purifier de Luxe) broadcast their views on clean pictures. The handsome Mr. Gable, Harry Cohen, Virginia Pine and Eddie Robinson, snapped at the train after out-of-town preview.

Norma Shearer brought Irving Thalberg, Jr., and her husband's father to her circus party. While the three were doing the sideshows, they suddenly discovered that they had lost their tickets. Norma was in a perfect dither until she happened to remember that one of the midgets had once worked in the M-G-M picture, "Freaks." Norma frantically sought out her "influential" friend and explained her predicament.

While they waited for the ticket situation to be fixed up, the little midget insisted that Norma meet the Fat Woman, the Glass Eater, the Strong Man and the Pin Heads. Little Irving Thalberg was almost beside himself with joy at actually shaking hands with so many "celebrities."

IT was more fun the night Katharine Hepburn attended. She tried her best to avoid the news-picture snappers. But the camera-boys spotted Katie immediately, and in her attempt to dodge them, La Hepburn did everything from climbing over seats to landing in one of the rings, much to the amusement of everyone present. She finally had to crawl under the outer (Continued on page 70)

Diamond Mae West visited the Hollywood Bowl to take a peak at the Reinhardt production.

Here are Charlie Chaplin and Paulette Goddard, said to be wed, at the tennis matches.

BY REGINA CANNON

Chevalier departs for a European vacation.

OF course, there's a limit to everything, so Eddie Cantor cannot be a male Elsie Dinsmore or a Pollyanna in pants. But—he must be about the guh-randest guy you're apt to meet on a stroll among the Hollywood hills. Everyone who works with him says so, and everyone can't be wrong. First, we listened to Block and Sully sing his praises and this month Ethel Merman, just returned from the Coast and an important role in "Kid Millions," went into her song about Eddie.

It seems the gentleman not only doesn't hog the picture, but positively insists upon giving his co-workers a little better than a good break. His disposition is as sweet as a fudge sundae and his off-stage comedy as excellent as the type of stuff he pulls when the camera is grinding.

But, after all, this item should be about Ethel's visit home—which is New York, and so— When you meet the Merman cinematically, you're gonna say, "Aha, sex appeal. Wotta vamp! I'll bet she's the cut-up of the party. She likes the boys all righty, all right. She's interested in collecting male scalps."

And there's where you're all wrong. Ethel has worked like the traditional Turk. She's been lucky in landing good jobs with long-run shows. She's saved her money. And, as far as the unfair sex is concerned, she claims that if some day she meets someone, all well and good. If not, all well and almost as good.

We told her we knew of five men who'd like to marry her, what with her beauty, talent, fame and shekels. And she up and topped us by saying she knew of fifteen. So, what are you gonna do with a girl like that?

If you know your Broadway musical comedy stage, Miss Merman needs no introduction to you. She's the young woman who's "spotted" to tear off a torchy tune when and if the audience gets restless. She's the lady who stops the show and the gal who is what the bald-headed row knows as an "eyeful." In short, she's hot—red hot, about 112 Fahrenheit.

Ethel Merman at home in her New York apartment.

And, as we've implied, she's the perfect paradox. She looks like what she "ain't." She's a home-lover and slightly nut-sy on the subject of dogs. She falls for them completely, and the more disreputable the purp, the greater her devotion. We have sort of an Australian mousehound about the house that she'd go craz-zy for.

On the outcome of Ethel's appearance in "Kid Millions," her cinematic future may be determined. So here's hoping you appreciate her as much as we on Broadway do.

WYNNE GIBSON's been in town, the pourquoi of her visit being to make a picture at the Long Island studio and do a little shopping and sight-seeing on the side. It turned out that there was very little "on the side," for things were kept humming over the bridge so that there was plenty of night work for the players.

The film in question is "Gambling" and you're going to see George M. Cohan, who made the stage version, in the character he created for Broadway consumption.

Wynne, you may or may not know, is a native New Yorker, but she hasn't been in our town for nearly five years and it all looked like front page news to her. New buildings had shot up and others had been torn down. She had become noise-conscious and taxi-shy and had a great hankering for "them thar hills." Just a turn-coater, we'll say.

Louise Lattimer, new Universal player, arrives in Gotham.

Miss Gibson, it seems, is what's known in the vernacular of the theatre as a trouper. She does whatever she's given to do excellent well. She gives a lot of thought to her work and goes in for visualizing character in a big way. She's intelligent and a hard-worker. So-o she should rate better, bigger and more serious breaks. At least that's the not-too-humble opinion of this department.

We have a notion, however, that this little lady is prone to speak her piece, which isn't conducive to gwate big strides in Hollywood. In New York, maybe. However, after the shooting was over (and we mean "Gambling," of course) Wynne gave herself a few days to see the town before leaving for the camera coast.

THE day it rained luck, Louise Latimer was there with a great big bucket and so, she caught an awful lot of it. Luck, we mean. Louise is very young and very, very well-to-do and very, very, very pretty. She has theatrical aspirations and talent to back 'em up. And, she's in town, having completed "There's Always Tomorrow," her first for Universal.

Miss Latimer is going places cinematically. She's a little smoothie who knows what she wants and, what's better, knows how to go after it and get it. She began life—she's at that ripe old age of twenty-one now—by landing herself a job in a stock company. A movie scout saw her and the usual test ensued. Fox took the test, but Uncle Carl Laemmle signed the gal and Uncle Carl isn't noted for making mistakes.

The Hollywood males like Louise. She has 'em all, from artists to polo players, on her string, but at the moment she's too busy to give them more than passing interest.

If we were the Wampas, we'd elect Miss Latimer a starlet for, in the language of Broadway, she's got what it takes.

Before Chevalier sailed, he put his John Hancock to a lucrative M-G-M contract, for Maurice is as much the business man as he is the artist. He's also the frugal Frenchman in person. All of which comes under the head of praise. There are too many spendthrifts already in the camera city, so it isn't Monsieur's intention to swell their number.

Just what his next pictorial assignment is to be was not determined as the star parked his trunks on the Ile de France, preparatory to a long vacation in his native Paree. Kay Francis, at this writing, is over there too, which they do be a-saying spells (Continued on page 114)

SMART GIRL?...YOU BET!
I FOUND HOW TO GET RID OF
"TATTLE-TALE GRAY"

1. "One day at the grocer's, I was fussing about how dingy my washes always looked. And he said, 'Your trouble is tattle-tale gray. Change to Fels-Naptha Soap—it gets out ALL the dirt.' Well . . ."

2. "Next washday, I did put Fels-Naptha to work and what a treat! Big creamy suds chock-full of lively golden soap and naptha. The dirt simply hurried away. And talk about gentle! I gave these lace panties a Fels-Naptha dousing and they washed up as pretty as new."

3. "And now look at this! Did you ever see a whiter shirt? Why, my clothes all shine like snow. Everything smells sweeter, too. You bet I'm smart! I wouldn't dream of doing another wash with anything but Fels-Naptha."

YES INDEED! If you want to keep "tattle-tale gray" out of your clothes—that dull, foggy look that says dirt is still hiding in them in spite of all your work—it's smart to change to Fels-Naptha Soap!

For that big busy bar brings you two cleaners instead of one! Richer golden soap working hand-in-hand with lots of naptha. A combination that hustles out every tiny bit of dirt and gives your clothes a brighter, sweeter whiteness!

Unlike "trick soaps" or "cheap" soaps, Fels-Naptha is gentle. It washes everything beautifully—silk stockings, lingerie, woolens. Fels-Naptha holds soothing glycerine, too. So it's specially nice to hands.

Fels-Naptha is a wonder for soaking or boiling clothes. It works splendidly in tub, basin or washing machine.

Fels-Naptha now sells at the lowest price in almost 20 years. Get some at your grocer's today . . . Fels & Co., Phila., Pa.

© 1934, FELS & CO.

Banish
"Tattle-Tale Gray"
with
FELS-NAPTHA SOAP

THEY LOVE THEY LAUGH THEY SING THEY QUARREL

. . . but always there's

Music in the Air

Music by Jerome Kern Lyrics and Libretto by Oscar Hammerstein 2nd

with Gloria

SWANSON

and

JOHN BOLES • DOUGLASS MONTGOMERY

JUNE LANG • REGINALD OWEN

AL SHEAN • JOSEPH CAWTHORN

An Erich Pommer Production
Directed by Joe May

A riot of laughter and romance set to music—lavishly produced for the screen from the great stage sensation that ran 11 months on Broadway.

FOX

Gloria SWANSON

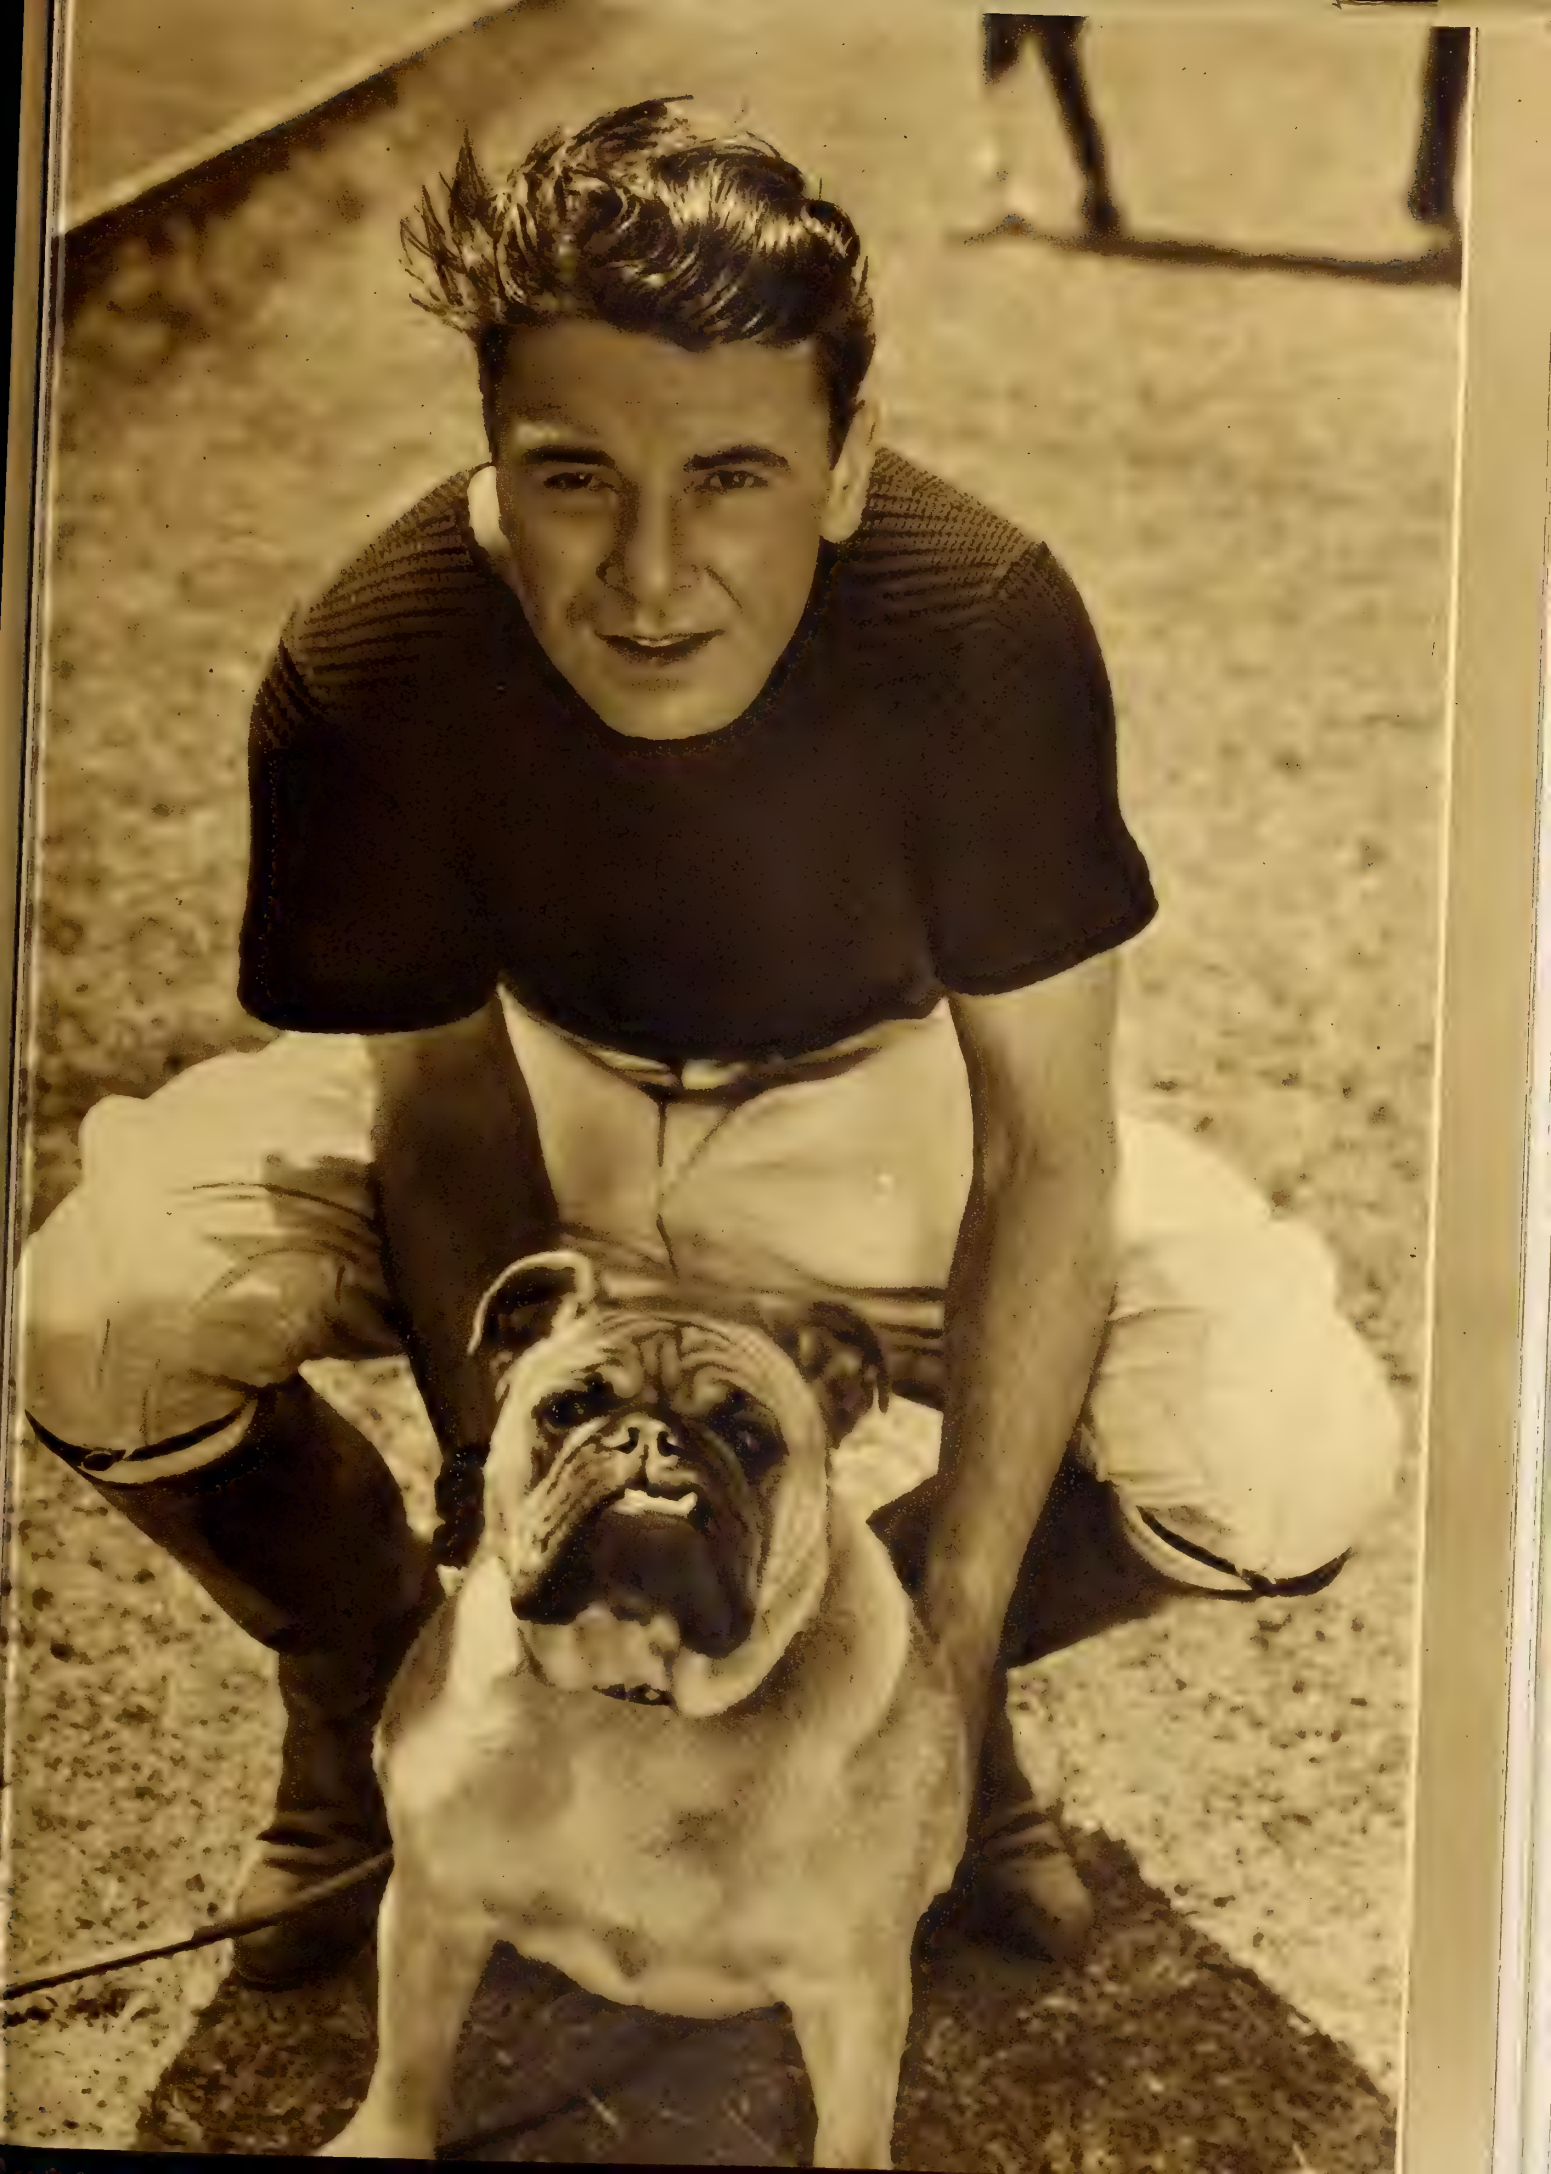
"Music in the Air" for Fox will bring Gloria back to the screen. Oddly enough, she plays opposite John Boles, whose entrance into the movies was as La Swanson's leading man in the silent picture days. This actress looks younger and more glamorous than ever, doesn't she, really?

Maurice CHEVALIER

He plans to spend the holidays in France, where he has been making two pictures and, during her stay there, seeing Kay Francis. Maurice is a very serious-minded gentleman, whose pet diversion is boxing. You'll be seeing him as the handsome prince in "The Merry Widow," an M-G-M special.

Jeanette MacDONALD

Miss MacDonald is, of course, "The Merry Widow" herself, which gives her plenty of opportunity to act and warble a bit, both of which she does right well. She is taking up tennis these days and plays with Bob Ritchie. You know, he's the man whom Jeanette calls her fiancé, but whom her friends feel sure is her husband.



June KNIGHT

Well, it looks like wedding bells for June and Paul Ames, they do be a' saying. Anyway, the young man is building a beautiful home, which makes it seem as if something serious is brewing. "Wake Up and Dream" for Universal is June's latest. However, she's a freelance now, so it will be up to her to pick some nice fat roles.

George BRENT

George Brent got himself a real break when he landed the part opposite Garbo in "The Painted Veil." If that doesn't bring him back with a bang, well, we'll give up. He's having fun these days with a sport model speed plane he's named Desert Breeze, for George is a dyed-in-the-wool thrill-seeker. In love? Never even mention it!

Miriam HOPKINS

She's in New York now looking for a suitable play to do on Broadway for, before Miriam begins her Goldwyn contract, she has decided to have another legitimate attraction to her credit. Her big love is her adopted son Michael. As for a romance; well, she just hasn't time for one. Her latest film for RKO is "The Richest Girl in the World."

Charles BUTTERWORTH

He's as funny off the screen as on and had the cast of "Student Tour" in so-called stitches during production. Charlie and his bride spend their leisure hours playing around on a new boat he purchased recently. He was one of the theatre's cleverest comedians before the movies got him and plans one day to take another fling at the footlights.

If you saw "Of Human Bondage," you saw Bette at her adept best—playing a meanie. The above are the picture's dramatic highlights, with Leslie Howard as a long-suffering sentimentalist, dividing acting honors, and Reginald Denny, as a favored suitor, sharing their taxi.

Bette Davis learned about women from—women! And so, she can't hand the sometimes fair sex a thing

Bette and Paul Muni in a scene from "Bordertown," in which the actress again plays a Bad One, and (right) Miss Davis sniffs a brandy with George Brent, which of course they're doing in the interest of art—Warners' "Housewife" to be explicit.

Why I HATE WOMEN

BY BETTE DAVIS as told to WALTER RAMSEY

AT a cocktail party the other afternoon, an actress I know paid me one of those back-handed compliments.

"Do you know," she drawled, "your work on the screen has always interested me a great deal because you seem to portray women as though you hated them. Take your role of Mildred in 'Of Human Bondage,' or that half-crazed debutante of 'Fog Over Frisco.' Tell me," she went on, "do you like women?"

I presume the polite, if hypocritical, thing to have said was, "Oh, of course I do. It just happens that I've fallen heir to a number of shrew roles lately and I try to play them honestly. Why, some of my dearest friends are women. Naturally, I like them."

But that isn't true. I don't like women as a sex.

Certainly there are exceptions, rare individuals whose friendship I value and whose honesty I treasure. But my instinctive inclination is to distrust women. In my lifetime, I have had little reason to do otherwise.

Perhaps my experience with my own sex has been an unfortunate one. Perhaps it has given me a distorted slant. But after all, one has to learn and be guided by one's own experiences and not by those of others. Thus, my only defense for my attitude is that my personal experience with the feminine (Continued on page 77)

THE MOST ROMANTIC STORY EVER TOLD

BY KATHERINE ALBERT

MOTION PICTURES belong to you!

You, the public, made them what they are today. Your will is law with producers. From the very earliest days, when poor men invested their little money in badly made movie equipment and ran jerky films in back rooms and run-down stores, until now, when Hollywood teems with life and activity and big business, you have been the dictator.

In 1900 everyone laughed at the movies, every "sensible" person, that is. Bankers could not be induced to finance such a wildcat proposition. When little men put their life's savings into the "novelty," their friends called them crazy. But your father and mother came to the back rooms and the run-down stores and marvelled that pictures moved, that trains seemed to be coming right toward them, that a girl with golden curls, a girl who was later to be known throughout the world as Mary Pickford, could make them laugh or cry. Your father and mother looked at the cheap, jumpy films and found them entertaining. In this way your father and mother actually dictated to Wall Street financiers. Ever since then the movies have belonged to you.

In about 1923 Sam Goldwyn gathered together the cleverest and most profound newspaper and magazine critics in the United States and, in all sincerity, paid them good salaries to tell him what was wrong with his pictures, to criticize them before the public saw them as they did afterwards. The experiment failed, because you were not pleased with the result. No experts can tell you what you like and what you don't like.

A producer spends hundreds of thousands of dollars to launch a new star. You see the star. If you like her and tell your friends you like her, the money has not been spent in vain. If you turn thumbs down, there is nothing that can save the star—or the producer's money.

Box office receipts are Hollywood's only guide. And you, who spend your money for tickets, raise or lower box office returns.

I should think that you would feel proud to be so important to a great industry. You're not that important to the steel business, the cotton industry, the silk mills. There, others dictate to you. But the movies are your very own. And because they are your own, it occurred to me that you might like to know more about them, that it would interest you to learn how they started, how they grew, what men and women were vital forces to them, what changes have been brought about in them during the last thirty years. You won't regret knowing these things, for the story of the movies is the most glamorous and romantic story ever told. It is vivid with life and personality, rife with success and failure, bitter with heartaches and disappointment, bright with joy.

It's the story of the movies! The thrilling biography of the infant industry itself!

PART 1

We can now look back and see what has happened and weave stories about it all. The pioneers of the film business could not look forward.

Years ago in a claptrap studio in New York, an ex-vaudeville actor named Larry Griffith was turning out films at the rate of one a week. In New Jersey he was making "wild west movies." And because he was always short of money with which to pay extras, he used the same people twice and three (Continued on page 91)

Give me

Straight from the

for rest and a tiny

(Left) A snapshot of Helen and her daughter, Mary MacArthur, with a small friend, taken last summer in Nyack, New York. Since that time, Helen has had only the briefest visits with little Mary. (Left, below) With Brian Aherne in "What Every Woman Knows", for M-G-M.

HELEN HAYES is doing now just what she does every time she finishes a picture. She is suffering the tortures of the damned. Telling herself that she is through with pictures. That she wants to live her own life. In her own way. That she is going back home and take life easy, in the manner of other women. That she doesn't care if she never sees another motion picture studio or theatre or anything else that can drag her away from her home, her husband and her baby.

A few days before she left for New York, I visited her at the Beverly Hills Hotel, where she lived while she was making "What Every Woman Knows."

She had a comfortable, but unpretentious, suite of rooms on the third floor of the hotel, from which she could look out upon the palm-lined boulevards and, on warm afternoons, could throw open the many windows of the living-room and bask in the sun.

Only, the day that I visited with her was a gray, dismal day. I found Helen, correspondingly gray and dismal.

She lay back against the upholstered chaise longue and hugged her misery to her heart. It was useless to try to console her, for she was in the throes of one of those let-down moods that come to all artists after the finish of a really good piece of work, into which they have flung their whole soul—and she wanted her baby. Two griefs combined in one.

"My words have caught up with me at last," she told me in all wretchedness. "I have always said that a woman can successfully combine marriage and a career. I have just learned that I was wrong. I want my baby today more than anything in the world. I haven't seen her for such a long time. I call her on the phone almost every day, but she is usually too shy to talk to me. Last night, when I called, her nurse told me that she has learned to swim. Then she let little Mary tell me in her own words and she said, 'Please, mama, come home quick before summer is gone. I want you to see me swim.'"

Helen sighed and turned out her hands in a way that told me despair and need more than words could have done. Her gesture made me remember the scene in "White Sister," where she held out her hands towards her lover who was going away to war. There was that same, poignant emptiness in them.

"I can't tell you how I felt when she begged me to come home. Anyway, it decided me. I am going. A hundred movie contracts and stage offers cannot

ONE Year . . .

heart, Helen Hayes pleads daughter's companionship

BY

MARY

SHARON

keep me away from my baby any longer.

"Think what it means to any woman to be away when her little girl is learning to take her first, little, wobbly steps. Learning to lisp her first words. When somebody else must teach her all those little first things. Sing lullabies to her and put her to sleep. I feel terribly about it, now. As if I've been cheated out of something that was a part of my birthright. Money, success, fame—nothing can repay for lost loveliness like that.

"I'm homesick and tired. I've worked so hard this year, have gone through sixty-two weeks without a rest of any kind. I came straight to Hollywood from the long run in 'Mary of Scotland.' But I'm through."

She held up her chin belligerently.

"I have made up my mind and I am going to stick to my decision.

"I am not going to do anything for one whole year. I am going to go home and live normally for twelve, long, happy months with my husband and my baby. I am going to take care of my roses, putter around the garden, arrange furniture, fix drapes, wash dishes and do all the things that every woman instinctively loves to do. I am going to really live for one year. Do you know how grand it seems just to be saying it?"

Silence lay like a pool, then. She was deep in thought and a tiny furrow (Continued on page 79)

MANY HAPPY RETURNS!

Barbara Bebe Lyon was three years young and wotta party! Ice cream, Mickey Mouse puppets n'everything

This is Miss Penelope March, the famous Freddie's adopted daughter. Cute?

Charlie Ruggles raised the deuce all afternoon. He finally had himself a good weep and his mother, Arline Judge, let him go to it.

Gary Evans Crosby brought his attractive mother, Dixie Lee.

And here is young Dick Arlen with Gary, who seems sorta set to cry.

And here's the party watching the Mickey Mouse puppets, with the hostess wearing a hair ribbon and considering the ice cream problem.

Frank Woody, Jr. came with his favorite lady, Ma Helen Twelvetrees.

(Above) Lansing Brown, true friend of Columbo. The two men were examining a gun, which exploded, killing Russ, and leaving Brown devastated at the cruel fate which chose him as the agent. (Center) Russ at the age of thirteen and (above, right) in his first picture, "Broadway Thru a Keyhole." (Right) With June Knight in the picture previewed before his death, "Wake Up and Dream."

BY WILLIAM FRENCH

SON OF TRAGEDY

Deep regret is in our hearts for the passing of Russ Columbo

"LIFE really began today," laughed Russ Columbo, as he watched the satisfied hundreds at the preview of "Wake Up and Dream," in which his caressing voice had won their instant approval.

"Just write 'Friday, the 31st' in red," he continued, "because it starts Chapter Three in the story of Columbo. And put it down that today Old Man Hard Luck lost my address. Everything good happened today. I made the first of my new broadcasts, I saw my first starring picture and I made four recordings on my new phonograph contract. What a lucky day this was!

"And that isn't all. I found the piece of property where I'm going to build the new home for my folks. I'm going to design the house myself—and put in all the little nooks and gadgets my mother wants.

"So, I'm forgetting the bumps and disappointments in Chapters One and Two, and starting Chapter Three today. And don't think I don't know I'm the lucky guy."

Less than forty-eight hours later, Grim Tragedy snipped that string—and wrote "Cut!" across the picture of Columbo's success.

For a tragic misadventure and (Continued on page 83)

A rare picture—Anna and her husband, Dr. Frenke. Taken at Rouben Mamoulian's party to welcome Max Reinhardt to Hollywood.

ON TRIAL

With the popular Fredric March in "We Live Again." This picture, everyone feels, will be the real test of Anna's popularity.

Do you really like Anna Sten? Her fate rests with you

BY DOROTHY MANNERS

ANNA STEN is this month's movie question mark, the question being where does she go from here?

Samuel Goldwyn's Passionate Peasant, also known as the Soviet Star and Sammy's Greatest Gamble, is facing the most critical span of her Hollywood career. She is on trial for her professional life.

The final crank has been turned on her second American picture, "We Live Again," the former "Resurrection." On the strength of this colorful story, and with the co-partnership of popular Fredric March, the Sten future will be decided. For, in spite of the glowing hosannas to her beauty and personal charm, her first picture, "Nana," came out on the wrong side of the financial ledger to the tune of about $200,000! It was obvious, as the box office reports kept coming in over a period of months, that Anna, or rather, "Nana" had not captured the same great burst of enthusiasm that had greeted Garbo, or Dietrich in their first American-made films.

In fairness, it should be explained that seldom was a picture made under more trying conditions than those besetting the story of the Parisian coquette who loved two brothers, one wisely, and the other, too well.

IN the first place, almost a year elapsed between Sten's arrival in Hollywood and the starting date of her first production. It was a difficult and confusing year for the Russian girl. There was a new language to be conquered, not to mention the trials of a diet expected to remove from ten to fifteen pounds from her sturdy physique. Coupled with this she was the storm center of an exhaustive publicity campaign.

Her pictures flooded newspapers and magazines. Her life story was a syndicated feature of many newspapers. It told the story of the Russian girl who was born Anjuschka Sten in the town of Kiev, in 1910. "It is doubtful if Anna Sten's entire life story will ever be told," the feature began. "She has looked upon too much stark tragedy, too many raw emotions revealed."

With unusual frankness (in prying into the past of a movie star) it took the peasant girl through her days as a waitress in a cheap café, where it was discovered that she could dance, on to her meeting with the famous Stanislavsky of the Moscow Art Theatre. Through the many trials and tribulations of a Cinderella career, it detailed successive steps through the Soviet Theatre and the Film Academy; her marriage to the prosperous lawyer, Dr. Frenke; and her subsequent success in the German-made film that was to bring her to the attention of Samuel Goldwyn, "The Brothers Karamazov." Goldwyn, who has never been noted for conservative publicity methods when his enthusiasm is aroused, immediately went on record as holding the contract of "the most captivating, compelling, alluring personality on the screen today!"

And Sten hadn't yet made an (Continued on page 98)

"Feydie, darling, after all these years! How good it is to see you!" exclaimed Marion. But Kurt couldn't raise much enthusiasm.

Marion Forsyth.....ANN HARDING
Richard Kurt.....ROBERT MONTGOMERY
Feydak.....EDWARD ARNOLD
Leander Nolan.....EDWARD EVERETT HORTON
Kinnicott.....CHARLES RICHMAN
Slade Kinnicott.....UNA MERKEL

—Adapted from the METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER picture. Directed by E. H. GRIFFITH and produced by IRVING THALBERG. From the stage play by S. N. BEHRMAN and screen play by ANITA LOOS. Fictionized by REGINA CANNON.

BIOGRAPHY OF A

MARION FORSYTH was returning from Europe and so, it was men's day out. For Marion had a way with men. She knew the unfair sex as a little kindergartener knows his ABC's and, when she was ready to say good-by to an amour, she somehow had a manner of making it sound merely like an au revoir, a promise held out for a future meeting and perhaps, even, a chance to play a return engagement at love.

And so, when Marion landed at Quarantine, the boys all came down—right to the big steamer from the little, chugging cutter. They came with propositions—big business ones for, while the young woman had a reputation—in fact, several of 'em—as a beauty, a wit, an artist,

"Don't forget to put in the high points of that gay Leander's love-making," prompted Kurt. Marion hesitated.

"Young man, keep out of this. I don't like you anyway," snapped Nolan. "Well, isn't that just too bad now?" Kurt returned.

and a sex appealist par excellence, she was minus cash. And a girl without the coin of the realm is fair game for men who are ready to supply that little material deficiency for her.

It at first seemed difficult for the onrush of males to locate her, for on the third day out the kindly captain had seen to it that Miss Forsyth was moved from her half-dark semi-private cabin to a luxurious suite. Somehow things like that happened to Marion. And it was that that made it necessary for the boys to wander up and down the decks in search of her.

Richard Kurt was the only one who became impatient at the delay, except, of course, a process server who was there with a summons representing a debt that the young woman, in her hasty departure, had somehow overlooked.

"Here," said Kurt, finally, as the group of reporters followed, "it is."

The door to her suite was opened by faithful Minnie, who knew human nature and her mistress well and warned the latter against the former. The scene the boys' startled eyes fell upon was Marion wrapped in the fond embrace of Melchior Feydak, the Austrian composer—not the more famous of the Feydaks, for he had died, but a man who had gone through the estate his brother had left him.

"Marion," he was saying, "when Vicki passed on, he left you half his money, and I have spent that, too."

"Of course, darling," she returned, "and you should have."

Her published story would ruin two men, but help the man she loved! What was she to do about it?

And it was then that the impatient young man, heading the newcomers, spoke. "I've been waiting out in that damn dark hallway long enough. I don't want a drink, I don't want a cigarette, I'm not a reporter, and I'd like to talk business with you."

"Well," returned Marion, amused, "perhaps I'd better go into this. Boys, do you mind? I'll see you on deck later. Now, Mr. Kurt, you're a violent young man, aren't you?"

If Mr. Kurt weren't a violent young man, he was a mighty serious one, and the most serious problem in his life was himself.

"Yes," he stormed, "and you're one of those tolerant people who see the best in (Continued on page 113)

(Above) Eddie and Ida Cantor, and Rubinoff attend "A Midsummer Night's Dream." Sweet, comfortable and motherly, Eddie's Ida doesn't care a whoop about Hollywood's preoccupation with fuss and fashion. (Right) Eddie with his eldest daughter, Marjorie, who now acts as his secretary. (Far right) With Ethel Merman in "Kid Millions."

CANTOR'S RECIPE

BY HILARY

EDDIE CANTOR, off duty, exhibits a trait which is common to many great clowns: he's a very serious man, almost solemn at times.

Not long ago, I wandered, feeling a little sheepish, over to Eddie's bungalow on the United Artists lot—it was the one he had inherited from Mary Pickford—to ask him for an autographed photo. He was the only star I'd ever approached with this request, and I was frankly embarrassed. Imagine—a fan writer turned fan!

Surrounded by half-packed trunks, unread scripts, golf clubs, make-up boxes, and a general air of cheerful disorder, Eddie was hopping about, seeing to this, that, everything. Answering telephone calls and telegrams; talking out of one side of his mouth to Sam Goldwyn; explaining, out of the other side, something or other about his new picture, "Kid Millions," to somebody else; and from somewhere in between, issuing instructions to his secretary about personal messages, and to his valet about where to pack what.

Was he flustered? Not in the least. For America's most beloved clown, despite his strung-on-wire appearance, his ceaseless activity, always has plenty of time for a thousand interruptions.

That day, in the midst of this apparent madhouse, he seemed unusually composed and at leisure. In fact, Eddie was in one of his philosophic moods. Before I knew it, we were lounging comfortably in his sitting room, and discussing—of all things—marriage.

Eddie Cantor, with his customary zeal and energy, has put his whole heart and soul into making

The ingredients may be old-fashioned but Eddie and Ida swear by them

FOR HAPPINESS

LYNN

a success of his marriage—making it a permanent, steadfast edifice, a kind of monument to worth while ideals.

With his big, solemn eyes fastened upon me, he was saying, "If I tell you why I consider our marriage successful, you'll probably laugh at me, and think to yourself, 'That fellow, Eddie, is terribly old-fashioned.' Okay. I'll take the chance.

"The chief ingredient in my recipe for happiness and a successful marriage—the ingredient that binds the two partners more firmly than anything—is a mutual helping hand through early years of struggle. If they've grown up together under difficulties and shared each other's worries and joys throughout the years, it's a ten-to-one chance they'll stick.

"Passion? Romance? Love? Certainly, those are necessary ingredients, too. In the beginning, if there isn't a measure of these, the union hasn't such a good chance. But only an inexperienced infant would expect them to continue as the years go on.

"But in their place comes a growing need of husband for wife, and wife for husband, and out of this mutual need grows a deep affection. She helps him, he helps her. If they're the right kind of people, they're tenderly grateful to one another.

"Maybe that doesn't fit in with the highfalutin theories modern young people have about marriage. Maybe it sounds too stodgy. But I know from personal experience that it works. There's another thing I know. And even if all the emancipated (Continued on page 99)

Seven years ago, an unpretentious violet. Today, a gracious, lovely person. How did Fay Wray do it?

(Small picture) That's about how Fay looked when she made "The Wedding March."

(Above) Fay admits the Great Change took place because of a man.

HOW TO BECOME AN orchid

BY DOROTHY SPENSLEY

SEVEN years ago, Fay Wray was a mouse-like, shy, dowdy youngster with enormous violet-blue eyes, an overwhelming gratitude to everyone who bestowed a kind glance upon her, and a desire to become a great actress. The latter three characteristics still remain, but the former have disappeared like mist.

For six years married to the scenarist-novelist, John Monk Saunders, Fay Wray now occupies a comfortable niche as one of the more charming matrons of Hollywood. She entertains with the smoothness of a duchess, dresses with the distinction of a Park Avenue matron, and talks about world topics from Hitlerism to hedonism with rare knowledge and considerable authority.

In short, she has gained the qualities of a cosmopolite and she has never set foot off her native North America, even though travel is presumed to be a prime requisite of culture.

How did she do it, you ask?

"It's easy," said Fay. "Anyone can do it. Don't set out desperately to achieve results in a specified length of time. It is a matter of slow growth. Surround yourself with the better things of life and let their lessons sink in. You can't help being moved by an inspired piece of writing, the biography of an honest, successful man or woman, or a fine piece of music.

"You tell me that you think (Continued on page 93)

HOLLYWOOD thinks HE'S NUTTY

Francis Lederer has 'em all baffled. What do you think about him?

With Joan Bennett in Paramount's "The Pursuit of Happiness," from the successful stage play. It's a grand picture. Don't miss it.

BY MARTHA KERR

I WANT you to know Francis Lederer—really know him and understand him. The experience is worth while, I assure you.

Hollywood doesn't understand him very well. They think he's artistic and all that, but sort of a nutty guy. Hollywood reasons like this: Isn't any guy sort of nutty who'll walk out on a grand party, where there's plenty of liquor, to go and gaze at the stars for an hour?

Well, that's what Francis Lederer did at the first Hollywood party he attended. After he had looked at the stars long enough, he returned and took up the conversation where it had been left off.

Hollywood reasons, again, like this: Isn't any guy nutty who, the first two times he is asked to Joan Crawford's home for dinner, (1) forgets the date completely and (2) shows up a week late?

And that, too, Francis Lederer actually did.

And—Hollywood reasoning again—any guy who, instead of giving each member of the hard-boiled working crew on his picture a bottle of Scotch, gives them copies of Elbert Hubbard's "American Bible"—well, he must be completely mad!

But that's just what Lederer did, in spite of the fact that friends told him he would be kidded within an inch of his life. He went ahead and did exactly as he pleased.

Yes, Hollywood (Continued on page 88)

Lederer goes right ahead doing what he pleases in spite of what Hollywood thinks.

Gloria looked both amazed and frightened.

I HAVE BEEN KEPT BY A MOVIE STAR

I have been kept by a movie star—literally kept, supplied with everything from shoes to yachts. What is more, the star is one of the most glamorous women of our day. She is Gloria Gay, my wife.

We met in a southern town where she and her mother ran a dry goods shop, and where I was a member of my uncle's law firm. There I married her, against the wishes of my family.

She was a sensation in New York, where we went on our honeymoon, especially at the party where she met Nat Armheimer, who offered her a motion picture contract almost on being introduced. We were in Hollywood before I knew it, and the rest of my savings had gone to provide Gloria with the things necessary to putting on a "front."

The night of the gala opening of her first picture, Nat Armheimer gave a huge party for her. I was bursting with pride at her success—and mine, for I felt that we had accomplished it together. Then I heard something which made me realize that, in the eyes of everyone else, I was a mere parasite—living on her earnings.

The next morning I told Armheimer that if he couldn't place me in the studio, I must go to some other city and find work. Armheimer was aghast. That would mean a separation which might prove fatal to Gloria's career. He told me that I would be a supervisor.

I told Gloria of what had transpired. She was telling me how proud she was, when her secretary entered, saying that Mr. Armheimer wanted to see her for lunch to discuss business—alone. I felt my heart turning to lead. I think I have never hated anyone as I hated that secretary.

PART TWO

THE next day I went to my nice, shiny, new office. Sure enough, on the door was a plate, bearing my name and the title, "Supervisor," in gold letters. I went in and sat down at the wide mahogany desk. I opened and closed drawers and gazed at the empty shelves which lined the walls. There were typewriters and paper and pencils, everything to work with. But what was I supposed to do? In one corner there was a little bar with rows of glasses and a compartment for ice. I thought that supervising must sometimes be rather gay.

Presently there was a knock at the door and a plump, red-haired young person peered in at me. "I am supposed to act as your secretary when you need me," she announced. "Just press the second button on your desk and I'll come." She was gone. Oh, so I had buttons to press. And a desk telephone. Well, surely I should receive some instructions soon about my duties.

I began to feel better. This was, I told myself, a rare opportunity. It was up to me now to contribute something of value to studio activities. What if I could write an original story? They might allow me to supervise my own production. I might some day produce all of Gloria's pictures. I twiddled my thumbs and thought, trying to devise a plot. I smoked a great many cigarettes and presently I went to lunch. Gloria was lunching with Armheimer somewhere off the lot.

A man who had been assistant director on Gloria's second picture invited me to sit at a large round table in the commissary where directors and writers gathered for luncheon. People were cordial enough to me and I listened to the shop talk with interest. Now and then some courteous person asked my opinion upon some problem of production. But when I expressed even a small conviction, no one listened. I lapsed into embarrassed silence and I never lunched at that table again.

At three-thirty that afternoon,

Can a man keep his self-respect and be supported by a woman?

ILLUSTRATED BY JACK FLOHERTY, JR.

Gloria called me. "Please try to be home early, darling," she urged. "We are invited to such a lovely dinner party."

Home early. There was no reason that I could see why I should not have been at home all day. I grew lonelier with every passing minute in that shiny office.

WHILE we were dressing for dinner Gloria said, "Mr. Armheimer has the most divine story for my next picture. And he has promised me that you may sit in on the conferences. Isn't that lovely? And, darling, y'know, I want you to play polo. A lot of the big swells in pictures go in for it and the publicity is simply grand. You get your pictures in all the papers—and I'll have mine in, too. I know you play well and you do look so handsome on a horse."

"But, honey, I can't afford it," I protested. "A string of polo ponies comes high—and you have to have grooms and belong to a club or two."

She pouted. "It's a little thing to do for me," she pointed out. "Whether you care about it yourself or not, the publicity would be awfully good for me. And I intend to pay for it. I want you to."

It developed that Mr. Armheimer had told her where she could buy a good string of ponies at a bargain and that she had already called to order them, much as another woman might order a dozen eggs. She had also arranged for a club membership.

I refused to accept them and there was a scene, with tears. Gloria's make-up was ruined and had to be replaced and she decided to change to a different costume, so we were an hour and a half late for the dinner party. But by that time I had agreed, wearily, to play polo and had begun to hope that I should be killed doing it. I told myself that I was behaving badly (Continued on page 105)

I hit Armheimer neatly on the chin. He had it coming to him.

MY BIG SISTER Ruby

Marjorie and, right, her famous sister.

BY MARJORIE KEELER

Mrs. Jolson's a heroine to her family, too

RUBY has been calling me "Kickie" or variations of "Kick-In-The-Pants" ever since I was four years old. Now that I'm sixteen and planning a career of my own, I've been trying to talk her out of it, but if you're one of a large family, you know how it is yourself. There are six of us—Ruby, Bill, Gertrude, Helen, Anna and me. Since I'm the baby, the best my family can do for me is to call me "Margie." I think if any of them got around to Marjorie, I'd faint! But then we've been brought up on kidding and tap dancing so, in the bosom of the Keelers, I guess I'm doomed to stay "Kick-In-The-Pants."

I'm proud of the way I got my nickname. N.T.G. (Nils Granlund) gave it to me and it ties up with my first memory of Ruby as a professional dancer. There are nine years between Ruby and me, but we Keelers go in "steps" (I didn't mean to make a pun, honest!) and as soon as Ruby began to study tap dancing with Jack Blue, which was when she was about eleven, she had all of us lined up learning it. I think I learned to tap as soon as I learned to walk—at least I can't remember the time I didn't know how.

Well, when Ruby was thirteen she was appearing in an act with N. T. G. for the first time. She took a box at the theatre for Mother and Dad and us kids, and I was all dolled up in a stiff white (Continued on page 106)

Dolores DEL RIO

Dolores and her husband, Cedric Gibbons, recently flew to Mexico, where they rented a house for their temporary visit. It's the first time the Del Rio has visited her native land in nine years. Incidentally, she's been hearing some grand things about her performance in "Du Barry," which pleases the young woman no end.

Elizabeth Allen would rate Hollywood as well nigh perfect if her handsome hubby could be there. As it is, she phones him in London every day and he has crossed the ocean seven times within two years to visit his famous wife. You'll see her soon in "David Copperfield" for M-G-M. Frank Morgan goes in for the social life in a big way and has the setting with which to do it—a Brentwood estate, a yacht; well, you know, all the trimmings. However, he works hard, too, "The Good Fairy" for Universal being his next. Joan Blondell is a disarmingly frank gal. She ups and tells 'em, and yet has lots of friends. As we go to press, she is very anxiously awaiting the Barnes heir. Her latest film is "Kansas City Princess" for Warners. Gary Cooper has just finished "Lives of a Bengal Lancer" for Paramount and there was one time when the experience in riding, roping and shooting came in handy, for he won't use a double.

Joan BLONDELL
Gary
COOPER

Pat O'Brien, Conchita Montenegro, Mary Astor, Frank Lawton

Listen to the line-up of Pat O'Brien's friends—Cagney, McHugh and Tracy. Sounds sorta Irish, eh, wot? He's in "Flirtation Walk" with Ruby and Dick. After spending a lot of time and money on perfecting her English, Conchita Montenegro is required to speak French in "Hell in the Heavens." What luck!

Mary Astor is one of the most dignified girls in Hollywood—or any place else. She lives quietly with her husband and never permits their child to be photographed. She's just finished "I Am a Thief." Frank Lawton is in "David Copperfield," and we predict the fans over here are going to be cuh-razy about him. He's English, you know, and said to be secretly married to Evelyn Laye.

REVIEWS . . . A TOUR

Read about the highlights in current pictures and choose your movie fare accordingly

1. Dick Powell and Josephine Hutchinson in "Happiness Ahead." 2. Thomas Meighan and Jackie Cooper together in "Peck's Bad Boy." 3. "The Merry Widow," with Jeanette MacDonald and Chevalier.

A: HAPPINESS AHEAD (First National)

Really swell entertainment. When analyzed, the story here is just the old, reliable "poor boy falls for rich girl," but it is so well done and so thoroughly delightful that one doesn't really care how old the plot is. Dick Powell, the old smoothie, must have been hiding his light under a bushel for he proves how versatile he is and gives one of the most charming performances of the season. Second honors go to John Halliday whose characterization of the father is exceptional. A newcomer, Josephine Hutchinson, though not a beauty, can act. Dick sings some grand songs and we have a hunch "Pop Goes Your Heart" will be a sensation. "Happiness Ahead" and "Beauty Must Be Loved" are also good tunes. The whole family will enjoy this, so you had better see it.

A: MERRY WIDOW (M-G-M)

Lavish production, Lubitsch directing. That statement may be the answer to your entertainment problem, but on the other hand, if you saw this picture in the silent version you may wonder at some of the changes. Herr Lubitsch always treats romance lightly and with a tongue-in-the-cheek attitude and, in this case, by changing the former "passionate" romance to "sophisticated" romance succeeds in altering the tempo of the story. Jeanette MacDonald sings beautifully and with a new spirit that is very delightful. Chevalier acts with his usual charm, albeit a bit stiffly. Some of the cleverest work in the picture is done by Edward Everett Horton and the remainder of the cast which includes Una Merkel, George Barbier, and Minna Gombell is uniformly excellent. The beautiful "Merry Widow" music is almost intact and the dances are very well done. So, whether you enjoy the picture because of Lubitsch's directing, the story, the music, or the cast, we are sure you will get your money's worth.

OF TODAY'S TALKIES

For short reviews see The Report Card on page 10

BY WALTER RAMSEY

4. Eddie Lowe and Gloria Stuart in "Gift of Gab." 5. Francis Lederer and Joan Bennett as the romantic pair in "The Pursuit of Happiness." 6. Joel McCrea and Miriam Hopkins in a happy mood in "The Richest Girl in the World."

B: THE RICHEST GIRL IN THE WORLD (RKO-Radio)

One of the most delightful comedies to come out of Hollywood in many a day. While the story seems a bit impossible and farfetched at times, no one will mind that. We can't think of anyone who could have played the leading role better than Miriam Hopkins did. She gave it the same life and animation that make all her characterizations so interesting. It's all about "the richest girl in the world" who wants the man whom she marries to do so because of her and not because of her money. Just how she goes about proving to herself that the man she loves really loves her, is most amusing and will afford you plenty of laughs. Henry Stephenson, Joel McCrea, Reginald Denny and Fay Wray give convincing and memorable performances.

A: THE PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS (Paramount)

A thoroughly charming and witty picture. If you have never liked Francis Lederer before, you will like him in this, surely. His accent is attractive, his characterization is deft and, just as soon as he does something about his hair, we will be for him one hundred per cent—instead of only ninety-eight per cent, as we are now. Joan Bennett is sweet and saucy, Mary Boland is her familiar befuddled self as Joan's mama, and Charles Ruggles almost—but not quite—steals the picture as Joan's papa. Walter Kingsford as a blue-nosed old busybody and Minor Watson as a South'n Cunnel in Geo'ge Washington's army, suh, are splendid in smaller roles. It's all about Revolutionary times, you know, and the practice known as bundling—the practice wherein a young man courting a girl would get into bed with her to spend the evening. It was all quite proper, we'll have you know. The couple kept all their clothes on. There were furthermore, sound economic and social reasons for the practice, which we won't disclose here. We'll just tell you to go and enjoy the whole thing for yourself—as you most certainly will.

B: PECK'S BAD BOY (Sol Lesser-Fox)

A natural for the whole family. Given the best opportunity since "The Champ," Jackie Cooper makes this famous character stand out with brilliance. While his character was a bit broadly drawn, Thomas Meighan does well in the role of Jackie's father, "Mr. Peck." It's a thrill to see Meighan again. The story, as a whole, follows the book rather well, but certain memorable incidents with the exception of the gag about the ants in church are not present. But, since everyone in the world has read the story, there is little reason to go into that here. The picture will give you many laughs, and perhaps a tear or two. It is real, honest entertainment and the entire family should set aside a night for "Peck's Bad Boy." Be sure to take the children since this story is one of their favorites.

C: GIFT OF GAB (Universal)

Pleasant enough entertainment. What a cast—almost every contract player on the Universal lot, plus flocks of big names from the radio thrown in for good measure. (Continued on page 110)

Perhaps Clark Gable, Ramon Novarro, Ann Dvorak and John Barrymore have undergone the greatest changes of all.

HAVE YOU IN THE LAST

Movie stars have substituted for shyness, docility for

THERE is some curious chemistry in the very atmosphere of Hollywood which causes its citizens to undergo drastic changes of personality. Of course, if you will stop to think for a minute, you will realize that it is impossible to snatch up a boy or a girl—and the potential stars are very young when the hand of Hollywood first beckons them—from his ordinary mode of living, and lavish upon him all of the good things of life, without having it affect him vitally in some way.

You and I are no different from the stars. We change, too, and I believe the scientists tell us that every seven years we undergo a physical change, that we haven't the same cells or blood that we had seven years before. Our minds behave differently along with our bodies.

The picture stars change more radically than we do because in emotional Hollywood they are subject to swift success and just as sudden failure. And when you read that such and such an actor is exactly as he was when he first came to Hollywood, it's either a lot of bunk or the person under discussion has no imagination at all.

No, it isn't in the cards for these people to remain the same when their lives and their manner of living are doing such fantastic nip-ups. But it is a fascinating journey to make a psychological tour of their minds and their hearts and to discover in what ways they become changed and how they got like that.

Let's start with Clark Gable. I do not need to go into the details of his early struggles—how every studio gave him a test and pronounced him unworthy of even a small part; how, out of sheer desperation at his persistency, they at last cast him in a couple of roles which caused

BY CAROLINE
SOMERS HOYT

CHANGED FIVE YEARS?

glamor for dowdiness, poise temperament—and you can, too

the public to demand him, proclaiming him a really great success.

It is not hard to see how this would baffle, bewilder and embitter a man even better emotionally balanced than Gable. It did embitter him. Instead of being thrilled with his triumph and grateful that it had come at last he shouted, "Damn all producers! They're fools. For years I've been begging for parts. They said I wasn't good enough to be an extra. And now I'm a success. But it wasn't the 'smart' producers who had sense enough to realize I had it in me. It was the public I have to thank. The producers can't take any credit. They didn't do anything for me. I am still the man I was when they were turning me off the lots. Stupid idiots!"

THUS he spoke—out of his bitterness caused by those years of unutterable defeat. "I won't let success go to my head," he swore at that time. "I'll just keep on cursing producers."

But, as you can see, success had already gone to his head. It didn't make him ritzy. It didn't let him buy big houses and flashy cars. But success, coming so late, made him hard and rebellious, out for all he could get while the getting was good.

The producers smiled—they had dealt with such an attitude before—and shoved Clark into rôle upon rôle. "Sure," he said, "they're making money on me and making it fast."

He even walked out on a couple of parts, demanded more money and bid fare to become one of Hollywood's most troublesome rebels. But before he gave any serious trouble, a great humility settled upon him. The bitter Gable then turned meek! (Continued on page 103)

(Right) As that old meanie, Papa Browning, in "The Barretts of Wimpole Street." Mr. L. doesn't mind unsympathetic parts. But he most certainly does mind interviewers! "Why this pawing over of my dull life?" he asks.

Try to figure Charlie out. He's more fun than a jig-saw

BY ROBERT FENDER

THE GREAT LAUGHTON Mystery

YOU'LL never know Charles Laughton.

You won't know him after you read this article and a hundred better ones. I've just finished a four-hour session with him and the real Charles Laughton remains locked up behind his half-mocking mask of a face. Don't let anyone in Hollywood tell you he knows Charles Laughton. Tell him I said he doesn't.

Charles Laughton is thirty-four. He is fat, slovenly and very mysterious. One moment he is clowning in the American fashion, the next finds him silent, unhearing, unconscious of your presence, miles away from everything. He hates interviews, attention, acclaim, or any of the business which goes with being a celebrity.

"Why interviews?" he asked, sprawled out in most ungainly fashion in a borrowed dressing-room. "Why this pawing over of my dull life? I'm an actor. There's a small wheel somewhere inside me which makes me one. Such a small wheel makes someone else a painter, pianist or singer. That wheel is something apart from me. I don't know anything more about it than you. I can't take credit for it any more than someone born with a voice can take credit for singing well."

Our interview started in the Paramount publicity office, drifted to the commissary, where Laughton overate and over-tipped, and ended in the aforementioned dressing-room. At the start, a bus-load of sightseers shuffled past the office. Laughton asked in a distressed voice who they were. When he learned, he shuddered. Never have I seen a man apparently suffer such inner pain. "My God," he groaned, "let's not go out there yet. Wait until they disappear. They'll treat me like this," and, hopping quickly to his feet, he grasped and pumped the hands of a few writers gathered in the office.

"One day," he went on quickly, "I was walking through a London park at dusk when, all of a sudden, two eyes popped out of the half-dark to within an inch of my nose, as an eerie voice proclaimed, 'I just wanted to look at you.' The object vanished as quickly and mysteriously as it appeared. I stopped dead still and felt myself getting sick. My feeling of nausea was such that I thought surely I'd lose my dinner." And he sank into his chair, burying his head in his hands.

This was no play acting. This was Charles Laughton, the artist. The anguish on his face was real. His total inability to understand mob worship, the desire of fans to see and touch their idols was as clear as the nose on his face. We slid over to the commissary.

I'M in Hollywood," he answered my query, "because I want to be here. Everyone is swell to me. Movies are very important. I've had a long talk with Helen Hayes about her contention that actors should return to the stage from time to time for (Continued on page 89)

WHAT ADRIENNE FEARS

BY DORA ALBERT

Do you remember the Bruce Cabot of about two years ago? Remember his cynical expression—his hard, bitter look? And now—a changed man! Adrienne did that.

Can Adrienne Ames and Bruce Cabot beat the marriage jinx?

THREE times Adrienne Ames has been married, and now Hollywood believes that her third marriage, the one to Bruce Cabot, for which she sacrificed wealth, position and security, is in danger of going on the rocks. The vultures are already waiting to pounce on that marriage and to shout triumphantly, "We told you it couldn't last!"

Well, what is the truth about this marriage? I don't want to hand you any line about moonlight and honeysuckle, how Adrienne is perfectly happy and Bruce is perfectly happy, and all the little bluebirds are singing. Only too often you've read that one, only to read later of a divorce in some home that you'd been told was ideally happy. So I want to tell you the simple, honest truth as I see it. If you are ever faced with the decision that Adrienne Ames had to make, of giving up everything for love, it may help you to know how her marriage is working out.

First, let me tell you this. Adrienne and Bruce Cabot are madly in love with each other and are making a terrific effort to keep their marriage from going on the rocks. But—

Against them they have arraigned not only Hollywood, which never sympathized with this romance, but themselves. For these two people are at war, not with each other, but with themselves. And until they have made peace with themselves, how can they find contentment in marriage?

Before I met Adrienne, I thought all sorts of things. I thought that she was a hard-boiled materialist who had married Stephen Ames because she knew on which side her bread was buttered, and who had given him the air when real love came along. Now I know better. When Adrienne met Stephen, he wasn't a millionaire stock broker offering her ease and security. He was just starting in business, and he didn't have much faith in himself, nor did others have much faith in him. Married once before, he was practically starting all over again after his divorce.

Adrienne encouraged him, she restored his faith in himself and inspired him with the courage needed to make him one of the best brokers on Wall Street. And she did all these things because she loved him, not with the tempestuous love which she was later to feel for Bruce Cabot, but with a calmer, quieter love. She took it for granted that she would always remain married to Stephen. She had had one unhappy marriage when she was sixteen, one of those insane school girl elopements, and Stephen had adopted her daughter by that marriage.

If her love for Stephen died gradually during the four years she was married to him, she did not know it, for she was not given to any searching of her heart. She might never have known it had she not met Bruce.

TODAY she thinks that her love for Bruce Cabot was predestined.

In the ordinary course of events they wouldn't have met at all. Bruce was with RKO, and never loaned out to other studios. Adrienne (Continued on page 85)

ADDING COMMON SENSE to GLAMOR

We'd all love to be glamorous. And yet most of us must be practical. Jean Parker knows how to combine the two (Above) A tweed suit of slate blue, touched with red and black, and a very brave, bright red velveteen blouse to wear with it. (Extreme right) A cocktail suit, sophisticated enough for a cocktail party, and young enough for Jean's years. On top of a slim, slinky skirt of finest quality chiffon velvet (because, of course, a poor quality of chiffon velvet gets all shiny in back) Jean wears a metal blouse of sea-green (see the small picture, right, above). It has a square neck, front and back—very youthful. The hip-length jacket is black velvet. The hat (right) is mushroom-like in shape and has a brim of peek-a-boo horsehair—very devastating indeed, when a pair of dark-fringed eyes look up through it.

You might expect Jean to go ruffly when it comes to evening clothes, mightn't you? Well, she doesn't. Because she knows that simpler lines are not nearly as tiring. So she chooses for an evening gown a smoky brown crêpe, with soft drapery at the top. One brown and gold metal rose and one green and silver one are the only decoration. The drapery wanders around back and ends up in a graceful train, as you can see above.

BY VIRGINIA T. LANE

IT came out, a perfect thrill of an idea, right on the busiest corner of Wilshire Boulevard! And it came from Hollywood's newest, cutest, youngest star, Jean Parker. This idea about being glamorous though practical.

"A girl doesn't have to throw all practical considerations to the winds to be glamorous. She doesn't have to be in the movies to 'star' in her clothes. But in a way, learning how to dress is like developing a screen career. First, there's a 'test,' then one has to learn the 'make-up' and 'lighting effects' for colors, one must learn her 'lines,' and most important of all, one has to put dramatic value into dressing."

Imagine having a choice bit like that tossed at you while you waited for a go signal.

"What do you mean by a 'test'?" I demanded, ignoring horns, fenders and brushing bumpers in my excitement.

"That, my dear Watson, is something we're about to investigate," Jean said as she led me into that ultra smart, ultra modern shop known as Bullock's Wilshire. Coming through the door was Gloria Swanson. She smiled, stopped to talk for a minute and, to my utter amazement, I realized she was only a fraction taller than Jean. Somehow you always think of Gloria as so stately and regal.

"That is where the 'test' comes in," explained Jean as we whizzed up in the elevator. "Miss Swanson and I are almost the same height. We both have dark hair and blue-gray-green eyes, but can you imagine us wearing the same sort of style? Wouldn't it be funny?

"You see, it isn't only your body you dress, it's your mind too, the kind of person you are inside."

You'll all be wanting a black satin dress. They always look sophisticated and gay and do you good service in a practical way, too. (Always wear a good foundation garment under satin. Even the slimmest of you.) Jean's frock has a slit in the skirt and a knife-pleated frill round the throat and two white satin roses. The hat is black velvet, decorated with small rhinestones.

If you want to stretch out a wardrobe to look bigger than it is, there's nothing like a couple of tunics to help you. Here's a very gay type of tunic—modelled after an artist's smock in brown and green, with a brown fringed scarf to tuck in at the neck. The hat—an exaggerated beret, stitched on top—has won our heart completely. Isn't it mischievous looking?

Jean's clothes have very many exciting, 1935-ish points

I nodded, wondering. This was Jean, the artist, speaking, the same little girl whose posters and other drawings have won more prizes than ever Pulitzer can count. "That," she was saying, "is why every woman needs a 'try-out' each season to find just what the new fashions do for her. This is ours.

"Now with me, I'm short. I could no more feel comfortable in one of these latest swooping fur collars than I could in a steel jacket. It would bury me. But how I do love long, soft, clinging things and skirts that swish around your ankles."

An out-and-out romanticist, this girl, without any of the sticky sentimental trimmings. And that, I discovered later, was exactly the feeling of everything she bought. There wasn't a costume that wouldn't make a boy wish for a guitar and moonlight, but they had a definite crispness about them as if they knew where they were going, each and every one. And suddenly I was remembering a little Jean who'd had the courage to work her way through school, who, at the same time, was so steeped in romance she could secretly love a boy for three years—and afterwards cling to him (Continued on page 101)

FURTHER REPORTS ON A BENEFIT ENJOYED BY CAMEL SMOKERS

On this page are submitted the latest reports received from Camel smokers . . . real experiences of real people. Miss Helen Hicks, Ellsworth Vines, Jr., Shepard Barclay, Miss Eve Miller. Miss Miller has an exacting job as a New York department-store executive. She says: "I started to smoke Camels because I appreciate mildness and delicacy of flavor. I found, too, that Camels give me a 'lift' when my energy is low—and Camels never upset my nerves."

Camels are milder—a matchless blend of costlier tobaccos! Smoke them all you want. They never jangle your nerves.

BRIDGE EXPERT. (below) "Smoking Camels helps concentration," says Shepard Barclay. "I prefer Camels...I can smoke them steadily without jangled nerves. They're always mild!"

TENNIS STAR. (above) Ellsworth Vines, Jr., says: "Camels restore my pep ...take away that tired feeling...I can smoke all the Camels I want, for they don't interfere with healthy nerves."

TOBACCO EXPERTS ALL KNOW:

"Camels are made from finer, More Expensive Tobaccos—Turkish and Domestic—than any other popular brand."

CHAMPION GOLFER. (above) Miss Helen Hicks says: "I can smoke Camels constantly without a sign of upset nerves."

Copyright, 1934, R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company

Camel's Costlier Tobaccos never get on your Nerves!

Beech-Nut steals the show!

Lad-i-e-s and Gentlemen! . . . Beech-Nut presents . . . a mouth-watering performance . . that will give the most jaded appetite a new thrill! Here's a glorious galaxy of flavors . . in gum, fruit drops and mints. Follow the crowd and join the big parade. Step right up and say . . "Beech-Nut"!

MODERN SCREEN Patterns

722

720

722—(Below, left) No wardrobe is complete without at least one tunic. Ann Dvorak wears hers in checked angora wool, with a skirt of plain wool. This should also be very chic in crepe, with perhaps an aquamarine top and black skirt. Sizes 14, 16, 18, 36, 38 and 40.

720—(Center) Fay Wray sports a brown wool dress and jacket, spotted with white. Braided bands of white wool decorate the neck, cuffs and make the belt. The knee-length jacket completes the ensemble. Sizes 14, 16, 18, 36, 38 and 40.

710

710—(Above) Margaret Lindsay's black wool will serve you well during the winter months. It is simple, yet amazingly smart, with its high, stand-up collar and starched lace bow effect in front. Sizes 14, 16, 18, 36, 38 and 40.

MODERN SCREEN Pattern Service
149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

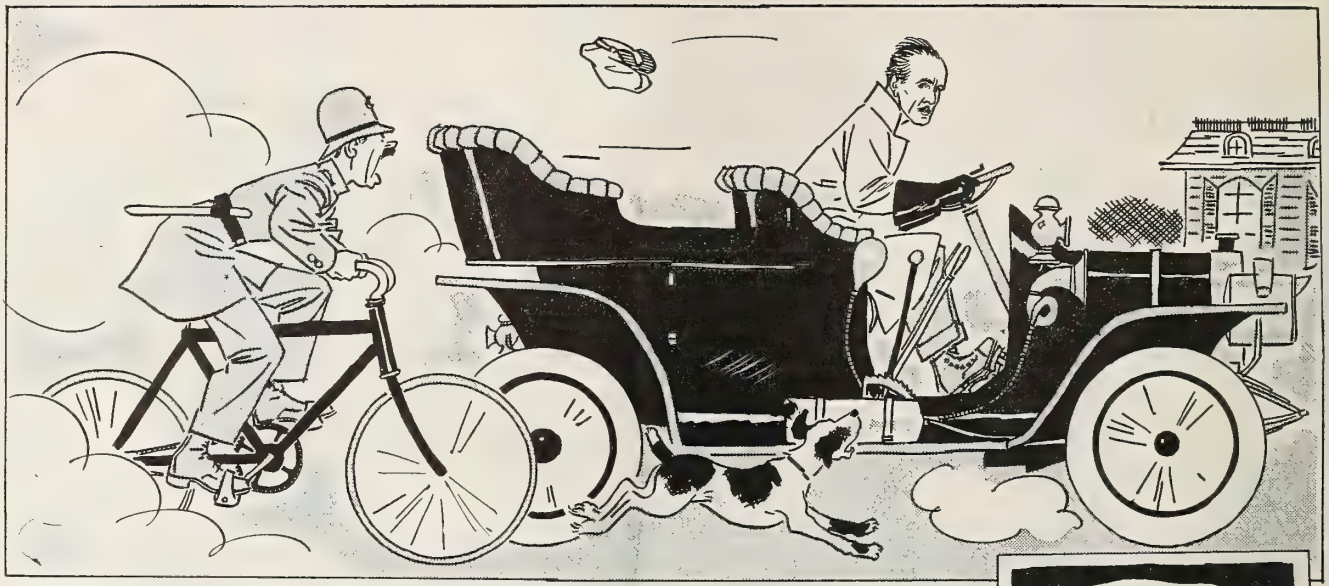
I am enclosing.....(in coin or United States stamps) for which please send me the following:

Pattern No..... Size..... Pattern No..... Size.....

Pattern No..... Size.....

Do you want our latest Pattern Book? .....

[Patterns are 15c each. Book 10c when ordered with pattern, 15c when ordered separately. No foreign or Canadian stamps accepted.]



Name.....

Street Address.....

City and State.....

(Please write in pencil)

ALL JOKING ASIDE BY JACK WELCH

LEWIS STONE DROVE ONE OF THE FIRST FOUR AUTOMOBILES SEEN ON THE STREETS OF LOS ANGELES AND WAS ONCE ARRESTED FOR SPEEDING AT 12 MILES AN HOUR

"ESTRELLITA", THE SENTIMENTAL SPANISH LOVE SONG, WAS PLAYED MORE THAN 500 TIMES IN ONE DAY DURING THE FILMING OF "HAVE A HEART" IN ORDER THAT JEAN PARKER COULD CRY. IT IS THE ONE TUNE THAT MAKES HER WEEP

KATHARINE HEPBURN HAS A BRIGHT YELLOW FLIVVER TRUCK EQUIPPED WITH A ROW OF BENCHES FOR PEOPLE WHO THUMB RIDES AROUND THE STUDIO

DURING THE SHOOTING OF "PART TIME LADY" CAROLE LOMBARD HAD TO TAKE 21 SHOWER BATHS IN A DAY FOR A PARTICULAR SEQUENCE

MARGARET LINDSAY MEMORIZES HER LINES BY RECITING THEM WHILE DRIVING AROUND IN HER CAR

Have you tried this New Powder?

that makes skin so Clear, Transparent!

Send for your 3 shades—

They'll glorify your skin!

OVER 200 GIRLS' SKIN "Color-Analyzed!"

"Yes, "color-analyzed"! Amazing colors were found hidden in those 200 girls' skin. "A dash of bright blue. You can't see it in skin or in the powder. Except through the machine. Pond's found out the amount to make a blonde look "peachy." The touch of vivid green that makes brunette skin magnolia-like. "The new Pond's powder shades were all worked out by painstaking analysis of every type of skin. Now they are ready! You'll be amazed at what they'll do for you.

NATURAL — compliments the fair skin of Mrs. Allen Whitney, a golden blonde, to a glowing radiance. Excellent with grey hair.

ROSE CREAM—preferred by Miss Charlotte Young because it gives her lily-pale loveliness a "peachy" bloom. Ideal for blondes.

LIGHT CREAM—red-gold hair, delicately pink-and-white skin, prompts Miss Lilla Fisk to select this shade. It freshens the skin.

BRUNETTE—Brown-haired, brown-eyed, with ivory skin, Miss Mary Weld uses this entirely new glamorous shade.

DARK BRUNETTE—Gives brilliance to the olive complexion of the handsome Mrs. Frederic Bellinger. Brightens sun-bronzed skin.

ROSE BRUNETTE—Mrs. William Wetmore's vital coloring is dramatized by this sparkling shade. Makes sallow skin radiant.

HERE'S a new face powder that contains the actual tints in beautiful skin!

Have you ever noticed how some powders will make your skin look dull, gray?

Or dark? Or sallow?

It's because they haven't the tints in them that are found in lovely clear skin.

Such powders destroy the good points you have. And don't add a thing to help you!

But now—just try this new powder that everybody is raving about!

Contains actual Skin Tints—

Pond's Face Powder is scientifically mixed to give you exactly the tints your skin needs to give it life, brilliance, sparkle.

The moment you smooth it on, you realize that your skin is flattered to an alluring loveliness. This is due not only to the thistledown softness of the powder itself, but also to its glamorous shades.

These shades are all absolutely new. Different from any powder you have ever tried. Your skin looks fresh, young—smooth as velvet.

Your friends will notice the difference. Men will say the most flattering things to you. For you'll actually look years younger—and so attractive!

Read the descriptions of these wonderful new shades. And read how marvelously they were discovered.

And then send right off for your gift boxes. You'll surely find one of these shades will make you into a very new and enchanting person.

Finest quality—costs little

The powder is fine, smooth and clinging. And it has a lovely French fragrance.

You can get lovely 55¢ glass jars. Also $1.10. And smart, gay boxes for 25¢. Variety stores and five-and-tens carry the 10¢ and 20¢ sizes. But, if you want to sample this wonderful new powder first—here's the coupon!

10¢ ¼ actual size

ONLY 55¢

FINEST POSSIBLE INGREDIENTS

Free! SEND COUPON. Get 2 Special Boxes and Extra Sample free! Three different shades!

(This offer expires January 1, 1935)

POND'S EXTRACT COMPANY, Dept. M, 94 Hudson St., New York
Please send me FREE Two Special Boxes of Pond's new Powder and an extra sample . . . 3 different shades in all.
I prefer 3 different LIGHT shades ☐
I prefer 3 different DARK shades ☐

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ State_____

Copyright, 1934, Pond's Extract Company

MODERN SCREEN DRAMATIC School

Claudette Colbert is our guest instructor in this month's dramatic class.

CONDUCTED BY KATHERINE ALBERT

WHEN I started this department, I told you that it belonged to you and that I wanted to include in it the things that you most want to know. Your letters have guided me entirely in my choice of subject matter. Keep those letters up—they're swell—and then tell me what you want to know. I've read all the letters that came this month—and golly! what a lot there were—to discover that the most oft repeated request is for advice about diction.

You boys and girls and men and women with stage and screen ambitions, and all of you hundreds of thousands of people who simply want to know the fine points of dramatic art so that it will help you in your daily lives and furnish amusement for you in amateur theatricals—you must all learn how to speak correctly. You should want a lovely, cultured voice even if all you ever do with it is to ask the grocer the price of eggs today. But if you're going in for any branch of dramatics you simply must know the correct pronunciation of words. You cannot fall into sloppy speech habits. And to save you from this fault, this month I consulted five of the greatest diction teachers in the world. The information I got from them I'm passing on to you. In about a minute I'm going to give you a list of words which have pitfalls in them—words which are so very often mispronounced. Before I do that, I want to tell you some of the general rules of pronunciation which so many of us don't know, but which you must know if you are to benefit by MODERN SCREEN'S course in dramatic art.

First of all, there's the case of that much discussed and annoying letter "a." I mean the "a" in such words as can't, ask, bath, past and so on. Cultured people do not give it a short "a" sound, as in at, sat, pan, rap; nor are they so affected as to say "cawnt" and "bawth." The right path lies midway between these two sounds. I'll tell you what I mean.

Say the word "soda." Now use that same "a" in "soda" for can't, ask, bath, past, etc. That—as near as I can put it on paper—is the correct "a" for such words. It has nothing in common with the flat drawling "a" of some Southerners nor yet the low-class "a" of the cockney Englishman. You must work hard and practice in order to do this "a" correctly. Use the word "soda" as your test word. And keep checking up on yourself if you want your speech to be something lovely and beautiful.

NOW here's another sound of which you must be particularly careful. For goodness sake, watch such words as new and blue. The correct pronunciation of the word "blue" will show you what I mean. It is never, never "bloo." There's a slight "ee" sound before the "oo." Not too exaggerated. Practice, to get enough of the "ee" in before the "oo" and to blend the two sounds into what diction teachers call the long "u." That rule goes for stew and suit, too.

I want you next to consider such words as homage, damage and label. You are, of course, putting the accent on the right syllable, but I'll bet you're slurring over the last syllable. You probably say "lá-bl." And for "damage" I'll wager you give the final syllable the sound of "ij" (short "i") instead of "aj." So here's a quotation from Richard Grant White, a gentleman who knows his diction, which I want you to memorize—and remember! He says: "It is by the delicate but firm utterance of the unaccented vowel, with correct sound, that the cultured person is most surely distinguished from the uncultured." Don't forget that.

Also watch such words as "education," "culture," etc. It is "ed-u-ka-shùn" and most emphatically not "ej-oo-ka-shun." "Culture," "literature" and all other such words follow the same rule. Don't put that "j" sound into words which don't have it.

And now I'm going to skip about and give you a list of words which are so often mispronounced. And after you've learned how they (Continued on page 111)

Want a lovely speaking voice? Try some of these rules

"This newly discovered Yeast is much quicker . . .

DR. LEE, noted authority on Yeast for Health, is in constant touch with famous scientists all over the medical world.

indigestion, ... rected twice as fast, reported. "Astonishing."

Secret of new yeast's quicker action is its hormone-like* substances which make digestive juices flow fast and strengthen action of digestive tract.

● DR. ROBERT LATZEL, noted clinic head, reports: "'XR' Yeast twice as quick-acting, due to amazing effect on digestive juices."

A new, stronger "strain" of yeast, discovered in a U. S. medical college, speeds digestive juices, strengthens digestive muscles. (Newly-added Vitamin A combats colds!)

ALREADY the news has cheered millions . . . amazed doctors. Hundreds of questions have been asked. Dr. Lee answers some of them below:—

1. How is it different?

It's a totally new "strain" of fresh yeast. Far stronger. It acts faster inside you.

2. How was it Discovered?

By a famous bacteriologist in a great American medical college . . . after years of research on yeast's action.

3. How was it "Tried Out"?

By well-known doctors throughout America and Europe . . . on hundreds of their most stubborn cases of constipation, indigestion, skin troubles and run-down condition. The doctors were amazed. The results were the "talk" of the clinics!

"Some time ago," writes Barbara Evans, Ridley Park, Pa., "Yeast helped me a lot. Lately I again lost my pep—tried the new yeast. It's quicker. I felt better in two days."

4. How do Doctors explain it?

The reason most people get constipated, have stomach troubles, etc., is—their digestive juices and muscles have slowed up!

*This new "XR" Yeast is exceedingly rich in hormone-like substances ("activators") which speed up these juices and muscles all through your digestive system amazingly!

5. Why does it correct Constipation and Indigestion faster?

Because it makes your digestive juices flow faster and muscles work harder all the way from the stomach on down! Food is more quickly softened, digested, passed through your body. You can eat things you couldn't eat before—without indigestion or constipation. "XR" Yeast "normalizes" you!

6. Does the Skin clear quicker?

Yes! Skin troubles (as a rule) come from poisons that aren't thrown off by the intestines. "XR" Yeast corrects this self-poisoning—makes your blood purer—skin healthier. Pimples, boils, etc., soon clear up.

7. Will "Run-down" feeling go?

Usually! Patients often feel better almost at once! You should get more "good" from your food—have fewer headaches—better appetite—more vigor.

After 40, especially, people need "XR" Yeast to correct the slowing of digestive secretions occurring rapidly after that age. It also helps often in rheumatism.

8. Will it reduce Colds?

Yes—by cleansing your system and supplying Vitamin A (newly added), the "infection-preventing" vitamin. Each cake of Fleischmann's "XR" Yeast is also rich in Vitamins B, D and G . . 4 important vitamins!

EAT 3 CAKES EVERY DAY . . . plain, or dissolved in one-third glass of water—preferably half an hour before each meal. Keep on until you're thoroughly well. Get a 3-day supply now!

(It is as good as ever for baking, too!)

Fleischmann's XR Yeast

ON SALE AT GROCERS, RESTAURANTS, SODA FOUNTAINS

Copyright, 1934, Standard Brands Inc.

Beauty Advice

Barbara Stanwyck (extreme left) as she is today with a more glamorous make-up and (next) as she used to look. (Above, left and right) The Jean Muir of today, appearing decidedly pert, and Jean in her earlier pictures.

"Enough is as good as a feast!" When it comes to make-up, the adage still holds

BY MARY BIDDLE

HAS Bob or Louis or Joe ever poked you in the ribs in a most ungentlemanly fashion when you have been taking a stroll together and exclaimed, "Hey, did you see that freak? Look!" And when you turned around, expecting to see nothing less than a five-eared rabbit, you saw a woman who was a walking, breathing example of what not to do, cosmetically speaking? She may have thought she looked exotic, but "queer" was the way you felt about it.

Bob and Louis and Joe always feel that way about unnaturalness—freakishness, to them—they hate it, laugh at it and keep away from it. It is fun to join them in their derisive remarks as long as we know we are beyond reproach, but how awful it would be if we were the person at whom these remarks were directed.

There is only one way to be sure of not being that person, and that is to know how to use make-up, how much to use, when to use it and what kind to use. That sounds like a tall order, but it is really simplicity itself if you will only use your common sense along with your paint box.

All of this was brought to me most forcibly and dramatically the other day, as I talked to Dick Willis, the make-up-man at Warner Brothers' eastern studio. He is a veritable wizard when it comes to working magic with faces—he actually charms and enchants. I knew, just from watching him work, that Dick could make many revelations to the would-be-beautifuls of the world. He not only could, but did, and I am taking the liberty of passing some of them along to you.

If you want to be the lovely image every woman wishes to be, then follow the plans laid by the master artist, our Creator. After all, He knew what He was doing. Presuming that nowadays all women give their skins attention and care, let's begin at the beginning of the art of applied make-up.

A thoroughly clean skin is an essential foundation, so take care of that first. Then rub your skin briskly. It will cause the blood to circulate through the tiny, and ofttimes starving pores of the face, and with it, a purifying process takes place. Your skin is fortified and ready to receive make-up. I am still heartily enthusiastic about a skin-enlivening cleanser I've mentioned before. If you want the name of it, write to (Continued on page 81)

Nancy gets compliments ——— dates galore

She removes cosmetics the Hollywood way—guards against unattractive Cosmetic Skin . . .

"Believe me, it's nice to be dated up weeks ahead! And I've a hunch that it's due to a simple complexion secret.

"So many girls nowadays run the risk of getting Cosmetic Skin. It just ruins their looks—and their popularity.

"I don't take chances! Naturally I use cosmetics, but I never let my pores get choked with stale make-up. At night, and before I make up during the day, I remove cosmetics thoroughly the Hollywood way—with Lux Toilet Soap. It's gorgeous what this does for my skin!"

Cosmetics Harmless if removed this way

Many girls who think they remove make-up thoroughly actually leave bits of stale rouge and powder in the pores to choke them . . . enlarge them, cause little blemishes, even blackheads. Warning signals of Cosmetic Skin!

Guard against this with Lux Toilet Soap. Its rich lather is ACTIVE, made to remove cosmetics thoroughly—every hidden trace!

Always at night, and before you put on fresh make-up during the day, wash with gentle, white Lux Toilet Soap. This protects your skin, keeps it lovely!

MARGARET SULLAVAN

STAR OF UNIVERSAL'S "LITTLE MAN, WHAT NOW?"

ENTER Madame

Paramount has taken a stage success of some years ago "Enter Madame," revamped it, put Elissa Landi and Cary Grant in it and—we think you'll like it. It concerns a temperamental opera star, Lisa Della Robbia, her business-man husband, and their hectic love affairs. The man refuses to be known as Mr. Della Robbia and carry Lisa's pet Peke around European capitals. They split. Lisa takes up with "the other man," Lynne Overman. The husband takes up with another woman. And then the highly temperamental Lisa, together with her equally temperamental maid, cook, doctor and —oh, yes, the dog—go after him. Do they get him back? Well, what do you think?

A MODERN SCREEN PREVIEW

Tintex Is Sheer Magic For Faded Apparel and Home Decorations

Use TINTEX for

Underthings • Negligees
Dresses • Sweaters • Scarfs
Stockings • Slips • Men's Shirts • Blouses • Children's Clothes • Curtains • Bed
Spreads • Drapes • Luncheon
Sets • Doilies • Slip Covers

AT ALL DRUG STORES, NOTION AND TOILET GOODS COUNTERS

• The Easy, Inexpensive Way to Color-Smartness •

SMART women find the Tintex way is the simplest and most economical way to keep their wardrobe modish . . . and their home decorations like new. For at the cost of only a few pennies, Tintex makes faded color snap back to gay freshness . . . or gives fashionable new color, if you wish. And Tintex is so easy . . . so quick! No fuss, or bother . . . simply "tint as you rinse." The results are equal to costly professional work. 35 brilliant, long-lasting colors from which to choose!

PARK & TILFORD, Distributor

Tintex World's Largest Selling Tints & Dyes

(Continued from page 15)

Here's where star-gazing is exciting and profitable!

edge of the tent to make her getaway.

Why does Katie insist upon making such a fool of herself? The picture boys don't bite—they only snap! By the way, there's a picture on page 13 of temperamental Katie and a boy friend at the Hollywood Bowl Concert. Both of 'em are hiding their faces. Such goings on!

Ken Murray is no longer head man in Sue Carol's life. Now that Sue is legally free from Nick Stuart, they are saying she will marry Howard Wilson, young Paramount player, as soon as the California law allows.

WHILE Janet Gaynor is in Europe, Gene Raymond is going around with Mary Brian. Or maybe we might say it this way: while Dick Powell is away on a personal appearance tour, Mary Brian is going around with Gene Raymond.

BARNUM WAS RIGHT

Lee Tracy came out of the Brown Derby the other day and went hook-line-and-sinker for a newsboy's chatter: "Ninety-four people swindled!"

Lee paid for his paper and started to walk away when the boy yelled: "Ninety-five people swindled!"

AFTER interviewing some two thousand boys from all over the United States and testing over five hundred of them, M-G-M at last imported a young actor from England to play the boy in "David Copperfield."

Freddie Bartholomew is the name of the lucky lad who has this swell role thrown in his lap without any previous screen experience.

Neil Hamilton has just established a fund at the University of California that will allow the dean of that school to choose two worthy students each year for five successive years and hand them a free scholarship with Neil's compliments.

As usual, this fine gesture was kept very secret . . . but sometimes these things leak out.

ANNA MAY WONG has the strangest diet in Hollywood. Whenever Anna wants to lose a couple of pounds she goes on a vanilla ice cream diet. This is against all the rules, but it works with Anna. And you'll appreciate that slinky figure when you see her in "Limehouse Nights."

Both social and film circles are agog about the runaway marriage of Los Angeles' most beautiful débutante, Phyllis Cooper and Onslow Stevens, Universal featured player.

The couple eloped to Yuma, Arizona one midnight last summer and exactly fourteen days later Mrs. Stevens, née Cooper, was back under her bank-president father's roof. They both deny permanent separation.

Jackie Cooper and Baby Rose Marie busily exchanging autographs.

There's something very unfortunate about movie actors falling for local society girls. Monroe Owsley was "engaged" to one of the local heiresses but her family soon squelched that. And the snoopers say there is plenty of trouble ahead if Jack LaRue and popular Connie Simpson step off altarward—I mean family objection trouble.

OTTO KRUGER is becoming plenty discouraged with his latest picture roles. Unless something good comes his way pretty soon, Otto may shake the dust of Hollywood from his shoes and hie himself back to the New York stage. Broadway is clamoring for him.

THERE are two funny stories about autograph seekers going the rounds. Josef von Sternberg tells this one on himself:

A ten-year-old child accosted the director as he came out of the Brown Derby one noon and thrust an autograph book at him.

"But my dear child," Von Sternberg said, "I do not know how to write."

"That's what I thought from seeing your pictures," said the kid. It's the eccentric director's favorite story, proving he has a sense of humor in spite of Hollywood's opinion to the contrary.

The other giggle concerns temperamental Alison Skipworth. Skippy, whose bark is much worse than her bite, was hurrying into the studio when a little girl with pen and book in hand stopped her. The character actress was already late and in a cross mood. "I haven't time," she snapped.

"All right," said the little girl, "but who are you, anyway?"

This romance between Judith Allen and Douglass Montgomery begins to look serious. For the past week they have dined together every night. In Hollywood it takes a lot less than this to start wedding bell rumors.

JUST A LOT OF TALK

HO-HUM, so Kay Francis met Chevalier's boat when it docked at Havre? Well, our advice would be not to take these romance reports too seriously, especially those concerning the prediction that Kay will return to America as Mrs. Maurice Chevalier. Y'see Kay's divorce from Kenneth McKenna won't become final until next January!

So far, the pièce de résistance of the social season, was the Max Reinhardt presentation of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" in the famous Hollywood Bowl. Here was first-night splendor such as Hollywood has not seen since the old days of the Sid Grauman premières. The cast included Mickey Rooney, as the sensational "Puck," William Farnum, Evelyn Venable, and Gloria Stuart, among other Hollywooders. The whole town turned out to welcome them and the great maestro. Spotted among the box holders were:

Norma Shearer, Irving Thalberg and the Robert Montgomerys. Norma wore a green gown with a sable wrap and Mrs. Montgomery was all in white.

William (Continued on page 72)

Over 30—they have the skin of their 20's

Titled beauties from 3 Nations examined by Dermatologists....

say they owe their youthful skin to the same Cream

The Countess Howe
—English beauty. "An unusually lovely skin—has the appearance of being years younger than her age. Firm and clear and fine-pored—free from blemishes." London Physician's Report.

The Duchess of Leinster
—the only American duchess. "A remarkably fresh young skin more than 10 years younger than her actual age. Texture fine and soft. Excellent tone and suppleness." London Physician's Report.

Her Royal Highness Princesse Geneviève d'Orléans
Comtesse de Chaponay, niece of the late King Albert of Belgium, wearing jewels by Mellerio dits Meller, jewelers to the Royal House of France since Louis XIV. "The skin of twenty. Firm, clear, fine." Dermatologist's Report.

A WOMAN'S SKIN may be years younger than her age—or it may be years older.

Dermatologists determine the youth of the skin not by years but by the activity of its circulation. They consider its elasticity and, above all, the ability of its glands to supply rejuvenating oils.

They say that as early as twenty the skin begins to grow old. But you can retard this aging process!

Beauties praise this Cream

The Countess Howe says: "I attribute the freshness of my skin to Pond's Cold Cream." The Duchess of Leinster says: "It soothes tired nerves and it nourishes dry tissues."

While the Princesse Geneviève d'Orléans declares: "Pond's Cold Cream has prevented blemishes—roughness—lines. I would be lost without it."

Three famous beauties—from three different countries—all praise the same cream! This remarkable cold cream answers the three vital needs of the skin:—It gives a thorough, deep-pore cleansing. Even blackheads yield to its gentle action. It softens aging lines before they crease into wrinkles. Finally, it prepares the skin for powder and make-up.

Use it at night—again in the morning—when you freshen up. Your skin will gain new freshness and suppleness. It will feel softer—finer. Your friends will admire this fresh new beauty which Pond's Cold Cream has brought to you.

A NEW FAVORITE—Pond's new Liquefying Cream contains the same oils for which Pond's Cold Cream is famous, but is quicker melting. Cleanses—refines—prepares for powder.

Pond's Cold Cream cleanses thoroughly—corrects skin faults, prepares for powder

HOW OLD IS YOUR SKIN? 20? 30?

Specially processed oils in this cream

CORRECT SKIN FAULTS
of the* 20's

Blackheads, Large pores | Roughness, Dryness | Laughter lines | Little blemishes

FIGHT OFF AGE SIGNS
of the* 30's

Crêpy skin | Worry lines | Sallowness, Discolorations | Sagging tissues

MAIL COUPON FOR A GENEROUS PACKAGE

Pond's Extract Co., Dept. M, 50 Hudson St., N. Y. C. I enclose 10¢ (to cover postage and packing) for 3 days' supply of Pond's Cold Cream with samples of 2 other Pond's Creams and special boxes of Pond's Face Powder. I prefer 3 different LIGHT shades of powder ☐. I prefer 3 different DARK shades ☐.

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ State_____

Copyright, 1934, Pond's Extract Company

(Continued from page 70)

Things are hummin' socially in them thar hills

Powell and Jean Harlow were there and attracted a great deal of attention, as they always do. Jean looked stunning in black velvet. For the first time since they have been "going together," Jean and Bill posed willingly for the photographers.

Marlene Dietrich, in a party with her husband and Von Sternberg, wore her favorite model sports hat (the jockey number) made up in velvet to go with her evening ensemble.

Claudette Colbert looked stunning in a maroon velvet gown and sable wrap.

Following the presentation, a great many of the movie group went to that smart night spot, the Trocadero.

AFTER refusing hundreds of radio offers in the past, Mary Pickford actually signed up to star in a series of dramatic sketches over the National Broadcasting chain.

Hollywood thought, for a while, that the Doug and Mary reconciliation might force the air waves to wait, but the reverse has happened.

IT'S SMART TO BE PLUMP

While most of Hollywood is trying to diet off the extra weight, Loretta Young and Bette Davis are fighting to gain.

Yesterday, it was announced that Loretta had succeeded in putting on twelve extra pounds and Bette beats her past batting average by eight.

And soooooo becoming is the extra poundage to both gals!

AFTER all the trouble they've been having at the Hal Roach Studio, we advise them to install their own hospital.

Most of their stars, and Roach himself, have been in the hospital for some reason or other. Stan Laurel delayed "Babes in Toyland" while the limped about the hospital corridors on crutches; Charley Chase called a halt to his comedy while he spent three weeks in the hospital for stomach treatment; Hal Roach, himself, used up considerable time recovering from an appendicitis operation.

"Time Marches On," at a thousand dollars an hour. That's money!

Virginia Pine had been playing an unlucky bridge game all afternoon when she finally chirped: "Lucky at love, unlucky at cards," which gives us a hint of the Pine-Raft romance temperature.

THIS is so good we can't help passing it on to you:

It seems that one of the studios wanted a certain story and wired a New York agency for their price. Came a wire, "Story offered $3500." The studio relayed its telegraphic reaction as follows, "$1750 best can do."

The agency immediately realized that some mistake must have occurred and wired, "Original wire should have read $35,000." still being typically Hollywood, the studio's answer read, "$17,500 best can do."

"Lives Of A Bengal Lancer" has been having its share of location troubles.

First, Henry Wilcoxon was dropped from the cast because of too much temperament, plus the desire to direct and photograph the picture as well as act in it. He was replaced by Franchot Tone who is no honey to get along with either!

Then, most of Vic McLaglen's "Light Cavalry" decided the work was too heavy and the studio was forced to replace them.

Una Merkel invited her parents and hubby to "The Merry Widow" preview.

The payoff came when Sir Guy Standing thought he had sprained his foot. And it began to look as though production would be held up again. Just as this was about to happen, though, a country doctor in the vicinity discovered that Standing had been bitten by a poisonous spider. However, he soon had Sir Guy back in running order, and shooting continued on Paramount's unlucky picture.

IS Hollywood doomed as the movie production center of the world?

The old town has never watched a political situation with more avid interest than the approaching (as this is written) election of governor of California.

If Upton Sinclair is elected, the word is out that there will be no more Hollywood.

The Big Four producing companies have let it be well understood that Sinclair's proposed State tax against capital will make it impossible to operate at a profit in California. And in spite of the terrific property loss which would be suffered in the move to New York, it would be only a drop in the bucket compared to the proposed tax law.

At the present moment Hollywood is shaking in her boots for her very life, for Hollywood without its stars and its studios would be no Hollywood at all.

Another disturbing whisper is that two big studios, Warner Brothers and M-G-M, are beginning to cast interested eyes in the direction of New York as a production center, no matter how the election comes out. Both M-G-M and Warners have the idea of using their movie stars as stock companies rotating between pictures and the legitimate theatre. And because of the great distance between Hollywood and New York it would be much easier for the contemplated stage engagements if their movies were made in New York.

Mrs. Hank Falaise pulled a "Connie Bennett" in Paris when she arrived there to see her Marquis husband, it is reported.

The boys in the United Artists publicity department in Paris were all set to grab a flock of publicity when Connie arrived, but her Hollywood background got the best of her and she even refused to tell the boys where she was stopping, with the result that the gang in the publicity office did not get a line of headline space.

THE "Drive-In Theatre" is a new idea in California. All you have to do is drive in, park your car and sit and watch the biggest screen you ever saw in your life. The idea hasn't had a chance to prove itself as yet but, no doubt, California and Florida will be infested with them if they happen to go over.

(Continued on page 116)

FAOEN makes Loveliness cost so very Little!

Beauty Aids as fine as Science can produce—yet they cost only 10¢

THE greatest part of charm is personal loveliness. This is a fact the world's most enchanting women have always known. And it is so easy to achieve...providing you follow one simple rule: use only beauty aids of unquestioned purity and quality...such as Faoen.

Smart women everywhere are more and more learning to depend on Faoen Beauty Aids ...for they know that no greater purity or finer quality is to be had at any price!

Read the report of a famous research laboratory:

> "every Faoen product tested is as pure and fine as products of like nature sold for $1, $2 and $3."

You owe it to yourself to be satisfied with nothing but the best. You can have it now...for 10¢...in Faoen Beauty Aids, the very finest Science can produce!

PARK & TILFORD'S
FAOEN
(FAY-ON)
Beauty Aids

10¢ Each at the Better 5¢ and 10¢ Stores

● CLEANSING CREAM • COLD CREAM • FACE POWDER • ROUGES • PERFUMES ●

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Do stars enjoy a movie meal?

What kind of food is served before the cameras?

● Director Brown evidently believes in serving a genuine well-balanced, nourishing meal, even if it is "just a moving picture." It's lots easier for a star to play his part naturally if the food is real and the meal is well planned and served.

● Directors have to be clever planners as well as supervisors when it comes to food. Housewives can learn several good lessons from Director Brown in this month's Modern Hostess Department. You will find it entertaining as well as instructive and be sure to send in the coupon at the end of the article so that you may have for your own cook book the very latest recipes of the stars.

Read the

MODERN HOSTESS

every month in

MODERN SCREEN

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The Modern Hostess

(Continued from page 8)

unexpected events, but with due allowance for these, you will not find it difficult to keep pretty close to the original scheme. Then, having decided upon the ends which you wish to attain, make a complete survey of the means by which they are to be accomplished. In order to do this you will find that a pencil and a pad are the very first requirements. Plan your meals just as a director plans his scene, but go about assembling the food requirements like a property man does his "props."

First, list each and every component part of the ultimate whole—well, well, if you want it put more simply—make out a menu and put down what's needed. Then, check your supplies of staples, such as flour, sugar, salt, pepper and the like, list the "fresh foods" you must purchase, and look over your assortment of canned, bottled and packaged products for possible replacements.

AND right at this time let me point out that there are on your grocer's shelves an amazing variety of ready-prepared foods deserving of a place on your list, and eventually on the shelves of your supply closet. It may be said that in this way the food manufacturers are filling the role of assistant to you, as the director of the home, and they are doing a good job of it, too.

I do not advise making an entire meal of these canned and packaged products, mind you, nor do I feel that the trusty can opener should take over entirely the part previously played by the mixing spoon, but I am of the opinion that the woman who overlooks the nourishing qualities and general tastiness of foods put out by reputable concerns, is trying to be director, assistant and script girl all in one—an energy and time consuming state of affairs for which the family will be the eventual sufferers. And, oddly enough, you will get little thanks for expending an unnecessary amount of energy on meal preparation. For, after all, the dishes we serve are judged not by the trouble that we went to in making them but by their ability to satisfy our tastes and our hunger. So let's see what the food manufacturers have to offer to help us execute our plan for serving delicious-tasting, hunger-satisfying meals with less effort.

Briefly, let me suggest ready-to-eat, packaged cereals; ready-made mixed biscuits; nourishing canned soups, spaghetti, beans and kidney beans; ready-to-use meats, fish and sauces; dressings for salads; cake mixes which require only water and baking to become serious rivals of the home-mixed products; canned and packaged puddings which, with the addition of water or milk, followed by a short visit to the refrigerator, become treats for kids and grown-ups alike. All these wholesome foods have the merit of adding to your repasts a most important factor—variety—without which no appreciation of food can endure.

THEN, of course, there are canned vegetables which form an important branch of the canned-goods family tree, and canned fruits which are great dessert favorites in the majority of homes. Canned fruits and vegetables serve the purpose of extending the short season for most vegetables and fruits and making them a year 'round part of our menus. Even during the season for such fresh vegetables as corn, tomatoes and mushrooms, there are people who infinitely prefer to use the canned product in cooking. There are many who go so far as to prefer their flavor at the table, too.

I dare say there is not one housewife who has not been amazed at the mammoth size and uniform perfection of canned fruits, such as peaches, pears, apricots, cherries and the like, which in their fresh state could not be duplicated in quality at any but the most expensive fruiterers. This is because canned fruits are sun-ripened and the canneries where they are packed are located as close as possible to the spot where the fruit is picked. Then, too, only first grade fruits—and vegetables—are used for canning.

The increase in popularity of canned foods in the past few years has been notable, so much so that our national reliance upon the can opener has been the cause of much good humored spoofing. Of course, this kidding is based upon the assumption that serving canned foods is merely an indication of laziness on the part of the American housewife, whereas the underlying reason actually is the marked improvement in the quality of present day canned food products.

For instance, the tinny taste, once so woefully apparent, has been done away with by improved methods of packing. Still another improvement is the enamel-lined can, a comparatively recent development. This type of can has been quite generally adopted in the canning of foods high in sulphur content such as peas, corn, shrimps and other fish products. Doubtless you have noticed at one time or another black specks in canned corn. This is caused by the reaction of the sulphur in the corn upon the iron in the can. While not harmful in any way it detracts from the appearance of the corn and hence lessens its appetite appeal. Now, however, the use of enamel-lined cans does away with the presence of these specks entirely.

IN the canning of red-colored fruits the enamel-lined can also is being used as it helps to protect the color of the fruits. Due to the bleaching action which takes place when the fruit comes in contact with a plain can, raspberries and cherries lose their rich color in a very short period of time, while in an enamel-lined can they retain their original, and attractive, red hue.

There are countless other canned, bottled and packaged foods I have not mentioned —their names are legion—which add zest and interest to the simplest menu, such as tomato juice, olives, pickles and a wide choice of cheese, crackers and cookies, to speak of only a few.

Don't fall into the all too common error, however, of thinking that ready-prepared foods mean ready-prepared meals. The actual assembling of such a meal is important to its success. For that reason I have worked out menus for four such meals with at least one outstanding recipe for each meal. These form this month's Modern Screen Star Recipe Folder which you can get by filling in and mailing the coupon at the end of this article. At this time of year particularly, when the approaching holidays make unusual demands upon all of us, you'll find it most convenient to have these suggestions on hand as starting points towards your goal of supplying good, nourishing and well balanced meals for your family with a minimum of time consuming effort for yourself

The menus will go far towards helping you find some extra time in which to do your Christmas shopping in a leisurely manner before the stores get too crowded and will enable you to have some spare moments for making gifts at home, if you are so inclined.

AND you'll simply love the recipes in this month's folder; a simple luncheon dish that can be prepared and cooked in no time at all; a late-at-night snack (or Sunday supper combination) that the men folk will want to have a hand in preparing as well as eating; a "last-minute" dinner dish which combines a fresh vegetable and a canned product to the ultimate betterment of both, and a cake which is rich enough to suit the most confirmed dessert-lover without being a chore to the maker. I've described these on the leaflet as "Quick Meal Recipes and Menus," but you'll term them "excellent" as well, once you've sampled them.

I'm sure you'll also like the following recipe for Combination Soup which demonstrates both in its name and its contents the possibility of combining two or three usual things to achieve an unusual result. In addition to being tasty, it is nourishing as well.

COMBINATION SOUP

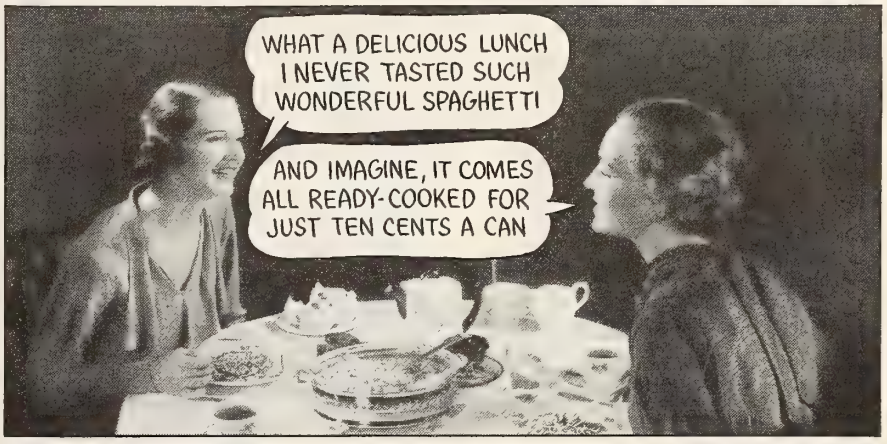
1 cup finely shredded lettuce leaves
1½ cups water
1 can concentrated chicken broth
1 can concentrated pea soup
1 teaspoon sugar
salt and pepper to taste

Shred outside leaves of lettuce very fine, using scissors. Add water and simmer gently until lettuce is very tender. Combine broth and pea soup, add lettuce, then water and sugar. Season with salt and pepper to taste. Serve piping hot with garnish of whipped cream and a dash of paprika.

Again let me remind you to fill out the coupon. Then mail it to me without delay so that you will have this month's MODERN SCREEN Star Recipe Folder for immediate use, absolutely FREE. Those of you already familiar with these handy folders will like the new cover design, and I am sure that all of you will find the menus and tested recipes especially helpful during the pre-holiday season, as well as throughout the entire year.

MODERN SCREEN STAR RECIPES

HOME SERVICE DEPARTMENT
MODERN SCREEN Magazine
149 Madison Avenue, N.Y., N.Y.



Please send me the recipes for December, 1934.

Name.....
(Print in pencil)

Address.....
(Street and Number)

.....
(City) (State)

"Far more delicious spaghetti than I could cook at home
—and it actually costs less, too!"

"I USED to get many a compliment on the way I prepared spaghetti. But I realize now that mine couldn't hold a candle to Franco-American. Good as my sauce was, theirs is a whole lot better. And it actually cost me more to buy the dry spaghetti and other ingredients and prepare it at home than it does to get a can of Franco-American all ready-cooked."

How much easier, too! No cooking or fussing with Franco-American. You simply heat and serve. Skilled chefs have done all the work, concocted a matchless sauce containing eleven different ingredients... garden-fresh, perfect tomatoes ... zestful Cheddar cheese... subtly blended seasonings.

Mere words can't tell you how good it is. You must taste it yourself. Why not try it today? Generous can holding three to four portions is never more than ten cents at any grocer's.

Most Astounding TYPEWRITER BARGAIN

10¢ a Day buys this New Remington Portable Model No. 5

10 Day Free Trial Offer

25% PRICE REDUCTION

Accept this amazing offer on a brand new Remington Portable No. 5, direct to you from the factory. Never before could we offer it on such easy terms that it actually costs you but 10¢ a day to own it. This machine formerly sold for 25% more than its present price. The price and the terms make it the greatest bargain in typewriter history.

Not a used or rebuilt typewriter. Not an incomplete machine. A beautiful brand new regulation Remington Portable. Standard 4-row keyboard; standard width carriage; margin release on keyboard; back spacer; automatic ribbon reverse; every essential feature found in standard typewriters!

FREE COURSE IN TYPING

With your Remington No. 5 you get ABSOLUTELY FREE a 19-page typing course. Teaches the Touch System. It is simply written and well illustrated. Even a child can understand it. During the 10 DAY TRIAL OFFER you should dash off letters faster than with pen and ink.

FREE CARRYING CASE

With every Remington No. 5, a FREE Carrying Case sturdily built of 3-ply wood. Covered with heavy DuPont fabric. Top is removed in one motion, leaving machine firmly attached to base. Can be used anywhere—on knees, in chairs, on trains.

ACT NOW WHILE LOW PRICE HOLDS GOOD

New wage scales point definitely to higher prices. Machines on hand make possible the present unbelievably low cash price on this machine. We don't believe we can maintain the present 25% price reduction for long.

You can try this machine for 10 days without risking one penny of your money. Not even shipping charges. Send for complete details on this most liberal offer. Get attractive new catalog illustrating and describing the many Remington models available on unusually low terms. Clip coupon today!

Remington Rand Inc., Dept. 140-12
Buffalo, N. Y.

Please tell me how I can buy a new Remington Portable Typewriter for only 10¢ a day. Also enclose your new catalog.

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

*City*_____ *State*_____

INFORMATION DESK

DORIS VIRGINIA, Waxahachie, Texas—The leading roles in "Private Lives" were taken by Norma Shearer, Robert Montgomery, Una Merkel and Reginald Denny. Lionel Barrymore, Norma Shearer, Clark Gable and Leslie Howard played the starring roles in "A Free Soul." And in "Broadway Through a Keyhole," Constance Cummings, Russ Columbo, Paul Kelly, Texas Guinan and Blossom Seeley did the honors. You certainly picked three good pictures to ask about. The following stars were born in the following years: John Gilbert, 1897; Warner Baxter, 1893; Gloria Swanson, 1899; and Ralph Bellamy, 1904.

MARY JOHNSON, Pittsburgh, Pa.; PATSY PICERNO, Buffalo, N. Y.; E. A. MARONEY, Pittsburgh, Pa.; TOBY LANG, Huntington Park, Cal., CHARLOTTE BOSTETTER, Chicago, Ill.; ELEANOR M. ARTHABER, Philadelphia, Pa.; MARION JONES, Meadville, Pa.; W. ADAMS, Hendersonville, N. C.; ERMA ROWAN, Plymouth Meeting, Pa.; R. SMYTH; MICHAEL ARSON, Linden, N. J.; L. M. R., Youngstown, Ohio; EDITH BROWN, Rocky Mount, N. C.—Whew! What a list of names! Hope I can satisfy you all as to what you want to know about Bing Crosby. Of course, you know "Bing" is only a nickname. He acquired it at an early age while playing his favorite game of "Cowboys and Indians" when he used to shout "Bing! Bing!" at the top of his lungs. He thinks Bing is much more distinctive than Harry L. He was born in Tacoma, Washington, May 2, 1904, and received his early schooling in Spokane. Bing's family wanted him to become a lawyer, so they sent him to Gonzaga College. He made the Freshman football team, sang in the college glee club, and with another boy organized a seven-piece orchestra. This orchestral venture was so successful, that the two boys left college to try their hand in the entertainment field. Paul Whiteman heard them when they were playing at the Metropolitan Theatre in Los Angeles and signed them to go East with him. In New York, another vocalist joined Bing and Al Rinker. His name was Harry Barris. This was the beginning of Paul Whiteman's Rhythm Boys. From that time on, Bing's popularity grew in leaps and bounds, until he is now one of the most popular young singers in the country. He has been married to Dixie Lee, motion picture actress, about four years, and is the father of three sons—Gary Evan, who was born June 27, 1933, and twins, Phillip Lang and Dennis Michael, who were born this July. He is 5 feet 9 inches tall and weighs 165 pounds. Detective stories fascinate him. His taste in clothes runs to browns and blues, with heavy emphasis on sports apparel. He dislikes garters so much that he never wears them except with evening clothes, and likes a hat so much that he wears one all the time, except on the stage. He has light blue eyes and light brown hair. And I'm not stringing you when I say that he wears a toupee. He is not bald, but his hair is thin and grows far back on his temples. Although Bing has said many times that he wants to retire, I don't believe he will for some time to come. He croons every Tuesday night over the radio. He has played in the following pictures: "The Big Broadcast," "College Humor," "Too Much Harmony," "We're Not Dressing," and "She Loves Me Not," which is his latest. His next picture for Paramount Studios, Hollywood, Calif. (where you can write him and he may answer) is "Here Is My Heart" with Kitty Carlisle.

MARIAN BLACK, Vancouver, B. C., Canada—In "We're Rich Again," Gloria Shea took the part of Victoria, and Lenita Lane that of Charmion. The three Marshes, Joan, Mae and Marion, are not sisters. Yes, it was Martha Sleeper who took the part of Robert Young's wife in "Spitfire." Fifi Dorsay has not been in a movie for some time and is not scheduled to appear in any.

DORA KARIS, Chicago, Ill.; GENEVA MANN, Sidney, Ohio; SHIRLEY STEARNS, Prineville, Ore.—Janet Gaynor was born in Philadelphia, Pa., on October 6, 1907, and began her education in that city at the A. C. Harmer School for Girls. She finished her grammar grades in Chicago, attended high school in Melbourne, Fla., and San Francisco, where she graduated with honors. She obtained office work, then moved to Hollywood to try her luck. She rose from extra to star in an amazingly short time. She likes to shop, and loves to dance and swim. She is interested in music and sings very well. She loathes cigarettes and doesn't smoke them. Her pet superstition is putting the right shoe on first. She is a trifle over 5 feet tall and weighs 100 pounds, has golden brown (almost red) hair and wonderfully expressive big brown eyes. She is divorced from Lydell Peck. You can write her at Fox Studios, Movietone City, Westwood, Calif. After "Servant's Entrance" she will be in "One More Spring" with Warner Baxter.

M. WATTS, Verona, N. J.—Robert Gleckler played the part of Mositer in "Now I'll Tell." Joan Bennett is 23, Claudette Colbert is 29, Madge Evans is 25, Joel McCrea 29, and Charles Farrell 32.

BETTY BRIGHT, Jacksonville, Ill.; BETTY LOU BROWN, Pontiac, Ill.; HELEN BUSSEY, Troy, N. Y.—So you want to know about Margaret Lindsay? Well, I don't blame you. She's somepin to know about! First of all, she is not Judge Ben Lindsey's daughter. Note the difference in spelling. Anyway, her real name is Margaret Kies and she was born in Dubuque, Iowa, on September 19, 1910. She attended the National Park Seminary, Washington, D. C., where she studied dramatics and carried off all sorts of honors. Then she went to England where she played in several stage productions and acquired a perfect English accent. And it was through this experience and a lot of grit that she obtained a part in "Cavalcade," the picture in which she scored such a hit. Outside of the drama, she is interested in literature, music and dancing. Her favorite sports are riding, swimming, tennis and golf, and she is mad about greyhound racing. She doesn't think much about marriage and domesticity. In other words, she's not married and doesn't want to be until after she has reached the peak of her career. Margaret is 5 feet 5 inches tall, weighs 115 pounds, has hazel eyes and dark brown hair. She is under contract to Warner Brothers-First National Studios, Burbank, Calif., where you can write her.

EDDIE BYRNE, Chicago, Ill.—The song, "This Little Piggy Went to Market," was not introduced in a picture, to my knowledge. Etienne Giradot was the eccentric gentleman who pasted stickers all over "Twentieth Century." And Baby LeRoy reached the ripe old age of two on his last birthday, May 12.

MISS J. SIMMS, Los Angeles, Calif.—Yes, Jackie Coogan has grown up, although it doesn't seem possible. He is now a freshman at the University of Southern California, is 19 years old, and the possessor of a large fortune. He steps out quite a bit with the younger actresses such as Ida Lupino and Toby Wing. In fact, he's quite the man about town. His last picture was made in 1931. This was "Huckleberry Finn." He is going to come back in "Code of the West," with Evelyn Brent and Randolph Scott. It will be good to see him again.

MRS. L. CLARK and FAMILY; JOE BLOW, Alameda, Calif.—The biography of Dorothy Dell, the 19-year-old actress, who met her death in that most tragic accident not so long ago, recounts a life spent in the public eye. She was born on her father's plantation near Hattiesburg, Miss., on January 30th, where she resided until she was eight years of age. Then she was taken to New Orleans where she attended the Sophie Wright School for Girls. At the age of 13 she launched Wesley Lord's famous song, "Louisana Moon," in the Saenger Theatre in New Orleans with such success that she was offered, and accepted, a radio contract. In 1930 she secured the title of "Miss Universe," previous to which she had been "Miss America." She signed a vaudeville contract for 32 weeks which ended when she was in New York. Then Flo Ziegfeld, Jr., featured her in the 1931 Follies for 42 weeks. After this she was in several New York musicals, had night club engagements, and radio programs and played in several musical shorts. She went to Hollywood in November, 1933, to begin her screen career. In less than a year she was well on her way to the top when her career was so pitifully and abruptly cut short. She had appeared in "Wharf Angel," "Little Miss Marker" and "Shoot the Works," her last picture. She was 5 feet 5½ inches tall and weighed 125 pounds—the same dimensions which she made famous three years ago as the "model" young woman of the world. Her hair was blonde and her eyes gray. Her low contralto singing was a thing of beauty, which will be sorely missed by her many admirers.

SIDNEY LERNER, Philadelphia, Pa.—"Belle of the Nineties" is the final name for "It Ain't No Sin." "Belle of New Orleans," and "That St. Louis Woman." That's only four names for the same picture. Myrna Loy's next picture is "Broadway Bill" with Warner Baxter, after which she will be with Bill Powell again in "The Casino Murder Case." Jean Harlow has naturally

Your questions will be answered in this magazine. Please do not ask questions which require too much research or which infringe upon good taste. Address: The Information Desk, MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

platinum blonde hair, so she says. Anyway she is the original platinumite. Dolores Del Rio appeared in her first picture in 1925. It was "Joanna," in which Dorothy Mackaill and Jack Mulhall were starred. Miss Del Rio was the vampire. "The Bad One," with Edmund Lowe, was her first all-talking picture. Some of her best known films include "Ramona," "Evangeline," "The Red Dance," "Resurrection" and the "Loves of Carmen." Her most recent work includes "Flying Down to Rio," "Wonder Bar," "Madame Du Barry," and her next will probably be "In Caliente."

GRACE TOTH, Pueblo, Colo.—William (Bill or Willie) Powell was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., on a particularly hot July 29th. His first role was as the villain in "Sherlock Holmes" with John Barrymore. A most propitious beginning, don't you think?

M. E. C., Nashville, Tenn.—I wouldn't be sure about the eyes, but here are a number of actresses who have red hair. They are: Clara Bow, Nancy Carroll, Joan Crawford, Janet Gaynor, Katharine Hepburn, Elissa Landi, Myrna Loy, Jeanette MacDonald, Barbara Stanwyck, Sheila Mannors, and Ginger Rogers. Now for Joan Crawford. She was born in San Antonio, Texas, March 23, 1908, and was baptised Lucille LeSueur. She is 5 feet 4 inches tall, weighs 110 pounds and has blue eyes along with her titian locks. She left home against her family's wishes and made her debut as a dancer in a Chicago revue. She was successful in the Midwest and in New York. In 1925 she made her picture debut as an extra in "Pretty Ladies." From that time on, her rise was steady and unimpeded. After "Chained," she will be in "Forsaking All Others" with Clark Gable and Robert Montgomery. You might be interested to know that she has just bought a new car. Fact is, she probably had it especially made, for it's as white as the proverbial snow, and must be a striking background for our heroine.

MISS V. E. LAMKIN, Cleveland, Ohio; G. A. N., San Francisco, Calif.—That promising actor, Russell Hardie, was born May 20, in Buffalo, N. Y. He enjoys swimming and reading books on psychology. For relaxation, he plays the piano and goes to the theatre. He is 6 feet 1 inch tall and has light brown hair and blue eyes. He is not married. You might be interested to know that the Associate Editor of Modern Screen was indirectly responsible for Mr. Hardie's obtaining a motion picture contract. Having seen Russell in a Broadway play she suggested to Peggy Fears that she cast him as the juvenile lead in "Saint Wench" with Helen Mencken. While he was in this production, he received an offer from M-G-M to appear in a picture. He has been in the movies ever since. He's working in "Hell in the Heavens" for Fox. You can write him at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios, Culver City, Calif.

Why I Hate Women

(Continued from page 27)

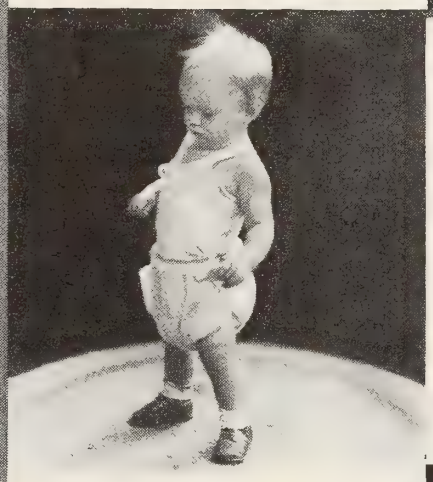
sex has taught me that they are, to a great extent, deadly with hypocricy and dishonesty.

In the most impressionable years of my life, my childhood, I learned how cruel and ruthless the so-called gentle sex can be. I didn't hear it or read about it, I saw it.

I've never told this story before. I hardly know why I'm telling it now, except that I want Ruth to know. I hope this woman named Ruth has seen me in the role of Mildred in "Of Human Bondage." I hope she has seen the picture because I want her to know that it was really she who was the inspiration behind all the grasping, selfish, destructive, ignorant and contemptible cheapness of the character, Mildred.



If she knows this, I have—perhaps in a small way—evened the score between us, a very old score. You see, it happened when I was twelve years old.

A WOMAN named Ruth, by stealing a man from his wife, tore down the very walls of my happiness, destroyed a great faith in someone very near and dear to me and crushed the very heart out of three innocent people, not because she really wanted this man for herself, but because, at the moment, she was bored with her own husband and there was nothing else for her idle hands to do.

In telling this story, I don't want to bring any more unhappiness to innocent people than has already been visited upon them. Will it be enough to say that this terrible thing happened to someone very near and dear to me, someone who, until this "other woman" came along, had been an inspiration to all who knew him, someone to whom I'd turned in trust when my own little family was torn asunder by divorce and my bewildered mother was left to manage and struggle as best she could with two girls to bring up?

● "Let's see—how does this walking business go? Clench fists, put one foot ahead of the other—but what do I do after that?... Oh, why did I ever take up walking anyway? I was doing fine, getting carried or going on all fours—"

● "Well, so far, so good! It won't be long now till I get to that nice splashy tub—and then for a good rub-down with Johnson's Baby Powder!... Now which foot goes ahead first? Might try both at once—the more the merrier—"

● "Oops! Something wrong with that idea! Feet are all right, but the rest of me's getting left far, far behind! That's an awfully hard floor down there, too—I remember it from last time! Well, look out below—I'm coming..."

● "... Everything's O. K. again, now that I've had my rub-down with Johnson's Baby Powder... Just test that powder between your thumb and finger—it's so smooth! Not gritty, like some powders. No zinc stearate or orris-root in it either."

Send 10¢ in coin (for convenience, fasten coin with strip of adhesive tape) for samples of Johnson's Baby Powder, Soap and Cream. Dept. 136, New Brunswick, N. J.

Johnson & Johnson
NEW BRUNSWICK NEW JERSEY

JOHNSON'S Baby POWDER

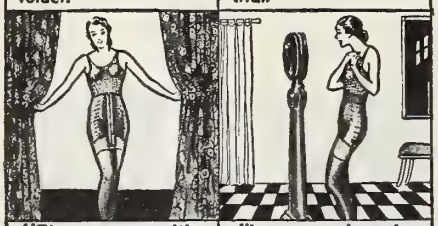
TEST...the PERFOLASTIC GIRDLE
. . . at our expense!



"I have REDUCED MY HIPS 9 INCHES"
...writes Miss Healy.

"I read an 'ad' of the Perfolastic Company . . . and sent for FREE folder."

"They allowed me to wear their Perforated Girdle for 10 days on trial."

"The massage-like action did it...the fat seemed to have melted away."

"In a very short time I had reduced my hips 9 INCHES and my weight 20 pounds."

REDUCE YOUR WAIST AND HIPS 3 INCHES IN 10 DAYS OR
...it costs you nothing!

WE WANT you to try the Perfolastic Girdle and Uplift Brassiere. Test them for yourself for 10 days absolutely FREE. Then, if without diet, drugs or exercise, you have not reduced at least 3 inches around waist and hips, they will cost you nothing!

Reduce Quickly, Easily, and Safely!

The massage-like action of these famous Perfolastic Reducing Garments takes the place of months of tiring exercises and dieting. Worn next to the body with perfect safety, the Perfolastic gently massages away the surplus fat with every movement, stimulating the body once more into energetic health.

Don't Wait Any Longer...Act Today

You can prove to yourself quickly and definitely whether or not this very efficient girdle and brassiere will reduce your waist, hips and diaphragm. You do not need to risk one penny . . . try them for 10 days . . . then send them back if you are not completely astonished at the wonderful results.

SEND FOR TEN DAY FREE TRIAL OFFER!

PERFOLASTIC, Inc.

Dept. 5312 41 EAST 42nd ST., New York, N.Y.

Please send me FREE BOOKLET describing and illustrating the new Perfolastic Girdle and Brassiere, also sample of perforated rubber and particulars of your 10-DAY FREE TRIAL OFFER.

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

Use Coupon or Send Name and Address on Penny Post Card

I was then living with this marvelous couple. I had learned to look with respect toward the man and with love toward the woman. They had been married a number of years and appeared to be utterly happy.

And though I was a child of twelve, I think I realized long before the wife did. I knew what was happening to the man we both adored and all about the "other woman" who was slowly and surely getting him in her grasp. I try, in looking back on it, to excuse my lack of action by my age.

My first indication came one evening when I happened to answer the telephone. I say happened because I am sure the man tried to get to the telephone first. But when I answered it, he didn't dare show too much concern. It was a woman's voice inquiring for a man. I gave him the phone and he talked for a moment—softly, guardedly—so that his wife in the kitchen might not hear him.

"Who was that calling, dear?" she asked when he had replaced the receiver. It was then that my tower of inspiration and faith began tumbling, as this man whom I believed to be fine and honest, turned to her with a sweet voice and lied, "Oh, that was Charlie. He wants me to come downtown and meet him for a little game of cards —poker."

I knew, even after what I had just heard, that he was still a fine man, that something had happened, something that he found himself unable to cope with.

I SHALL never forget that moment. I shall never forget when our eyes met and we stared at one another in that darkened hall. I think I grew up then. I'd never been a "childish child," anyway, everyone said that I was "beyond my years." But something cold and terrifying crept over me in that awful moment, a feeling of helplessness in the face of impending danger, a feeling of fright that shouldn't come to children until Life has prepared them a little more thoroughly. Yes, I think I grew up then.

He didn't say a word to me. He got his hat and walked out the door, a liar, a hypocrite, a cheat. I don't suppose he had the least idea that I knew. I was "too young."

Oh yes, I found out who the woman was. In the year that followed, that wasn't particularly difficult. The town was small and in his wild infatuation, he threw discretion to the winds. Everyone knew about them, that is, everyone but his unsuspecting wife.

I wish I could say that Ruth was the ugly type of grasping woman such as Mildred was in Maugham's great story, but she wasn't. She was beautiful, that is, she was beautiful to look at. Surely, she must have been anything but beautiful down deep inside. I often saw them driving together toward some secret rendezvous. Yes, and many kids in town saw them, too, and with the naive cruelty of children (don't let anyone ever tell you that children can't be cruel) they would come running to me and tell of their secret meeting places. They would say, "I heard my father and mother talking last night and they said it was a shame, a disgrace."

I'd try to toss it off and laugh and say that it wasn't true, that the man loved his wife, that he was home lots of times. But I knew it wasn't true. Many times I had to rush to my room to hide the tears that I couldn't hold back. You see, with it all, I had come to look with sympathy toward the wife who slaved over hot ironing boards and kitchen stoves, and the feeling that she meant no more to this man than a maid in the house was what brought the flood of angry tears when I realized that she didn't know and there was no way for me to tell her. It made me miserable.

THEN, one day, the man told her, told her bluntly, unkindly. It was like striking a blind person in the face. If she had only had some inkling, some hint of what was about to happen, it might not have been so bad. But she hadn't guessed. That is what impressed it so vividly upon my memory. I knew she hadn't guessed. She was the old-fashioned type that believed marriage was for always, that men with responsibilities did not become involved with other women. I heard what he said. Without any preamble or warning he walked into the kitchen and said he was leaving. He said he had found his happiness elsewhere with another woman.

Nor shall I ever forget the way the wife looked. She just stood there staring at him with a blank, expressionless face. She stood like a person who has been struck a blow that has left her dazed. If she had cried or stormed or heaped abuse upon his head, it would have broken the tension that gripped the room. But she just stood there, that bewildered look on her face, drying her hands over and over again. When she spoke, her voice was thin, toneless, almost unrecognizable. She said, "When will you be going?"

I couldn't stand any more of it. I suppose it was almost as hard for me to bear as it was for her, yet I had been expecting it. I threw myself on the floor, screaming and kicking. This seemed to bring some degree of action to her. She gathered me in her arms, comforting me, telling me not to cry any more, telling me that everything was going to be all right.

Upstairs the man packed his things. Then he left.

But in less than a year the sequel to that bitter little story was written. It was ironical—even comical.

You see, Ruth didn't really want the man. She never had wanted him. She wanted more clothes and spending money than her husband could give her. The man was fool enough to give them to her, so she let him. I wonder what tragedy must have filled his soul (after he had divorced his wife and lavished every cent of his income on this other woman) when he asked her to marry him and got his answer?

She laughed in his face!

Of course the story got around. The wife heard and, of all people in the world, she might have gloated. But she didn't gloat. She pitied him and hated the woman. She didn't say much, not even to me, but she once remarked, "I could forgive that woman if she had loved him and wrecked him. But she didn't love him. She has left him nothing. His life is empty. She was just as much a thief for stealing his love as she would have been had she stolen his belongings. She is worse than a criminal. She didn't want what she had stolen."

I remember saying, "I hate her. Some day I'll get even with her."

"You won't have to bother," his former wife said slowly. "Women like that always get even with themselves."

But I've never been able to forget. I've thought about Ruth a lot. I thought of her constantly while I was playing that dirty-souled, ignorant, cheap little waitress in "Of Human Bondage." I tried to make Mildred just as despicable as my memory of Ruth could make her. Every mean gesture, every contemptible word was hers.

I hope Ruth sees "Of Human Bondage" and recognizes her own cheap soul, her own hypocritical words.

I hope Ruth reads this story!

Give Me One Year

(Continued from page 31)

appeared between her eyes. Finally, she spoke again.

"I suppose I shall be laying myself open to criticism. So much was said when I quit to bring little Mary into the world. But I'm really free. I'm not breaking or abusing any ethical rule in resting for a year."

I knew then, that she was really talking to herself. Some small voice in her conscience was smiting her for her decision.

"The Guild expects me to go out on the road with 'Mary of Scotland,'" she explained, "but there is one nice thing about it. The Guild never stars any of its players. The play is the thing with them. So there is no stipulation that I shall be seen in the play. Rather it is billed that 'Mary of Scotland' will be given at such and such a theatre. That leaves me wholly free. Someone else can carry on in my place."

I asked her about "What Every Woman Knows." Was she satisfied with the finished picture? Had she enjoyed making it?

"It has been horrible." She threw the words out into the room and they hung there.

I felt as if she had suffered and crawled and squirmed under a lash. The fire that makes her pictures live and breathe was in her voice and in her eyes.

"I wish I could tell you how perfectly terrible it has been, how much I have suffered in making this picture. I don't say that anyone except myself was to blame. I have learned the technique of the stage, have used it over and over until it is as much a part of me as eating or sleeping. When I bring that technique into pictures, I find it is too exaggerated. I have to watch myself all the time.

I GET into a scene. Get to feeling it and I forget. Then, it has to be done over and over and over again, until all the beauty has gone out of it for me. I feel like a piece of wood.

"You won't believe it perhaps, but I had to have thirty-seven retakes for one of my big scenes in 'What Every Woman Knows.' I felt as green as a new extra, before we were through.

"Then, too, I feel my lack of beauty. I never knew I had a face until I came to Hollywood. All the girls are so beautiful and I am so ugly."

Silence again and then, in a subdued hurt voice, "I love beauty so. I wish I could have been pretty. I always felt so bad about being tiny. All of the great stage actresses are beautiful and tall. Emotional roles demand height. I overcame that handicap. In some way, I succeeded in giving an illusion of height on the stage. But what can you do when you have no beauty of face or figure?"

Useless to tell her that she succeeds in giving an illusion of beauty, that she has a glamor and appeal that mere beauty can never give, that there isn't a beautiful woman on stage or screen today who would not trade her loveliness for that inner fire and greatness that makes Helen Hayes completely irresistible.

"I never want to make another picture from any of my stage plays," she was very firm about this. "I had many offers to play in pictures before I finally signed to make 'Lullaby,' which was released as 'The Sin of Madelon Claudet,' but I didn't think I would be any good for pictures. I was not even interested until M-G-M promised to let me make 'What Every

YOUR Eyes

SHOULD BE YOUR MOST ATTRACTIVE FEATURE

MAKE THEM SO WITH Maybelline

EYE BEAUTY AIDS

The Approved Mascara

● No woman looks her best when her eyes are blank and inexpressive in appearance. Scant, pale lashes, bald-looking eyelids, and unkempt eyebrows ruin otherwise beautiful features, while attractive eyes will make even plain women appear charmingly lovely.

After powdering, blend a soft, colorful shadow on your eyelids with Maybelline Eye Shadow, and see how the color of your eyes is instantly intensified. Form graceful, expressive eyebrows with the smooth-marking Maybelline Eyebrow Pencil. Now a few, simple brush strokes of Maybelline Mascara will make your lashes appear naturally long, dark, and luxuriant, and behold how your eyes express a new and more beautiful YOU!

Keep your lashes soft and silky with the pure Maybelline Eyelash Tonic Cream, and be sure to brush and train your eyebrows with the dainty, specially designed Maybelline Eyebrow Brush. All Maybelline Eye Beauty Aids may be had in purse sizes at all leading 10c stores. Accept only genuine Maybelline products to be assured of highest quality and absolute harmlessness.

Maybelline Eyelash Darkener instantly darkens eyelashes, making them appear longer, darker, and more luxuriant. It is non-smarting, tear-proof and absolutely harmless. The largest selling eyelash beautifier in the world. Black, Brown and the NEW BLUE.

Maybelline Eyebrow Pencil
smoothly forms the eyebrows into graceful, expressive lines, giving a perfect, natural effect. Of highest quality, it is entirely harmless and is clean to use and to carry. Black and Brown.

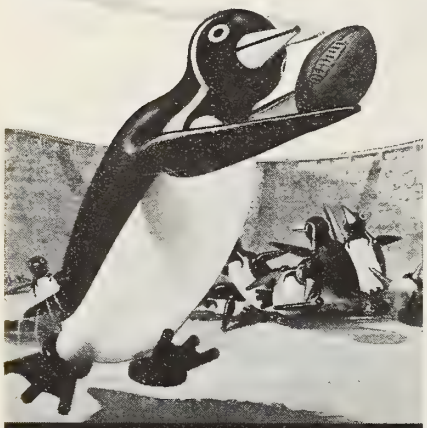
Maybelline Eye Shadow delicately shades the eyelids, adding depth, color, and sparkle to the eyes. Smooth and creamy, absolutely pure. Blue, Brown, Blue-Gray, Violet and Green.

Maybelline Eyelash Tonic Cream
A pure and harmless tonic cream, helpful in keeping the eyelashes and eyebrows in good condition. Colorless.



Maybelline Eyebrow Brush
Regular use of this specially designed brush will train the brows to lie flat and smooth at all times. Extra long, dainty-grip handle, and sterilized bristles, kept clean in a cellophane wrapper.

KOOL

MILDLY MENTHOLATED CIGARETTES

[CORK-TIPPED]

a long gain for THROAT COMFORT!

Block those hot cigarettes that scorch your throat. Signal for KOOLS! They're as far ahead on throat comfort as a forward pass ahead of a fumbled ball! KOOLS are mildly mentholated. The mild menthol refreshingly cools the smoke, soothes your throat, while your tongue enjoys the hearty flavor of the fine Turkish-Domestic tobacco blend.

Cork-tipped; they don't stick to lips. Finally, each pack carries a B & W coupon good for attractive, nationally advertised premiums. (Offer good in U. S. A. only.) Send for latest illustrated premium booklet.

SAVE COUPONS for HANDSOME MERCHANDISE

Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., Louisville, Ky.

Woman Knows.' That is why I signed my contract with them in the first place. Now, I am so disappointed that I don't ever want to make another picture. I didn't even go to see the rushes on the last retakes for it hurts me to look at them."

I could hardly keep from smiling, for I remembered that she went through this same period of regret when she made "The Sin of Madelon Claudet." She experienced the same despair when she finished "The White Sister." She waded through a morass of bitterness when she saw the preview of "Farewell to Arms." It will always be so with her.

She cannot see the perfect beauty she gives to her performances. Instead, she sees shadows under her eyes and lines about her mouth, that are lost to those who are thrilling to the poignant reality of her shadow self.

Sitting there in the half-dusk, she drew a wrap around her shoulders, as if to protect herself from a sudden chill.

"I am so afraid of getting old," she whispered. She didn't say any more, but I understood.

EVERY woman knows those moments of fear when life begins to etch faint lines around the corners of the mouth, when telltale wrinkles begin to show beneath the eyes. I knew that Helen Hayes had been staring too long into her mirror, looking for those first, sad tracings.

They are discernible now, because she is utterly worn and tired. She has given everything she has to this last picture and it has taken something out of her that only rest and play can return.

"Even if I weren't selfish enough to want to be with my baby, I know that I simply must quit for a while and rest." She curled up on the couch and put her hands under her chin. "I have reached a spot in my life where I am beginning to realize that I must not use up all of my reserve strength. I have got to take stock of myself, take things a little easy. I know that if I should go out on the road and try to play in 'Mary of Scotland' on this twenty-four-weeks' tour, as they expect me to do, I will be heading straight for a nervous breakdown. I feel shaky and tired. I need rest and I am going to have it."

Then she talked of her baby. And just talking about her made her forget her worries. Her face shone, happily.

"I can hardly wait to get home. Baby always has an apartment near me when I am playing in New York and I see her as much as possible every day. But how wonderful it will be just to be able to play with her, talk to her, ride with her, spend every waking minute with her! I can't tell you what it means to me."

"Haven't you signed to make another picture?" I asked her.

"Yes. But I won't." This, defiantly. "I am, first of all, a woman. I have given up four years of my baby's life to others. Now I am going to care for her myself. I miss Charlie, too. We have never been able to live like other married people do. But when I stay home, we can. He can drive back and forth to the studio and we can be together every evening of every day. Life is very short, too short to spend it foolishly, apart."

I wondered then, if there were not another reason behind her temporary retirement. I asked her if there were—if she were going to have another child. She answered evasively. It would be nice for Mary. She had not thought a lot about it, although she doesn't think children should be too far apart. She doesn't intend to let Mary grow up as an "only" child.

HELEN HAYES has a fine reserve and dignity that makes it impossible for her to "let down her hair" like so many actresses do, and tell her innermost thoughts and hopes.

I suspected, but I knew no more about her maternal plans when she had finished, than when I first asked her.

She gave out a story last year when she was leaving Hollywood. Said that she intended to retire permanently when Mary becomes ten years old and spend the remainder of her life being merely her mother. I reminded her of it.

"I'll never retire permanently," she assured me solemnly. "The stage is in my blood. Right now, I am fed up with work because I have worked too hard and much too long without rest. But when my year is up, I'll come back. I want to continue to work as long as I live."

She changed the subject then, and we talked about babies. She showed me some pictures of little Mary and told of the funny childish things she said and did when they were together on her last visit.

She was a little happy when I left her.

I was happy, too, to know that she has reconsidered her earlier decision, that her rare artistry is only going to be withheld from us for a season.

That versatile actress of stage and screen, Miriam Hopkins, recently agreed to appear in Sam Goldwyn's pictures to the tune of a four-year contract, though she's still an RKO star. Eddie Cantor put his John Hancock on the papers as a witness, making it all very legal.

Queenie Smith, armed with her pet pooch and a Paramount contract, arrived in Hollywood recently to appear in "Mississippi."

Beauty Advice

(Continued from page 66)

me and I'll tell you about it.

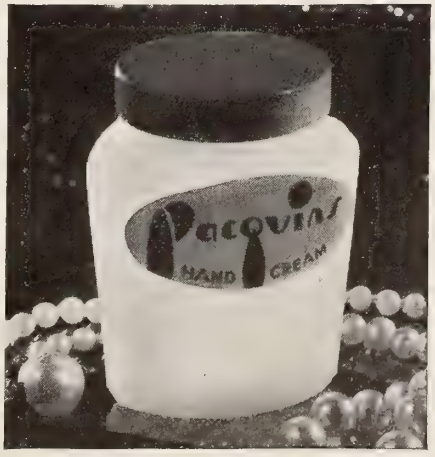
DO you use a make-up foundation? Well, if you don't, perhaps you should. Whether you use one of the new greaseless creams or a lotion, it will leave your face satin-smooth and act as a protection to the skin as well. Your rouge and powder will adhere better and longer and you'll find that you have a smooth basis to work on.

Pat on powder, do not rub it on—it's sure to streak if you do. With a soft brush, those lovely feathery things that none of the movie actresses is without, go lightly and carefully over your face. If, by chance, your nose is inclined to be biggish, keep the powder puff away from it almost altogether, and concentrate on your cheeks. That is what Dick Willis calls one of the first steps to "building" a face.

"The first thing a woman goes for is her nose," he said. "I've watched them in studios, in subways and in restaurants. And the larger her nose, the more gusto and powder she applies, until it is so coated it stands out like a porcelain door knob." A knock-out for you, Mr. Willis!

Now for decorations. Begin with your eyebrows. If you are a plucker, let's hope you have merely cleaned up the straggling hairs, and left a good part of nature's original intent upon your brow. With your pencil follow the natural line. Remember, you are not the glamorous Garbo doing a Mata Hari nor yet Joan Crawford as Sadie Thompson. If you have a round face, don't point the eyebrows perpendicularly. Don't have them at an angle of forty-five degrees upward from your cheek bones if you don't want to look like a surprised owl. This, too, detracts from the largeness of the eyes. Obviously you won't permit your eyebrows to grow together as in a perpetual scowl. But don't pluck them so far from your nose that you have a stupid, vacant expression.

"For pictures and street wear," Dick went on, "a mixture of both black and brown mascara is preferable for the average woman, unless she is exceptionally dark, or exceptionally blonde. For most,



"I can't be bothered with sticky hand lotions"

Mrs. Frank Buck

Even in the jungle, helping "Bring 'em Back Alive," she keeps her hands beautiful this quick, modern way

"WHEN I check supplies for one of our trips," says Mrs. Buck, "I make sure that I have plenty of Pacquin's Hand Cream. Tropical countries are dreadfully hard on the hands. My hands would be leathery and wrinkled if I didn't care for them with Pacquin's. It is so quick, so sure, the skin absorbs it at once...and I don't have to wait for my hands to dry as you do with those sticky lotions. I can use it anywhere, any time. I advise any woman with busy hands to use Pacquin's."

Women who use their hands a lot do find Pacquin's a blessing. It takes literally no time to dry—your skin seems to absorb this soothing cream instantly. Pacquin's feeds the skin because it goes into the underlayers. So different from old-fashioned lotions that stay on the surface of your hands and keep you waiting until they evaporate. Send for the introductory jar of Pacquin's.

PACQUIN LABORATORIES CORPORATION
Dept. 4-B, 101 West 31st Street, New York, N. Y.
Please send me your generous trial jar of Pacquin's Hand Cream for which I enclose 10¢.

Name.....

Address.....

City.....State.....

Pacquin's Hand Cream

FREE TEST

"until a "scrap of paper" led me to loveliness

Night after night I used to sit home alone. Nobody called... nobody cared for me. I couldn't seem to make friends or attract men at all. Then one lucky day I visited the 10¢ store and a "scrap of paper" changed my whole life and led me to loveliness.

I accepted from the girl at the cosmetic counter a sample card sprayed from the giant atomizer of Blue Waltz Perfume. What exquisite fragrance! It made me think of music... moonlight... romance. Quickly I bought this enchanting perfume and the other Blue Waltz Cosmetics, too, because the salesgirl told me they were wonderful for my skin and as pure and fine as $1 or $2 preparations. Next day I made up carefully with Blue Waltz Lipstick and Blue Waltz Face Powder. I finished with a touch of Blue Waltz Perfume.

When I looked in the mirror, I hardly dared believe my eyes. How fresh and radiant my skin looked! How temptingly red my lips were! And others noticed my glorious new charm. Everybody was friendlier and men began to ask me for dates. At last my dreams of romance are coming true... and it's Blue Waltz Perfume that made me glamorous and alluring.

Girls, go to the cosmetic counter of your 5 and 10¢ store. Get a free sample card sprayed from the Blue Waltz Giant Atomizer... you'll love its enchanting fragrance. Buy Blue Waltz Perfume and all the wonderful Blue Waltz Cosmetics...certified to be pure and only 10¢ each at your 5 and 10¢ store.

Seize this opportunity to ensemble your beauty preparations. You find the same alluring fragrance in Blue Waltz Perfume, Face Powder, Lipstick, Cream Rouge, Brillaintine, Cold Cream, Talcum Powder. Only 10c each at your 5 and 10c store.

Blue Waltz
PERFUME AND COSMETICS
FIFTH AVENUE · NEW YORK

this mixture is soft and far less trying." (Apply first a coat of black, then one of brown.) "Most types will find black eyebrow pencil, judiciously used, the best. Brown pencils are apt to leave a reddish cast."

Depending on his star, and her role, Dick can go as exotic as he pleases, and sometimes has to, but he repeats again and again, the plea for softness and delicacy in women's faces. Furthermore, remember that the dewy effect is to be desired this season—if you want to be right up to the minute.

If your eyelashes are scanty and short, and you wish to use false ones, take this tip from Dick, who says: "Instead of placing the false lashes from end to end of the eyelid, use them from the middle of the eye only, outwards. This gives a softness and blending that is quite different and far lovelier than the old way."

This is what you do. Take one regular strip of the false eyelashes and cut it in half. Place one half on the eyelid, beginning at the temple and pasting towards the middle of the eye. Then dip into your mascara and apply to your own and the artificial lashes equally. After that, brush off all the excess mascara with a clean, tiny eyelash brush. This not only tends to take away the hard effect of heavily applied mascara, but blends your own lashes with the false indistinguishably.

IN using eye shadow for evening, apply it from the middle of the lid towards the temple, accenting it more heavily at the middle and shading it softly to the end of the brow. Never use it close to your nose. Blue-gray is considered the best shade now, in most cases, even for brown eyes. For the very blue-eyed, there is a most flattering silver-mauve shadow on the market which has just a tinge of violet. Men love that effect as long as they don't know what it is. If you would like to know the name of some excellent beauty aids for the eyes, write me, and I will be glad to tell you.

The eyes finished, you will see that your eyebrows, the eye-shadowing and the lashes are all one line, one motion of color and shading.

More and more women nowadays are asking questions about rouge. What shade? How much? Cream, dry or liquid? Well the first rule is this: use it delicately and follow what would be nature's path if you had naturally rosy cheeks. Match the color to your lipstick, but in a more delicate tone. And use much less rouge than lipstick. And you mustn't have color on the end of your chin, nor up to the eyebrows or to the lobes of your ears.

Cream rouge gives a soft, natural illusion. Use it under powder. For an oily skin, liquid rouge is preferred by some. Use it under powder, too. Dry rouge is easiest to apply. It should never be used under powder, but over it. And last of all, blend the color so there won't be a sharp line of distinction between red and white. That's all. Use rouge if it becomes you, and remember that this year it's fashionable to be healthy, but that at the same time, this product must be applied with a light touch.

Now the lips. They should be tempting, not repelling. Therefore, don't coat your lips. Even the actresses don't do that for everyday wear, and those ladies know a thing or four about how to make the most of their looks. With the point of your lipstick, mark off the exact center of the upper lip and with a backward motion, color first one side and then the other. Next, press both upper and lower lips tightly together, and if you have followed the natural mouth line, you'll find the whole mouth is evenly painted and in proportion. Of course, color the inside of the lip as far as can be seen when you smile or laugh. And don't, don't, don't try to make full lips thin or thin lips full. You're not fooling anybody but yourself.

Of course, both lipstick and face rouge should be chosen to harmonize with your individual coloring and the costume you're wearing. As a useful hint, be sure to dry your lips thoroughly before applying your lipstick. You might even dust a little powder over them first. This drying process tends to make the lipstick adhere more evenly and more permanently. Try it.

WITH the application of the mouth, ends the "building" of the face. And after Dick had reached this point in his discourse, he called a passing chorine into his busy office, saying, "Look, now I'll show you."

She was very young and blonde, with large round blue eyes which were her best features. She had a round face, but not the kind for which Troy was sacked by any means—until Dick got to work on her.

To emphasize the do's and don'ts of make-up, Dick used on one side of her face, the steps which I have written down for you to follow. On the other he applied what he called "The Garbo" make-up—using precisely the methods I have warned you against using. I might add that there was never a girl more completely opposite in type to the magnificent Garbo.

And in fifteen minutes, there sat the model, part of her face natural and truly glorified. The other part was grotesque, completely out of keeping with her true type. Looking at her from this side, it utterly spoiled a face which nature in its own way had constructed with such care to line and rhythm. It was, indeed, a revelation.

Now, if you will take a lesson from the above, and follow the directions and hints which Dick has given you, you should be quite the other extreme from the woman to whom your attention was drawn by Joe or Bob or Louis. In fact, you should closely resemble the woman about whom he would say, "That girl is a wow! I've got to meet her."

But just as a final bit of advice and as a final warning, I'm going to give you a list of do's and don'ts which Dick gives the stars who step from his chair in quest of fame and fortune.

DON'TS

1. Don't rouge your lips over the natural mouth line.
2. Don't pencil your eyebrows in any other shape than nature intended them to be.
3. Don't use mascara or lipstick heavily.

DO'S

1. Preserve the natural structure of your face.
2. Make up your good points to advantage and shade the bad ones.
3. Daytime make-up is soft and light. Evening allows you to dip the paint brush more heavily, but remember, you are not a movie star playing a siren part.

Of course, Mary Biddle will be glad to advise you about any beauty problems that you may want to discuss with her, if you will drop her a note. The address is: Miss Mary Biddle, Modern Screen Magazine, 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y. Please send a stamped, self-addressed envelope for a personal reply.

Son of Tragedy

(Continued from page 34)

an old duelling pistol had put an end to what promised to be one of the most successful careers in pictures, and left a dying mother listening for a voice she would never hear again.

So sudden and unexpected were the blazing headlines, "Columbo Is Dead!" that even blasé Hollywood was shocked—and a trifle frightened. The boulevard punsters and gagmen were silent, and the wise ones offered no inside facts, but merely shook their heads in numb confusion.

RUSS COLUMBO was so young, so handsome, so friendly, and so unselfishly devoted to his family. It just didn't seem possible that he could be lying cold and still. He had had, too, a rather unhappy life up until the day he called the beginning of Chapter Three. His first love affair went smash. His first promising success in radio petered out after a brilliant start. A cherished brother had been killed in an automobile accident. And then, when everything seemed bright and happy once more, his young life was cut short.

A wonder and fear reached every studio, and was evident in the attitude of the great mass of men, women and children who stood so silently and so orderly outside the Blessed Sacrament Church where, five days before his crowning triumph, Russ Columbo's soul was consigned to his Maker.

No movie cameras or autograph hunters blasphemed the simple solemnity of the occasion, and as the pallbearers, headed by Bing Crosby, carried the casket, covered with a blanket of gardenias from Carole Lombard, only the sobs of hundreds of friends broke the stillness. Carole, supported by Russ's brother, John, and Dr. Harry Martin, was spared the stares and crowding of the curious.

In some manner, this death hit home in Hollywood and caused the village of make-believe to cast an apprehensive glance over its shoulder. If so happy and clean a life, and so promising a career, could be struck cold without a whisper of warning, just who can tell what will happen tomorrow. Or even today, so unexpected was this blow.

And yet, in one sense, not altogether unexpected.

Two days before Russ started making "Wake Up and Dream," he and this writer were driving through the hills of Hollywood, looking for a home for his family.

"I'm not satisfied with the place we just left," referring to the house he was leasing in Beverly Hills, "because I know mother would be happier where it is quieter, and a little more off the main road. So let's take a look up in Outpost."

"Aren't you planning to build for the family?" I asked. "Why not stay where you are till then—especially when you have the worry and work of just starting a picture."

"Maybe I'm funny about it," he replied, "but I want to grab some of the nicest things for mother right now. You know how it is. The old fellow with the scythe is always just around the corner.

"I am planning to build—but I don't want to wait—because you never know what might happen.

"For example," as he swung his car about an exceptionally sharp and steep turn, "suppose one of Hollywood's famous damphool drivers happened to be coming

"Peter, what has gotten into you? You're acting like a spoiled baby."

"Can't you tell Mother where to find the happy little boy she used to have?"

Peter can't answer, Mother, but we can. When a happy child suddenly becomes cross, contrary, sulky, he is usually constipated. Give him Fletcher's Castoria!

- A child's little symptoms should be taken seriously. A naughty child is often a child who is not well. His system is clogged with waste.
- At the first sign of trouble give Fletcher's Castoria—the laxative made especially for children. It acts gently but thoroughly. It is safe . . . contains no narcotics. And children love its taste.
- It's a grand first-aid, too, for the beginning of a cold. Look for the signature Chas. H. Fletcher on the carton. Buy the family-size bottle and save money!

Chas. H. Fletcher.

CASTORIA

The Children's Laxative from Babyhood to 11 years

News for Radio Fans!—"Roxy" and his big new show, the Roxy Revue, are on the air for Fletcher's Castoria now. Don't miss it! It's grand fun, Saturdays, 8—8:45, Eastern Standard Time. Columbia Broadcasting System—coast-to-coast network.

down here just now, wide open. I'd have a great chance to build a house after that, wouldn't I?

"No. I have a hunch it's a good idea to get your living in today. Tomorrow is so absolutely uncertain."

Russ was the last person in the world to borrow trouble or to fear tomorrow—and on the day of his death he had talked excitedly of his new plans—but he did have this feeling, where his beloved family was concerned, against putting things off.

Not that trouble had overlooked him—for he had been caused considerable loss of time and money through lawsuits and misplaced confidence. So much so, that in business he was becoming extremely cautious, and skeptical of the promises of others.

Having heard startling rumors of what Hollywood usually does to radio stars who storm its citadel, he came to the screen not grandly confident as came Rudy Vallee, nor trustingly simple as came Kate Smith, nor yet boyishly eager as came Lanny Ross, but wary, alert for Hollywood's vicious left to the jaw that has sent so many of his contemporaries wobbling to the ropes.

IT was an over-developed eagerness to share everything he owned that caused Russ so much of his trouble during his first broadcasting days, and that resulted in his paying off several thousands of dollars in debts his friends and business associates had contracted.

The first time I called on Russ, he was laid up at home with an arm crippled from too much tennis, and was eager to talk about his first picture.

He was enthused, and anxious to start it, as he felt that the grim misfortune that had dogged him and his family for years (and that had recently taken his brother, Fiore in an automobile accident) had finally released its crushing grip.

"I'm mighty anxious to make good here," Russ explained, "because this town is my Alma Mater, so to speak. I came here from San Francisco when I was nine, and stayed until we stormed New York and radioland. I was the twelfth son of a family that was not too well off, and that gave me the feeling that it was up to me to look out for myself.

"Between playing concerts, studying voice, doing bits in the movies and doubling voice for some of the best known stars in the early days of the talkies, I managed to keep busy.

"Then I joined up with Gus Arnheim, and along with Bing Crosby, sang at the Cocoanut Grove—which brings us to about four years ago, when one of my brothers got the idea of turning an automobile salon into a club where I could fill in my spare time as an entertainer."

It is at this point that Russ Columbo's life story was picked up and made into the motion picture, "Twenty Million Sweethearts." Jerry Wald learned Russ's story, wrote it for a magazine and then, at Dick Powell's suggestion, rewrote it into a motion picture for Warner Brothers.

It was Con Conrad, the famous composer, who discovered Russ singing at the Columbo Brothers' Pyramid Club on Hollywood Boulevard, and talked him into making a flying trip to New York to storm radio—and then helped him skyrocket to fame.

"I'll never forget that Saturday we struck New York," smiled Russ, shifting his arm to a more comfortable position. "Once we were there Con didn't let any grass grow under his feet. I had a lot of confidence in him, but, being a big kid who had been taken in before, I was a little skeptical when he announced, casually, that inasmuch as he had to make some money for us to eat on, he would give Flo Ziegfeld a buzz and have him come over and hear some of his new songs.

"But when Ziegfeld received Con's phone call, he came over, bringing Harry Richman, Jack Pearl and Mark Hellinger with him."

How Con Conrad next took him to see Earl Carroll (who instantly wanted to put him in his show and write a special part for him) and then on to the midnight audition at the National Broadcasting Company is well known now, as is also the story of his rapid climb to fame, and the popularity of his "caressing" voice.

He started singing for the broadcasting company at no salary at all, but within two weeks' time his fan mail had grown to such volume that he was signed on a "commercial."

Marlene Dietrich, Rudolph Seiber, Josef Von Sternberg and Tamara Matul made a kinda sad-looking foursome, or maybe they were just terribly interested in Max Reinhardt's "Midsummer Night's Dream."

Keep your hair aglow with the glory of "youth". The "Sheen of Youth" is every woman's birthright and it's a distinctive beauty asset, too. Make your friends wonder how you obtained that joyous, youthful, vibrant color tone so necessary for beautiful hair.

If your hair is old or faded looking, regain its "Sheen of Youth" by using ColoRinse—use immediately after the shampoo. It doesn't dye or bleach, for it is only a harmless vegetable compound. Yet one ColoRinse—ten tints to choose from—will give your hair that sparkle and lustre, that soft, shimmering loveliness, which is the youthful lure of naturally healthy hair.

Also ask for Nestle SuperSet, Nestle Golden Shampoo or Nestle Henna Shampoo.

THE NESTLE-LEMUR COMPANY
MAKERS OF QUALITY PRODUCTS
NEW YORK

10c at all 10c Stores and Beauty Shops ... Nestle ColoRinse, SuperSet, Golden Shampoo and Henna Shampoo

Russ's fan following soon became so enormous and so partial to his voice that a national tour of personal appearances was decided upon—and after breaking box office records in theatres all over the country, he was sent on a second tour, this time appearing in the largest dance halls, and other public buildings available.

About this time the famous Columbo-Crosby feud was being exploited by the different radio broadcasting chains. Bing and Russ had worked together in the same orchestra and, because of the similarity of their voices, a good hot feud looked like excellent publicity copy.

Whenever he was asked about this feud, Russ used to merely grin and wink. He knew it was nonsense and Bing Crosby knew it was nonsense. But it so happened that, just a day before Russ Columbo's death, a newspaper ran a synthetic photograph showing Bing Crosby shooting Columbo—to illustrate the bitter feud that existed between them. One of those silly, but nevertheless harmful, things that misguided publicity does.

"I hope no one took that seriously," says Bing. "I tell you it gave me an awful shock. A creepy feeling.

"Everybody who knew either of us intimately knew there was nothing to that feud idea at all. It was started back east, by the radio people.

"After both of us settled in California we were together many times at my house and at Carole's.

"Russ and I were always chummy. Way back when he played a violin in Gus Arnheim's orchestra at the Cocoanut Grove and sang in one trio, while I sang in another, Russ and I used to go around together, sometimes alone and sometimes with Dixie, my wife, and Sally Blane.

"We often laughed over this so-called feud of late years—and figured it would die out when we appeared in pictures, and proved to be such entirely different types.

"Russ sent a christening present to my first baby, and flowers for my twins. During Dixie's long confinement, he sent flowers often.

"Few people felt Russ's loss more than I did—because, somehow, it seemed we should be sailing along together, as we had been the last three months of his life.

"I was proud when asked to officiate at his funeral as a pallbearer, and to play some small part in his last rites."

Thank you, Bing Crosby, for this friendly and fitting tribute.

What Adrienne Fears

(Continued from page 55)

was in New York on a visit. Yet, as though the fates had planned all this, Radio Pictures did loan Bruce out for one picture at Paramount, "Disgraced," believing that Claudette Colbert would be in it. When they learned that she couldn't, they tried to withdraw permission. But it was too late. Adrienne was hastily summoned to Hollywood for this picture.

When she met Bruce she didn't give him much thought. Oh, he was a nice boy, she figured, but that was all.

In Hollywood the conventions that govern most of us are calmly disregarded. In Hollywood married women separated from their husbands often go out with other men, and there is no scandal. So Adrienne Ames went about with various men, with Maurice Chevalier and David

But you can buy and be

Irresistible

PARISIENNES know that love is a treasure beyond price . . . but they are always able to win love, for they make themselves fascinating with the lure of an exciting, seductive perfume. Such is IRRESISTIBLE PERFUME. Its exotic fragrance stirs senses... thrills... awakens love. It makes you divinely exciting, glamorous, utterly irresistible.

Try all the Irresistible Beauty Aids . . . each has some special feature that gives you glorious new loveliness. Irresistible Lip Lure melts into your lips leaving no trace of paste or film . . . just soft, warm, ripe, red, indelible color that makes your lips beg for kisses. Four gorgeous shades to choose from. Irresistible Face Powder is so satin-fine and clinging that it absolutely hides small blemishes and gives you a skin that invites caresses.

Irresistible Beauty Aids are guaranteed to be of the purest, finest quality . . . like $1 or $2 preparations. Be irresistible tonight... buy IRRESISTIBLE BEAUTY AIDS today... full size packages only 10¢ each at your 5 and 10¢ store.

PERFUME
LIP LURE
FACE POWDER
VANISHING...
LIQUEFYING..
COLD CREAM
COLOGNE
BRILLIANTINE
TALCUM POWDER

Irresistible Perfume and Beauty Aids... FIFTH AVE., NEW YORK

New Charm with this amazing
NAIL POLISH

New shades LADY LILLIAN Nail Polish — transparent or creme — made to harmonize with your natural coloring

—See Special Offer Below*

● A great many women believe that the first consideration in the choice of nail polish shades is the colors in their wardrobes. Beauty experts advise quite differently—say that nail polish shades should first of all match natural coloring for only then will nail polish help you attain the true charm of your color type.

No wonder the new shades of Lady Lillian Nail Polish first announced in Vogue are creating such a sensation. They include a full series of nine colors, based on the true colors of the artist's palette, in both transparent and creme type polishes.

The new Lady Lillian Polish shades flow on smoothly, leaving an unbroken surface without bubble or crumb. They dry rapidly, leaving no odor to collide with your perfume. They last and last because they do not chip and do not fade.

Individual bottles of Lady Lillian Nail Polish, Oil Polish Remover, Cuticle Remover and Cuticle Oil, cost but 25c at Department Stores and Drug Stores. There are 10c sizes at "five-and-tens." And you can buy complete Lady Lillian Manicure Sets at prices that will surprise you. Lady Lillian Products are approved by Good Housekeeping. Booklet "How to Enhance Your Natural Coloring" comes with polish and sets.

TRIAL OFFER—One daytime and one evening shade of Lady Lillian Nail Polish—made especially for your color type—with Oil Polish Remover, Cuticle Oil, Nail White, Emery Board, Manicure Stick and Cotton—and valuable booklet "How to Enhance Your Natural Coloring"—All for 12c.

I enclose 12c for the new Lady Lillian Manicure Set described above. I prefer Transparent...or Creme Polish... I am True Blonde....Ash Blonde....Light Brunette.... Chestnut Brunette....Dark Brunette....Titian Red.... Silver Hair.....Black Hair.....Black with Silver.... Send also booklet "How to Enhance Your Natural Coloring."

Name.....

Address.....

City..... State.....

LADY LILLIAN (Dept. E)
1140 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

Manners, for instance, and thought nothing of it. Nor did she think anything of it when she turned to Bruce Cabot one day and asked if he'd like to accompany her and Earl Kenton, the director, and his wife to the fights at the Olympic Stadium. And then fate began to arrange the strange threads that wove the pattern of her love for Bruce Cabot. Florence, Earl Kenton's wife, was ill, and Bruce and Adrienne went with Adrienne's sister.

"I never thought I'd fall in love," Adrienne says today. "Never did I dream what was in store for us. Then I found myself suddenly in the midst of a whirlpool of emotion. When you're caught in a whirlpool, what can you do? Fight against it? Struggle? You know you can't. When Bruce and I discovered ourselves to be in love, all I could think of was how I could tell Stephen, how I could soften the blow so it would not hurt him so much. I knew then that there could be no going back."

You know something of what happened, of how Stephen came to Hollywood and of how Adrienne told him of her love for Bruce. Stephen at first refused to believe her, insisted that this was merely a temporary infatuation. "You can't be in love with Bruce," he told her, for he could not believe that any woman in her right mind could prefer a struggling young actor to an established business man.

"Stephen," Adrienne said in a stunned voice, "don't you know that wealth has never meant very much to me?"

But Stephen would not understand. His pride was too deeply wounded.

Sincerely believing that all this was temporary, he asked Adrienne Ames to test her love for Bruce by a "trial separation." And in Mike Levee's office, Adrienne said, "I'll do it since you ask it, Stephen. But only because you want me to. In my heart there is no doubt, I know."

WHEN Mr. Ames knew that they had to face divorce, he insisted that his adoption of Adrienne's daughter be cancelled immediately. And Adrienne, proudly standing beside Cabot, whom she loved, agreed. For there was only one thing they wanted in the world, and that was each other. But they wanted each other as husband and wife, not in some sordid affair. If it had been a cheap little love and Adrienne had been that sort of person, she could have lied to and deceived Stephen. But she wasn't like that and her love wasn't like that. It was the greatest, most compelling thing that had ever happened to her, and for it she was willing to sacrifice security and even the life of ease that Stephen could offer her child. Bruce adopted Adrienne's daughter.

"Together, I thought Bruce and I could lick the world," Adrienne told me. "Bruce has so many qualities that I lack and I have some that he needs. Together I thought that we would complement each other and win happiness."

Well, are they winning happiness together? The answer to that isn't so simple. They are fighting desperately hard to hold their happiness, and I hope that they are not fighting a losing battle.

When Bruce met Adrienne he had been bitterly hurt by life, and so he was sullen and unhappy. In his unhappiness, he became sarcastic and impatient with people. Never had he known what it was to have a meaning and purpose to his life, though he had once been married. When he was four, his mother had died, and he had been brought up by a stepmother. When he was fourteen, he ran away from school and fought his way in the world alone. Women disillusioned him. He wasn't surprised. Friends betrayed him. He began to expect those things to happen.

Then Adrienne came along and held out the shining torch of faith to him, gave him something, someone to believe in. Women just couldn't love sincerely, he knew. And then Adrienne, by sacrificing everything that Stephen Ames could offer, proved that there were women who could. Gradually, he began to believe in Adrienne, in himself, in the self she showed him, the finer qualities that made her fall in love with him, in his ability to conquer the arrogance and cynicism that had made people in Hollywood dislike him.

He fought a desperate battle with himself and, to a great extent, won. Adrienne knows how to be a wife. She works, actually works at it, by which I mean that she gives a man faith in his ability and powers.

BUT she is, alas, an idealist and a perfectionist. Perhaps she works too hard at bringing out the best in the man she loves. And there comes a time, I'm afraid, when male vanity can stand no more, when the effort to rise above oneself becomes tinged with bitterness.

Whether or not their marriage succeeds, they have done a great deal for each other. People who knew Bruce before his marriage, remark on how much he's changed. He even looks better. Two years ago, his mouth was bitter and he appeared terribly unhappy. Today there's radiant health bubbling up in him, and you can recognize the boyish qualities that Adrienne fell in love with and helped to bring out.

As for Adrienne, Bruce has taught her how to play. Always too intense about her work, she had a tendency to worry about it ceaselessly. He has taught her to laugh things off. And he has also made her as self-reliant as life had made her before she met Stephen Ames. While she was married to Stephen, she ran to him with every problem and asked his advice before she made any decision. Stephen, an astute business man, loved to thrash things out for hours. But Bruce doesn't believe in that. He encourages Adrienne to make her decisions first, and tell him about them afterwards.

For instance, when Adrienne was in doubt as to whether to continue with Paramount or to free-lance, it was she who decided in favor of free-lancing, and not until she had made up her mind, did she tell Bruce about it. It isn't easy, when you've gotten into the habit of asking advice, to win back the self-reliance you started with.

When he is aroused, Bruce has a terrible temper, and Adrienne claims that when she is angry, hers is still worse. But for Bruce's sake, because she loves him, she has learned to curb that temper. For she knows he loves her, too, and is trying to live up to the best in himself.

And yet for all that, I think their marriage is a great big question mark. If you have ever been married to someone or been in love with someone who had faults you tried to change, you'll understand why. Adrienne and Bruce are trying to convince themselves and each other that what they're going through is a difficult period of readjustment, and that everything will come out all right. For their sakes, I hope they're right.

But it is not easy, when you have gone through years of doubting people, to change the habit of those years. And Bruce finds it hard to cling to the faith Adrienne tried to instill in him. Again and again he slips back into the habit of doubting others, doubting himself, doubting her, doubting his power to hold her. And that is always a losing battle. For when you doubt the strength of the bond that holds you to another, by your very doubt, you loosen that bond.

THERE was, for instance, the time when a columnist said that Adrienne Ames and Bruce Cabot had been planning a divorce, but had torn up the time-tables to Reno. The story was published two days after Adrienne arrived in New York to make "Gigolette" at the Biograph Studios.

"Did Bruce say anything about that?" I asked Adrienne.

"Yes," she admitted, "he called me up and asked if I had been giving interviews that I was going to leave him."

"Bruce," I told him, "I read that story, too, and I might just as well have believed that you'd given out that story, but I didn't. Why can't you believe in me?"

The tragedy of it is that Adrienne is a woman at war with herself. She is deeply maternal and, therefore, is attracted by the very weaknesses that she tries so hard to change. She is at war with herself, too, because of her sensitiveness and her fine pride. On one hand, she could forgive Bruce almost anything because she loves him so deeply, and on the other, she suffers cruelly from every slight, from every hastily-spoken word.

Rarely, has she known real happiness. Perhaps only once, just before her marriage to Bruce, when they were caught in the tide of their love and swept along by it. Then, he was at her home often, and her two sisters were there, Jane and Linda, and their home was full of laughter and joy. Never before had she been so happy, and some instinct warned her that never again would she be.

Her younger sister was trying to get into the movies. Adrienne named her Linda March and proudly took her to the studios. This young sister worshipped Adrienne and Adrienne in turn adored her.

"She looked like me," she told me, her voice breaking. "Isn't it strange how someone's features can be altogether different from yours and yet that person look just like you? Linda looked up to me. She tried to wear her hair like mine, to dress like me, to be like me in so many ways. People used to joke about it.

"So blissfully happy were we that summer that I felt as if we'd reached a climax, and that we could never stay on that pinnacle of happiness. Somehow, I think, we all felt that.

"We were right. Our whole little world collapsed. While Bruce and I were on our honeymoon in Honolulu, Linda went to Stanford to see the football game. She came back from the game in a little car, and a car full of drunken people crashed into it. Linda was instantly killed, and with her went half my heart.

"There was a time then, when I thought I'd lose everything, myself, our love. It was summer, and Bruce was away most of the day playing golf. I had more time to myself than I had ever had in my life. I was alone in the house, brooding. I grew more and more morbid, until luckily I got a chance to play in a picture with W. C. Fields. It was a life-saver, for I can't bear idleness.

"I think this separation, while I am working in the East, may be the best thing in the world for Bruce and myself. Now that we have had a chance to find out how much we miss each other, perhaps everything will be all right and we will be able to straighten out our lives again. Because with all my heart, with all my soul, I want to make this marriage last."

This is the secret of the lasting softness of Modess: Comfort is actually built into this quality napkin!

Modess is made of finer materials—put together in a better way. A new-type fluffy filler . . . soft, surgical gauze . . . and just underneath the gauze a special layer of soft down. Only Modess has that! There are no sharp edges in Modess—nothing to cut and chafe.

Kills a COLD "Dead"!

—Does this Amazing 4-Way Treatment!

DIRECT and definite treatment is what you want for a cold. For, a cold may develop serious "complications".

Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine supplies the treatment needed because it is expressly a cold remedy and because it is internal in effect.

What It Does

First, it opens the bowels. Second, it combats the cold germs in the system and reduces the fever. Third, it relieves the headache and grippy feeling. Fourth, it tones the entire system and fortifies against further attack.

That's the four-fold treatment a cold requires and anything less is taking chances.

Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine is utterly harmless and perfectly safe to take. Comes in two sizes—30c and 50c. The 50c size is by far the more economical to buy as it gives you 20% more for your money.

Always ask for Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine and reject a substitute.

World's Standard

GROVE'S LAXATIVE BROMO QUININE

Hollywood Thinks He's Nutty

(Continued from page 41)

thinks he's mad, but when you understand his background, when you realize the depth of his ideals, you may not agree with Hollywood.

As a boy in Czechoslovakia, he was lured by the stage, but his very strict parents warned him, "If you become an actor, you are no son of ours. We disown you."

BUT Lederer was more determined than they. The theatre was his goal, until one day he saw a theatrical performance in which the hero smoked a cigarette. Even at that time Francis was an ascetic. His parents had taught him the benefits of abstemiousness. "I cannot go on the stage if I must smoke," Francis said and he put the theatre out of his mind and got himself a job selling—of all things—women's dress goods. Honest.

The call of the theatre, however, was too great. "Ambition slept in me," he said. "It woke again and I began to look for work in the theatre."

Unbeknownst to his parents he got a job as a super in the opera, "Lohengrin." And he acted even in the mob scene, where there was no need for acting. One of the real actors noticed this intense, eager boy and offered to give him lessons. When Francis at last got the courage to read lines to his father, the father waived his objections and gave the son his blessing for a theatrical career.

Francis threw himself into his work to the exclusion of all other interests—except one. At seventeen he became a violent pacifist. Even now, as you know, he is an ardent worker in the peace movement.

This, in brief, is Lederer's background: A son of strict, poor, proud people, a lad with the burning desire to create, with tremendously high ideals and the will to put these ideals into practice. In Europe, such a young man is not unusual. In Hollywood, he is a curious sport of nature. Lederer is handsome and romantic, yet he behaves not at all like a glamorous matinée idol. So weird stories about him are constantly being circulated. He's got Hollywood wondering.

Let me tell you more anecdotes of his Hollywood career. You'll realize that he is not cut to any pattern.

When he first arrived in Hollywood, he registered at the Athletic Club. The first night he stood on Sunset Boulevard and engaged himself in his pet stunt—gazing at the stars. He stood so long that he darn near got taken to the police station by a cop who thought he must be a lookout for a burglar.

Francis decided that he should have a home in Hollywood. But none of the big showy places interested him. Instead, he found a farm house, made of stone, on a hill above Ventura Boulevard. It suited him exactly and when people suggested various Hollywood interior decorators to furnish the house, he refused to meet them and set to work to design his own furniture and have it made. So eager was he to be in the new place that he could not wait for the carpenters to finish. He moved into the servants' quarters and lived there all alone.

IN this strange house, there is one room in which he keeps nothing but good luck charms and gifts that friends have given him. He is very superstitious. When someone presents him with a gift, he insists that the giver spit on it six times. (It looks sort of odd if the present is made of white velvet. The best thing to give Francis Lederer is something dark with a smooth surface.)

Women adore him. He is a romantic-looking man. But this is how the romantic actor behaves. Once on his way home from the studio he saw, advertised at a neighborhood theatre, a film he had wanted to see for a long time. He was tired. He knew he had to get up early the next morning, but he wanted to see the picture.

SCOTT PHOTO

Francis Lederer, the man who would rather gaze at stars than go to Hollywood parties, finds himself at the testimonial dinner tendered Max Reinhardt at the Biltmore. Steffi Duna is the girl friend.

So, in order to save time, he bought a bag of sandwiches and went into the theatre to eat them. When he had finished, he was still hungry and the picture wasn't finished. So, completely without embarrassment, he sent the usher out to buy more sandwiches.

He says he is too busy to eat regularly. And why is he so busy? His time away from the studio is given to his plan for world peace. He maintains a busy office on Hollywood Boulevard, where stenographers and secretaries—whose salaries he pays out of his own pocket—send out literature. His idea is that the people should be allowed to vote for or against war. He thinks that would stop all wars.

He is constantly making speeches about and holding meetings for world peace and sometimes his faulty English immeasurably brightens the meetings. In San Francisco, in front of a group of clubwomen, he said, "I want you to know that I have no posterior motive in this campaign."

He admires beautiful and intelligent women tremendously. Steffi Duna is a friend of years' standing. But when she came to Hollywood, Lederer would not help her to acquire film fame. He insisted that she prove her own talents. His friendship for Steffi comes close to being a romance. The Joan Crawford-Francis Lederer gossip is bunk. They admire each other, but there just isn't any romance. Anna May Wong he declares to be the most intelligent woman he ever met. Gail Patrick and Kay Francis he thinks are two of the most beautiful women in Hollywood. He kisses the hand of every woman he meets. Hollywood tried to kid him out of that, but Francis wouldn't be kidded. He goes right ahead kissing hands.

He goes right ahead doing as he pleases in spite of what Hollywood thinks. His spirit cannot be broken. His terrific idealism is a part of him and he will always give of himself in an attempt to make the world a better place in which to live.

This is your introduction to Francis Lederer. Hollywood thinks he's nutty. And now that you have all the evidence, what do you think?

The Great Laughton Mystery

(Continued from page 54)

training. That might have been necessary in the beginning but, with the advance in films, it no longer applies. Adolphe Menjou learned all he knows from the screen. Yet he is as competent as any actor from the stage. Norma Shearer is an actress of real emotional feeling.

"You've got a very intelligent man in films. His name is Irving Thalberg. He possesses a balance that is rare in producers. He never knows it all. I talked with him by telephone from London for the part of Papa Barrett in 'The Barretts of Wimpole Street.' He said it was a putrid part for me. He said people would continue to hate me for portraying that demoniacal old man. I answered that I didn't believe people associated players with the parts they portrayed and that I wasn't afraid of risking it. I won him over. I like working with Thalberg because he combines the action of the executive with a sensitiveness rarely found in producers. He really likes actors whereas most producers distrust and mis-

HER LIPS WON HIM FROM ANOTHER

Natural lips win... painted lips lose!

SOFT lips. Nice lips. Never conspicuous with jarring red paint. Simply alluring with rosy color that looks as though it was her own!

Men say time and again that they cannot stand the painted-mouth habit. Yet they are the first to admit that pale lips are equally unattractive. So, to be your loveliest, you should color your lips without painting them. Sounds impossible but it can be done by using the lipstick that isn't paint. This lipstick, known as Tangee, intensifies the natural color now in your lips!

LOOKS ORANGE—ACTS ROSE

In the stick Tangee looks orange. On your lips, it's rose. Not a jarring red. But a glowing shade of blush-rose most natural for your type. Don't be fooled by imitative orange-colored lipsticks: Tangee contains the original and exclusive color-change principle that enables it to color lips beautifully, naturally.

Cheeks must not look painted, either. Tangee Rouge gives same natural color as Lipstick. In new refillable gun-metal case. Buy Tangee refills, save money.*

Tangee's special cream base soothes and softens dry, chapped lips. Goes on smoothly... becomes a very part of your lips, not a coating. Get Tangee in 39c and $1.10 sizes. Also in Theatrical, a deeper shade for professional use. Or for quick trial, send 10c for 4-Piece Miracle Make-Up Set, Containing Tangee Lipstick, Rouge Compact, Creme Rouge and Face Powder.

UNTOUCHED—Lips left untouched are apt to have a faded look...make the face seem older.

PAINTED—Don't risk that painted look. It's coarsening and men don't like it.

TANGEE—Intensifies natural color, restores youthful appeal, ends that painted look.

World's Most Famous Lipstick

TANGEE

ENDS THAT PAINTED LOOK

Don't be switched! Insist upon Tangee. And patronize the store that gives you what you ask for

★ 4-PIECE MIRACLE MAKE-UP SET—10¢

THE GEORGE W. LUFT COMPANY MM124
417 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Rush Miracle Make-Up Set containing miniature Tangee Lipstick, Rouge Compact, Creme Rouge and Face Powder. Enclosed find 10¢ (stamps or coin).

Check Shade ☐ FLESH ☐ RACHEL ☐ LIGHT RACHEL

*Name*_____
(Please Print)

*Address*_____

*City*_____ *State*_____

Insure Your Winter's Beauty

with La Jolie
TRIPLE-PURPOSE
Cucumber Cream

La Jolie Cucumber Cream works miracles — positively removes dirt, pimples and blackheads from the skin. It will definitely increase any woman's charm and attractiveness, for it bleaches the skin — making it soft and delicate — aglow with allure and youth. It magically rejuvenates the complexion — improvement shows quickly, as thousands of women can testify. Just pat it in gently — watch how quickly it is absorbed — how quickly dirt-ridden pores are cleansed, and lifeless, deadened skin is revitalized to new beauty and health.

FREE GIFT to YOU

A generous box of La Jolie Face Powder is given FREE to each purchaser of the famous triple-purpose La Jolie Cucumber Cream. You'll rave about this petal soft, perspiration and waterproof powder. Clip this coupon, present it when you purchase a jar of La Jolie Cucumber Cream at any Kresge Green Front Store, Neisner's, F. & W. Grand Store or McCrory's and receive your box of La Jolie Face Powder FREE. Or mail 25c direct for same offer. Check color of powder desired.

PEACH... ☐ NATURAL ☐
RACHEL I ☐ RACHEL II ☐

Name.....

Address.....

JOLIE, INC., 116 WEST 14th ST., N. Y. C. DEPT. D

La Jolie

LA JOLIE TOILET PREPARATIONS, 25¢ THE ITEM

understand them. He is always ready to talk over disputed points." He hadn't as nice things to say "off the record" about certain other film executives. "Look now," he pleaded, "you won't print what I ask you not to, will you? No use making enemies, you know."

"Money means nothing to you, does it?" I asked, remembering how he had turned down movie thousands for a chance to do Shakespeare at $100 a week at the Victoria Theatre in London.

"Oh, come now," he answered irritably. "I won't say that. Of course money means something to me. I should be snobbish to say otherwise."

"Just what?"

He thought. "It means security against the days when I might not have any. It means peace and freedom from worry and (here was what I'd waited to hear) a chance to play the old 'Vic' again. I don't like luxury. I don't want money for the mere spending. Let the others have their extravagant cars and homes.

"All I want out of Hollywood is a chance to keep working. I want to be acting five, ten years from now. I don't want to be typed, pigeon-holed and killed as was Emil Jannings. I want to do all kinds of parts, especially comedy. I do that best."

HE finished his hearty luncheon of liver and bacon and we started for the dressing-room. Outside the restaurant, we met Fred Datig, Paramount's casting chief and another executive. Laughton spying them, instantly became another person. Tossing aside his serious role, he threw wide his arms and, assuming the characteristics of an effeminate man, rushed toward them exclaiming, "Darlings," embracing them.

Then followed some delicious horseplay when Laughton, Academy Award winner, might have been taken for Fatty Arbuckle in one of his noisier and more ludicrous moments. Wisecrack followed wisecrack. Laughton was another man! Datig offered that a dressing-room would soon be ready for him, he thought. "You think so, do you?" mocked Laughton. "Oh you do, do you? You think you're finally going to break down and give ol' Massa Laughton a dressin'-room. Okay boss, ef dats de sitchiashun—" And he broke into a negro shuffle, kicking out his feet in rhythmic undulations.

I stopped short, gasping. This quiet, sensitive, over-intelligent artist, Laughton, had suddenly turned clown. The man I thought I was getting to know had up and kicked over the applecart. He giggled, running a delicate hand through his stringy long hair, strands of which were still bleached from his part in "Barretts."

I trailed along bewildered. We stopped at a set en route to the dressing-room. It was an Italian bedroom on a raised stage. Through its windows could be seen a Venice canal and buildings in miniature. Laughton couldn't pass it. We entered and he stood spellbound with admiration. The mystery of his theatre took hold of him. "My God, isn't that wonderful?" he muttered to himself. He shuffled onto the stage and, unconcerned, allowed a laborer to sweep dust from a rug of the waist-high set directly into his face. "Would you please tell me what picture this set is for?" he asked, exactly as a little boy would ask. The laborer paid no attention to him and I repeated his question. The answer was, "Dunno the name of the picture. It's Number 166."

"My God," again breathed Laughton, staring at the set, "he doesn't even know the name of the picture." For one to have so little interest in such a magic thing as that set seemed, very apparently, blasphemous to Laughton. He walked behind the platform to examine the miniatures. Then, awed, he sauntered up onto the set to see how the miniatures looked through the windows. To no one at all he muttered, "Wonderful, simply wonderful!"

WE continued to the buildings containing the dressing-rooms. Number 240, which they said was to be ours for the remainder of the interview, hadn't been opened as ordered. "Charlie's got the key and he's upstairs," drawled the floor-man disinterestedly. Laughton waited awhile then, suddenly, bounded up the stairs crying, "Charlie, oh, Chaw-lee. Yoo-hoo! Chawles!"

After awhile he reappeared in the wake of a puzzled man who viewed him, it was evident, as plain nuts. We entered and Laughton sprawled on the couch, pulled a pillow over his face. There he lay, one leg dangling to the floor, silent and quite oblivious to anyone or anything.

I asked him about "Henry VIII."

"We had the dickens of a time," emerged from beneath the pillow. A pause. "In the beginning," he continued, "we had Hollywood money behind us, but when they learned we were going to do an historical drama, they withdrew every penny of it. They said it wouldn't pull. We didn't know from one day to the next where we'd get money for the extras. I worked on a percentage basis, thank God." Quickly he got tired of talking of that. He squirmed, throwing one leg in one direction and another in the other. His arms flailed wildly, finally coming to rest underneath his head.

"You know," he offered quietly, "I don't know why they go to see me in pictures. I'm so ugly! Why would they want to see me when there's Bing Crosby, a perfectly delightful fellow. And with such a voice. I'm fat and dull. Only good for comedy —low comedy at that."

It doesn't seem exactly consistent that Charles Laughton, with his intelligence, would ask why people go to see him when they can see Bing Crosby. I, who can take my Crosbys or leave them, but who wouldn't miss a Laughton film if hell froze, can hardly believe that Laughton was serious when he popped that question. It all added to the great Laughton riddle.

Or maybe Laughton was serious about Crosby. Does this man consider the Crosbys of the screen have something he hasn't? Is this strange combination of aesthete and buffoon, this baffling possessor of exquisite wit and low comedy, actually a little envious of his less-gifted, earthier brothers? Laughton alone can tell you.

Charles Laughton—wine in a coffee mug—six-gaiter hitched to a dump-wagon —rare lace on a street-walker's peek-a-boo waist—

I'd give anything to know what Laughton was thinking as he put up with my interview. I'd give anything for his thoughts as he allows our super-super directors to tell him what to do and how to do it.

This article probably won't please him, but that's all right. He'll never see it. He has no interest in reading about himself. One of the finest pieces of reporting on record was a story on Laughton by a New York writer. I told him about it. He yawned. As I remember, he didn't even answer. I know of no one else in Hollywood who would react so.

You'll never know Charles Laughton. You won't know him now that you've read this article and after you've read a hundred better ones. Don't let anyone in Hollywood tell you he knows Charles Laughton. Tell him I said he doesn't.

Charles Laughton is alone.

The Most Romantic Story Ever Told

(Continued from page 29)

times a day in different costumes, so that the "Indians" who were being attacked by the "cowboys" were also the cowboys who were doing the attacking. And the placid "squaws" seated around the campfire with their backs to it, were often his own wife, Linda, a friend of hers, the wardrobe woman, or anyone who happened to be handy.

Griffith did not know that one day his genius was to flash from the screen across that far-flung battlefield in "Birth of a Nation." He did not know that when he engaged, for three dollars a day, a girl who told him she had been a stage actress, that she was to become "America's Sweetheart," and that when she brought to the studio two frightened girls and asked "Mr. Griffith" to give them work, too, that one of them—Lillian Gish—was to be proclaimed the greatest movie actress of her day and the inspiration for reams of encomium from the intelligentsia of America.

If Griffith could not even foresee greatness for the Pickfords and the Gishes—and to him they were simply fluttery girls with emotion—how could anyone have looked far enough into the future to prophesy Garbo, Katharine Hepburn, Joan Crawford, Mae West, Jean Harlow—these latter-day artists who make Hollywood what it is? How could even a part of the Hollywood that is today be imagined by these pioneers?

And, going even farther back than D. W. Griffith, do you suppose that Leland Stanford knew that he was starting the sixth largest industry in America when, after a good dinner one evening, he advanced the theory that a horse at full gallop lifts all four feet off the ground. A friend disagreed. An argument started. A bet was made. And that, you motion picture fans, is the way the movies began.

LELAND STANFORD was a wealthy man and a sportsman. He set about to collect his bet by proving that he was right about the horse's feet. For years various photographs were taken and the results were unsatisfactory, but at last a photographer assured Stanford that he knew a way to prove or disprove the theory. John D. Isaacs placed a number of cameras in a row and concocted some electrical device whereby the shutter of each camera would open and shut as the horse galloped past. The result was a series of pictures each showing the horse in a different position.

Stanford looked at them, saw that he was right about the horse's feet, showed them to his friend, collected the bet and, in 1882, published a book of the pictures. Undoubtedly he thought no more about it. But these were the first action photographs, the very first pictures to show a living thing in motion. In all probability, had it not been for this sportsman's bet, you and I would not today, be able to see Clark Gable and Marlene Dietrich and Katharine Hepburn upon the screen. And if that isn't an industrial romance, then I wish you would tell me what it is.

I shall not bore you with all the details of the invention of motion pictures from the time that Stanford's horse ran past Isaac's cameras until perfection was reached. Suffice it to say that inventors began to work madly, but soon realized

NOW—Relief From Ugly Skin Blemishes, "Nerves" and Constipation

WITH YEAST IN THIS PLEASANT MODERN FORM

DO UGLY pimples and other skin blemishes embarrass you? Does constipation drag you down, rob you of strength and vivacity? Do you often feel nervous, fidgety and irritable?

For all these troubles doctors recommend yeast. Science has found that yeast contains precious nutritive elements which strengthen your digestive and eliminative organs and give tone to your nervous system. Thousands of men and women have found this simple food a remarkable aid in combating constipation, "nerves," and unsightly skin eruptions.

And now—thanks to Yeast Foam Tablets—it's so easy to eat yeast regularly. For here's a yeast that is actually delicious—a yeast that is scientifically pasteurized to prevent fermentation. You will enjoy munching Yeast Foam Tablets with their appetizing, nut-like flavor. And because they are pasteurized they cannot cause gas or discomfort. This yeast is used by various laboratories of the United States government and by leading American universities in their vitamin research.

Any druggist will supply you with Yeast Foam Tablets. The 10-day bottle costs only 50c. Get one today. See, now, how this corrective food helps you to look better and feel better.

YEAST FOAM TABLETS

FREE MAIL THIS COUPON TODAY
You may paste this on a penny post card

NORTHWESTERN YEAST CO. MM-12
1750 North Ashland Ave., Chicago, Ill.
Please send free sample and descriptive circular.

Name.....
Address.....
City..... State.....

The Beerys—Wally, with daughter Ann, and brother Noah—pose for a snapshot on Hollywood Boulevard.

Scott Photo

And I had to be Scolded into trying it

"A friend who knew how I suffered every month kept scolding me until I had to try Midol. How glad I am that she did! Two tablets see me through my worst day comfortably. I tell every girl I discover who is still suffering the way I used to."

Many users of these remarkable tablets have given them endorsement as strong as that! Many are grateful enough to spread the word at every opportunity. For Midol does bring definite relief, and prompt relief from periodic pain even to those who have always suffered severely. You can go through this trying time without those severe pains if you use Midol. At least, many women do—and find they can be quite as active as usual.

The best way to use these tablets is, of course, to anticipate the time for any expected pain—or at least, take a tablet the first moment there is the slightest indication of the pain coming on. There is no need to postpone the comfort of this special medicine, for there is no harmful effect from its use—no after-effects.

That's the beauty of this discovery; Midol is as harmless as the aspirin you take for an ordinary headache. Don't be afraid of the speed with which Midol takes hold; it is not a narcotic. All drugstores have these tablets.

that a series of cameras would not do and one camera, able to photograph a series of pictures, was necessary.

At this point Thomas A. Edison stepped in and—just as a little side line—decided that he would toss off a motion picture camera in a spare moment. He was busy with such boons to humanity as the incandescent lamp. He did not realize that when he decided to look into action pictures he was giving humanity as great a boon as electric light. But here is a strange and romantic thing. Away back there in 1886 Edison's idea was to make talking pictures. He began to experiment with a camera to photograph movement only as a subsidiary of the "talking machine" which he had just invented. He thought it would be an amusing idea for those who listened to the phonograph to be able to see the singer singing.

It was in reality "talkies" that Edison had in mind, but somewhere in an inventor's laboratory the talking machine and the motion picture were divorced, silent films resulted, and it was not until thirty years later that the two devices were re-wed.

Ask your father to tell you about Edison's, or rather Dickson's (for W. K. L. Dickson, one of Edison's assistants, was put in charge of the invention), "kinetoscope." Your father can tell you how he used to drop a penny in the slot of a cumbersome machine, glue his eyes to a hole and watch tiny human beings dance or box. These little peep shows, which nobody took very seriously, are what you can thank for the wonderful and elaborate movies you enjoy today. These were the first actual movies, the tiny heralds of the glory of today's cinema.

WE can skip lightly over the years when the peep show became a room where a hundred or more people could sit and watch, not miniature men and women, but life-size ones moving across a screen. Dozens of men invested their money in the new "novelty"—pictures that moved. Most of these men are now multi-millionaires and you know them as the leading executives of the studios of today.

Almost any moving picture was interesting. There was no thought of telling a story in film. It was not until 1903 that Edwin S. Porter got together a group of second-rate actors, went to New Jersey, borrowed a railroad train and proceeded to film "The Great Train Robbery." This was a wild and woolly melodrama and it ran for seven hundred and forty feet of film. In order to get an idea of its length—or, rather, its shortness—one must remember that today a reel of film is 1,000 feet. Most feature pictures are seven or eight reels long.

"The Great Train Robbery" was a sensation. The movies were real entertainment, just like the stage. It is true that the characters all rushed through their parts faster than the train coming down the track. There were no close-ups—that was to come later; no subtleties of emotion—that must wait for many, many years. The villain was bad, the hero was good, but everybody moved and moved and moved.

In those days there were no studios. All scenes were taken outdoors and the natural background used. A scenario could be bought for ten or fifteen dollars. If a producer paid twenty-five dollars for a story he demanded an epic. The players—there were no stars, since the audience did not even know the names or faces of the actors they saw—received from twenty-five to fifty dollars a week. And you know all about the fabulous sums actors and actresses receive today.

When you think of the enormous salaries paid to scenario writers today, you pity these early writers. But when you see some of their efforts, you think they were overpaid. Benjamin Hampton, in his "A History of the Movies," gives a typical example of the stories of that time. Here it is:

Ginger Rogers and Fred Astaire, dance team de luxe, do "The Continental," a new version of the popular "Carioca," in RKO's grand musical comedy "The Gay Divorcee."

"A poor but proud maiden, reduced to poverty by misfortune, unable to secure work, is forced to beg in order to supply nourishment for her sick mother. At a resort she resents the familiarity of a man who has offered alms and is struck by the beauty of the maiden. She attempts suicide by asphyxiation, but the young man, overcome with remorse, follows her and is able to intercede in time to save her life. He leaves some coin with the mother and departs. The sincere repentence of the man wins the respect of the maid, and in the conclusion we see all the principals of the story united in a happy home."

And that, oh so gentle readers, is what your mothers and fathers loved. They wept over just such a film plot—pitied the poor girl, hissed the villain who, in this case, suddenly turned hero. But the point is that it was because your mothers and fathers did weep over these early films that the films you see today became possible.

Supposedly shrewd business men called movies "flickering atrocities." They dubbed them "novelties" that could last but a short time. They refused to lend money to promote them. But the public saw and was conquered. The public demanded films, flocked to see them, and that is why I say that the movies belong to you. In later chapters of this story you will see that when the public voiced its disapproval of certain entertainment, the producers jumped through hoops to give the public what it wanted.

Thus were pictures born. Next month I am going to tell you stories of the first stars of the movies—those hard-working, underpaid stars who paved the way for the sleek, glamorous, wealthy men and women you worship today.

How To Become an Orchid

(Continued from page 40)

I have changed, matured. I am sincerely glad to hear you say that. When you met me, seven years ago, I was commencing work in 'The Wedding March.' It was my first interview. I was a different girl. I was so shy that I went through agonies during our conversation.

WHEN you left, you turned to another writer and said, 'She is good copy.' I have remembered that all these years. I didn't know whether you were complimenting me or poking fun at me. After I reached home, I thought to myself, 'What can she mean, "good copy"?'

"You can imagine the naiveté of a girl so inexperienced that she doesn't even know the catch phrases of her profession. You can imagine the long way she has come to have you tell her that she has poise and that you notice a marked change in her.

"You are not the only one who has noticed a change in me. Electricians, cameramen, wardrobe women, studio workers, who knew me when I was making Westerns for Universal, tell me the same thing now, when I meet them on various sets. Just the other day, Ernest Bachrach, the photographer, stopped me and said, 'Fay what a change! When you were at Paramount you walked with your nose in the air, speaking to no one. I knew that it wasn't because you were high-hat, but because you were shy. I used to want to figure out some way to tell you to be less

Joe E. Brown in "6 Day Bike Rider."

Screen stars in funny poses.

Intimate glimpses of Hollywood life.

A bookful of side-splitting humor.

Completely out of control, rounding the curves on three wheels, Joe is out in front and having a grand time. Before starting this, the greatest and latest laugh-ride of his career, he went in training with a fresh copy of Film Fun and thereby added two more inches to his smile. Normally Joe's mouth is just like anybody else's, but due to constant reading of this hilarious magazine he now has a monopoly on the biggest smile in history. We dare you to keep a straight upper lip after seeing the

DECEMBER ISSUE NOW ON SALE AT ALL NEWSSTANDS

FILM FUN

THE WORLD'S FUNNIEST SCREEN MAGAZINE

THANKS TO THIS TIME-PROVEN PRODUCT

Feminine Hygiene becomes

✓ SIMPLE ✓ CONVENIENT ✓ RELIABLE

FOR as long as forty years, Boro-Pheno-Form has liberated married women from the old fashioned ordeal of feminine hygiene. Today, through counsel of physicians and personal recommendation, Boro-Pheno-Form has widely replaced undependable, often dangerous, chemicals.

With Boro-Pheno-Form no water, no mixing, no awkward accessories are needed. A dainty suppository serves as a dependable protectant. Its action is positive . . . effective for hours. Soothing, noncaustic and odorless. The simple way for safeguarding health and preserving mental comfort. Boro-Pheno-Form is obtainable at your druggist. Send Coupon today for generous trial and enlightening booklet —"The Answer."

Proven reliable for more than forty years

Dr. Pierre's
BORO-PHENO-FORM

Dr. Pierre Chemical Co., Dept. N-16
162 N. Franklin St., Chicago, Ill.

Please send me generous trial of Boro-Pheno-Form and Booklet — "The Answer." I enclose 10c (coin or stamps) to help cover costs.

Name .....

Address .....

City ..... State .....

formidable, more friendly. Now you have just that quality.'"

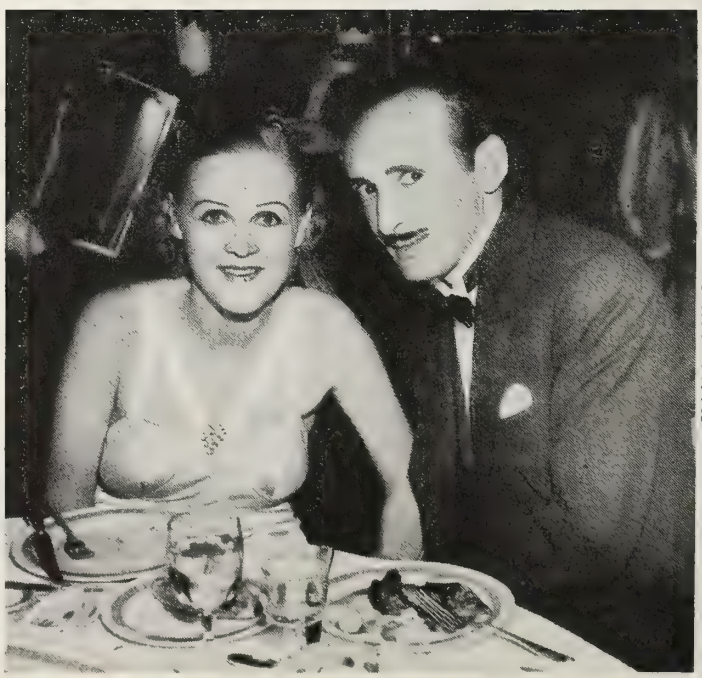
Actually, the story of Fay's transition from a modest violet to a high-powered orchid, mistress of one of Hollywood's most beautiful homes, hostess and conversationalist, should be entitled "life begins at marriage." It was Fay's marriage, after a hasty, impetuous romance, in the manner approved by fiction writers, to John Monk Saunders at Easton, Maryland, in June, 1928, that brought about the evolution of Fay from maid to matron, from violet to orchid.

Saunders, Minnesota-born, is a Rhodes scholar, and that speaks for itself. As an honor student from a university in the state of Washington, the high grade of his credits won him the privilege of attending England's time-honored Oxford University, all expenses paid by the Rhodes scholarship.

Beyond his very good looks, young Saunders' writing talent has brought him considerable attention. He has written, among other noteworthies, "Wings," "Dawn Patrol," "The Last Flight" and "The Legion of the Condemned." It was in this last picture that Fay met him (she was doing the feminine lead opposite Gary Cooper), and their romance flourished, culminating in marriage.

CONSCIOUSLY and unconsciously, in the first and only love of her young life, Fay admired the mental agility of the man she had married. She admired his vast resources of intellect, his proficiency in languages, his ready estimate of good and bad in current fiction. Consciously, too, she realized her own limitations. She knew that she could not compete with his beautifully finished education.

"The result is," said Fay, "that I read the best of the current fiction before John has an opportunity to read his copies of the books and then I am prepared to discuss plot, motivation and characterization, when he happens to make some mention of the newest best-seller. Of course, I don't rush around and let him know that I'm reading it for that purpose. I let my comments come forth spontaneously.



"A woman's development comes from evolution, from the things with which she surrounds herself. I have always liked the better things, not always the expensive things. Naturally, I gravitated towards them. Marriage seems to have cemented them more permanently in my life. John likes the better things, of course. John has an amazing flair for appreciating what is smart, and what is becoming to a woman, in feminine clothes. Some husbands, I am sure, have a 'dead spot' as far as women's clothes are concerned.

I CAN always be sure that if a dress is particularly attractive, John will comment on it. Being, probably, an adoring wife, I remember the type of gown he prefers and plan my wardrobe accordingly. Simple lines are good for me, I think. I know the days when I wore plaid taffetas and tight velvet bodices and black-and-white checked silk dresses with bright red hats. Today I buy many of my clothes from Irene Jones, who now designs for a local shop. Irene was, at various times, a studio designer, and owner of her own salon. She knows what looks well on me; plain, simple things, frequently of solid color—black, white, blue. But in back of this clothes thing is the unerring clothes sense that John has and which I follow."

John Monk Saunders seems to be the motivating spirit to which we always return in placing the responsibility for the evolution of Fay Wray. Lacking a John Monk Saunders, however, there is still considerable assistance, in Fay's words, for the culture and poise seeker. The better things of life are available to all. The public libraries are crowded with the classics, popular biographies, and late fiction.

Even though we do not live in the eucalyptus-flanked English house with its broad, green lawn, its tennis courts, its patio for tea-serving, its shiny ping-pong room overlooking the gardens, its long, home-like living room with a rough brick fireplace at one end, its mullioned windows, its grand piano and chaise longues and silver-brocaded curtains, the music that pours in through Fay and John Monk Saunders' mammoth radio is the same music that pours in through smaller and less pretentious radios throughout the land. It depends, merely, on whether you tune in to the syncopating strains of a jazz orchestra or the fine phrases of a symphony.

Rules for a happy marriage, Fay refuses to give out. Not usually superstitious, she simply refuses to tempt the fates. For six years their married life has flowed smoothly, quietly, serenely, unmarked by whirlpools. It has been aided and abetted, she thinks, by her utter silence about her marriage, and an almost complete silence about her husband. She has talked more, she said, about John Saunders in our present conversation, than she has ever talked before.

Gloria Stuart had a nice role in Reinhardt's production of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" and husband Arthur Sheekman is right proud of Gloria.

Many persons have asked her what makes her marriage successful. She refuses to discuss the question. When they press her further for a statement, she says, quietly, serenely, "I am married to John Monk Saunders." It works like an amulet against evil. Then and there the conversation on marriage and Fay languishes and dies. This day it was different. At every mention of a mental or spiritual development in Fay, the answer always was John. The only growth in which he had not aided was an added inch to her height since our last professional meeting seven years ago. Fay's development into the charming, poised woman she is today, is the natural evolution of a soul, surrounded by love, contentment and happiness.

THE keynote of Fay's personality is quietness and serenity, and yet, conversely, these are the very things that Fay seeks to discard along with her old "Wedding March" personality.

Although Fay's outward development may come from inner growth, she is always on the alert for outward blemishes. In the last year she has managed to erase one that caused her considerable chagrin when she discovered she was guilty of it. This happened to be the habit of moistening her lips with her tongue—often before speaking—frequently on the screen.

Fay cured herself in a week by constant vigilance. And it was worth it. Some years ago she set about curing herself of the habit that made her Mitzi of "The Wedding March" a memorable characterization. Director-Actor Eric von Stroheim noticed she had a shy, timid way of catching her lower lip partly under her teeth. "Do that every time you meet me in the picture," he advised. "It will do more to characterize Mitzi than anything else." So successfully did it record in the film that Fay found herself using it on other occasions. It was one of the first mannerisms that she did away with when she began to take stock of herself.

Her two desires are to go abroad with John and to be a truly great actress. The latter she has cherished since she was a little girl with two sisters and three brothers in mountainous Alberta, Canada. Then she dreamed of Broadway. Fame, and even that elusive quality called happiness, discovered her in Hollywood.

Today one of Hollywood's busiest actresses, with "commitments" (her word for contracts) to Columbia Pictures and United Artists, plus a handful of free-lance engagements to other studios, finds her receiving letters from young twelve-year-olds complimenting her for her "helpless but brave" attitude all through the cinema thriller "King Kong." Adults are beginning to write flattering letters about her Dulcie-like rôle in "The Affairs of Cellini," a United Artists' super-special. Her most recent effort is in "The Richest Girl in the World" for RKO.

Quiet, serene—these words fit into a description of the person that is Fay Wray. But I like to think of her as being a beautifully poised young woman who has cured herself of shyness and timidity, by the very simple expedient of following the dictates of her heart and surrounding herself with the things she loves best—books, music and intelligent people. She could so easily have fallen into the bright, hard, familiar pattern of Hollywood successes.

SKINNY?

NEW DISCOVERY ADDS POUNDS —double quick!

5 to 15 lbs. gained in a few weeks with new double tonic. Richest imported ale yeast concentrated 7 times, iron added

NO NEED to be "skinny" when this new easy treatment is giving thousands solid flesh and attractive curves—in just a few weeks!

Everybody knows that doctors for years have prescribed yeast to build up health. But now with this new discovery you can get far greater tonic results than with ordinary yeast—regain health, and also put on pounds of firm, good-looking flesh—and in a far shorter time!

Not only are thousands quickly gaining beauty-bringing pounds, but also clear, radiant skin, freedom from indigestion and constipation, new pep.

Concentrated 7 times

This amazing new product, Ironized Yeast, is made from specially cultured brewers' ale yeast, imported from Europe—the richest yeast known—which by a new process is concentrated 7 times—made 7 times more powerful.

But that is not all! This marvelous, health-building yeast is then ironized with 3 kinds of strengthening iron.

Day after day, as you take Ironized Yeast, watch ugly, gawky angles fill out, flat chest develop and skinny limbs round out attractively. And with this will come a radiantly clear skin, new health—you're an entirely new person.

Results guaranteed

No matter how skinny and weak you may be, this marvelous new Ironized Yeast should build you up in a few short weeks as it has thousands. If you are not delighted with the results of the very first package, your money instantly refunded.

Only be sure you get genuine Ironized Yeast, not some imitation that cannot give the same results. Insist on the genuine with "IY" stamped on each tablet.

Special FREE offer!

To start you building up your health right away, we make this absolutely FREE offer. Purchase a package of Ironized Yeast at once, cut out the seal on the box and mail it to us with a clipping of this paragraph. We will send you a fascinating new book on health, "New Facts About Your Body", by a well-known authority. Remember, results are guaranteed with the very first package—or money refunded. All druggists. Ironized Yeast Co., Inc., Dept. 312, Atlanta, Ga.

CHANGE "Closet Frocks" TO PARTY FROCKS IN THE NEWEST SHADES WITH RIT

Take that "old" dress, give it a smart new color with Rit . . . and have a "new" frock that costs almost nothing—looks "like a million"! Rit is easy, quick, sure.

IT'S fun to dress better and SAVE MONEY with Rit Tints and Dyes—bring your wardrobe up-to-date each season with the new colors that everyone admires! • Rit contains one patented ingredient that makes the color soak in deeper—last longer. • 33 Sparkling Rit Colors. 15c at all drug stores and notion counters.

RIT

. . . in the convenient scored wafer: easier to measure; won't sift out of the package.

The Report Card

(Continued from page 10)

LADIES SHOULD LISTEN (Paramount).
Very amusing. Cary Grant, Frances Drake and Edward Everett Horton.

THE LAST GENTLEMAN (20th Century).
George Arliss, Edna May Oliver, Janet Beecher and Ralph Morgan.

LET'S TALK IT OVER (Universal).
A comedy with Chester Morris and Mae Clarke.

MANHATTAN LOVE SONG (Monogram).
Dixie Lee.

MANHATTAN MELODRAMA (M-G-M).
Full of action and suspense is this Gable-Loy-Powell film.

THE MAN WITH TWO FACES (Warners).
Edward G. Robinson, Mary Astor and Ricardo Cortez in a mystery you'll enjoy.

MANY HAPPY RETURNS (Paramount).
A Burns and Allen starring vehicle.

MELODY IN SPRING (Paramount).
Some nice music here. Lanny Ross, Mary Boland and Ann Sothern.

MEN IN WHITE (M-G-M).
You won't forget Clark Gable and Elizabeth Allan in this thrilling hospital story.

THE MERRY FRINKS (Warners).
The funniest picture in months. Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee and Allen Jenkins.

MIDNIGHT ALIBI (Warners).
Richard Barthelmess in a gangster role. Ann Dvorak and Helen Chandler.

MILLION DOLLAR RANSOM (Universal).
Plenty of action in this tale about a fellow who wants to say goodbye to his prison days and go straight. Edward Arnold, Phillips Holmes, Mary Carlisle and Andy Devine.

THE MOONSTONE (Monogram).
David Manners and Gustav von Seyffertitz in a better-than-average mystery.

MRS. WIGGS OF THE CABBAGE PATCH (Paramount).
Pauline Lord, as Mrs. Wiggs, Donald Meek, as Mr. Wiggs, and ZaSu Pitts, as Miss Hazy, are all worthy of much praise.

MURDER IN THE PRIVATE CAR (M-G-M).
Charlie Ruggles, Mary Carlisle and Una Merkel will keep you amused.

MURDER ON THE BLACKBOARD (RKO).
A murder-mystery with those two funsters, Edna May Oliver and Jimmy Gleason.

THE NOTORIOUS SOPHIE LANG (Paramount).
Paul Cavanagh and Gertrude Michael as a couple of jewel thieves. With Alison Skipworth.

NOW AND FOREVER (Paramount).
Gary Cooper, Carole Lombard and Shirley Temple.

NOW I'LL TELL, BY MRS. ARNOLD ROTHSTEIN (Fox).
Spencer Tracy in a gambler role.

THE OLD-FASHIONED WAY (Paramount).
W. C. Fields being as funny as ever.

ORDERS IS ORDERS (Gaumont-British).
Burlesquing Hollywood. James Gleason and Charlotte Greenwood.

OUR DAILY BREAD (Viking-United Artists).
Tom Keene and Karen Morley.

PECK'S BAD BOY (Sol Lesser-Fox).
Jackie Cooper in the title role and Thomas Meighan as "Mr. Peck." A picture that the whole family will enjoy.

THE PERSONALITY KID (Warners).
About a prizefighter. Pat O'Brien and Glenda Farrell.

PRIVATE SCANDAL (Paramount).
Mystery-comedy with Mary Brian, Phillips Holmes and ZaSu Pitts.

THE RICHEST GIRL IN THE WORLD (RKO-Radio).
Perfectly elegant entertainment. The cast could not have been better: Miriam Hopkins, Joel McCrea, Henry Stephenson, Fay Wray and Reginald Denny.

SERVANTS' ENTRANCE (Fox).
A Gaynor picture that should please the fans. Lew Ayres does nicely, too.

SHE HAD TO CHOOSE (Majestic).
Not much plot here, but Regis Toomey, Isabel Jewell, Sally Blane and Larry Crabbe are fine.

SHE LEARNED ABOUT SAILORS (Fox).
Alice Faye and Lew Ayres.

SHOOT THE WORKS (Paramount).
Jack Oakie and Ben Bernie in a musical.

SIDE STREETS (Warners).
Aline MacMahon and Paul Kelly.

SISTERS UNDER THE SKIN (Columbia).
Elissa Landi, Frank Morgan and Joseph Schildkraut are splendid.

SMARTY (Warners).
Joan Blondell, Warren William and Edward Everett Horton in a real laugh-getter.

SORRELL AND SON (United Artists).
H. B. Warner and Hugh Williams.

SPITFIRE (RKO).
Katharine Hepburn.

STAMBOUL QUEST (M-G-M).
Wow spy tale. With Myrna Loy, George Brent, Lionel Atwill.

STUDENT TOUR (M-G-M).
Durante and Butterworth provide lots of laughs. Maxine Doyle and Phil Regan make a nice romantic team and sing some swell songs, too.

SUCH WOMEN ARE DANGEROUS (Fox).
Young poetess, Rochelle Hudson, falls in love with famous novelist, Warner Baxter. Good entertainment.

THIS MAN IS MINE (RKO).
Very enjoyable. Irene Dunne, Ralph Bellamy, Constance Cummings and Kay Johnson.

WE LIVE AGAIN (Sam Goldwyn).
Based on "Resurrection," with Anna Sten and Fredric March.

WE'RE NOT DRESSING (Paramount).
A musical you'll like. Bing Crosby, Carole Lombard and Burns-Allen.

WE'RE RICH AGAIN (RKO).
In which Marian Nixon proves that little girls from the country aren't so dumb. Edna May Oliver, Billie Burke, Joan Marsh, Reginald Denny and Grant Mitchell make it very lively.

WHERE SINNERS MEET (RKO).
A story that's different and some grand acting by Diana Wynyard, Billie Burke, Reginald Owen and Alan Mowbray.

WHIRLPOOL (Columbia).
Jack Holt and Jean Arthur.

WILD CARGO (RKO).
A Frank Buck animal picture.

THE WITCHING HOUR (Paramount).
About hypnotism. John Halliday, Tom Brown and Sir Guy Standing are exceptionally good.

WOMAN'S MAN (Monogram).
Marguerite de la Motte, John Halliday and Wallace Ford in an authentic Hollywood tale.

THE WORLD MOVES ON (Fox).
A beautiful story. Madeleine Carroll, Franchot Tone and Raul Roulien.

WHOM THE GODS DESTROY (Columbia).
Walter Connolly turns in his usual good performance.

YOU BELONG TO ME (Paramount).
A poor story handicaps Lee Tracy and Helen Mack. But the six-year-old David Holt is a sensation.

THESE PICTURES GET "C"

ADVENTURE GIRL (Van Beuren-RKO).
Joan Lowell is the girl.

ALL MEN ARE ENEMIES (Fox).
Helen Twelvetrees and Hugh Williams do their best.

THE BLACK CAT (Universal).
Karloff and Lugosi in one picture!

BRITISH AGENT (Warners).
Another best-seller that didn't go over in the movies. Leslie Howard and Kay Francis save it.

CHARLIE CHAN'S COURAGE (Fox).
Warner Oland, Drue Leyton and Donald Woods in another of the "Chan" series.

CITY PARK (Chesterfield).
Sally Blane, H. B. Walthall and Hale Hamilton.

CRIME WITHOUT PASSION (Paramount).
Claude Rains.

CRIMSON ROMANCE (Mascot).
Ben Lyon, Sari Maritza, Erich Von Stroheim in a war picture.

DEATH ON THE DIAMOND (M-G-M).
Baseball fans will like it. With Robert Young, Madge Evans, Nat Pendleton, Paul Kelly and Ted Healy.

THE DRAGON MURDER CASE (Warners).
Very dull mystery. Warren William and Lyle Talbot.

THE DUDE RANGER (Fox).
A Western that's just average. George O'Brien and Irene Hervey.

ELMER AND ELSIE (Paramount).
Much ado about who is the head of the family, the wife or the husband. With George Bancroft and Frances Fuller.

FINISHING SCHOOL (RKO).
Frances Dee, Ginger Rogers and Billie Burke do some good acting.

THE FOUNTAIN (RKO).
Rather heavy. But the performances of Ann Harding, Jean Hersholt and Paul Lukas make the film worth while.

FRIENDS OF MR. SWEENEY (Warners).
Some amusing situations here. Charlie Ruggles, Eugene Pallette, Ann Dvorak, and Robert Barrat do nice work.

GAMBLING LADY (Warners).
Barbara Stanwyck.

GIFT OF GAB (Universal).
A huge cast—Edmund Lowe, Gloria Stuart, Ruth Etting, Phil Baker, Ethel Waters, The Downey Sisters, Paul Lukas, Alice White, Graham McNamee, Karloff, Chester Morris, Roger Pryor.

GRAND CANARY (Fox).
Not so good. Warner Baxter and Madge Evans.

HAROLD TEEN (Warners).
Hal LeRoy and Rochelle Hudson as Harold and Lillums.

HELL BENT FOR LOVE (Columbia).
Tim McCoy and Lillian Bond.

HE WAS HER MAN (Warners).
Not up to the usual Cagney standard.

HIS GREATEST GAMBLE (RKO).
Very slow. Richard Dix and Dorothy Wilson head the cast.

HOUSEWIFE (Warners).
Weak story. George Brent, Bette Davis and Ann Dvorak.

I HATE WOMEN (Monogram).
Wallace Ford as a newspaperman.

JOURNAL OF A CRIME (Warners).
Ruth Chatterton's latest film. With Adolphe Menjou.

KANSAS CITY PRINCESS (Warners).
Pretty poor yarn. With Joan Blondell and Glenda Farrell.

LAUGHING BOY (M-G-M).
Ramon Novarro and Lupe Velez.

THE LEMON DROP KID (Paramount).
Lee Tracy disappoints us again. Helen Mack, Baby LeRoy, William Frawley, Minna Gombell and Kitty Kelly here, too.

LOVE TIME (Fox).
Nils Asther in the Franz Schubert role. With Pat Paterson

MERRY WIVES OF RENO (Warners).
There are a couple of laughs here but not sufficient to pull it out of the dull class. With Glenda Farrell, Guy Kibbee, Margaret Lindsay and Donald Woods.

A MODERN HERO (Warners).
Dick Barthelmess and Jean Muir. About circus life.

MURDER IN TRINIDAD (Fox).
A dull mystery with Heather Angel and Nigel Bruce.

ONE IS GUILTY (Columbia).
Shirley Grey and Ralph Bellamy.

OUTCAST LADY (formerly called "Iris March") (M-G-M).
Suffers from censorship trouble. Constance Bennett, Herbert Marshall, Elizabeth Allan and Ralph Forbes do their best.

THE PARTY'S OVER (Columbia).
Very slow. With Stu Erwin, Ann Sothern and Arline Judge.

RETURN OF THE TERROR (Warners).
Lyle Talbot and Mary Astor.

THE SCARLET EMPRESS (Paramount).
Marlene Dietrich's latest.

SCHOOL FOR GIRLS (Liberty).
About a reform school. Sidney Fox, Lucille La Verne, Lois Wilson, Paul Kelly and Toby Wing are in the cast.

SHE WAS A LADY (Fox).
Just too, too slow and heavy. Helen Twelvetrees, Ralph Morgan and Doris Lloyd.

STINGAREE (RKO).
Richard Dix and Irene Dunne do their best with a weak yarn.

STRAIGHT IS THE WAY (M-G-M).
Franchot Tone, Karen Morley and Jack LaRue can't do much with this.

STRICTLY DYNAMITE (RKO).
Jimmy Durante and Lupe Velez.

THEIR BIG MOMENT (RKO).
ZaSu Pitts and Slim Summerville. You'll be disappointed in them this time.

THE TRUMPET BLOWS (Paramount).
George Raft and Frances Drake.

WAGON WHEELS (Paramount).
Randolph Scott, Gail Patrick, Raymond Hatton and Monte Blue are the principals in this Western.

WAKE UP AND DREAM (Universal).
A musical. With Russ Columbo, June Knight, Roger Pryor and Henry Armetta.

WEDNESDAY'S CHILD (RKO).
Edward Arnold, Frankie Thomas and Karen Morley in a tale about divorce and its effect on children.

YOU CAN'T BUY EVERYTHING (M-G-M).
Excellent performances by Lewis Stone, Jean Parker and May Robson save it.

YOUNG AND BEAUTIFUL (Mascot).
William Haines is back again, with Judith Allen, Vince Barnett, John Miljan, Ted Fiorito and the Wampas Baby Stars.

THESE PICTURES GET "D"

BEGGARS HOLIDAY (Tower).
Hardie Albright, Sally O'Neill and Barbara Barondess.

BLACK MOON (Columbia).
The story is very poor. Jack Holt and Fay Wray are wasted.

DOWN TO THEIR LAST YACHT (RKO-Radio).
Unsuccessful musical. A large cast gone to waste: Sidney Fox, Mary Boland, Sidney Blackmer, Polly Moran, Sterling Holloway and Ned Sparks.

A GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST (Monogram).
Very slow. Marian Marsh, Ralph Morgan, Louise Dresser and H. B. Walthall.

I GIVE MY LOVE (Universal).
Paul Lukas, Wynne Gibson and Eric Linden fail to make this interesting.

THE LADY IS WILLING (Columbia).
Leslie Howard, Binnie Barnes and Nigel Bruce in a slow-moving tale.

LET'S BE RITZY (Universal).
Lew Ayres and Patricia Ellis.

MANDALAY (First National).
Kay Francis and Lyle Talbot. Not worth your time.

THE MOST PRECIOUS THING IN LIFE (Columbia).
This doesn't jell despite the presence of Jean Arthur, Richard Cromwell, Anita Louise and Donald Cook.

NO RANSOM (Liberty).
Leila Hyams, Phillips Holmes and Jack LaRue in an impossible story.

PARIS INTERLUDE (M-G-M).
Based on the play "All Good Americans." With Madge Evans, Robert Young, Una Merkel and Otto Kruger. Dull.

SECRET OF THE CHATEAU (Universal).
Inexcusably poor. Claire Dodd, Jack LaRue, Alice White, George E. Stone and Ferdinand Gottschalk are wasted.

STOLEN SWEETS (Chesterfield).
Charles Starrett and Sally Blane in a dull yarn.

UNCERTAIN LADY (Universal).
Edward Everett Horton and Genevieve Tobin.

WILD GOLD (Fox).
John Boles and Claire Trevor. Not worth while.

Did Eva Beryl Tree choose wifehood or a career? Read the final, thrilling chapter of

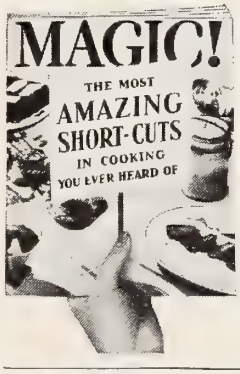
"ONE GIRL'S TRUE HOLLYWOOD EXPERIENCES"

in the January issue of MODERN SCREEN

Perfect Penuchi! Perfect Fudge!

Eagle Brand

MARVEL PENUCHI



2 cups brown sugar
½ cup water
½ cup Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk
½ cup chopped nut meats

Mix brown sugar and water in a large saucepan and bring to a boil. Add Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk and boil over low flame until mixture will form firm ball when tested in cold water (230°F.—235°F.) Stir mixture constantly to prevent burning. Remove from fire. Add chopped nut meats. Beat until thick and creamy. Pour into buttered pan. When cool, cut in squares.

● You'll get marvelous, creamy-smooth penuchi with this recipe. And as for fudge—Eagle Brand makes the best you ever ate! (Fudge recipes in FREE booklet offered below.)

● But remember—Evaporated Milk won't—can't—succeed in this recipe. You must use Sweetened Condensed Milk. Just remember the name Eagle Brand.

NRA

Free! World's most amazing Cook Book!

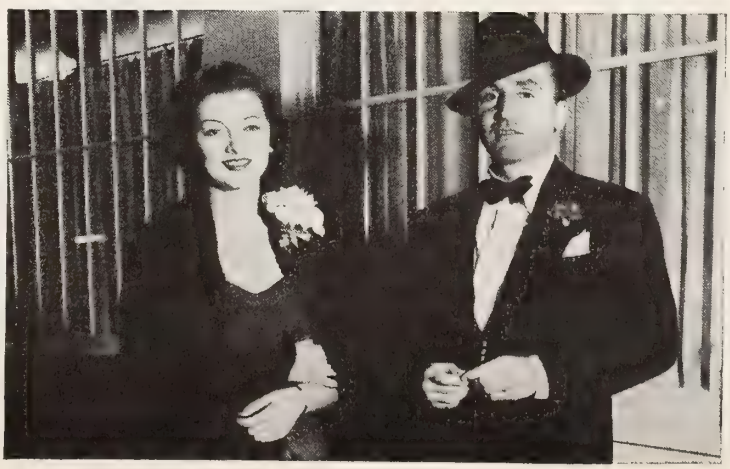
Rotogravure picture-book (60 photographs) showing astonishing new short-cuts. 130 recipes, including: Delicious Candies! Foolproof 5-minute Chocolate Frosting! Caramel Pudding that makes itself! 2-ingredient Macaroons! Shake-up Mayonnaise! Ice Creams (freezer and automatic)! Refrigerator Cakes! Sauces! Custards! Cookies! Address: The Borden Company, Dept. MM124.350 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.



*Name*_____

*Street*_____

*City*_____ *State*_____

(Print name and address plainly)

Borden Quality

Everybody who is anybody turned out for the opening of the Trocadero, Hollywood's newest dine-and-dance spot. Myrna Loy, looking particularly lovely, was there with Arthur Hornblow, Jr.

Scott Photo

This face powder will flatter you

SOME women are "finished" at sixty. Some girls are "finished" at thirty. Then there's the type who never suffers defeat. At any age she's able to attract and hold men. Is it because she's so beautiful? Not always. At least half of these women are not beautiful. But they do breathe romance. They're glamorous. They know the art of being a woman . . . of flattering themselves.

To such a woman face powder is very, very important. The chances are her skin is imperfect. So she avoids all the heavy powders. She must have one of fairy-like fineness that spreads smoothly and makes imperfections invisible. No ordinary powder does this. It must be MELLO-GLO. This is why:

First: MELLO-GLO, the new soft-tone face powder, is made by a new method. It's so fine in texture that it spreads with unbelievable smoothness. It covers enlarged pores. It minimizes blemishes.

Second: MELLO-GLO preserves a lovely, natural, dull smoothness through hours of play or work. Being so light it does not draw out oil and perspiration from the pores to soak and spoil itself. So MELLO-GLO stays on longer and allows you to keep lovely. A coarser powder would soon be ruined and shiny by oil and perspiration. When you use MELLO-GLO you look exquisite. You are the type that never suffers defeat.

A brand new creation in face powders. Look for the blue-and-gold box to avoid a mistake when buying MELLO-GLO Soft-tone face powder. One of the largest selling $1.00 face powders in America. Special purse size 10¢ —now on sale at your favorite 5 and 10¢ store. Get a box today!

On Trial

(Continued from page 35)

American picture.

The Hollywood press was curious, of course. Expecting something in the nature of a cross between the Sphinx-y Garbo, or the pampered Dietrich, they found, instead (to quote one writer), "A patient soul, who sits in the outer offices of the studio waiting for her daily instructions, when she is not sitting quietly at home accepting the advice of her husband, Dr. Frenke."

Hollywood, long accustomed to the artificiality of its own glamorous women, looked on the strong modeled face of Anna Sten and labeled it "plain." Her careless wardrobe was nothing short of a scandal to the fashion editors, just as the simplicity of her private life was a blow to the gossip columnists. By the time "Nana" was ready for production, Hollywood was in a definitely "show me" frame of mind about Goldwyn's protégée.

Even more serious were the story and directorial difficulties that developed as "Nana" went along in production. The picture was half completed with George Fitzmaurice at the helm, when Goldwyn suddenly scrapped it, called in director Dorothy Arzner, and a new cast headed by Phillips Holmes. It was a discouraging and nerve-racking start for the new star, especially as she did not work well with several members of the new cast.

IN view of all this, it was only fair that judgment of Sten on the strength of "Nana" should have been withheld. Her second film, not the first, is to prove her real test as an outstanding screen star—or a flash in the pan. The answer will be found at the box office about six months after the release of "We Live Again."

But if, in the meantime, Hollywood is in a problematical frame of mind about Anna's future, I've reached the conclusion after a two-hour talk with her, that Anna, herself, is managing to remain surprisingly collected about the whole thing.

When I skirted the subject, asking if she would be terribly disappointed if anything happened to retard her Hollywood career, she turned her unusual eyes upon me, and said with a slight shrug:

"Why? I am happy where my work is. If I did not work in Hollywood, I would work in Berlin, or Hong Kong, or at the end of the earth, it does not matter. Places mean nothing to me. Only my work is important!"

"But you have built your home here!"

She said: "Oh, but that does not mean so much. We have built homes many places. We have one in Berlin, and one in Russia. We do not like to rent. We like to live in our own places, fixed just the way we like. We want lots of sunshine, and windows and plenty of room." Then, too, there is Anna's little ten-year-old step-daughter to be considered, Dr. Frenke's child by a former marriage. Not to forget nine dogs of various breeds that are part of the Sten-Frenke ménage.

Was this artistic nonchalance an "act?" In Dietrich it would be. I think it would be even in Garbo. But if Anna Sten really cares two snaps of her fingers about the pomp and glitter of off-screen Hollywood, then she has staged the most successful and realistic act of the entire school of "I don't care" stars, including Katharine Hepburn and Margaret Sullavan.

For instance; for the occasion of this interview in her dressing-room on the United Artists lot, she was wearing what is humorously referred to by the Hollywood press as her "uniform." With the exception of her screen costumes, she is seldom seen in anything else. The uniform consists of a pair of slightly faded gray-blue slacks, an inexpensive short sleeved-white sweater and a blue scarf tied indifferently about her neck. No beauty parlor expert was responsible for the unruly effect of the hair that fell carelessly about her face. And make no mistake about it, no matter what you hear, or read, of Anna's off-screen "plainness," hers is a beautiful face—strong in contour and as freshly scrubbed as a child's.

WHEN reporters come to talk to me they ask what I do with my spare time, and why it is I do not like Hollywood parties. They want to know why I do not go to the premières and ride around in a big car with a chauffeur. They ask if I am putting on an act because I live so quietly and drive my own Ford coupé to the studio. When I explain to them that I have never lived any other way than I do here, that even in Europe I was a prosaic, uninteresting person, I suppose they do not believe it.

"If my private life were interesting, I should be glad to talk of it. But what is there to say? I eat. I have a very good appetite and I like American dishes; I sleep; I play with my dogs; I have my husband and my young step-daughter for companions. Now and then I go on a little vacation, somewhere where we can stay out doors all day. And at night I read. Yet I hesitate to tell this, because these things are very funny in Hollywood. They make jokes about movie stars and their books, do they not?"

How much a part of this "retreat routine" can be layed to Anna, and how much to her philosophic husband, Dr. Frenke, is a moot question in Hollywood. Not since John McCormick was such a dominant force in control of Colleen Moore, has the husbandly influence been more prominent in a star's career than Dr. Frenke's over Sten's. It was he who said of Anna: "It does not much matter what she plays on the screen, so long as she is in the mud!" He meant, as long as the characters she portrayed were of the earthy, peasant type. And there is little doubt but that Anna listens and heeds his words of wisdom in regard to her career, as well as in her private life. It is no particular secret in Hollywood, that away from the studio, Dr. Frenke is decidedly boss in his family group.

"Perhaps it is too bad," she continued, snuffing out a cigarette, "that I am not a glamorous person with great jewels and beautiful gowns and many love stories to write up in the newspapers. But I am not. And that is why I say this part of Hollywood could never mean anything to me."

She was standing now looking out over the bustle of the busy lot as workmen wended their way to the various stages.

We will soon know whether or not she was looking out over the scene of her great American triumph, hailed as a real queen of the movie world; or whether Anna Sten will eventually build her next home in "Hong Kong or the end of the world. It does not matter as long as my work is there!"

Cantor's Recipe for Happiness

(Continued from page 39)

young ladies on earth try to yell me down, I'll go on believing it. The clever woman who has what she wants, and wants to keep it, will go on letting her husband believe that he's smarter than she is.

"Domination of husband over wife? Wife submerging personality to superior husband?" I suggested.

"Put it in that way if you care to. But I'll say it my way!" Eddie was being forceful. And he can be.

"Take Ida, for instance. I've known her since I was thirteen years old. She was the first person in the world who made me feel important.

"I was a lonely little runt, brought up by an iron-willed grandmother on the East Side of New York. Both my parents died when I was two years old, and Grandma Esther so poor she didn't have time, at the end of a day's fighting the big, bad wolf, to waste in cuddling an unimportant shaver like me. Maybe she didn't think it was good for me. So about all I knew in those days were poverty, work, loneliness, and a big inferiority complex.

"Then, when I met Ida, and she started right out making me feel I was a great guy, something happened to me. I began to believe that maybe I could amount to something in this world, y'know.

"Maybe she was smart that way; smart enough to know she was appealing to my vanity. But that didn't make any difference. She never let me know that she knew. If more women in Hollywood used a little of those tactics on their husbands, the divorce lawyers would have to look for another happy hunting ground."

AS he spoke, I had a mental picture of a typical Cantor family dinner described to me by a good friend of that large and flourishing clan. A long table piled with good, home-cooked food. Eddie at the head, all bright and shiny, and contriving to look more like a college sophomore home for a vacation than the dignified man of family which he most certainly is. At the other end, Ida. Between them, about a dozen relatives from both sides of the family. And ranged like a regiment, proud Eddie's "five tests of true love" (that's what he calls the Cantor girls), Marjorie, Natalie, Edna, Marilyn, and Janet.

But after one moment in that group, no one could possibly doubt who was head man. It was that fellow at the head of the table with the snappy black eyes. Ida sees to that.

When Eddie starts to tell a story—and contrary to what one hears about comedians off duty, Eddie keeps his family amused with a great store of humor—there is hushed silence around the table. Ida sees to that. If any one is so indiscreet as to butt in, he is mercilessly rebuked by a stabbing glance from Ida.

What's more, Ida doesn't care a tinker's dam if, time after time, she is mistaken for Eddie's older sister. Placidly, she goes on knitting, while the other Hollywood non-professional wives spend endless hours with cosmeticians trying to be made as beautiful as the luscious "temptations" who surround their starring husbands in the studios.

Nor does she eat out her heart over real or imaginary infidelities. She doesn't have to.

Are You A COLDS-SUSCEPTIBLE?

Do You CATCH COLD Easily?

At the first sneeze, or nasal irritation, quick!...A few drops of Vicks Va-tro-nol. This unique aid in preventing colds is especially designed for nose and throat where most colds start. Its timely use helps to avoid many colds—and to throw off colds in their early stages.

Do Your Colds Hang On AND ON?

Don't take chances with half-way measures. Massage throat and chest with Vicks VapoRub—standby in 26 million homes for relieving colds. Two generations have learned to depend on its famous direct double action—by stimulation and inhalation—to end a cold sooner.

Follow Vicks Plan for Better Control of Colds

These twin aids to fewer and shorter colds give you the basic medication of Vicks Plan for Better Control of Colds. Full details of this clinically tested Plan are in each Vicks package.

HAVE SOME Collegiana!

HUMOR . . . FICTION . . .
College campus stories from REAL LIFE. CARTOONS and caricatures by the world's best.

If you have a nose for news, you can earn twenty-five dollars for every acceptable collegianecdote (real life story) you report. Get full details of this interesting opportunity in the December issue of the NEW

COLLEGE HUMOR

ON SALE NOVEMBER 10th AT ALL NEWSSTANDS

Hard to Believe
SUCH LOVELY WINDOW SHADES
At Only 15¢ EACH!

16 Beautiful Patterns to Choose from!

IF you think low cost in window shades can only be had by sacrificing quality and beauty—you don't know Clopays. Truly beautiful, either plain or in the new chintz patterns. Strong, too—will not fray, crack or pinhole. Besides, Clopay's *patented creped texture stands rougher usage and always hangs straight. Easily attached to rollers with *patented gummed strip—no tacks or tools. *Trim only one side for narrow windows. Send 3c stamp for color samples. At all 5 and 10c stores.

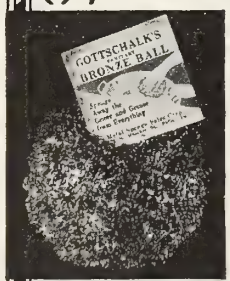
See This New FABRAY LOOKS...FEELS...WEARS LIKE OILCLOTH

Truly amazing—made on solid fibre instead of cheesecloth backing. Looks—feels and wears like oilcloth at a saving of ½ to ½! See it at your nearest 5 and 10c store, or send 25c for a table cover 39x46", bound edges. State color preference.

CLOPAY CORPORATION
1339 York Street Cincinnati, Ohio

Millions use "HUSH" Deodorants FOR BODY ODORS

fastidious women prefer HUSH to stay sweet. Effective-easy



3 Kinds - CREAM - LIQUID - STICK

Now available in 10c sizes everywhere or send 10c for each kind desired.

HUSH COMPANY
116 Market St.
PHILA., PA.

Gottschalk Announces

a NEW cleaning and scouring device
The BRONZE BALL

Specially designed for housewives who demand a larger cleaner. Made of same high-grade bronze alloy as the original, sanitary Metal Sponge, Hand-L-Mop and Kitchen Jewel. The Bronze Ball cleans and scours utensils quickly and easily without scratching. Cannot rust or corrode; is quickly cleansed with hot water.

On sale at five and ten cent stores, hardware and department stores; or direct for ten cents.

METAL SPONGE SALES CORPORATION
Lehigh Avenue and Mascher Street, Philadelphia

Made by the manufacturers of Gottschalk's
METAL SPONGE

"Why do they worry about such things?" she seems to be saying, as her ample motherly figure rocks back and forth, back and forth, to her knitting, in a kind of comforting lullaby rhythm.

PONDERING over this, I asked Ida's Eddie whether she was never upset by his lengthy absences. Whether she hadn't had a qualm or two about those beautiful Goldwyn girls who surround him in "Kid Millions," when they'd been separated for several months.

He gave me that look of chronic surprise from his beetle-black eyes. "She knows I'll come back," he said.

"But suppose you shouldn't some day? It's happened to the staidest married man."

"Have you ever been to the circus—when they shoot those guys out of cannons?" asked Eddie.

"Now, you know, they've been shot out of those cannons thousands of times before. So when you watch the performance, you expect to see them come out, don't you? Just before they pop out of the mouth of the cannon, though, the audience holds its breath. There's that one chance in a thousand that this time there'll be a hitch. But everybody knows that it's only one chance in a thousand.

"It's the same idea with a happy marriage. Ida takes that chance with me. Maybe I won't come back. But it's not a dangerous gamble for her. For she knows that when a man reaches a certain age, and has been going along a certain path contentedly and happily, it's dangerous to detour. Nature always takes care of that."

"But there are men who make that dangerous detour." I was egging him on. "What do you say about them?"

"I say they're nutty," answered Eddie. "That kind of thing is as much insanity as the brand which makes a man think he's Napoleon. The man who leaves a wife with whom he's been comfortable for so long—a wife who understands him and all his funny ways—the middle-aged man who leaves her for the uncertainty of life with a young girl who doesn't know the meaning of the words 'forbear' and 'sacrifice'—that man deserves what he gets. Take it from me, he usually gets it. Maybe it works out in some few cases, but those are freaks that defy the law of averages and the laws of nature."

When I suggested that the landslide of divorces in Hollywood might be used as circumstantial evidence against the case he was trying to prove, he just shook his head.

"Not at all," he replied. "Just look around at the successful actors who are still living with the same wife. Will Rogers, George Arliss, Warner Baxter, Joe E. Brown, Leslie Howard, Lionel Barrymore, the Morgan brothers, Jimmy Cagney, Warren William. Still faithful to the women who were faithful to them when they were poor, bewildered nobodys, miles removed from the main chance. Those guys long ago learned to appreciate the affection their wives gave them. And they've also learned to appreciate the value of stability.

"Neither their marriage nor their successes were over-night, flash-in-the-pan affairs. They didn't want any premature buildup of themselves as romantic heroes. Their success in both cases was the result of struggle and slow growth. They weren't tossed to the heights and then pushed over the cliff. What their wives gave them in thanks for their sincere effort to make a go of things is not brief, mad passion. It's solid, permanent affection—a steady, glowing warmth that will last to the final pay-off.

"Now figure out the bust-ups. Where do you find them? Among that group who made a success too quickly.

"They bring a fellow out from Kansas or Iowa, make him a star in ten days—and what usually happens? The too-sudden success goes to his head. Right away he buys a big, expensive automobile. He rents a stucco palace. Then he looks around for the girl.

"But, when he considers marriage, he reckons on the same principle as when he buys a new car. He can trade in his old car for a new model. And he decides he can trade in his wife in the same way, if he gets tired of her.

"People shouldn't expect that kind of marriage to turn out any different than it usually does. You can't take a baby out of the cradle and expect him to walk around the block, can you? Well, the same principle applies to getting married."

APROPOS of that, I remembered another story which seemed to help explain what—according to Hollywood standards—is an incongruously happy marriage. It was something Eddie himself had told me when I first met him some time ago.

"I've never refused Ida anything since we were married," he said. "I'm not trying to boast. She's never asked for anything I couldn't give her!

"I'll never forget how she took the stock market crash. When it was all over and I came up from under with an awful headache, I didn't own a red cent outright. And I owed the banks $225,000!

"What do you suppose she said? She just laughed and told me I was a fool to worry. 'You're still a funny man, aren't you, Eddie? Well, your funny business made plenty of money for us before the crash, and it's going to be the same again. I know you'll come back bigger than ever.'

"Here's another sample of what Ida's always doing. Some time ago, she had to go to the hospital for a very serious operation. I was away from her at the time. But she wouldn't let the girls write me anything about it until she'd come out of the ether.

"After they let me talk to her long distance, and I knew everything was all right, I wrote her a letter, inclosing a check for $500; and I told her to pin it on herself as a medal for being a brave soldier. She knew that was my way of saying: 'Buy some clothes for yourself.' But what did she do? Well, I subsequently received a letter from my oldest daughter describing the wonderful new clothes Ida had bought for all of them. Of course, with the money I wanted her to spend on herself. That's my Ida!"

I can't finish this story of an old-fashioned marriage without letting you in on a secret. That is, if you don't already know it.

In these hard-boiled '30's, when it's chic to hide your emotions, Eddie wears his on his sleeve. He's a terrible sentimentalist.

Do you recall the song-hit of his first broadcast a season ago? It was "Did You Ever See a Dream Walking? Well I Did."

Eddie sang that song very well. But when he came to the "I Did" part, it sounded like "Ida" instead. I didn't trust my ears, so insisted that two of my friends listen in to verify my suspicion. Eddie was fervently singing "Ida" instead of "I Did," as plainly as if he were calling her name!

Sort of a wonderful tribute from sort of a wonderful man, don't you think? I do. (Pronounced "Ida.") when the handsomest Hollywood males were tumbling over one another to date her. Francis Lucas is one hero who lived up to the dream.

Adding Common Sense to Glamor

(Continued from page 58)

I have a suspicion it was for him she planned her best-beloved frock, a chiffon with a quaint 1860 off-the-shoulder treatment and of the gentlest color imaginable, a delicate turquoise blue in one light and a green in another. But it's grown "tired" she says, what with double duty as a graduation frock and dance dress. She was looking for something that "carried out the same mood only in a different way."

We found it quite unexpectedly. And it "clicked" from the minute she spied it. A supper suit of black chiffon velvet with a waist of sea-green metal cloth shot through with silver. It was terribly 1935-ish, but it still managed to be disturbingly quaint. Jean never wears a straight primary color. You never see her in a determined blue or green or brown. Everything's in half or two-tones like this green and silver, for instance. You know why? It's her eyes, my dear. She asserts that if you want to dress with a flair, you have to play up to them.

For example, if your eyes are a warm brown you can wear "straight" shades, especially those that accent them like red and yellow and brown itself. Supposing you're blue-eyed. Then of course, if you want to do the dazzling, you wear an entire outfit of the blue nearest your eyes, or gold, or white. But if you have those mesmeric orbs like the petite Parker, your cue is to wear the in-between shades, too, like aquamarine and apricot and amber.

In the studio a "color test" is for the camera. In every day life, it's for charm.

BUT to return to the supper suit. It's a gem really. Because it starts out to be a regular slinky princess model and winds up with the most youthful neck possible—a square one. Moreover, it's square in back just as it is in front, which is something of a departure these days when everything is slit. And it has fetching black velvet bows to make it even more demure.

The hip-length jacket is long-sleeved and has a scarf neck. The hat Jean selected is one of those ridiculously adorable mushrooms of black velvet with a horsehair band.

"Hats are traitors to the face sometimes," she murmured, glancing at a tiny, thin-faced girl who was trying on broad-brimmed models. It was astounding how completely they wiped all expression from her face. But when she put on a cute Continental model—presto, another personality.

"I've always thought it was the tricorn hat that won the Revolutionary War," said Jean. "Anyway, they're my favorites." No wonder. When they made her look as sprightly as the dawning. She bought one to go with a suit that fairly speaks of football games and campus glory. It's a tweed in a dark, shadow-blue check against a light blue background. Yes, and it's flecked with red and there's a black stripe running through it. Sounds exciting, doesn't it? Well, it is. Particularly with that matching red velveteen blouse—velveteen, mind you. It's the latest, maddest craze in film fashions. Mary Pickford's wearing it in indelible blue, and Norma Shearer has it in pigeon gray. But it remained for young Jean to get it in a red version that looks as if it might belong to Peter Pan himself, considering that collar.

It's surprising how these chickie little creatures, who look like a man's day dream in floating tulle, manage to look so well. Jean dotes on 'em. If she isn't a wistful enchantress in a period costume, she's a tantalizing imp in slacks, or in some other slim, semi-masculine outfit, like the one we christened her "racetrack ensemble" because it consists of a derby, a bold shepherd's plaid and a bolder red belt.

Oh, but it's cute and clever. That white and black coat has a very high, stand-up collar fastened with two Chinese red buttons and metal bars. Instead of the straight-up-the-front closing, it has a diagonal one, and just try that on your figure if you want to look slimmer. But don't make it a shepherd's plaid. That is

STATEMENT OF THE OWNERSHIP, MANAGEMENT, CIRCULATION, ETC., REQUIRED BY THE ACT OF CONGRESS OF AUGUST 24, 1912, of MODERN SCREEN, published monthly at Dunellen, N. J., for October 1, 1934.

State of New York } ss.
County of New York }

Before me, a Notary Public in and for the State and county aforesaid, personally appeared Helen Meyer, who, having been duly sworn according to law, deposes and says that she is the business manager of the MODERN SCREEN and that the following is, to the best of her knowledge and belief, a true statement of the ownership, management (and if a daily paper, the circulation), etc., of the aforesaid publication for the date shown in the above caption, required by the Act of August 24, 1912, embodied in section 411, Postal Laws and Regulations, printed on the reverse of this form, to wit:

1. That the names and addresses of the publisher, editor, managing editor, and business managers are: Publisher, George T. Delacorte, Jr., 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.; Editor, George T. Delacorte, Jr., 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.; Managing Editor, Mary Burgum, 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.; Business Manager, Helen Meyer, 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

2. That the owner is: (If owned by a corporation, its name and address must be stated and also immediately thereunder the names and addresses of stockholders owning or holding one per cent or more of total amount of stock. If not owned by a corporation, the names and addresses of the individual owners must be given. If owned by a firm, company, or other unincorporated concern, its name and address, as well as those of each individual member, must be given.) Dell Publishing Company, Inc., 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.; George T. Delacorte, Jr., 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.; Margarita Delacorte, 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

3. That the known bondholders, mortgagees, and other security holders owning or holding 1 per cent or more of total amount of bonds, mortgages, or other securities are: (If there are more, so state.) None.

4. That the two paragraphs next above, giving the names of the owners, stockholders, and security holders, if any, contain not only the list of stockholders or security holders as they appear upon the books of the company, but also, in cases where the stockholder or security holder appears upon the books of the company as trustee or in any other fiduciary relation, the name of the person or corporation for whom such trustee is acting, is given; also that the said two paragraphs contain statements embracing affiant's full knowledge and belief as to the circumstances and conditions under which stockholders and security holders who do not appear upon the books of the company as trustees, hold stock and securities in a capacity other than that of a bona fide owner; and this affiant has no reason to believe that any other person, association, or corporation has any interest direct or indirect in the said stock, bonds, or other securities than as so stated by her.

5. That the average number of copies of each issue of this publication sold or distributed, through the mails or otherwise, to paid subscribers during the six months preceding the date shown above is: (This information is required from daily publications only.)

HELEN MEYER, Business Manager.
Sworn to and subscribed before me this 12th day of September, 1934.
MAY KELLEY,
Notary Public, N. Y. County.
N. Y. County Clerk's No. 85.
N. Y. County Register's No. 5K278.
(My commission expires March 30, 1935.)

"EVERYONE THINKS MY FARBERWARE CORDIAL SET IS GRAND!"

. . . and it only cost $5

Movie Stars and Housekeeping Stars love this new FARBERWARE Cordial Set. It adds beauty to the home and decorates the table! Note the unusual bottle . . . the 6 graceful glasses . . . the chromium plated tray. For $5 YOU can have the Set that Hollywood adores. Order today!

FREE—the new FARBERWARE Gift Book. Full of beautiful, useful gifts for the home, from $1 to $25. Send coupon or penny postcard!

FARBERWARE
SOLD BY RELIABLE STORES

S. W. FARBER, INC.,
153-D South 5th St., Brooklyn, N. Y.
☐ Send my FREE FARBERWARE Gift Book.
☐ Send FARBERWARE 8-piece Cordial Set—$5 is enclosed. (West of Miss. River add cost of transportation)
Name_____
Address_____
My dealer's name_____

FREE

EMBLEMS BASTIAN

FREE CLASS & CLUB PIN CATALOG

Shows over 300 handsome, smart, up-to-the-minute designs. Many color illustrations. Styles to meet taste of every club, class, school or society.

RBI 35¢ up

LOWEST PRICES-BIGGEST CHOICE-QUALITY MADE

Money-back guarantee covers every item we make. Deal with the firm that has led for 39 years and be sure of complete satisfaction. Send your name and address for our Free 1935 catalog.

BASTIAN BROS. CO. 72 Bastian Bldg., Rochester, N.Y.

35

MAKE CLEVER GIFTS

DIRECTIONS FOR MORE THAN 75 NEW CRAFT NOVELTIES 10c

Surprise your friends with novel gifts quickly and easily made of Dennison Crepe at home at little cost. Dolls, toys, trays, flowering plants, lampshades, bags and belts. Simple, illustrated directions for more than 75 clever gifts are in The Book of New Dennison Crafts. Just send 10 cents with coupon.

DENNISON'S, Dept. Z-192 Framingham, Mass.
Please send me The Book of New Dennison Crafts. I enclose 10c.

*Name*_____
*Street (or R.F.D.)*_____
*City*_____ *State*_____

Why not let us include some of these other Dennison Books? Check those you want and enclose 10c for each.
☐ Crepe Paper Flowers ☐ Making Things with Cellophane
☐ Games for Children's Parties ☐ Money-Making Bazaars

Dennison Crepe

The SAFE Way To Lose FAT

Look Younger — Feel Younger

Lilian Bond, beautiful screen actress, is a striking example of the vivacious charm and physical attractiveness of a lovely, slender figure.

● If you want to gradually lose ugly, excess fat and at the same time enjoy better health—take a half teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water first thing in the morning.

● Kruschen can't possibly harm you because first of all it's a health treatment—it helps establish normal body functioning then surplus fat disappears. Kruschen is not just one salt as some people ignorantly believe—it's a superb blend of six separate corrective salts based on an average analysis of over 22 European Spas whose healthful waters physicians for years have prescribed for overweight patients.

● Now that you understand why Kruschen is safe and healthy—there's no longer any excuse for you to remain fat! A jar lasts 4 weeks and costs only a few cents at any first class drugstore.

Kruschen Salts

AT ALL DRUGGISTS

"It's the LITTLE DAILY DOSE that Does It"

For a Tuneful Wednesday Evening set your radio dial to LANNY ROSS

and His Log Cabin Orchestra

THE romantic songs of Lanny, a sweet orchestra and a surprise guest presented each week by

RADIO STARS Magazine

Here Are Your Stations

7:30 p.m.—WENR-WLS, Chicago; KWCR, Cedar Rapids; KSO, Des Moines; KOIL, Omaha-Council Bluffs; WREN, Kansas City.

8:30 p.m.—WJZ, New York; WBAL, Baltimore; WMAL, Washington; WSYR, Syracuse; WHAM, Rochester; KDKA, Pittsburgh; WGAR, Cleveland; WCKY, Covington; WJR, Detroit; KPO, San Francisco; KFI, Los Angeles; KGW, Portland, Ore.; KOMO, Seattle; KHQ, Spokane; KFSD, San Diego.

9:30 p.m.—KOA, Denver; KDYL, Salt Lake.

10:30 p.m.—WKY, Oklahoma City; WFAA-WBAP, Dallas-Fort Worth; KPRC, Houston; WOAI, San Antonio; KTBS, Shreveport; KTHS, Hot Springs.

for slender youngsters of the Parker variety.

"It's the unexpected touches that put the dramatic note in clothes," she observed. "Will you gaze upon these sleeves?" I gazed. In place of the usual tailored sleeves that such coats have, these were rather full and caught by a wrist band, the kind you see on shirtwaists. And to top the outfit off still more dramatically she selected the derby—a delightful feminine version of the original. Incidentally, turned-up small brims always offset a high collar best. The hat, of course, is black like the wool skirt.

"Where does the 'starring' process really begin in clothes?" I wanted to know.

"Right with the foundation garment," Jean assured me. "The whole idea, you see, is to make your shoulders seem broader than your hips. One of these pull-on rubber girdles helps tremendously.

"Personally, I like contrasting colors in clothes—and it's often wise to contrast them a bit with your special type. Here's what I mean. If you're a very athletic, sure-of-yourself person, wear gentle clothes. Something that softens you, such as shiny brown crepe with gold touches made in a very feminine manner. Don't feel you must wear strictly tailored things and sport togs all the time.

"And if you're a quiet, every day sort of person, do the unusual in dressing. Wear a hat that's decidedly impish, or an exotic piece of jewelry with a plain, beautifully cut gown.

"I think if you concentrate on daytime dresses you get a lot more pleasure out of it, for after all they are what you live in mostly, and they all ought to have a different mood."

Which is why, perhaps, she chose that "artist's" model before you could wink an eye. It made her look like an irresistible bit of Bohemia right from the start. The last word in fashions, the tunic dress, is in this case disguised as an art smock in a check of earth brown and verdant green. "And doesn't it make me look taller?" she enthused.

There was a fringed scarf of golden brown to blend with the wool skirt and enormous brown leather buttons and a big patch pocket. To further carry out the idea, Jean completed it with an oversized pancake beret, stitched across the top. "Now where are my paints and brushes?" I didn't know. She was a picture enough as it was!

Maybe it has already occurred to you—not a speck of fur on a single thing Jean's selected. There is a reason. She hates cheap fur, says it has spoiled many a good-looking coat or suit, and doesn't feel she can yet afford the kind of fur she wants. "If you're going to get it at all, I believe it's best to buy a lovely separate fur collar and then have it to wear with various costumes." If that isn't being very sensible, I'd like to know what is.

Everyone these days is on the lookout for an afternoon-through-dinner dress. Something that will carry you on through a sorority tea and into a dinner date. Jean found hers in a heavy black satin that is distinctly an advocate of the "pencil" silhouette. It follows the glamorous princess style and combines the excitement of a slit skirt with the meekness of a round neck. A very pretty neck that has a knife-pleated trim of the black satin which also edges the dolman sleeves. The pleating swoops down on either side of the slit waist in back, too, and it's held together by two rhinestone buttons. White satin flowers are the highlight. A black velvet hat has two ornaments repeating the rhinestone note.

For her "formal," Jean did the unusual. Just as I was wondering whether she'd pick out something fluffy, possibly white, she walked straight up to a love of a suede crepe in smoky leaf brown. "Does that mean anything to you?" she questioned.

"It does! It spells youth with-a-charming-new-dignity."

"Heavens, I think I'll take it," chuckled Jean. As if there had ever been a doubt of it! The fascination of it was in the line. A ruffle forms the collar, the cape sleeves, and cascades down the back to the waist, right to the point where the fantail train starts. What that does to a girl's figure is something to write in the bride's book! Two metal flowers, one in bronze and gold, the other in green and silver, are the only elaboration on the whole gown.

"There, that completes my particular clothes 'test,'" she said with a tired droopy, very happy smile. A "test," if you ask us, that would win style stardom for any girl!

Dick is all excited about his new Toluca Lake home (left, Dick examining blueprints), and his screen public is simply thrilled over the "new" Dick Powell in "Happiness Ahead," his latest effort for Warner Bros., which is breaking box-office records all over the country.

Have You Changed in the Last Five Years?

(Continued from page 53)

It didn't happen suddenly—psychological changes seldom do—but now, as you look at Gable's face, you can see in his eyes a great peace instead of glowering storm clouds. What had actually happened to him was that he had seen himself in relationship to a great industry—as a man stands in a crowded street and looks heavenwards at the planet Mars to realize, for the first time, how small and ineffectual he is in comparison to the great universe.

Clark saw the picture business as a sort of universe and himself just a small part in it. And, gradually, as this idea took possession of him, he worked out his salvation until now he says, "The producers were right. Why should they have given me a job when I wasn't any good? It was just an accident that I had something which caught on, and why should they be blamed for not prophesying this accident, when there were so many begging for the same thing I wanted?

"Every morning as I come to the studio I see myself standing outside the casting office waiting to 'get a break.' Every day people ask me to help them get a job—and I am helpless. Now that I actually see how complicated the picture business is, now that I'm on the other side of that great fence, I realize how lucky I am to be inside at all."

And thus has Gable changed from bitterness to humility. I think his present attitude might teach us all a lesson or two.

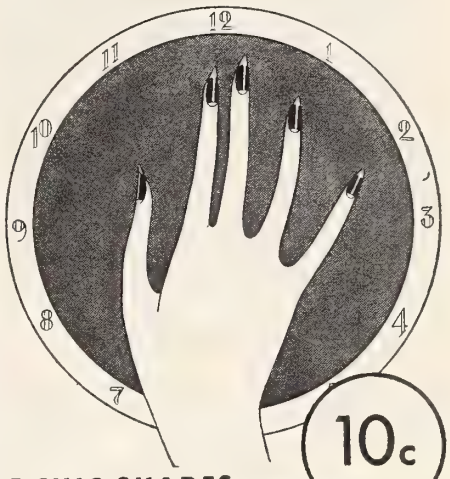
GARY COOPER has undergone a change, too, but in a very different way. When he got his first part in "The Winning of Barbara Worth," he was so terrified that he disappeared from the set for days and had to be found and brought back, so sure was he of his own inadequacy. He felt the enormity of the industry at once. It is an actual fact that he was so frightened and nervous that he would be physically ill after doing an emotional scene before the camera. He knew he wasn't an actor and was tremendously impressed by those who had proven their ability.

The psychological change happened to Gary rather suddenly. He was watching a well-known actor doing a scene. Gary had the most profound respect for the man. The fellow had been laughing and joking with some friends on the set when the director called him. Instantly he did an emotional scene of such intensity that real tears came to his eyes, he simulated real hysterics.

The director called, "Cut!" The actor stepped outside of camera range and finished the story he had begun. The stage shook with laughter.

The young Gary, watching, was amazed. Gary, who had been ill after his big scenes, Gary who had so respected the camera that he had run away from it out of sheer terror. And now this Gary said to himself, "Well! So that's all there is to it, this acting business. You laugh and kid and then you cry before a black box. Why, it's a big joke and I've been letting it get me down. What a fool I've been!"

The change began that moment. His new attitude took entire possession of him when he came on his set one day and saw five men who had once been great stars, playing extra parts.



Now his attitude is cynical. He says, "Nuts to this business. I'm smart enough to know that it lasts—this fame—for five years and then they kick you out and get another boy. And I was the goof who took it seriously. Well, I don't take it seriously any more. I do my stunt and take my money and when my time's up, I call it a day!"

Scott Photo

Just a few of the 200 or more friends who dropped in to give the Fredric Marches' new home in Bel Air the once-over. The hostess, herself, Mary Astor, Jeanette MacDonald, Fay Wray and John Monk Saunders were among the "house warmers."

CHIC at all times!

10c

5 CHIC SHADES
CLEAR
PINK
CORAL
RUBY
DEEP

You will agree... a truly fine polish . . . at a great saving . . . also

Chic Creme Polish
Chic Cuticle Remover
Chic Polish Remover
Chic Oily Polish Remover

• FOR SALE AT THE 10c STORES •

MAKE BIG PAY Handing Out These Cash Benefit Certificates

New FAMILY PROTECTION

UP TO $1000 CASH Benefits PAID

NATIONAL AID SOCIETY

New plan offers Family Protection at cost. Up to $1,000 cash benefit paid at once in case of Accident or Death. No medical examination. Men, women, children, aged 1 to 80, may apply. Membership costs only $6. Millions want it—need it. Already 100,000 members enrolled.

ENROLL MEMBERS FOR US

Make $5 cash profit every member you secure. Earn up to $60 weekly. No experience or investment needed. Complete outfit Free. Your Benefit Certificate without membership cost. Get details today.

NATIONAL AID SOCIETY
Dept. M-1. Springfield, Ill.

$5 CASH FOR EVERY MEMBER YOU SECURE

Invite romance!

There's a subtle allurement in this exquisite odeur. And RADIO GIRL Perfume and Face Powder have added charm for the thrifty modern girl who loves nice things—they cost so little! RADIO GIRL Face Powder, made in smart, new blending shades, has the same delightful odeur as Radio Girl Perfume.

— — — Use this COUPON for FREE SAMPLES — — —

"Radio Girl", Saint Paul, Minnesota MR2

Send me FREE Regular Size Radio Girl Perfume and Trial Size Radio Girl Face Powder. I enclose 10c (coin or stamps) for cost of mailing. (Offer good in U.S. only.)

Name _____

Address _____

AN affliction so painful it almost drives you mad, yet one so delicate you can scarcely bring yourself to talk to your doctor about it!

That's Piles!

Bad as it is, pain is not the worst thing about Piles! They can take a malignant turn and become something very serious.

Whether Piles be internal or external, painful or itching, real relief is to be had today in Pazo Ointment. Pazo almost instantly stops the pain and itching and checks any bleeding. But more important, Pazo tends to correct the condition of Piles as a whole. This is because Pazo is threefold in effect.

First, it is soothing, which relieves the soreness and inflammation. Second, it is healing, which repairs the torn and damaged tissues. Third, it is absorbing, which dries up any mucous matter and tends to shrink the swollen blood vessels which are Piles.

Pazo comes in two forms — in tubes and tins. The tubes have a special Pile Pipe for insertion in the rectum. All drug stores sell Pazo at small cost. Mail coupon for free trial tube.

Grove Laboratories, Inc.
Dept. 32-M, St. Louis, Mo.

FREE

Gentlemen: Please send me, in PLAIN WRAPPER, trial size of PAZO Ointment.

NAME .....

ADDRESS .....

CITY ..... STATE .....

Brush Away
GRAY HAIR

Now you can really look years younger and retain your youthful charm and appearance. With a small brush and BROWNATONE, you just tint those streaks or patches of gray or faded hair to lustrous shades of blonde, brown, or black.

Over twenty-two years success. Don't experiment. BROWNATONE is guaranteed harmless for tinting gray hair—active coloring agent is of vegetable origin. Easily and quickly applied—at home. Cannot affect waving of hair. BROWNATONE is economical and lasting—it will not wash out. No waiting. No disappointments. Just brush or comb it in. Easy to prove by applying a little of this famous tint to a lock of hair. Shades: "Blonde to Medium Brown" and "Dark Brown to Black"—cover every need.

BROWNATONE is only 50c—at all drug and toilet counters—always on a money-back guarantee.

AND now let's turn to some of the girl stars. I am habitually amazed that those kids who arrive in Hollywood as young immature, unsophisticated, badly groomed, shy little creatures, emerge, a year or so later, as glamorous, gorgeous, worldly women. Women? They're still under twenty, most of them. No matter how many times it is pointed out to me, I never fail to get a kick out of Loretta Young—divorcee, a pet of Hollywood's intelligentsia, a woman with views on life, love and marriage, a woman whom you could not imagine being caught in a situation which she couldn't handle. And she is at the age when most girls are graduating from college.

There are so many like her—Jean Parker, Patricia Ellis, Maureen O'Sullivan, Rochelle Hudson, Thelma Todd, Bette Davis, to name but a very few. To tell of them all would be repetitious. Ann Dvorak will, I think, illustrate my point. In a way, her experience has been identical with them all.

I remember Ann when she was a little extra girl around the M-G-M lot. Joan Crawford saw her and made a sort of protégée of her and tried, I recall, to promote a romance between Ann and Marshall Duffield, the University of Southern California's football player. The match didn't promote because Ann was too shy.

She was sixteen, then, inordinately ambitious but without the slightest idea of how to go about achieving that ambition. She had about as much poise as the heroine in the high school play. And yet, there was within her the knowledge that she had talent. But they told her her nose wouldn't photograph. And she tightened up whenever she made a test. She couldn't talk to people and she suffered a thousand torments when she went to a director to ask for a part.

Today she is just past twenty, but she has the manner of a woman of the world. The once shy kid has glamor dripping from the tips of her fingers. And she says things like, "There is nothing in life worth while but being free."

She became mature enough to give up her career after her marriage to Leslie Fenton, because she realized how fleeting is Hollywood fame, and went around the world with her sophisticated husband, with whom half the women in Hollywood had been in love.

But what brought about this truly remarkable change? The actual occurrence happened suddenly. The change, itself, with all its ramifications, came slowly.

Howard Hawks was looking for a girl to play the role of Paul Muni's sister in "Scarface." Karen Morley, a friend, got Ann the interview. It was the first time she had been off the M-G-M lot to look for work. Hawks didn't know that she suffered acutely from embarrassment. Hawks didn't know that her nose wouldn't photograph or that she tightened up before the camera. And when she talked to him she felt that he had confidence in her.

AS a matter of fact, Hawks was desperate. He had tested hundreds of girls for the part. He was tired of the search and it was pre-determined that he would like Ann. But that, she didn't know. All she saw was that he seemed to believe in her. She made a grand test and got the part. After that, it was easy.

Nothing succeeds like success. She was a success, and the poise, the assurance which she now has came to her so quickly that it is as if there were two Ann Dvoraks, the shy kid and the present worldly woman.

And that's how the ugly ducklings invariably change into the beautiful swans. They lose their fear when a producer or a director becomes interested in them, buoys up their self esteem, gives them confidence. This confidence changes these girls so radically that they do not even look the same, as you can see for yourself by comparing any "before and after" photographs.

JOHN BARRYMORE. Has ever anyone changed more completely than he? Once the stormy petrel of the Barrymore tribe—the man who could always be counted upon to make the bizarre, the fantastic, the startling gesture—has settled down into being one of Hollywood's best citizens, a family man, a devoted husband and father.

Recently I was shopping in a department store and I saw a plump, matronly woman followed by a brow-beaten looking husband with his hat smashed down on his head. He was carrying an arm load of parcels, following docilely, a few paces after his wife.

And that was John Barrymore, the Barrymore of the flashing profile, the man who used to shock young girls into a state beyond recognition, who obeyed no man, woman or law, who was affectionately called "the kid" by his brother and sister who, although they never conformed in their lives, were paragons of respectability compared to John.

And this same John carries parcels for his wife. What has changed him? Well, sigh a sigh for fleeting youth. It is surely a better life he leads now, a more satisfactory one. No outside influence, no remarkable chain of circumstances has caused this change. He has grown older, that's all. The fires of daring, rebellious youth are out. It happens to the best of good fellows in Podunk or Hollywood.

What fate led Ramon Novarro away from his life of spiritual hermithood and made him into a gay, laughing, party boy? The answer is simple and has happened many times. The death of his beloved brother, for whom he had sacrificed so much, for whom he had such high hopes and ambitions, showed him how fleeting is life and made him start upon a campaign of rose-gathering while ye may. Ramon has changed more drastically than almost anyone in pictures.

COLLEEN MOORE, once the most docile girl in pictures, waited a solid year under contract to M-G-M for a screen role that never materialized. She was embroiled in a political mess that kept her off the screen all that time—drawing a salary, but in no way furthering her expected "comeback." It was during that miserable year of waiting that she turned rebel and began demanding the favors she saw other stars demand and get, when they screamed loud enough!

I could name dozens more who have changed completely. This is how those I have mentioned are now. But tomorrow? Who knows what they will be tomorrow. No city is so kaleidoscopic as is Hollywood. One turn of the little cylinder and there is a new, a fascinating, a colorful pattern. Its people change with the changing pattern.

And they are right, for there is little virtue in remaining the same. We may make mistakes. We may take the wrong path. But that is better than standing still. And the more personality phases we pass through, the richer our lives become.

Have you changed radically in the last five years? If so, why? Bring the secrets of your mind and your heart into the light. It will do you good. Knowing yourself, analyzing your own mind will make the world a more handsome place for you. It is the basis of all personal psychology, and a pretty darn good basis!

I Have Been Kept by a Movie Star

(Continued from page 43)

and that I must not let my nerves get the better of me.

When we entered our host's drawing-room, he cried, "Here is Gloria Gay, our newest and one of our brightest stars!"

Gloria smiled and remarked, "And this is my husband, Mr. Blank."

I realized presently that while there were genuine and amiable people in the room, who appeared really to like me, I didn't mean anything to anyone present. Unless you mean something, stand for something in Hollywood, there is no reason for your being at a party at all. No one invites you merely because he likes you. As we accepted or regretted invitations for subsequent gatherings, I told myself again and again that I shouldn't be invited if it weren't for Gloria. I also told myself that I was being morbid and ridiculous and determined that I should mean something soon.

Later at home Gloria said, "Darling, I could have killed that man when he failed to introduce you to his other guests. We shall never, never go there again." She cried and I kissed her and was comforted a little.

But in the aching hours of that sleepless night I kept hearing Gloria's remark, "Every woman wants to be proud of her man." She was so dear, so terribly dear.

THE days went on in that empty, useless, shiny office. Once or twice I fell so low as to dictate fictitious letters to the red-haired secretary, letters to mythical New York brokers. I was invited to attend conferences upon Gloria's next picture. These took place around a long table in a large and impressive office. But when I offered a suggestion, they listened to me with impatient politeness and then proceeded with their own plans and arguments. I went only once.

I wrote, painstakingly, the synopsis of an original story which I offered to Armheimer. He received it with thanks and enthusiasm, but I never heard any more about it. I spent more and more time at the polo field. I enjoyed the exercise, liked the chaps who played, enjoyed the gatherings at the clubhouse afterward. I swam in our pool every morning and I took up tennis again. Some days I did not go to the office at all.

One of the papers mentioned me as, "Gloria Gay's husband, capitalist and sportsman." My smile at that was pretty bitter. I had no money of my own except the small salary which went with the office. And that wouldn't begin to pay our butler. Gloria was insistent that I buy new clothes and opened accounts for me with expensive tailors. Well, I couldn't disgrace the girl in public by my clothes.

Gloria made another picture and then another, with growing acclaim. Even the hard-boiled New York critics liked her, and in "the sticks," those middle western sections which are the back-bone of the box office, she was just what the doctor had ordered. Armheimer tore up her contract and gave her another with a large increase in salary.

I lapsed into a curious lethargy. There was plenty of money, I told myself, and even if no one else realized it, both Gloria and I knew that I had helped to earn it. Why shouldn't I be comfortable and luxurious?

I knew that there was gossip in the colony about Gloria and Armheimer, but it never occurred to me to doubt her for an instant. She had long since ceased to ask my advice about matters pertaining to her career. But I couldn't blame her. I had no faith in my own judgment.

At last we had—she had—a vacation. Six weeks in the summer, between pictures. We would, she decided, go abroad.

I demurred. Armheimer had condescended to say that he wanted me to "help" him on a certain production. Some of my energy came back to me. I thought that perhaps this was my opportunity to make her proud of me—to do something. Gloria did more than pout now.

"It's a small thing to do for me," she cried. "I can't go without you because the gossip writers will ruin me. I should think you'd be glad to go to Europe with all your expenses paid. Your job, indeed! Your silly old job. What have you ever done?"

I LEFT her, tearful and sulky, and went to the office. As I sat at my wide, empty desk, a visitor to the lot passed my window, escorted by an office boy.

"What," she was inquiring, "does Gloria Gay's husband do?"

The boy hesitated. "Well, they call him a supervisor," he admitted, "but I guess that's just to please Miss Gay."

I reached for the telephone and called Gloria. "Darling," I said, "I have changed my mind. The job doesn't matter a bean in comparison with your pleasure. Certainly we shall go abroad and I shall strive to give the best performance, as a movie star's husband, that the capitals of Europe have ever seen."

I typed my resignation and sent it to Armheimer. Then I left that shiny office forever.

The trip to New York and Europe was a triumphant and ecstatic experience for Gloria. I began to drink pretty heavily on that trip and, although I did not disgrace us—or Mr. Armheimer—at any point, my memory of the journey is mostly concerned with wine and food and a conglomeration of celebrities, all cooing at and admiring my wife.

We returned and re-entered the whirl. We met, at small and select gatherings, Irving Thalberg and Norma Shearer. How would it feel, I wondered, to be an important executive on the lot upon which your wife was a star? Once I had had dreams. We met Mary Pickford. She was always so shy at parties, until she had found a group of intimates, after which she would sparkle and glow and make a bright and shiny little note in the gathering. How could her romance with Doug have struck a shoal, I wondered, when they were both so successful?

The non-professional wives of Clark Gable and Bob Montgomery seemed contented. But non-movie husbands of successful women—Irene Dunne's husband, Colleen Moore's, Aline McMahon's, Elissa Landi's—all these gentlemen appeared to be engaged in profitable pursuits elsewhere.

I saw less and less of Gloria. Diet had become important to her. And massage. She was constantly trying new food fads and new aids to beauty. We had always had such fun, bounding off on mad excursions. A picnic. A trip to the beach to ride on roller coasters and win silly

Out of HOLLYWOOD comes a new NAIL POLISH to GLORIFY YOUR HANDS

Tested — Approved — Bureau of Foods, Sanitation and Health — Good Housekeeping Magazine

MOON GLOW

Cream—NAIL POLISH—Clear

Here is the nail polish you've been hearing so much about—made popular by stage and screen stars in Hollywood. Moon Glow Nail Polish is a new blend—applies more smoothly, sets more lustrously. In six splendid shades from the delicate to the daring. Scientifically perfected so as not to chip, peel, crack, fade or streak. And economical—larger bottle, lower price. 25 cents at the better toilet goods counters. Send coupon and 10 cents for generous trial bottle. (Moon Glow Oil Polish Remover is the latest treat for the nails.)

Moon Glow Cosmetic Co. Ltd., Dept. MM 12 Hollywood, Calif.

Please send generous trial bottle Moon Glow Cream Polish. I enclose 10c (coin or stamps) for each shade checked. ( ) Natural ( ) Medium ( ) Rose ( ) Blood Red ( ) Carmine ( ) Coral. ( ) Oil Nail Polish Remover.

Name.....

St. and No.....

City..... State.....

VI-JON CREAMS 10¢ Each

NICE CLEAR SKIN

WITHOUT SKIN PEELING A SAFE AND SURE WAY

Worry no more over skin troubles. Beaufix, sensational —new—safe—soothes irritated skin blemishes; relieve skin of pimples, blackheads, freckles, tighten pores; whiten complexion. Three applications will amaze you. It must satisfy or money back. Send only 25c. for complete treatment (special introductory offer) and help yourself to new, youthful loveliness. Beaufix Labs., Dept. M-12, 1851 Washington Ave., N. Y. C. 25c

10¢ There's no finer Talc than LANDER

LILACS and ROSES Blended

in a beautiful tin container exactly 3 times this height . . . at leading 10c stores. Don't just ask for LANDER'S . . . DEMAND it!

LANDER CO., Inc.

Memphis New York Binghamton

Glorify THE BEAUTY OF YOUR HAIR

BLONDES

Have hair that has a shimmering golden gloss. Mar-o-Oil soapless shampoo dissolves and washes away in clear water all dirt and grime that dulls the natural beauty of blond hair.

BRUNETTES

Like moonlight on the waters or polished ebony, dark hair gleams and glistens with splendor after the First Mar-o-Oil shampoo treatment containing Vitazene, new tonic discovery.

REDHEADS

From Strawberry to Auburn—Mar-o-Oil brings out all those glittering coppery highlights so desired—overcomes dandruff, oily or dry hair and falling hair in all types of hair.

Mar-o-Oil

SOAPLESS SHAMPOO TREATMENT

Insist!—Upon the original Mar-o-Oil soapless shampoo, washes out in clear water—contains Vitazene the new tonic discovery. • Start Today! Leading beauty shops, drug and department stores carry Mar-o-Oil (or send 10¢ for a generous 2-treatment trial bottle.) J. W. Marrow Mfg. Co., Dept. 12-M, 3037 N. Clark Street Chicago, Ill.

IMPORTED 15¢

To introduce our Beautiful Blue White Rainbow Flash Stones, we will send a 1 Kt. IMPORTED Simulated DIAMOND, mounted in Lovely 18 Kt. White-Gold Finish Ring as illustrated, for this ad. and 15c expense. Address: National Jewelry Co., Dept. 16, Wheeling, W. Va. (2 for 25c.)

DEAFNESS IS MISERY

Many people with defective hearing and Head Noises enjoy conversation, go to Theatre and Church because they use Leonard Invisible Ear Drums which resemble Tiny Megaphones fitting in the Ear entirely out of sight. No wires, batteries or head piece. They are inexpensive. Write for booklet and sworn statement of the inventor who was himself deaf.

A. O. LEONARD, Inc., Suite 986, 70 5th Ave., New York

KILL THE HAIR ROOT

My method positively prevents hair from growing again. Safe, easy, permanent. Use it privately at home. The delightful relief will bring happiness, freedom of mind and greater success.

We teach Beauty Culture. Send 6c in stamps TODAY for Booklet. For promptness in writing me, I will include a $2.00 Certificate for Mahler Beauty Preparations.

D. J. Mahler Co., Dept. 36P, Providence, R. I.

BE A DESIGNER OF HOLLYWOOD FASHIONS

EARN $25 TO $50 A WEEK

Qualify for a good position, or have your own Style Shop and win financial independence as the Hollywood Fashion Expert of your community.

DRESS LIKE SCREEN STARS

Design and make glamorous gowns for yourself like those of your favorite film star. Have more clothes and dress more smartly, at less expense.

HOLLYWOOD FASHION CREATORS TRAIN YOU AT HOME

With the aid of Fashion Creators of Motion Picture Studios and Screen Stars themselves, this 50-year old College will teach you Costume Designing in your spare time at home. Free placement service; graduates in demand.

WRITE FOR FREE BOOK! If over 16, write at once for our Free Illustrated Booklet. No obligation! WOODBURY COLLEGE, Dept. 13-M, Hollywood, Calif.

dolls at games. The discovery of a new, foreign restaurant in an odd corner of town had been an event. Concerts. Puppet shows. Now, if Gloria was working, she must have her massage and then dinner in bed, from a tray. Between pictures she must go only to important homes and entertain only important people.

I sighed a little for the days in which we had brought home an itinerant accordion player to dinner, when we had discovered a starving poet, when we had gone to the Hollywood Bowl concerts and sat high on the hills, hand-in-hand, listening to divine symphonies.

ONE day Gloria and I were having tea on the terrace. Or, rather, Gloria was having tea and I was having several whiskeys. It occurred to me suddenly that she had had something done to her hair. That spun-silk, taffy-gold hair, which I had loved so much, was shinier now and lighter. It made her look older and hard. I asked her about it.

"It was very expensive," she said. "But it photographs more flatteringly than it did the old way. For my next picture I am going to have it a very light red."

"You didn't consult me," I said.

She looked at me, blankly. "Well, why should I?" she inquired, with real bewilderment. "It photographs better. I was just telling you."

A few moments later she said, "My next picture calls for me to go on location for about a month."

I said, "Is that so? When do we start?"

She looked at me and hesitated. "Well, darling," she admitted, at last, "I'm afraid that they don't plan for you to go. They told me that it would be better if you didn't. I don't know how to tell you. But if anything comes up to which I object, they always say that you have put me up to complaining. That it is your advice which is causing the trouble. It weakens my position. Do you see? Oh, please see, dear. It isn't that I don't love you and that I don't want your advice." She hadn't asked my advice in months.

I looked at her for a long, long moment. I tried to recall the shining little creature I had glimpsed that first day on the street of that small, southern town. She was gone. Here was a sleek, groomed, carefully dressed woman of the world. She wasn't worshiping me as a magic, fairy-tale Prince Charming now. She was appraising me and finding me wanting. She had found that I "weakened her position," even though I had effaced myself, I thought, as far as a man could. I was a drawback, and an expensive one, too.

"My dear," I said, "I shall go away. I shan't stand in your way, 'weaken your position' any longer."

I went to my room and wondered what I could put into a bag which would belong to me. There was nothing. But Gloria would have small use for men's shirts and pyjamas, which had been tailored to fit me. I decided that I might take a quota of those. I would take nothing in the way of suits excepting what I had on. My clothes fitted the second footman nicely.

WHEN I went downstairs, Armheimer was there. Gloria was weeping, softly. "Miss Gay thinks that she should give you some money," said the brisk little man. "You can't go away like this. The publicity would be so bad."

I hit him. I hit him rather neatly on the chin—just hard enough to knock him out temporarily, but not hard enough to do him any permanent damage. Having accomplished that to my satisfaction, I seized Gloria, who had stood there looking rather dazed, kissed her once and went away.

Sitting on a park bench yesterday in a dusty, middle western town, I picked up a paper which someone had abandoned. "What becomes of movie stars' abandoned husbands?" a caption asked. "Where are the erstwhile husbands of Gloria Gay and . . ."

I can't go home to the little southern town. My family will have none of me. I have no money. I have abandoned my name. I am about to start over in this little, hot, dusty town, not because I have chosen and prefer it, but because this was as far as I could travel with the change I had in my pocket.

Even from my park bench, I could see that this was a clean, wholesome, decent little town, populated by hard working people who earn their money. Today I answered an ad in the small, local paper and secured a job as a clerk in a hardware store, at fifteen dollars a week.

I shall work very hard and hope some day to become a stockholder or a junior partner. But I shall hope and pray that never, never shall these people learn that —I have been kept by a movie star!

* * *

Is that the end of the story, you ask? Do you want to know if he ever saw Gloria again? We can't blame you for asking but, you see, it's a story without an end, really. What difference would it make if he did see Gloria again? She wouldn't give up her career. He wouldn't go back to the humiliating life of "being kept by a movie star." And so, you can see, in a heart-breakingly truthful Hollywood story (with fictitious names, of course, for obvious reasons) one of the answers to that perpetual question, "Why can't those Hollywood folks stay married?"

My Big Sister Ruby

(Continued from page 44)

dress and a blue sash and hair-ribbon. I don't think I realized what an occasion it was until I saw Ruby on the stage. Then I got so surprised and excited that I jumped up and yelled, "Hello, Ruby!"

N. T. G., who was master of ceremonies, asked, "Who's that, Ruby?"

"That's my kid sister," she replied.

"Does she dance?" he asked.

"You bet! Just like me."

"Just like you!" he repeated. "Well have her come down."

And before I knew what had happened there I was on the stage with Ruby.

At the end of the dance N. T. G. kissed me and then, because I just about came up to his knees, he kicked me for good measure. The audience laughed and so did N. T. G. as he called, "I'll see you later, Kick-in-The-Pants."

WELL that's how I got my nickname and it stuck because Ruby and I repeated our impromptu performance as long as she was with N. T. G. and later when she was at the El Fey Club with Texas Guinan. The kick used to get so much laughter and applause that it became part of the act. I didn't get paid for it (the act, I mean) but it was fun.

In spite of the nine years' difference between us, I think I'm closer to Ruby than any of the others are. That's because when Ruby began to go on tour, Mother went with her and because I was the baby she took me, too. The rest of the family was left home with Dad and a housekeeper.

But I was practically raised on the road. I had the benefit of Mother's training and Ruby's experience in show business. Ruby seldom went out after the show. When she did, Mother went along until she was eighteen. But usually Ruby would come back to the hotel and the three of us would have a swell time playing poker. Ruby taught me how when I was a little tot and we'd play for hours. And she taught me each step as she'd invent it. You know, that outside of the fundamentals, Ruby makes up her own routines.

When Ruby was back in New York and we moved to Jackson Heights, she had Dad build a long board down in the cellar for us to practice tapping on. She'd have the whole family lined up at one time and when there wasn't room for us all, it didn't matter, we'd go right on dancing on the cement. We're a family with dancing feet, all right. Neither Mother nor Dad knows where we got them—I mean where Ruby got them. We seemed to have picked them up from her, but no one in our family before was ever in show business. Anyway we'd all rather dance than eat. We all hated school.

Mother used to shake her head sadly, but she says she learned not to force us to do anything. After giving Gertrude piano lessons and Helen the violin, neither of them ever touches an instrument. But they're still dancing.

As a result of Ruby's training, Gertrude and Bill went out in an act and then Gertrude went out with Helen. Now Bill has married and settled down to business, but Gertrude and Helen are always in Ruby's and Al's pictures. Whenever Al is making a new one, they're sure to ask, "Do you think there'll be a place for us?"

And he'll always answer, "Well, I guess we can squeeze you in somewhere."

In Ruby's pictures they have to be careful. Only recently when some rushes of one were being run off the director yelled, "What's Ruby doing coming out of that door?"

IT turned out to be Gertrude and they had to make the scene over and put Gertrude and Helen in 'phone booths—they look so much like Ruby. People say I do, too. I'm glad if I do for I'd rather look like her than anybody else in the world. Anna dances too, only she's been ill and so Ruby's been letting her handle her fan mail.

I know you wanted me to tell you about Ruby, but I can't mention her without bringing in the rest of the family. Ruby's been one grand sister to us and a grand daughter to Mother and Dad. Even before she was married, she used to turn over her whole salary to mother and she still does. Next to Al, we come first with her and she's been showering us with gifts since she began to make money. We don't dare admire a thing in a store window while Ruby's with us, because if she's anywhere within hearing distance we're sure to have it the next day.

And Al Jolson is just the same. He set Bill up in business in Wall Street several years ago and he's always doing nice things for us, but besides that, he takes a personal interest in each one of us—asks us all about our boy friends and what we're doing. He's just like one of us and Mother's crazy about him.

Ruby and Al have the loveliest home in Scarsdale. I think if I had one like it, I'd want to be in it all the time, but maybe I wouldn't want to give up my career if I were as famous as Ruby. For all of her fame and her mixing with the stars, she's still as shy as she was when she first began to dance—in fact, we're all shy and I don't believe any of us has ever danced or sung for company at home. We get actual stage fright except when we're on a stage or are practicing by ourselves. And right here I ought to tell you that Ruby is a hard task mistress when it comes to dancing. No matter how good other people may say we are, Ruby always says, "Don't think you're perfect. You've got a lot to learn."

I guess none of us is spoiled because Ruby isn't and she'd have no use for us if we were. In fact, she takes good care to see that we don't get spoiled. She likes to arrange my hair but you see how plain I wear it and Ruby says it suits me best that way. She won't let me use any make-up either—not even powder.

"Keep the way you are now—wholesome," she tells me. "There are enough painted dolls in Hollywood."

SHE'S always been right, so I guess she's right in this, too. She's made me finish school because even though she didn't have much education and got along all right, she insisted that I must have it because it gives me a good background. I've just graduated from the Professional School in Los Angeles. I liked it because I never had to do homework.

I've sung over the American Broadcasting System and I hope to be a "hot" blues singer one of these days. I'm still studying voice and I like it almost better than dancing. I guess that's because dancing comes so naturally to me. In the fall I'm going to Hollywood and start a picture career if I can. I've appeared in "Harold Teen." They chose me because they said I looked like a schoolgirl.

It's nice to have all the comforts that we enjoy now, but we weren't ever as poor as the sob sisters like to have you believe. They've written that we were in desperate circumstances before Ruby was famous, but that isn't so. Mother and Dad came from Nova Scotia when Ruby was a kid.

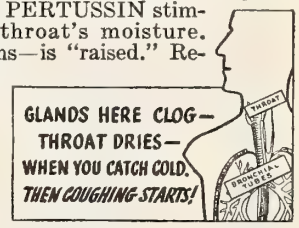
Dad was a sausage maker there and earned good money. When he got to New York, the method of making sausage was different from that used at home so poor Dad was out of luck. Someone offered him a job driving an ice wagon. Dad took it. He made a good living—enough to bring six children up comfortably.

We lived on the East Side because none of the apartment houses on the West Side wanted a family with children, especially when all of us were always tap dancing. You can't blame the landlords for not wanting their ceilings caving in on them. On the East Side, though, they weren't so particular.

It's a far cry from those days, but none of us has changed very much. Ruby, who has had more opportunity to change, has perhaps changed least of us all. She's still as sweet as she always was and just as natural. Now she and Al want to smooth the path for me, but I told them I want to succeed the way she did without anyone's help.

If I do succeed, though, it will be thanks to Ruby anyhow because she taught me everything she learned herself, through training and experience. She's wonderful. I wish everyone could have a sister like her.

The Doctor said



"MOIST-THROAT" METHOD

WOULD STOP COUGH QUICKLY— IT DID

Extract of famous medicinal herb stimulates throat's moisture

WHEN you cough, it's usually because your throat's moisture glands clog. Their healthy secretions change. Throat dries, sticky mucus collects. A tickling . . . then a cough! PERTUSSIN stimulates your throat's moisture. Phlegm loosens—is "raised." Relief! Pertussin is safe. Contains no drugs. Tastes good.

● Doctors have used Pertussin for over thirty years because it is always safe and sure.

PERTUSSIN

helps nature cure your cough

the PURE KNITTED COPPER CHORE GIRL

INSTANTLY CLEANS POTS AND PANS

"And cleans 'em right—sparkling, bright"

Patented parallel outer layers provide—

"Double the Wear, where the Wear comes"

NEW EASY WAY 10¢

JUSTRITE PUSH-CLIP

KEEP WIRES OFF FLOOR

(LAMPS AND RADIO)

A neat job instantly. No damage to woodwork. No tools needed. Set of eight colored clips to match your cords, 10c. At Kresge's

$1260 to $2100 Year

TO START

MEN-WOMEN-18 to 50

STEADY WORK

Many Winter examinations expected

Mail Coupon Today Sure

COUPON

Franklin Institute
Dept. J-305
Rochester, N. Y.

Rush FREE, list of U. S. Government big pay LIFE JOBS, 32-page book describing salaries, hours, work, and telling how to get a position.

Name.....

Address.....

Don't neglect your CHILD'S COLD

Don't let chest colds or croupy coughs get serious. Rub Children's Musterole on child's throat and chest at once. This milder form of regular Musterole stimulates, warms and penetrates to the very seat of the trouble. Musterole brings relief naturally because it's a scientific "counter-irritant"—NOT just a salve. Recommended by many doctors and nurses. Three kinds: Regular Strength, Children's (mild), and Extra Strong, 40¢ each. All druggists.

RADIO: "Voice of Experience," Columbia Network. See newspaper for time.

Good Housekeeping Bureau

CHILDREN'S MUSTEROLE

BETTER THAN A MUSTARD PLASTER

NRA CODE

MILD

Mercolized Wax Keeps Skin Young

It peels off aged skin in fine particles until all defects such as tan, freckles, oiliness and liver spots disappear. Skin is then soft, clear, velvety and face looks years younger. Mercolized Wax brings out your hidden beauty. To remove wrinkles quickly dissolve one ounce Powdered Saxolite in one-half pint witch hazel and use daily. At all drug stores.

VOICE

100% Improvement Guaranteed

We build, strengthen the vocal organs—not with singing lessons—but by fundamentally sound and scientifically correct silent exercises . . and absolutely guarantee to improve any singing or speaking voice at least 100%. . . . Write for wonderful voice book—sent free. Learn WHY you can now have the voice you want. No literature sent to anyone under 17 unless signed by parent.

PERFECT VOICE INSTITUTE, Studio 72-19
308 No. Michigan Ave., Chicago

ANY PHOTO ENLARGED

Size 8x10 inches or smaller if desired. Same price for full length or bust form, groups, landscapes, pet animals, etc., or enlargements of any part of group picture. Safe return of original photo guaranteed.

47c

SEND NO MONEY Just mail photo or snapshot (any size) and within a week you will receive your beautiful life-like enlargement, guaranteed fadeless. Pay postman 47c plus postage—or send 49c with order and we pay postage. Big 16x20-inch enlargement sent C. O. D. 78c plus postage or send 80c and we pay postage. Take advantage of this amazing offer now. Send your photos today. Specify size wanted.

STANDARD ART STUDIOS
104 S. Jefferson St. Dept. 1324-W, CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

Stoves AT FACTORY PRICES!

Send for FREE Catalog

Over 200 Styles and Sizes of Stoves, Ranges, Furnaces—174 ranges, 12 heating stoves, 22 furnaces. More Bargains than in 20 Big Stores. New styles, new features, new colors. Cash or easy terms. Year to Pay—30 days free trial—360 days approval test—$100,000 Bank Bond Guarantee—24-hour shipments.

The Kalamazoo Stove Co., Mfrs.
405 Rochester Av., Kalamazoo, Mich.

Over 850,000 Satisfied Users
34 Years in Business
Write for FREE Catalog

"A Kalamazoo Direct to You"

Their Studio Addresses

(Continued from page 7)

BRADLEY, GRACE: Paramount.
BRADY, ALICE: Free lance. Write her at RKO-Radio.
BREAKSTONE, GEORGE: Free lance. Write him at Universal.
BRENDEL, EL: Warner Bros.
BRENT, EVELYN: Free lance. Write her at Paramount.
BRENT, GEORGE: Warner Bros.
BREWSTER, JUNE: RKO-Radio.
BRIAN, MARY: Free lance. Write her at Paramount.
BRODERICK, HELEN: RKO-Radio.
BRISSON, CARL: Paramount.
BROOK, CLIVE: RKO-Radio.
BROWN, JOE E.: Warner Bros.
BROWN, JOHN MACK: Columbia.
BROWN, TOM: RKO-Radio.
BRUCE, NIGEL: Fox.
BRUCE, VIRGINIA: RKO-Radio.
BURGESS, DOROTHY: Free lance. Write her at RKO-Radio.
BURKE, BILLIE: Free lance. Write her at RKO-Radio.
BURNS, GEORGE: Paramount.
BUSHMAN, RALPH: M-G-M.
BUTLER, JIMMY: Paramount.
BUTTERWORTH, CHARLES: M-G-M.
CABOT, BRUCE: RKO-Radio.
CAGNEY, BILL: Monogram.
CAGNEY, JAMES: Warner Bros.
CAMPBELL, MRS. PAT: M-G-M.
CANTOR, EDDIE: Samuel Goldwyn.
CARLISLE, KITTY: Paramount.
CARLISLE, MARY: M-G-M.
CARMINATI, TULLIO: 20th Century.
CARRILLO, LEO: M-G-M.
CARROLL, MADELEINE: Fox.
CARROLL, NANCY: Columbia.
CARUSO, ENRICO JR.: Warner Bros.
CAVANAGH, PAUL: Free lance. Write him at Universal.
CHANDLER, CHICK: RKO-Radio.
CHANDLER, HELEN: Free lance. Write her at United Artists.
CHAPLIN, CHARLES: United Artists.
CHATTERTON, RUTH: Free lance. Write her at Warner Bros.
CHEVALIER, MAURICE: M-G-M.
CHRISTIANS, MADY: M-G-M.
CLARKE, MAE: M-G-M.
CLIVE, COLIN: Warner Bros.
COHAN, GEORGE M.: Fox.
COLBERT, CLAUDETTE: Paramount.
COLLINS, CORA SUE: Free lance. Write her at M-G-M.
COLMAN, RONALD: 20th Century.
CONNOLLY, WALTER: Columbia.
COOK, DONALD: Columbia.
COOPER, GARY: Paramount.
COOPER, JACKIE: M-G-M.
CORTEZ, RICARDO: Warner Bros.
COURTNEY, INEZ: Columbia.
CRABBE, LARRY: Paramount.
CRAVEN, FRANK: Free lance. Write him at Columbia.
CRAWFORD, JOAN: M-G-M.
CROMWELL, RICHARD: Columbia.
CROSBY, BING: Paramount.
CROSMAN, HENRIETTA: Fox.
CUMMINGS, CONSTANCE: Free lance. Write her at 20th Century.
DANIELS, BEBE: Free lance. Write her at Warners.
DARE, DOROTHY: Warner Bros.
DARRO, FRANKIE: Free lance. Write him at Mascot.
DAVIES, MARION: M-G-M.
DAVIS, BETTE: Warner Bros.
DEE, FRANCES: RKO-Radio.
DEL RIO, DOLORES: Warner Bros.
DE MILLE, KATHERINE: Paramount.
DEVINE, ANDY: Free lance. Write him at Universal.
DIETRICH, MARLENE: Paramount.
DIX, RICHARD: RKO-Radio.
DODD, CLAIRE: Warner Bros.
DONAT, ROBERT: United Artists.
DONNELLY, RUTH: Warner Bros.
DOUGLAS, MELVYN: Free lance. Write him at RKO-Radio.
DOYLE, MAXINE: Warner Bros.
DRAGONETTE, JESSICA: Paramount.
DRAKE, FRANCES: Paramount.
DUMBRILLE, DOUGLAS: Columbia.
DUNA, STEFFI: RKO-Radio.
DUNN, JAMES: Fox.
DUNNE, IRENE: RKO-Radio.
DURANT, JACK: Fox.
DURANTE, JIMMY: M-G-M.
DVORAK, ANN: Warner Bros.
EDDY, NELSON: M-G-M.
EILERS, SALLY: Universal.
ELDREDGE, JOHN: Free lance. Write him at Warner Bros.
ELLIS, PATRICIA: Warner Bros.
ERROL, LEON: Free lance. Write him at Columbia.
ERWIN, STUART: M-G-M.
EVANS, MADGE: M-G-M.
EVANS, MURIEL: M-G-M.
FAIRBANKS, DOUGLAS JR.: United Artists.
FAIRBANKS, DOUGLAS SR.: United Artists.
FARRELL, CHARLES: Fox.
FARRELL, GLENDA: Warner Bros.
FAZENDA, LOUISE: M-G-M.
FAVERSHAM, PHILLIP: Warner Bros.
FAYE, ALICE: Fox.
FEARS, PEGGY: Fox.
FETCHIT, STEPIN: Fox.
FIELDS, W. C.: Paramount.
FORAN, NICK: Fox.
FORBES, HAZEL: RKO-Radio.
FORBES, RALPH: Free lance. Write him at Monogram.
FORD, WALLACE: Free lance. Write him at Columbia.
FOSTER, NORMAN: Fox.
FOSTER, PRESTON: M-G-M.
FOX, SIDNEY: RKO-Radio.
FRANCIS, KAY: Warner Bros.
FRAWLEY, WILLIAM: Paramount.
FRITCHIE, BARBARA: Paramount.
FULLER, FRANCES: Paramount.
FURNESS, BETTY: M-G-M.
GABLE, CLARK: M-G-M.
GALLAGHER, SKEETS: RKO-Radio.
GALLIAN, KETTI: Fox.
GARAT, HENRI: Fox.
GARBO, GRETA: M-G-M.
GARGAN, WILLIAM: RKO-Radio.
GAYNOR, JANET: Fox.
GIBSON, WYNNE: Free lance. Write her at Columbia.
GILBERT, JOHN: Free lance. Write him at Columbia.
GILL, GWENLLIAN: Paramount.
GOMBELL, MINNA: Free lance. Write her at Fox.
GORDON, C. HENRY: M-G-M.
GRANT, CARY: Paramount.
GREEN, HARRY: Fox.
HADEN, JULIE: Free lance. Write her at RKO-Radio.
HADEN, SARAH: Free lance. Write her at RKO Radio.
HAINES, WILLIAM: Mascot.
HALE, ALAN: RKO-Radio.
HALEY, JACK: Paramount.
HAMILTON, NEIL: Free lance. Write him at Universal.
HARDIE, RUSSELL: M-G-M.
HARDING, ANN: RKO-Radio.
HARDY, OLIVER: M-G-M.
HARLOW, JEAN: M-G-M.
HARVEY, LILIAN: Free lance. Write her at Fox.
HARVEY, FORRESTER: Free lance. Write him at M-G-M.
HARVEY, LILIAN: Free lance. Write her at Fox.
HATTON, RAYMOND: Free lance. Write him at Paramount.
HAYES, HELEN: M-G-M.
HEALY, TED: M-G-M.
HENRY, CHARLOTTE: Paramount.
HEPBURN, KATHARINE: RKO-Radio.
HERSHOLT, JEAN: M-G-M.
HOBSON, VALERIE: Universal.
HOLLOWAY, STERLING: Free lance. Write him at M-G-M.
HOLMES, PHILLIPS: Free lance. Write him at Fox.
HOLT, DAVID: Paramount.
HOLT, JACK: Columbia.
HOPKINS, MIRIAM: RKO-Radio.
HORTON, EDWARD EVERETT: Universal.
HOWARD, LESLIE: Warner Bros.
HUDSON, ROCHELLE: Fox.
HULL, HENRY: Universal.
HUNTLEY, G. P. JR.: Universal.
HUSTON, WALTER: Free lance. Write him at RKO-Radio.
HUTCHINSON, JOSEPHINE: Warner Bros.
HYAMS, LEILA: Universal.
JARRETT, ARTHUR: RKO-Radio.
JENKINS, ALLEN: Warner Bros.
JEWELL, ISABEL: M-G-M.
JOHNSON, KAY: RKO-Radio.
JOLSON, AL: Warner Bros.
JONES, BUCK: Universal.
JORDON, DOROTHY: RKO-Radio.
JORY, VICTOR: Columbia.
JUDGE, ARLINE: Free lance. Write her at Fox.
KARLOFF, BORIS: Universal.
KARNS, ROSCOE: Paramount.

KEATON, BUSTER: Fox.
KEATING, FRED: Columbia.
KEELER, RUBY: Warner Bros.
KEENE, TOM: Free lance. Write him at United Artists.
KELLY, PATSY: M-G-M.
KELLY, PAUL: 20th Century.
KELTON, PERT: RKO-Radio.
KENYON, DORIS: Free lance. Write her at Universal.
KIBBEE, GUY: Warner Bros.
KNAPP, EVALYN: Universal.
KNIGHT, JUNE: Free lance. Write her at Universal.
KRUGER, OTTO: M-G-M.
LALLY, HOWARD: Fox.
LANDI, ELISSA: Columbia.
LANGDON, HARRY: Columbia.
LANE, LOLA: Free lance. Write her at Mascot.
LANG, JUNE: Fox.
LA RUE, JACK: Free lance. Write him at Universal.
LAUGHTON, CHARLES: M-G-M.
LAUREL, STAN: M-G-M.
LAWTON, FRANK: Universal.
LAYE, EVELYN: M-G-M.
LEDERER, FRANCIS: RKO-Radio.
LEE, DOROTHY: RKO-Radio.
LEROY, BABY: Paramount.
LEROY, HAL: Warner Bros.
LEYTON, DRUE: Fox.
LIGHTNER, WINNIE: Free lance. Write her at Columbia.
LINDEN, ERIC: Free lance. Write him at Universal.
LINDSAY, MARGARET: Warner Bros.
LLOYD, HAROLD: Write him at Fox.
LODGE, JOHN: Paramount.
LOMBARD, CAROLE: Paramount.
LORD, PAULINE: Paramount.
LOUISE, ANITA: Warner Bros.
LOVE, MONTAGU: Free lance. Write him at Paramount.
LOWE, EDMUND: Columbia.
LOY, MYRNA: M-G-M.
LUGOSI, BELA: Universal.
LUKAS, PAUL: Universal.
LUND, LUCILLE: Mascot.
LUPINO, IDA: Paramount.
LYON, BEN: Free lance. Write him at RKO-Radio.
MacDONALD, JEANETTE: M-G-M.
MACK, HELEN: Paramount.
MacMAHON, ALINE: Warner Bros.
MANNERS, DAVID: Free lance. Write him at United Artists.
MANNORS, SHEILA: Columbia.
MARCH, FREDRIC: 20th Century.
MARGO: Paramount.
MARITZA, SARI: Free lance. Write her at Mascot.
MARSH, JOAN: RKO-Radio.
MARSH, MARIAN: Monogram.
MARSHALL, HERBERT: M-G-M.
MAYNARD, KEN: Mascot.
McCOY, COL. TIM: Columbia.
McCREA, JOEL: RKO-Radio.
McHUGH, FRANK: Warner Bros.
McKINNEY, FLORINE: M-G-M.
McLAGLEN, VICTOR: Free lance. Write him at Fox.
MEIGHAN, THOMAS: Free lance. Write him at Fox.
MENJOU, ADOLPHE: Warner Bros.
MERCER, BERYL: Free lance. Write her at RKO-Radio.
MERKEL, UNA: M-G-M.
MERMAN, ETHEL: Paramount.
MICHAEL, GERTRUDE: Paramount.
MILJAN, JOHN: Free lance. Write him at Monogram.
MITCHELL, FRANK: Fox.
MITCHELL, GENEVA: Columbia.
MONTENEGRO, CONCHITA: Fox.
MONTGOMERY, DOUGLASS: Universal.
MONTGOMERY, ROBERT: M-G-M.
MOORE, COLLEEN: RKO-Radio.
MOORE, DICKIE: Free lance. Write him at Universal.
MOORE, ERIN O'BRIEN: Free lance. Write her at RKO-Radio.
MOORE, GRACE: Columbia.
MOORE, VICTOR: Universal.
MORAN, POLLY: M-G-M.
MORGAN, FRANK: RKO-Radio.
MORGAN, RALPH: Free lance. Write him at Fox.
MORGAN, HELEN: Warners.
MORLEY, KAREN: M-G-M.
MORRIS, CHESTER: Universal
MORRISON, JOE: Paramount.
MOWBRAY, ALAN: Free lance. Write him at Universal.
MUIR, JEAN: Warners.
MULHALL, JACK: Free lance. Write him at Mascot.
MUNDIN, HERBERT: Fox.
MUNI, PAUL: Warner Bros.
MURPHY, GEORGE: Columbia.
NAGEL, CONRAD: Free lance. Write him at RKO-Radio.
NEAGLE, ANNA: United Artists.
NIXON, MARIAN: Free lance. Write her at RKO-Radio.
NOVARRO, RAMON: M-G-M.
OAKIE, JACK: Paramount.
O'BRIEN, GEORGE: Fox.
O'BRIEN, PAT: Warner Bros.
OLIVER, EDNA MAY: Universal.
O'SULLIVAN, MAUREEN: M-G-M.
OVERMAN, LYNNE: Paramount.
OWEN, REGINALD: Free lance. Write him at Universal.
PALLETTE, EUGENE: Free lance. Write him at Warner Bros.
PARKER, JEAN: M-G-M.
PARRISH, GIGI: Monogram.
PATRICK, GAIL: Paramount.
PATTERSON, PAT: Fox.
PENDLETON, NAT: M-G-M.
PENNER, JOE: Paramount.
PICKFORD, MARY: United Artists.
PINE, VIRGINIA: Columbia.
PITTS, ZASU: Universal.
POWELL, DICK: Warner Bros.
POWELL, WILLIAM: M-G-M.
PRINGLE, AILEEN: Free lance. Write her at Monogram.
PRYOR, ROGER: Universal.
QUIGLEY, JUANITA: Universal.
QUILLAN, EDDIE: Free lance. Write him at RKO-Radio.
RAFT, GEORGE: Paramount.
RAINS, CLAUDE: Universal.
RALSTON, ESTHER: M-G-M.
RAND, SALLY: Paramount.
RATOFF, GREGORY: RKO-Radio.
RAY, CHARLES: Free lance. Write him at RKO-Radio.
RAYMOND, GENE: Columbia.
REED, PHILLIP: Warner Bros.
RICE, FLORENCE: Columbia.
ROBBINS, BARBARA: RKO-Radio.
ROBERTI, LYDA: Paramount.
ROBINSON, EDWARD G.: Warner Bros.
ROBSON, MAY: M-G-M.
ROGERS, GINGER: RKO-Radio.
ROGERS, CHARLES: Free lance. Write him at Paramount.
ROGERS, WILL: Fox.
ROLAND, GILBERT: Fox.
ROSS, LANNY: Paramount.
ROULIEN, RAUL: Fox.
RUGGLES, CHARLES: Paramount.
SABIN, CHARLES: Columbia.
SAVO, JIMMY: Paramount.
SCHILDKRAUT, JOSEPH: Columbia.
SCOTT, RANDOLPH: Paramount.
SEWARD, BILLIE: Columbia.
SHANNON, PEGGY: Free lance. Write her at Universal.
SHEA, GLORIA: Monogram.
SHEARER, NORMA: M-G-M.
SHIRLEY, ANNE: RKO-Radio.
SIDNEY, SYLVIA: Paramount.
SKIPWORTH, ALISON: Paramount.
SLEEPER, MARTHA: M-G-M.
SMITH, C. AUBREY: United Artists.
SMITH, QUEENIE: Paramount.
SOTHERN, ANN: Columbia.
STANDING, SIR GUY: Paramount.
STANWYCK, BARBARA: Warner Bros.
STARRETT, CHARLES: Warner Bros.
STEN, ANNA: Samuel Goldwyn.
STEVENS, ONSLOW: Universal.
STONE, LEWIS: M-G-M.
STUART, GLORIA: Universal.
SULLAVAN, MARGARET: Universal.
SULLIVAN, FRANCIS L.: Universal.
SUMMERVILLE, SLIM: Universal.
SWANSON, GLORIA: M-G-M.
TALBOT, LYLE: Warner Bros.
TAYLOR, KENT: Paramount.
TEASDALE, VERREE: Warner Bros.
TEMPLE, SHIRLEY: Fox.
THOMAS, FRANKIE: RKO-Radio.
THOMAS, JAMESON: Monogram.
TOBIN, GENEVIEVE: Warner Bros.
TODD, THELMA, RKO-Radio.
TONE, FRANCHOT: M-G-M.
TORRENCE, DAVID: Free lance. Write him at M-G-M.
TRACY, LEE: Paramount.
TRACY, SPENCER: Fox.
TREE, DOROTHY: Warner Bros.
TREVOR, CLAIRE: Fox.
TURPIN, BEN: Free lance. Write him at Mascot.
TWELVETREES, HELEN: Fox.
VALLEE, RUDY: Warner Bros.
VELEZ, LUPE: M-G-M.
VENABLE, EVELYN: Paramount.
VINSON, HELEN: Free lance. Write her at Columbia.
WALTHALL, H. B.: Monogram.
WALTERS, POLLY: Universal.
WARE, IRENE: Free lance. Write her at Universal.
WATERS, ETHEL: Free lance. Write her at Universal.
WAYNE, JOHN: Monogram.
WEISSMULLER, JOHNNY: M-G-M.
WELLS, JACQUELINE: Free lance. Write her at Monogram.
WEST, MAE: Paramount.
WESTCOTT, GORDON: Warner Bros.

10¢

[West of Rocky Mts. two sizes—10¢ and 15¢]

FASHION NOTE—Shoe styles this Fall feature browns and colors. There's a SHINOLA POLISH to clean and shine every shade of leather. For browns, use Shinola Brown, Tan or Ox-Blood. For other colors, Shinola Neutral Polish.

EASY! Spread on So-Lo

RUBBER GOODS

AUTO TIRES

LEATHER GOODS

Take an old knife and a can of So-Lo! Dig out a chunk of So-Lo and spread it on the sole like butter. Next morning it's dry and tough! Neat! Waterproof! Non-skid! Wears better than leather.

Hundreds of Uses

So-Lo mends the sole or heel, 1c. Fixes most anything—canvas, wiring, handles, goloshes, rubber boots, etc. More than 247 other money saving uses.

Tear out this ad—get So-Lo at 5 and 10c or hardware stores.

So-Lo

Over 5 Million Satisfied Users

KEEP IN TUNE!

Something new, something different—a magazine devoted entirely to Tin Pan Alley. Words and music to popular songs. Stories about your favorite blues singer. Special stories such as "Censor Nonsense" which tells how censors tried to clean up certain songs but made them twice as bad.

Here are some of the songs you'll find in the December issue: I'M WHISTLIN' FOR MY HONEY • GIGOLETTE • DREAM OF ME • IS I GOTTA GO TO SCHOOL, MA? • DID YOU EVER SEE A DREAM WALKING? • LOVE THY NEIGHBOR • ILL WIND • HOW'S ABOUT TOMORROW NIGHT? • SHE REMINDS ME OF YOU • CHRISTMAS NIGHT IN HARLEM • WITH MY EYES WIDE OPEN I'M DREAMING • EMALINE • MY BABY'S ON STRIKE • IF IT ISN'T LOVE • GIVE ME A HEART TO SING TO • MANY THANKS FOR THE DANCE • HOW CAN YOU FACE ME • GEORGIE MAY • AN ORCHID TO YOU • A BOY AND A GIRL WERE DANCING • UNDERNEATH THE HARLEM MOON • HOME JAMES! AND DON'T SPARE THE HORSES • MOONGLOW • JUDY • HE DIDN'T EVEN SAY GOOD-BYE • SNAPSHOTS OF YOU • P.S. I LOVE YOU • IF YOU LOVE ME, SAY SO • WAY DOWN SOUTH IN NORTH CAROLINA • BECAUSE OF YOU • FOR ME AND MY GAL • BEAUTIFUL LAND OF MY DREAMS • IN THE MIDDLE OF A KISS • LA CUCARACHA •

POPULAR SONGS

now on sale ten cents

BEAU-T-HOOD

Patented

Beau-T-Hood is the most direct method to loveliness ever devised. Made of famous Lastex fabric it prevents and helps to reduce double chin, preserves and fashions the contour of the face, feeds the nutritive properties of your favorite creams and lotions into your pores, reviving, stimulating, beautifying, while you sleep in comfort. Price, $3.50, check or money order. Folder on Request. BEAU-T-HOOD COMPANY, South Orange, New Jersey.

WESTLEY, HELEN: Free lance. Write her at RKO-Radio.
WHEELER, BERT: RKO-Radio.
WHITE, ALICE: Universal.
WIECK, DOROTHEA: Paramount.
WILCOXON, HENRY: Paramount.
WILLIAM, WARREN: Warner Bros.
WILLIAMS, HUGH: Fox.
WILSON, DOROTHY: Paramount.
WILSON, LOIS: Free lance. Write her at Universal.
WING, PAT: Warner Bros.
WING, TOBY: Paramount.
WONG, ANNA MAY: Paramount.
WOODS, DONALD: Warner Bros.
WOOLSEY, BOB: RKO-Radio.
WRAY, FAY: Columbia.
WYATT, JANE: Universal.
WYNYARD, DIANA: M-G-M.
YOUNG, ELIZABETH: Universal.
YOUNG, LORETTA: M-G-M.
YOUNG, POLLY ANN: Free lance. Write her at Fox.
YOUNG, ROBERT: M-G-M.
YOUNG, ROLAND: Paramount.
YOUNG, TAMMANY: Free lance. Write him at Paramount.

Reviews—A Tour of Today's Talkies

(Continued from page 51)

In fact, the finished picture seems to prove that there are too many people to handle. Story concerns a racketeer, Eddie Lowe, who becomes a famous radio commentator. He muffs his big chance with a phony broadcast and Gloria Stuart rescues him from overdrinking and eventual suicide in time for a happy ending. In the meantime, the idea allows for a lot of radio personalities to be introduced: Ruth Etting, Phil Baker, Ethel Waters, The Downey Sisters, Graham McNamee and Gus Arnheim's music. The comedy was furnished by Henry Armetta and a terrifically funny sequence with Karloff, Chester Morris, Roger Pryor and Paul Lukas. But, with it all, it leaves something to be desired. Just pleasant enough, that's all.

B: DANGEROUS CORNER (RKO-Radio)

Unusually interesting picture. In spite of the fact that there is little or no action —the entire story takes place in one room —this film is so "different" that we think you will enjoy it. About a group of people, whose conversation gets around to a robbery and suicide of three years before. Gradually, one after another the characters involve themselves in bits of hitherto unrevealed evidence and the story becomes exciting and tense. Conrad Nagel comes back with a fine performance and Virginia Bruce and Erin O'Brien Moore are well cast. Ian Keith, Melvyn Douglas and Doris Lloyd contribute to the picture in no small way. It is difficult to place this picture in a particular category, possibly a drawing-room mystery is close enough. Not sensational, but entertaining all the way.

C: THE LEMON DROP KID (Paramount)

Poor ol' Tracy, still giving us those time-worn "double-takes" and vaudeville eyebrows to get over his drammer. If this didn't make two bad ones in a row for Lee Tracy, we might think that some of the credit for this disappointing picture should fall on Mr. Neilan, the director, but we can't. And there was nothing wrong with Damon Runyon's story so we're even more taken aback than usual. Little Helen Mack was badly photographed and she's so thin, it's pitiful. The only credible performance is turned in by William Frawley as the Professor—he even sings! Baby LeRoy just walks through it; he must have realized the result wouldn't do him any good. We can't honestly say much for this one.

C: DEATH ON THE DIAMOND (M-G-M)

If you are a baseball fan, you might like it from that angle; if you aren't, there isn't much in the way of entertainment for you. Love on the diamond, murders, big gamblers, betting the wrong way. Through all this wanders Bob Young as a baseball pitcher who falls in love with Madge Evans, the daughter of the manager. Some of the situations are farfetched and the results are not very satisfying. The love story fails to be convincing and the mystery is not overloaded with suspense. In spite of a good cast, including Nat Pendleton, Paul Kelly and Ted Healy, the picture falls into the "average entertainment" class. Let your sporting-blood guide you.

C: WAGON WHEELS (Paramount)

The old wagon-trail stuff, comedy guides, Indian attacks, the hero and a beautiful widow with her small son. You can just see the wagons tipping over into the river, can't you? Well, they do, you can be sure. Gail Patrick is swell as the widow; she puts a real punch into her role. Randolph Scott does his usual stuff and hints a bit at love-making with Gail. The remainder of the cast, including Monte Blue and Raymond Hatton, does pretty well. Nothing new, but you Western fans may get a kick out of it.

C: THE DUDE RANGER (Fox)

An average Western. There is nothing new and nothing startling about this picture. This time, the young eastern lad, George O'Brien, inherits the ranch and comes west to find that all his cattle are disappearing. It's the first time George has had to come so far to find out. Irene Hervey is the gal and she's okay, too. If you like Westerns and aren't too fussy about having seen and read the plot many times before, this might be all right for you. Even for a Western, though, this is no rave. Better think twice.

C: CRIMSON ROMANCE (Mascot)

Outdated war picture. The theme is too time-worn and the idea too gruesome and bloody to suit us. Ben Lyon joins the German army with his buddy, James Bush, and they both fall for a little ambulance driver, Sari Maritza. Of course, when the United States enters the war, Ben refuses to fight on the German side and is about to face the firing squad when his buddy helps him escape. A rather unnecessary picture, we thought.

D: DOWN TO THEIR LAST YACHT (RKO-Radio)

It looks as if the studio had originally planned to make a musical-to-end-all-musicals—and they succeeded in ending their own even before the first reel was over. Such a jumbled-up mess deserves mention if for no other reason than to warn our good friends to save their money. The casting is almost a matter of genius, they didn't get a single character in the right role. The story wanders around until it gets lost and then the actors and the director kick it around for the remainder of the seven reels. Ned Sparks tried to make unfunny dialogue sound funny. Sidney Fox, Mary Boland, Polly Moran and Sterling Holloway also ran. Skip it.

D: A GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST (Monogram)

The picture is lost, too! All the censors should see this little dittie—it would serve them right. It's just too, too "clean and wholesome" and so painfully dull and lethargic that we could hardly sit through it. Marian Marsh looks even better than usual and Ralph Morgan tries his best, but the tempo of the piece is too slow to allow for any opportunity to build the interest very high. Maybe this is what the reformers want us to see but, I, for one, couldn't take it and I don't think the average fan is going to go for it either.

B: WE LIVE AGAIN (Sam Goldwyn)

Co-starring Anna Sten and Fredric March in a talkie version of the successful silent picture, "Resurrection." Sten is really beautiful and especially in the later sequences shows a dramatic intensity that is astonishing. There's much more than beauty and sex appeal to this girl. March, of course, contributes his usual sincere performance. While the photography is excellent, the picture, in general, suffers from the fact that the story is too familiar. Then there is the failure to produce an authentic atmosphere, an unforgivable failure in a production as lavish as this. However, it will give you an opportunity to see Anna Sten once more and judge for yourself. When is Goldwyn going to let the girl wear some smart and glamorous clothes in a picture? She's lovely enough to be a favorite, given the proper setting.

C: WEDNESDAY'S CHILD (RKO-Radio)

The story concerns the trials and tribulations of a youngster when his parents divorce. Karen Morley and Edward Arnold have the difficult and unsympathetic task of playing the papa and mama to the bewildered little Frankie Thomas and they do as well as possible. Arnold's characterization is something you don't want to miss. The young boy uses too much of his stage technique and suffers by comparison with another lad in the cast, David Durand. Altogether, it's a bit slow and uninteresting.

C: LOVE TIME (Fox)

About Franz Schubert. While Nils Asther tries his level best to raise the character to one consistent level and keep it there, the picture jumps around to such an extent that he doesn't have a chance. Pat Paterson, as the gal who loves him even after she finds out she's a Princess, is interesting but the story holds her back, too. The surrounding cast is well chosen and capably directed, with Henry Kolker, H. B. Walthall, Lucien Littlefield and James Burke doing nice work. The resulting picture, though, is not as good as its component parts and we hesitate to recommend it with more than a polite "Well, maybe." It won't bore you, exactly, but you'll never rave.

B: STUDENT TOUR (M-G-M)

With Durante and Butterworth conducting. Yes, and believe you me, it wouldn't be worth much without those two comedy experts, either. The picture is about a summer cruise with a professor, Charlie Butterworth, on board to get the backward lads and lassies in trim for exams. The romantic interest is well carried by Maxine Doyle and Phil Regan, who put over their songs beautifully. "I See the Moon Over Your Shoulder" is probably the best one. The comedy situations are not of the belly-laugh type but the fact that you do have that kind of a laugh once or twice is a pat on the back for Butterworth and Durante.

Modern Screen's Dramatic School

(Continued from page 64)

are said correctly, don't ever let me catch you using them incorrectly.

Drama. The first "a" should be the same as in father.

Water. The "a" is pronounced as "or." It is never pronounced with a short "a."

Absolutely. Give that "u" its full, long value. Never say "absoolotly."

Generally. Each syllable is pronounced. Don't slight the "er" and say "genrally."

Genuine. Short "i," as in "it." Never "genu-eye-ne."

Abdomen. The second syllable is accented like this: ab-do'-men. It is never *ab'*domen. Other words which follow this rule are ac*u*men, horizon, dic*ta*tor, spec*ta*tor.

Caramel. Pronounce each syllable distinctly, accent on the first syllable, and first "a" short. Never "carmel."

Khaki. The "a" as in "ah."

Aunt. The "au" sound is like "ah."

Abhor. Long "o," accent on second syllable.

Absent. This word brings up a rule you must remember. When the same word serves duty as noun, adjective or verb, accent the noun and adjective on the first syllable. The verb on the last. For instance: "My brother is *ab*sent." But (when the word is a verb) "He ab*sent*ed himself from class."

Theatre. Accent on first syllable: *the*atre. Never, never "the-ay-ter!"

Acts. Sound both the "c" and the "t." "Akts." Not "ax."

Asked. Be sure to get the "k" sound into this one.

Adventure. Like education. Keep the "t" a true sound. Don't say "advenshure."

Advertisement. This can be pronounced either way: Adv*er*tisement (with a short "i") or adver*tise*ment (with a long "i"). The first way is preferred.

Mischievous. Accent on first syllable: *mis*chievous. It is never pronounced any other way. So watch out.

Pantomime. Be sure the last "m" is an "m," and not an "n."

Mock. Short "o." Never "mawk."

GOING on THIRTY and Worried about GRAY HAIR

Keep your age your own secret. No one under 70 need show a spear of gray. Will you be out-smarted by women your own age or "let out" of your job for some one younger only in appearance?

FARR'S FOR GRAY HAIR

will keep it youthful, natural looking, soft and lustrous; easy to use without instruction in hygienic privacy AT HOME. Odorless, greaseless, will not rub off nor interfere with curling. Once you've got the shade you wish a few occasional touches keep a uniform color. $1 35. For sale everywhere

FREE SAMPLE

BROOKLINE CHEMICAL CO. M.G.24
79 Sudbury Street, Boston, Mass.
Send for FREE SAMPLE in plain wrapping.
Name.....
Street.....
City.....State.....
STATE ORIGINAL COLOR OF HAIR

BLACKHEADS!

NEVER SQUEEZE BLACKHEADS. IT CAUSES SCARS, INFECTION!

Dissolve Blackheads scientifically with amazing KLEERPLEX WASH. This NEW DISCOVERY contains 5 scientific ingredients. Also refines Large Pores, stops embarrassing Greasiness, Shine. Clears Muddy, Sallow, Tanned Skin. Has marvelous medicated pore purifying powers. Gets at the cause QUICKLY! SAFELY! RENEWS! LIGHTENS! BEAUTIFIES your skin. Gives you that clean-cut attractive look. SEE INSTANT IMPROVEMENT. No chemicals. No staying home. A guaranteed pure natural product, approved by Health Authorities and thousands of happy users—Men and Women. Nothing like it! Stop wasting time and money on ordinary products. Your skin deserves the best. Get your 2 mos' supply of Kleerplex Wash TODAY. At your drug or department store—or send $1.—(plus .10 postage) to KLEERPLEX (Dept MR7) 1 W. 34th St., N. Y. C., or pay postman (plus C. O. D. charge). Outside U. S. $1.25 and no C. O. D.s. MONEY BACK GUARANTEE!

NO JOKE TO BE DEAF

—Every deaf person knows that—

Mr. Way made himself hear his watch tick after being deaf for twenty-five years, with his Artificial Ear Drums. He wore them day and night. They stopped his head noises. They are invisible and comfortable, no wires or batteries. Write for TRUE STORY. Also booklet on Deafness.

Artificial Ear Drum

THE WAY COMPANY
717 Hofmann Bldg. Detroit, Michigan

MIND POWER

A FREE BOOK

Develop your personal, creative, power! Awaken the silent, sleeping, forces in your own consciousness! Become Master of your own life. Push aside all obstacles with a new energy you have overlooked. The ROSICRUCIANS know how, and will help you apply the greatest of all powers in man's control. Create health and abundance for yourself. Write for FREE book "The Wisdom of the Sages." It tells how you may receive these teachings for study and use. It means the dawn of a new day for you. Address:—
Scribe C. K. F
ROSICRUCIAN BROTHERHOOD
SAN JOSE (AMORC) CALIFORNIA

Now you can get the same Coiffure as the stars . . . with

HOLLYWOOD Rapid-Dry CURLERS

Scintillating screen stars have to be neat and immaculate—set the style in hair dress as well as the vogue in clothes. So naturally they use Hollywood Rapid-Dry Curlers to get the full, soft, lasting curls that distinguish the truly smart coiffure.

Lu Anne Meredith, 1934 Wampas Baby Star

Only Hollywood Rapid-Dry Curlers have the soft rubber lock that keeps both hair and curler securely in place. As the name implies, Hollywood Rapid-Dry Curlers are quick-drying—the perforations permit abundant air circulation. And they fit so snugly that you can wear them comfortably while you sleep. Insist upon Hollywood Rapid-Dry Curlers.

At all Notion Counters 5c Ea.

Gray Hair

Best Remedy is Made At Home

You can now make at home a better gray hair remedy than you can buy by following this simple recipe: To half pint of water add one ounce bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and one-fourth ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it yourself at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained.

Barbo imparts color to streaked, faded or gray hair, making it soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.

PERFUME

To Match YOUR Type and Personality

Which Screen Star is YOUR Type?

JOAN CRAWFORD
M-G-M Star

Gerly, celebrated Parfumeur has perfume-typed the famous Stars of stage and screen and now offers these personal perfume creations to glorify YOUR loveliness as it does theirs.

Gerly discovered 11 different types and personalities in which all Stars, as well as every American woman could be included. Then France was searched for its rarest oils and perfume ingredients. These were combined and blended by the genius of master Parfumeurs to develop the perfect fragrance for each type.

Your 10c store is now displaying these intriguing Gerly French Perfumes created expressly for the famous screen Stars listed below. From these you can choose the correct fragrance to match your own particular type. If your favorite chain store cannot supply you, mail the coupon today.

HOWE CO. Inc. of Calif.
728 South Hill, Los Angeles, Dept. 23

Please send me introductory vial of Gerly French Perfume created for Screen Stars listed below. I enclose 10c (coin or stamps) for each type checked. ( ) Joan Crawford, Brunette ( ) Jean Harlow, Platinum ( ) Thelma Todd, Blonde ( ) Claudette Colbert, Brunette ( ) Myrna Loy, Auburn ( ) Anita Page, Blonde ( ) Mary Astor, Auburn ( ) Leila Hyams, Blonde.

FREE OFFER . . . send snapshot with order, and state color of hair, complexion and eyes for your special FREE Perfume Analysis.

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

Nape. Long "a." It is never the "nap" of the neck.

Office. The "o" as in orange. Never let me catch you saying "awffice."

Length. Be sure to give the "g" its due. It is never "lenth."

America. If you say "Amurica," I'll scream.

Economic. This may have either the long or short "e."

June. As in blue, give the "u" what it should have. Never "Joon."

Jewel. Pronounce both syllables. Never "jool."

Interest. Each syllable is pronounced. In-ter-est. It is not "intrest." Also inter-est-ing. The accent is on the first syllable.

Docile. The "o" may be either short or long.

Idea. Accent on second syllable.

Humor and humble. The "h" in both of these may be either pronounced or silent.

Chic. "Sheek." Not "chick."

Either and neither, take your choice—"eether" or "eyether."

THERE! That's a pretty hard lesson, but a very important one and I hope you'll profit by it. But remember that if there are any words which I've failed to include here that trouble you, please write me. I'm only too glad to tell you the correct pronunciation of any word as well as to answer any question concerning dramatic art that you care to ask me. And now before this lesson is finished I want to give you some advice that Claudette Colbert gave me to give you.

You all know what a grand actress she is and I think it was terribly sweet of her to send you dramatic students this message. Here it is:

"I am an exponent of natural acting. I think that most people try either to imitate some other actor or to dramatize themselves the minute they are on the stage or screen. They try to be different from what they are in real life.

"There are probably little mannerisms of your own which people like. You know, in your own heart, when you are pleasing others. Retain these little mannerisms, if it is at all possible, when you're enacting a role. This, of course, does not apply to character parts, but very seldom do young people play character roles.

"Do not clip your words when you speak. Read your lines before a mirror, studying yourself carefully to see that you are not exaggerating the part or obviously 'acting.' Do this over and over until you are satisfied that you are interpreting the lines in exactly the way you would in everyday life.

"The mirror, incidentally, will really surprise you, if you actually study your face in it. You will no doubt find many little mannerisms of which you are totally unconscious. Some of them will be pleasing and others you will want to correct, once you realize that people see you on the stage or screen as you see yourself in the mirror.

"Don't, for heaven's sake, try to exaggerate any of these mannerisms. If you find them becoming unnatural discard them entirely. There is nothing quite so obvious as an acquired trick of the hands or face and nothing so tiresome to see repeated over and over again in an actor or actress.

"Try to remember, when and if you are selected to play a role, that there is something about you that is different and pleasing, or you wouldn't have been chosen. Don't try to change the personality that has given you the chance.

"When I went on the stage I made up my mind that whether I succeeded or not I would always be natural."

I know you all will remember and appreciate Claudette's fine advice.

Now, I'm going to suggest something: Why not organize a dramatic society?

A group of young people in Sudbury, Ontario, Canada, have just formed the Young People's Dramatic Association and are having a swell time producing dramas and operettas. The president and director of dramatics, Michael Menexis, tells us that MODERN SCREEN's Dramatic School is their dramatic teacher and that in this department they find the best instruction. From just such organizations will the great actors of the future come. Why don't you form a group in your home town? MODERN SCREEN will tell you how to go about it and will give you personal guidance.

Don't forget—this department belongs to you. Write to me—MODERN SCREEN's Dramatic School, 149 Madison Avenue, New York City—and ask me anything you need to know about dramatic art. Be sure to enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope, no letters answered without that. Also tell me what you want me to discuss next month. All this month watch your diction, make a promise to yourself that you are going to speak correctly from now on. You must have a lovely, cultured voice to succeed.

Leslie Howard is back in his native England again and is busy at work, of course. Here he is with Merle Oberon in a scene from "The Scarlet Pimpernel," a London Films-United Artists production.

Biography of a Bachelor Girl

(Continued from page 37)

everyone. Anyway, we'll skip it. The point is I'm the editor of a magazine called 'Every Week.' I want you to write your biography to run serially for us."

Miss Forsyth was truly amazed.

"Don't misunderstand me. The reason I'd like you to do this is simply because of the celebrity of your subjects and your—'friendships' with them."

Instead anger was followed by amusement insofar as Marion was concerned.

"The money is pretty good," reminded Kurt, "an advance of two thousand."

"Wait a minute," she considered. And then, "No, I'll let you know."

NOBODY, it seems, wanted his portrait done, nor Nobody's wife either, so things became slightly worse than bad for Marion Forsyth. So bad, in fact, that the landlord decided he could no longer afford her as a non-paying tenant. And so, the moving men were taking furniture from her apartment while Kurt waited and Leander Nolan entered.

Leander was part of Marion's past, a very definite part, alas, for his present peace of mind and his senatorial aspirations. He had known her a long time ago —too unwisely and too well.

"Beg pardon," he essayed to Kurt, noting the state of the room, "are you a sheriff's deputy?"

"No," returned the young man, "just an innocent bystander here to offer the lady a job."

"Oh, I haven't seen little Marion in many years," reminisced Leander. "We were very close then."

Richard, scenting material for the biography, became at once interested. "You must have been in at the beginning of her career," he ventured.

And then Marion appeared, beautifully gowned, drenched with orchids and looking not at all like a young woman being dispossessed.

"Mr. Kurt," she said cheerily, and, turning to Leander, "who may this be?"

Nolan, with no little embarrassment, explained his position in her past life and, Miss Forsyth, undaunted, exclaimed, "Why, of course, Bunny darling. I should have known you anywhere."

Leander, it seemed, had business to discuss too, and so Kurt agreed to withdraw to the kitchen. Bunny, who had his unselfish moments, pulled out his wallet. He deplored the fact that Marion was to lose her apartment and offered financial aid, which, of course, she refused.

"Bunny," she said, "let's not waste time talking about money. Let's talk about you. You look grand—like a senator or something."

And it was then that Leander, feigning a modesty he far from felt, replied, "In a few months I may be a senator."

And so, Leander took his departure and Kurt proceeded to wax strongly against men of his type being put in power.

Meanwhile the moving men continued to lift the furniture, piece by piece, from the apartment, which jerked Richard suddenly back to the business at hand.

"So," he said, "you've decided to do the biography, to sell out those precious memories? Well, here's your first check. We'll announce the first installment next month."

It was then that Marion truly became scared. The time was at hand to do a little first-class revealing and, even though she had only to put down the facts, they made a primrose path in themselves. And the men who had tread that path with her were important, had plenty to lose by a Past suddenly rearing its hectic head. But Richard departed, self-satisfied and triumphant, as Marion took a sheet of paper and a pencil and wrote, "I am born," on the first line and, "I meet Richard Kurt" on the last. Then she said to herself, "Now, all I have to do is fill in.

"Oh, Bunny," kidded Marion, "then maybe I can paint you, toga, ferrule, tribune of the people." It was all very funny to her, and funnier still because the man opposite took it all so very seriously. Life was a problem to him and he worried more about the possibility of solving it than anything else. And now, there was patently something else on his mind. And presently, with a little coaxing, he sprung it.

"I'm engaged," he said rather pompously, "to Slade Kinnicott, daughter of Orrin Kinnicott, the big publisher.

"Ah-ha," said Marion, "not the man with the chest-expansion, not the gentleman who publishes 'The Body Beautiful,' not the man with the biceps?"

Of course Mr. Nolan was annoyed, very much annoyed. He felt he was being poked fun at and anything he couldn't stand was lightness where heaviness would do as well. He became curt and hesitantly remarked that Marion had been on his conscience all these years, that he should have done right by her in a matrimonial way, perhaps, but now of course it was too late for all that. He would, however, like to commission her to paint the portrait. It was one method of keeping the wolf from the door and, as Marion, impulsive, kissed the dignified man, Richard Kurt appeared.

"Looks like that big one-time romance is starting to sizzle again," he proffered, which of course, made no hit with him who got kissed. A certain enmity between the men at once came into being and that enmity was to endure.

There was nothing of the hypocrite about Orrin Kinnicott. No, indeed. Mr. Kinnicott practiced what he preached and preached what he published. So, if he advised a waiting world to dine on nuts and raisins and exercise on an electric horse, he was the first to do the same.

Mr. Kinnicott did everything thoroughly and his present job was to make his future son-in-law a senator. He was lunching on oats and contemplating Leander's glory when Mr. Nolan, very much harassed, appeared with a copy of the magazine announcing Marion's biography.

"Darn good stunt," enthused the innocent Orrin. And then suddenly the light broke. "Are you in this?" he demanded. And poor Leander was afraid he was. "Well," continued the irate physical culturist, "there's nothing to do but see the woman and talk her out of this. You better go to it." And Leander departed.

Meanwhile, Marion was entertaining Feydak, who played the piano and Kurt who was busy editing her biography. Feydak had news. They wanted him in Hollywood to write music for pictures. It was his chance to make money and to ask Marion once more to marry him.

"Feydie," she said, "you are sweet. But you know, I believe I'm in love. I think this time I know it's so. I cannot live without the man."

And so Leander found them.

"Marion," he cried, as he entered, "you can't do this to me! This could make a rift between me and Kinnicott and inter-

Early morn till late at night
F-O polish is always right

F-O polish...a real joy for every girl...in five becoming shades
...applies evenly and has lasting luster

At all 10c stores... Cuticle Remover
...Creme Polish...Polish Remover
Oily Polish Remover...

Ft. Orange Chemical Co., Albany, N.Y.

BE LOVELY

ERASE { Wrinkles Puffiness Flabby Skin

You will look years younger after the very first treatment with "JEUNICE REJUVENATOR." Send 25¢ to cover cost of packing and mailing a sample of this amazing treatment. FREE: Instructive booklet, "Loveliness Begins at 40."

EUNICE SKELLY
SALON OF ETERNAL YOUTH, Park Central, Suite D
56th and 7th Avenue, New York City

350 LITTLE BLUE BOOKS 5¢ EACH
Send postcard for our free catalogue. Thousands of bargains. Address: LITTLE BLUE BOOK CO., Catalogue Dept., Desk 346, GIRARD, KANSAS

THIS BLONDE NOW CALLS 'BOY FRIEND' ..'HUBBY'

BLONDES have a lure that never fails—when they keep that ethereal golden shimmer in their hair. Don't, please, let blonde hair streak and darken. Be careful about shampooing. Use the shampoo that was made especially for blondes. Blondex keeps hair silken-soft. Not drying, not harmful in any way. Contains no dye or harmful chemicals. Marvelously cleansing—Blondex leaves hair clear and bright. Scalp feels simply wonderful. Costs only a few cents a shampoo! At any good drug or department store. Two sizes, the economical $1.00 bottle and inexpensive 25¢ package.

REVEALING Secret of NATURAL HAIR CURLS

ABOVE—ordinary curler reverses ends, curls friz and unwind. BELOW—Humphrey curls hair all one way. Nature's way—curls that last.

Marvelous! New Humphrey Coil Curler with the quick dry tab, sets beautiful permanent curls that last until washed out, even when combed daily. Forms end curls, hanging curls, roll bobs and waves in alluring effects before found impossible. Easy to use; invisible; light; comfortable; no metal to cut or injure. A new discovery. Millions sold by one user telling another about the Humphrey Coil Curler with the cloth tab. A new curling method—that's the secret! At your 5-and-10c store—if dealer can't supply, send 10c for trial card of 4.

HUMPHREY PRODUCTS CO., 1925 3rd Ave., DETROIT, MICH.

HUMPHREY COIL CURLER

with the Cloth Tab!

Gray Hair Pencil

Instantly gives to GRAY Hair Desirable Youthful Color. Sure, easy way to keep gray from showing at Roots, Temples and Parting, and Keeps Gray from Spreading all through the hair. Cannot be detected. Delights both men and women! To Quickly Introduce Buel full size Pencil NOW 25 CENTS given for only 25c coin. Lasts many months. State shade.

BUEL CO., 404 W. Erie St., Dept. J-18, Chicago, Ill.

BUNIONS NEEDLESS TORTURE

Pedodyne stops pain almost instantly, will reduce inflammation and swelling so quickly that you can wear smaller, neater shoes with ease and comfort. Prove it on your own bunion. Just write and say—"I want To Try Pedodyne," Address—

Pedodyne Co., 180 N. Wacker Dr., H-210 Chicago, Ill.

SKIN TROUBLE?

PSORIASIS—ECZEMA

and other obstinate skin eruptions

Is it necessary to suffer from these unsightly skin irritations? PSORACINE, a wonderful new discovery now relieving many stubborn cases where other treatments failed. Try it no matter how long afflicted. Write for sworn proof and free information.

EDWARD W. KLOWDEN

519 N. Central Park, Chicago, Ill

BACKACHES NEED WARMTH

Tens of thousands of folks who used to suffer from miserable backaches, shoulder pains and chest congestion now put on an Allcock's Porous Plaster and find the most soothing relief. It's simply wonderful for muscle pains caused by rheumatism, neuritis, arthritis, sciatica, lumbago, sprains and strains.

The beauty about Allcock's Porous Plaster is its nice glow of warmth that makes you feel good right away. Actually, what's happening is that it draws the blood to that spot. It treats the backache where it is. No dosing when you use Allcock's Porous Plaster. No fuss or muss, either. Allcock's is the original porous plaster. In almost 100 years no porous plaster has ever been made that goes on and comes off as easily, or that does as much good. Be sure the druggist gives you ALLCOCK'S 25c.

Be a Nurse

MAKE $25-$35 A WEEK

You can learn at home in spare time. Course endorsed by physicians. Thousands of graduates. Est. 35 years. One graduate has charge of 10-bed hospital. Another saved $400 while learning. Equipment included. Men and women 18 to 60. High school not required. Easy tuition payments. Write us now.

CHICAGO SCHOOL OF NURSING

Dept. 712, 26 N. Ashland Blvd., Chicago, Ill.

Please send free booklet and 32 sample lesson pages.

Name _____

City _____ State _____ Age ____

fere, not only with my candidacy for the senate, but with my marriage."

"Dickie," called Marion to Kurt, who was in the next room blue-penciling the biography. "Bunny claims my story is going to ruin him with the voters of Tennessee."

"Tell that old windbag—"

And then it was on. Nolan and Kurt told each other what was what and in no uncertain terms. One promised that the biography would not be run and the other promised it would. And Leander finally departed feeling that pretty much was lost. It was then that Marion attempted to call the whole thing off.

"Dickie," she pleaded, "why should we do this? I've always hated women who aired their private lives. Let's not."

"Let's not?" stormed Kurt. "Why, do you know that old bird Kinnicott sent for me and offered me a job if I'd call this off? Tried to bribe me! Nothing can stop this, absolutely nothing! Even if I have to kidnap you. Say, there's an idea. Us for a cabin in the woods until this yarn is finished! How about it?"

And Marion, who was at that point more in love than she ever dreamed she could be, weakly consented.

A few days later, the selected cabin in the mountains boasted little more privacy than the Grand Central Station. Everybody invaded it; that is, everybody to whom the suppression of the offending biography was important.

Kinnicott and Nolan arrived by motor, but not before Miss Slade Kinnicott, bride to be, had appeared on the scene. She had come to see the woman who had played so important a part in her fiancé's past. She was anxious to get a first-hand glimpse of Leander's early "love life." Leander had always been cool and unapproachable to her, but then that, she figured, was before he got ambition. And so, under the guise of wanting her portrait done, she had come to the cabin, only to find it vacant, save for the maid, until her irate father and downtrodden sweetheart arrived.

Mr. Kinnicott was angry at her being there and Leander was annoyed to the point of exasperation.

Then Kurt appeared on the scene. Which of course was a signal for the three men to get together in a good, old-fashioned row. Nolan threatened to sue for libel if the biography were published, and Kurt suggested he go right ahead. So when Marion arrived things were in a fine mess.

Miss Kinnicott explained their mission and Richard threw in the line about the libel, so that in case Marion had planned to be cordial, she would change her mind.

But that young woman was gracious under all circumstances, which was cause for great exasperation with Richard. Indeed, she invited Orrin out into the summer house to talk things over, and there it was she learned, to her amusement, that the great physical culturist was interested in her. Indeed he even suggested a dinner date.

He told her about Slade, what a flighty kid she was and how, if she married Leander, she would become stabilized. If the biography were published, the marriage would never take place and Slade would probably go ahead with her useless career of drinking highballs and staying up nights.

It made Marion suddenly feel responsible, responsible for the well-being and happiness of several people and she saw more clearly how futile the publishing of the story would be and how little it would actually mean to her. And so she promised Orrin Kinnicott she would do what she could to stop it.

They returned to the cabin, where she assured the inquisitive Slade that she no longer was in love with Leander. Hadn't been for years. And then, as the group were about to leave, Leander called her aside. He wanted her to do what she thought was right about the biography, but, first of all, he wanted to marry her.

Marion was touched beyond words at this proposal as she sent him away.

It was then time to face Kurt, which moment she steeled herself against, for she knew it would be no simple matter to explain her promise to this vindictive young man.

"I've promised not to finish the story," she told him simply.

"You've what? Well, my dear young lady, you will finish it. I'll hold you to our contract if it's the last thing I do!"

And then Marion suddenly saw red, she who had always been able to see the amusing side of a situation.

"Well, here it is!" she cried. "You can have it to do what you like with. All the rights are yours. I'm through. I'm going to California, to Hollywood to see Feydie. I'm tired of vindictiveness and get-evenness. I've had enough!"

And Marion Forsyth left the cabin and New York. She went to Hollywood, as threatened or promised, and there Feydie waited. He was about to lease a home if she would marry him. But Marion's thoughts were of Richard and so, one day when he phoned from New York to tell her he was coming west to do a series of articles, she was beside herself with joy.

"And Dickie," she said, "how about the biography?"

"I've torn it up, dear, because I love you. I'm not vindictive any more. I'm not vengeful. I'll show you. Why, I'm coming out to Hollywood to rip those morons inside out. I'll be seein' you, darling."

And Marion laughed and was happy.

They Visit New York

(Continued from page 17)

romance. However, the well-known clam was never tighter shut when it comes to giving out information than this same Maurice. Our guess is that he'll never get into trouble through talking.

Chevalier is the Tom Meighan of the talkies. Personality put him there and has kept him there. Acting, not so good; age, not so young; charm, plenty potent. How is that for rating? Fair? We think so.

Phillips Holmes, too, is across the sea. He breezed into town for a day en route to England, where he will make a picture called "Ten Minute Alibi." He spent the best part of his twenty-four hours here talking to the gents who deal in the passport business and so, recreation and shopping were strictly taboo.

Holmes is one of the busiest of the younger featured players. He's attractive, better than capable and possesses a goodly share of intelligence, and so undoubtedly will continue to do all right for himself.

We asked him about his—ahem—"love life" and he declared there just wasn't any. It seems Florence Rice, the famous Grantland's daughter, is a good friend, a very good friend indeed but, as Ethel Barrymore once said, "That's all there is, there isn't any more."

This younger generation is getting cagier and cagier. Probably the columnists have made them so.

Between You and Me

(Continued from page 6)

sordid things of life and the misery and sorrow which invariably accompany them.

This crusade, or whatever you want to call it, is threatening the greatest educational structure since the dawn of time. Are we going to sit quietly by and let the puritanical minority gleefully destroy such a source of recreation? Are we going to aid them in this destructive campaign, or as democratic and free thinking people, politely tell them to mind their business.

If the people think some of the pictures are too smutty, why not ask the Federal Government to appoint a national board of censors? I'm sure this would be a much better solution than appointing a few hermits who, because of their religious training, abominate all things of the flesh.—P. B. Buchans, Newfoundland.

(The fight is on and it is an interesting battle, to say the least. But don't be too alarmed, my dears, we have a feeling that this "censorship crusade" won't last much longer.)

Goggles for Mr. Pogany

Mr. Pogany should consult an oculist. Nils Asther is the handsomest man on the screen.—L. Anderson, Tulsa, Oklahoma.

An Up and Coming Starlet

I saw Jean Parker in a picture for the first time and I have never been impressed by an actress before as I was by her. She simply swept me off my feet. She is so young and so sweet that she makes you glad you're alive. And she's so pretty, too.

Let's have a story about her soon.—L. D. Bulloch, La Grange, Ga.

(You'll find oodles of stunning pictures of this gal Jean and some interesting comments from her on how she goes about gathering a new wardrobe, on page 56.)

Mae West and a Sixteen-Year-Old

Re: Mrs. W. Franklin's letter in the August "Between You and Me" column.

I, too, am sixteen, have an average intelligence, and have not missed one of Mae West's pictures. As far as I can observe it has done nothing to spoil my naïveté. After all, at sixteen one's character is fairly well molded, or should be. If Mrs. Franklin feels that Mae West's pictures will harm her daughter, it seems to me that she realizes that she hasn't been able to teach her daughter to discriminate between right and wrong. She is really rebelling against her inability to train her child, and not against Mae West.

The reason I enjoy Mae is because she is refreshing after the "weak" women so often portrayed by the Janet Gaynors and the "strong, silent" women as portrayed by the Garbos. Here's to Mae and her further success on the screen!—Catharine Jones, Lincoln, Nebraska.

(And three cheers for you, Kate, for taking such an intelligent viewpoint.)

Gone but Not Forgotten

You'll never know how much the Russ Columbo fans appreciated that perfectly grand picture of him that you had in your October issue. Russ was not only a fine singer, he was an actor with everything it takes to be a great star. I saw "Broadway Thru A Keyhole" three times. It was a fine picture and Russ put over the finest piece of acting I've ever seen.

I'd like to shake Sally Blane's hand long and hard for being at the hospital when Russ died, even though he didn't know it.

You're gone, Russ, and it hurts to realize we won't be seeing you, except when we gaze long and tearfully at the photos you've sent us.—E. D., Scarsdale, N. Y.

(Don't fail to read "Son of Tragedy" in this issue.)

Someone to Reckon With

I've just given up in despair. For a long, long time, I've been looking for a picture starring Robert Barrat. Why is he given only minor roles when he has such talent? His acting is real and down-to-earth. There's nothing "put on" about him. I think it is a shame for such wonderful talent to be wasted in minor roles when he is capable of doing something bigger. His name isn't even listed in the studio addresses of players. Please place him on top where he belongs.—Ova Hunt, Huntsville, Ala.

(If you saw him in "Friends of Mr. Sweeney" as the wild Communist you must have howled, as we did. He is a fine actor, perhaps the studios will wake up and give him larger roles.)

Mystery De Luxe

"The Thin Man" is without doubt the most sensational mystery picture of the year. Gay, humorous, yet deeply intriguing, it keeps you laughing and guessing to the rather unexpected end. The entire cast was aptly chosen, but the honors go unquestionably to William Powell and Myrna Loy. They are a splendid stellar team and I hope we shall see them together again.—M. L. Zebroe, Pasadena, Calif.

(Right you are, my lady.)

Such Popularity!

The only thing I find wrong with MODERN SCREEN is its evident lack of interest in Ralph Bellamy. I have been watching him for some time now and if MODERN SCREEN can't see the steady rise in popularity of this charming gentleman then one of us is blind—and I don't think it's me.

So come on, the rest of you Bellamy fans and let's give him a great big hand. And MODERN SCREEN, will you give us an interview, with a full-page photo of him? Is the order too big, or can you take it? —Mrs. John Hill, Loyall, Kentucky.

(No, 'tisn't a-tall. We promise you a grand Bellamy story, with pictures galore, very, very soon. Watch for it.)

CONSTIPATION began at 40!

Years of Suffering Till She Found This Safe

ALL-VEGETABLE RELIEF

TODAY at 60 she feels younger than she did 10 years ago—and she has made only one change. Like millions of others she has switched to a laxative that is completely natural—all-vegetable Nature's Remedy (NR Tablets). She noticed the difference immediately. The very first little NR Tablet left her feeling better—refreshed, clean, more alive. She soon found herself resting better—she seemed to have new energy, a new outlook on life. Bothersome bilious spells, headaches, colds were quickly eliminated. And she noticed that she never had to increase the dosage of Nature's Remedy—for a very definite reason—NR Tablets contain no minerals or phenol derivatives, only natural laxative elements wisely placed by nature in plants and vegetables. That's why they work gently yet thoroughly the way nature intended. See for yourself. Take an NR tonight—See how thorough they are—yet so kind to the system. Get a 25c box today at any drug store.

FREE 1935 Calendar-Thermometer, beautifully designed in colors and gold. Also samples TUMS and NR. Send stamp for postage and packing to A. H. LEWIS CO., Desk 148TT, St. Louis, Mo.

Nature's Remedy NR TO-NIGHT TOMORROW ALRIGHT — GET A 25¢ BOX

"TUMS" Quick relief for acid indigestion, sour stomach, heartburn. Only 10c.

Brand New NOW ONLY $17.95 UP

TYPEWRITER PORTABLES

10¢ a Day · Easy Terms

Sensational Low Prices and easy terms on limited supply only. All brand new, up-to-date —4 row keyboard. Fully Guaranteed.

SEND NO MONEY—10 Day Trial

Send for special new literature and money-saving, easy pay plan with 10 day trial offer. Also amazing bargains in standard size, rebuilt office models on FREE trial offer.

International Typewriter Exch., 231 W. Monroe St. Dept. 1261, Chicago

Sensational SHAMPOO

TINTS HAIR

Of Any Color To Rich and Gleaming Loveliness

Faded, dull, lifeless hair is unattractive and deadly to romance—and inexcusable because now you can have soft, luxurious hair, gloriously beautiful, admired and envied by all. A new SHAMPOO discovery different from anything else you have ever used, imparts new life and luster as it TINTS to a smooth full, even, rich color while you wash your hair.

FREE TEST

Just shampoo with TINTZ Hair Tinting Shampoo and your hair is transformed into entrancing loveliness. It seems richer, thicker and fairly gleams with tiny dancing lights so envied and so admired. TINTZ softens the hair and makes it easier to manage. It rinses out quick and easy as it removes the dirt and dandruff. There are four popular shades—Blonde, Brown, Titian and Brunette. Mail coupon for free test. State shade desired.

MAIL COUPON TODAY

TINTZ CO., 400 W. ERIE ST. DEPT. M-60, CHICAGO, ILL.

I enclose 10c to cover mailing cost on FREE TRIAL package TINTZ in.....Shade.

Name .....

Address .....

City..... State.....

Good News

(Continued from page 72)

DICK ARLEN seems to hate actors with temperament. The other dawning, after Dick and the rest of the crowd had listened for hours to a newly imported actress tell about her troubles and her inability to "feel" her role on the cold sound stages, Dick said: "It seems to me that making pictures is a question of remembering lines and making faces. If I remember the lines, I forget to make the faces, and if I make faces I always forget the lines. If I ever do the two together I'll be a sensashun."

OH, MISS SULLAVAN!

SOCIETY note: Margaret Sullavan arrived at a grand party the other evening chewing gum for all she was worth. When dinner was served, La Sullavan couldn't find a spot to park the leftover gum and finally sneaked it into a flower pot that happened to be situated directly behind her chair.

Get out the incense and crystal ball, girls. A local Hollywood soothsayer has succeeded in predicting almost every Hollywood birth, death, accident and any other calamity you can think of.

Yesterday, three hours after predicting that a certain writer would have an accident and that great trouble would follow, one of the better known scenario writers in Hollywood found himself tangled up in his wrecked automobile and a hundred-dollar bail bond staring him in the face.

It kind of scares the moom pitcher actors to know the "worst" in advance, but they are standing in line already.

SELECTED SHORT SUBJECTS

JOEL McCREA turned down a chance to make a picture in England and, just as Hollywood began to wonder, it was announced that Joel will play the lead opposite Dietrich in "Carnival in Spain". . . . The extras sure do get a break in "The President Vanishes." The director placed a call for 2000 of them. . . . Jeanette MacDonald left here to spend a month in New York right after the preview of "The Merry Widow." . . . The new continental cafe, Trocadero, has $8,000 worth of kitchen equipment alone. . . . Phillips Holmes embarked for London on the same boat that brought Maureen O'Sullivan back from Ireland (without Johnny Farrow!) . . . James Cagney changed the title to read: "The Sea Hates the Captain" after the boom on his new boat swung around and cracked him on the skull. . . . Charlie Laughton is almost ready to leave the hospital after his operation. . . . Will Hays' own church in Sullivan, Indiana has asked him to defend his work to clean up the films (!) . . .They now tell us that Colin Clive is a relative of the famous Lord Clive of India. This information has leaked out since Mr. Clive has been cast with Ronnie Colman in "Clive Of India". . . . Wonder what's happened to Lee Tracy, his last two pictures have been awful. . . . Billie Burke may have to pay the estate of her late husband, Florenz Ziegfeld, for the title "Ziegfeld Follies" before she can use it.

Bill Howard, one of Hollywood's ace directors, will make his first appearance in pictures in his latest, "Evelyn Prentice," but not even his best friends will recognize him. The story calls for one scene in which X-rays of the spine are shown and Director Howard has offered his personal services in this regard.

Watch for this scene closely. It may be the hit of the picture.

SPENCER TRACY spent about a week (and plenty of shekels) buying out most of the Beverly Hills' flower shops and keeping the telegraph operators working overtime trying to impress Virginia Bruce (ex-Mrs. John Gilbert) with his ardent affection.

No sale!

After the seventh course of a dinner which Carl Brisson gave recently, Bill Fields was heard to say, "No more food for me." But one hour later he was still eating!

Mr. Brisson, it seems, serves his food in the same manner he serves his personality—in big doses. It was said by a close observer (one of the survivors) that 30 courses were served.

If Mr. Brisson has succeeded in catching up with Hollywood slang, we presume he ushered his guests to the door with: "It serves you right!"

THOSE close to Carole Lombard say no one will ever know how deeply she suffered over Russ Columbo's death. But how different were her actions from the hysterical theatricalism with which Pola Negri mourned Valentino! In fact, another girl, a former friend of poor Russ, occupied most of the newspaper space, while Carole was confined to her home with a doctor and a nurse in attendance.

The minute she was able to travel, Carole fled from Hollywood to try and forget. She left for New York accompanied by her mother. William Powell was at the station to see her off.

Several days after her departure, a close friend received a letter from the unhappy girl. She wrote: "I don't know why I came away. I can't run away from myself."

They also say it was Carole who was responsible for the fact that Russ did not cancel his twenty-five-thousand-dollar insurance policy as he planned to about a week before his tragic death. Because of a very large income tax, Russ found himself strapped for ready cash and the policy would have been cancelled if Carole hadn't advised him to borrow the money to meet it. The policy will pay $50,000 to Columbo's mother.

It's really sumpin'! We're talking about that new Joan Crawford limousine—snowy white inside and out.

The upholstery in the Crawford creation is of white satin!

No sooner had Joan Crawford copped the automobile spotlight with her "all white, satin upholstered" car, than Joe E. Brown pushed his new gas buggy out onto the Boulevard and the natives gasped at its brilliance: baby blue, it is!

When these two jobs hit the Boulevard at the same time and meet Carl Brisson's cream colored import (the one with the trap door in the roof), it makes for a gala event.

NEWSREEL

FRANCHOT TONE has been traded to Warners for the lead opposite Del Rio in "Caliente," while M-G-M gets George Brent in the deal. Which would you rather have? . . . Johnny Weissmuller and Joel McCrea have a new system for catching fish: they take three or four lines in their mouths and swim from a barge to the shore. . . . It cost one of your famous actor friends over 50 G's to get back in the good graces of the studio after he had held up production ten days with a walkout. . . . Mary Lou is calling on Lanny Ross in Hollywood this month and all their radio fans will get a look-see. . . . Ramon Novarro will help dedicate the $25,000,000 theatre in Mexico City this week, a boyhood ambition fulfilled. . . . Bette Davis wants everyone to know that she isn't jealous of her little sister Barbara and that she will really help the newcomer get a good break in films. . . . 'Tis reported that Greta Garbo has taken up tap dancing (quite a tap, sez you?).

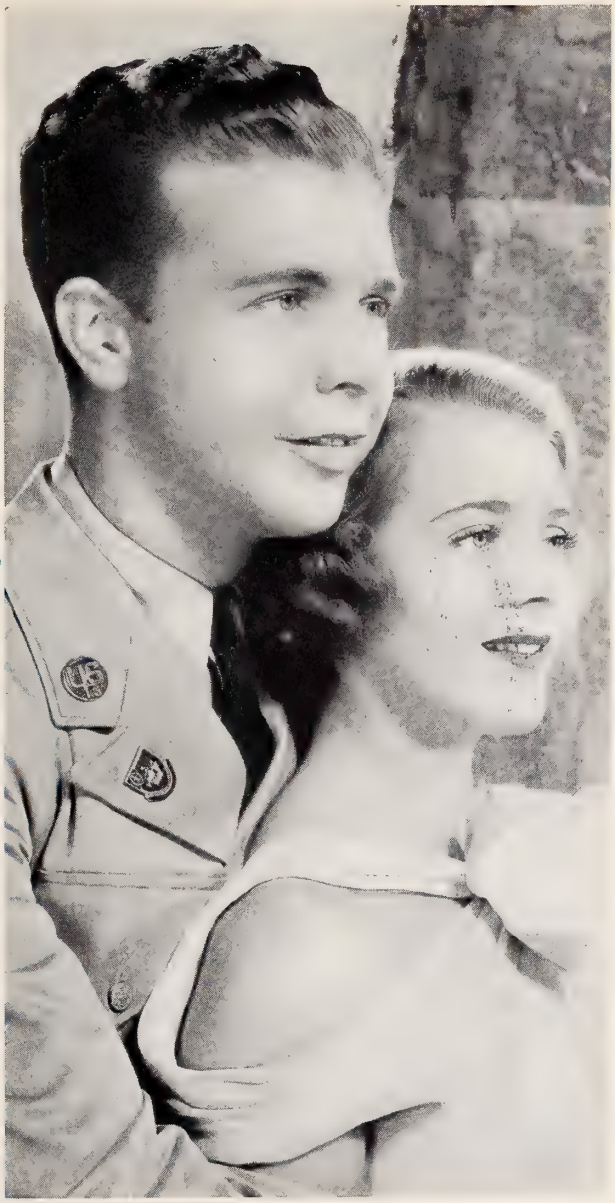
Bette Davis is plenty burned up about the printed story that she "took" her husband shopping and bought him a twenty-eight-dollar suit of clothes. If she ever finds out who started the story, the unlucky person had better look out. Bette has battle in her eye.

This money business is a very sore point with the Harmon O. Nelsons. "Ham" has a job in a local orchestra that pays him well and he is perfectly capable of paying for his own twenty-eight-dollar suits . . . if he ever bought one at that price.

DO you know the deep dark secret in the past life of Douglas Fairbanks, Jr?

He was once a student in the Hollywood School For Girls! The horrible news leaked out last week when a former principal of the school gave out an interview about famous movie stars who had attended the school. It seems that Doug had been admitted during a brief spell when the academy for girls had decided to lift the sex ban and permit boys, too.

LITERARY NOTES



Jean Harlow isn't the only stellar lady who has gone literary, of late. Mary Astor has just completed the final chapter of her first novel. By the time you read this Jean's story will probably be running serially in a national magazine. Mary is expecting to bring her's out in book form.

Genevieve Tobin has turned author, too. Whether Genevieve felt the need for better stories, more money, or a release for her pent-up genius, we are unable to figure out. At any rate, she has given birth to a little epic entitled, "Give Up," and will star in it for Warner Bros.

OTTO KRUGER will think twice before he parks his car at the theatre again. Last night, after the show, Otto returned to the lot where he had left his car to find it gone. After some questioning, he learned that he had picked a "Used Car Lot" for his parking and that his car had been sold about an hour before he returned.

After running all over town, Kruger got his car back, but the "buyer" was certainly hopping mad. He had made a "good buy."

Printed in the U. S. A. by Art Color Printing Company, Dunellen, N. J.

COURT MARTIALED FOR Love

To young lovers, Hawaii is a land of flowers drenched in perfume, of steel guitars played softly in rhythm to Tropical seas, of moonlight and romance. To the gay army set at the Post there, it is a land of fun, of long drives through languorous country drowsing under a hot sun, of bridge played on verandahs cooled by breezes from the Pacific.

But to young Dick Dorcy it was a land of work and plenty of it. He had not thought it would be like that when he enlisted. "Join the army and see the world" . . . that was what the army posters had said, but so far there had not been so much to see. At least, not until the general's daughter arrived.

Her face was lovelier than any of the flowers tangled together in the leis swinging in pace to her happy feet, Dick couldn't help looking at her as if she were the first girl he had ever seen, couldn't help knowing he was head over heels in love with this beautiful creature . . . but she was the general's daughter, and he was only a private.

How Dick Dorcy woos and finally wins Kit is one of the most exciting love stories ever told. You'll thrill to it from beginning to end.

Read this love story complete in the December issue now on sale. Then see it in Warner Brothers film production, "Flirtation Walk."

14 Complete Stories in This Issue:

FLIRTATION WALK with Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell; THE PAINTED VEIL with Greta Garbo, Herbert Marshall, George Brent; BELLE OF THE NINETIES with Mae West, Roger Pryor; WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS with Helen Hayes, Brian Ahearne; PART TIME LADY with Carole Lombard; PERFECT WEEKEND with James Cagney, Patricia Ellis; THE FIREBIRD with Verree Teasdale, Ricardo Cortez; GAMBLING with George M. Cohan, Wynne Gibson, WEDNESDAY'S CHILD with Frankie Thomas, Edward Arnold, Karen Morley; CHU CHIN CHOW with Anna May Wong; THE LEMON DROP KID with Lee Tracy, Helen Mack, Baby LeRoy; I'LL SELL ANYTHING with Pat O'Brien, Ann Dvorak; TWO HEADS ON A PILLOW with Neil Hamilton, Miriam Jordan; GIRL OF MY DREAMS with Eddie Nugent, Mary Carlisle.

SCREEN ROMANCES

The Love Story Magazine of the Screen on sale at all newsstands

LUCKY STRIKE
"IT'S TOASTED"
CIGARETTES
LUCKY STRIKE
The Cream of the Crop
The clean center leaves are the mildest lea
They Taste Better!
Copyright, 1934, The American Tobacco Co.

LARGEST GUARANTEED CIRCULATION OF ANY SCREEN MAGAZINE

Modern Screen

anuary 35

10
ents

DEC 27 1934

Earl Christy

Anna Sten

eginning in This Issue

THE TRUE LOVE STORIES OF FOUR FAMOUS STARS

Snap out of it..!

WHAT you need is a glass of Ballantine's Ale. It will make you feel like a new person as it takes away that squeamish feeling you've had ever since breakfast. Did you know that ale is good for the digestive system? Well, it is. Ale contains natural carbonic gas. Carbonic gas—in natural form—is an aid to digestion and this is why a glass of Ballantine's Ale will help put you right back in the running when you've had too much of the wrong food or drink the night before. The next time you thirst for a really great drink—order Ballantine's Ale.

Snap out of it with this finest of American ales. Have a case sent home today from your grocers, delicatessen or dealer.

"America's Finest Ale" since 1840

BALLANTINE'S ALE

TRADE MARK

P. BALLANTINE & SONS, NEWARK, N. J.

Why is one of these girls winning and the other losing this private BEAUTY CONTEST

BOTH GIRLS have smart clothes and wear them smartly. Both have attractive figures, lovely hair. Yet one is getting all of the attention and all of the compliments.

One is winning, while the other is losing one of those little beauty contests which are a part of the daily life of every woman.

You cannot avoid these contests, for everyone you meet judges your beauty, your charm, your skin.

The daily use of Camay, the Soap of Beautiful Women, can change a dull, drab skin into a fresh, lovely complexion, and help you win your beauty contests.

Camay's delightfully perfumed lather is smooth and rich, made up of millions of tiny Beauty Bubbles that cleanse and refresh your skin.

WOMEN EVERYWHERE PRAISE CAMAY

Thousands of women have written recently praising the mildness of Camay. "It is as gentle as cream," says a girl from New England. "The lather is wonderfully smooth and soothing," writes a young matron from the South, "and it keeps the skin smoother and clearer than any other soap."

Try Camay yourself. Just see how much this pure, gentle, creamy-white beauty soap can do for your skin. See how much it can improve your complexion.

CAMAY

The Soap of Beautiful Women

© 1934, Procter & Gamble

DEC -1 1934

©C1B 244407

Modern Screen

MEN ..... Adele Whitely Fletcher 26
The favorite feminine topic! Four famous stars talk about—men

WHAT WILL HAPPEN TO THEM IN 1935? ..... Dareos 28
Hollywood's famous prophet foretells dire—as well as delightful—happenings

HE WAS A PROBLEM CHILD ..... Harry Brundidge 30
Fredric March, a grand guy today, was an imp of Satan once

DAVID COPPERFIELD ..... Fictionized by Katherine Albert 32
The story of the great classic, based on the M-G-M picture

SAD, SHY AND MEEK (Oh, Yeah?) ..... Carter Bruce 34
Discover some things about Zasu Pitts you never knew before

WHAT'S WRONG WITH THE MAN? ..... Martha Kerr 35
Franchot Tone is a puzzle, to which we think we have the answer

CLAUDETTE'S FAVORITE FAN ..... T. B. Fithian 36
A delightful little story about the lovely Colbert and a most persistent correspondent

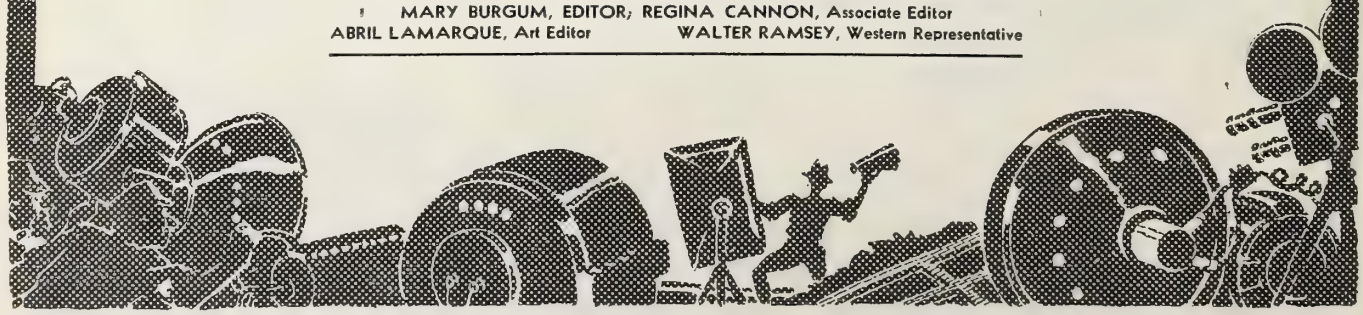
ROUGH, READY AND REGULAR ..... Cyril Vandour 37
Vic McLaglen, we mean, who has led a life full of hard-knocks and thrills

WANTED: A REMEDY FOR HEARTBREAK
For Kay Francis, who wants to forget certain parts of her life ..... Katharine Hartley 38
For Virginia Bruce, who knows that work is a marvelous cure-all ..... Juliette Laine 39

BEHIND THE SCENES WITH JOAN, CLARK AND BOB ..... Walter Ramsey 40
Certain things happened on the "Forsaking All Others" set which you'll want to know

LIFE BEGINS AT FIFTY ..... Beth Brown 42
A well known writer pays a tribute to some of the "Old Guard"

THE MOST ROMANTIC STORY EVER TOLD (Part 2) ..... Katherine Albert 44
Continuing the thrilling biography of the movies themselves



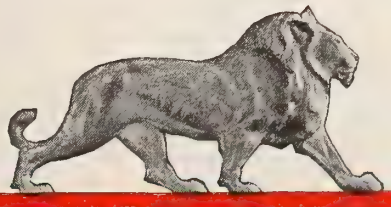
OUT OF THEIR SORROWS ..... Elizabeth MacDonald 46
A poignant story, beautifully told, of the blessings disaster has brought the stars

CAN A NICE GIRL BE A BIG SUCCESS? ..... Kay Osborn 48
The Bennetts, the Hepburns and the Lupes would seem to point to the contrary

WHY GLORIA ALWAYS LOOKS SO SMART ..... Virginia T. Lane 56
La Swanson passes certain clothes-magic along to you

The Modern Hostess 6
Beauty Advice 8
Between You and Me 10
They Visit New York 12
Their Studio Addresses 13
Good News 14
Modern Screen's Dramatic School 18
Exclusive Portraits 19
Modern Screen Previews 49
Reviews 54
Modern Screen Patterns 60
The Information Desk 79
The Report Card 93
All Joking Aside 106

MARY BURGUM, EDITOR; REGINA CANNON, Associate Editor
ABRIL LAMARQUE, Art Editor WALTER RAMSEY, Western Representative



Published monthly and copyright 1935 by Dell Publishing Company, Incorporated. Office of publication at Washington and South Avenues, Dunellen, N. J. Executive and editorial offices, 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y. George T. Delacorte, Jr., President, H. Meyer, Vice-President, M. Delacorte, Secretary. Vol. 9, No. 2, January, 1935. Printed in the U. S. A. Price in the United States, $1.20 a year, 10c a copy. Canadian subscriptions, $2.40 a year. Foreign subscriptions, $2.20 a year. Entered as second-class matter, September 18, 1930, at the Post Office at Dunellen, New Jersey, under act of March 3, 1879. The publishers accept no responsibility for the return of unsolicited material.

DAVID COPPERFIELD

ONE OF THE GREAT!

You have heard so much about it. The world's eagerness to see this beloved Charles Dickens novel on the screen will be amply repaid. The two years of waiting are at an end. Never before has any motion picture company undertaken the gigantic task of bringing an adored book to life with such thrilling realism. 65 great screen personalities are in this pageant of humanity, adapted to the screen by the famed Hugh Walpole. The original scenes, the vivid characters, the imperishable story . . . they live again!

METRO-Goldwyn-MAYER

Directed by GEORGE CUKOR
Produced by DAVID O. SELZNICK

When people drop in during the Christmas holidays, give them a real treat and serve your own delicious cookies and cakes

By Marjorie Deen

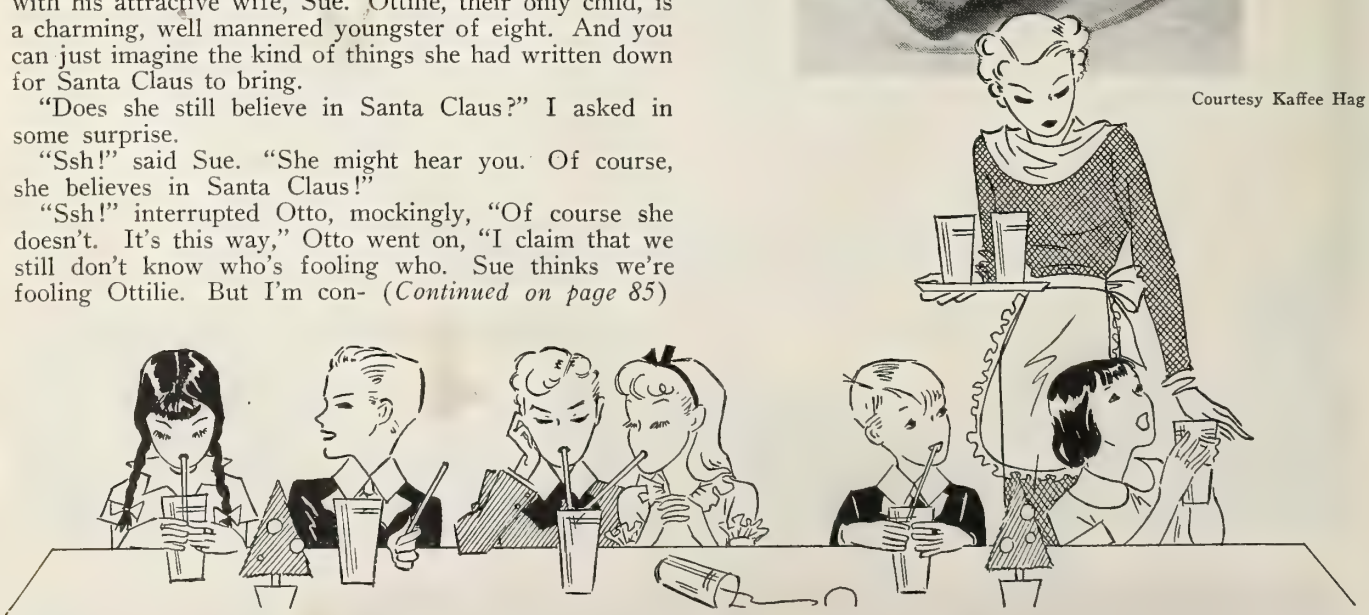
(Left) The Krugers—Otto, Sue and little Ottilie—plan for the Christmas holidays. And Mrs. Kruger knows just what pleases little kiddies' tummies and grown-ups' as well. (Right) First of all, there is her Applesauce Cake, which is deevine when served à la mode. (Below) Fruit Cakes made of Mince Meat are everyone's delight.

Courtesy Borden's None Such Mince Meat

The Modern Hostess

DO you remember the tragic day when you were told that Santa Claus was a myth? I can assure you that the knowledge that Santa did not exist came to me as life's first major disillusionment. Why, I remember crying bitterly and thinking that Christmas would never, never be the same again. And for that matter, it never was.

I was reminded of it the other day while I listened to Otto Kruger discussing little Ottilie's Christmas list with his attractive wife, Sue. Ottilie, their only child, is a charming, well mannered youngster of eight. And you can just imagine the kind of things she had written down for Santa Claus to bring.



"Does she still believe in Santa Claus?" I asked in some surprise.

"Ssh!" said Sue. "She might hear you. Of course, she believes in Santa Claus!"

"Ssh!" interrupted Otto, mockingly, "Of course she doesn't. It's this way," Otto went on, "I claim that we still don't know who's fooling who. Sue thinks we're fooling Ottilie. But I'm con- (Continued on page 85)

Courtesy Kaffee Hag

THE PICTURE OF THE MONTH

Never has a story brought back so gloriously the good old days when flaming youth went to town on a bicycle-built-for-two—or more. That's Papa in the rumble-seat...but where's his shot-gun?

For the Christmas Stockings of a Hundred Million Film Fans, We Give You Warner Bros.' Magnificent Picturization of the Stage Triumph That Made America Young Again—

IRENE DUNNE in "SWEET ADELINE"

Brought to the Screen After 63 Weeks — Count 'em, 63—on Broadway, With Its Immortal Melodies and Romance That Take Us Happily Down Memory Lane, Dashingly Guided by Director MERVYN LEROY

We'd like to take up the merrie olde custom of slipper-drinking ourselves—just to toast that grand trio of fun-makers—Hugh Herbert, Ned Sparks, Joe Cawthorn—and all the delicious dancing girls who are too numerous to name—but too sweet not to mention.

Ever whistle "Why Was I Born?", "Here Am I", and "Don't Ever Leave Me"? Well, this is the show that made them famous! Now you'll hear these and other great Jerome Kern hits sung and danced as never before—all because Warner Bros. finally lured dance-director Bobby Connolly of "Ziegfeld Follies" fame to Hollywood.

And while the orchids last, let's toss a load of them to irresistible Irene Dunne, and Donald Woods and Louis Calhern for their brilliant telling of a great love story; to Mervyn LeRoy for his superb direction; to Phil Regan for his delightful tenor; and to Jerome Kern and Oscar Hammerstein II for authoring December's grandest show!

Beauty Advice

By Mary Biddle

This year, make your gifts useful ones. And what will give your friends more pleasure than a tastefully selected perfume, a new lipstick or an attractive compact?

LIVE way beyond your means . . . in spirit! That is the code of the woman whose hours are filled to the brim with happiness, friendships, and love. It is your code for the New Year if you want to develop your personality, and radiate charm and magnetism.

A famous woman of many years ago once said, "Only a great beauty can afford to look unhappy." Perhaps you are looking unhappy and worried right now about your Christmas-giving problems. Maybe you're trying to eke out gifts for a difficult Christmas list on an aggravatingly limited budget, and you're finding it hard to be very joyous-spirited about it. Well, so are we all! I have some gift suggestions, however, that I know will prove both budget and worry savers to you . . . so do write me. I don't know of any better way to achieve a lot by giving a little than to give a beauty aid and to put as much wealth of thought and originality into it as you can. There is no greater aid to a woman's inward spirit, to send it soaring upward in joyous confidence, than the knowledge that she is looking her loveliest. It is one of the greatest blessings of modern times that manufacturers of beauty products have given us products that the nickels and dimes and quarters are equal to purchasing. And it should prove an especial blessing around Christmas time, too.

Already I can hear you protesting that you don't know the shade of powder or rouge or lipstick that Virginia or Jane or Gertrude should use. Maybe they don't either. That's where the fun and the skill of choosing your gifts comes in.

Let's take a few examples of people I know, and perhaps you'll find duplicates of their types among your friends. There's colorless, mousey little Jane, who comes first to my mind when I think of people my fingers simply itch to get at with a satisfying shade of rouge and lipstick. She really needs some sort of a stimulating gift to inspire her to "get out of herself." She needs a bright coral shade of rouge and lipstick instead of the medium-dark shade she wears (her skin is very nice, so she can afford to call attention to its fine texture with vivid make-up); and a luscious peach-blossom shade of powder; and I think I'll venture several shades of eyeshadow, too, probably in green and violet, as her eyes are a gray-green. Maybe she'll blossom out like a new person.

Then there's Virginia, who has had such heartbreakingly tough sledding this past year, and hasn't been able to keep up on the beauty end of things at all. Think what a complete beauty kit would mean to her, with creams to smooth away her worry wrinkles, and skin tonic to tone up her pores; powder the right shade for her freshened skin, and rouge to put the proper bloom in her cheeks. We know of several kits most attractively made up and priced for the Christmas season. You can, of course, assemble your own complete kit, if you prefer, from among the excellent products available in economical sizes, and pack it in a gay Christmas box with a cheery sprig of holly. Whether you've a "Virginia" on your list or not, this makes an acceptable gift to any or all of the feminine contingent you are remembering this year.

Incidentally, I'm going to tuck in Virginia's gift kit a small bottle of exciting perfume (maybe a couple of bottles. . . . I've found such alluring perfumes at such really alluring prices). It is a recognized fact that perfume has tremendous power over the mind and emotions. Even a case of the doldrums may be cured by it. What better little "uplift" gift for the spirits than that?

Let's see, now, Margie is on my list, too. She works such terribly long hours, and has an apartment to keep spic and span besides. As she aptly describes it, she is "dead on her feet" by the end of the day. I can't think of anything that she would love more than all the accessories for a luxurious, relaxing, soul-revivifying bath; fragrant water softener, lavish (Continued on page 81)

Change your beauty code for a Merrier Christmas

RKO - Radio's Christmas Gift to the World

Katharine HEPBURN
in "THE LITTLE MINISTER"
by SIR JAMES M. BARRIE
With JOHN BEALE and ALAN HALE
An RKO-Radio Picture
Directed by Richard Wallace • A Pandro S. Berman Production

Another glorious Hepburn romance to share your treasured memories of "Little Women". Another beautiful RKO picture from one of the great love stories of the ages. Another radiant acting triumph by the year's outstanding star, as she brings you a role endearingly different—the fire and wistful tenderness of Barrie's immortal Gypsy "Babbie". Really something more than a motion picture—a Christmas gift for your heart!

All of life's gladness . . . all its pain . . . blended in love's old sweet song!

"I Purchased a Perfolastic Girdle . . . wore it for 10 days on trial, and in a very short time I reduced my hips 9 inches, and my weight 20 Pounds!"

Reduce . . .

YOUR WAIST AND HIPS 3 INCHES IN 10 DAYS with the PERFOLASTIC GIRDLE

. . . or it will cost you nothing!

"I REDUCED from 43 inches to 34½ inches"...says Miss Brian... "Massages like magic"...writes Miss Carroll ..."The fat seems to have melted away"... says Mrs. Mc Sorley.

■ Such enthusiastic comments as these from so many Perfolastic wearers assure us that YOU, too, would be delighted with the wonderful results obtained with a Perfolastic Girdle and Brassiere. Therefore, we want you to try them for 10 days at our expense!

Massage-Like Action Reduces Quickly!

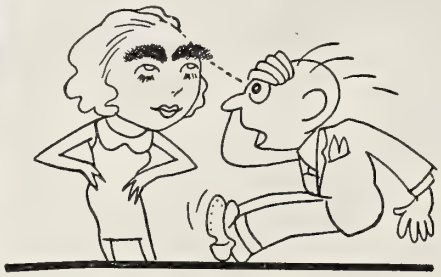
■ Worn next to the body with perfect safety, the tiny perforations permit the skin to breathe as the gentle massage-like action removes flabby, disfiguring fat with every movement . . . stimulating the body once more into energetic health!

Don't Wait Any Longer... Act Today!

■ You can prove to yourself quickly and definitely in 10 days whether or not this very efficient girdle and brassiere will reduce your waist and hips THREE INCHES! You do not need to risk one penny... try them for 10 days...at no cost!

SEND FOR TEN DAY FREE TRIAL OFFER!

PERFOLASTIC, Inc.
Dept. 531 41 EAST 42nd ST., New York, N.Y.



Please send me FREE BOOKLET describing and illustrating the new Perfolastic Girdle and Brassiere, also sample of perforated rubber and particulars of your 10-DAY FREE TRIAL OFFER!

*Name*_____
*Address*_____
*City*_____ *State*_____
Use Coupon or Send Name and Address on Penny Postcard

between you and me

Friendly Advice

Will someone please tell me what is happening to Ruby Keeler's eyebrows? They look like a couple of misplaced moustaches. There is such a thing as being too natural, you know. Won't someone tip her off?—A Kind Friend, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Wassa matter with Ruby Keeler's eyebrows?

If . . .

Things I'd do if I were the "it" man of Hollywood:

Take that painful expression off Anna Sten's face.

Give Bing Crosby a good leading lady.

Show Katharine Hepburn how to comb her hair.

Let Garbo go home.

Make a habit of co-starring Crawford and Gable. They give us thrills we can't forget and thrills are what we want. They've got what it takes to make our emotions bubble. And nuts to you censors who tried to wreck "Chained" for us but couldn't.—Movie Fan, Iowa.

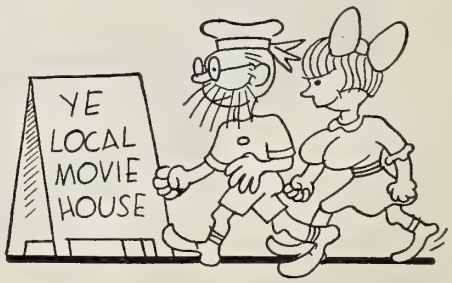
Outspoken

If you ask me, the censors are nothing but an ignorant bunch of dried-up crab apples. Just look at what they've done to "The Green Hat" (now called "Outcast Lady"). At one time it was a wonderful story but now it's just another rotten picture since the reformers started chewing on it. The reformers seem to be cleaning up pictures for the benefit of children. But pictures are not made exclusively for children. After all, the theatres are not supposed to be nurseries.—Franklin Davis, Charlottesville, Va.

Hepburn's coiffure doesn't suit him.

A Bit of Praise

I can't contain myself any longer—I simply must tell you how enthusiastic I am about your magazine.



Especially big, fat compliments are in order on your fashion department which is different from any other and much more interesting. I particularly enjoyed Maureen O'Sullivan in the November issue, possibly because I'm about the same type. We've been rather slighted lately in favor of the glamor girls. Tough when you're less than 5 feet tall and look about as exotic as a ham sandwich.

Would it be possible to have Dareos do a little "future-squinting" for David Manners? He must have a future of some sort, but most of the seers seem to overlook it. Won't you have an interview with Manners soon?—Frances Shelton, Oakland, Calif.

(Thank you, thank you. A Manners story? Why not. We'll try to do that little thing for you right soon.)

Impressed

After all the heavy, sexy pictures of recent years, it is indeed a rare pleasure to see one like "One Night of Love." Its wholesome, clean romance, its humor and wonderful music, and the marvelous voice of Grace Moore make us forget the dreary lives many of us lead. Truthfully, I was never so impressed nor have I ever experienced such a feeling of ecstatic joy as I did when I heard the divine voice of Miss Moore.—Mrs. V. Orloff, Stratford, Conn.

Are the movies exclusively for kiddies?

Neither Angel Nor Hoyden—Ginger Rogers

I'm for Ginger Rogers because I think she is primarily an actress. What I mean is that she is never the same in any two pictures. When one has seen some of these muchly extolled ladies of the screen in one picture, one has seen them as they will be in all pictures—they are types. One goes to see, say, Miss G. and one knows that one will see "sweetness, nobility, girlish candour et al, personified, no matter what the theme of the picture. Or we go to see Miss H., and here again one can be certain

Your chance to tell US a thing or two that archness, devil-may-care and general nuttiness will run rampant throughout the whole film. But to my mind, one never knows beforehand what Ginger will do because she acts her part and doesn't live up to any prescribed formula. We should certainly see her at the top before long.

Well, here's to Ginger, a relief from all the sweet darlings and blood-and-thunder females. She seems to strike a sane, happy medium that is refreshing and wholesome.—Ina Vernon, Mt. Vernon, N. Y.

(And thank goodness the public is beginning to recognize her marvelous talent, for she is fast coming into her own on the screen.)

What About Lew Ayres?

I want to take up the case of Lew Ayres. Remember how excellent he was in "All Quiet on the Western Front" and "Common Clay"? Lately he has been in such mediocre vehicles as "Cross Country Cruise" and "Let's Be Ritzy." In the past two years the only really good role he had was in "State Fair." And now I have just witnessed him as a Janet Gaynor hero in "Servants' Entrance." To my notion, a hero of a Janet Gaynor picture is about as useful as a hero in a Mae West film, which is nil.

Lew Ayres deserves better breaks than that. I thought when Fox took him over, it would mean something worth while; but I can well imagine what the forthcoming "Lottery Lover" will be like, as the very cutey-cute "Pat" Paterson is in it. It seems horrible to think that a personality can be killed like that, but three or four such pictures will definitely end Lew Ayres' career.—J. David Brandt, Wellington, Kansas.

(There's lotsa truth in what you say.)

In Praise of Ann Harding

I sincerely feel that Ann Harding is the greatest actress on the screen today. "Vergie Winters" has been called indecent by the clean-up societies, which to me, is absurd. There could be no more beautiful love than that of Vergie and John Shadwell. The critics should learn to tell the difference between real indecencies and the art which prompts an actress to portray life as it really is.

Miss Harding is never cheap or tawdry in her portrayals. Her emotional scenes are always fine and sincere. I predict a lifelong career on the screen for Ann, for she is truly a "Gallant Lady."—Mrs. G. Kemp, Erie, Pa.

What About LaRue?

Every department in MODERN SCREEN is interesting. Every story is expertly written with a deep understanding of human emotions. Every portrait is a thing of rare beauty. It surpasses costlier movie magazines from every point of view.

But . . .

If MODERN SCREEN knew that every time yours truly buys a copy of the magazine, she turns its pages and actually prays and hopes that the next page brings a portrait or a story, or even some news of her favorite, Jack La Rue, it would make sure that its fan would get her wish.

For Jack La Rue, the actor whose brutality made us shiver in "Temple Drake," who was so sweet and kind and gentle in "A Farewell to Arms" and so dashing and romantic in "Terror Aboard" has a million dollars worth of talent.—Rose Liggio, Bronx, New York.

(We've been deluged with letters from a great many of Jack's faithful friends and admirers who want stories and pictures on him. We'll try awfully hard to do something about it.)

(Continued on page 95)

TWO BRILLIANT STARS IN A HEAVENLY PICTURE!

"ONE NIGHT OF LOVE" charmed you! "LADY FOR A DAY" won your acclaim! "IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT" gave you happiness! The same producers now give you the charm and joyousness of all in this grand and glorious romantic comedy!

WARNER BAXTER

MYRNA LOY

IN "Broadway Bill"

A FRANK CAPRA Production

By ROBERT RISKIN Based on the story by MARK HELLINGER with WALTER CONNOLLY—HELEN VINSON

A COLUMBIA PICTURE

COLUMBIA PICTURES

Ask at your favorite theatre when this picture will be shown

They Visit New York

By Regina Cannon

THIS department went, clankety-clank in New York's oldest taxi, to the opening of "The Merry Widow." Truthfully speaking, we went as close as said oldest taxi could get to the Astor Theatre, in whose plush-and-gilt interior the opening took place. And then we pushed our way into the lobby, and used a shoehorn at that. For Broadway was packed tight with "dreat bid" limousines bearing celebrities, officials from two broadcasting chains, Mr. and Mrs. John Public, hanger-onners and starer-atters. From which hectic paragraph you probably gather that the opening of "The Merry Widow" was the biggest event of the month. And the swankiest.

You gathers right, Amos. It was not only big, it was beautiful. The star herself was there in person—Miss Jeanette MacDonald—looking almost as if she had stepped out of one of the scenes in the picture. Her ensemble for the evening is best described by the word quaint, which style the now-very-slender MacDonald carried off effectively enough. Helen Hayes was there with her very brilliant and slightly mad husband, Charlie MacArthur. Ernst Lubitsch (with ceegar) was there. Major Edward Bowes of the famous Capitol Family. Colleen Moore. Your old friend, Mae Murray. All these celebs were, each in his turn, hidden under swarms of autograph hounds and more whom we didn't see at the time because we neglected to bring our stilts.

The picture? Oh yes, we finally saw the picture. And we must say that Herr Lubitsch hasn't lost his touch. We also must say that, as a star, Chevalier is a swell leading man. It's Miss MacDonald's show, everybody, in spite of satisfactory work by Monsieur Chevalier and excellent bits by Una Merkel, Edward Everett Horton, Sterling Holloway and Minna (Continued on page 96)

(Left) Major Edward Bowes, Jeanette MacDonald and Colleen Moore attend "The Merry Widow" premiere in New York. (Right) Kay Francis arrives from a European vacation, looking particularly gay and charming.

Their Studio Addresses

Columbia Studios, 1438 Gower St., Hollywood, Calif.
Fox Studios, Movietone City, Hollywood, Calif.
Samuel Goldwyn Studios, 7210 Santa Monica Blvd., Hollywood, Calif.
Mascot Studios, 6001 Santa Monica Blvd., Hollywood, Calif.
Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios, Culver City, Calif.
Monogram Studios, 1040 N. Las Palmas Ave., Hollywood, Calif.
Paramount Studios, Hollywood, Calif.
RKO-Radio Studios, 780 Gower St., Los Angeles, Calif.
Twentieth Century Studios, 1041 N. Formosa Ave., Hollywood, Calif.
United Artists Studios, 1041 N. Formosa Ave., Hollywood, Calif.
Universal Studios, Universal City, Calif.
Warner Bros.—First National Studios, Burbank, Calif.

AHERNE, BRIAN: RKO-Radio.
ALBERTSON, FRANK: Free lance. Write him at Paramount.
ALBRIGHT, HARDIE: Free lance. Write him at Mascot.
ALEXANDER, KATHERINE: Free lance. Write her at M-G-M.
ALEXANDER, TAD: M-G-M.
ALLAN, ELIZABETH: M-G-M.
ALLEN, GRACIE: Paramount.
ALLEN, JUDITH: Paramount.
ALLWYN, ASTRID: Free lance. Write her at Fox.
AMES, ADRIENNE: Free lance. Write her at Paramount.
AMES, ROSEMARY: Fox.
ANGEL, HEATHER: Universal.
ARLEN, RICHARD: Free lance. Write him at Paramount.
ARLISS, GEORGE: 20th Century.
ARMETTA, HENRY: Universal.
ARMSTRONG, ROBERT: Monogram.
ARTHUR, JEAN: Columbia.
ASTAIRE, FRED: RKO-Radio.
ASTHER, NILS: RKO-Radio.
ASTOR, MARY: Warner Bros.
ATES, ROSCOE: Free lance. Write him at Warners.
ATWILL, LIONEL: Monogram.
AYRES, LEW: Fox.
BAER, MAX: Paramount.
BANCROFT, GEORGE: Free lance. Write him at Paramount.
BARBIER, GEORGE: Paramount.
BARNES, BINNIE: Universal.
BARNETT, VINCE: Universal.
BARRAT, ROBERT: Warner Bros.
BARRIE, MONA: Fox.
BARRYMORE, JOHN: M-G-M.
BARRYMORE, LIONEL: M-G-M.
BARTHELMESS, RICHARD: Warner Bros.
BAXTER, JANE: United Artists.
BAXTER, WARNER: Fox.
BEAL, JOHN: RKO-Radio.
BEECHER, JANET: 20th Century.
BEERY, WALLACE: M-G-M.
BELLAMY, MADGE: Fox.
BELLAMY, RALPH: Free lance. Write him at Columbia.
BENNETT, CONSTANCE: 20th Century.
BENNETT, JOAN: Free lance. Write her at Paramount.
BERGNER, ELIZABETH: United Artists.
BEST, EDNA: Free lance. Write her at Warners.
BICKFORD, CHARLES: Free lance. Write him at Paramount.
BIRELL, TALA: Free lance. Write her at Columbia.
BLACKMER, SIDNEY: Free lance. Write him at RKO-Radio.
BLANE, SALLY: Columbia.
BLONDELL, JOAN: Warner Bros.
BLUE, MONTE: Free lance. Write him at M-G-M.
BOLAND, MARY: Paramount.
BOLES, GLEN: Warner Bros.
BOLES, JOHN: Fox.
BOURNE, WHITNEY: Paramount.
BOW, CLARA: Fox.
BOYER, CHARLES: Fox.

(Continued on page 84)

Very Important IN A LAXATIVE FOR WOMEN

It must be Gentle!

STRONG, powerful "dynamite" laxatives are bad for anyone. But for you women... they're unthinkable!

Your delicate feminine system was never meant to endure the shock of harsh, violent purgatives or cathartics. They weaken you. They often leave bad after-effects. Madam, you must avoid them!

Ex-Lax is the ideal laxative for every member of the family, but it is particularly good for women. That's because while Ex-Lax is thorough, it works in a mild and gentle way. Why, you hardly know you've taken a laxative.

And Ex-Lax checks on the other important points, too: It won't cause pain. It won't upset digestion. It won't nauseate you. It won't leave you weak. And what's very important—it won't form a habit. You don't have to keep on increasing the dose to get results.

And Ex-Lax is so easy to take. It tastes just like delicious chocolate.

All the good points of Ex-Lax are just as important for the rest of the family as they are for women. So millions of homes have adopted Ex-Lax as the family laxative.

Keep a box of Ex-Lax in the medicine cabinet—so that it will be there when any member of the family needs it. All druggists sell Ex-Lax—in 10c and 25c boxes.

When Nature forgets—remember

EX-LAX

THE CHOCOLATED LAXATIVE

good news . . . ?

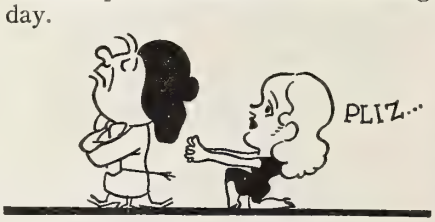
Could He Manage Her?

THE reported romance between Margaret Sullavan and John McCormick is intriguing Hollywood for a couple of reasons.

First because the tie-up is bringing Margaret out into the open. 'Tis even rumored that she is willing to give interviews to the panting press. Just as important is the fact that it was John McCormick's marvelous business ability that sky-rocketed Colleen Moore to dizzy heights when Colleen and John were married. If he should take over the management of Miss Sullavan, there is no telling what might happen to the gal.

Because an actor lighted his beard in place of his cigarette (almost ruining said beard, to say nothing of said actor) the Hollywood prop boys are trying to discover a way to make asbestos beards that will look hot but not get hot. Some fun.

All the little youngsters who fought for the chance to work in the final Technicolor ice cream sequence of Eddie Cantor's newest, "Kid Millions," are now confirmed cynics. When it came time to eat the ice cream, the kids found that the delectable looking dish set before them contained colored mashed potatoes, instead of ice cream. It wasn't that Eddie or Sam Goldwyn pictures begrudged the cost of the ice cream. But you can imagine what the studio lights would do to a frozen dessert.

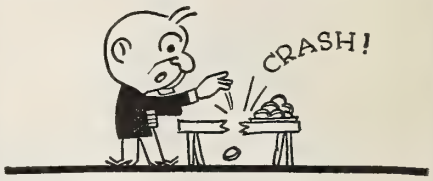


However, the noisy protests that ensued, following the discovery, almost stopped production on the lot. The sound stages are built sound proof, but nothing could withstand such a racket. The kids finally won and real frozen dessert was passed.

OF course you're read about the break-up between Gary Grant and Virginia Cherrill—but we have a hunch you don't know the reason. Most of the Hollywood columnists have been sending out flashes with the real "lowdown," but so far, none has given out with the right dope.

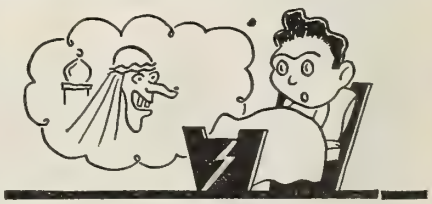
The actual cause for the split was the fact that the couple couldn't come to any decision as to just how they would fix the budget—how much Gary was to give Virginia for "pin money" and a few more such bits of trivia. Sound like home?

Ending the Depression



C. Aubrey Smith showed Hollywood the way last week. It seems that C. Aubrey has had his chauffeur since the first day of his arrival and the other evening he heard that the driver was about to lose his home for failure to pay a $3,000 mortgage. The actor dug deep and paid off the pesky bill so that his cap-and-goggles would have a spot to rest in after the long day.

When Carole Lombard moved over to M-G-M studios for "Repeal" she expected, of course, to have some marvelous clothes designed by Adrian. Imagine her surprise to receive a note the first day telling her that Adrian would be unable to design Miss Lombard's clothes on account of so many productions in work.



Many and varied are the reasons rumored: (1) that he is actually too busy. (2) That some of the regular stars on the lot went to the designer and begged him not to work for Lombard.

Whatever the reason, Adrian hasn't put foot on the Lombard set and she has another designer working on her clothes. Wouldn't it be funny if she should gain the reputation of starting a flock of new styles as a result?

Joe Morrison, who introduced "The Last Round-up" and hit the movies as a result, pulled the prize dodge of the week. After a bridge game at the home of a friend, the host rushed to the stove and threw together a batch of biscuits which proceeded to "fall" with a thud. Joe, upon seeing the result, decided he hadn't had any dinner and must not eat any of the biscuits else his meal would be spoiled. As he left he smiled, "I hate to eat and run. So I won't have any, thanks."

THE gent who designed the swell looking dressing rooms over at Paramount must have got an earful when they found this out: the new quarters were built, primarily, because of the need for more room. When the building was almost ready for the stars, someone discovered that the designer had completely forgotten to build in closets. They had to be added after completion and now the big rooms are just as small as the old ones were.

Francis Lederer is worried. Some gal in Turkey, whose family for centuries have sold their women into harems, wrote him to offer to become his "slave" for one hundred pieces of silver!

"I will be a perfect slave for you," wrote the lady. "I have been trained in all the graces and virtues . . . I will be faithful and obedient . . . I can Nice hot news! Come and get it! Come and get it!

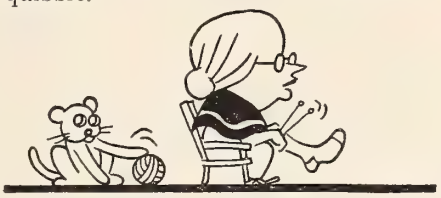
good news . . . !

dance like the flames and I will bathe your feet in perfume water. 100 pieces of silver is my purchase price." Mr. Lederer is scared. He says, "If she will come for that price—maybe she'll just come anyway!"

MRS COLUMBO is still too ill to be told of the tragic death of her son, Russ. Every day she receives a beautiful box of flowers with a card: "From Carole and Russ with love."

Carole Lombard was much in love with Russ Columbo and she is doing everything possible to help the family in preventing his mother from hearing of his death while there is yet danger such a shock would be fatal.

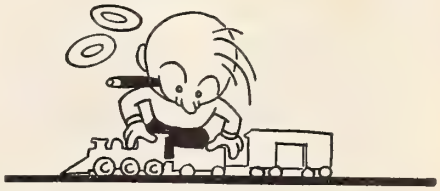


The most conspicuous thing about George Raft's dressing room at the studio is a huge picture of Virginia Pine. We looked real close and found the following writing at the bottom: "To George Darling, with all my love, always." The face in the photograph is beautiful, but Virginia has her finger in her mouth and Georgie says it reminds him of Baby LeRoy.

The dressing room is brand new and George has been wondering how such a swell room was passed up by the rest of the gang so long. The secret is out. Every time Raft pulls a door knob or a dresser drawer, the knob comes off in his hand. We're guessing the gang put Georgie on the spot. That's why the dressing room was still vacant when he got around to make his choice.

Rumor has it that Helen Hayes and Charlie MacArthur are expecting. There is much clapping of hands. 'Tis said that Helen will refuse any further picture assignments until the little one arrives. If the studio remembers their first (Act-of-God) baby, we have a strong hunch they will allow her the vacation without a quibble.

Cora Sue Collins reads all the newspapers and, what's more, remembers what she reads. The other dinner hour, she pulled the following to prove it:



"Mama, I'm getting worried abuot Greta Garbo."

"And why is this?" smiled mama.

"Well," sighed little Cora Sue, "I see in the papers where she is having her twenty-eighth birthday today and she isn't married yet. You know, I think maybe Greta Garbo will be an old maid!"

Bing Crosby wishes, now, that he hadn't had the twin's nursery built right next to his and Dixie's room. They take turns at yelling . . . Terrible news for Harlow: a European camera artist arrives to say that the new color-pictures will do away with platinum blondes, because they look too artificial . . . Dietrich's daughter, Maria, has learned the tricks. When the news cameramen try to snap them, now, Maria covers her face, too . . . Leo Carrillo caught a 300-pound fish and sent it to a food station for the unemployed . . . Fred Perry, tennis champ, made some cracks (aside) to the audience during the tennis match that didn't help his local standing any . . . 'Tis said that Kay Francis' new heart is an Italian count, which should count out Chevalier. Sorry! . . . The dog house being built for Dick Powell's new home will be an exact replica of the main house . . . Helen Mack, Maureen O'Sullivan and Mary Doran all at the hospital for tonsils . . . Director Mervyn LeRoy is getting a nursery ready for next spring . . . Hal Rosson, ex of Jean Harlow, is seeing the sights of London with the Countess Gargen . . . Hollywood is watching with interest the fact that Gilbert Roland has been palling around with Gloria Swanson and Herbert Marshall. It should have some result.

Jack Oakie was sore. Here he was, one of the most invited guys in Hollywood and he had yet to see the inside of the gorgeous $250,000 Lubitsch mansion. He asked the director why he never invited any of the "younger set." Lubitsch replied: "I should be delighted to have you come over and bring some of your young friends." He then promptly forgot all about it.

Jack didn't. A few nights later he rounded up Mary Brian and Helen Mack, got them all togged out in kids clothes, bought a flock of toys and descended upon Herr Lubitsch for the evening. "We kept him up almost all night, too," smiled Oakie. "We had him trying to learn how to run a toy train."

Wonder what Connie Bennett thought when the judge in that famous scandal case in New York made the remark: "Who is the Constance Bennett who has been mentioned? I never heard of her."

Our ear-to-the-ground department has been mighty busy

And Contents Noted

Remember a grand story called "William, Bill and Willie" which ran in MODERN SCREEN a few issues back? It was about William Powell and it was written by Walter Ramsey. Well, when Bill saw the story, here's what he did:

At 12:38 p. m. on a certain day, he sent Walter Ramsey a wire:

SANS REPROCHE
William

At 12:41 p. m. on the same day, he sent another wire:

SPLENDID
Bill

And at 2:38 p. m., also on the same day, he sent still another wire:

SWELL
Willie.

Arlen Plays Cop

Dick Arlen, the "mayor" of Toluca Lake, is going to draw up some new rules to handle the traffic. I mean, since the public heard the rumor that Garbo was playing tennis and swimming out at George Brent's place, the whole district has been over-run with autograph hounds.

'Tis said that Mr. Brent is up in arms at the "silly rumors" to the effect that he and Greta are like this . . . but we-uns is takin' all that with a bit of a pinch of salt.

Venable Still Fancy Free

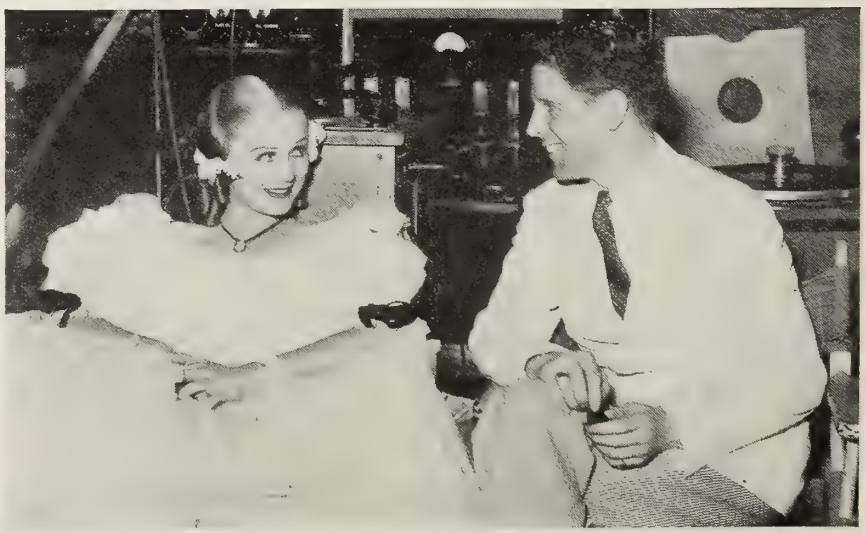
Evelyn Venable's papa won't have to worry about his little darter getting married for a spell yet. Ever since Evelyn came to Hollywood, Papa has been fretting about her stepping off the deep end before he has a chance to make a great Shakespearean actress out of her.

Her romance with Cameraman Hal Mohr has been going hot and heavy for weeks (with Papa on edge) but Evelyn has broken it off for good now and has wired home to say that "all's well." Ho hum.

Good Trouper

The "Evelyn Prentice" company had been rehearsing one particular scene for hours. Just as they started with the camera grinding, however, Isabel Jewell brushed a lighted cigarette against the wall and the lighted end flicked off on her shoulder.

The scene was a long one but Isabel didn't say a word to spoil it until the director called "Cut." It was found, then, that she had suffered a terrific burn and blisters had already developed! That's the kind of courage that prompted the phrase: "The show must go on."



Sweet Alice

When Rudy Vallee first came to Hollywood he wanted most to meet Alice White, his favorite on the screen. Alice would not hear of it at that time for she was much in love with her present husband, Cy Bartlett. Now Alice is going to appear in Vallee's new flicker, "Sweet Music," and they have forgotten all about those early days. Besides, Rudy is probably thinking of Alice Faye now.

good news

Hollywood always seems to be giving a party for Emanuel Cohen of Paramount. Here he is again, celebrating with Mae West (wotta celebration!) and Gary Cooper, who apparently is looking for wife Sandra Shaw among the guests. (Below) Rudy Vallee, who is busy on one Warner lot making "Sweet Music," visits another Warner set where Gloria Stuart is at work on "Golddiggers of 1935."

Reunion for Bruce-Gilbert?

John Gilbert is still hoping, according to the very latest reports, that he and his fourth wife, Virginia Bruce, will get together before divorce separates them for good and all. They had three "secret meetings" last week to talk the thing over and reporters finally got a statement out of Virginia, the estranged wife: "Yes, we did get together . . . sort of . . . but don't ask me any more questions. I met him at his request and we talked a while. As for the future, you never know."

Hollywood is hoping they do reconsider and try again. If Gilbert would be a real good boy, the general opinion is that they should live happily ever after. Personally, we'd cheer for it.

"Annerring"

"The President Vanishes," which promises to be a very swell moom picture, is going to cost a flock of dollars more than the studio planned. This is how: when the script was okayed some weeks ago, everything was fine, but since the picture was finished, the happenings in Europe have actually paralleled some of the fiction and all those scenes have to be re-shot! The author must have played a hunch.

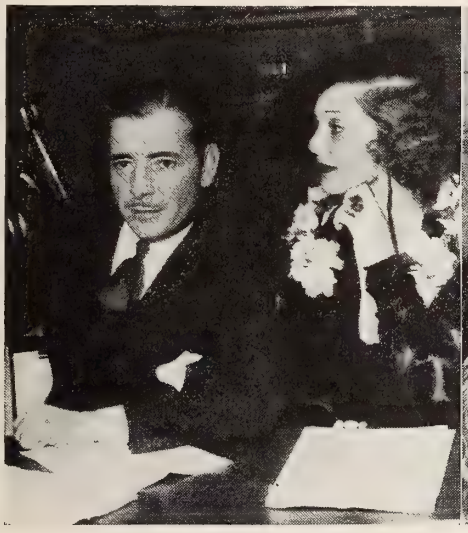
Around Hollywood

The same day that Nat Pendleton fired his bodyguard, Jack Oakie hired one . . . One of the sensational dresses Carole Lombard will wear for "Repeal" is made of cellophane and it's driving her crazy. Did I say driving her crazy? . . . Bette Davis and her husband are driving east for a rest . . . Ann Harding has the whitest skin of any star in Hollywood . . . Mary Pickford gave a party to welcome Harriet Hoctor, the dancer.

Brave Man

Believe it or not, an assistant director was the one who finally tamed La Hepburn. The other day, while on location, our little "Spitfire" was holding up production by dallying with her lunch. Everyone stood around waiting . . . no one able to muster the courage to step up and tell Hepburn off.

At last the assistant took his life in his hands and, oddly enough, Katie took it with a grin and went right to work.



Beware Sinclair

Bill Powell, who is spending a fortune on his new house, refers to it consistently as "Upton Sinclair's Summer Home" . . . and Hollywood seems to think he's kidding. But it's not so funny! More like "half kidding, whole earnest."

Bye, Bye Party

Loretta Young gave a swell bon voyage party for Fred Perry, the tennis champ, before he boarded the boat for Australia. Loretta used her whole family to help make the party a success and see that her reported "heart" got a grand send-off. Both Polly Ann and Sally were there and the Clover Club rang to the rafters with the laughter and fun they all had.

The very next night, Loretta made her first appearance over the radio. And was she scared! She and Ronnie Colman did a scene from their "Clive Of India" and it went over great. Not (Continued on page 59)

Ronald Colman and Loretta Young, stars-to-be of "Clive of India," take part in a "Hollywood Hotel" broadcast. (Below) Still going together—and going strong. Bill Powell and Jean Harlow at Wrigley Field wrestling matches.

Little David Jack Holt, staying up late for the Emanuel Cohen party, asks Mary Boland to help him read the menu. (Below) The gossips haven't caught up with this romance yet—Helen Mack and Charles Irwin, at a preview.

Look who's back in Hollywood! None other than Pola Negri, looking grand. She's with Henry Wilcoxon, at a Cocoanut Grove party. (Below) Our own associate editor, Regina Cannon, leaves on the Century for Hollywood.

Modern Screen Dramatic School

Katherine Albert tells how to overcome self-consciousness

HOW can I overcome self-consciousness?

What can I do when stage-fright possesses me, my hands get hot and my mouth goes dry?

These are the questions that all of you with theatrical ambitions want answered. Even if you are minus those ambitions you probably will be interested. Honestly, I've lain awake nights wondering what I could tell you that would satisfactorily answer those questions. For I, like you, perhaps, have read those very profound books on the subject and found them, for the most part, sheer, unadulterated bunk!

Then I began talking to stars, directors and casting directors about you self-conscious ones, and I think that I have some specific, workable advice to give. It was a famous executive who put me on the right track. "How can I teach my MODERN SCREEN Dramatic School pupils to get rid of embarrassment," I asked. "How can they rid themselves of stage-fright, self-consciousness—call it what you will? Surely, they can't succeed unless they're free from these bugaboos."

"Why not?" he answered. "Do you call Joan Crawford a success? Norma Shearer? Garbo?"

And then a great light dawned upon me. By golly, Joan Crawford is one of the most self-conscious girls I know. She suffers agonies every time she meets a stranger. In reality she is much more frightened of adoring little fans who beg for her autograph than they are of the Joan Crawford they worship. And Norma Shearer! Such stage-fright as the poised, self-assured, apparently dignified Shearer suffers. Every time she starts a new picture she is tortured by doubts and fears. She won't do it well, she argues with herself. The part doesn't suit her. Another actress would have been much better. Thus go her thoughts until, before she knows it, she is in the executive's office weeping hysterically and begging him to call off the film. She does this about every new picture. Now the M-G-M execs are superstitious about it and feel if Norma doesn't go through a certain amount of terrific stage-fright, the film won't be any good at all.

I could go on and on telling you how nervous the stars are when they are working before the camera or meeting new people. I'll bet that you won't find ten men and women in Hollywood who are completely free from self-consciousness.

"But how," you ask me, "will all this help me? Misery loves company. Very well, but can that help me overcome my self-consciousness?"

No, it cannot, but it will teach you a great truth. Most of the stars are terribly self-conscious and they have succeeded. So, first of all, don't consider self-consciousness such a formidable foe. It isn't nearly so bad as you think it is. Unless someone told you, could you possibly imagine that Joan is self-conscious? Shearer? Garbo? Gloria Swanson? Clark Gable? Carole Lombard? Gary Cooper? Ricardo Cortez? Una Merkel? Isn't it true that these people have fooled you for years? That they all seem to be the essence of poise and assurance? Very well, then, if they can fool you, you can fool other people. If they can hide their self-consciousness so can you, once you get it into your head that you do not appear to be as self-conscious as you actually are! Try, too, to realize that when (Continued on page 88)

I should like to organize a dramatic society in my home town. Please tell me how to go about it.

Name .....

Address ..... City .....

State .....

(Please print name and address and enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope for reply)

Famous actresses and prima donnas are subject to stage-fright, too. Remember how nervous and frightened Grace Moore was in "One Night of Love" when she made her operatic debut? Tullio Carminati and Jesse Ralph had all they could do to calm her.

Ever-Glamorous

Will Garbo the Great, who reached new histrionic heights in "The Painted Veil," sign a new contract with M-G-M? Hollywood is debating the question and the affirmatives seem to be winning. It is said that the mysterious star greatly enjoyed making her latest picture due to working with George Brent, her leading man, whom she found so attractive. If La Garbo signs a new contract her next will be a talking version of Tolstoi's "Anna Karenina." She and John Gilbert appeared in the silent interpretation of the Russian tragedy when it was called "Love." We could stand seeing a new version, what?

Thoroughbred

The lovely Ann is now doing "Enchanted April," an ambitious piece for which she is singularly suited. Along with her other high aims she has a yen for writing, is no slouch of a linguist and is a thoroughly accomplished pianist. She knows no fear and consequently will drive anything with a motor attached. Her complete devotion to her home is due, no doubt, to the fact that her childhood was lived in various army posts. You know, of course, that her father was General George Grant Gatley. Fort Sam Houston, Texas, is her birthplace.

Charming

A quiet life and hard work is what Gene craves at the moment. He's had a hectic summer and possibly that explains his yearning for solitude. So with a book in hand and a lot more on his shelves, he's settling down to enjoy a period of seclusion. His friends have dubbed him "The Hermit," but that matters not to Gene. He has finished "Transatlantic Merry-Go-Round," and is now doing "Behold My Wife," with Sylvia Sidney. A busy man, indeed. What, no romance? Guess not. His career seems to be the thing these days.

Blonde Menace

Did you know that independently wealthy Claire Dodd had no intention of pursuing a film career? The truth is she took a screen test for fun while visiting a friend in Hollywood. Result: a contract. So alluring does she find filmdom that she's been in pictures ever since. She preserves her gorgeousness by sleeping twelve hours a day and living quietly. She never uses make-up off the screen, never diets and is a fresh air fiend. Happily married to a successful realtor, she finds life good. You saw her last in "I Sell Anything."

Imp

He portrays mean kids but is really a very sweet youngster. He's unspoiled, too, thanks to his mother, who says thumbs down on anything that might swell his head, such as reading his own fan mail and going to a swanky private school. No, indeed, Jackie goes to public school and is a regular fellow. He's captain of his class baseball team, and vows he will be a star pitcher on a professional team when he grows up. His latest picture is "Peck's Bad Boy," in which he scored a tremendous hit, notwithstanding the good work of Jackie Cooper.

Britisher

It must have been a trick of fate that brought to the American screen this young Britisher, for it was by sheer accident that De Mille discovered him. The director's chance glimpse through a peephole in the room where Wilcoxon's test was being made decided his choice of an Antony for "Cleopatra." His next picture is "The Crusades." A recent exhibition of his paintings in London attests to the fact that he is an artist of no little ability.

A touch of HANDS — A change of HEART!

1 Frigid

2 Temperate

3 Melting

4 Hot!

IF you were a man, could you get a thrill out of touching a dry, chapped hand? You know you couldn't—it's the dear-little-smooth-little hand that gives him a romantic feeling. . . .

This winter, keep your hands thrillingly smooth! Hinds Honey and Almond Cream will help you. Hinds soaks the skin with rich soothing oils—quickly relieves chapping and gives velvety texture! This is because Hinds is much more than a "jelly." It is the penetrating liquid cream—it lubricates deeply with quick-working balms.

Use Hinds Honey and Almond Cream after you've "washed things out," also at bedtime! See how quickly Hinds gives you silken-smooth hands!

As fragrant . . . rich . . . as the liquid creams costing $2 at expensive beauty salons. But Hinds Honey and Almond Cream costs only 25¢ and 50¢ at your druggist, or 10¢ at the dime store.

Hinds
Honey and Almond Cream

By Adele Whitely Fletcher

Men...!

(Below) Ann Sothern, Sylvia Sidney, Myrna Loy and Miriam Hopkins are the four girls who confess to you certain secret love episodes in their lives. Myrna, Miriam, Sylvia and Ann. One is the Girl with Flyaway Hair. Another is the Girl with Lovely Eyes. The third is the Girl with the Strange Beauty. And the fourth is the Girl of the Orchids. But which is which—you'll have to discover.

What do women talk about when they get together? Men! Men who have loved them. Men whom they have loved. Men who have made unpleasant advances toward them. In two revealing articles, four beautiful stars confess—without disclosing names, of course, for the sake of good taste—certain episodes with certain men.

THAT new man. . . .

For weeks Hollywood and Beverly Hills and Brentwood had been in a dither. The feminine part of Hollywood and Beverly Hills and Brentwood, anyway. The new man in town, come to play in pictures, of course, was something! Everything in fact! He laughed with his eyes. And, as if that wasn't enough, his personal history proved him gallant and brave. Interesting looking, rather than out-and-out handsome. Darn well-made. With an easy manner of wearing expensively casual clothes.

The men of Hollywood and Beverly Hills and Brentwood were stymied. They couldn't laugh this newcomer off as they would have liked to do. He was no sleek, hand-kissing gigolo. He had their instinctive approval. At the club. Over backgammon and bridge tables. On the tennis courts. At dinner parties.

A new man in any suburb causes excitement, affords a social impetus, inspires loads of parties, and sets fathers —and husbands—to wrinkling their foreheads over bills for new dinner dresses.

In Hollywood and Beverly Hills and Brentwood life follows the suburban pattern. To a T. Except that here the advent of a new man is likely to cause even more commotion than it does anywhere else. The girls in the movie suburbs largely outnumber the eligible men.

When the Girl With Flyaway Hair returned to the film colony after a holiday she found the chase well on.

"My dear," fairly screamed a friend who spied her coming into the hairdresser's, "wait until you see him! You won't be any calmer than the rest of us!"

That evening in the Beverly-Wilshire dressing-room, between dances, the girl met another of the new man's admirers. A somewhat older woman. On the screen she played society matrons and smart divorcées. A quick, frank, discerning woman.

"Well," she sighed, dropping into a chair, "you did pick an unfortunate time to be away, I must say. You've never known such dinner parties as we've been having, angel! For the new man, of course. I don't mind telling you, I'm exhausted. If he wasn't starting work on his picture and hadn't announced he wouldn't go out again until it was finished, I'd leave for Arrowhead or La Quinta. In self-defense. Because I'd never in this world have the will power to stay home from a party if he was to be there. And an old girl like me has to think about rings under her eyes.

"Come to think of it, maybe it's just as well you aren't likely to meet him until things have calmed down somewhat. He'd fall for you. Men always do. You look so . . . oh, so innocent and wicked all at once. As if you didn't know it, angel! And I do believe, without a doubt, the other girls would start a pogrom against you!"

The Girl with Flyaway Hair was pleased. Her little hands went fluttering among the curls at the back of her head.

"We'll see. I have an engagement with this marvellous creature. Tomorrow morning. At nine o'clock."

The older woman pursed her lips. "Angel!" she exclaimed, but with an incredulous note. She knew, you see, that he had been out on the desert ever since the girl returned and that the following morning he started work on his new picture.

"You don't believe me?" the girl taxed her.

"Why, Angel. . . ."

The girl laughed. "We're to be in the same picture," she explained. "That's why I came back."

The attractive matron snuffed out her cigarette. "Of all the lucky girls! Of all the lucky girls!" She sighed. For her lately departed youth. And others things, too, no doubt. "Imagine Angel, you'll have him making love to you!"

Angel shook her head. "You sound like a visitor from Dubuque. You know perfectly well love scenes aren't any more exciting or romantic than any other scenes. Part of the day's work. Nothing more."

"Not always. . . ." A little excitement beat in the matron's voice. Some memory lit tiny flames in her wide gray eyes. "Not always, angel. . . ."

THE opening sequence of that picture—a very gay, sophisticated and successful picture which appeared on neighborhood screens about a year ago—was laid in a smart and ultra-modern drawing-room. One entire side of that room, overlooking a flagged terrace, was windows. White predominated. There were sofas and deep low chairs complemented by glass smoking tables. And all about there were great crystal bowls of lovely garden flowers.

It was a beautiful background (Continued on page 90)

What will happen

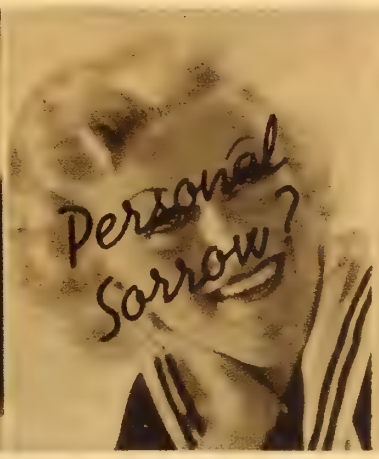
MAE WEST

CLARK GABLE

By Harry Lang

Dareos, famous Hollywood seer, tells

What Dareos Prophesied	What Happened
Two famous stars, blonde and brunette, will divorce, despite vigorous denials.	True in every detail. Harlow and Kay Francis.
Unprecedented number of divorces, among them three famous female stars and two male stars.	Correct. Landi, Hepburn, Chatterton and Colman and Gilbert. Others include Laura LaPlante, Sue Carol, Adolphe Menjou, Gloria Stuart and countless others.
Babies (he even specified twins) will be born to many stars.	Right again. Twins in the Crosby family and babies to Sally Eilers, Frances Dee, Dorothy Jordan, Jack Dempsey, Joan Bennett, Robert Young; Joan Blondell and Clara Bow "expecting" as this is written.
Scandal looms hugely.	One might say that the entire motion picture industry was scandalized in the vigorous censorship campaign which blazed headlines throughout the entire world. Organization heads were severely criticized, pictures were banned in wholesale numbers, many stories lost all entertainment value in an effort to purify the movies, some of our best loved stars were practically ostracized because of past pictures and severely warned about future films, and many writers who had offended the powers that be were denied all studio coöperation.
Death will come to three of the screen's best-loved players.	Very, very true. Marie Dressler, Lilyan Tashman and Lew Cody.
Serious injury to Gary Cooper, Lilyan Tashman and Edmund Lowe in a plane crash.	Death for Lilyan Tashman. The rest untrue, as this is written.
The return of prosperity to the movies. New companies and new stars.	Correct. Box-office receipts prove the truth of this statement. The old Biograph Studios in New York have started life anew. Hecht-MacArthur and Walter Wanger have begun new producing units. While Grace



(Continued on page 83)

SUMMARY: In Dareos' predictions for 1934, there were 61 items. Of these, 47 came true. 2 were incorrect. And 12 are inconclusive as this is written. Dareos' score: 77% correct; 3% wrong; 20% inconclusive.

to them in 1935 . . . ?

CLAUDETTE COLBERT

JEAN HARLOW

HERBERT MARSHALL

BING CROSBY

you what "the stars hold in store for the stars"

ONCE again, Dareos, Hollywood's fortune-teller-to-the-stars, makes his annual predictions for MODERN SCREEN.

Readers who have followed his forecasts for the past four years have learned the amazing accuracy of his prophecies. He has predicted marriages, births, deaths, and divorces. He has foretold, with uncanny accuracy, the fortunes of the screen's great and near-great, with respect to their professional as well as to their private lives.

For many years, he has been a confidante of some of the screen's most glamorous figures. There are certain producers in Hollywood who will not make a major business move without first consulting him. There are stars —both men and women—who go to him regularly, and in whose homes he is treated as "one of the family."

AS a result, he knows the real truth about these people—their hopes, their plans, their dreams, and their secrets. On this knowledge, as well as on what the stars and his crystal tell him, he has based these annual forecasts for MODERN SCREEN. You have only to read the box on the opposite page to realize how remarkably successful his last year's predictions proved to be.

And so this year, he delves once again into his bag of secrets and tells us these things:

That 1935 will bring movie fans the triple tragedy of the deaths of three more of their most beloved players.

That both England and television will give Hollywood great competition. That television will make amazing strides and inroads into the motion picture industry, and that England, as a movie-producing country, will go skyrocketing to such an extent as to give Hollywood many a headache. Furthermore, many American stars will go there to make pictures.

That Myrna Loy will be 1935's outstanding screen sensation. That Joan Crawford will marry; also Janet Gaynor, Bill Powell and Carole Lombard. That Garbo will be called to Sweden by the illness of her mother, which will end in death. That Clark Gable will be the target for an overambitious mother's love-plot. Here's a list of the screen's most outstanding people and some of the things Dareos says will happen to them during 1935 —or within the first few months of 1936:

Garbo will leave M-G-M to make independent productions. She will be called home to Sweden by the fatal illness of her mother. Her own health will suffer. There is no great picture for her and her career will show definite signs of decline. There is no love affair and no marriage.

FOR John and Dolores Barrymore, the year is beset by accident and robbery. The stars indicate a serious accident to John, either aboard his yacht or at the wheel of an automobile. John will make one big English production. There is continued serenity and happiness in their domestic life.

Lionel Barrymore's wife faces the most serious illness of her life in 1935. Lionel himself is threatened with physical collapse.

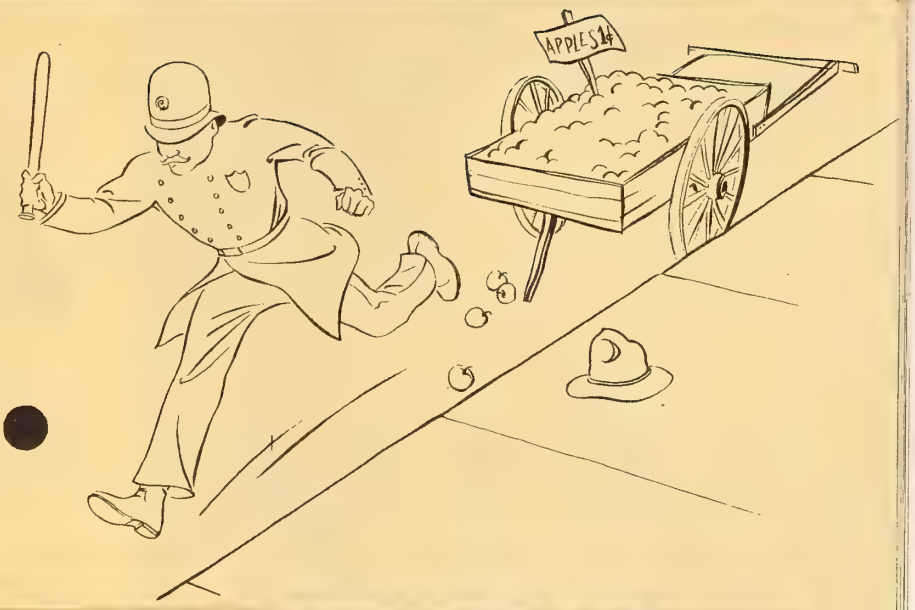
Either in the early spring or late fall, Claudette Colbert will be the victim of some occurrence of personal violence—either accidental or a deliberate attempt to harm her. Threat of scandal overhangs her. Profession- (Continued on page 82)

He was a Problem

By Harry Brundidge

Fredric March says, "I might have been a gangster!" He stole. He was a hellion. Mothers who weep and pray over bad children—read this

March as the noble-looking Browning of "The Barretts of Wimpole Street."



FREDRIC MARCH was what we call, nowadays, a problem child. He was considerably worse than mischievous. The neighbors weren't fooling when they opined that he'd never escape hanging. Nowadays, if parents have a problem child and enough money, they call in a psychiatrist and have the child's mental innards overhauled. But if they haven't enough money or cannot get hold of one of these mind-doctors, the father usually administers lickings and the mother sheds bitter tears and prays pathetic prayers and wonders whatever will become of her boy. Or, perhaps, if they are really sensible about it, they summon their faith in the good Lord and the potent influence of a good home to set the young divil on the right path. Look back upon your own youth. Perhaps you did some pretty terrible things. So do most young people—especially boys. Listen to Fred's story, as he told it to me.

Fredric March crumpled the motion picture section of a newspaper, crushed it into a ball with strong, bronzed hands, and pitched it into a convenient waste basket. Freddie's face was flushed, his eyes were flashing fire. He reached for and obtained a drink.

"Hell's bells!" he ejaculated. "I'm damn well sick of these sissy stories about little Freddie March.

Child . .

Fred—about eleven—with his father, an understanding and kind gentleman.

In the earlier sequences of "We Live Again" with the beautiful Anna Sten.

"That paper had another one. It related how I used to speak pieces and make weekly trips to the bank 'to deposit twenty-five or fifty cents, or whatever he managed to save from his small allowance.' Allowance, my eye! What dough I got my hands on in my boyhood I obtained from picking rags, bottles, iron and paper out of ash pits, alleys, and back yards and hauling the plunder in a home-made wagon to the junk dealer, where I sold it.

"I was a tough kid, back in Racine, Wis.

"I stole chickens, vegetables and canned goods. From the age of seven I did all of the things for which boys are now dragged into the juvenile courts. One day I stole a complete stove from a junk dealer, for installation in a club house our gang had constructed from stolen lumber. I recall that I congratulated myself on having graduated from petit to grand larceny.

"Had it not been for circumstances, and the environment of a good home, I, too, might have been a gangster —and a good one!

"I say 'I too' because some of my boyhood pals turned out to be thugs and yeggmen.

"Stories of my life have always pictured me as a sort of gutless wonder," he continued. "In every instance, the rough spots have been glossed over. The old theory that truth is stranger than fiction, and a darned sight more interesting, seems to have been forgotten. The truth is that I've lived an interesting life. I've tasted the bitter and the sweet. I've starved. I've walked the soles off my shoes looking for work. I'm going to tell you the truth—all of it—and I hope you get it published. I'm sick and tired of the nonsensical stuff that's been printed."

(Continued on page 100)

In the garden of Blunderstone Rookery, David and Dora speak of love.

David

Cast

David (as a boy).FREDDIE BARTHOLOMEW
David.....FRANK LAWTON
Mrs. Copperfield.....ELIZABETH ALLAN
Mr. Murdstone.....BASIL RATHBONE
Barkis.....HERBERT MUNDIN
Mrs. Gummidge.....UNA O'CONNOR
Micawber.....W. C. FIELDS
Uriah Heep.....ROLAND YOUNG
Agnes.....MADGE EVANS
Dora.....MAUREEN O'SULLIVAN
Aunt Betsy.....EDNA MAY OLIVER
Mr. Wickfield.....LEWIS STONE
Nurse Peggotty.....JESSIE RALPH
Dan Peggotty.....LIONEL BARRYMORE
Steerforth.....HUGH WILLIAMS

From the M-G-M picture. DIRECTOR GEORGE CUKOR and PRODUCER DAVID D. SELZNICK. From the novel by CHARLES DICKENS. Screen play by HOWARD ESTABROOK and adaptation by HUGH WALPOLE. Fictionized by KATHERINE ALBERT.

"Mr. Murdstone, sir, don't," David cried piteously. "Pray don't beat me. I've tried to learn, sir."

Copperfield

Wherein the shattered fragments of a tortured childhood are slowly healed by the mending threads of true love

DAVID COPPERFIELD saw Mr. Murdstone for the first time in church. Later it occurred to him how ironic was this righteous background. It was a lazy summer Sunday. He and his beloved widowed mother and the good Peggotty, their one servant, were happy together in the little English church. David felt quite pleased with life until he saw Mr. Murdstone looking at his mother and, small boy though he was, he recognized a repellent quality about the man. He shuddered and drew close to his mother's fluffy skirts.

"That man," he whispered, "he's like the black panther in my animal book, Mummy."

"Hush!" she whispered, "that's a friend of Mama's."

Forever afterwards, every time he looked at Mr. Murdstone he saw only the sneaking, slinking black panther whose likeness on the picture-book page terrified him. But he soon realized that he did not know what real fear was until Mr. Murdstone came to live at his and his dear Mama's home. The man terrified him.

It was all very confusing and he did not know at the time why he was being hustled off in a cart, driven by a certain very willing Mr. Barkis, to visit Peggotty's relatives in Yarmouth. David couldn't see why his mother stayed behind but Peggotty told him that she was going to visit friends of hers. David accepted this explanation and made the most of his trip, without knowing that it was to be his last real happiness for years and years.

But he was happy with Peggotty, Ham (Peggotty's nephew, a redoubtable fisherman), Mrs. Gummidge (always complaining), Dan Peggotty (Peggotty's brother), and, best of all, Little Emily, the sweet small girl who showed David the wonders of the beach and, more wonderful still, the house in which they lived. Only it wasn't a house at all. It was an old barge, high and dry on the beach, turned bottom side up with an iron funnel sticking out of it for a chimney (Continued on page 61)

It was all very confusing to David. Why was he being hustled off to Yarmouth? Why must he leave his mother?

"That man! He's like the black panther in my animal book, Mummy." "Hush, David, that's a friend of Mama's."

ZaSu Pitts' "hidden" personality may surprise you

(Left) W. C. Fields and ZaSu Pitts, a pair of picture-stealers at their trade, on the set of "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch."

Sad, Shy and Meek (OH YEAH?)

By Carter Bruce

YOU know ZaSu Pitts' personality on the screen—shy and school-marmish, highly moral, completely bewildered by life, so much so that the least upset throws her out of stride and leaves her feebly wringing her hands and whimpering, "Oh, dear, oh, dear."

Perhaps you've heard, too, how different she is off the screen—a highly attractive woman, dignified and well-dressed, much in love with her new tennis-champion husband, Thomas Woody, and simply mad about her home and friends.

I've often wondered why nobody has written about another side of ZaSu Pitts that I know. The only reason why it remains such a deep, dark secret, it seems to me, is her dread of publicity. Even if she only meets a newspaper or magazine writer on the street, she lies awake nights for a week wondering what he is going to print about her. It's a mania with her. She is actually terrified of print.

THAT'S the only explanation, so far as I can see, for her never having been painted for you in her true colors. As for me, I think she's the worst hell-raiser in Hollywood. How they ever finish a picture at all, when she's working in it, is a mystery (Continued on page 80)

What's Wrong with the Man?

Has love put Franchot on the spot—personally and professionally?

By Martha Kerr

(Above) Portrait of a young man whose name has become inseparable from the name of a glamorous person named Joan Crawford. (Below) Gary Cooper and Dick Cromwell with Franchot Tone in "The Lives of a Bengal Lancer."

UNTIL yesterday, I had never met Franchot Tone. But I had a couple of very definite impressions of him: the first, gleaned from his appearances on the screen, was that he was the most consistently inconsistent actor in the movies, with a tendency to alternate four-star performances with very mediocre ones. My second impression came from his publicity which, intentionally or unintentionally, presented him as probably the dullest young man in Hollywood.

It is one of my duties to keep abreast of the prominent players. Yet I have never been able to get past the first few paragraphs of a Tone interview, whether it concerned his life or his personality.

When he first came to Hollywood, the best the writers seemed to be able to "angle" out of him was a play on his name. I remember one or two of the stories were titled: "Now We Have the Right Tone in Pictures" or "Tone-ing In on a New Screen Lover!"

Immediately following the title, the reader was quickly assured that nothing sensational or dramatic would be forthcoming on the subject of Mr. Tone. He was a gentleman and, as such, did not discuss his intimate affairs. So, in place of the popular, human-interest slant, those curious about Franchot were treated to a set of facts about his birthplace (Niagara Falls), his excellent family tree, his Cornell University education and a list of several Broadway hits in which he had appeared in pre-Hollywood days.

The second Tone publicity cycle began and has, apparently, ended with Joan Crawford.

NO sooner had it become apparent, following her divorce from Doug, Jr., that Joan was interested in Franchot, that his name was coupled constantly with hers. Ham 'n' eggs, Amos 'n' Andy, Mike and Ike, Joan and Tone were all in the same category of related thought, absolutely inseparable. (Continued on page 76)

Claudette's Favorite Fan

How one fan won a spot in Claudette Colbert's heart

By T. B. Fithian

IS such a thing possible? Can a star have a favorite fan? People all over the world are constantly writing letters to their screen favorites. How about the other side of the picture? Out of this host of more or less regular correspondents does a star ever have an outstanding favorite? Someone whose letters set him apart from the crowd. Letters which command attention. Which win, for him or for her, first place in the star's affection and esteem.

In general the stars will tell you that there is no fan in whom they are particularly interested. But Claudette Colbert is an exception. She really has a favorite.

As we talked about it her manner was puzzling. At one moment she was eager to tell me all about it. At the next she shook her head. She couldn't!

Then Claudette did a startling thing. She threw back her head and laughed. When she caught her breath she apologized.

"Excuse me," she said. "But I can never think of how it started without laughing. It wasn't funny at the time, I assure you. I was furious."

"What is his name?"

CLAUDETTE glanced at me sharply. Her face clouded. Then mischief began to dance in her eyes. She jumped up and hurried from the room. In a few minutes she returned with a packet of letters. She winked at me slyly as she untied the blue ribbon.

"I know the other person so well," she said, "that I'm sure it will be all right. He won't mind my showing them to you."

I read the first one:

Watonga, Okla.,
Sept. 9, 1933.

MY DEAR MISS COLBERT,

Enclosed is a story which will suit you perfectly. I, of course, am the author. I am also one of your fans. Quite accomplished, what?

Well, anyway, I never miss any of your pictures. But I'm weakening. The record is about to topple. If you appear in any more stories like the last two, it shall definitely topple. Would you like that? No, my dear lady, neither should I.

And this is not all. Your acting is slowly becoming affected with the mediocrity of your yarns. It misses. Would you mind, for instance, stopping that annoying little habit of wiggling your little finger every now and then, please?

Poor, indeed, is the man who can only criticize. I come to the rescue. The enclosed manuscript is your salvation. If you fail to read it what will I think? I'll think that you think it is impossible for a man of letters to be also one of your fans. Your pride quivers at the thought.

Therefore, I remain.
Devotedly yours,
DANIEL KECK.

Claudette was scrutinizing my face when I looked up after reading it.

"Of course," she smiled grimly, "it was impossible to read that manuscript. I have an ironclad rule never to read stories sent to me by strangers. If I didn't I'd be simply swamped. My secretary has her instructions. Return all manuscripts with the suggestion that they be sent directly to the studio. Also a word of thanks. But this time she broke the rule.

"I had just crawled home from the studio. When I say crawled, I mean crawled. I was nervous, irritable, exhausted. All afternoon we had to do a heavy emotional scene over and over again. I came in, kicked off my shoes, and sank on the divan. My secretary showed me that letter from dear Mr. Keck. I glanced at it. You can guess my reaction. It wasn't designed especially to soothe one's jagged nerves. I forget exactly what I said but my secretary turned pale. She replied, of course, that she'd answer the letter in the same tone in which it was written, but she didn't budge. She stood there. Timidly, she held out her other hand. It was the manuscript. 'It's good,' she offered lamely. 'Really, Miss Colbert, it's awfully good. You should read it.'

"I flew into a tantrum. 'For Heaven's sake,' I raged, 'leave me alone. I'm not going to read the gibberish of that smart-aleck.' I had the article in my hand. After glancing at the title I turned to the last page. After the final paragraph the author had written, 'I wonder if Miss Colbert will read this? Who knows?'

"Such a cheap trick. Authors are constantly using such devices, sticking pages (Continued on page 71)

Rough, Ready and Regular

Unactor-like Vic McLaglen —his life reads like fiction

By Cyril Vandour

ONE of eight brothers known as the "Fighting Macs," Victor McLaglen has worked and scrapped his way around the world.

Born in London, this burly son of the late Right Reverend Dr. Andrew McLaglen, an English bishop, was the toughest kid in school and the despair of his gentle parents. Not being what teachers call a bright boy, he ran away from home and school at the age of fourteen to join the Life Guards, passing for nineteen.

The herculean mould of his physique determined his long career as a bruiser. His son Andrew, aged thirteen, is a chip off the old block, and already towers six feet one, within two inches of Vic's own height. Vic's brothers are all hefty fellows, each one well over six feet. The old bishop who sired this restless brood of giants was six feet four.

Life with Vic began at fourteen. While his schoolmates were still cramming for their exams in Latin and trigonometry, he was a swaggering man of the world, knocking around with troopers who had seen active service, smoking strong tobacco, and at nights, after the day's back-breaking drill, bawling lusty regimental songs over tall mugs when, as he says, "beer was beer." In a company noted for its scrappers, he won a reputation as a two-fisted guy of slam-bang action, one whom it was dangerous to provoke. And somehow, contradiction though it seems, retained a certain boyishness which he has to this day.

His boyishness struck me as the most attractive of his traits during the time I spent with him on the set of his recent starring vehicle, "The Captain Hates the Sea," at his manorial estate in Flintridge, and on the drill ground of his colorful Light Horse, in trying to pick up the material for this yarn. (Continued on page 68)

WANTED: A

By Katharine Hartley

for Kay

Her remedy: Will it be leisure?

• To Europe sailed Kay seeking a panacea for heartbreak and loneliness

IT was while Kay Francis was married to Kenneth MacKenna that I asked her what was her most sincere ambition. And it wasn't one of those thought-out, "well-let-me-see" answers that she gave me. Her eyes lighted up, and the answer sprang from her heart.

"I want to be a good wife. That's all. That's the thing that's important. What do personal ambitions, material successes mean compared to the happiness of loving and being loved? Nothing. At least they mean nothing to my kind of woman."

And then, in less than a month, Kay was divorcing Kenneth MacKenna. It was the most surprising divorce of 1934, just as it had been the most surprising marriage, when, three years ago, Mr. MacKenna abducted Kay from her hospital bed. Everyone had agreed that it was a marvelous marriage. How sensible and sane those two were about it. Hollywood just didn't touch them. Kay had been married twice before, but the third one worked like a charm, and was charming. And then it had ended quickly and quietly and without much fuss in a divorce court!

Kay refused to talk about it. No writer ever really got the true story. There weren't very many lines printed about it because there was nothing to print. The world shrugged its shoulders and said, "Oh, just another one of those Hollywood divorces. It doesn't mean anything. That was her third, wasn't it? Kay Francis will be married again before the year is over."

And, indeed, it looked as though she would be. Kay was going places with Maurice Chevalier. And she was smiling and acting as gay as usual. A few of us who didn't look very closely thought that she looked even happier than ever! Then Chevalier went to Europe, and a few weeks later Kay sailed for the same destination. The marriage will be any day now, the gossipers said. What an attractive couple! What a thrill for the American press! Kay denied it all, but she laughed and looked happy even when she said, "That's (Continued on page 77)

Remedy for Heartbreak

By Juliette Laine

for Virginia

● To work rushes Virginia crushing memories of an ill-starred marriage

Her cure: Will it be a new career?

"I'M working because I want to. Work is the only cure for heartache, the only intelligent, civilized thing to do. Life nowadays is too big, too wonderful, for any normal woman to collapse in the midst of the debris and confusion of a shattered romance or a broken marriage. In our grandmother's day a woman dramatized her broken heart. In fact, it was expected of her. She either pined away and died, or else she lived on and became a nuisance to everyone around her. It wasn't ladylike to do anything else!"

Virginia Bruce looked like a little girl as she sat there on the chaise longue in her dressing-room, confiding in me. The deep garnet tone of her swank Charvet lounging pyjamas accentuated the camellia-like whiteness of her skin and the soft, deep blue of her eyes. Her hair, long and uncurled, hung down her back in quaint Alice-in-Wonderland fashion.

As I sat there, silently admiring her, I remembered a conversation I had had with John Gilbert, just before their marriage. How thoroughly happy he was then.

"She is marvelous!" he had said again and again. "There's no one like Virginia in all the world! Her temperament, her strength of character, are magnificent! Above all, Virginia personifies peace and tranquillity; a contentment of heart and soul that is a wholly new experience for me. I have been through all the turmoil, all the fire and fury of love and marriage, but never until I met Virginia did I know the happiness of peace! I feel like a shipwrecked man who has been clinging to a spar, and then suddenly finds himself washed ashore in a beautiful, sheltered haven. Virginia's sweetness, her sympathy and understanding, are beyond belief!"

AS I looked across the room at this girl who had meant so much to the Great Lover of the screen, yet whom he had lost after so brief a while of happiness, my heart ached for him. What, after all, was it that had come into the midst of their (Continued on page 86)

Three famous stars and an equally famous director worked together in "Forsaking All Others!" How did they get along, or did they? Read what happened

By Walter Ramsey

BEHIND THE SCENES WITH Joan, Clark and Bob

WHEN Joan Crawford, Clark Gable and Robert Montgomery were announced as the stars of "Forsaking All Others," under the ace direction of "Woody" Van Dyke, the local gossip columnists assumed their favorite cat-that-ate-the-canary expression, and sat back and waited for the worst to happen.

Everybody was going around asking everybody else if he'd heard what Van Dyke (of "Thin Man" direction fame) had said about Joan Crawford's penchant for playing Bing Crosby's records on the set? Of course, everybody had. Mr. Van Dyke, who fears neither man, beast nor glamorous movie star, had said he'd be a blank-blank if any star of his was going to play that so-and-so gramophone on the set while he was trying to concentrate. And it was also whispered that Mr. Van Dyke had intimated to close friends that he would go through life just as happily if he never directed a Joan Crawford picture.

The Crawford camp wasn't taking all this lying down either. Someone who had a friend who knew Joan quite well reported that Joan had said Mr. Van Dyke was probably a very nice man, who had never slapped his grandmother or stepped on a flower in his life, but he wasn't the only director in Hollywood, even if "Thin Man" had broken all box-office records for a program picture.

AND then, of course, there was that fascinating angle of Mr. Clark (star) Gable and Mr. Robert (equally-starry) Montgomery doing their stuff in the same picture. For some time now, the Hollywood commentators have been debating the pros and cons as to whether Clark upset Bob's apple cart when he came along on the M-G-M lot, or whether Bob had taken the edge off Clark's popularity.

And who was to get the girl? The most important male in the picture always gets the girl and, obviously (see Hays' morality rulings), Clark and Bob both couldn't have Joan. That just wouldn't do.

All Hollywood hummed with excitement the day artists Crawford, Gable and Montgomery started work in "Forsaking All Others." Would Director Van Dyke approve of Joan's ceaseless gramophone-playing? And what about the old billing problem? You'll be surprised. (Extreme left) Crawford and Gable do a love scene. (Above, right) Bob Montgomery arrives on the scene. (Below) Clark, Joan, Charlie Butterworth and Billie Burke.

And what about the billing? It is stipulated in Joan Crawford's contract that her name shall always precede the title of any picture in which she appears. And Bob and Clark both have star billing clauses, too. Of course, Bob and Clark had always appeared to be very good friends, but then they'd never been together in the same picture with a woman star before. Some of the best friendships in Hollywood have been broken up over less strained conditions than this.

Yes, take it any way you want to, it looked like a gossip's Roman Holiday on the "Forsaking All Others" set, when and if the exciting experiment ever got under way. Believe it or not, but the scent of excitement was so keen that three local newspapers and plenty of magazine writers put in requests to be present on the initial day of shooting—or the shooting of anything else that happened to come up, like Miss Crawford picking up her gramophone and throwing it at Mr. Van Dyke's head, or Bob and Clark amusing themselves by slinging Joan's Bing Crosby records at each other.

The first shock was the arrival of Mr. Van Dyke himself at the studio gate. Now "Woody" usually shows up in an old sweat-shirt with nothing more formal than a cap atop his artistic head. But this day he was all dressed up in a brand new gray sports suit, a jaunty fedora and a handkerchief protruding fashionably from his pocket. It was the handkerchief that got them. Someone observed: "Maybe 'Woody' thinks it would make a better press note to say: 'The corpse was nattily attired when the body was discovered!'"

THE second shock came when the gateman reported that Joan Crawford in her brand new white Ford, Clark Gable in his roadster and Robert Montgomery in his sports model phaeton, had arrived on the lot almost simultaneously—all a good half hour before they were expected. Oh, well, the cynics (Continued on page 74)

Life Begins At 50

Is it too late to attempt a career

By Beth Brown

THE AUTHOR TALKS ABOUT HERSELF

I am small, brunette, and do not look like an author. I wanted more than anything else of life to be an author. This, I had heard, required a variety of experiences. So I up and joined a carnival show and wrote Ballyhoo, joined a burlesque troupe and wrote Applause, went to New Orleans and wrote For Men Only, went abroad and wrote Wedding Ring, went to Hollywood and wrote for the movies, and hoboed across the continent, with only a dog for a companion, to write Lady Hobo.

I love my work. I love red hats, seamy faces, ten-cent stores, smart clothes, watermelon, swimming, my red-haired mother, Broadway, fine etchings, midnight movies, polo, and corn on the cob.

When Guy Kibbee was forty, he was making only $37.50 per week, playing character roles in a Lincoln, Nebraska, stock company. Today, at fifty, he has the starring role in Sinclair Lewis' "Babbitt," with Aline MacMahon as his co-star — a fine team.

(Above, left) It was long after she had passed the fifty-year mark that May Robson was a success—in "Lady for a Day." Her latest film with Carole Lombard is "Lady By Choice." (Directly above) W. C. Fields suffered terrific financial losses at fifty and turned to the movies in despair. He made good. His latest film is "It's A Gift," with Baby Leroy. (Above, right) At fifty-five, Alison Skipworth doesn't have any desire to retire. She loves her work and wants to keep right on with it. She's in "Here Is My Heart." (Extreme right) Sir Guy Standing, another exponent of the work-as-long-as-you-can theory, in "Lives of a Bengal Lancer."

YOU read about the copper king who shot himself. You read about the big fight promoter who couldn't take it. You read about the rich realtor who walked out on his secretary—straight through a window forty stories above the street.

But you didn't read about the actor going dramatic.

The Depression had brought business to its knees—and show business was included. But you didn't hear a murmur from the show folk themselves.

As you walked down Broadway past the Palace Theatre, you couldn't fail to notice the empty curb, where, for years, vaudeville artists had congregated in excited clusters. As you wandered up Theatre Row, you couldn't fail to notice how many of the legitimate theatres were dark.

You weren't so concerned about the younger players. They could become dress models and soda jerkers. But what about the veterans? How were they breasting the storm? Well, maybe they had money in the bank or a snug annuity for life or a house out in the country.

Sometimes, Nature, in order to make a human being stop spinning, provides an illness as a brake. The dark page of the past is turned forever. The patient emerges to the bright page of the future. So it was with Fields. Paramount was waiting with a contract. His brand of humor caught the public fancy.

Now he tells the world that "any idea I may have had of retiring at fifty must have been a mistake. The bank closed to punish me for wanting to be idle. And when I wept over that misfortune, Fate broke my neck. I want Fate to know that I don't regret the bank failure or the broken neck and that no further accidents will be necessary."

MAY ROBSON accepts the challenge from glamorous and alluring competitors to take from her the popularity which has only come to her in her later years.

"I'm packing," she said hurriedly, "so I really haven't very much time to talk on the subject. I came East to attend the christening of my great-grandchild and I've at 50? Of course not. These troupers prove it isn't

THEN, all at once, you heard the inside story of W. C. Fields.

W. C. Fields had just reached the half century mark. He could retire. He would retire. He had $250,000 cold cash in the Harriman Bank. You read what happened to the Harriman Bank. There was nothing else for Fields to do but start all over again.

He made three motion picture attempts. None of the producers called out the fire engines. He tried his hand at a series of comedies for Mack Sennett. Just as the dark horizon was brightening, Fields met with an accident on the set. They rushed him to the hospital. It was serious. He had broken his neck.

At the hospital, they placed his head in a brace. They placed his neck in a cast. They took the calendar down from the wall.

For months, he lay in bed. But he almost never slept.

got to get back to the Coast. Tired? Not a bit. I'm going back to make another picture. Retire? Are you in earnest? I hope not, really. Why, I'm only getting my second wind now. That's what my dear Marie Dressler would have said. It was her wish to die in harness and she did. No one knew how much she suffered, but she never quit. That's my spirit, too. I'm glad I have it. I'm kept pretty busy out Hollywood way jumping from one picture to the other. There's a demand for old ladies now, and being an old lady, I happen to be in luck.

"I've had fifty years of trouping, you know. So it's quite up my alley to go back and forth across the continent. I feel as young and as strong as I did fifty years ago in London. And certainly I take life less seriously than I did at that time. Maturity teaches patience and develops a sense of humor. One's nerves are never wracked at my age. (Continued on page 66)

The Most Romantic

You'll find many interesting and startling facts in this colorful biography of the movies

IN the December issue of MODERN SCREEN I told you that the reason I was writing this story was because I thought you should know the background of the industry whose destinies you, the public, have guided and will always guide. The movies belong to you. Your will has always been law. I was amazed during the recent censorship crisis that you did not stop the voice of the small minority, who have been trying to choke unreasonable censorship down your throats. However, a knowledge of the history of motion pictures reveals that it takes you a little time to speak your piece, but once you get the ear of the producer he gives you what you want.

There was a day when the word "star" referred only to a heavenly body. The little business men who invested their money in nickelodeons saw no relationship between the cheap "jitney circus" and the well-established, dignified art of the theatre. The stage had its "stars." People dressed themselves in opera capes and top hats and paid fancy prices to watch Maude Adams, Mrs. Fiske and Edward H. Sothern. That these same people might be lured into the dingy places where moving pictures were shown did not occur to the men who presented the novelty. It was enough, they felt, that pictures moved, that people walked, and that trains whizzed past the startled on-looker.

THE people who did the "moving" in these early pictures were secondary in importance when compared with the sheer mechanics of the nickelodeon. So the producers—a very dignified term for the poor little men who made movies—picked whoever was at hand and shoved them before the wondrous camera, never dreaming that these boys and girls were to become more important than the machine.

Because a woman named Charlotte Smith was left a penniless widow in Toronto, Canada, she and her three children, Gladys, Jack and Lottie, tried to earn a living in cheap stage shows. And because that living was meagre, Gladys, who had taken the stage name of Mary Pickford, applied for work at the Biograph Studio in New York, hoping that she might pick up a few extra dollars.

Because she needed money badly, Norma Talmadge posed for illustrated song slides and later worked at the little Vitagraph Studio. Alice Joyce was a stock clerk in a shoe store. She earned something like four dollars a week. Hers was a pitiful existence, so she sought work in the old Kalem Company and got it.

Stage stars were hard to get in the early days. The mighty ones of the theatre looked down upon the cheap "canned" drama. It was considered a disgrace to work in the motion picture studios, and only if he needed money very badly, did any real actor consent to do so. Even then he kept it quiet and lived in dread lest his fellow actors learn of his despised employment. One of these

Story Ever Told [PART 2]

By Katherine Albert

In the early days a star thought nothing of entering a lion's cage, simply because it was called for in the story. Poor Gloria Swanson was one of the victims—she had to do it, not once, but twice!

ILLUSTRATED BY
J. CLINTON SHEPHERD

troupers who did picture work during a dull stage season was Edward M. Kimball. Clara Kimball Young was his daughter.

BUT in those early days, as I have said, actors were less important than the costumes they wore. It was not until you discovered them that they were given credit. So, in reality, you fans are actually responsible for the Garbos, Crawfords, Hepburns and Mae Wests. You paved the way for them. And this is how you did it.

After the novelty of films wore off, you soon became tired of movement simply for movement's sake and looked for something else to hold your interest. What you discovered were not camera angles or mechanical devices, but the people who moved—the personalities of the films. At that time you did not even know their names and when you asked for "the girl with the long curls" (Mary Pickford) week after week, the producers at last realized that there was but one way to hold you and that was to give you personalities. And that is how the indispensable "star system" began.

Throughout the years many executives have tried to do away with it. They have maintained that the director was the thing and tried to publicize him. The director is, in a large measure, responsible for making good pictures, but when you shop for a picture to see you choose your favorite star without much thought of the director. Once they tried featuring the story; the best books and plays were bought and the greatest authors were hired. If the picture turned out well it was worth the expense, but always and inevitably the personality of the players dominated the story.

Having at last realized what you really wanted, the companies told you the names of the actors who moved before you and presently Florence Turner, Maurice Costello, John Bunny, Tom Mix, Broncho Billy Anderson and others elicited your interest and you became their "fans."

By 1910 the star system flourished. But it was a long time before the great stage stars would deign to ally themselves with what they con- (Continued on page 64)

Sorrow brought priceless gifts to six Hollywood women—

Out of their

By Elizabeth Mac Donald

Her own name is Elizabeth Petersen. She was born in Norway. She is married to a Scotsman, an artist. Her stories in the better fiction magazines have made her well known. She's about five foot nothing, very pink-and-white-and-blonde, has a huge tiger cat named Malarkey, and doesn't look a bit like a writer. We are introducing her to you for the first time in this magazine—and we know you'll like her as much as we do.

NIGHT comes quickly in Hollywood. There is no long twilight hour to temper the bright sunlight of a California day before darkness closes over it. And sometimes sorrow comes that way, too, swiftly and without warning.

It has come like that to so many beautiful women in that town.

Carole Lombard. . . .

Life began for her again when she and Russ Columbo first became aware of each other. Life that had lost a little of its sparkle, a little of its meaning, a little of its security when she and Bill Powell came to the parting of their ways. Then spring and all lost, lovely things came rushing back into her emptied heart again. Stars no longer mocked her loneliness.

Everyone who saw them together in that brief time that was given them felt their happiness. When they quarreled—when did lovers fail to quarrel?—and met to gifts which money nor fame nor love could bring to them forgive each other after the shortest absence, Carole's heart went rushing to meet his. It was always like that with them, always as if they were meeting for the first time again and realizing in that moment how much they loved each other.

Sorrow brought Frances Marion, Hollywood's best known and best loved writer, freedom. To Joan Crawford, to whom fleeting thrills once meant everything, it brought poignancy.

Even parting brought no fugitive sadness to their hearts. It was always for such a little time and they felt so secure in that deep happiness of theirs. So that last time, Carole laughed when she kissed him goodbye . . . he loved that deep-throated chuckle of hers . . . and her hand flipped upwards in a gay little gesture of farewell.

Only a day between that day and the next. But death came on that day between, striking so swiftly, so tragically at the boy who had sung of love to her.

Again Carole faces desolation . . . a sorrow so sudden, so tragic that sometimes it must seem impossible to face the waiting years. The years that will hold no sight of him, the sound of his voice or the touch of his hand on hers again.

What will they do to Carole Lombard, those years . . . will they touch her with bitterness, threaten that bright youth of hers with their tragedy? Or will they give her the things sorrow has given to so many of her friends in Hollywood, the things that have helped them carry on . . . the things that have made them great?

SORROW brought maturity to Mary Astor.

Yes, for all her loveliness, her perfection of face, her glory of hair, there was something lacking in her. It was as if one saw the soul of a child imprisoned in the voluptuous body of a woman. She had not done the things the studios had expected of her. Something was lacking . . . a woman's feeling and understanding and warmth. And her public felt (Continued on page 97)

Sorrow brought a new career to Mary Pickford. Her writing, her radio work, have in some way compensated for the loss of her loved ones. To Mary Astor, sorrow brought maturity.

Sorrows . . .

Can a Nice Girl be a Big Success?

To take the world by storm WE must storm! Make ourselves heard!

By Kay Hartley

Four of filmdom's beauties who display varying degrees of temperament or temper, as you choose. At the top is Joan Bennett, who possesses a temper, but unlike Connie, conceals it. Next, Katharine Hepburn, the spitfire of the screen. Below her is Constance Bennett, the aloof and proud Marquise, and at the bottom is Heather Angel, just a nice girl.

BEFORE I go a single line further, I suppose I must stop and explain and qualify my use of the word "nice." It has nothing to do with anyone's morals, I assure you. I use it strictly in the same sense of so-and-so's being nice to someone, and what's-her-name's not being nice to anyone!

For months I've been sitting around this town, listening—a writer learns to listen and not to talk—and I have been astounded to discover who is talked about and who isn't. At a party, recently, a small group in the corner began on Constance Bennett. Each person, in turn, told his or her experiences with the Marquise—and I might as well 'fess up that most of the experiences left these people pretty well griped on the subject of Connie. But their Connie-gripes were so much more vital and interesting than were any of their views on her more amiable younger sister, Joan, who, everyone agreed, when pressed on the subject, was "all right—at least she has been very nice to me." I say, "pressed on the subject," because Joan, as a topic of conversation, just never would come up of its own accord. Nobody ever thinks of Connie and Joan in the same breath despite the fact that they are sisters.

"Oh, well," said one actor who has played with Constance in a number of her pictures, "all I can say is that her disagreeable manners have certainly done her no harm. In fact, I think that she has even prospered because of them. Have we ever known a big star to be meek and docile as a lamb? Lambs just don't excite the public's imagination. Lions are the thing that make good copy. Let a lion roar, and though you shudder, you must admit that you do sit up and take notice!"

I'M afraid I must agree with him. The other day I was sitting in an office at RKO when, just outside the window, I heard a familiar high-pitched, squeaky voice squawking.

"You pig!" the lady shouted. "You are a pig! Yes, you heard me . . . p-i-g—pig! Don't you ever come near me again! I don't like you . . . you Pig!"

And even long after the Pig—I have no idea who he was—had retreated out of earshot, Miss Katharine Hepburn went on shouting!

I was there to do a story on Ginger Rogers, but somehow or other I couldn't get interested in Ginger after that, and I soon packed up my pad and pencil and went home to write a story on Katharine Hepburn. Miss Hepburn had probably made an enemy for life out of the Pig. She had been nasty and had shouted her scorn from the housetops. But suppose she had been nice to him . . . I would have had no inspiration for a story! I, for one, would rather endure Hepburn's ire than be soothed by a more pleasant star's smile.

What is it? Why is it? Is it possible that we like our idols to lord it over us, to browbeat us, to show off their greatness a bit? There is an old idea which has been done to death in novels, stories and on the screen. A man is wooing (Continued on page 72)

Modern Screen Previews

Here is my Heart

A Bing Crosby picture! 'Nuff said? (Left) Lovely Kitty Carlisle is a very grand Russian princess and Bing is a mere waiter. However, Bing's plate-juggling is all an act, for he's actually a famous radio star who takes this lowly job to be near the one he loves. (Above, right) Fortunately for Bing, Roland Young, the Princess' brother, is in on his scheme.

Sweet Adeline

Warner's new musical, with Irene Dunne, borrowed from RKO, to sing and act in the title role. She is seen (above, left) in the arms of Donald Woods and (above, right) the romantic Woods is momentarily intrigued by the dark glance of Wini Shaw. (Below, left) you see the whole cast, which includes Hugh Herbert, Joseph Cawthorn, Ned Sparks, Nydia Westman and Dorothy Dare and (right) Irene in the speedy—hmm!—chariot of Louis Calhern.

Broadway Bill

Is Columbia going to give us another story as swell as "It Happened One Night?" They have such hopes of "Broadway Bill." Warner Baxter and Myrna Loy, shown (above, left) in what seems to be a distressing situation with Helen Vinson. (Right) Baxter stakes everything on a fondly cherished horse and Myrna sticks by him, going so far as to dine with the help. (Below, left) Lovers. (Right) Myrna in a sadder mood.

You'll all admit without a moment's hesitation that RKO-Radio's treatment of "Little Women" was superb. And that Hepburn, in particular, was "very" superb. Now they've gone and done another story that we all love, Sir James Barrie's "The Little Minister." And Hepburn here, too, has the sort of role she does so well—that of the impish little gypsy gal, Babbie, who is continually stirring up trouble. (Center) Poor little Micah (Billy Watson) pleads with Babbie to intercede for his father and have him released from prison. (Bottom) John Beal, the Little Minister himself, who is bewitched by the mysterious but desirable Babbie.

The Little Minister

The Good Fairy

It's a good fairy, indeed, who brings to the screen for our delectation Ferenc Molnar's delightful whimsy, "The Good Fairy." None other than Margaret Sullavan will play the role of the little orphan who wanted feverishly to wave a wand and bring happiness to the world. Here you see her indulging in a chocolate ice cream pop during a lull in the filming of the picture. And below, you see the Orphanage on good behavior while Alan Hale, a kindly gentleman, inquires about the inmates and the institution. At the bottom, our Good Fairy holds the interest of the little group of orphans, possibly with a tale of her trips into Fairyland, while Beulah Bondi, the orphanage matron, looks on aghast. Herbert Marshall will play the leading male role. It's a Universal picture.

Reviews

A TOUR OF TODAY'S TALKIES

Take it from us, this month's movie calendar is brim full of simply swell pictures

(For short reviews see page 93)

By Walter Ramsey

(Above) May Robson, star of "Lady for a Day," gives us another outstanding characterization in "Lady by Choice." Carole Lombard is the publicity-seeking fan dancer and Walter Connolly, the judge. (Below) Helen Hayes and Brian Aherne in "What Every Woman Knows."

A: THE GAY DIVORCÉE (RKO-Radio)

Musical entertainment de luxe. If you liked "Flying Down to Rio," you'll certainly go for this one because it's that much better. Not only does it excel in story—which concerns itself with the conspiracy of Edward Everett Horton and Alice Brady to secure a divorce for Ginger Rogers through the use of a professional co-respondent—but brings to the fore Fred Astaire, whose acting, singing and dancing are superb. How that boy can hoof! Ginger Rogers, as the divorcée, makes a lovely heroine and dancing partner for Astaire. And those two comics, Horton and Brady, as the befuddled lawyer and busy-body aunt respectively, account for much of the fun. Too, there's Erik Rhodes, the professional co-respondent and Eric Blore, the waiter, who brings down the house whenever he makes an appearance. All in all, it's a swell picture with plenty of good laughs, glorious music (the "Continental" is bound to be a hit) and Fred Astaire. Go, by all means!

A: KID MILLIONS (Sam Goldwyn)

Extra lavish entertainment. Eddie Cantor, a great many beautiful gals, spectacular settings, hot musical numbers and funny gags, make this another sure-fire musical hit. Eddie becomes heir to 77 millions and goes to Egypt where he gets involved with the Sheik's nitwit daughter, Eve Sully. The finale in technicolor is a thing of beauty and cleverness. Besides its inimitable star, several members of the supporting cast come in for a bow, including Ethel Merman, who poses as Eddie's Ma, Block and Sully, Warren Hymer and Ann Sothern, whose voice is quite pleasing. The dance ensembles are particularly gorgeous and there are several songs in it that are sure to be popular. It's another Cantor picture, folks, more spectacular and funnier than ever, so don't miss it.

A: GREAT EXPECTATIONS (Universal)

A beautiful production. Universal has done an almost flawless job in bringing Charles Dickens' immortal story to the screen. In its adaptation, the original flavor has been retained and therein lies most of the credit. Naturally, without the almost perfect performances of the actors, this success could not have been achieved. To Henry Hull and Florence Reed go most of the honors. Hull acts with a force and sincerity that is not easily forgotten and Florence Reed brings depth and conviction to her role of the loveless woman.

(Above) Trouble is Cagney's middle name in "The St. Louis Kid." And Allen Jenkins (left) and Patricia Ellis share it with him. (Below) "The Gay Divorcee," with Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, stars of "Flying Down to Rio," will delight you with its lovely music, dancing and acting.

(Above) "Kid Millions," an Eddie Cantor special, featuring Ann Sothern, George Murphy, Ethel Merman and a galaxy of beautiful gals. (Below) "365 Nights in Hollywood," is a delightful little opus, concerning the acting-school racket, with Jimmy Dunn and Alice Faye.

Phillips Holmes, as the apprentice, and Jane Wyatt, as the heroine, are both grand. George Breakstone and Ann Howard in the early sequences are splendid, too. The picture's mystery, drama, romance and comedy, plus dexterous direction and marvelous acting should result in an evening of sheer enjoyment for you.

A: LADY BY CHOICE (Columbia)

Another "Lady for a Day"—almost. With that grand actress, May Robson, giving another sterling performance, plus the presence of the gorgeous and capable Carole Lombard, this picture comes very close to hitting the same stride as the aforementioned hit. The only thing it falls short in, undoubtedly, is the story, which lacks the excitement, thrills and suspense that made the other tops. In this instance, May is a drunken old woman who reforms when Carole, a fan dancer, adopts her as her mother merely for a publicity stunt. A romantic touch is furnished by the presence of Roger Pryor. Although May reigns as queen of the ball, Carole is by no means to be overlooked. She is mighty convincing and sooooo beautiful. Walter Connolly makes his role of Judge shine plenty, but this man Pryor just doesn't click with me. Of course, you'll want to see this and when you do, be sure to take the whole family with you.

B: READY FOR LOVE (Paramount)

Neat little comedy. The locale for this pleasant, though unpretentious, movie is a small town into which comes Ida Lupino, the daughter of a New York actress. She is mistaken to be the former sweetheart of the town's most disreputable but wealthy citizen, recently deceased. A series of mishaps follow, including a "ducking" by the females of the town, which brings Ida into the headlines as well as into the arms of Dick Arlen, the good-looking newspaper editor. Ida and Dick turn in good performances, with Ida given most of the footage and close-ups. Marjorie Rambeau does her usual stuff and Trent Durkin is simply priceless as the lovesick youth with poetical inclinations. Not the world's best, but pretty good at that.

B: THE FIREBIRD (Warners)

High-class entertainment. Although this picture includes a murder and is therefore typed as a "murder (Continued on page 101)

Why Gloria always looks so Smart

(Left) Luscious fur cloth, otherwise known as clipped chiffon, is the slick material used to fashion this regal-looking formal gown and wrap. The color is a soft mauve. A trimming of fox dyed the same shade accents the wrap. (Center) Another evening ensemble designed to give height and dash to the wearer. It's a striking concoction of flame and silver, jewel-clipped and taffeta-lined. (Right) For jaunty moods this "Overseas" hat will serve the purpose. Gloria wears it in "Music in the Air," a Fox Film production.

By Virginia T. Lane

WOULDN'T you love to know how Gloria Swanson does it? How she wears those clothes, I mean, and simply glows with that fascinating thing called "glamour?"

For years I've been one of the women who wailed, "Oh, Heaven, please let me in on that Swanson lady's style secrets!" But it's only now that my plea has been answered, and I'm rushing the good news on to you. It's news to warm the cockles of your heart and start you right out with a wholly fresh lease of fashion life.

Now, don't think Gloria had everything to start with. She didn't. Most of us would have considered it a pretty mean trick of Fate to be given a tip-tilted nose like hers and green eyes that slanted and a mouth which certainly conformed to no set rule of beauty. She made them assets; the kind that fairly rocked the world and put a queen or two out of business.

But she was thoroughly mad about being so short.

Adjust your height by garbing yourself right. Glamorous

Scarf sleeves and long sash provide the interest in this unusual afternoon get-up. The kimono style, lipstick-red jacket half covers the long black frock. The material used is shirred georgette. Pert hat and tiny veil correctly complement the costume. If you would be individual wear something like this. And if you're short, it's especially good. Gloria is a little bit of a thing, but you'd never suspect it.

If you would be smart, be simple. Only a single jewelled clip adorns this ultra-chic afternoon gown. On line and good material depends its distinction. Interesting features are its tunic and pinch back, cowl-scarf neckline. This powder blue suede crepe frock is one of Miss Swanson's favorites.

She still is. Imagine being barely over five feet tall. No one can really carry clothes at that height. You can be cute, of course. But fashionable? Never! So Gloria went straight out under the very noses of the style authorities and became the best dressed woman on the screen.

That has always intrigued me—how she managed to look so tall and regal. "Hmp," she hmped, "I do everything but stand on stilts. I wear my evening clothes almost floor length and I usually manage to lift them in front a trifle so the line falls to the back. That adds valuable inches. I wear my daytime clothes as long as I dare and I never wear oxfords with them. The break there at the ankles is shortening, whereas if you have low-cut pumps you increase your apparent height by a full two inches.

"Furthermore, I cannot wear bulky materials such as tweeds, which I adore. They're for you taller people.

Gloria tells you many of her style secrets in this article

(Above, left) Metal velvet, a new fabric, went into the making of this good-looking evening gown of Empire influence. A tunic, longer in back than in front, tops a very long fitted skirt with half-length train. (Center) One can almost hear bugles blaring and guns roaring when Gloria wears this sports costume. Notice the clever use of cartridge pleating. (Right) For a busy day in shops and such this slate blue shadow striped woolen street or sports ensemble can be worn. The dress buttons down the back with large blue buttons. The neckline is high and is ornamented by a pair of clips of fire-engine red. And, of course, the rakish Tyrolean hat with red quill adds the last word in chic to the completed costume. (Right, below) From far-away Cambodia was borrowed the motif for this interesting hat. It is made of rich black velvet and is ornamented by a rhinestone clip.

And I can't 'divide' a dress by color; that is, have the waist of one shade and the skirt of another. With a suit, that's different. I seldom take off the coat anyway."

We were sitting there in her sunlit patio, under gaily striped umbrellas. Humming birds hovered over the roses near us. And Gloria looked exactly like a co-ed in her sorority house. She had on blue silk Chanel pajamas with flappy trousers, little tennis shoes (she takes size 2½), and her hair was brushed back in a long bob.

Yes, and she had bangs. (Continued on page 75)

Good News

(Continued from page 17)

a quiver in a carload. Loretta never sounded better.

Take a Bow, Jean Muir

Last week, the famous critic, George Jean Nathan, came out with: ". . . you can have your Garbo and your Dietrich. Give me Jean Muir! Her work in 'Desirable' is perfect."

We suppose there will be some yowls from the fans on George Jean's crack, but the fact remains that he made it and he's the sort of a chap that hands out fifty scallions to one orchid. So he really means what he says about Jean.

Dilemmah

The mid-night elopement of actor Onslow Stevens and Phyllis Cooper, Los Angeles socialite, lasted such a short time (two weeks) that the bride is undecided whether she should sue for divorce or an annulment!

Scandal!

Mae West sure starts 'em trying to come up and see her at an early age. Baby LeRoy took his first step in Mae's dressing-room yesterday. P. S. He was trying to reach her powder puff.

Things That Don't Worry Us Any More

Whether Maureen O'Sullivan and Johnny Farrow are ever going to get married and (2) the same wondering about Lee Tracy and Isabel Jewell. Both of them have taken so long to make up their minds that we've just about lost interest in the whole deal at this point.

Hollywood in Shorts

"Sweet Music," the new Rudy Vallee flicker, will have one sequence in which twelve ex-football players (all over 200 pounds) will disguise themselves as fan dancers . . . Jimmy Cagney did so much tap dancing over one week-end that he strained himself right into bed, and the picture is waiting . . . Clark Gable leaves for another hunting trip immediately after "Forsaking All Others" . . . Pola Negri seen again at the late spots and she's still gudjus . . . Almost no doubt, now, that Garbo will sign a new contract because M-G-M is planning a talkie version of her silent picture, "Anna Karenina"—cheers . . . Heard this? "Many a gal in Hollywood was promised a mansion to live in, only to find it was a stall" . . . Howard Hughes, millionaire play-boy

(Continued on page 104)

Constipation, Indigestion and related Skin Troubles corrected much sooner. (New Vitamin A checks colds!)

THINK OF IT! . . . a new yeast so much quicker acting it astounds doctors. If you have any questions, read these answers by Dr. Lee:—

Why does "XR" Yeast act quicker?
Because it's a stronger "strain" of fresh yeast, much more vigorous, and so...faster! It's rich in hormone-like* substances.

What are Hormone-like Substances?
They are "activators" (like natural body stimulants) which speed the flow of your digestive juices and strengthen digestive muscles from the stomach right on down.

Will it correct Constipation and Indigestion very much faster?
Positively! By making juices flow fast and muscles work harder inside you, "XR" Yeast makes your foods softer—better "churned," digested. Indigestion, constipation should soon stop. "XR" Yeast really "normalizes" you.

Do Skin troubles stop much Sooner?
The most common skin blemishes come from self-poisoning caused by your digestive system not working properly. "XR" Yeast corrects this condition. Pimples, boils, etc., disappear sooner!

What new Vitamin does it contain?
Vitamin A, newly added, to help combat colds. "XR" Yeast also builds resistance to colds by cleansing your body. With Vitamins B, D and G, Fleischmann's "XR" Yeast now contains 4 vitamins.

EAT 3 CAKES of Fleischmann's "XR" Yeast every day—plain, or dissolved in one-third glass of water—preferably half an hour before meals. Keep on after you've got quick results. Get a supply today!

● "'XR' Yeast is much faster," writes Mrs. Helen Van Pelt, Stapleton, N. Y. "My whole system was sluggish . . . I had headaches, no appetite. I started eating the new 'XR' Yeast and in just a few days felt grand."
(As good as ever for baking!)

Fleischmann's XR Yeast

AT GROCERS, RESTAURANTS, SODA FOUNTAINS

Copyright, 1934, Standard Brands Inc.

Modern Screen Patterns

942

946

942—Peggy Conklin, Paramount player, wears this skirt of brown and beige plaid with cardigan jacket of brown velveteen. Sizes 14, 16, 18, 36, 38 and 40. 946—(Center) Helen Mack's black crepe dress is very swanky and chic. In sizes 14, 16, 18, 36, 38 and 40.

954

954—(Above) Anita Louise's Russian tunic is youthful and gay. Its full blouse, dropped shoulder and unusual sleeve are particularly enhancing. Anita wears it in marine blue, with tabs of gray yarn decorating the Peter Pan collar and belt. In sizes 14, 16, 18, 36, 38, 40.

MODERN SCREEN Pattern Service
149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

I am enclosing.....(in coin or United States stamps) for which please send me the following:

Pattern No..... Size..... Pattern No..... Size.....

Pattern No..... Size.....

Do you want our latest Pattern Book?

Patterns are 15c each. Book 10c when ordered with pattern, 15c when ordered separately. Patterns are 20c if you live outside of the United States. Books 20c separately, 15c with pattern. No foreign or Canadian stamps accepted.

Name.....

Street Address.....

City and State.....

(Please write in pencil)

David Copperfield

(Continued from page 33)

and with a beautiful little door and windows cut in the side. How exciting, David thought, to live in a boat on land.

Although Peggotty told him that he must not ask questions he discovered that windswept, burly, kindly Dan was a bachelor who had adopted Ham, his brother's son, Emily, his sister's daughter and Mrs. Gummidge, the wife of his partner, whose respective fathers and husband had been drowned in the insistent and greedy ocean that rolled and crashed against the shore.

But these old disasters did not dampen the spirits of David and Emily as they romped across the sand and Emily told David of her wonderful dream of becoming a lady and buying Dan Peggotty a blue coat with diamond buttons.

But at last the visit was over and he and Peggotty must return to his mother. Eagerly he jumped out of the cart and rushed into the house to greet his mother but at the threshold of the room he stopped short. His mother was there, seated in her usual corner by the fireplace but at the other corner sat the black panther, the man he had seen at church, Mr. Murdstone.

Questioningly, David looked at Peggotty. She whispered, "That's your new Pa."

DAVID wanted to run away, back to Dan and Ham and Emily, or anywhere out of the house that had once been so jolly and so full of love, for, young as he was, he sensed the curiously changed atmosphere. His mother, once so loving, so tender, so gay, instead of gathering David in her arms, looked timidly at Mr. Murdstone.

"Now, Clara my dear," he said, "recollect! Control yourself. Davy, boy, how do you do?"

Nor was the situation relieved when another stranger entered the room, a gloomy-looking woman dressed in black. Her heavy black eyebrows met across her nose. David's mother told the boys that this was Miss Murdstone, his new aunt. The stranger gave David a hard, appraising glance.

"Generally speaking, I don't like boys," she said. "How-de-do, boy?"

He answered her curtly, for youthful anger welled in his breast. Miss Murdstone tossed him aside with a word, "Wants manners!" and turned to Mrs. Copperfield.

"Now, Clara, you're much too pretty and thoughtless to manage a house properly. If you'll be so good as to give me the keys."

David could stand no more. His mother, his sweet, gentle mother, to see her with these people—like this. The house was different. Laughter was in it no longer.

He was soon to discover that everything was changed. He could not sleep in his mother's room any longer. He could be with her very little during the day and he must recite his lessons not to her alone, but before Mr. and Miss Murdstone as well. And he couldn't, with those cold eyes upon him, he simply couldn't remember the lessons, so they always ended in tears with his mother pleading hysterically that Mr. Murdstone spare the boy anguish.

But he did not spare him. Instead he took him into his room and beat him with a cane as if he had been a disobedient dog.

"Mr. Murdstone, sir, don't!" David cried piteously. "Pray don't beat me. I've tried to learn, sir. I think I could do it with my mother alone, but I can't with you and Miss Murdstone staring at me. I can't indeed."

OVENSERVE dishes

make a big hit as Christmas gifts

OVENSERVE dishes are the gay, attractive TABLE dishes you can also use for oven baking! You can buy them by the piece, or in complete table services.

There are meat platters, for instance, on which you bake meat loaf or fish and pop right from oven to table. The shirred egg dishes are another suggestion. Look at the cute one-handled French casseroles, too, or the round baking dishes, bean pots and all the other pieces. Every single OvenServe dish stands full oven heat, even to the cups, saucers and plates.

Nice for the refrigerator, also. For they don't mind cold any more than they do heat.

Cost a lot? No indeed! They're economical gifts, the kind a woman can use every day of the year. And every time she does she'll call down blessings on your devoted head for giving her something that's so useful and so attractive.

MEAT LOAF BAKED ON SERVING PLATTER

1 pound round steak ground
2 tbsps. melted butter
1 egg, slightly beaten
2 tbsps. onion chopped
¼ tsp. pepper . . . 1 tsp. salt
1 cup bread crumbs moistened with water
2 slices bacon . . . water

Combine all ingredients except bacon and water. Shape into loaf. Lay slices of bacon across the top. Place on OvenServe Meat Platter. Bake in a moderate oven (375° F.) about 1¼ hours. Add a little water at a time and baste occasionally. Serve with well-seasoned hot tomato sauce. (A can of tomato soup, seasoned and heated, makes a fine sauce.) Makes six servings.

OVENSERVE

SOLD AT KRESGE 5 and 10¢ STORES
AND OTHER
5¢-10¢ AND $1 STORES

Guaranteed
To Withstand Changes of
Oven and Refrigerator Temperatures
OVENSERVE
"The Oven Ware for Table Service"
The Homer Laughlin China Co.
Newell, W. Va.

"Can't you, David?" said Mr. Murdstone brandishing the cane. "We'll see about that." But suddenly the pain and the indignity were more than David could bear. His little heart flamed with rage. He whirled upon Mr. Murdstone and dug his teeth into his tormentor's hand, while outside the locked door he heard the sound of his mother's voice imploring leniency for him.

David was locked in his room and allowed to see no one. He could hear curious, muffled noises in the house and it was Peggotty who at last crept to the door and whispered that he was to have a little brother or sister soon. He beat on the door. He begged to be released. But no one paid him the slightest attention now. And then, at last, the door was opened. He crept miserably downstairs to a quiet, hushed, ominous room.

IT was Peggotty who told him, when he found her at last, "Your mamma, the precious, the darling—she's—"

"She's dead," David said quietly.

"And your little brother, the innocent, he's dead, too."

David's heart was broken so it did not matter much what became of him. His heart and his brain were numb and he answered only in monosyllables when Mr. Murdstone told him that he was to be sent away to London to work at the firm of Murdstone and Grindby, wine merchants, where he would earn his food and pocket money and his lodging would be provided.

Over enormous tubs he bent his small back, washing bottles all day long while a crowd of uncouth, older boys who resented his gentlemanly ways, jeered at him.

There was only one faint flicker of pleasure for him in all of London and that and his friendship with the Micawber family with whom he lodged. He bore a real affection for Mr. and Mrs. Micawber and their four squalling, screaming, fighting children and their one inefficient servant, Clickett, the "orfing" from St. Luke's Orphanage.

David had never before seen anything like the Micawber household. Nor had he ever known any creature like Mr. Micawber, whose long legs he saw first. Micawber was letting himself in by the sky-light to avoid a horde of creditors who were swarming outside the house threatening, unpleasantly, to take him off to the debtor's prison. Yet he greeted David in the best of spirits, extending to him a stubby fat hand and beaming as he turned to his wife and told her that he had just "terminated his connections" with the haberdashery firm for which he had been trying, unsuccessfully, to get commissions.

"But my dear Wilkins," Mrs. Micawber almost sobbed. "What of the future? Am I wrong in saying that we must live?"

"The silver lining, my love," said Mr. Micawber. "I have cast my eye over the entire world of business and I have selected the brewing business. In brief, I have dispatched lengthy epistles to several of the more important brewers describing my qualifications and offering my services. The details are not as yet precisely settled, but, nevertheless, I am confidently waiting for something to turn up."

OUTSIDE, the creditors howled for money and Micawber's blood. Inside the children screamed and fought and Clickett tried to feed them from an empty larder. Yet always and forever, Micawber, the perpetual optimist, beamed expansively upon his family and his friend and lodger, David Cooperfield, and waited for something to turn up.

David was happy with the Micawbers for many months. They brightened, in their peculiarly zestful way, his drab existence, for he hated his work. But then, at last, even the Micawbers were taken from him. Clickett brought him the sad tidings one noon. And that evening David found them all in the debtor's prison.

But if he expected tears and anguish he was wrong. He found Mr. and Mrs. Micawber celebrating with a bowl of punch. Celebrating? Indeed! For not long after their incarceration, Mrs. Micawber's family had come valiantly to the rescue, paid off their debts and promised to find work for Mr. Micawber in the Custom House at Plymouth, where he was breezily confident that something of a very sensational nature would turn up.

Happy it made Mr. Micawber, but the move robbed David of his only friends in London and as he waved the family "good-bye" his heart was filled with sadness and he realized that he was alone, completely, utterly alone.

As his tears dried he began to formulate a plan for escape.

David remembered that his mother and Peggotty had told him of his strange old Aunt, Betsy Trotwood, who had visited his mother during the stormy night of his birth. She lived in Dover and was, he had heard, a cross, gruff old thing, but after all she was his blood kin and she could not possibly be worse to him than others had been.

And so a young boy traveled alone to Dover, but the adventures of that trip he could never forget. He was robbed and beaten. He had no bed in which to sleep and no food to eat, and when, after days of misery, he arrived in Dover, he staggered, weak from exhaustion and hunger, upon the green by Aunt Betsy's house. Into her startled ears he poured the story of his short but unhappy life. She listened, amazed but sympathetic, as she and Mr. Dick, the eccentric distant relative who lived with her, tried to form some plan for David's future.

And now, for a brief spell at least, David was happy. Aunt Betsy's heart was softer than her manner. She terrified not only the boys who drove their donkeys across her green, but likewise she terrified Mr. and Miss Murdstone, David's ancient enemies, who came to her and tried to get David away from her. David was free of his stepfather at last. Free now to go, through Aunt Betsy's arrangements, to live with Mr. Wickfield, her friend and lawyer, in Canterbury.

At the Wickfield home David discovered not only a quiet, charming, pleasant house, but a little girl about his own age with whom he could play. She was Mr. Wickfield's child. Her mother had died. Agnes was lonely and she welcomed David as a companion.

The only unpleasant character in the Wickfield establishment was Uriah Heep. David did not know what a sinister rôle he was to play in all their lives. He was too young to see that Mr. Wickfield was a weak character and, since his wife's death, too fond of port wine, and that Uriah, who tried to hide his villainy behind a mask of studied humility, was slowly wresting Wickfield's business away from him. Supposedly, Uriah was reading law under the guidance of Wickfield. But this was not all he was doing.

Innocent of these Machiavellian plans, David knew instantly that he hated Uriah. The man's hand was soft and clammy. His manner was much too oily. His face tortured his dreams. His soft, wet hand seemed always to be upon his shoulder.

BUT the years passed. David was sent to school. He became a gracious, charming young man with a great ambition to write. The only thing he lacked, perhaps, was perception for he could not see that Agnes was in love with him. Had he known it then, he might have spared her a great deal of suffering. He was a man now and the world stretched before him. It was to London that his eyes turned and he missed seeing the happiness he might have found at home.

He was busy packing to take his holiday one morning when a letter was handed to him by the ever obsequious Uriah Heep, whom the years had not changed. Opening the letter, David discovered that it came from his old friend, Mr. Micawber, who, with his wife and family, as well as the inevitable Clickett, was at an Inn in Canterbury. They owed the landlord. They were being threatened with debtor's prison again, yet they were as gay and jolly as ever and it was through David that something actually did turn up for Mr. Micawber.

Uriah Heep gave him employment, for now he had charge of a great deal of Wickfield's business, in a confidential capacity.

David had helped an old friend so now he set forth to London to meet his new friend, Steerforth, whom he had hero-worshipped at school.

NEVER was a place so gay as London. Never was any performance so thrilling as the ballet to which Steerforth took David. Never were any two young men so fine as David and Steerforth in their evening suits, opera hats and capes.

David had been eagerly anticipating the ballet spectacle but just as they were shown into their box his eye wandered to the box next to theirs and he saw the most beautiful girl in the world. She was a bewitching girl, all smiles and curls and daintiness, but chaperoned by two, as Steerforth put it, "old dragons." Ah, if David could but speak to her. The stage was forgotten. She filled his eyes completely.

Steerforth, with a greater knowledge of the world and women than David, subtly attracted their attention by offering them opera glasses and, eventually, better places in his and David's box. The conquest seemed complete and before the evening was over the two old dragons—aunts, in disguise—had invited the young men to call and David was head over heels in love with Dora Spenlow.

And she, the most adorable and shy of all creatures, seemed to look upon him with favor. As the weeks advanced his love grew. Could anything be more wonderful than Dora twittering to her little canary birds? Dora shy. Dora saucy. Dora pleasantly scolding her little dog, Jip. Dora a bundle of frills and loveliness and soft baby talk.

She called him "Doady" and his heart melted. She kissed him tenderly, sweetly and he was her slave. And it broke his heart that this romantic idyll had to be interrupted because he had promised Steerforth to spend the summer with him at Yarmouth and, of course, to visit his old friends, the Peggottys.

The boat was there just as he had left it. His friends were the same. They were older, that was all, but all living together in peace and harmony—his own dear Peggotty, Dan, Ham, Mrs. Gummidge and Little Emily.

Steerforth and David arrived during an auspicious occasion. Sounds of merriment fairly rocked the tip-tilted boat and all of them talked at once announcing the news that this was the celebration of the betrothal of Ham and Little Emily. They welcomed David, their old friend, and Steerforth, the stranger, with equal heartiness.

And so the balmy summer lazed along. It should have been a happy summer for David, in spite of his being away from Dora, had he not noticed, during his talks with Steerforth, that there was a side of his nature he had not known before, a cynical, rather patronizing side. And, although David tried to tell himself that he was imagining a situation that did not exist, he could not help but see that when Emily looked at Steerforth, as she so often did, there was a strange light in her eyes. No such light was there when she looked at Ham, the man she had promised to marry.

So it was as if David already knew what was going to happen when Ham brought the bitter tidings. He handed the letter to David and asked him to read it to them all. The young man's voice faltered. He could not even glance at Dan and Ham and Mrs. Gummidge and Peggotty as he spoke the written words:

"When you, who love me so much better than I ever have deserved, see this I shall be far away, never to come back unless he brings me back\a lady. You that I have wronged, love someone else that will be true to you and worthy of you. Try to think as if I'd died when I was little and was buried somewhere. Tell uncle that I never loved him half so dear as now."

The note fluttered from David's hands. Ham started to speak and then the gaze of all of them was pulled to Dan Peggotty who looked so wild and terrifying that they stood before him in awe.

"Who's the man? I want to know his name. Who's the man?" he repeated over and over in a low, inexorable voice.

David remembered his talks with his one-time friend and breathed the name. "Steerforth."

Dan turned and started for the door. "I'm a-going to seek my Emily," he said. "Through the world. I'm a-going to find her. No one can stop me."

And none could stop him. Dan Peggotty had begun the search which lasted for years.

There was nothing for David to do but to leave that once happy little home.

As the months passed he did not forget the sorrow of his friends but his life was filled with importance. His ambition to write was realized when there appeared a story from his pen in the Monthly Magazine. But even this triumph was overshadowed when Dora told him that she would marry him.

He hurried to Canterbury to tell Aunt Betsy and Mr. Wickfield and Agnes of his happiness and he was so absorbed in his own joys that he did not see the disappointment in Agnes' eyes.

Ah, poor Agnes. She had not been happy since David had left. Her father had taken Uriah Heep into partnership and the man seemed to have him completely under his thumb. Uriah slept in David's old room and although Wickfield assured them that it was his wish to have Uriah as his partner they knew that this was not so. But not even Micawber would tell David what sinister power Uriah had over Wickfield, a power which made him so drunk that he asked for Agnes' hand in marriage. For the first time in years Wickfield, enraged that Heep should think himself good enough for her, asserted himself and Uriah, the 'umble, realized that he had gone too far.

BUT even the Wickfields and their problems were forgotten when David married his beloved Dora.

Dora, the child wife, who could not keep her account books straight, who could neither learn to cook nor to manage her servant, who cluttered David's study with her guitar and her paintings and Jip's elaborate pagoda-like dog-house—ah, Dora. Yet he loved her most fondly, tenderly.

However, time and a most disastrous dinner party for Aunt Betsy and Mr. Dick with the cook drunk, the oysters unopened, the oyster knife lost, the leg of mutton under-done on one side and raw on the other, showed David that he had made a mistake. He brought the faithful Peggotty to take care of her and manage the house. But Dora was never, never in any sense of the word, a helpmate. The only task she could perform successfully was to dip his pens in ink and hand them to him as he wrote.

But he must love her. And he continued to love her as if she had been some dear child. And the passing years did not lessen his tenderness.

Dora was ill the night that Dan Peggotty came to tell David that Emily had been found. With the hope of vengeance in his heart, yet thanking God that she was returned, Dan told of Steerforth's leaving her in Naples and telling his servant that the servant was to marry her.

Devastated by having become something cast off for a servant's use, Emily tried to commit suicide. She was locked in by the servant. But at last she escaped. Dan found her and she threw herself at his feet, humbly begging for mercy. Dan's love was great and he took her to his heart and wept over the little orphaned girl she had been.

But now Dan had another worry. He had heard that Ham, not caring what became of his life since Emily left, was invariably the first to volunteer for the most dangerous rescue work at sea. So Dan begged David to go to Yarmouth quickly to tell Ham that Emily had been found and save him from the madness that prompted him to take such risks with his life.

When David arrived at Yarmouth he

MORE than a mere perfume, FAOEN will give you a new personality . . a more mysterious, thrilling personality, to bring men's hearts to your feet!

As Parisian as the Café de la Paix . . as feminine as Cleopatra . . as exciting as a champagne cocktail . . FAOEN enhances your charm and discovers your hidden depths of lovely, languorous allure!

You would have to pay more, for a less effective perfume! The tuck-away size . . can be bought at your local 5 and 10 cent store.

I had tried seven perfumes before I finally discovered FAOEN

Says: MIMI RICHARDSON, Model and New York Debutante

PARK & TILFORD'S

FAOEN

(FAY-ON)

Beauty Aids

Face Powder, Lipstick, Cleansing Cream, Cold Cream, Rouges, Perfumes

discovered a group of men talking excitedly upon the beach. Out from the shore a ship had been wrecked and a man was struggling for his life. David saw Ham shake off those who tried to stop him and he heard him shout:

"Whoever it is out there sinking—I'll try to save."

And before David could reach the group Ham had plunged into the churning water and was swimming with long, powerful strokes.

Closer he came to the struggling man. The waves beat him back. David called to him but he could not hear. He triumphed over one wave, then another and at last the face of the man for whose life he was risking his own became visible to him. He saw him now. It was Steerforth.

Ham shouted in horror. He raised his hand as if to strike him. But just at that moment the pounding wreck broke with a grinding roar and sank beneath the waves carrying both Ham and Steerforth into the boiling sea.

AT last the dead bodies were dragged onto the shore. David wept—tears of love and bitterness both upon his cheeks—that these two men should have gone down together.

When David returned to his home he found Aunt Betsy, Agnes and Peggotty attending Dora who lay pale and wan in her bed. When David came into the room Dora motioned the others to leave the room.

"Doady, dear," she said, after they had gone, "I'm afraid I was too young. I don't mean in years only but in experience and thoughts and everything. I was such a silly little creature. I am afraid it would have been better if we had only loved as a boy and girl and forgotten. I have begun to think I was not fit to be a wife."

"We've been very happy, my sweet Dora," he said, looking into her little white face.

"I was very happy, very. But because I am such a little goose and because you are so clever, as the years went on you would have wanted a real companion which I am not. It is better as it is."

She asked to speak to Agnes alone. David told Agnes to go to Dora and he waited downstairs amongst all of Dora's belongings. Idly his hand fell upon her account book—the figures obliterated by little drawings of flowers and birds that she had made. His eyes filled with tears and then there was Agnes standing by him, telling him with her eyes that Dora, the child-wife, was dead.

David must needs forget. A year of travel might give him the opiate of forgetfulness he needed, but eventually he returned to Canterbury to find the situation created by Uriah Heep grown worse and, in some curious way, Micawber mixed up in it. The once jovial Micawber was, according to his wife, on the verge of insanity. All his good temper was gone. He could think of nothing, talk of nothing but Heep. And at last David and Aunt Betsy persuaded him to tell the things he knew, no matter how involved he himself was, so that Uriah could be banished from their lives.

They confronted him one day—all of them, with a carefully prepared document which began:

"In denouncing the most consumate villain that has ever existed I ask no consideration for myself. Ignominy, want, despair, have ever been the attendants of my painful career. Even though prison should follow I declare that Heep and only Heep is the forger and the cheat."

The paper further pointed out that Uriah had tricked Wickfield into signing important papers which the poor old gentleman thought unimportant so that Uriah might draw out trust monies for himself, that he had forged Wickfield's name to other documents and that he had made false entries into the books with the intention of plundering and subjugating both Wickfield and Agnes.

CONFRONTED with these facts Uriah was at first wildly furious and then insolent when David demanded the partnership papers so that they might be destroyed. He insisted that Uriah return the bonds and monies he had appropriated. But when David threatened to call in officers who would have no hesitancy in taking him off to jail he became 'umble in earnest, did what was wanted of him and 'umbly begged to wish everyone a good morning.

And David, Agnes and Aunt Betsy kept this knowledge to themselves so that Micawber, without whose help Uriah would never have been denounced, was spared humiliation. And it was David, Aunt Betsy and Peggotty who appeared at the boat to bid them all adieu as they sailed for Australia.

Micawber was in the gayest of spirits. He strode about the dock with a bold, buccaneering air, clad completely in oilskins and carrying a mariner's telescope under his arm. Mrs. Micawber and the children were likewise garbed in outfits suitable for pioneering.

"The luxuries of the old country we abandon," shouted Micawber. "As pioneers in a new land—Australia!—denizens of the field and forest we are prepared."

"Kind friend and patron," he said turning to David, "thank you for your generous pecuniary assistance in enabling us to launch our frail canoe upon the ocean of enterprise."

And as they embarked he shouted back over his shoulder:

"I go to conquer a new country. In short, I am profoundly confident that in the not far distant future, something splendid will turn up."

The ship set sail bearing not only the gay and confident Micawbers but Dan Peggotty, Mrs. Gummidge and Emily as well, not so happy, perhaps, as the others but together at least.

"Good-bye. Good-bye, dear friends."

A few days later David and Agnes were walking on the cliffs on their way to visit Aunt Betsy and Mr. Dick. Suddenly David turned to her.

"Now in this silence, of this beautiful evening I must speak plainly, Agnes. I must tell you—I went away loving you, I stayed away loving you, I returned home loving you."

"David," said Agnes, her voice low, "that night Dora died—I was alone with her, you remember. The last thing that she asked me was that I should take her place in your heart. I've loved you all my life."

And thus they stood, just the two of them. For the moment all else was forgotten—all the figures who had so curiously colored David's life, all the misery and pain, all the loved ones who were gone. There were only himself and Agnes and the Dover cliffs and the sea pounding against them.

The Most Romantic Story Ever Told

(Continued from page 45)

sidered a cheap offshoot of their own indomitable art.

I will not trace each step of the tremendous rise of the motion picture industry, nor can I possibly include here mention of all the great and near-great stars. But in order to know the background of your industry you must know something of that tremendously exciting period between 1912 and 1918, and so let me tell you just a few stories of the stars of that day, before I show you how Hollywood was discovered and how the companies moved from New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and Los Angeles to Hollywood.

IN telling you the stories of the early stars I want to show you how different was the attitude of the public towards them from what it is now.

When Francis X. Bushman was a star, it was considered a bad policy to admit that any popular male player was married. Bushman was married. What's more, he had five children, but it was actually written into his contract that he must never divulge this fact. His family lived in his Maryland home, Bushmanor, and once when he brought them to Chicago where he was making pictures for the old Essanay Corporation, the studio heads scolded him roundly and instructed him to pack them all back home at once lest somehow this domesticity leak out.

This state of affairs led to disagreements between Bushman and his wife. But, as always with any movie star, his career was paramount. Besides he had fallen in love with his co-star, Beverly Bayne. A divorce was imminent. Both Francis and his studio knew that the story would break and they decided to let his worshipping feminine public have the two stories at once—the announcement of the divorce and his approaching marriage to Beverly Bayne.

Literally, the day after the newspapers appeared with these stories, Francis X. Bushman stopped being a star. Because he was unromantic enough to have had a wife and five children, the public did not want him.

Overnight, his popularity was gone. In desperation the studio sent a scout all over the United States to make an investigation. When he returned he walked into Bushman's dressing-room and put his head in his hands.

"Is it as bad as that?" Bushman asked.

"It's worse," the scout answered. "Bush, you're through."

Much later another great romantic star, John Gilbert, was to fail almost overnight, but for an entirely different reason. Only the essence of Hollywood history repeats itself. Details differ, for now it would be impossible for any star to keep anything secret, particularly a marriage and children, for longer than a few weeks. And now, of course, with the public educated to the acceptance of its screen idols as they are and not as their press agents paint them, homes, husbands, wives and families are permissable.

BUSHMAN made one come-back years later in "Ben Hur," but too much had been lost. His chance had come too late and he could not open the door to the second knock of opportunity.

You need but glance through the pages of old fan magazines to discover how little the public knew about the stars for whose existence they were responsible. At that time all players were endowed with all the well-known virtues. All came from wealthy families. And all loved Shakespeare.

This period was so gummed up with press-agent hokum that it was years before the truth finally leaked out. For instance, that Theda Bara was really named Theadosia Goodman and that she was not born on the banks of the Nile. And, as always, the real stories were so much more colorful, vivid and vital than the imaginings of the publicity men. There were deeds of great courage enacted by the stars that were told only very, very much later. Alice Joyce, the stock clerk and artist's model, had some fantastic yarn invented about her entrance into pictures. Really she got her chance by deciding that she could ride a horse like a Kentucky jockey. She had never been on a horse's back in her life, but she was so eager to lift herself out of her poverty and earn a few dollars that she invented the lie. So they put her on a horse and set it running down a railroad track as fast as it would go. Why she wasn't killed no one will ever know.

Gloria Swanson was another who risked her life for the movies. In an early De Mille film there was a tableau from that famous old painting, "The Lion's Bride," and, although it would be only a flash in the picture, Gloria must go into the cage with the lion, lie down upon the floor and allow the beast not only to lie down beside her but to rest his paw upon her shoulder.

Precautions against danger were taken, of course. Men stood by with guns, but Gloria knew if the lion attacked her and the men fired, the bullets might miss their mark and hit her.

SHE got all her courage together. She was excited by praise and drunk with the knowledge that she was being a brave girl. On the tide of this hysteria, she was swept into the scene and, from a pictorial standpoint, all went well, but something went wrong with the camera and, when she came out of the cage, she was told she must do it all over again.

That was the hardest thing she ever had to do. The first excitement, which carried her through once, was gone. She could not key herself to such a high pitch again. She knew, now, what the danger was and this time cold terror walked into the lion's cage with her. As it happened all went well but Gloria left the stage to collapse in her dressing-room. On her shoulder where the lion's paw had rested the beads of her gown were crushed.

Such a thing could not happen in the movies today, of course. A double would have been used. But then they didn't know any better than to risk their lives if it were necessary for a certain shot. Kathleen Williams took chances with her life continually in the wild animal pictures she made. Because the industry was so young, it was bolder than it is now. It had, I believe, more courage.

But I am getting ahead of my story. I must go back a bit. In the February issue, I will tell you of the coming of the little motion picture industry to Hollywood and of what raw materials that incredible city was fashioned.

But—maybe she isn't "Crying over nothing"

WHEN a mild reproof brings a flood of tears . . . or a plucky child cries for a trifling hurt . . . take heed! Often such outbursts are little flags of warning!

One of several things may be to blame—acid stomach, flatulence . . . perhaps your child is catching cold. Or maybe it is constipation—a disorder so common that 90% of all children are affected by it.

Give your child Fletcher's Castoria

When a child is unusually "touchy" it is wise to give a laxative. But be sure to give a child's laxative . . . not a harsh, bad-tasting adult laxative that may upset digestion and cause griping pain.

Give Fletcher's Castoria! It is made especially for children. They love its candy taste. It is gentle, safe—yet effective and thorough.

The "standby" in 5,000,000 homes

In more than 5,000,000 American homes, mothers of children of all ages—from babyhood to 11 years—give Fletcher's Castoria for constipation—and for all those little symtoms that point to incomplete elimination.

Next time you take your child to the doctor for a regular check-up, ask him about Fletcher's Castoria. He will tell you that it contains no harsh, irritating ingredients—only such ingredients as are mild, effective and suitable for children's tender systems.

Buy the family-size bottle of Fletcher's Castoria. It is more economical. The signature Chas. H. Fletcher is always right on the carton.

Roxy and his Gang—Every Saturday night your radio is the ticket window to a grand new show—musical surprises presented by that master showman—Roxy. Tune in this Saturday. Let the children listen, too. Columbia Broadcasting System—8 o'clock E.S.T.

Chas. H. Fletcher
CASTORIA
The Children's Laxative

from babyhood to 11 years

Life Begins at 50

(Continued from page 43)

"I've seen many changes in my time. The stage has always mirrored the world, and the world has evolved. I consider myself very fortunate to have been given the privilege to have lived to see it. Many more changes are coming and I want to see them, too. One never steps out of an arena while a fight is going on unless one is a quitter. I'm not going to be a quitter until Gabriel blows his horn."

Fifty years ago, an eighteen-year-old girl by the name of Mary Robison made her debut as Little Tillie in a play called "Hoop of Gold." The printer made two mistakes on the programme. He left out the letter "r" in Mary and the letter "i" in Robison. That left it "May Robson" and as "May Robson" she has lived.

Her beloved Marie Dressler sold May Robson to Hollywood, and a grateful Hollywood it must be since this veteran actress has given new life to the box office. Her picture "Lady For A Day" established her as an actress equal in popularity to her friend Marie. "Lady By Choice" should make audiences feel that here is a woman who can make up for them the loss of Marie Dressler.

HENRIETTA CROSMAN—the grand old lady in "Menace"—told me her story without any bitterness as we sat in the gathering dusk of her beautiful home in Beverly Hills.

Miss Crosman went on the stage in 1883. She played one night stands in all sorts of weather, falling into bed at two in the morning, falling out at five to make the next jump. Some of the time, there were no Pullmans. She married a Major Campbell. Her baby came. She kept right on working. Sarah, the nurse, in lieu of a screen, would hold aloft a steamer rug in the chilly publicity of a day coach so that the mother could take care of the baby.

The climb up the unstable ladder of success was slow. But finally, she stood at the top. Her glorious titian hair had turned gray. But she had made New York audiences rise and call her name. She was famous. She was rich. She had fifty years of stage life behind her when she took her last curtain call.

She bought a beautiful home in Pelham Manor. And she retired from public life.

The stock market crashed. It swept the solid earth from under her feet. It swept the fifty years away.

She sat down and said: "What shall I do?"

People answered: "Why don't you teach?"

She retorted: "I can't."

So she and her husband went on living in that big house in Pelham Manor—without anything to live on.

The house sat in a huge garden. Within this garden, was a little garden of her own, fenced all about with a tall wall. Here she would come—to be with God.

One day—and it was very black in spite of the sun that was shining and the birds that were singing and the flowers that were fragrant—she went to her garden. She was in the depths of despair. In her anguish, she called aloud to God. He answered.

Major Campbell called to her. He was shouting something or other from the doorway. It sounded like: "Would you go to Hollywood to make a picture? Fox is on the telephone."

And so for Henrietta Crosman life began again, fifteen years past fifty.

IT took misfortune in still another guise to give Guy Kibbee his lucky break.

At forty, he was earning $37.50 a week, playing character roles with a stock company in Lincoln, Nebraska, and convinced that he had reached the zenith of his theatrical career.

He lived comfortably enough in a rambling family hotel. Then, as now, he was rotund of figure and bald of pate. And he wasn't consumed with any driving ambition.

He married. The lady suggested Hollywood. He wasn't particularly interested. The lady repeated Hollywood. You know how those things end—it was Hollywood—or Hollywood.

But once he arrived, he could not get a job. The experience of years did not count. The family fortune dwindled.

One night, over an epochal dinner, a friend advised that the Kibbees go to New York in their search for laurels. They examined their car. They had christened it "Rabbit" not because it was fast but because its natural gait was a hop. With many false starts, they finally drove out of Hollywood.

The ups and downs of that transcontinental journey were not only of the landscape. The Kibbees subsisted on crusts and slept under the stars. They had thermoid trouble and three flats. But finally they reached New York on a rainy September morning and moved in on a chap who had a tiny apartment in Greenwich Village. They were dead broke.

The very next day, over the luncheon table at the Lambs' Club, a man rushed up to Kibbee. He was so excited that what he said made very little sense. It was something about a character part that had walked out of a sketch that was scheduled on the radio that night and would Kibbee do him a favor and play the radio that walked out for forty-five dollars and there wasn't much time so could Kibbee come right over.

One excited man led to one exciting night. The accidental assignment led to a part in "The Torch Song" and "The Torch Song" led back to Hollywood. And Hollywood, that would not send around the corner, sent all the way to New York for Kibbee.

FOR more than a quarter of a century, Alison Skipworth was a name to conjure with on Broadway. Daniel Frohman had seen her in London, heard her fine contralto voice, and signed her as a prima donna. She had many successes in those twenty-five years. But mostly she talks—and laughs—about the time she appeared in twenty successive failures.

She made a silent picture. The picture made little or no impression. Too bad that fine contralto voice of hers was silent. Much, much too bad, for at the moment, the Depression was closing down the legitimate theatre.

Skipworth decided to retire to her Long Island estate. She knew she would be unhappy out of the profession but what else was there to do?

Then, like an unexpected life preserver tossed out to the drowning, the talkies came into being. Paramount heard that fine contralto voice and placed it under contract.

"I'm fifty-five years old," says she, pointing toward leeward which in this case happens to mean her still far from white hair. (She wears a white wig, you know, in "Here Is My Heart.") "I'm proud to admit it. People ask me why I don't retire now that I've made enough money to live on comfortably, but as the stocking said to the needle that threatened to go through it, 'I'll be darned.' What would there be left for me to do? Who wants to sit back and think about being an old woman? You know, so many women I know have become old before their time by growing morbid about age. They sit in a rocker all day long and think and think and think. One woman I knew had a penchant for protesting that she'd never live long enough to see anything materialize. 'They are building subways?' she asked me twenty years ago. 'I'll never live to see them finished.' She's still going strong, by the way. Now if that woman had had some useful and creative occupation to keep her busy, she'd have stopped thinking about not living to see grand projects completed, but would have gone out and helped make them.

"I love work. Work keeps one's body young and one's mind active. Age isn't a matter of time, it's a matter of thought. Some people are young at sixty and others are old at twenty. I feel sorry for these people who have nothing to do all day long but think about themselves. Between you and me, we all have an ache once in awhile and I'm no different from the rest, but with my work and my bridge games and so many things to see and do, I refuse to give in to them. I'm not the sort, you see, that likes to waste time reminiscing about the past. I'm too busy thinking about the future. No, I'll stay around until no one wants me anymore."

AT whom would the audience laugh if we older people retired from active service?" asks Mrs. Captain Patrick Campbell, the grand and mighty queen of the theatre who for almost fifty years held first place in the hearts of young blades who saw her in the gay nineties. "Who would take the part of the old maiden aunt? Do you realize we furnish most of the comedy? Audiences like to laugh at old folks—they make them seem so superior and modern and sophisticated, but we don't mind. One of the grand recompenses that we have is the luxury of lost vanity. We don't have to worry about hiding our age and losing our sex appeal. We don't have to hide our age—people usually can guess it. You know, there usually is some octogenarian in the family who has a diabolical memory and takes sadistic delight in saying, 'Is that Mrs. Pat Campbell still alive? I saw her when I was just a little tike.' We older actors and actresses feel that when we are chosen for a part it's because the director knows that we'll be good in it. In that sense we are better off than is the younger player. Then why should we retire? If one has health, then one can go on working. As long as I feel that people want to see me on the screen, I shall never stop working. I suppose my friend, George Bernard Shaw, would say that I, who have hearkened to so many cues, should know the time to quit. Well, at the moment I don't feel that time has come."

I don't think it will ever come for Mrs. Patrick Campbell. Her sailing through the years has been a pretty easy one and she has held on to her trophies of popularity and affection by outdistancing any younger and faster clippers that have appeared on the horizon. Of all the famous stars of yesterday, I think it is her name which

(Continued on page 68)

10 REASONS WHY MILLIONS OF WOMEN USE TINTEX

1. Tintex restores faded color to fabrics . . . in a jiffy.
2. Tintex keeps "undies" fresh and gay-looking.
3. Tintex brings the season's smart colors to your wardrobe.
4. Tintex makes your last year's apparel look like new.
5. Tintex keeps curtains and drapes bright and fresh-looking.
6. Tintex keeps all home-decorations color-smart.
7. Tintex is so quick and easy to use.
8. Tintex gives professional tinting and dyeing results.
9. Tintex is used without muss, fuss, or bother.
10. Tintex costs only a few pennies and saves dollars.

Color-Magic for All Faded Fabrics

TINTEX has become a daily necessity in the home of every smart American woman. It saves dollars. It gives color-freshness, brilliance and smartness to every article of apparel . . . and home decoration. It has hundreds of practical uses—morning, noon and night—restoring color to all faded fabrics, or giving bright new color, if you wish. It makes home-tinting and dyeing a joy . . . it's so quick and easy. 35 smart colors.

PARK & TILFORD, Distributors

Tintex
TINTS AND DYES
The World's Largest Selling Tints and Dyes

USE TINTEX FOR: Underthings · Negligees · Dresses · Sweaters · Scarfs · Stockings · Slips · Men's Shirts · Blouses · Children's Clothes · Curtains · Bed Spreads · Drapes · Luncheon Sets · Doilies · Slip Covers

AT ALL DRUG STORES, NOTION AND TOILET GOODS COUNTERS

(Continued from page 66)

means the most to veteran audiences. She was a noted beauty and wit, the toast of her generation and the most famous interpreter of Shakespearian roles. Her fame spread over the world. She was the friend and confidante of royalty. In 1888, she made her stage debut and has appeared in such favorite plays as "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray," "The Masquerader," and "Electra."

"You know," she confessed, "at one time I actually did retire for several years. I felt my day was done. But I was restless and unhappy. I tried to fill my days with other pursuits but I kept thinking of my salad days constantly and wishing that I could live them all over again. Then a call came from Irving Thalberg who was in England at the time with his wife, Norma Shearer. He told me that his wife would start a picture upon their return to Hollywood to be called 'Riptide,' and asked me if I would care to play one of the leads. Would I? You could bet I would. I forgot all about my vow to retire, forgot about my salad days. I was still wanted, I could still play a featured role. Out of my retirement I came, and out of it I remained, for 'One More River.' I hope I shall continue to remain out of it. I'm happier now than I've been in years."

COMMANDER Helen Westley's philosophy is probably derived from the nautical signal, "Green to green, red to red, all is well, go ahead." Steadfastly, surely, she has gone ahead until today she is one of the powers to be reckoned with in theatrical circles. Like the good commander she is, she has charted the course of the New York Theatre Guild and has brought it safely to port through choppy and uncertain seas. If you saw her performance in "The House of Rothschild," you will have recognized in her an actress of finish and style.

"For forty years I have been identified with the theatre," says Commander Helen, "and I hope to continue being identified with it for forty years more.

"To me age is the most beautiful time in life. We are free, free to be alone, free to think, free to rest. We are not cluttered by the emotions of early youth, we have grown more retrospective, we see with clearer eyes. Of course there are some silly women who remain emotionally young until the end, but I feel that these are in the minority, that most of us who have reached the age of fifty have grown mature in our emotions.

"I believe that the age of mankind is divided into three parts; the age of learning when we begin to read and write and understand the strangeness of the world, the emotional age which is purely tied up with sex, and lastly, the cosmic age when we can think of the world without our ideas being cluttered up by the demands of sex. Then a woman is free to know herself, to analyze herself and the people about her.

In 1919, the Theatre Guild was formed. Helen Westley was one of its founders and is today one of its six directors. She has appeared in some of its greatest successes including "Strange Interlude." The Guild to her is like a child and she nurtures it with hard work. What could it do without its Commander Helen? Despite her screen contract, she returns to it every few months to see how it is coming along.

LIVE your life to the fullest, doing as little harm to others as possible, but live your life. That's what it's for."

And the man who spoke those words spoke from the richness of experience. At sixty, Commander Sir Guy Standing, C.B.E., K. B. E., R.N.V.R., is still living his life to the fullest after having crammed enough successful adventure and romance into his three score years to exhaust half a dozen lesser men.

"Yes, I've been lucky," he said, never a sick day in my life. That makes a big difference. The other day I realized that I never got weary. It started me thinking. Maybe there was something wrong with me—glands or something."

Sir Guy's life really began when he was nine. To his home in Brighton, Sussex, came an uncle. The importance of this uncle was that he brought with him a sovereign. He gave the coin to Guy and a strange metamorphosis took place. The boy became a seafarer. He bought a boat for that sovereign and still feels that he was cheated. He and two other ambitious Britons of the same age turned to and in three weeks had remade the craft. Now all they needed was a sail. Young Standing was a stout fellow, not one to stop at trifles. There was a large family table cloth. . . . "Of course," says Sir Guy, "when it was reported among the missing, it caused a deal of comment. I maintained a diplomatic silence."

When he was fifteen his actor-father, Herbert Standing, called him into conference. Guy was given his choice of two things, working his way through the University or turning to and starting his career, whatever it was to be. He painted a little, played a little and acted a little—"and did all three badly." So he decided to act anyway.

In little or no time he strode into his father's study, the proud possessor of a contract to play juvenile leads with a stock company up among the coals of Newcastle. His father promptly snorted. At any rate he tried to discourage the venture, saying that Guy would probably not be paid off by such a cheap and inferior company and would have to wire home.

"But, hang it all! Sir, it's a fine company. They're going to pay me three pounds a week to play juveniles!"

"Yes, quite so! . . . That proves the company is no good!"

Sir Guy's only comment today is that his father was right—quite right. But the young actor didn't do as his father had predicted he would. He didn't telegraph home for money. Instead he got a job on a collier—a coal boat.

He acted whenever he could and sailed whenever he couldn't. He went to Australia and tried his hand at gold mining and sheep raising. But he could not forget the stage.

He came over to America. Between calls on agents and managers, he went from house to house selling water colors that he painted at odd moments. He had to eat. Finally, Frohman gave him a part. He skyrocketed to success. Paramount signed him.

Then came the war.

Graciously enough, Paramount released him with the understanding that when the war ended in a few months, the actor would return to pictures.

The war lasted five years. He was knighted. He came back to America with a munificent capital of $40. It meant beginning his career all over again. He played with Jane Cowl. The company went to Hollywood.

Sir Guy did not go on at fifty—as the others had—because of a bank failure, a stock crash, or a death. He actually began his career at fifty.

Now at sixty, his advice is: "Do a kind thing now and then. Have a hobby or two. Ride them hard. Keep busy. And, when you shave in the morning, look yourself squarely in the eye and say: "This is going to be a great day. Thank God for it. And thank God I'm here to enjoy it. And life at fifty—or sixty—or seventy—or any old age—will give you usefulness and happiness."

Rough, Ready and Regular

(Continued from page 37)

His he-mannish stuff on the screen, which has proved to be so enormously profitable to him, is no studied art. There is nothing affected or synthetic about his acting. He is simply himself before the camera, and lives over in his films, experiences from his own past life.

VIC has roamed over the face of the globe and fought nearly a thousand fights on the mat and in the ring. He has toured the rough towns of Canada, where he went to seek his fortune at nineteen, as a wrestler taking on all comers in one-night stands. He has withstood the terrific battering of Jack Johnson in a "no decision" match held at Vancouver shortly after that huge Negro won the world's heavyweight title. He has toiled on a farm and prospected for gold in the Canadian wilds. Has been a vaudeville actor in Australia. Has gone hunting lions in Africa. Fished pearls in the South Seas, surviving a typhoon. Taught calisthenics and boxing to a maharaja in India. Fought the Turks in the torrid wastes of Mesapotamia as a captain in the crack Cheshires. And finally, before returning to London in 1920, ruled in Bagdad as Assistant Provost Marshal, when the victorious Union Jack replaced the Ottoman crescent and star over the sacred domes of that legendary city.

"The last thing I ever expected was to be a movie star," he told me with that toothy grin of his.

"I had returned from the army in Mespot and had easily won my championship fight in the Aldershot finals, a boxing tournament conducted between the various theatres of the war. But an injury to my leg sealed my career as a boxer. I went through the two defeats in succession. My brothers realized as well as I did that the family's chances of winning the heavyweight title had gone forever. I was already thirty-three, and hadn't done any serious boxing for five years.

"It was on the night of my second inglorious fight that I. B. Davidson, a leading figure in the British film industry and a ringside fan, came into my dressing-room at the National Sporting Club in London and said to me:

" 'Victor, you have tried everything once. How would you like to be a film actor?'

"He might as well have suggested, 'How would you like to take the next rocket to the moon?'

" 'Don't be silly, man,' I replied. 'I don't know the first thing about acting, and I haven't got the looks.'

"But Davidson insisted that I was the fellow he wanted. Not a 'pretty boy,' but a rough and ready sort of chap to play the lead in 'The Call of the Road' which he was about to film.

"I jolly well knew that I was finished with boxing. I was out of a job, and appeared like a square peg in the round hole of London life. Here was a chance for me to make some easy money, so I submitted to a test, and was given the part.

"I worked six weeks in that picture at a salary of thirty pounds a week. It was big money for film actors in London.

THE film crowd I now associated with struck me as a perfectly crazy lot. I had been used to an atmosphere in which you showed your friendship for your pal by cursing him like a trooper. In this new world of cocktails, over-polite conversation, superlatives of praise, and disconcerting familiarity, every man was 'old boy' and every woman 'darling' or 'sweetheart.' Like Hollywood, it was a world apart, where the values of life as I knew them did not exist, and I had to adjust myself to an entirely new perspective. But once I got used to the change, I found the film crowd consisting in the main of very decent people, good pals, and square rivals.

"I worked in about twenty British films before I got an offer from Hollywood.

"America had knocked the bottom out of the British film industry and things were in a bad way for us actors over there. I eagerly wired my acceptance. The part offered me was the lead in Vitagraph's 'Beloved Brute.'

"After I gave up boxing and became a film actor, I married Edna Lamont. I had to leave her in London and make the journey to America alone, for I didn't know how things would turn out for me in that fantastic place called Hollywood. Even though its streets seemed to be paved in gold bricks, hundreds had failed there for every one who had succeeded.

"I arrived in Hollywood with only twenty dollars in my pocket, and wandered down the Boulevard with a jaunty feeling, not knowing exactly what to do or where to go.

"The first person to speak to me was an ex-pug. He readily recognized me as an Englishman just come over from the other side. Being very anxious to make a good impression on my new employers, I was dressed in the latest sartorial elegance of London, with kid gloves, spats, and walking cane. People stopped and looked at me as if I were a freak show.

"This ex-comrade of the ring touched me for a loan. I gave him one of the two ten-dollar bills I had with me. I asked him the way to the Vitagraph Studio, and he told me it was 'just along the road.'

"Well, I had to walk five miles along that accursed road to reach the studio. The weather was as hot as Bagdad in summertime. My old shirt was gummed to my back, my hands were clammy.

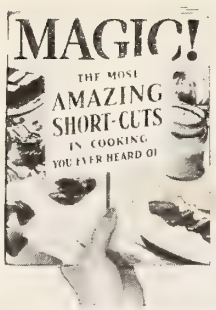
"The first person to meet me at Vitagraph was an Irish publicity man who hated all Englishmen at sight.

" 'Very few of you fellows make good over here,' he told me. Not exactly the kind of greeting to soothe my perspiring brow. He made it quite plain that any race as stupid, dishonest, and utterly lacking in initiative and decency as the English, would stand very little chance of getting on in God's Own Country.

"I liked him. I owe him a great deal. I will never forget the whirlwind publicity campaign he conducted to put me over when things looked pretty black to me.

"It was at his suggestion that I put aside my English reticence and reserve—three years of Shaftesbury Avenue had

5-way cookies
Easy! Quick!



Eagle Brand
MAGIC COOKIES

1. Two Cups Raisins
or
2. Two Cups Corn Flakes
or
3. Three Cups Coconut
or
4. Two Cups Bran Flakes
or
5. One Cup Nut Meats, Chopped

1⅓ cups (1 can) Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk
½ cup peanut butter
Any one of the five ingredients listed at left

Thoroughly blend Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk, peanut butter and any one of the five ingredients listed at the left. Drop by spoonfuls onto buttered baking sheet. Bake 15 minutes or until brown, in a moderately hot oven (375°F.) Makes about 30 cookies.

● No flour! No baking powder! Only 3 ingredients! Mixed in no time! Yet—whichever of the 5 ways you choose to make them—these cookies are crunchy, crispy winners! ● But remember—Evaporated Milk won't—can't—succeed in this recipe. You must use Sweetened Condensed Milk. Just remember the name Eagle Brand.

FREE! World's most amazing Cook Book!
Rotogravure picture-book (60 photographs) showing astonishing new short-cuts. 130 recipes, including: Lemon Pie without cooking! Foolproof 5-minute Chocolate Frosting! Caramel Pudding that makes itself! 2-ingredient Macaroons! Shake-up Mayonnaise! Ice Creams (freezer and refrigerator). Address: The Borden Co., Dept. MM 15, 350 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Borden Quality

Name _____
Street _____
City _____ State _____
(Print name and address plainly)

Anita Louise and Tom Brown, Hollywood's best loved juvenile players, are seldom seen without each other. In other words, they're going "steady."

worked wonders in me—and I did my darnedest to be a ' regular guy.' I slapped everybody on the back and laughed at jokes that were old before I had left London. Within a day or two they were all calling me Victor, then Vic, and accepted me as one of their own kind.

"To my great dismay I learned that my film was to be postponed for a month. That meant no pay checks for a month. I was at a loss and didn't know what to do. I didn't dare tell studio executives I had only ten dollars with me, that I had to have some money quickly to send to my wife in London.

"An assistant director came to my rescue. He found me an attic to live in. It was close by the studio and overlooked a sewage farm. Rats ran all over the place, and the loathsome smell was intolerable.

"Every morning I laid in a fresh supply of fruit, buying it from a Japanese peddler. Fruit was the cheapest food I could eat. For a quarter he gave me enough apples and oranges to open a grocery store of my own."

IT was from that smelly attic that Victor McLaglen, Esq., lately of Shaftesbury Avenue, London, launched forth to lick Hollywood.

The story of that licking would fill several pages. Suffice to say that his role as Captain Flagg in "What Price Glory?" established him as a new luminary in the unstable firmament of the screen.

"And here I am, still plugging away at the old game which I thought was to be merely a brief interlude in my life, just another episode," he said, as Director Lewis Milestone called him for another shot.

He said these last words as if he were ashamed of being an actor.

He does not like to talk about his pictures. "Wait until the preview," he said, when I asked him what he thought of "The Captain Hates the Sea," in which he plays the part of the detective, Schulte, aboard the romantic San Capador—a smart sleuth who is plenty tough, but is vulnerable to feminine charms. It's a role right in line with his experiences as a chief of railway police in a Canadian town, where he rounded up a most elusive gang of fur thieves, and as Assistant Provost Marshal of Bagdad, where he had to check the enemy espionage system behind the British lines.

Victor invited me to visit him at his home in Flintridge, half an hour's spin from Hollywood, to continue the interview and swap some reminiscences of war days.

He met me in his boxing trunks—a tower of beef with a battered nose.

"If I had my life to live over, it would be the canvas every time," he said. "The only thing that ever really thrilled me was boxing."

There is something pathetic about this man who was cut for the ring, yet couldn't reach the top in fistic honors, all because of a leg injury.

The two great sorrows of his life are his failure to win the British heavyweight title, and the death of his mother before American movies made it possible for her to loll in clover. With a pang deep down in his heart, he thinks how she would revel in his beautiful home—Fairhaven—and all the luxuries which he could shower upon her now.

There's a view of mountains and orange groves. Flower-banked paths that lead to unexpected and charming nooks. Clumps of magnolia, lemon, olive trees. Poplars clapping their hands in the breeze in ceaseless rapture. An outdoor swimming pool built of lovely Spanish tile and looking like a sheet of blue flame in the blazing sun. A "garden of memory" where friends, including many motion picture satellites, have planted valuable flowers and shrubs. Tennis court. Gymnasium. Riding track. Thoroughbreds in the stable. More than a hundred pheasants. Rows of dog houses. Deer and wild goats. Hundreds of singing birds in full-throated glee in their large cage-house.

There is even a butcher shop with modern refrigerator. Vic's parties are grand affairs, reminiscent of scenes from the novels of Sir Walter Scott. He likes to have a whole steer barbecued in honor of his guests.

HIS house is built in Tudor style, furnished in antiques. The stuffed heads of three deer look down over the dining-room. Mrs. McLaglen and her two children, Andrew and Sheila, were on a vacation. "Everything is upside down," he apologized. This former champion slugger of the British army in Iraq now takes things easy and reads Voltaire's Philosophical Dictionary. An admirable father, he never figures in the gossip columns. Sheila, twelve, is an accomplished pianist. Andrew is the champion all-around athlete in his school and a good scholar to boot.

"I am proud of this kid of mine," he said, as we reached Andrew's bedroom. He fumbled in a drawer for a box, and spread out on the table eleven medals for me to behold, tokens of his son's physical prowess and scholarship.

"He is not a bit spoiled, and is as modest as can be. If I had asked him to show you his medals, he wouldn't have done it. Now and then he comes home with another medal, puts it in this drawer, and never tells me anything about it."

Two of Victor's younger brothers, Arthur and Cyril, now live with him. Arthur, dark and handsome with a sensitive face, is a sculptor versed also in landscape architecture. He is responsible for the present fair aspect of Vic's home. Cyril is an English screen actor, besides being a gay war dog.

Both brothers are of giant stature like Victor and have the bearing of officers and gentlemen. Cyril is a dashing lieutenant in the McLaglen Light Horse, which is branching out all over the country.

Two years ago Victor swore allegiance to the American flag. The stars and stripes always fly over Fairhaven. His famous Light Horse is organized primarily for the promotion of American ideals and standards.

On the grounds of the Breakfast Club on Riverside Drive—an institution of local big-wigs dedicated to the democracy of ham an' eggs and the riotous fêting of visiting celebrities—the McLaglen Light Horse drills on Monday and Thursday nights and on Sunday afternoons in lance and cavalry formations, equestrian sports and thunderous charges.

Your correspondent attended one of these drills as the Colonel's guest, and I can assure you it was an awe-inspiring spectacle.

On the drill ground even his brothers refer to him as "The Colonel." It's not a place to get familiar. Regular army discipline is in force.

Composed of over two hundred men, this colorful regiment of veteran troopers has been engaged by Paramount to appear in "The Lives of a Bengal Lancer."

They wear nifty blue uniforms with gold stripes, and carry on their lances guidons of blue and gold. Their shoulder straps are of silver thread. The majority of them have seen service in the farflung corners of the British Empire, but there are also many Yankee doughboys, and all are 100 per cent American citizens. One trooper, Corp. D. G. Homsy, is an Arab gentleman from Jerusalem, a graduate of the Sorbonne in Paris, who put your correspondent's halting French to a severe test.

A Girl's Troop is attached to the regiment as its ambulance and first-aid corps. It is composed of about sixty girls. Pretty Florine Bale, titian-haired film chorine, is the captain. Most of the girls are dancers and motion picture actresses, and all are skilled riders. There is also a girls' polo team and a rooting section for Victor's latest acquisition, a soccer team.

"Thank God I am not like those film stars,' said Vic, "who think acting is the most important thing in the world and can't be interested in anything else. I get a great kick palling around with these buddies of mine. I like to share their joys and sorrows. They keep me close to earth. I can't go stale as an actor when I associate with men of this kind.

Elissa Landi, Lanny Ross and Sharon Lynne at Emanuel Cohen's testimonial dinner. Note the Landi's new hair-do. Tricky, what?

Claudette's Favorite Fan

(Continued from page 36)

together, etcetera, to see if their stories are read. This was too much. I pushed myself off the divan and rushed to my desk."

CLAUDETTE handed me some of her creamy white stationery. Her own letters had been returned and were kept in the same packet. I opened it to read:

Beverly Hills, Cal.,
Sept. 13, 1933.

DEAR MR. KECK,
Who knows?
Truthfully yours,
CLAUDETTE COLBERT

"That," continued Claudette, "finished the matter as far as I was concerned. I forgot all about it. Ten days later this came:

Watonga, Okla.,
Sept. 18, 1933.

DEAR MISS COLBERT,
God knows.
Less devoutly yours,
DANIEL KECK

"Well, I said to myself, at least this fellow has a bump of humor. And he's brief. That intrigued me. I decided to answer it." She handed me her next letter. And at this point, not having the slightest idea just what to expect, I opened it.

Beverly Hills, Cal.,
Sept. 24, 1933.

DEAR MR. KECK,
If there is a God.
Still truthfully yours,
CLAUDETTE COLBERT

Claudette picked out the next letter and handed it over to me. "Look," she said. I looked.

Watonga, Okla.,
Oct. 1, 1933.

DEAR MISS COLBERT,
Skeptic
Not even cordially yours,
DANIEL KECK

"It was getting to be a game," laughed Claudette. "He was getting under my skin. I couldn't let him have the last word. But it seemed hopeless. You remember what Madame de Sévigné said, 'I'd write you a shorter letter if I had more time.' Well, I thought and thought. It spoiled my dinner party that night. While looking at his last letter again, I noticed something and wrote:

Beverly Hills, Cal.,
Oct. 7, 1933.

DEAR MR. KECK,
You a literary man? Shame! You forgot the period after "skeptic."
Punctiliously yours,
CLAUDETTE COLBERT

We had to search for the next letter. It had fallen on the floor. I confess I was a bit bewildered. "What," I asked myself, "would come next?"

Watonga, Okla.,
Oct. 12, 1933.

DEAR MISS COLBERT,

Your welcome,
DANIEL KECK

TAKE CARE.. COLDS-SUSCEPTIBLE!

AN EMINENT physician states that of the 60,000 preventable deaths yearly in the U. S., many are due to neglect of the common cold. It is vitally important, therefore, that colds be kept under control.

If you catch cold easily—and your colds hang on—don't take needless chances. Follow Vicks Plan for Better Control of Colds. Thousands of clinical tests, supervised by practicing physicians, have proved its helpfulness—for fewer, shorter and milder colds.

When Colds THREATEN ..VICKS VA-TRO-NOL

If a Cold STRIKES ..VICKS VAPORUB

At the first nasal irritation, sniffle or sneeze, quick!...Vicks Va-tro-nol! Just a few drops up each nostril. Its timely use helps to prevent many colds—and to throw off colds in their early stages.

At bedtime, massage throat and chest with VapoRub, the modern way of treating colds. Through the night, its direct two-way action—by stimulation and inhalation—brings soothing relief—without risks of "dosing."

(Full details of this unique Plan in each Vicks package.)

VICKS PLAN FOR BETTER CONTROL OF COLDS

FREE!

KITCHEN TESTED RECIPES

Leaflets containing new and appetizing recipes, all carefully tested in a home-kitchen, are yours for the asking. Read this month's Modern Hostess article on cooking and then write immediately for the free recipe booklet. In it you will find several favorite recipes of OTTO KRUGER including:

• Applesauce Cake • Petits Fours • Christmas Fruit Cookies • Festivity Frostings •

EVERY MONTH IN MODERN SCREEN

THE MODERN HOSTESS

She Got $400.00 for a Half Dollar

I will pay CASH for OLD COINS, BILLS and STAMPS

POST YOURSELF—IT PAYS!

I paid $400 to Mrs. Dowty of Texas, for one Half Dollar; J. D. Martin of Virginia, $200.00 for a single Copper Cent. Mr. Manning of New York, $2.500.00 for one Silver Dollar. Mrs. G. F. Adams, Ohio, received $740.00 for a few old coins. I will pay big prices for all kinds of old coins, medals, bills and stamps.

I Will Pay $100.00 For A Dime!

1894 S. Mint; $50.00 for 1933 Liberty Head Nickel (not Buffalo) and hundreds of other amazing prices for coins. Send 4c for Large Illustrated Coin Folder and further particulars. It may mean much profit to you. Write today to

B. MAX MEHL, 124 Mehl Bldg., FORT WORTH, TEXAS
(Largest Rare Coin Establishment in U. S.)

"Can you beat that?" gasped Claudette. "Well, here was my answer to that epistle:

Malibu Beach, Cal.,
Oct. 20, 1933.

DEAR MR. KECK,

Penuriously,
CLAUDETTE COLBERT

P.S. You seem to be so brilliant. Fill this in yourself!

Claudette picked out a letter which was a wee bit fatter than the others. "One week later I received this note with my letter enclosed.

Watonga, Okla.,
Oct. 24, 1933.

DEAR MISS COLBERT,

Herewith your missive as per instructions. Do you dare?

Dutifully,
DANIEL

"The nerve of him!" laughed Claudette. "Look how he changed my letter.

Malibu Beach, Cal.,
Oct. 20, 1933.

DEAR MR. KECK,

You, I feel sure, could be no more tedious than your letters. Won't you come to Los Angeles? We could have a date. If our correspondence is any criterion, we should become deaf with constant chatter. I await, with pounding heart, your arrival.

Penuriously and also affectionately,
CLAUDETTE COLBERT

P.S. You seem to be so brilliant. Fill this in yourself!

THAT stopped me! What to do? If I mailed it there was no reason why he shouldn't take me at my word. If I didn't I'd be a rather poor sport. Well, I carried that letter around in my bag for a week trying to decide. Then one day I said, 'Claudette, you're a fool,' and dropped it in the mail box. But I added another postscript. I wrote: 'I'll dare, but don't you dare!'

"Three weeks later the studio messenger boy brought me this note, while I was having lunch in my dressing-room.

DEAR MISS COLBERT,

Sorry to miss you for lunch. Hoped to surprise you. The officials seemed to frown on my credentials: Mr. Daniel Keck of Watonga, Okla. Ignoramuses! Would'st dine with me at the Ambassador tonight?

Daringly,
DANIEL

"I was petrified! It suddenly dawned on me that he might be black, white, old or young. This was really pretty terrible. I asked the messenger boy if he had seen him. He shook his head. I sent for a friend and explained my predicament. He went to the hotel to investigate. He returned, smiling. Mr. Keck, he assured me, was unquestionably a gentleman. Over six feet tall, dark, about thirty years old, he was one of the handsomest men he had ever seen. Relieved? I wanted to rush right down and kiss him. Instead, I sent him a note. After excusing myself, I invited him to my home to dinner the following Friday.

"Well, Friday came. And seven-thirty. And with it Mr. Daniel Keck. I was having my hair dressed when he arrived. The butler knocked on my door and announced: 'Mr. Keck, M'dam.'

"'Tell him I'll be right down,' I sang back. The butler seemed bewildered. He stood there. 'Mr. Keck,' he explained solemnly, 'is a lady.'

"I got downstairs in a perfect turmoil. There in the drawing-room . . ."

At that moment we were interrupted. Claudette was called to the phone. It was the studio. She came back to grumble that her call next morning was for seven instead of eight.

"There in the drawing-room was a darling old lady. She held out her hand as I advanced. Her hair was snow white. Except for tiny wrinkles about the eyes her face was like a girl's. It was her eyes that held me. They were the most mischievous I'd ever seen."

"'I am sorry,' she said, 'that my son couldn't meet you. He's on his way to China. I came out to the Coast with him. Yesterday he had to leave to join his wife in San Francisco. But you see, he didn't know about our little game until just the other day. I, you see, am your correspondent. It started off, really, as a dare. Permit me to introduce myself. Mrs. Lucy Pembroke. Daniel Keck is the name I use on some of my writings. It's better to have the pen name of a man, you know.'

"Well, I had the most enjoyable dinner I ever had in my life. She was charming. Bubbling over with fun."

Claudette dashed up to her bedroom and brought back a photograph of her friend in a large silver frame.

"Look at that face," she enthused. "Whenever I want to get into trouble I call her up. She's forgotten more innocent pranks than I'll ever know."

Can a Nice Girl Be a Big Success?

(Continued from page 48)

a girl. She is angry with him. She turns on him. She stamps her foot. She calls him names. She shakes her fists at him, she pounds on his chest. And he says:

"You are lovely when you're angry. Hit me again, you pretty little spitfire!"

Are we like that hero? Do we enjoy seeing our heroines rant and rave at us. Do they seem more beautiful with an angry flush on their faces? It certainly looks that way!

Let's view a few examples:

Now, for a nice girl. No one ever has anything but favorable things to say about Heather Angel. She's pretty, she's sweet, she's intelligent, she's shy, she's modest, she's sincere. So go the criticisms. To interviewers she's delightful. When signing autographs she's a model of patience. In a word, she's everything that a nice girl should be. But who in this town knows or cares (to be brutal), very much about her? Who talks of her? Who writes about her? She has only a few personal friends. She is never seen or heard about. Writers come away from interviews with their finger nails all but chewed off. In spite of all her bright, responsive ideas, her quaint charm, her desire to be helpful. Heather Angel is, as they say out here, "bad copy"—bad newspaper and magazine material.

A direct opposite to Heather is a little demon whose wild screechings are heard around the world. She not only throws valuable vases at anybody who happens to annoy her, but most especially at her husband. Her pretty little feet stamp in time with a refrain of:

"You old—blankety-blank! You nasty so-and-so . . . I will keel you!"

Need, I tell you that it's Lupe? Need I remind you that the whole world is Velez-conscious? That's what I mean when I say, I wonder if it pays to be nice in Hollywood. Lupe insults and endangers. She curses and yells. She stamps on our insteps with her high-spiked heels. And we love it. "Do it some more, Lupe!" we implore.

I SPOKE a few minutes ago of Connie and Joan Bennett. Joan, too, has quite a temper, but it's Connie who gets the credit for being the tyrant in that family. And when I say "gets the credit" I mean "gets the credit" for many people believe that Connie has profited tremendously by her tantrums. I'm sure they have helped her drive good bargains with her producers. A woman's wrath such as hers knoweth no "no's." And then, too, Connie is always good "copy." And the very fact that Connie is difficult to get to, makes a word with her, even a cross one, seem more desirable!

But Joan, as I started to say, also has a temper and a temperament, though she manages somehow to conceal them behind that pretty little face of hers, the side that she has chosen to show the world. Connie, on the other hand, has her sweet side, too. Her intimate friends tell us there is no one any "swell-er" than Connie. She's honest, frank and true-blue. She's intelligent, witty and really an extraordinary woman. But ever since she was a young girl, Connie has lifted her arrogant eyebrows to the outer world, and looked at us through her platinum-rimmed lorgnettes . . . patronizingly! She has always been superior, even during her prom-trotting days, when she led the social whirl of the younger Eastern debutantes.

There is a story I heard long ago from a Princeton boy about Connie. The incident occurred during a Princeton house-party at the end-of-the-season football prom. Wherever you saw a group of young men gathered about an object of interest, you could be sure that that object of interest was Constance Bennett, second daughter of Richard Bennett, and the loveliest of the clan. She was vivacious, ravishing, witty and provocative. The center of attention everywhere.

While she was dancing, a young man, football hero of the day, cut in on her. Connie was not having young men she didn't know cut in. She was most exacting in her social ideas. So she gave him an icy stare. Then admiring his daredevil charm, she changed her stare to a smile, and, looking at him bewitchingly, she said:

"Do you know whom you're dancing with?"

The football hero tossed his head and replied:

"No, does it matter?"

Still bewitching, still smiling, the elegant Miss Bennett said, "You're dancing with Connie Bennett, lucky boy!"

They danced on a few steps. The football hero smiled ingratiatingly.

"Do you know whom you're dancing with?"

"No," answered Miss Bennett in a carefree tone.

The young man paused a moment. Looking defiantly into those intriguing Bennett eyes, he answered:

"You're dancing with Connie Bennett, lucky girl!"

And he left her, right in the middle of the floor!

Connie still has that manner. When you're with her, her eyes seem to be saying, "Do you know whom you're talking to?" The only difference is that now we don't leave Constance Bennett dancing with herself in the middle of the floor. We take it and like it! We rush by the millions to see her every picture. We try to modulate our voices to be more like hers. We kill ourselves with dieting so that we may have a figure like hers. We get our dressmakers to turn out something like that little gold lamé number that Connie wore in her last picture. In fact, we take it and like it so much that we support her to the tune of $30,000 per picture.

In Hollywood, as in no other place in the world, fame and success may be closely measured by the amount of money a person makes. Few actresses ever rise above the $3,000-a-week class. But Connie's fame has transcended the fame of the other members of her famous family. She has definitely lifted herself to the top of the Hollywood heap with a salary that's reported to be $30,000 for only a few weeks' work! And all that without giving a damn about anybody!

OVER at Warner Brothers I met one of the sweetest, nicest, and most delightful girls that I've met in a long time! She's only been in Hollywood about a year, and she's made great strides, but they've been measured, steady ones. Everyone speaks well of her and her work. She is friendly to talk to. She gives of herself, her experiences, her thoughts, while she talks to you. She goes into anything and everything thoroughly. She has talent and ambition. She is discreet. She has excellent taste. She loves music and art and good literature. You like her immensely, but you feel that there is something lacking. You go home and say in a calm voice, "I met Jean Muir today. She was awfully nice; she invited me to lunch." Your voice, however, carries no real enthusiasm.

But a friend came bursting into my house the other day and in a loud excited voice shouted, "Guess who I saw. Guess! And she was shooting crap with the bootblack over at RKO, yelling and laughing at the top of her lungs!"

I didn't have to guess. It was Katharine Hepburn, of course. And from then on I couldn't stop the barrage of questions which my friend fired at me.

"Does she really bully her maid so that she has her in tears half the time?" she asked. "Does she really fight with her director, her hairdresser, her stand-in, her script girl? Is she really as stubborn as they say? I hear she swears like a trooper." And so on and on. Well, since no nice girl swears, or shoots crap with colored boys, Miss Hepburn may not be a nice girl. But boy! is she successful! Do the magazines and newspapers tell you about the many nice things that Hepburn does? No. It's the hoydenish, harumscarum Katie Hepburn that you love to read about! Hepburn took the town and the world by storming!

Helen Hayes and Ruth Chatterton are another couple that invite comparison. Both of them do similar parts on the screen—and both of them are fine actresses. But Helen Hayes, with all her sweetness and charm, has never quite snatched for her own the title that Ruth Chatterton once wore:—"First Lady of the Screen."

Helen Hayes is loved by most everyone. Chatterton is feared by most. Her tantrums, her sullenness, and her wrath have made history in this town. Chatterton, like the temperamental artist that she is, had to rule the roost, and she did; lock, stock and barrel, even husband. Helen Hayes has always been nice to everyone. With the result that Helen Hayes is still just plain Helen Hayes, while we still speak of Ruth as "La Chatterton." And in that little "La" is a world of difference.

Sometimes it's just as successfully intriguing for a star to turn her back on Hollywood, as it is to fight it face to face. Another favorite who hasn't bothered to be particularly nice to anyone, and who has gotten away with it beautifully, is Margaret Sullavan. Hollywood likes Maggie in spite of the fact (or is it because of the fact?) that Maggie doesn't like Hollywood. I know you have read that she is Hollywood's Sore Spot, Hollywood's Pet Peeve, but you have to really like a girl to have her get under your skin like Maggie does. She doesn't scoff at Hollywood, or defy it, or even shout at it, like Hepburn does. She just ignores it!

She arrived here only a short time before she started working on her first picture, and she left immediately after the picture was finished. She did the same thing again on the occasion of her second picture. She shows no interest in meeting anyone, and she shows an equally nil interest when someone wants to meet her. No disdain, just indifference.

But Hollywood and the world isn't indifferent about her. Theatre managers claim she's the best "draw" of the day. Writers clamor for interviews. Fans want to know when she'll be making another picture, and hostesses ask their guests, "Do you know Margaret Sullavan?" I wonder if all this would have happened if Maggie had started out being nice to everyone.

ELISSA LANDI is charming. She is invited to more parties than she cares to attend. But, to be nice, she manages to spread her time around. She stops in for a chat here and there, and she bestows smiles and delightful friendliness everywhere. But even at the very parties that she attends, do you think she is the topic of conversation? Oh, no. More likely, Marlene Dietrich.

Marlene treats Hollywood badly in still a different manner than do the rest: Bennett, Hepburn, Chatterton, Sullavan and Velez. She turns a deaf ear to its every criticism of her.

Hollywood gasps because she is often escorted by a man who is not her husband, while her husband escorts another woman. Marlene continues to go her own way, and no divorce rumors accompany her. A code that's good enough for Europe is good enough for her!

When seen at a preview, Marlene, whether she is or not, looks like the most bored person there! Neither indifferent, nor amused, nor insulting, nor brazen, Marlene is just bored. And that's really being nasty to Hollywood!

Connie, Katharine, Margaret, Lupe and Marlene are talked about, wondered about and their stars are still plenty high in the heavens. And their more amiable girl friends seem fated to shine as lesser lights.

Most Astounding
TYPEWRITER BARGAIN

10¢ a Day buys this New Remington Portable Model No. 5

10 Day Free Trial Offer

BIG PRICE REDUCTION

Accept this amazing offer on a brand new Remington Portable No. 5, direct to you from the factory. Never before could we offer it on such easy terms that it actually costs you but 10¢ a day to own it. This machine formerly sold for a lot more than its present price. The price and the terms make it the greatest bargain in typewriter history.

Not a used or rebuilt typewriter. Not an incomplete machine. A beautiful brand new regulation Remington Portable. Standard 4-row keyboard; standard width carriage; margin release on keyboard; back spacer; automatic ribbon reverse; every essential feature found in standard typewriters!

FREE COURSE IN TYPING

With your Remington No. 5 you get ABSOLUTELY FREE a 19-page typing course. Teaches the Touch System. It is simply written and well illustrated. Even a child can understand it. During the 10 DAY TRIAL OFFER you should dash off letters faster than with pen and ink.

FREE CARRYING CASE

With every Remington No. 5, a FREE Carrying Case sturdily built of 3-ply wood. Covered with heavy Du Pont fabric. Top is removed in one motion, leaving machine firmly attached to base. Can be used anywhere—on knees, in chairs, on trains.

ACT NOW WHILE LOW PRICE HOLDS GOOD

New wage scales point definitely to higher prices. Machines on hand make possible the present unbelievably low cash price on this machine. We don't believe we can maintain the present price reduction for long.

You can try this machine for 10 days without risking one penny of your money. Not even shipping charges. Send for complete details on this most liberal offer. Get attractive new catalog illustrating and describing the many Remington models available on unusually low terms. Clip coupon today!

Remington Rand Inc., Dept. 140-1
Buffalo, N. Y.
Please tell me how I can buy a new Remington Portable Typewriter for only 10¢ a day.
Also enclose your new catalog.

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

*City*_____ *State*_____

Behind the Scenes with Joan, Clark and Bob

(Continued from page 41)

sighed, that didn't mean anything. You know, you can always tell the star of any picture by his apologetic but always slightly tardy arrival after everyone else has checked in. So that took care of that.

At exactly five minutes to nine Joan Crawford emerged from her brand new dressing-room and ran into her old pal and co-star, Clark Gable, who was just emerging from his new dressing-room. "Hi," called Joan. "Going to walk or ride over to the set?" "Let's walk," he said, taking Joan's arm.

They hadn't gone ten steps when a very hurried and slightly breathless young man overtook them. "What's the idea of trying to make me late?" demanded Mr. Robert Montgomery, who had never before in the memory of the oldest M-G-M native been observed to hurry.

Thus "Mary Clay," "Jeff Williams," and "Dill Todd," the chief romantic ingredients of "Forsaking All Others," arrived on the set arm in arm long before Billie Burke, Charlie Butterworth or Frances Drake, their supporting players, showed any signs of appearing.

BEFORE we go any further it might be well to explain something about "Mary" and "Jeff" and "Dill" in a little more detail. "Mary" is Joan Crawford who is loved by both "Jeff" (Clark) and "Dill" (Bob). She is giving a large party to celebrate her engagement to "Dill" when "Jeff" appears unexpectedly on the scene. "Jeff" has just returned from a long sojourn in Spain to ask "Mary" to marry him and he is broken-hearted when he learns she is going to marry "Dill." The story opens with the engagement party in full blast.

But the wedding never comes off, for who should appear at "Dill's" apartment the night of his stag dinner but an old sweetheart, "Connie" (Frances Drake). And "Dill" falls in love with "Connie" all over again.

But let's go back to our off-stage story of Joan, Clark and Bob—and that first day on the set. Before luncheon was announced, seven scenes had been shot and not a single Bing Crosby record had been played. You could have knocked over the collective press correspondents with a very small feather.

However, press spirits were miraculously revived when immediately after lunch a young man from the music department, who admitted that he had been personally recruited by Joan Crawford, presented himself on the "Forsaking All Others" set with a gramophone in his arms. Ah, the plot was really beginning to thicken. Joan had accepted Van Dyke's dare. Her machine and records had arrived.

For a minute you could have heard a pin drop. Van Dyke observed the arrival of the gramophone (out of the corner of his eye). So did Joan. Hurriedly, she went over to the young man and held a whispered conversation with him. "Take it over to a corner of the stage where it won't bother anyone," she said, "and put on a soft needle."

The moment had arrived. What was going to happen?

Mr. Van Dyke arose. He walked over to the little group of two, and every eye on that set was on him. "What records have you there?" he interestedly inquired.

"Oh, just some that I like," laughed Joan. "Some opera selections, and some popular ones—and some of Bing Crosby's and some of my own."

"Your own?" echoed the director in surprise. "I didn't know you sang for records."

I DON'T," replied Joan, "but I have some records of my voice from various pictures I've made. I play the old ones and compare them with the new ones and check to see if there is any improvement. It's a big help."

"Say," said the tall Mr. Van Dyke enthusiastically, "that's a swell idea. Let's listen to some of them."

And so Joan, Van Dyke, Gable and Montgomery gathered around the gramophone and listened to records for the rest of the luncheon hour. And what's more, they actually played some of Bing Crosby's, too! That's the way two of Hollywood's best scouts and most regular fellows settled that particular feud, with everybody happy except, perhaps, the press.

Before the picture was in production two weeks, the news was out that there were no stars in the picture and there was no stellar temperament. Three of M-G-M's biggest stars had put themselves completely in the hands of the director they so greatly admired. They believed in him implicitly and what he said was law. So far as we know, only one concession was made to artistic prerogatives and that was in the matter of lighting for the camera. As a rule, the star of a picture receives all and sundry benefits in the lighting, with the others coming in as best they can. But in this case three separate lighting experts were put to work on the three individual stars and not a single scene was shot until these experts had checked in an okay for his particular charge.

Have a seat, Mr. Montgomery. You're on the "Forsaking All Others" set, which boasts such illustrious names as Gable, Crawford, Montgomery and is directed by Van Dyke of "Thin Man" fame. The seat on the extreme right is yours.

Bob Montgomery was favored at one point, however. A great deal of expense and time was given to installing a shower with hot and cold water for Bob's bath scene. "Know why?" grinned Bob the day I drifted on the set. "They were scared I'd catch cold and they're running through this picture so fast they haven't time to take care of me if I get the sniffles."

Things were going at such a fast pace that Clark Gable didn't have time to memorize his lines. Joan and Clark were at work on a very difficult scene before the camera when Joan realizes it is "Jeff" she loves and not "Dill" and she is trying to let him know. They kept shooting and re-shooting it because Clark just couldn't get his lines down pat. Seven times they started the cameras grinding and seven times Clark "blew up." Finally they started the eighth try. Everything was going well. Clark was over his worst hurdle. It was Joan's turn to speak. She went up to him, gazed deeply into his eyes in that Crawford-Gable way that is known only too well to the fans. Her line went something like this: "And now I know that it is someone else . . . not 'Dill' . . . I love." Instead, she went up to him, gazed deeply, as advertised, and calmly remarked: "And now I've forgotten the darn lines."

Everybody yelled with laughter. "Okay, folks," laughed Van Dyke, "let's take off a little time and learn these lines."

SO far, Saturday afternoons are the only vacations Joan, Clark and Bob can actually count on. The reason is Mr. Van Dyke's hectic enthusiasm for the game of football. Nothing except football as played by the University of Southern California could lure Woody away from his director's chair for a precious half day. But he makes up the time by working his cast late on Friday nights. Stars as high up in the ladder of fame as Joan and Clark and Bob might kick at the idea of working until midnight every Friday night, if they were working for some other director. But Woody has won them completely. They burn the midnight oil without a single overtime complaint. In fact his enthusiasm is so contagious that they join him in his Saturday afternoon games. The day University of Southern California met University of Pittsburgh, the "Forsaking All Others" company had a special radio attachment on the set and turned it on at the completion of each scene. Montgomery and Van Dyke indulged in a little betting. It cost Bob $100 and Woody $250. When the score came in, Clark Gable remarked: "It's too bad we haven't some morgue scenes. Everybody's in a perfect mood."

It might have turned out to be the "lowest" day of the picture if Bob Montgomery had not at that very moment received an important wire. His secretary explained the wire had been sent to his home and Mrs. Montgomery had forwarded it. Bob read it and a very peculiar expression came over his face. Joan inquired solicitously: "What's the matter, bad news?"

Bob almost choked. "Oh, I wouldn't say that, only a funny coincidence. It's a wire from . . . from. . . ."

"Yes?" encouraged Joan.

IT'S from Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.," laughed Bob, "and he's inviting Betty and me to be his guests in London as soon as I complete this picture with you."

"From Douglas!" gasped Joan. "How swell!" She immediately wanted to know if Bob was going to accept the invitation and when he assured her he was, Joan launched a long list of "Be sure to tell Doug. . . ."

"If you two will forget about Douglas for a moment," broke in Clark Gable, "we can get along with our little opera here and I can get off on my own vacation four or five days ahead of time. I'm beginning to be discouraged. I understand we're only four days ahead of schedule anyway. At the rate we're going there's no reason why we shouldn't make it a solid week and set an all-Hollywood record."

"Okay," called Woody Van Dyke, the man who makes 'em fast and makes 'em love it. "Lights."

"And music," called Joan.

The famous gramophone played softly and seductively, "Over Somebody Else's Shoulder," and Joan and Clark stepped before the camera for their close-up.

"Which is what I call darned appropriate music," grinned Clark Gable.

Why Gloria Always Looks So Smart

(Continued from page 58)

Gloria with bangs. The wide sort I was so proud of at ten.

"The idea is," she was saying, "to make the eye follow a long unbroken line in your costume if you want to appear taller. Remember that slate blue wool dress of mine that has the buttons running all the way down the back from neck to hem?"

Did I know it! How could I have forgotten it. The wool is that very fine kind, as soft as silk, with shadow stripes which do a lot in the way of increasing Gloria's height. The coat is a swanky swagger affair, deeply cuffed, and lined with dark blue taffeta. And there's a vest. The most exciting red vest in captivity, imported from Switzerland and embroidered with bright woolen threads. It's only buttoned to the coat, so you can discard it any time you wish. The whole costume has a Tyrolean touch, emphasized by a hat of the same blue wool with a cocky red quill.

In fact, if you want to be strikingly smart this season your wardrobe will take on a sort of international flavor.

Consider that Russian ensemble of Gloria's. It's the answer to "How to be glamorous in broad daylight." Take the "bullet" dress alone, of gold, light-weight wool and trimmed with cartridge pleating edged in red. The blouse is typically Russian even to its stand-up collar, only Gloria has opened it because she doesn't care for high collars. Her neck, she says, is too short to wear them well. The composition buttons are also red and the

F is for Freshness

Vegetables grown especially for baby. Picked at the moment of perfection. Rushed to the cannery, where only the choicest go into Gerber cans.

V is for Vitamins

Conserved to a greater extent by Gerber processes, which exclude the oxygen that causes vitamin loss in open-kettle home cooking.

M is for Minerals

Preserved to a higher degree by Gerber moisture-regulation, retaining minerals poured off in water at home.

F is for Flavor

Retained in greatest measure by the new Gerber Shaker-Cooker. Vegetables are stirred throughout steam-cooking in sealed cans. Protects fresh flavor. Insures uniform cooking. Gives more complete sterilization without overcooking.

S is for Straining

Gerber strains through monel metal screens, five times as fine as kitchen sieves.

U is for Uniformity

Every vegetable uniformly prepared—standard in quality, consistency and flavor.

A is for Approval

Accepted by American Medical Association Committee on Foods. Prescribed by thousands of doctors.

• • •

Baby gets a complete variety of vegetables, summer and winter. No tedious cooking and straining. Mothers are freed of hours of daily drudgery. Doctor's instructions can be carried out more accurately and scientifically. Vegetables are unseasoned, so that they may be served as they are, or seasoned slightly as taste or the doctor directs.

When shopping look for the Gerber line. It means "Baby Headquarters."

Strained Tomatoes . . . Green Beans . . . Beets . . . Vegetable Soup . . . Carrots . . . Prunes . . . Peas . . . Spinach . . . 4½-oz. cans. Strained Cereal . . . 10¼-oz. cans.

Ask Your Doctor

Gerber's

9 Strained Foods for Baby

Mothers! Here's help for you, if "Baby won't eat." Scientific information . . . practical suggestions . . . telling how to establish wholesome, normal eating habits. FREE booklet. Send for it.

GERBER PRODUCTS COMPANY
FREMONT, MICHIGAN
(In Canada: Grown and Packed by Fine Foods of Canada, Ltd., Windsor, Ont.)

Please send me free copy of "Mealtime Psychology," by Dr. Lillian B. Storms. (Enclose 10c if you would like a picture of the Gerber Baby, ready for framing.)

Name.....

Address.....

City..... State.....

MM-1e

belt is dark brown leather—the same shade of brown as the fitted woolen coat. Just to make it more closely united, the coat lining is of the dress material, and that dashing Cossack hat combines the two and has a bit of the leopard trimming for good measure.

Gloria may be tiny but she's not the soft-bows-and-dimity type by any means. Take that Cambodian cocktail suit, for instance. Who but Gloria would have thought of incorporating the feeling of French Indo-China in a cocktail suit? And with such devastatingly lovely results? Black velvet creates the hat with its solitary rhinestone clip on top and the form fitting skirt. The blouse of black taffeta is threaded with white and gold stripes. And, my dears, there is a muff to match—with a zipper arrangement which opens to reveal a purse and vanity!

Exotic? Of course it is. But so is Gloria—as exotic as the moon. That's what makes her so bewitching.

"Probably it's a sign of a distorted ego," she mused, "but even as a child I never wanted to copy anything someone else had on. I always wanted to be original. I remember a little friend of mine wearing a pink silk dress to a party. I could have jumped for joy because my mother had dressed me in simple white linen with a touch of real Irish lace. Even to this day my pet hate is to see a child all dressed up in silks and taffetas. They're out of place on children.

"I've always had a peculiar feeling about clothes—as if once having worn them, they take on a part of me. Why, in the days with DeMille when I saw an extra wearing something I had used in a previous picture, I could hardly refrain from snatching it off her!"

A true individualist, this fascinating Swanson. And if you've been thinking yourself a step-child of Fortune because you belong to no set type, perish the thought. Take a cue from her. That smart distinction of hers is due to no sleight-of-hand performance you may be sure. It's a matter of simple mathematics—addition and subtraction. You add up your good points and dress 'em up. And you do your best to subtract your bad points and dress 'em down.

For instance, Gloria says frankly that her legs are too thin, her neck too short, and the bane of her life is having exceptionally wide shoulders for her height! But she dresses so cleverly that you and I and the rest of the world would never suspect it. That, my dears, is art in dressing.

And here are Gloria's guiding rules: 1. Beautiful material, in her opinion, is most important. Material that has a unique, luscious look. Do you know what one of her newest evening gowns is made of? A soft taupe fur cloth. It's really clipped chiffon that looks very fur-ish. And the magic of it is, it's as soft as a triple sheer. The square neck is in keeping with the straight lines of the dress. And it has a wide satin belt of chartreuse. The cape that goes with it is lined in the chartreuse and is trimmed with blue fox that can be worn two ways—up as a collar or down as a scrumptious new cape-edging.

Then she has a dinner gown of lace which is very flattering. It's a "spongy" black lace that molds itself to the figure beautifully. The scarf and sash that complete it are as multi-colored as a rainbow.

There's a lamb of a suit, too. And that expression is not merely one of appreciation. The suit really is made entirely of baby lamb—galyak. The period jacket has dolman sleeves and the skirt, if you please, is slashed in four places at the hem. The little trick of a hat is made of gray felt to match the suit, with a band of galyak, and the stiff veiling may be worn up as a halo or down over the face. So, if you would dress with distinction in the Swanson style, first select the loveliest, most-out-of-the-ordinary material you can find.

2. Know your lines. And there's more to this than knowing how to wear long narrow lines to make you look slim and tall; breaking your lines and rounding them to make you look short. The worst offense is exaggeration The overtight skirt that say, "Look, what big hips." And there's the matter of sleeves. Don't miss that big clothes chance! They can strike the whole note of a costume. Notice what those wide, draped sleeves do for Gloria's formal dress of silver tissue and flame chenille! The gown itself is molded, backless and has a full-length train. The silver tissue is allowed to "star" by itself without being handicapped by a single ornament. And the coat, it's one of those fitted masterpieces with a heavenly collar and super-grand sleeves of the flame chenille striped with silver. A heavy flame taffeta lining is particularly interesting. The result is the most dazzling silhouette imaginable.

3. Remember the importance of the correct color. It's color's job to make your eyes look bright, your hair shinier and your skin clearer. "For example," Gloria points out, "I love green. I'm mad about it—on other people. But somehow it does nothing at all for me so I never wear it. I think the easiest way to make a costume feel and look fresher is to wear a new hat, bag and gloves with it. Or to change them about. But one thing I object to strenuously is an 'off-color.' Like a reddish-brown hat with a gray-brown suit.

4. Do not wear cheap furs. That is, the dyed-cat variety. A few good skins cost little and do much.

Gloria goes on about jewelry. "It's odd, maybe it has something to do with my features being the definite kind, but I cannot wear 'dainty' jewelry. It's absolutely lost on me. I have to have something that's self-assertive, a striking pattern. In Paris I found a little shop where they had the most distinctive designs in the world. That's where I got my crystal bracelets . . ." Works of art, those bracelets. They combine diamonds with the crystals and they hint of a Slavic pattern. She uses them with her tunic evening dress of tigheera velvet in a glorious honey shade brushed with gold. It introduces an Empire waistline with a molded skirt and a half-length train. There's a diamond and emerald clip on the low-cut bodice and the halter neck leaves the back divinely free.

Gloria also wears those bracelets with a very formal gown of silver cloth. The front is looped very much like the back and inserted pieces flare out to form the train.

Only one "period" gown has Gloria indulged in, but it's the kind to make gentlemen fight duels over a girl. It's quite the loveliest thing these eyes have seen in a decade. Very fitted black velvet that starts flaring at the knees, with a three-quarter-length train and a dropped-shoulder neck that holds up due to ingeniously placed stays. A trimming of tea rose satin finishes the neck and flowers of the same material are tucked in the front. The bottom of the skirt which is split in four places, is lined with tiny box pleating of the satin picoted in silver.

The scintillating Swanson has chosen black velvet also for her cocktail suit. Again the skirt is molded. Again it's slashed to just above the ankle and this time there is merely a suggestion of a train. But the thrill is, it's lined with silver lamé right up to the knees. The jacket is pinched-back and double-breasted. And it has the swankiest ball buttons of rhinestone this side of Paris, as well as revers, a rolled-up collar and a muff of ermine. The hat? A black velvet modification of the beret generously dripping aigrettes in Merry-Widow fashion.

Gloria dotes on hats. You recall the old saying, a woman is just as smart as her hat? The Swanson headgear is the last word, and invariably her hat sets the keynote to her costume.

"I expect women will wear hats with long formal frocks more than they ever have. There's something about them that finishes a costume so beautifully," she explains. "To try them on you should always stand up. A hat may be overpowering or not well balanced with your dress but you won't be able to tell that sitting down.

"Curves? Why, natural curves have been 'in' since Eve but we'll never go back to the extravagant kind that grandmother knew. I like the waistline just where it is. I swear I'm going to murder the first designer who tries to lower it. There was never, never any grace to a hip-length waist and a knee-length skirt. And a graceful line is the answer to a successful frock!

What's Wrong with the Man?

(Continued from page 35)

If he appeared in a role with Constance Bennett or Jean Harlow, the press was in an uproar wondering how Jean would take his love scenes. Those favoring a more thoughtful angle took up the problem: has love hindered Franchot's career? The Winchell-columnists wanted to know if Joan and Tone would be married. Whether it was his fault or theirs, the press has definitely refused Franchot Tone a personality of his own.

Now that twenty-four hours have elapsed since our meeting I suppose it would be more colorful to say that Franchot has been libeled by the press: that he is a definite and individual person and that you are reading the truth about him here for the first time on record. As much as I came to like him before our three-hour session was over; as much interest as I felt when I perceived his "curious case," it must be stated that Tone has not the average actor's quickly ingratiating manner. In fact, Franchot's initial impression is one that is more familiar on the college campus than a movie lot. He is distinctly "upper classman."

The Tone charm is as obvious to the eye as it is to the camera. Though he is not at all like those superior young plutocrats with their penthouse swimming pools whom he consistently portrays in Crawford and Harlow movies, he is very much like those young men would be if they were real and not the phoney thing. He is taller than you might suspect and wears his excellently tailored clothes with a flare. His shoes are slightly pointed. His nails are conservatively manicured. In a town of over-dramatized Hollywood and Broadway personalities, Franchot is decidedly Bond Street.

I think he is as amazed as anyone to find that love has put him on a spot . . . professionally and personally. It is my opinion that Franchot is a young man in a dilemma. A young man with a very common problem: "What to do?" Before Hollywood and Joan hit him, Franchot was probably a very self-confident chap. His biography reveals that the world had treated him well. His success in University plays had led easily to Broadway, perhaps too easily. Because his family was well-to-do, he has never known what it means to be pinched financially. It is obvious that women would like him. Until two or three years ago, his world must have been an oyster cocktail.

Once during our talk over an M-G-M luncheon table, he said:

"I think it would be best for me right now, at this snaggy stage of my career, to go back to Broadway for a couple of shows. I've made too many pictures, too rapidly. I'm mentally tired, and that's not the right frame of mind for a fellow who has a long way to go in pictures. . . . But I don't know . . . I probably won't go."

The reason is obvious. She's lovely, she's glamorous and there's no doubt but that Joan Crawford means more to Franchot Tone at this stage of his life than two movie careers.

BUT Franchot is no fool and I very much doubt the impression that he is putty in Joan's hands. He has definitely influenced her life, quite as much as she has influenced his. Her newly acquired interest in the theatre is Tone-inspired. They spend evening after evening reading and studying together. It was Franchot who encouraged Joan to cultivate her singing voice, and at the present moment they are both studying with a famous vocalist in Los Angeles. Joan is quick to admit to old friends that she is happier in Franchot's companionship than she has been in years. That's just the point. Joan is happily in love. Franchot isn't.

He is enough of a self-preservationist to realize his career needs a great deal of attention and concentration at this "snaggy" stage. But his emotions are double-crossing him. You can't talk to him an hour without sensing his present inner struggle. No one can foresee the outcome of that struggle . . . not even Joan or Franchot. But in the meantime there is Hollywood.

"You say my performances vary from role to role?" he repeated in his polite, slightly pre-occupied manner, "I hadn't particularly noticed that my good-or-bad averages were any more conspicuous than other players'. Probably it is more noticeable because I do so many pictures. Some of these stories are strong, the directors good and the cast experienced. Others are just the opposite.

"Naturally, in the beginning I was very willing and anxious to learn. But now that I have begun to be a little more sure of my footing I'm all through blindly following the most casual direction. I want to work with my directors, but not blindly accept their every dictum. I am not in the professional spot where I can choose the parts I will or will not play before the camera. But I think I shall make an effort in the future to make these gay young millionaires of mine into human beings and not just animated cartoons. With the exception of one or two pictures, I have always portrayed the same character on the screen. Usually the gay devil with dishonest intentions toward the little chorus girl. It's been a tough problem to vary these parts so that little Oscar in the audience won't yell out at mama, 'Oh, there's that same man again!'"

Though Franchot talks easily about his career, questions about his private life and his mode of living in Hollywood leave him cold. He is openly amused at the popular theory that he was a gay young blade in his Broadway days, hitting the high-spots and breaking feminine hearts before he came to Hollywood and settled down to a monastic existence devoted exclusively to Joan Crawford and the movies. "No," he said, without any particular interest in the subject one way or the other, "I'm not a Hollywood-reformed Broadway roué. Too bad, too. That would be a good story. 'Young Rake Comes To Wild Hollywood To Take The Veil!' Has possibilities, hasn't it?"

In spite of his facetiousness, he lives a great deal more quietly in Hollywood than he did in New York. He keeps bachelor quarters in Brentwood in a small home decorated by Joan Crawford and William Haines. Every evening he dines with Joan, or she with him. They read, or go dancing, or study together.

Joan and Tone! Always it is Joan and Tone. Right now there is no Tone without Joan.

Wanted: A Remedy for Heartbreak for Kay

(Continued from page 38)

absurd!" The reporters were even more certain they were on the right track.

I was one of the fortunate few who talked to Kay the day before she left Hollywood for New York and points east. She had been giving interviews most of the day, and I was last on the list. But, during the first five minutes of our chat she gave no indication that she was anything but her normal, vital, energetic self. We were discussing her part in "British Agent," talking about how she had cut her wrist a few weeks before, talking about, oh, incidental things.

And then, in the midst of her apparent gayety, Kay passed her hands over her eyes and said, "Oh, I'm so tired." Recovering herself quickly, she added, "Really, I've been talking about myself all day—and it's a terrible strain."

But she was pretending, and I knew it. She was pretending that it was just the pace of that one day that had fatigued her, that it was the talking about herself that had wearied her. In the flash of that second when she ceased to smile and look interested, in that pitiful transparency of her little excuse, I could see that it was far more than that that had made her weary. It wasn't physical weariness that had got her. It wasn't talking about herself that had bored her. It was far more likely that it was not talking about herself—her real inner self—that had been the nerve-racking strain.

I hunched the unhappiness in her heart at that moment, and the more I have thought about it since, the more sure I

KOOL

MILDLY MENTHOLATED CIGARETTES

CORK-TIPPED

TICKLES THE SMOKER ...but not his throat

Tuck a carton of KOOLS (200 cigarettes) into any smoker's stocking and listen to the grateful "O-ohs!" and "A-ahs!" you get. The mild menthol cools the smoke and soothes the holiday-harried throat, but the fine blend of Turkish-Domestic tobaccos is fully preserved. Cork tips save lips. Coupon in each package (like a touch of Xmas all year long!) good for nationally advertised merchandise. Send for latest illustrated premium booklet. (Offer good in U.S.A. only)

SAVE COUPONS for HANDSOME PREMIUMS

Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., Louisville, Ky.

have been that just before Kay sailed for Europe, she was nearer to a collapse than she had ever been in her life. Not a physical collapse. Not a moral collapse. Far worse than either of these. it was the staunch walls of her heart that were about to cave in, a heart that has hoped for so much, worked for so much, and which has so little left!

"You must be looking forward to this marvelous trip of yours," I ventured. "Imagine! a vacation of so many months, after so many years of hard work. Aren't you thrilled, just thinking about it?"

"Oh, yes—yes," she said. "Oh, yes, it will be wonderful." In a dull mechanical tone, in words that were like a speech rehearsed, she began to tell me her plans. Her enthusiasm didn't ring true.

I left shortly after that. And I felt sorry for Kay Francis. Why? I kept hearing her happy, ambitious, self-confident words of half a year ago. "I want to be a good wife. It's important to my kind of woman." My kind of woman. Let's take a look at that for a moment, and see what it means.

Kay has always been "different," but not the kind of "different" so many actresses try to make themselves be. Kay never strives for effect in her clothes, in her make-up, in her personal life, or even on the screen. She is a woman first, and an actress second. That sounds trite, because it's been said so often about the wrong people. But it's true of Kay Francis. Kay is one of the few women on the stage and screen who looks like a lady and is one without impressing you with the fact. She doesn't put on airs for the elite, she doesn't come down to the level of others. She is always the same to everybody.

Kay is—above everything else—a feminine person, a man's woman, the romantic Dark Lady of the Sonnets. She has clung to her femininity and her softness while other actresses grow hardened by their careers, while other actresses find ruling the roost much more intriguing than being a woman.

When Kay first married she was content to be a housewife as well as a sweetheart. She and Dwight Francis lived in a small town in the Berkshires, and she was happy with her quiet, small-town life for a while. But possessing a superior intellect she soon outgrew it. Kay went to work, so that she might afford a cook. This does not mean that she sacrificed any of her femininity. As a matter of fact, her attractiveness increased by the day. She became social secretary, in turn, to Mrs. Dwight Morrow, Mrs. Minturn Pinchot and Mrs. W. K. Vanderbilt. Is it any wonder that her social graces multiplied, that she became more and more sure of herself!

Suppose you had married at seventeen, during the first flush of romance. And then, at nineteen, you realized that it had been only the first flush, that your ideas and ideals had changed, that you weren't happy in your marriage of two years before. Kay had the good sense to see that such a marriage needed ending right then and there, before any more harm had been done. So she obtained her first divorce.

Then Kay fell in love again and married again—oh, with such high hopes this time. But this marriage, too, had flaws. It was one of those secret affairs and she was separated a great deal from her husband. What a disappointment to a girl just turned twenty. The companionship that she had dreamed of, the intimacy of ideas and hopes and thoughts that she wanted so much were denied her for months at a time. It was hopeless. Kay took this second beating bravely.

At last, Kay in what she thought was her maturity, found the real love of her life. And she married him. This was no hasty young marriage. This was not puppy love. This was the marriage that really would be happy and lasting. Kay set herself at the task of keeping this marriage perfect. She counted on her past mistakes to help her. "I want to be a good wife," she said. And deep down in her heart she was confident she was.

Then suddenly there was an end. She really didn't know why, herself.

"How was it my fault? Am I incapable of knowing my own heart? Am I fickle? Am I false? Or am I incapable of holding a man's love?" These are the questions Kay must have asked of herself. What is ahead of me?"

A mind goes in circles when it thinks like that. How it can help thinking like that, I don't know. If Kay had a child perhaps her heartbreak would be less. If she had a religion that, too, would be something to console her. Or if her career were her most intense interest, that would help.

But Kay hasn't the mania for money or for the bright lights of success. These things are really of little comfort to her. If only she could be blasé! She could then shrug her shoulders and say, "Well, better luck next time!" But she can't be like that.

Yet she refuses to let anyone in on her sadness. You only catch it, as I caught it, in one of those rare moments when Kay lets her brave barriers down. I have heard her say that the most repulsive person is not a man with a big belly, but a man who bellyaches in a big way. Kay has always had a gallant attitude toward hardships. She's had them, but few people know about them, because she bluffed her way through. I am convinced that she was bluffing to the last and that she just got away in time. A few more weeks of trying to hide her heartbreak in Hollywood and she would have been a nervous wreck. You can't even cry in your own room out here, for there's always a servant who'd be glad to give you away. But on a boat, with the cabin door locked for hours at a time, who's to tell whether she cried or not!

The odd thing is that Kay went to Europe after the break-up of her first marriage. Her travels enriched and rested her that first time. No doubt she is counting on them to give her a new vision and a happier perspective again. What she needs most of all is renewed confidence in herself, in love, in life. I hope she finds it. Maybe she'll marry Mr. Chevalier. Maybe she won't. Maybe she'll never marry again. I, for one, certainly don't pretend to know, or have any way of knowing. I don't believe Kay even knows herself. This much is certain: she won't come back to face Hollywood's firing squad until she's got her heart patched up so the cracks don't show!

Maybe Kay wonders if her birth-date hasn't something to do with all her "unluckiness at love." In Oklahoma City an actress by the name of Katherine Clinton gave birth to her first child. It was raining when Katherine, after the ordeal of the birth, first opened her eyes. She looked out of the window, and then she looked at the calendar. She began crying softly, and, like the rain outside, the tears ran down her cheeks as she clutched her baby to her. "Never mind, little Kay," she said.

The day was Friday, the thirteenth.

The Johnny Mack Browns threw a large welcome-home party for the Charlie Farrells. Charlie, you know, just got back from England where he made "Abdul Hamid." Mary Pickford's here, too, looking more youthful and beautiful than ever.

INFORMATION DESK

DOROTHY DOUGLAS, Montgomery, Ala.; HELEN ASHE, Hammond, Ind.; ANNA OBERRITTER, Chicago, Ill.—All sorts of gold medals and things to you three for your observation, appreciation and good taste. Robert Donat is definitely somebody worth asking about, as all who saw "The Count of Monte Cristo" will agree. Born in Withington, Manchester, England, on March 18, 1905, he gave evidence of his acting ability at an early age. He made his professional debut in 1921, after which he spent several years in stock and repertory theatres and with companies touring the English provinces. "Knave and Queen" was his first London success which was followed by many more. He had just completed a seven-months' engagement in the principal role of the London hit, "The Sleeping Clergyman," when he received a cable from Edward Small, production chief of Reliance Pictures, asking him to take the lead in "Monte Cristo." Small had remembered his excellent performance as Thomas Culpepper in "Henry VIII," and knew he was the ideal actor to play Edmond Dantes. He was right. Donat has brown eyes and auburn hair, stands 6 feet tall, weighs 165 pounds, is modest, soft-spoken and has a grand sense of humor. His favorite foods are English roast beef, American ham and eggs, bean soup and apple pie. He gets a great kick out of the way Americans pronounce his name—Doan-ah is correct. Besides "Henry VIII" he has appeared in three English-made films. He is not under contract to any American company, although "The Count of Monte Cristo" was made in this country, and released through United Artists. He will appear next in a Gaumont-British production, "Thirty-nine Steps."

MRS. ALICE JORGENSEN, Washington, N. J.—Mary Pickford has not taken Doug Fairbanks back into her good graces yet—whether he wants to be taken back is another question. Mary is 41 and Douglas is just 10 years older. Mary may appear in a picture soon and Doug has just finished "The Return of Don Juan," an English-made opus.

A RAFT FAN, Chicago, Ill.; ANOTHER RAFT FAN, Morehead, Ky.; J. J. P., Gananoque, Ont., Canada; ANDREW LETO, Chicago, Ill.; VICTORIA CHINSA, Chicago, Ill.—George Raft was born in New York's "Hell's Kitchen," on September 27, of French, German and Italian parentage. When he was 15, George decided to become a boxer. During the next two years he fought as a bantam weight in the leading clubs of New York without much success. In 25 bouts he was knocked out 7 times and after his last beating, quit the game to avoid disfigurement. He next tried baseball as a career, and was signed as an outfielder on the Springfield (Mass.) Eastern League team but was dropped after two seasons because his batting average wasn't so hot. He returned to New York and took up "hoofing" at tea dances, after which he tried playing in stock companies in small towns and then in New York for four years with his dancing partner, Elsie Pilcer, in musical shows. Europe came next. He was the highest paid American dancer who ever appeared before Continental audiences and became known as one of the world's fastest dancers. The Prince of Wales learned some new steps from him and gave him a cigarette lighter which he treasures highly. On his return to New York, he danced in numerous night clubs and motion picture theatres until he was induced to go to Hollywood to take a part in "Quick Millions." His gangster portrayal in "Scarface" was what brought him recognition and a Paramount contract. He is 5 feet 10 inches tall, weighs 155 pounds, has an olive complexion, black hair and brown eyes. His hobbies are baseball, dancing and boxing. He is married, but separated from his wife. He and Virginia Pine are going places together frequently. He has just completed "Limehouse Nights" with Anna May Wong, and is scheduled to appear in "Rhumba" with Carole Lombard sometime soon. You can write him at Paramount Studios, Hollywood, Calif.

WALTER RICHTER, JR., New York City—Right you are. Ramon Novarro and Lupe Velez were in "Laughing Boy."

ROSE CRANETTI, Trenton, N. J.—Robert Armstrong played the part of Phil in "The Hell Cat" opposite Ann Sothern, and you can write him at Monogram Studios, 1040 N. Las Palmas Ave., Hollywood, Calif. However, he was not in "Woman Condemned." Perhaps you are thinking of Richard Hemingway.

C. M. H., New York City. In the 1930 version of "Tol'able David" the following players were in the cast: Richard Cromwell, Noah Beery, Joan Peers, H. B. Walthall, George Duryea, Edmund Breese, Barbara Bedford, Helen Ware, Harlan E. Knight, Peter Richmond, James Bradbury, Sr. and Richard Carlyle.

H. M. L., Regina, Sask., Canada; HELEN SCHROEDER, Toronto, Canada—Gertrude Michael was born in Talladega, Alabama, on a June 1st about 23 years ago. She is 5 feet 5 inches tall, weighs 120 pounds and has light brown hair and blue eyes. She was educated at Converse College, Spartanburg, S. C., the University of Alabama and the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music. Swimming, tennis and badminton are her favorite sports, and reading and quaint arts are her hobbies. She started a little theater movement in her home town and founded radio station WFDA. She joined the Stuart Walker stock company and then headed for Broadway. Her first movie experience came as a lark at Paramount's Long Island Studio where she played Richard Arlen's fiancée in "Wayward." In December, 1933, she signed a contract with that company. She lives with her mother and brother and her pet Chow. She plays the violin when she's tired and the piano when she's happy. She is particularly fond of Oriental food and her pet aversion is giggling women. Her next picture is "Menace" with John Lodge and Paul Cavanagh, after which she may be in Max Baer's "Kids on the Cuff."

R. W. SWANSON, Racine, Wis.; HELEN CARPENTER, Clifton, Tex.—Here goes for that mighty man, Nat Pendleton, which is his real name, by the way. This 200 pound baby was born in Davenport, Iowa, August 9th, 1903, and since then has attained the height of 6 feet. His eyes are dark green and his hair dark brown. He was educated in the public schools of New York City, and at Columbia College where he was captain of the wrestling team and on the public speaking team. He left school to go to Portugal and Spain where he remained for 4 years. In 1921 he returned to America and in 1925 became vice-president of the Bernarr Macfadden Feature Productions. As a wrestler he attained great renown, having won the A. A. U. championship three times, the Metropolitan A. A. title six times and the Olympic championship once. Whataman! He is still very much interested in it, and for exercise he wrestles, tennises and does road work. He is a semi-vegetarian, and among his favorite diversions are watching stock market reports, crap shooting, playing chess and driving fast cars. He speaks Spanish, French and English, does not smoke, has a pet raccoon, sings baritone and plays the banjo. His next picture will be "Repeal."

BETTY KREILE, New Haven, Conn.—Yours was an interesting question and I'm glad you asked it. Whether these books are in the public libraries or not, I couldn't say, but they ought to be. The books you mentioned were written by the following authors: "Madame Du Barry" by Edward Chodorov; "Of Human Bondage" by W. Somerset Maugham; "State Fair" by Phil Stong; "British Agent" by R. H. Bruce Lockhart; "The Green Hat" by Michael Arlen; "The Fountain" by Charles Morgan; "One More Spring" by Robert Nathan; "Work of Art" by Sinclair Lewis; "Life Begins at Forty" by Walter Pitkin; "Little Man, What Now?" by Hans Fallada.

BETTY HALL, Newark, N. J.; EDWARD J. NORRIS, Bronx, N. Y.—So you want me to talk, eh? And about Henry Wilcoxon? Very well—and I'm glad you asked. To start with, he was born in Dominica in the British West Indies on September 8, and was educated at Harrison College, Bridgetown, Barbados, and at Woolmere College, Kingston, Jamaica. When he was 16 he hied himself to England where he became a clerk in a milling firm, from which post he rose to buyer on the Corn Exchange. Following this he got a job with a tailor, but since he was ambitious to become an actor he made a stab at it with great success. He appeared in numerous stage plays and pictures in England, and was brought to America in January, 1934, by Cecil B. DeMille to take the part of Marc Antony in "Cleopatra." He is an excellent artist, and had an exhibition of his work in London. He is a capable amateur boxer, a fine swimmer and an excellent pilot. He is an avid collector of antiques. He is 6 feet, 2 inches tall, weighs 190 pounds, has blue-green eyes and brown hair. As a child he was nicknamed "Biff" because of his fighting ability. He is about 29. His next role will be as Richard the Lion Hearted in DeMille's "The Crusades."

Your questions will be answered in this magazine. Please do not ask questions which require too much research or which infringe upon good taste. Address: The Information Desk, MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Will he remember your EYES?

He can't forget their beauty if you use

Maybelline

EYE BEAUTY AIDS

● More than any other feature, your eyes express YOU. When he meets you, the first thing he looks at is your eyes. If they are beautiful and attractive, they will be what he remembers most when he thinks of you . . . make them unforgettably alluring with the pure, harmless Maybelline Eye Beauty Aids.

Blend a soft, colorful shadow on your eyelids with Maybelline Eye Shadow, and see how the color and sparkle of your eyes are instantly intensified. Form graceful, expressive eyebrows with the smooth marking Maybelline Eyebrow Pencil. Now darken your lashes into the appearance of long, dark, lustrous fringe, and presto . . . you will truly have eyes he cannot forget!

Keep your lashes soft and silky with the pure Maybelline Eyelash Tonic Cream, and be sure to brush and train your brows with the dainty, specially designed Maybelline Eyebrow Brush. All Maybelline Eye Beauty Aids may be had in purse sizes at all leading 10c stores. Insist on genuine Maybelline products to be assured of highest quality and absolute harmlessness.

The Approved Mascara

Tested and Approved Good Housekeeping Bureau

BLACK, BROWN AND BLUE

BLACK AND BROWN

COLORLESS

BLACK OR WHITE BRISTLES

BLUE, BROWN, BLUE-GREY, VIOLET AND GREEN

Sad, Shy and Meek. (Oh, Yeah?)

(Continued from page 34)

to me.

In "Their Big Moment," for instance, a trained seal played an important role. ZaSu got together with the other members of the cast and decided to frame Slim Summerville. (Slim is her arch-enemy where practical jokes are concerned—more about that later.) While they were sitting around between scenes, ZaSu, Kay Johnson, Julie Haydon and William Gaxton would drop remarks for Slim to overhear. They would speak of the consummate ferocity of seals, of how they take intense dislikes to certain people, follow them around for days, and then, at the right moment, strike out to kill. They spoke of strong men who were torn to ribbons by their ferocious fangs. After a few days of that sort of conversation, they had the fear of seals thoroughly implanted in Slim's mind.

Then ZaSu slipped up behind Slim when he wasn't looking and dropped a fish into his back pocket.

The seal, sniffing the tantalizing scent of a meal, began to follow Slim around the set, waddling along on its flippers. Slim would look at it and the animal would move towards him. At first he tried to act unconcerned. After a couple of hours, though, he began to get uneasy. If he walked fast, the seal speeded up and came right after him. He began to walk faster and faster. Finally, he started doing a regular marathon around the set, with the seal in hot pursuit. A stepladder offered the only safety in sight, or so he thought, and he dashed up it and perched himself on top. Ah, but it was a trained seal, quite able to climb ladders. It started up after him. In despair, Slim searched his pockets for something to throw at it, and of course found the fish, a little the worse for wear by that time.

Friend ZaSu was nowhere in sight when he came down off the ladder.

Why she goes in so heavily for the denizens of the briny deep, in these merry little pranks of hers, I have no idea. She pulled another fish trick on William Gaxton during the making of the same picture. Not with the same fish, however. This one was a goldfish. I suppose she bought it at a pet shop and carried it out to the studio on purpose—bowl, water, fish food and all. At any rate, Gaxton was doing a scene as a magician. He has a great trick, in which he places a small cube inside a mysterious box, collapses the box, and shows that the cube has disappeared. He rehearsed it several times for the camera, and finally they were ready for the take. Then, when nobody was looking, ZaSu slipped her pet goldfish into the box in place of the cube. Gaxton did his stunt, and, when the box was supposed to collapse and be empty, out flopped the fish. The expression of fury and bewilderment on the would-be magician's face was so good that they've kept it for the picture, although you'll see it used in another sequence.

The following stunt is an old habit with innocent-looking ZaSu, too. She's been doing it for years and still people go on saying what a quiet little angel she is. I remember a picture, a year or so ago, in which her husband was supposed to kiss her goodbye, pick up his hat from the table, and leave the house. It was a highly dramatic scene which was supposed to make people cry. Everything went beautifully until said husband, after saying his heartbroken, "Goodbye, my darling, my beloved," tried to pick up the hat. Such an expression of consternation spread over his face then, that the director instantly called "Cut!" The hat was nailed down to the table with four-inch spikes. Innocent little ZaSu, again. Innocent like the cat that ate the canary.

For that matter, her little stunt in "Dames" wasn't so innocent, either. If you saw the picture, you remember that Hugh Herbert was a victim, willing or unwilling, of hiccoughs. It troubled him for days at a time. Nothing would cure it but a certain Golden Elixir, ninety-nine and forty-four one-hundredths per cent pure grain alcohol, guaranteed to lift the head like a balloon and send it bumping around the ceiling. Hugh had to carry a bottle of it with him wherever he went. Well, when they were taking the scenes they used ginger ale for the Elixir. Hugh happens to like ginger ale, so it was fine for him. And for everybody else.

Imagine how dismayed the cast was when, in one of the final scenes, Hugh lifted the bottle to his lips, took a good swallow, screwed up his face, sprayed Golden Elixir all over the place, and began to cough as though he were strangling. The camera stopped and the director ran to him and asked him what was the matter. Hugh seemed to have difficulty answering, but after a prop boy brought him a drink of water he was able to explain. It seems some blankety-blank practical joker had dumped the ginger ale out of the bottle and filled it with vinegar instead.

ZaSu was sitting on a chair offstage, quietly sewing.

It was much the same when Jack Pearl came out to Hollywood to make "Meet the Baron." Little did Jack know what he was stepping into when the studio decreed Miss Pitts as his screen sweetheart. Naturally, he was nervous and excited, since it was his first picture. He memorized his lines assiduously, and, before each scene, studied his cues until he could say them "beckwartz und vorwartz." Then they would both go into the scene and, at the moment she was supposed to give the Baron a cue, ZaSu would do something entirely different—stare innocently off the set, or drop her handkerchief, or sneeze. At first he thought it was his fault and grew terribly worried. Finally, he spoke to her about it.

ZaSu drew herself up to her full height and stared at him freezingly. "Sir," she said icily, "I am a great artist. When I throw myself into my role, it is impossible for me to know what I am doing. I live my part. I do whatever the character must do."

Pearl apologized profusely. Only then did ZaSu break down and admit that she was kidding him. After that Jack was almost as bad as she was. Between the two of them they disrupted the whole crew, by making them laugh so much that they could hardly stand up. The set became so popular with visitors from other sound stages that a policeman had to be stationed at the door so they could get some work done.

You will probably be horrified to hear, that is, if you are one of those who believes ZaSu is as dumb as she looks in her roles, that your shy little violet is also a scandalous card shark. Where she acquired her amazing knowledge, no one knows, but she can beat all comers at everything from casino to pinochle. She's usually to be found at a table, just outside the camera-lines, modestly playing a lonely game of solitaire with downcast eyes. Other actors, working with her for the first time, sooner or later suggest a game, by way of making friends, and the ride is on. Roland Young, for instance, is an ace bridge player. He sat down for a few minutes with ZaSu as an opponent, while making "Love, Honor and Oh Baby," and got up minus exactly fifty dollars. ZaSu pleaded with him the entire time they were working in the picture, but she couldn't trap him into another game. She returned his fifty, the day the picture finished, as a good-bye gift.

The lengths to which she and Slim Summerville go to make each other miserable must curdle the blood of the supervisor, who has to sign the cost sheets for the amount of film they waste spoiling each other's takes. When Slim is ready for a close-up, ZaSu lurks out of camera range making faces at him, sticking out her tongue and looking cross-eyed and wiggling her ears, to try to make him laugh.

Sidney Blackmer took Suzanne Kaaren to the Sunday night vaudeville show at the Wilshire Ebell Club Theatre, where many of the old headliners are doing their stuff.

I remember once when Slim decided to get even with her. In a scene where he was supposed to shake hands with her, he shook hands with his fist full of jello. But ZaSu merely waited until the next take, when his face was turned away from the camera. Then, while he had to stand still and make love to her, under pretense of stroking his face with tender affection she smeared him from chin to eyes with whipped cream borrowed from the studio commissary.

As the farmer said when the tornado swept his house into the next county, "I may be wrong, but I seen it with my own eyes." I'm sorry if I have to disillusion all the folks who think ZaSu is a timid soul, too shy to go out in company, but when you've seen her pull the tricks I've seen her pull you kinda doubt it. To me, sad to state, shy little Miss Pitts is a combination of Jackie Cooper, the Marx Brothers, and Hell on wheels.

Beauty Advice

(Continued from page 8)

bars of soap, talcum powder (one that smells like an old-fashioned bouquet), and an especially generous jar of cleansing cream which she can simply slather on her face for the nightly make-up removing process, and let soak into the pores while she is lolling in the tub. That reminds us to remind you—and you—and you—that the way you remove your make-up every night is of as much importance as the way you put it on every morning. Use cleansing cream and soap, both, and tissues to remove the cream, and a nice rough washcloth for exercising your face when applying the soap.

Probably all of us have a "Carole" among our friends, who just seems to "have everything," and we can't think of a thing to get for her. She can't fail to go for the de luxe manicuring set we discovered the other day, or the trick miniature size that can be tucked in the purse.

Speaking of manicuring, let's talk about giving Santa a hand where you yourself are concerned, for a change. I do think liquid nail polish in all its gay and even gaudy shades is almost an invention of the Gods for enlivening the spirit of womankind. There's a shade for every mood and every costume. (And painting your toenails the same shade does make you feel deliciously wicked.) Rosy fingertips will contribute to your rosy outlook on life as they make themselves charmingly conspicuous over the Christmas dinner table, or over your partner's shoulder as you dance the Old Year away. We believe in treating yourself to a whole array of shades, what with miniature bottles available at such miniature prices. Women ought to have more color and variety at their fingertips between the monotony of doing up the dishes three times a day—or taking three hours of dictation from the boss. Of course, you should harmonize your nail polish to your natural coloring and to your costume, as a general rule, but we don't care if you break the rule once in a rare while if it amuses you.

Don't, please don't, be guilty of chipped and cracked nail polish! It takes a chip right out of your spirit of well-groomedness if you are.

Do you find yourself clutching things with necessary vigor these days . . . your purse while you're Christmas shopping, or even your morning cup of coffee . . . your fingers all scrootched up as though daring you to pry them away? Then get yourself in hand and relax for a moment. Let your hands swing lazily from your wrists, as though you hadn't another bit of work to do in a fortnight. In fact, relaxing completely every once in a while is one of the best tonics to the spirit we know. Imagine you are playing in some scene where the heroine does nothing, and does it beautifully.

You're going to be greeting a lot of old friends and meeting new acquaintances, this holiday season. And shaking hands is an art, you know, that deserves more cultivation, especially on the part of the hostess. When you shake hands, the arm should be held slightly higher than the hand, the wrist bent just a little bit. Hold the fingers close together. A warm, firm handclasp is to be desired; a limp handshake is as bad as a dish-rag brought into the living room, and a highly arched wrist belongs back in the mauve decade.

Be extravagant with your hand lotion application this winter. Rough, scratchy hands are repulsive to look at and to feel. If once every few nights you will dig into the cold cream jar and massage your hands with the cream, then pop them into cotton gloves and hop into bed, you'll have your hands looking as though they received a hundred dollars a week for just doing nothing . . . a grand aid to your spirit.

In the matter of greetings, if your lips are inclined to leave marks on Cousin Lou's cheeks, do write us for the name of an indelible lipstick that will cling with the faithfulness of a Clark Gable admirer.

Don't let yourself get frowsy, either in person or spirit, during these busy holiday weeks. The business of being well groomed is like the business of preparing for Christmas, something of a bother but worth all the trouble. Be extravagant in the time you allot to your grooming and dressing. That extra five minutes in bed in the morning won't do your soul nearly as much good as if you had spent it in good grooming.

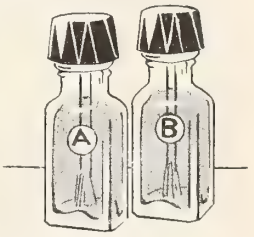
Color has a delightful effect on our personalities. You'll want to give your lingerie frequent color baths. Touch up those collars and cuffs, too. If you're tired of white, try peach or aquamarine blue; if you're tired of pink, try wood-rose or one of those heavenly new rust shades. A nice little array of dipping dyes is fun to have around. If you have a limited clothes budget, a dark dress with collar and cuff changes is your very best bet.

When you are perfectly groomed, your skin smooth and clear, your make-up carefully applied, your hair neatly and becomingly arranged, your hands as beautifully cared for as Carole Lombard's, your collars and cuffs fresh and bright, and the seams in your stockings entirely straight, then you can forget all about yourself.

Write Mary Biddle for her list of gift suggestions, and enclose stamped, addressed envelope. She will be glad to help you with any and all of your beauty problems, too.

Watch for MODERN SCREEN'S big contest announcement in the next issue.

162 HANDS TALK IN 7-DAY MANICURE TEST



Test proves Chic Nail Polish equal to "salon" polishes costing 75c or more

This test was made with Chic, costing only 10c, on one hand and an expensive "salon" polish on the other. The polishes were supplied in plain unlabeled bottles, simply marked "A" and "B." The women testing them did not know which was which.

"A"—expensive "salon" polish

"B"—Chic Nail Polish

After 7 days' wear the results show—

81% find Chic equal to costly salon polishes or better . . . and two out of three of them say Chic is actually better and give definite reasons for saying so!

This test proved to them that Chic Nail Polish applied evenly and did not crack or peel . . . that Chic retained its color . . . that its luster was of lasting quality.

You can make this simple test yourself and discover a really fine polish for only 10c.

5 CHIC SHADES

CLEAR
PINK
CORAL
RUBY DEEP

•ALSO•
Chic Creme Polish
Chic Cuticle Remover
Chic Polish Remover
Chic Oily Polish Remover

AT THE 10c STORES

What Will Happen to Them in 1935?

(Continued from page 29)

ally, she will make at least two major changes during the year. Toward the end of the year, she will surprise Hollywood by doing a "Garbo"—retiring into herself.

If Neil Hamilton is cast in an aviation picture, he will have a serious air accident. In the event that he has a double for all his work, the double will be killed or seriously injured. Because of his gallantry to the opposite sex, there is grave danger of a scandal, which will be unfounded but rather unpleasant just the same.

The year will be one of emotional earthquakes for Kay Francis, culminating in her marriage to an international screen star. The marriage will prove disastrous, for Kay and the man she will marry are not suited to each other as husband and wife. She will go to England to make one picture, but it will not be a success.

Maurice Chevalier will marry a well known brunette screen star, but it will end unhappily. Physically, he is threatened with serious injury, probably to his legs.

Bing Crosby's career on the screen will hit a rapid and almost complete decline in 1935, and he will return entirely to the radio. He will receive and accept an offer to make one picture in England. His personal life will be happy. During mid-year, however, one of his children will have a serious illness, but it will not die. An elderly person in his family will undergo a very serious illness.

FOR Miriam Hopkins, 1935 will be the biggest year of her professional career. Her love-life will continue to be happy. The love that is hers will continue through the next three years, but she will never marry the man.

For Carole Lombard, there will be rumors that she and Bill Powell will be reconciled, but this will not happen. She will, however, marry a man outside of the movie industry and it will be a happy marriage. During the spring months, she will be in a hospital for several weeks.

Following the unfounded rumors of his reconciliation with Carole Lombard, William Powell will marry a woman who is not an actress but in some manner connected with the picture industry. However, the marriage will not be a happy one.

For Jean Harlow, this year will be the happiest year of her life, professionally; the unhappiest, emotionally. She will have an offer of marriage from a prominent producer whose wife will die early in 1935. She will be in love with another man, but in the end will marry still another —a screen star, not with M-G-M. The marriage will not be happy. Jean Harlow will never in her life know the happiness of successful marriage.

As to Herbert Marshall's personal life, the stars are in conflict. There are two women, one is Edna Best, his estranged wife; the other is a screen star. Before the end of the year, he will have done one of two things, married the latter or become reconciled with the former. If he goes back to Edna, happiness will be his. If he continues with the other woman, great emotional grief is in store for him. Professionally, he will have a splendid year.

As for Gloria Swanson, under the guidance of Irving Thalberg she will do work on the screen that will be marvelous, and will far transcend anything she has ever done before. Emotionally, she faces a year of great stress, during which marriage is indicated, but not certain.

Adolphe Menjou's health is seriously threatened during late summer or early fall. Illness also menaces an older person in the family, but whether it is a relative of Menjou or his wife, Verree Teasdale, cannot he said definitely at this writing. He and Verree will continue happily married, and the stars indicate the likelihood of a child.

George Raft has passed the peak of his screen career and 1935 will see a definite decline in his box-office value. He will not be divorced because his wife will oppose any effort along that line.

FOR Sylvia Sidney, Dareos predicts marriage. However, she is a careerist, and marriage will be secondary in her scheme of life, with her screen work taking precedence at all times. Her marriage will be neither outstandingly successful nor downright unhappy, for it will not play a large enough part in her life to assume such magnitude. During the latter part of the year, she is threatened with a nervous breakdown.

Mae West's career as a screen star is at an end, but an even greater career as writer and producer of movies and stage plays lies before her. There will be no marriage for her in 1935. An attempt will be made to kidnap her or harm her, by the underworld interests she antagonized recently. In 1936 she will have one great stage success.

For Clark Gable, Dareos foretells that in the middle of the year, a designing mother will thrust her daughter into the limelight of a sensational scandal in which Gable will be falsely named. He will be completely vindicated but not until after much sensational publicity. Professionally, it will be a year of great success. Sorrow threatens his home through serious illness of a close member of the family.

For Barbara Stanwyck, there will be a period during the year in which she and Frank Fay will be on the verge of divorce, but there will be a complete reconciliation. She and Frank will adopt a red-headed baby girl. Barbara will make two outstanding pictures in 1935.

Scandal overhangs Dick Powell as the result of a yacht trip he will take. The year is emotionally involved for him, with possibility of marriage, which, however, would prove unhappy. Dick Powell was born to be a lover but not a husband.

For Jimmy Cagney, there is certainty of his attempted kidnapping during the middle or latter part of the year, while taking a trip east.

For Ruby Keeler, Dareos sees grave danger. When in New York, either in the spring or fall, a former friend now turned enemy, will make an effort to harm her, either physically or through reputation. She and Al Jolson will continue happily married. No children in 1935.

The Leslie Howard divorce whispers will not come true. Scandal looms, involving a blonde girl. Will make a picture in London; he will also do a play there.

EDMUND LOWE will marry in 1935. He will first have a flaming romance with a blonde screen actress who has recently divorced a famous screen star, but will later marry a woman not connected with the screen world. She will be socially prominent and wealthy, and the marriage will be a happy one.

For Loretta Young, the month of May will begin the three most successful and happy years of her life. Until then, 1935 is fraught with professional and emotional complexities for her. Marriage is indicated for her either in 1935 or 1936, but she should wait until 1936, for marriage before that time would be disastrous. She is faced with a nervous breakdown early in the year.

Janet Gaynor will marry, probably early in the year. The marriage will be happy, but at the same time, it will mark the beginning of the end of her career. By the end of the year her career will be definitely on the wane.

John Gilbert is finished as a screen star. There will be talk of his reconciliation with Virginia Bruce, but the stars say nothing will come of it. The year will be very unhappy for him, both professionally and personally.

Shirley Temple's amazing screen career will continue to skyrocket. There will be an attempt to kidnap her.

Unlike Shirley Temple, Jackie Cooper's screen career is, if not completely ended, at least at a temporary stop.

For Joan Crawford, 1935 will be romantically spectacular. She will not marry Franchot Tone, but a black-haired foreign star. She will strive for stage success, and will go abroad for training in this field, for which she will eventually desert the screen. In fact, 1935 will see no particularly notable screen work on her part. She will remain on friendly terms with Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., but there will never be any love reconciliation between them.

Pola Negri will be one of the 1935's screen sensations. Not until April will she be heard of professionally, but then her career will suddenly take strides that will amaze the screen world. Three amazing years will follow. Early in 1936, she will marry.

Myrna Loy will be Hollywood's most sensational screen star in 1935. She will receive but refuse a marriage proposal from a foreign nobleman.

For Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks, the road is rocky and the path is steep. They'll never be entirely reconciled, although they will remain friends. Mary will never make another movie, but will be a success in writing and directing. During the year, she will find emotional unhappiness through her association with a man born in August. Douglas' screen career is at a standstill.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS, JR., will remain in England, where he will marry an actress, but the marriage will not turn out happily. He will make several excellent but not sensational pictures.

For Ronald Colman, 1935 will be his best professional year in some time. There will be marriage rumors, but he will not marry until late in 1936, at the earliest. His wife will not be in pictures.

The Gary Coopers will have a baby. Gary's professional life will be one of pronounced ups and downs during 1935.

Constance Bennett faces emotional upheavals in 1935. During the year, a new marriage is possible, to a man born in December. It will be her happiest marriage if she weds him. The year will see the definite beginning of her screen career's decline.

Here is what the famous Dareos predicts for a score of other screen idols:

Charlie Farrell is definitely through as a screen bet and will become a director in 1935. Ann Harding will make one of the greatest pictures of the year. Harry Bannister faces the likelihood of a serious air accident. Norma Shearer will have a year of professional success, but personal unhappiness. Fredric March faces unpleasant gossip in late spring and a return to the stage in 1936. Jeanette MacDonald will marry and will suffer a jewel robbery. Charlie Chaplin will complete a picture and the fact of his marriage to Paulette Goddard will be definitely established. Lupe Velez' career will be threatened by a period of sensational publicity that will do her no good. Dolores Del Rio will go to South America and co-direct and star in a picture there. Katharine Hepburn's stars indicate marriage for her but if she does marry she will not be happy. Marion Davies will be one of the year's sensations with an amazingly outstanding picture. Jean Parker will have a great romance which will end in a sudden crash instead of matrimony. In 1936 she will marry. Her career will be successful throughout 1935.

(Continued from page 28)

What Dareos Prophesied	What Happened
	Moore and Shirley Temple were perhaps the only sensational, "overnight" stars, there are many others who were outstanding: Francis Lederer, Jean Muir, Josephine Hutchinson, Jean Parker, Binnie Barnes, John Beal, Fred Astaire, Charles Boyer, Pat Paterson, Robert Donat.
Joan Crawford: 1934 the peak of her career. May turn to stage in 1935. Rather unsettled love-life. No marriage.	100 per cent correct. She is way up thar on the cinematic ladder, and the theatre which she has built for herself proves a yen for the stage. There have been rumors of a break-up with Tone from time to time. Correct on marriage, too.
Franchot Tone: No marriage for him and Joan.	Right again, Dareos. Joan's been denying that she'll marry him. Soooooooo.
Mae West: To remain single. Career to continue brilliantly. Underworld plot to put her on spot. Possible auto accident.	True, with exception of accident at this writing.
Greta Garbo: No future greatness for her. Will retire in 1934 or 1935.	Interest in La Garbo seems to have waned; "Queen Christina" didn't do so well at the box office either. 1935 will tell whether the last statement is correct.
Carole Lombard: A year of romance. Marriage to someone outside the industry.	Correct so far. There was Russ Columbo, and her "ex," Bill Powell is still attentive. Marriage prediction untrue as this is written.
William Powell: Marriage to non-professional.	Incorrect as this is written.
Clara Bow: To have a baby.	Correct.
Jean Harlow: May lose something she now holds dear.	Correct. Her marriage was wrecked by divorce.
Constance Bennett: Possibility of divorce in 1934.	There have been divorce rumors at various times during the year.
Charlie Chaplin: Is already married to Paulette Goddard. Will make a picture.	It is said that they are married. Is making a picture.
Adolphe Menjou: To marry.	Correct.
Ann Harding: To announce her engagement.	Incorrect as this is written.
Jimmy Cagney: To end his career in 1934 or 1935 by his own choice. Marriage to continue happily.	We'll have to wait till 1935 for the answer to the first prediction. Second okay.
Adrienne Ames: Her happiness won't last.	There have been break-up rumors.
Lilian Harvey: To return to Europe.	Her Fox contract has lapsed and she may return to Europe.
Douglas Fairbanks, Sr.: To face heavy reverses and failing health.	The linking of his name with scandal and the constant uncertainty of his marriage to Mary Pickford were rather unpleasant for him.
Doug Fairbanks, Jr.: To return to America. To have a romance.	He did come over here for a while and the Gertrude Lawrence rumors still persist.
Mary Pickford: There will be sorrow and tragedy. Will turn to writing. Picture in 1934.	Undoubtedly her marital uncertainty has caused her much sorrow. She has done quite a lot of writing and has plans for another picture.
Janet Gaynor: Marriage or engagement in 1934.	Incorrect as this is written.
Katharine Hepburn: A great personal sorrow for her. Will be teamed with Bill Powell. Throat trouble.	Her divorce. No sign of her being teamed with Powell and we haven't heard about a throat affliction.
Stu Erwin and June Collyer: To have twins.	Incorrect.
Ruth Chatterton: To divorce.	Righto, Dareos.
Charlie Farrell: Renewed success on the screen. Marital happiness.	There was a separation rumor but the difficulty apparently blew over. The pace of his screen career doesn't seem to have quickened.
Marie Dressler: Her health will be in great danger.	Dareos told Mr. Lang that Miss Dressler would die, but in respect to her he asked us not to publish it.
Gary Cooper: Will remain a bachelor.	Very wrong.
Clark Gable: His marriage will last.	Correct.
Spencer Tracy: Professionally, things are bright, but romantically, there are clouds.	His career is definitely on the up-grade but his love-life has not been happy.

MEN . . . !

In the February issue of MODERN SCREEN this fascinating story which reveals certain stars' experiences with various men will be concluded. Read what The Girl With The Strange Beauty and The Girl Of The Orchids have to say Ashamed of Your Looks?

Sallow Skin?
Blemishes? Headaches?

NEW BEAUTY of skin and complexion

This Simple, Pleasant Way

WHY be ashamed of a blotchy, muddy, unattractive skin when this simple treatment will do so much for you?

Skin troubles indicate a disordered condition of your system—usually intestinal sluggishness or a run-down nervous state. Your trouble is internal and should be treated internally. That is just what Yeast Foam Tablets will help you to do.

These pleasant tablets of scientifically pasteurized yeast contain concentrated stores of the essential vitamins B and G. These precious nutritive elements strengthen your digestive and intestinal organs, give tone and vigor to your nervous system.

With the true causes of your trouble corrected, eruptions, blemishes and poor color disappear. Your skin becomes clear and smooth, your complexion fresh and glowing.

Any druggist will supply you with Yeast Foam Tablets. The 10-day bottle costs only 50c. Get one today and see what this remarkable corrective food will do for you!

YEAST FOAM TABLETS

FREE MAIL THIS COUPON TODAY
You may paste this on a penny post card

NORTHWESTERN YEAST CO. MM1:35
1750 North Ashland Ave., Chicago, Ill.
Please send free introductory package of Yeast Foam Tablets.

Name .....
Address .....
City ..... State .....

Their Studio Addresses

(Continued from page 13)

BRADLEY, GRACE: Paramount.
BRADY, ALICE: Free lance. Write her at RKO-Radio.
BREAKSTONE, GEORGE: Free lance. Write him at Universal.
BRENDEL, EL: Warner Bros.
BRENT, EVELYN: Free lance. Write her at Paramount.
BRENT, GEORGE: Warner Bros.
BREWSTER, JUNE: RKO-Radio.
BRIAN, MARY: Free lance. Write her at Paramount.
BRODERICK, HELEN: RKO-Radio.
BRISSON, CARL: Paramount.
BROOK, CLIVE: RKO-Radio.
BROWN, JOE E.: Warner Bros.
BROWN, JOHN MACK: Columbia.
BROWN, TOM: RKO-Radio.
BRUCE, NIGEL: Fox.
BRUCE, VIRGINIA: RKO-Radio.
BURGESS, DOROTHY: Free lance. Write her at RKO-Radio.
BURKE, BILLIE: Free lance. Write her at RKO-Radio.
BURNS, GEORGE: Paramount.
BUSHMAN, RALPH: M-G-M.
BUTLER, JIMMY: Paramount.
BUTTERWORTH, CHARLES: M-G-M.
CABOT, BRUCE: RKO-Radio.
CAGNEY, BILL: Monogram.
CAGNEY, JAMES: Warner Bros.
CAMPBELL, MRS. PAT: M-G-M.
CANTOR, EDDIE: Samuel Goldwyn.
CARLISLE, KITTY: Paramount.
CARLISLE, MARY: M-G-M.
CARMINATI, TULLIO: 20th Century.
CARRILLO, LEO: M-G-M.
CARROLL, MADELEINE: Fox.
CARROLL, NANCY: Columbia.
CARUSO, ENRICO JR.: Warner Bros.
CAVANAGH, PAUL: Free lance. Write him at Universal.
CHANDLER, CHICK: RKO-Radio.
CHANDLER, HELEN: Free lance. Write her at United Artists.
CHAPLIN, CHARLES: United Artists.
CHATTERTON, RUTH: Free lance. Write her at Warner Bros.
CHEVALIER, MAURICE: M-G-M.
CHRISTIANS, MADY: M-G-M.
CLARKE, MAE: M-G-M.
CLIVE, COLIN: Warner Bros.
COGHLAN, JUNIOR: Fox.
COHAN, GEORGE M.: Fox.
COLBERT, CLAUDETTE: Paramount.
COLLINS, CORA SUE: Free lance. Write her at M-G-M.
COLMAN, RONALD: 20th Century.
CONNOLLY, WALTER: Columbia.
COOK, DONALD: Columbia.
COOPER, GARY: Paramount.
COOPER, JACKIE: M-G-M.
CORTEZ, RICARDO: Warner Bros.
COURTNEY, INEZ: Columbia.
CRABBE, LARRY: Paramount.
CRAVEN, FRANK: Free lance. Write him at Columbia.
CRAWFORD, JOAN: M-G-M.
CROMWELL, RICHARD: Columbia.
CROSBY, BING: Paramount.
CROSMAN, HENRIETTA: Fox.
CUMMINGS, CONSTANCE: Free lance. Write her at 20th Century.
DANIELS, BEBE: Free lance. Write her at Warners.
DARE, DOROTHY: Warner Bros.
DARRO, FRANKIE: Free lance. Write him at Mascot.
DAVIES, MARION: M-G-M.
DAVIS, BETTE: Warner Bros.
DEE, FRANCES: RKO-Radio.
DEL RIO, DOLORES: Warner Bros.
DE MILLE, KATHERINE: Paramount.
DEVINE, ANDY: Free lance. Write him at Universal.
DIETRICH, MARLENE: Paramount.
DIX, RICHARD: RKO-Radio.
DODD, CLAIRE: Warner Bros.
DONAT, ROBERT: United Artists.
DONNELLY, RUTH: Warner Bros.
DOUGLAS, MELVYN: Free lance. Write him at RKO-Radio.
DOYLE, MAXINE: Warner Bros.
DRAGONETTE, JESSICA: Paramount.
DRAKE, FRANCES: Paramount.
DUMBRILLE, DOUGLAS: Columbia.
DUNA, STEFFI: RKO-Radio.
DUNN, JAMES: Fox.
DUNNE, IRENE: RKO-Radio.
DURANT, JACK: Fox.
DURANTE, JIMMY: M-G-M.
DVORAK, ANN: Warner Bros.
EDDY, NELSON: M-G-M.
EILERS, SALLY: Universal.
ELDREDGE, JOHN: Free lance. Write him at Warner Bros.
ELLIS, PATRICIA: Warner Bros.
ERROL, LEON: Free lance. Write him at Columbia.
ERWIN, STUART: M-G-M.
EVANS, MADGE: M-G-M.
EVANS, MURIEL: M-G-M.
FAIRBANKS, DOUGLAS JR.: United Artists.
FAIRBANKS, DOUGLAS SR.: United Artists.
FARRELL, CHARLES: Fox.
FARRELL, GLENDA: Warner Bros.
FAZENDA, LOUISE: M-G-M.
FAVERSHAM, PHILLIP: Warner Bros.
FAYE, ALICE: Fox.
FEARS, PEGGY: Fox.
FETCHIT, STEPIN: Fox.
FIELDS, W. C.: Paramount.
FONDA, HENRY: Paramount.
FORAN, NICK: Fox.
FORBES, HAZEL: RKO-Radio.
FORBES, RALPH: Free lance. Write him at Monogram.
FORD, WALLACE: Free lance. Write him at Columbia.
FOSTER, NORMAN: Fox.
FOSTER, PRESTON: M-G-M.
FOX, SIDNEY: RKO-Radio.
FRANCIS, KAY: Warner Bros.
FRAWLEY, WILLIAM: Paramount.
FRITCHIE, BARBARA: Paramount.
FROOS, SYLVIA: Fox.
FULLER, FRANCES: Paramount.
FURNESS, BETTY: M-G-M.
GABLE, CLARK: M-G-M.
GALLAGHER, SKEETS: RKO-Radio.
GALLIAN, KETTI: Fox.
GARAT, HENRI: Fox.
GARBO, GRETA: M-G-M.
GARGAN, WILLIAM: Warner Bros.
GAYNOR, JANET: Fox.
GIBSON, WYNNE: Free lance. Write her at Columbia.
GILBERT, JOHN: Free lance. Write him at Columbia.
GILL, GWENLLIAN: Paramount.
GOMBELL, MINNA: Free lance. Write her at Fox.
GORDON, C. HENRY: M-G-M.
GRANT, CARY: Paramount.
GREEN, HARRY: Fox.
HADEN, JULIE: Free lance. Write her at RKO-Radio.
HADEN, SARAH: Free lance. Write her at RKO-Radio.
HAINES, WILLIAM: Mascot.
HALE, ALAN: RKO-Radio.
HALEY, JACK: Paramount.
HAMILTON, NEIL: Free lance. Write him at Universal.
HARDIE, RUSSELL: M-G-M.
HARDING, ANN: RKO-Radio.
HARDY, OLIVER: M-G-M.
HARLOW, JEAN: M-G-M.
HARVEY, LILIAN: Free lance. Write her at Fox.
HARVEY, FORRESTER: Free lance. Write him at M-G-M.
HARVEY, LILIAN: Free lance. Write her at Fox.
HATTON, RAYMOND: Free lance. Write him at Paramount.
HAYES, HELEN: M-G-M.
HEALY, TED: M-G-M.
HENRY, CHARLOTTE: Paramount.
HEPBURN, KATHARINE: RKO-Radio.
HERSHOLT, JEAN: M-G-M.
HOBSON, VALERIE: Universal.
HOLLOWAY, STERLING: Free lance. Write him at M-G-M.
HOLMES, PHILLIPS: Free lance. Write him at Fox.
HOLT, DAVID: Paramount.
HOLT, JACK: Columbia.
HOPKINS, MIRIAM: RKO-Radio.
HORTON, EDWARD EVERETT: Universal.
HOWARD, LESLIE: Warner Bros.
HUDSON, ROCHELLE: Fox.
HULL, HENRY: Universal.
HUNTLEY, G. P. JR.: Universal.
HUSTON, WALTER: Free lance. Write him at RKO-Radio.
HUTCHINSON, JOSEPHINE: Warner Bros.
HYAMS, LEILA: Universal.
JARRETT, ARTHUR: RKO-Radio.
JENKINS, ALLEN: Warner Bros.
JEWELL, ISABEL: M-G-M.
JOHNSON, KAY: RKO-Radio.
JOLSON, AL: Warner Bros.
JONES, BUCK: Universal.
JORDON, DOROTHY: RKO-Radio.
JORY, VICTOR: Columbia.
JUDGE, ARLINE: Free lance. Write her at Fox.
KARLOFF, BORIS: Universal.
KARNS, ROSCOE: Paramount.
KEATON, BUSTER: Fox.
KEATING, FRED: Columbia.
KEELER, RUBY: Warner Bros.
KEENE, TOM: Free lance. Write him at United Artists.
KELLY, PATSY: M-G-M.
KELLY, PAUL: 20th Century.
KELTON, PERT: RKO-Radio.
KENYON, DORIS: Free lance. Write her at Universal.
KIBBEE, GUY: Warner Bros.
KNAPP, EVALYN: Universal.
KNIGHT, JUNE: M-G-M.
KRUGER, OTTO: M-G-M.
LALLY, HOWARD: Fox.
LANDI, ELISSA: Columbia.
LANGDON, HARRY: Columbia.
LANE, LOLA: Free lance. Write her at Mascot.
LANG, JUNE: Fox.
LA RUE, JACK: Free lance. Write him at Universal.
LAUGHTON, CHARLES: M-G-M.
LAUREL, STAN: M-G-M.
LAWTON, FRANK: Universal.
LAYE, EVELYN: M-G-M.
LEDERER, FRANCIS: RKO-Radio.
LEE, DOROTHY: RKO-Radio.
LEROY, BABY: Paramount.
LEROY, HAL: Warner Bros.
LEYTON, DRUE: Fox.
LIGHTNER, WINNIE: Free lance. Write her at Columbia.
LINDEN, ERIC: Free lance. Write him at Universal.
LINDSAY, MARGARET: Warner Bros.
LLOYD, HAROLD: Write him at Fox.
LODGE, JOHN: Free lance. Write him at Paramount.
LOMBARD, CAROLE: Paramount.
LORD, PAULINE: Paramount.
LOUISE, ANITA: Warner Bros.
LOVE, MONTAGU: Free lance. Write him at Paramount.
LOWE, EDMUND: Columbia.
LOY, MYRNA: M-G-M.
LUGOSI, BELA: Universal.
LUKAS, PAUL: Universal.
LUND, LUCILLE: Mascot.
LUPINO, IDA: Paramount.
LYON, BEN: Free lance. Write him at RKO-Radio
MacDONALD, JEANETTE: M-G-M.
MACK, HELEN: Paramount.
MacMAHON, ALINE: Warner Bros.
MANNERS, DAVID: Free lance. Write him at United Artists.
MANNORS, SHEILA: Columbia.
MARCH, FREDRIC: 20th Century.
MARGO: Paramount.
MARITZA, SARI: Free lance. Write her at Mascot.
MARSH, JOAN: RKO-Radio.
MARSH, MARIAN: Columbia.
MARSHALL, HERBERT: M-G-M.
MAYNARD, KEN: Mascot.
McCOY, COL. TIM: Columbia.
McCREA, JOEL: RKO-Radio.
McHUGH, FRANK: Warner Bros.
McKINNEY, FLORINE: M-G-M.
McLAGLEN, VICTOR: Free lance. Write him at Fox.
MEIGHAN, THOMAS: Free lance. Write him at Fox.
MENJOU, ADOLPHE: Warner Bros.
MERCER, BERYL: Free lance. Write her at RKO-Radio.
MERKEL, UNA: M-G-M.
MERMAN, ETHEL: Paramount.
MICHAEL, GERTRUDE: Paramount.
MILJAN, JOHN: Free lance. Write him at Monogram.
MITCHELL, FRANK: Fox.
MITCHELL, GENEVA: Columbia.
MONTENEGRO, CONCHITA: Fox.
MONTGOMERY, DOUGLASS: Universal.
MONTGOMERY, ROBERT: M-G-M.
MOORE, COLLEEN: RKO-Radio.
MOORE, DICKIE: Free lance. Write him at Universal.
MOORE, ERIN O'BRIEN: Free lance. Write her at RKO-Radio.
MOORE, GRACE: Columbia.
MOORE, VICTOR: Universal.
MORAN, POLLY: M-G-M.
MORGAN, FRANK: RKO-Radio.
MORGAN, RALPH: Free lance. Write him at Fox.
MORGAN, HELEN: Warners.
MORLEY, KAREN: M-G-M.
MORRIS, CHESTER: Universal
MORRISON, JOE: Paramount.
MOWBRAY, ALAN: Free lance. Write him at Universal.

MUIR, JEAN: Warners.
MULHALL, JACK: Free lance. Write him at Mascot.
MUNDIN, HERBERT: Fox.
MUNI, PAUL: Warner Bros.
MURPHY, GEORGE: Columbia.
NAGEL, CONRAD: Free lance. Write him at RKO-Radio.
NEAGLE, ANNA: United Artists.
NIXON, MARIAN: Free lance. Write her at RKO-Radio.
NOVARRO, RAMON: M-G-M.
OAKIE, JACK: Paramount.
O'BRIEN, GEORGE: Fox.
O'BRIEN, PAT: Warner Bros.
OLIVER, EDNA MAY: Universal.
O'SULLIVAN, MAUREEN: M-G-M.
OVERMAN, LYNNE: Paramount.
OWEN, REGINALD: Free lance. Write him at Universal.
PALLETTE, EUGENE: Free lance. Write him at Warner Bros.
PARKER, JEAN: M-G-M.
PARRISH, GIGI: Monogram.
PATRICK, GAIL: Paramount.
PATTERSON, PAT: Fox.
PENDLETON, NAT: M-G-M.
PENNER, JOE: Paramount.
PICKFORD, MARY: United Artists.
PINE, VIRGINIA: Columbia.
PITTS, ZASU: Universal.
POWELL, DICK: Warner Bros.
POWELL, WILLIAM: M-G-M.
PRINGLE, AILEEN: Free lance. Write her at Monogram.
PRYOR, ROGER: Universal.
QUIGLEY, JUANITA: Universal.
QUILLAN, EDDIE: Free lance. Write him at RKO-Radio.
RAFT, GEORGE: Paramount.
RAINS, CLAUDE: Universal.
RALSTON, ESTHER: M-G-M.
RAND, SALLY: Paramount.
RATOFF, GREGORY: RKO-Radio.
RAY, CHARLES: Free lance. Write him at RKO-Radio.
RAYMOND, GENE: Columbia.
REED, PHILLIP: Warner Bros.
REGAN, PHIL: Warner Bros.
RICE, FLORENCE: Columbia.
ROBBINS, BARBARA: RKO-Radio.
ROBERTI, LYDA: Paramount.
ROBINSON, EDWARD G.: Warner Bros.
ROBSON, MAY: M-G-M.
ROGERS, GINGER: RKO-Radio.
ROGERS, CHARLES: Free lance. Write him at Paramount.
ROGERS, WILL: Fox.
ROLAND, GILBERT: Fox.
ROSS, LANNY: Paramount.
ROULIEN, RAUL: Fox.
RUGGLES, CHARLES: Paramount.
SABIN, CHARLES: Columbia.
SAVO, JIMMY: Paramount.
SCHILDKRAUT, JOSEPH: Columbia.
SCOTT, RANDOLPH: Paramount.
SEWARD, BILLIE: Columbia.
SHANNON, PEGGY: Free lance. Write her at Universal.
SHAW, WINIFRED: Warner Bros.
SHEA, GLORIA: Monogram.
SHEARER, NORMA: M-G-M.
SHIRLEY, ANNE: RKO-Radio.
SIDNEY, SYLVIA: Paramount.
SKIPWORTH, ALISON: Paramount.
SLEEPER, MARTHA: M-G-M.
SMITH, C. AUBREY: United Artists.
SMITH, QUEENIE: Paramount.
SOTHERN, ANN: Columbia.
STANDING, SIR GUY: Paramount.
STANWYCK, BARBARA: Warner Bros.
STARRETT, CHARLES: Warner Bros.
STEN, ANNA: Samuel Goldwyn.
STEVENS, ONSLOW: Universal.
STONE, LEWIS: M-G-M.
STUART, GLORIA: Universal.
SULLAVAN, MARGARET: Universal.
SULLIVAN, FRANCIS L.: Universal.
SUMMERVILLE, SLIM: Universal.
SWANSON, GLORIA: M-G-M.
TALBOT, LYLE: Warner Bros.
TAYLOR, KENT: Paramount.
TEASDALE, VERREE: Warner Bros.
TEMPLE, SHIRLEY: Fox.
THOMAS, FRANKIE: RKO-Radio.
THOMAS, JAMESON: Monogram.
TOBIN, GENEVIEVE: Warner Bros.
TODD, THELMA, RKO-Radio.
TONE, FRANCHOT: M-G-M.
TORRENCE, DAVID: Free lance. Write him at M-G-M.
TRACY, LEE: Paramount.
TRACY, SPENCER: Fox.
TREE, DOROTHY: Warner Bros.
TREVOR, CLAIRE: Fox.
TURPIN, BEN: Free lance. Write him at Mascot.
TWELVETREES, HELEN: Fox.
VALLEE, RUDY: Warner Bros.
VELEZ, LUPE: M-G-M.
VENABLE, EVELYN: Paramount.
VINSON, HELEN: Free lance. Write her at Columbia.
WALBURN, RAYMOND: Columbia.
WALTHALL, H. B.: Monogram.
WALTERS, POLLY: Universal.
WARE, IRENE: Free lance. Write her at Universal.
WATERS, ETHEL: Free lance. Write her at Universal.
WAYNE, JOHN: Monogram.
WEISSMULLER, JOHNNY: M-G-M.
WELLS, JACQUELINE: Free lance. Write her at Monogram.
WEST, MAE: Paramount.
WESTCOTT, GORDON: Warner Bros.
WESTLEY, HELEN: Free lance. Write her at RKO-Radio.
WHEELER, BERT: RKO-Radio.
WHITE, ALICE: Universal.
WIECK, DOROTHEA: Paramount.
WILCOXON, HENRY: Paramount.
WILLIAM, WARREN: Warner Bros.
WILLIAMS, HUGH: Fox.
WILSON, DOROTHY: Paramount.
WILSON, LOIS: Free lance. Write her at Universal.
WING, PAT: Warner Bros.
WING, TOBY: Paramount.
WONG, ANNA MAY: Paramount.
WOODS, DONALD: Warner Bros.
WOOLSEY, BOB: RKO-Radio.
WRAY, FAY: Columbia.
WYATT, JANE: Universal.
WYNYARD, DIANA: M-G-M.
YOUNG, ELIZABETH: Universal.
YOUNG, LORETTA: M-G-M.
YOUNG, POLLY ANN: Free lance. Write her at Fox.
YOUNG, ROBERT: M-G-M.
YOUNG, ROLAND: Paramount.
YOUNG, TAMMANY: Free lance. Write him at Paramount.

The Modern Hostess

(Continued from page 6)

vinced we're not. I'm sure that Ottilie is wise to the deception but has tolerantly decided that she will play our game of 'let's pretend' as long as we want her to play it. I can't believe that her playmates haven't told Ottilie that 'Santa is just make believe.' I only hope that they will have left her with the realization that merry old Saint Nick stands as a symbol of the beautiful spirit of giving. I hope Ottilie will never lose that feeling. I know Sue and I will do everything in our power to help her keep it."

TRUE, Santa Claus cannot live on as an individual," he continued, "but when he has ceased to exist for Ottilie we intend to make up for his absence. Not by a greater number of gifts or more elaborate ones, for we don't believe in spoiling Ottilie. But we will continue to make the holiday season a joyous one in other ways. And one way will be to entertain Ottilie's friends as well as our own. By opening up our home and our hearts to those of her own age, Sue and I feel we will not only give Ottilie pleasure but will also teach her that the greatest joy is to be found in dispensing hospitality to others."

How many of us, I wonder, have realized that this is a splendid way to make up to our children for the loss of Santa Claus? How many of us make the Yuletide season one of the happiest periods of the year for the grown-ups as well, by inviting our friends to join in our Christmas festivities, however simple.

Stop a COLD the First Day!

Drive It Out of Your System —Roots and All!

A COLD once rooted is a cold of danger! Trust to no makeshift methods.

A cold, being an internal infection, calls for internal treatment.

A cold also calls for a COLD remedy and not a preparation good for a number of other things as well.

Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine is what a cold requires. It is expressly a cold remedy. It is internal and direct—and it does the four things necessary.

Four Effects

It opens the bowels. It combats the cold germs and fever in the system. It relieves the headache and grippy feeling and tones the entire system.

Only Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine supplies these four effects and anything less than that is inviting trouble.

Get Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine at any druggist, 35c and 50c. The 50c size is the more economical "buy." Ask for Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine by the full name and accept no substitute on any pretext.

GROVE'S LAXATIVE BROMO QUININE

Listen to Pat Kennedy, the Unmasked Tenor and Art Kassel and his Kassels-in-the-Air Orchestra every Sunday, Monday, Tuesday and Thursday, 1:45 p. m. Eastern Standard Time, Columbia Coast-to-Coast Network.

Sue Kruger, for instance, recommends serving to folks who drop in during the holidays, various cakes and cookies—the kind that appeal to grown-ups and children alike. She has her cook frost some of these with a snowy icing, topped with a sliver of green citron and tiny bits of red maraschino cherries. Others have colored icings and decorations in keeping with the season. At first I was a bit dubious about recommending these to others because they sounded so very professional, but after seeing Mrs. Kruger's recipes and trying them out I changed my mind. Why they are a cinch to make—all of them. I'm sure you'll want to try them, too, for they are ideal to serve to your friends and your friends' children—not to mention your own family and your own children if you have any. Several of these Kruger cake, cooky and frosting recipes are now printed on cards which you may have for the asking. But first let me tell you about them.

Let's start with Ottilie's favorite. After all, this is the time of the year when kids' preferences get first consideration. Ottilie's pet is "Applesauce Cake." It will be your pet, too, when you've tasted it. Imagine a cake that has in it the combined flavors of spices and applesauce. No wonder little Miss Kruger favors it.

OTTO is partial to their cook's Christmas Fruit Cookies. These are really for the grown-up members of the party for they are very rich, being made of Mince Meat (the kind you buy in packages). Another type of cooky the Krugers always have for Christmas parties is Petit Fours. That's a French name which practically means "little baked ones" but no name in any language could do them justice. And are they easy to make? They are! Can you imagine something that tastes like a rich cooky but is cooked in one layer like a cake? This layer is cut into fancy shapes after baking which means no rolling, or fussing with sticky dough. After they are baked and cut, they are frosted, with many varieties of colored frostings, each more attractive than the other but every one of them easy to concoct. I have also included recipes for several of these festive frostings in the fall leaflet. I know you'll enjoy using these frostings and I'm convinced you'll like Sue Kruger's cake and cooky suggestions, too.

Take the following little cakes, for instance. They are mixed in a moment, baked in the easiest manner in the world—in little paper cups—and they emerge from the oven in practically no time at all as some of the grandest little morsels you've ever eaten. Frost them if you choose, but I really don't think they require it.

KRUGER CHOCOLATE CUPS

1 cup flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt
¼ cup butter
½ cup sugar
1 square cooking chocolate
1 egg
½ teaspoon vanilla
⅓ cup milk

Sift flour, measure. Mix flour, baking powder and salt and sift together three times. Cream butter, add sugar gradually and beat until very light. Melt chocolate over hot water. Beat melted chocolate into butter mixture. Beat egg until very light, combine with vanilla and milk. Add flour to butter mixture alternately with the milk. Beat until thoroughly blended. Bake in the small sized paper baking cups in hot oven (400°) for 12 minutes or until a cake tester inserted in cakes comes out clean. Frost cakes when cool if desired. They may be served right in the little cups.

Of course, the time-honored cake accompaniment is ice cream and to kids the combination of ice cream and cake makes any occasion a party. If you don't believe me, just try it out and see. This year I suggest that instead of the usual dishes of ice cream you serve home-made Frosted Milk Shakes. These should be chocolate flavored for the very small children but for grown-ups and children in their teens you will find coffee flavor more popular. Perhaps you are hesitant about following this suggestion but you need not be if you use a brand of coffee from which the caffeine has been removed. Just try this recipe and see how enthusiastic everyone will be.

FROSTED COFFEE MALT

6 tablespoons malted milk
2 cups strong caffeine-free coffee
¼ cup sugar
1½ cups milk
½ cup cream
ice cream

Add hot coffee gradually to malted milk. Beat until free from lumps. Add sugar and stir until dissolved. Add milk and cream. Chill thoroughly. (Place pitcher containing Milk Shake in a bowl of cracked ice, if possible.) When time to serve, place a small portion of vanilla ice cream in bottom of tall glasses. Add chilled coffee mixture. Top with a spoonful of whipped cream and serve at once. This recipe serves six.

Just visualize this grand drink in a lovely glass on an attractive plate, with a slice of Applesauce Cake on the side—or flanked with tiny Petits Fours with different colored icings. And imagine the look of delight and surprise on the face of your favorite male when he picks up a simple looking cooky and finds it's really a rich, spicy mince meat treat. To achieve all these marvelous results all you have to do is mail in this month's coupon, pronto. Then we'll rush the Kruger Christmas Folder to you with its recipes for Applesauce Cake, Petits Fours, Christmas Fruit Cookies and Festivity Frostings.

MODERN SCREEN STAR RECIPES

HOME SERVICE DEPARTMENT
MODERN SCREEN Magazine
149 Madison Avenue, N.Y., N.Y.

Please send me the recipes for January, 1935.

Name.....
(Print in pencil)

Address.....
(Street and Number)

.....
(City) (State)

Wanted: A Remedy for Heartbreak—for Virginia

(Continued from page 39)

happiness and destroyed it so terribly soon? Never have I known of a marriage more ardently hoped for, more anxiously desired by their friends and their millions of fans, than that of John Gilbert and Virginia Bruce. Then why couldn't it be?

"I know what you're thinking," she said quietly. "You're wondering what happened. Well, I'll tell you, and I want you to believe me. There've been so many rumors, most of them unpleasant and none of them true! I'll tell you the truth. After all, why make a secret of it, since neither Jack nor I have anything to hide?

"I suppose it's impossible to believe that two people who adore each other as much as Jack and I did, and still do, could nevertheless not live together happily. Yet that's the bare fact of the matter. Love and marriage are not one and the same thing. Marriage requires an especial talent, an infinite capacity for adjustment, and most of us simply do not have that talent and that infinite capacity. We think we have, and we want to have, and yet, we just don't have the necessary ability.

"All my life I've prided myself on looking at things honestly, on finding the truth, even if it proved a boomerang and hurt me. For that reason I now know that the break-up of our marriage was far more my fault than it was Jack's. You see, by my own words, my own actions, I had unintentionally, yet none the less surely, given Jack an utterly erroneous impression of my attitude on certain matters. This was just as unfair and as unkind as if I had intentionally deceived him. I realize that now, but I didn't at the time.

"You know, Jack's life has not been a very happy one. He's a fiery, tempestuous soul, and things have not come easily to him. He's had to fight for every atom of success he's had. He's been hindered and hurt by the very people who should have helped him. Oh, not just once but again and again! They've been damnable to him! Even those who love and admire him most don't fully understand him. Jack is proud and sensitive. He doesn't go about telling his troubles to anyone that'll listen to him. For that reason everyone thinks he's hard and callous and doesn't care. They don't know!"

"But you knew," I prompted. "He has so often declared that your perfect understanding, your warm sympathy, made up for all the rest. All the cruel misunderstanding, all the intolerant. . . ."

"Yes, I know," Virginia interrupted. "That is just what hurts so terribly, now. I did understand, I did sympathize, and because I loved him so desperately, I thought I would feel and think like that always. But I didn't. I changed. I didn't live up to my own specifications!

"Before I married Jack I had been doing very well for myself in pictures. I was playing leads and had a fine contract with M-G-M. It meant a great deal to work myself up to that point, and then, just when I was doing worth while things, to throw it all aside without a pang. But I did it. And gladly. I knew that our marriage was doomed at the outset unless I gave up my own career and concentrated all my heart and soul on just being Mrs. John Gilbert. This wasn't Jack's idea. It was my own.

"At first we were blissfully happy. Our honeymoon in Europe was like a dream. We thought we were the two happiest people in the world. I suppose all lovers think that, but we two were sure of it.

"And then we came back to Hollywood and settled down like two staid, middle-aged, old-fashioned people."

"At first I didn't mind. Then, little by little, I began to wonder if we weren't just a trifle too staid, too old-fashioned, too middle-aged. The dullness, the monotony were getting on my nerves. I wanted to dance and go places. Jack didn't. He hated being dragged around. He'd done all the partying he'd wanted to, years ago, and it no longer held any thrill for him. He worked hard at the studio all day and, at night, when he came home he wanted to read and be comfortable. On those few occasions that we did go anywhere, oh, very infrequently, he was so bored and miserable that I'd be sorry and determine not to make him do it again.

"With it all I was determined not to scold or nag. I detest a nagging woman! So, feeling like a prisoner in solitary confinement, I went on, month after month, trying to make the best of it. Jack had loved me for my patience and understanding, I told myself, and I mustn't let him down. But in my heart I knew it couldn't last. I just couldn't go on like that for the rest of my days!

"You see, I was very young. I was only twenty-one, and I hadn't had very much fun as yet. Jack was thirty-five. He had done all these things years before, and now he was tired and disillusioned. I realized this and made allowances.

"Moreover, I find one can't destroy ambition. I had loved acting and I wanted more than anything to go back to it. And the rest you know. My courage finally snapped.

"And so we separated. Not because we no longer loved each other, not because we had hurt each other, not for any of the millions of reasons that outsiders will tell you, simply because I wasn't big enough to play the part I had assumed. I had accepted the role of Mrs. John Gilbert, yet at heart I wanted to be Virginia Bruce, too, and this wasn't possible."

"And are you happier now?" I asked.

She paused and then replied:

"No, I'm not. I suppose I shouldn't say that, for I've really been very fortunate. M-G-M has loaned me to Twentieth Century and I'm playing Jenny Lind with Beery in "The Mighty Barnum." I love the part and the costumes are adorable. I have a chance to sing in it, too. I suppose I really ought to be awfully happy about it. Moreover, I've been going out and having fun, as I wanted to, now. In fact, between you and me, I've been going out so much that I'm beginning to see what Jack meant when he used to say, 'You'll get tired of it. Wait until you've had as much of it as I've had. You'll see!' And he was right. I do see! Yes, Jack was almost always right.

"What I'm sorriest about is that I married Jack just when I did. The success of anything, from baking a cake, launching a new fashion, or marrying the person you love, depends so much on accurate timing. A thing that might easily be suc-

Two great directors and two great stars—Rouben Mamoulian (left) and Josef Von Sternberg (right), Jean Harlow and Marlene Dietrich—at the swanky Cocoanut Grove party which Louella Parsons tendered the visiting British admiralty.

Nestle

GOLDEN AND HENNA SHAMPOOS

● Wash glorious color into your hair—and have the loveliest of shampoos—all at the same time! That's what these Nestle color shampoos mean to you. Wonderfully fine cleansers, made by Nestle formulas from the purest ingredients, they add the shimmer and sparkle of youth to hair that is faded and tired-looking.

The Golden Shampoo for glorious blond hair. The Henna Shampoo gives entrancing highlights for all darker shades of hair. Why permit your hair to look drab and listless when these dependable products—2 shampoos per package—will give you the happiness of well groomed hair. Use in connection with ColoRinse to insure perfect results.

THE NESTLE-LEMUR COMPANY
MAKERS OF QUALITY PRODUCTS
NEW YORK

10c at all 10c Stores and Beauty Shops ... Nestle ColoRinse, SuperSet, Golden Shampoo and Henna Shampoo

cessful can just as easily become a failure if it happens at the wrong time. That was how it was with us. If I hadn't met Jack until five years from now I'm sure everything would have been different and we'd have 'lived happily ever after.'

"My greatest fear is that our marriage and divorce may have hurt him with the public. You don't know how anxious I am that nothing shall hurt him! He has been so perfectly splendid through it all that I am more anxious for his success and happiness than for anything else on earth. He's so clever, so talented, so . . . so. . . "

She paused and smiled wistfully.

"I suppose all this sounds odd, from a divorced wife, but I'm trying to look at it all fairly and impartially. Besides, I'm not embittered. My mistakes were all of my own making. Jack never deceived me or betrayed my faith or confidence. Besides, we did not actually 'lose' each other. We merely left each other. Do you know what I mean? There's such a difference between leaving and losing! I don't feel that I've lost Jack in that awful, final sense that I would if there had been another woman in the case. Do you see?"

"Yes, I do. And now just one question more, please. Do you think you will ever marry again?"

"No. At least not for a very long time. I want to continue my career. It was partly the price for which I sacrificed my marriage, so I mean to collect it. Besides, I have my baby, Susan Ann, to care for. And, after all, there's only one man in the world that could ever tempt me to marry again?"

"And that man is—?"

"Jack Gilbert!"

"Good gracious! That is a bombshell!"

"Well, I promised to tell you the whole story, from start to finish, didn't I? So now you have it, up to, and including, the sequel."

Modern Screen's Dramatic School

(Continued from page 18)

you are scared and embarrassed in someone's presence that person is, possibly, as frightened as you are. Put this all in your mind. Don't forget it. And now let's go on to the next step in the lesson.

"Assume a virtue if you have it not," said our old dramatic friend, Bill Shakespeare, who was actor as well as playright. Well, poise and assurance are virtues. Don't worry about what's happening to you on the inside. Don't be bothered if you're trembling all over with embarrassment. Don't despair if your head is hot and your hands are cold. Pretend that you are calm, poised, assured. Imitate, if you want to, the ways and manners of the most poised person you know. Because that, boys and girls, is just what the stars do. That's how they cover up their embarrassment. That's how they fool you. Now you, in turn, fool your friends.

Little Janet Gaynor told me once that she had to make a speech before a group of people. She was scared pink. She felt just as you probably do, when you step on the stage to speak a piece, or sing a song, or play your role in an amateur production. Quickly, Janet glanced about the room. Her eye fell on a shrinking, dull-looking woman who could not possibly be formidable or critical. And Janet addressed her speech to that woman. Naturally, her eyes moved from that face and included the rest of the audience, but she imagined that she was there to impress that woman who, obviously, could so easily be impressed. And that, you dramatic aspirers, is a wonderful thing to do when you feel yourself possessed of stage fright.

When I was talking to actors and actresses about this subject, everyone of them told me that on the opening night of a new play they were always petrified with fright. Some folks think that unless they are, it is an evil omen.

Now, here's something else. While you are assuming the virtue of poise and self-confidence you will be getting into a habit which will eventually rob you of self-consciousness, a theft you won't mind, I'm sure. But while you're playing the part of being calm and assured don't, for heaven's sake, apologize too much for whatever you may do. That's the surest way of tipping people off that you're self-conscious. Lawrence Tibbett once told me about the time when he first began rehearsing with the Metropolitan Opera Company. He was awkward and embarrassed. He felt that everyone in the company was much better than he. When he made mistakes, and it was inevitable that such a rank newcomer should, he went around saying how terribly, terribly sorry he was. And, for his humbleness, he got only disgruntled monosyllables. At last he woke up and looked about him. Others were making mistakes, too, even the old timers. And what did they do? They tossed them off and nobody paid any attention to them. From this, Tibbett learned a great truth which I shall pass on to you. Memorize the following paragraph and heed the excellent advice, which you can learn from it.

Roger Pryor, Nancy Carroll, Ann Sothern and W. R. Van Smith at the Beverly Wilshire. Yes, those Pryor-Sothern romance rumors seem to be pretty authentic. And just as soon as Roger's marital difficulties are straightened out, it may mean wedding bells for this pair.

If you admit your weaknesses, if you continually apologize, people instinctively scold you, whether it is at a Metropolitan rehearsal or at a contract bridge table. But if you never confess your sense of inferiority, if you airily wave aside your errors as if they amounted to nothing, people sneer at you not at all. Please, please never forget that self-confidence is very important.

Gary Cooper told me of an excellent way to fight the demon, Shyness. Always during the first week of a new picture, especially if there are new people in the cast, Gary suffers acutely. "I say to myself," he explained, 'This really isn't so important.' Nothing helps me so much as minimizing the importance of the occasion."

It helps not at all to know what self-consciousness is. Psychologists tell you that it's ego, that it's feeling so important that makes you imagine all eyes are turned upon you. Well, when you are upon a stage all eyes are turned upon you. You can rationalize the thing all you want and it doesn't help. My research into this matter this month has convinced me that the only way to overcome or, rather, to cope with self-consciousness is to remember that you're not the only self-conscious person in the world, that others are suffering just as much as you, and that it is your job to appear to be poised no matter how uncomfortable you are feeling inside.

I do hope I've helped you. I'd be very happy, indeed if I have. If you have any more questions to ask about this subject or if you wish to consult me on any matter which pertains to the study of dramatic art be sure to write me care of MODERN SCREEN's Dramatic School, 149 Madison Ave., New York City. Be sure to enclose a self-addressed stamped envelope. Otherwise I cannot give you a personal reply. This department is your department. Its purpose is to teach you everything you should know about the art of the theatre, to help you with amateur theatricals and make those long winter evenings lots and lots of fun. You and your friends can have one grand time.

Many of my readers have organized dramatic societies and clubs in their towns and are using MODERN SCREEN as their guide. They write me that they have swell times and learn a great deal besides. Why don't you do this? If you write me I'll tell you how to go about it. And I also want to know what you want me to include in this department. Tell me what you think will help you most and I'll give you my best advice. Who knows but what this may lead to the discovery of a real genius? And don't forget that I stand ready to answer your personal problems concerning dramatics. But don't forget that envelope—addressed and stamped—when you write me.

Scott Photo

While Rudy Vallee was on the Coast recently, making "Sweet Music" for Warners, he asked Mary Pickford to be his guest star for his initial broadcast. And Mary, who is very air-minded these days what with her own program, "The Lux Radio Theatre," graciously complied.

Of one thing I'm really sure F-O polish means allure

F-O polish...a real joy for every girl... in five becoming shades that apply evenly and have lasting luster.

At all 10c stores ... Cuticle Remover ... Creme Polish ... Polish Remover Oily Polish Remover ...

Ft. Orange Chemical Co., Albany, N.Y.

Millions use "HUSH" Deodorants FOR BODY ODORS

fastidious women prefer HUSH to stay sweet. Effective-easy

3 Kinds - CREAM - LIQUID - STICK

Now available in 10c sizes everywhere or send 10c for each kind desired.

HUSH COMPANY
116 Market St.
PHILA., PA.

Gottschalk's

KOPPER BALL 3 for 10¢

The greatest metal scouring device value ever offered ... you actually buy two and get one free. Items of lesser merit sell for 5c each. Gottschalk's Kopper Ball does a thorough scouring job with surprisingly little effort ... will not rust, splinter or harm the hands. Burned, greased-encrusted pots and pans shine up like new. Avoid imitations. There is no substitute for Gottschalk Quality. On sale at 5 and 10 cent stores everywhere or direct on receipt of 10c. Metal Sponge Sales Corporation, Philadelphia.

Gottschalk's
METAL SPONGE

Men . . . !

(Continued from page 27)

for a flirtation or a love affair. Especially when the brilliant lights went out and the set, free of glare, stood cool and aloof in the studio's semi-darkness.

In a row with the director's camp-chair painted with his famous name, stood three other chairs. One for The Girl With Flyaway Hair. One for the man. And one for the third star of this production, a tall girl with a dark beauty.

The girls knew each other. The other girl and the man had met. At one of the innumerable parties. Our heroine and the new man over whom Hollywood and Beverly Hills and Brentwood thrilled and sighed were introduced to each other by the director.

The girl stood there managing, amazingly enough, to look quite as feminine in her trim tailored suit and crisp blouse and casual pull down felt hat as she had looked the night before in her blush pink evening gown.

The man towered above her. Smiling a nice, quiet smile. Charming. Attentive. Actually every definite thing that had been said about him. But he gave the girl no thrill. Not even a little thrill. Not at this first sight, anyway.

She gave him her small, gloved hand.

"How do you do," she said with that rush of words which characterizes her off the screen as well as on. "And how do you like California? That's the proper question, I believe."

"I like it tremendously." He had, she noticed, a really grand speaking voice. "Everyone has been so hospitable, so friendly."

"Everyone isn't. Always!" she told him. "But I do understand we've rather taken you to . . . our hearts!"

He didn't pretend either to understand or not to understand. She liked him for that.

"He's extremely civilized and personable," she decided. But ever so calmly.

She could feel the director's eyes upon her. He was waiting, she felt sure, for her to laugh on a higher key or do some trifling thing extravagantly enough to indicate that she was being reduced to the prevalent state of romantic jitters. He was an astute little man, the director, and often she had seen him observe people as if they were so many laboratory specimens.

A week passed. Two weeks . . . the picture progressed in the regular way. Most scenes worked out nicely. It was a simple sequence with which no one had anticipated the slightest difficulty that held them up for an entire day.

"You're very popular," the man said to The Girl With Flyaway Hair one afternoon. "There always seems to be some friend visiting you on the set."

"Some girl friend," the girl supplemented, her cornflower blue eyes sparkling with amusement. "Well, probably you won't believe it, but many of my visitors have been only the most casual acquaintances. I've found their sudden affection for me quite . . . quite touching."

The director, sitting close by, slapped his thigh and roared with laughter.

"What's so funny?" asked the man, puzzled.

"Nothing. Nothing at all." The girl spoke softly. Then she touched her finger to her forehead, shook her head, indicated that the director, poor darling, was quite mad.

She might not be experiencing the thrills everyone had predicted but she most certainly was having a very amusing time.

SHE really liked this new actor. She reasoned again and often that he was extremely civilized and most personable. But he did not cause her the slightest flurry. No. In fact, she was impatient for the picture to be finished. So she could turn her attention to the decorating and furnishing of the new house she had taken. She hoped her scenes would be completed in time for her to have a week or two to concentrate upon her house before she had to begin another picture.

Her last scene was a love scene. In which she and the man were supposed to be riding in a taxi-cab.

"We'll be through shooting by noon," the director told her. "Then you're finished. Then you can go off and buy whatnots to your heart's content."

The interior of the taxi was built in the studios. Built upon a movable platform so the action might be simulated. There was, of course, no front to the cab. Simply the three sides of the interior itself with the back seat, back window, little side windows, and side straps.

This, curiously enough, was the only love scene the girl and the man had in the whole picture. And it wasn't at all a pulsating scene or long drawn out. It was short and quick, with a gay spirit about it.

They rehearsed first. The girl had to sit close, a love light in her eyes. He had to give the impression he was practically perishing to put his arms around her. Then she had to hand him a small package. Whereupon he was supposed to recognize the light her eyes held for him and put his arms around her . . . and kiss her and kiss her and kiss her.

"We'll try it once more before the take," called the director. Unless he was very much mistaken the light in the eyes of that heretofore cool and collected young woman exceeded any acting. Unless he was a romantic old fool, he had every chance of getting a love scene here that would make audiences sit up and take notice.

They rehearsed it again. Now there was no mistaking the look in the girl's eyes. And it was significant—the director was convinced of it, anyhow—that when the rehearsal was over both the man and the girl avoided looking at each other.

The little director sat hunched in his chair. To have seen him you'd have thought the only thing in the world that interested him was the tips of his stout boots. That is how deceiving appearances can be. He didn't want to look up, give either of his players any opportunity of speaking to him. He was frightened to death that something might shatter that thing he could sense swinging between them.

"Lights," he called, his eyes still upon his boots. "Ready. This is the take!"

Outside of the doors leading to that stage red lights flashed on. "Silence!" For a second the stage throbbed with quiet. Then the taxi seat creaked. She was moving closer. And he was moving closer. She handed him the package.

"Here they are," she said. Or something to that effect. Her voice came warm and live and quick.

He looked down into her eyes. His arms went about her. With a tender strength. Afterwards, she said she knew that was what had "got her." That tender, gentle strength of his. Her arms flew up around his neck. He had a nice neck. It flowed with smooth clean lines into his shoulders.

Just for a flash his eyes hung over her eyes. Her heart fluttered. Really fluttered. She gave a little rushing sigh.

"Ohh-h-h-hh!" Like that.

The director hunched farther forward than ever. And prayed the microphone had caught that sigh.*

Their lips met, clung . . . met, clung . . .

"Great!" shouted the director. "That's great stuff!" The cameraman stopped turning. The lights went on. The man in the control room nodded approvingly.

Now the girl was through, free to leave the studio, think of nothing in the world but white paint and chintzes and Hepplewhite chairs.

But that afternoon the director found her sitting in her chair on the side lines, watching the man play a scene with a tall girl of dark beauty.

"Hello," he said. "Thought you were so anxious to get away."

"I was," she said softly. "But . . . oh, isn't he marvellous!"

* It did.

AND here is the tale told me by The Girl With Lovely Eyes, two stories really. About two men who had made terrific impressions. In quite different ways.

One was amusing. With a hero extremely charming and terribly sleepy. The other was unpleasant. With an actor less gallant than the character he was playing, low enough to take advantage of the love scenes to indulge in indelicate advances.

She's young, The Girl With Lovely Eyes. She has a low pitched speaking voice. And her figure is roundly turned. She came to Hollywood from the Broadway stage.

The extremely charming but sleepy hero was the star of the first motion picture she made after signing a flattering contract. Because she was an actress she was awed at the idea of working with him. Excited, too. Because she was a girl.

"Above everything else," she says "I had made up my mind to make good. The only other picture in which I had appeared had turned out disastrously. You know . . . the sort of thing your friends don't mention in front of you!"

For the picture with the charming hero the love scenes were filmed first. Which complicated matters. Impersonal as love scenes can be, every actor and actress I know prefers to play such scenes after they've become acquainted, after there is a camaraderie between them.

The morning these scenes were to be shot the company reported for a particularly early call. They were exterior scenes. And the location, where great black rocks crouched at the edge of the Pacific like sleek seals basking in the sun, was at least an hour's drive from the studios.

It was with the young lovers seated on these rocks that the picture opened. She was supposedly a member of an underworld gang intent upon convincing her sweetheart that cops were their natural enemies.

The Girl With Lovely Eyes was on her toes that first morning. She was impatient with the preliminaries which go on before any scenes can be shot.

The crew went to work setting up the camera, adjusting the microphones, measuring distances and arranging reflectors.

The director and his assistant went into a long, serious huddle over some changes which had been made in the script.

She had the camp-chair with her name, which had been brought along in the big truck, placed off to one side. She wanted an opportunity to think about the girl she was to portray. She wanted to drench herself in the feeling of the character.

This proved impossible.

The arc of beach where the company had camped became Bedlam. Instructions were shouted back and forth. Impish faced assistants beat tattoos on iron upright and the wooden reflector frames. Several booming bassos among the crew went about their work singing lusty chanteys.

"Is it always like this?" the girl asked the assistant cameraman. "As noisy as this, I mean?"

He grinned. "With this star it is lately," he told her. "You see we always think maybe we can keep him awake. But we hardly ever do. He's all in, poor guy!"

IN the center of that din and commotion sat the star. He slept like a baby. They might as well have kept quiet.

Poor thing, he was having a hectic romance. And, for once, the lovers' quarrels and reconciliations were as frequent and pyrotechnical as the newspapers reported them to be.

Long before they needed him they began calling.

He opened one eye, stretched his legs, yawned, muttered, "I'm all set," and went sound asleep again.

The director came to the girl and led her over smaller rocks to the big rock where she was to sit. It was slippery going. At their feet the ocean broke in bursts and jets of spray.

The assistant director and two property men went to work on the star. At last they got him on his feet. Still groggy, he made his way over to the big rock where the girl waited.

"Hello," he said, grinning, stretching. "Sorry not to have been more sociable but I was trying to steal a little snooze."

Between rehearsals and the take no time was wasted. The star might fall asleep again.

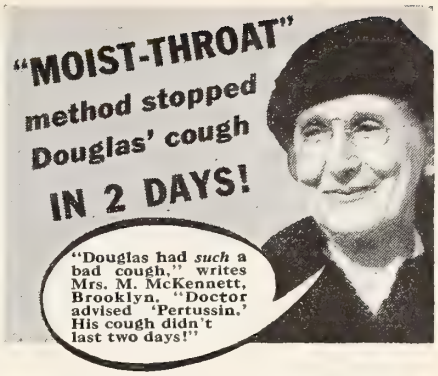
"Camera!" shouted the director.

The star tilted the girl's head back slowly. Until her mouth came beneath his. He whispered her character name. The microphone suspended over their heads was lowered so not one soft word would be lost.

She had to rest against him, hardly seem to hear what he said for her delight in tracing the planes of his face with worshipping fingers. For a second she was caught in the spell. She really did lose track of things. Then she came to. With a frightening start. Confused. Puzzled. the lines the star was saying were strange to her, not at all the familiar lines which gave her her cue.

"For God's sake!" The director's call cut through her fears. He waved the script in the air. "You're off on the wrong speech," he told the star. "You're reading the sequence you had with another gal. In the picture we finished last week. Boy! You're asleep on your feet!"

They finished those love scenes but it took all day to do it. The following evening the girl went into the projection room to look at the rushes, hoping for the best but quite prepared for the worst.



She was dumbfounded. Those scenes had great emotion. Proving, of course, both knew their stuff. Besides, the star appeared thrilling and romantic. The drowsy look in his eyes passed, effectively enough, for another look, another look entirely.

Things aren't always what they seem to be.

"The other experience happened before

More celebrities at the Cohen banquet. Wes Ruggles, Toby Wing, Arline Judge Ruggles and Sir Guy Standing.

Extract of famous medicinal herb stimulates throat's moisture

WHEN you cough, it's usually because your throat's moisture glands have clogged. Their healthy secretions change. Your throat dries, sticky mucus collects. A tickling . . . then a cough! PERTUSSIN stimulates your throat's moisture quickly. Phlegm loosens—is "raised." Relief! Pertussin is safe even for babies. Tastes good.

● Doctors have used Pertussin effectively for over thirty years because it is always safe and sure.

● "It's wonderful for all coughs," writes one doctor. "It always does the work," agrees another.

PERTUSSIN

helps nature cure your cough

I came to pictures," The Girl With Lovely Eyes told me. "While I was playing on Broadway. The men I've worked with in Hollywood have, without exception, been considerate and charming.

"The fact that I had this other experience on the stage made it much worse. For on the stage a love scene isn't something filmed and forgotten. You play it six nights a week and twice on matinee days. You're never done with it."

The star of this stage production, the star who was low enough to take advantage of the scene being played to indulge in indelicate advances, is an actor with a distinguished reputation. Were his name given you'd be inclined to doubt this story. The pity is that it is all too true.

It was the third night of the play's run. Another actress in the cast, the actress who played the star's mistress, came into the girl's dressing-room, indignant and upset.

"The old lecher!" she complained. "In my scene with him in the first act—where he puts his arms around me—well, he puts his arm around me and then some!"

"Tell him," advised the girl, firm and superior in her inexperience and youth, "that if he doesn't stop you'll report him to the manager."

She wasn't a prim young maiden and she had no wish to appear thus. She had, of course, heard about this sort of thing happening sometimes. To think little or nothing about it. This was different. This came close. And she was shocked.

She found the star frightfully repulsive to begin with. Before their love scene together she always had to steel herself. It wasn't simply that his breath was foul from garlic and stale gin. Her dislike of him was beyond explanation, an instinctive, psychic thing.

FOR the last act of that play the stage was dressed as a drawing-room. Towards the end of the act The Girl With Lovely Eyes came on the deserted stage to sit, half-reclining, on a chaise longue. In his role of host, the star followed her, almost immediately, to take his place on the lounge too. There he declared his love.

It was arranged so he walked around to the back of the lounge and sat down, half facing her. As you can see this resulted in her body shielding his hands from the audience the greater part of the time. Unfortunately enough. . . .

To a man with the tendencies of this star, one girl is as good as another. The very same night the other actress reported having called him to task, the girl was startled during their love scene to feel his hand upon her ankle. It was only for a second. It well might have been accidental. She tried to convince herself this was the case.

However, the next evening no doubt regarding his intentions remained. Whereupon she proceeded to do what she had advised that other girl to do. And she was surprised to find how much courage it took.

"Please," she said to the star before the next performance, "please don't be unpleasant when we're on the lounge. You make me nervous."

"Don't be a little fool," he told her. He laughed and rubbed his hands together. The backs of them were covered with a fuzz of yellow hair.

The girl was on the spot. And she knew it.

This star had a reputation in the theatre. His name meant admissions at the box-office. She was a comparative newcomer. For the first time her name was up in lights. The manager would be inclined to side with the star.

And there would be others quick to believe any story he chose to tell and to dismiss her as a cheap little actress looking for publicity. To leave the cast meant giving up a good job as well as risking the chance of a rumor spreading that she really hadn't made good.

She could only hope what she had said would have some effect. It didn't. Things got worse. Much worse. Within a week it wasn't only his hands. His kisses didn't remain stage kisses in which the man places his mouth over the girl's and lets it go at that. And with her audience watching, the girl dared not jeopardize the illusion of their love scene by refusing him his way.

She tried to seat herself on the lounge so she blocked the sight of his hands as little as possible. But their sessions—and sessions is exactly what they were—did not improve in the slightest.

Always now, she was tense, nervous. Always now, she was fortifying herself for that last act, that last scene.

Once during the first act she turned so ill she had to leave the stage for a minute. Her physician told her what she already suspected, that she was suffering from acute nervous indigestion.

EVERY night she had to resist an increasingly strong impulse to push him from her, irrespective of what happened. But time after time she would contain herself until their love scene was over. Then she would slip, slowly and reluctantly, from his arms.

She had worked long and hard to get ahead in the theatre. But not as hard as she must work now to keep her performance up to the mark she had set for it.

At last though, inevitably, she reached the breaking point. She could go on no longer. She had a plan. She would give warning. If he refused to heed it he would suffer the consequences.

Trimly tailored, Ginger Rogers arrived in New York on the Century.

The next night she arrived at the theatre early. She dressed and waited for the star to come in. When she heard him in his room across the hall she went to him.

"You're upsetting me more than you know," she told him. "And you're hurting my performance. If I fall down in this show it will take me a long time to get this far again . . ."

"Cut out the sob stuff," he told her. "And quit posing as a Snow Maiden. A little loving does no harm. And, with your eyes, you should be able to handle it."

His insistence that she enjoyed his advances or at least might enjoy them, made her feel low and cheap.

She paused at the door. "I'm giving you warning!" she said. "If you aren't different tonight, it is going to be your performance that will suffer, not mine!"

Calmer, less hysterical, perhaps, she never would have planned what she planned. But once achieving the sense of peace and freedom that came with her conviction that not more than once again would she have to suffer his unprofessional advances, there wasn't a chance that she would fail to go through with it.

The curtain went up. On the first act. On the second act. The third act got under way. They came to the love scene . . .

THE Girl With The Lovely Eyes came on the stage and sat, as usual, half-reclining on the lounge. This time she made no attempt to sit so the star's hands would be in any clearer view.

He came in, sat down beside her. He looked sly.

His hands with their yellow fuzz grew bolder. He took her in his arms and held her close. They came to the kiss. As usual he wasn't satisfied simply to put his mouth over her mouth or to kiss her in a casual way. He had the upper hand in that company and he knew it. He apparently believed she had been bluffing, that she wouldn't take any action at all.

"Now!" she told herself. "Now!"

Her hands upon the back of his neck turned feline. She pinched him and scratched him. Hard. As hard as she could. And her intense feeling gave her a greater strength. Then she withdrew from his arms, slowly and with apparent reluctance, once more careful to preserve the play's illusion.

His last few lines with which he brought down the final curtain were not very intelligible. He was beside himself with rage.

The curtain rose again for them to take their bows. They smiled graciously at each other. There wasn't the slightest indication of what they really felt for each other. Then the curtain fell for the last time. Quietly the girl started to leave the stage.

The star caught her by the arm. "I'll report you to Equity!" he told her.

"Do that," she said quietly, "and I'll tell why I had to do what I did."

Now she had the upper hand.

After that he played the love scene circumspectly. He had had his lesson. Even out of spite he daren't do anything else.

Off-stage they didn't speak at all. And that was fine.

The Girl With The Lovely Eyes no longer was nervous, tense, or apprehensive. She was able to give performances which were a real credit to her, performances which brought her to the attention of the movie czars and to her scene with the charming, sleepy hero about which we have already heard.

In the February issue, you will read what The Girl With The Strange Beauty and The Girl With The Orchids have to say. Their revelations are every bit as exciting and thrilling as the ones you have just read. Don't miss their stories!

THE REPORT CARD

THESE PICTURES GET "A"

ANNE OF GREEN GABLES (RKO).
Anne Shirley scores a triumph in the title role and is ably supported by Tom Brown, O. P. Heggie and Helen Westley.

BABY TAKE A BOW (Fox).
Another Shirley Temple triumph. With Jimmy Dunn and Claire Trevor.

THE BARRETTS OF WIMPOLE STREET (M-G-M).
Charles Laughton, Norma Shearer and Fredric March at their best.

BELLE OF THE NINETIES (Paramount).
Mae West as gay and amusing as ever. John Miljan, Roger Pryor, John Mack Brown and Katherine DeMille in supporting roles.

BULLDOG DRUMMOND STRIKES BACK (20th Century).
First-rate mystery. Ronald Colman, Loretta Young and Charlie Butterworth.

THE CAPTAIN HATES THE SEA (Columbia).
It all takes place on board ship and it's plenty exciting. The cast boasts such names as Walter Connolly, John Gilbert, Alison Skipworth, Victor McLaglen, Helen Vinson, Fred Keating and Wynne Gibson.

CHAINED (M-G-M).
Thoroughly entertaining. Clark Gable, Otto Kruger and Joan Crawford.

CLEOPATRA (Paramount).
Lavish production. With Claudette Colbert, Warren William and Henry Wilcoxon.

DAMES (Warners).
One of the better musicals. With Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell and Joan Blondell.

THE GAY DIVORCEE (RKO).
Simply swell musical with some real laughs and Fred Astaire's divine dancing. In addition there are Ginger Rogers, Edward Everett Horton, Alice Brady and Erik Rhodes and Eric Blore in minor roles.

THE GIRL FROM MISSOURI (M-G-M).
Jean Harlow is swell as a chorus girl who is ambitious to enter society. With Lionel Barrymore, Lewis Stone, Patsy Kelly and Franchot Tone.

GREAT EXPECTATIONS (Universal).
Charles Dickens' immortal story superbly enacted by Henry Hull, Florence Reed, Phillips Holmes and Jane Wyatt.

THE GREAT FLIRTATION (Paramount).
Elissa Landi is exceptionally good. Adolphe Menjou and David Manners here, too.

HANDY ANDY (Fox).
A Will Rogers opus. 'Nuff said?

HAPPINESS AHEAD (First National).
Dick Powell and Josephine Hutchinson, a newcomer, in a nice little story that will amuse and entertain you. "Pop Goes My Heart," as Dick sings it, is swell.

HOUSE OF ROTHSCHILD (20th Century).
Don't fail to see this. Arliss, Loretta Young and Robert Young.

THE HUMAN SIDE (Universal).
Adolphe Menjou, Doris Kenyon, Reginald Owen, Charlotte Henry and Dickie Moore in a nice story that can't offend the censors.

JANE EYRE (Monogram).
Virginia Bruce and Colin Clive in the screen version of the Bronte novel.

JUDGE PRIEST (Fox).
Will Rogers does a grand job and is ably supported by Berton Churchill, Henry B. Walthall, Rochelle Hudson, Anita Louise and Tom Brown.

KID MILLIONS (Sam Goldwyn).
Another Eddie Cantor hit. The usual beautiful girls, lovely settings, hot music and swell gags. Ann Sothern, Ethel Merman, Block and Sully and Warren Hymer.

LADY BY CHOICE (Columbia).
About a fan dancer, Carole Lombard, who goes to an old ladies' home to adopt a mother, May Robson. Walter Connolly and Roger Pryor here, too. You'll enjoy it immensely.

THE LIFE OF VERGIE WINTERS (RKO).
Ann Harding and John Boles.

LITTLE MAN, WHAT NOW? (Universal).
Margaret Sullavan and Douglass Montgomery in the screen version of the popular novel.

MADAME DU BARRY (Warners).
A beautiful production with Dolores Del Rio in the title role.

THE MERRY WIDOW (M-G-M).
This should be on your "must" list. Jeanette MacDonald and Maurice Chevalier are delightful.

MURDER AT THE VANITIES (Paramount).
A musical-murder comedy, with Carl Brisson and Kitty Carlisle.

ONE MORE RIVER (Universal).
Courtroom drama. Excellent performances by Diana Wynyard, Frank Lawton and Colin Clive.

ONE NIGHT OF LOVE (Columbia).
Beautiful singing by Grace Moore. Don't miss it.

OPERATOR 13 (M-G-M).
A spy story with Marion Davies and Gary Cooper.

POWER (British-Gaumont).
Conrad Veidt's portrayal of "Jew Suss" is very worth while.

THE PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS (Paramount).
About the Revolutionary Days and "bundling." With Francis Lederer, Joan Bennett, Charlie Ruggles and Mary Boland.

ROMANCE IN THE RAIN (Universal).
Delightful comedy. Roger Pryor, Heather Angel, Victor Moore and Esther Ralston.

SHE LOVES ME NOT (Paramount).
One of the better comedies. With Bing Crosby, Miriam Hopkins and Kitty Carlisle. Bing warbles "Love in Bloom."

TARZAN AND HIS MATE (M-G-M).
Johnny Weissmuller, Maureen O'Sullivan and Neil Hamilton.

THE THIN MAN (M-G-M).
An excellent mystery. Myrna Loy and William Powell make a swell team.

TREASURE ISLAND (M-G-M).
Jackie Cooper, Wally Beery, Lewis Stone, Otto Kruger and Lionel Barrymore in the Robert Louis Stevenson tale.

TWENTIETH CENTURY (Columbia).
Entertainment plus. John Barrymore and Carole Lombard.

VIVA VILLA (M-G-M).
Fine characterization by Wally Beery. Stu Erwin and Katherine DeMille in supporting roles.

WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS (M-G-M).
Don't miss Helen Hayes in this. Brian Aherne, Madge Evans and Lucille Watson.

THE WHITE PARADE (Fox).
Loretta Young gives one of her best performances to date in this hospital story. John Boles, Dorothy Wilson and Jane Darwell deserve praise, too.

THESE PICTURES GET "B"

AFFAIRS OF A GENTLEMAN (Universal).
Rather clever mystery. With Paul Lukas, Leila Hyams, Lillian Bond, Onslow Stevens and Dorothy Burgess.

THE AGE OF INNOCENCE (RKO).
John Boles and Irene Dunne.

BACHELOR BAIT (RKO).
Stu Erwin heads a matrimonial agency. Pert Kelton, Skeets Gallagher and Rochelle Hudson are in it.

BEYOND THE LAW (Columbia).
Thrills aplenty in this Tim McCoy opus. Shirley Grey is his leading lady.

BIG HEARTED HERBERT (Warners).
Nice comedy. With Guy Kibbee, Aline MacMahon and Pat Ellis.

BY YOUR LEAVE (RKO).
It's all Frank Morgan, but no one should mind that. With Genevieve Tobin, Neil Hamilton, Marian Nixon and Gene Lockhart.

CARAVAN (Fox).
Its tuneful gypsy music and make-believe atmosphere will thrill you. Charles Boyer, Loretta Young, Jean Parker and Phillips Holmes head a large cast.

THE CAT'S PAW (Fox).
Harold Lloyd's latest offering. With Una Merkel, George Barbier and Nat Pendleton.

CHANGE OF HEART (Fox).
Janet Gaynor and Charlie Farrell.

CHU CHIN CHOW (Gaumont-British).
A musical that's different. With Anna May Wong and Fritz Kortner.

THE CIRCUS CLOWN (Warners).
The Joe E. Brown fans will be pleased.

COCKEYED CAVALIERS (RKO).
Wheeler and Woolsey as funny as ever. Also Thelma Todd, Noah Beery and Dorothy Lee.

COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO (United Artists).
Robert Donat and Elissa Landi in Alexander Dumas' thrilling story. Don't miss it.

DANGEROUS CORNER (RKO).
Unusual mystery. With Virginia Bruce, Conrad Nagel, Melvyn Douglas, Ian Keith and Erin O'Brien Moore.

DESIRABLE (Warners).
Jean Muir, George Brent and Verree Teasdale turn in exceptionally good performances.

EMBARRASSING MOMENTS (Universal).
Neat comedy. With Chester Morris and Marian Nixon.

ENTER MADAME (Paramount).
Elissa Landi, as the temperamental prima donna, and Cary Grant, as the husband who rebels against being nothing more than her pet Peke carrier. Lynne Overman, Sharon Lynne, Frank Albertson and Cecilia Parker, too.

THE FIGHTING RANGER (Columbia).
For the Buck Jones fans.

THE FIREBIRD (Warners).
A murder mystery that is decidedly different. Verrree Teasdale, Ricardo Cortez, Anita Louise and Lionel Atwill.

FOG OVER FRISCO (First National).
A mystery. With Bette Davis, Donald Woods, Lyle Talbot and Margaret Lindsay.

GENTLEMEN ARE BORN (Warners).
Concerning the fate of four college boys, Franchot Tone, Ross Alexander, Nick Foran and Robert Light. Margaret Lindsay, Jean Muir and Ann Dvorak provide the heart interest.

I Reduced my Hips 4 inches in just 4 Weeks

"This is the first testimonial I have ever written, but I have had such wonderful results from using the Hemp Bodi - Massager that I feel I should express my thanks. I purchased the massager four weeks ago, and have reduced my hips four inches and my waistline two and a half inches. In fact I have had to have all my clothes altered, and what a thrill to see the inches come off! With best wishes for the success of the Bodi-Massager."

(Signed) Mrs. R. R., 56th St., N. Y. City.

This is but one of many unsolicited letters from enthusiastic users of the Hemp Bodi-Massager. (Names and addresses on request.)

It's Easy to Reduce

The Hemp Bodi-Massager removes fat where fat should come off. It takes off bulges quickly and easily from waist —hips—arms—legs or thighs and makes double chins disappear like magic. It firms up flabby flesh, strengthens and flexes muscles and brings grace of carriage and a soft and lovely skin.

Invented by a professional masseur it weighs less than a pound and uses no electrictiy. When pushed over the body, the soft rubber spherically pick up and knead the muscles and tissues with the firm gentle action of a skillful hand massage. This is not only an effective aid in acquiring a lovely figure, but does wonders for a tired body and frazzled nerves.

Write today for details of this safe and sure way to new body beauty. There is no cost or obligation.

THE CONLEY COMPANY, INC.
521 First Ave., N. W. Rochester, Minnesota

ANY PHOTO ENLARGED

Size 8x10 inches or smaller if desired. Same price for full length or bust form, groups, landscapes, pet animals, etc., or enlargements of any part of group picture. Safe return of original photo guaranteed.

47c

SEND NO MONEY Just mail photo or snapshot (any size) and within a week you will receive your beautiful life-like enlargement, guaranteed fadeless. Pay postman 47c plus postage—or send 49c with order and we pay postage. Big 16x20-inch enlargement sent C. O. D. 78c plus postage or send 80c and we pay postage. Take advantage of this amazing offer now. Send your photos today. Specify size wanted.

STANDARD ART STUDIOS
104 S. Jefferson St. Dept. 1325-A CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

Brand New NOW ONLY $17.95 UP

TYPEWRITER

PORTABLES

10¢ a Day · Easy Terms

Sensational Low Prices and easy terms on limited supply only. All brand new, up-to-date—4 row keyboard. Fully Guaranteed.

SEND NO MONEY—10 Day Trial

Send for special new literature and money-saving, easy pay plan with 10 day trial offer. Also amazing bargains in standard size, rebuilt office models on FREE trial offer.

International Typewriter Exch., 231 W. Monroe St. Dept. 161, Chicago

Carry Christmas Parcels Easily

Buy Deubener's (America's Standard) Shopping Bags, The Shoppers' favorite for 16 Years.

5c

For Sale at YOUR 5 & 10c Store

DEUBENER'S SHOPPING BAG, INC.
Garfield Park, Indianapolis, Ind.

HAT, COAT AND GLOVE (RKO).
Worth your time—the courtroom scene is especially interesting. Ricardo Cortez, Barbara Robbins, John Beal and Dorothy Burgess stand out in their roles.

HAVE A HEART (M-G-M).
About a cripple. Jean Parker, Jimmy Dunn, Una Merkel, and Stu Erwin are in it.

HERE COMES THE GROOM (Paramount).
Jack Haley and Mary Boland in a hilarious comedy.

HIDE-OUT (M-G-M).
Bob Montgomery and Maureen O'Sullivan are grand in this charming story.

JIMMY THE GENT (Warners).
Jimmy Cagney and Bette Davis.

KENTUCKY KERNELS (RKO).
A Wheeler and Woolsey laugh-getter. Mary Carlisle, Spanky McFarland and Noah Beery.

KISS AND MAKE-UP (Paramount).
Burlesquing beauty parlors. Cary Grant, Helen Mack, Genevieve Tobin and Edward Everett Horton.

LADIES SHOULD LISTEN (Paramount).
Cary Grant, Frances Drake, Nydia Westman and Edward Everett Horton in an entertaining comedy. Charles Ray has a minor role.

THE LAST GENTLEMAN (20th Century).
George Arliss, Edna May Oliver, Janet Beecher and Ralph Morgan.

LET'S TALK IT OVER (Universal).
A comedy with Chester Morris and Mae Clarke.

MANHATTAN MELODRAMA (M-G-M).
Plenty of action and suspense in this Gable-Loy-Powell film.

THE MAN WITH TWO FACES (Warners).
Good mystery yarn. Edward G. Robinson, Mary Astor and Ricardo Cortez.

MANY HAPPY RETURNS (Paramount).
Starring those two funsters of the air waves, Gracie Allen and George Burns.

MELODY IN SPRING (Paramount).
Some lovely music and nice singing. Lanny Ross, Mary Boland and Ann Sothern.

MENACE (Paramount).
If you're looking for a murder mystery, see this one. With Paul Cavanagh, Gertrude Michael, Henrietta Crosman and John Lodge.

MEN IN WHITE (M-G-M).
Hospital drama. Excellent performances by Clark Gable and Elizabeth Allan.

THE MERRY FRINKS (Warners).
Swell comedy. Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee and Allen Jenkins at their best.

MIDNIGHT ALIBI (Warners).
Richard Barthelmess in a gangster role. With Ann Dvorak and Helen Chandler.

MILLION DOLLAR RANSOM (Universal).
About a fellow who wants to forget his prison days and go straight. Lots of action in this one. Edward Arnold, Phillips Holmes, Mary Carlisle and Andy Devine.

MURDER IN THE PRIVATE CAR (M-G-M).
Laughs and thrills. Charlie Ruggles, Mary Carlisle and Una Merkel are in it.

MURDER ON THE BLACKBOARD (RKO).
A murder-mystery comedy. Edna May Oliver and Jimmy Gleason are grand.

THE NOTORIOUS SOPHIE LANG (Paramount).
Paul Cavanagh and Gertrude Michael as a couple of jewel thieves.

NOW AND FOREVER (Paramount).
Gary Cooper, Carole Lombard and Shirley Temple.

THE OLD-FASHIONED WAY (Paramount).
W. C. Fields being very funny.

OUR DAILY BREAD (Viking-United Artists).
About the depression. Karen Morley and Tom Keene do a fine job.

PECK'S BAD BOY (Sol Lesser-Fox).
You'll enjoy Jackie Cooper and Thomas Meighan in this.

THE PERSONALITY KID (Warners).
Story about a prizefighter. Pat O'Brien and Glenda Farrell.

PRIVATE SCANDAL (Paramount).
Mystery with laughs. Mary Brian, Phillips Holmes and ZaSu Pitts.

READY FOR LOVE (Paramount).
Richard Arlen and Ida Lupino in a nice little comedy. Marjorie Rambeau and Trent Durkin.

THE RICHEST GIRL IN THE WORLD (RKO).
Some very amusing situations develop in this tale about a gal who wants to be sure that the man she marries is really in love with her. Miriam Hopkins is the gal and Joel McCrea, Henry Stephenson, Fay Wray and Reginald Denny are in the supporting cast.

THE ST. LOUIS KID (Warners).
Jimmy Cagney doesn't let his fans down in this one a-tall. You'll like him. Allen Jenkins and Patricia Ellis with him.

SERVANTS' ENTRANCE (Fox).
Janet Gaynor and Lew Ayres in a rather improbable story. The Gaynor fans may like it.

SHE HAD TO CHOOSE (Majestic).
Rather weak story but good work by Regis Toomey, Isabel Jewell, Sally Blane and Larry Crabbe makes it worth seeing.

SHE LEARNED ABOUT SAILORS (Fox).
Alice Faye and Lew Ayres.

SHOOT THE WORKS (Paramount).
Musical, featuring Jack Oakie and Ben Bernie.

SISTERS UNDER THE SKIN (Columbia).
Interesting performances by Elissa Landi, Joseph Schildkraut and Frank Morgan.

SMARTY (Warners).
Grand comedy. Joan Blondell, Warren William and Edward Everett Horton.

STUDENT TOUR (M-G-M).
"Professor" Butterworth and Jimmy Durante will give you a laugh or two. Newcomer Phil Regan has a nice voice.

STAMBOUL QUEST (M-G-M).
Myrna Loy, George Brent and Lionel Atwill in a spy tale.

SUCH WOMEN ARE DANGEROUS (Fox).
Rochelle Hudson and Warner Baxter.

WE LIVE AGAIN (Sam Goldwyn).
Anna Sten and Fredric March in a talkie version of the silent picture, "Resurrection."

WE'RE NOT DRESSING (Paramount).
Bing Crosby, Carole Lombard and Burns-Allen.

WE'RE RICH AGAIN RKO).
Some very funny situations here. Edna May Oliver in a polo outfit is a treat in itself. Billie Burke, Joan Marsh, Marian Nixon, Reginald Denny and Grant Mitchell contribute to the general merriment.

WHERE SINNERS MEET (RKO).
Unusual story. With Diana Wynyard, Billie Burke, Reginald Owen and Alan Mowbray.

WHIRLPOOL (Columbia).
Jack Holt and Jean Arthur.

WOMAN'S MAN (Monogram).
A better-than-average tale about Hollywood. With Marguerite de la Motte, John Halliday and Wallace Ford.

THE WORLD MOVES ON (Fox).
Madeleine Carroll, Franchot Tone and Raul Roulien head a large cast.

WHOM THE GODS DESTROY (Columbia).
Walter Connolly.

YOU BELONG TO ME (Paramount).
Lee Tracy, Helen Mack and David Holt.

THESE PICTURES GET "C"

ADVENTURE GIRL (Van Beuren-RKO).
Joan Lowell in the title role.

ALL MEN ARE ENEMIES (Fox).
Helen Twelvetrees and Hugh Williams do their best.

THE BLACK CAT (Universal).
Karloff and Lugosi together.

BRITISH AGENT (Warners).
Leslie Howard and Kay Francis in the film version of the popular book.

CHARLIE CHAN IN LONDON (Fox).
Warner Oland, Drue Leyton and Mona Barrie continue in the latest "Chan" thriller.

CITY PARK (Chesterfield).
With Sally Blane, H. B. Walthall and Hale Hamilton.

CRIME WITHOUT PASSION (Paramount).
Claude Rains.

CRIMSON ROMANCE (Mascot).
Ben Lyon, Sari Maritza and Eric Von Stroheim in a war picture.

DEATH ON THE DIAMOND (M-G-M).
Baseball yarn. With Robert Young, Madge Evans, Nat Pendleton, Paul Kelly and Ted Healy.

THE DRAGON MURDER CASE (Warners).
Rather dull. Warren William and Lyle Talbot.

THE DUDE RANGER (Fox).
Average Western. George O'Brien and Irene Hervey.

ELMER AND ELSIE (Paramount).
George Bancroft and Frances Fuller in a rather dreary tale.

THE FOUNTAIN (RKO).
Good performances by Ann Harding, Jean Hersholt and Paul Lukas make the film worth while.

FRIENDS OF MR. SWEENEY (Warners).
Charlie Ruggles and Eugene Pallette, former classmates, get together and have one jolly time. Ann Dvorak, Berton Churchill and Robert Barrat are in it, too.

GIFT OF GAB (Universal).
Large cast includes, Edmund Lowe, Gloria Stuart, Paul Lukas, Alice White, Chester Morris, Roger Pryor and a great many radio headliners.

GRAND CANARY (Fox).
Warner Baxter and Madge Evans can't overcome a weak story.

HAROLD TEEN (Warners).
The comic strip on the screen, featuring Hal LeRoy and Rochelle Hudson.

Mary Brian and Joe Morrison at the Cocoanut Grove.

HELL BENT FOR LOVE (Columbia).
Tim McCoy and Lillian Bond.

HE WAS HER MAN (Warners).
Jimmy Cagney.

HIS GREATEST GAMBLE (RKO).
Richard Dix and Dorothy Wilson in a slow-moving tale.

HOUSEWIFE (Warners).
Dull story. With George Brent, Bette Davis and Ann Dvorak.

JOURNAL OF A CRIME (Warners).
Ruth Chatterton's latest.

KANSAS CITY PRINCESS (Warners).
Joan Blondell and Glenda Farrell.

THE LEMON DROP KID (Paramount).
Lee Tracy, Helen Mack, Baby LeRoy, William Frawley, Minna Gombell and Kitty Kelly.

LOVE TIME (Fox).
About Franz Schubert. Nils Asther and Pat Paterson.

MERRY WIVES OF RENO (Warners).
Dull comedy. Glenda Farrell, Guy Kibbee, Margaret Lindsay and Donald Woods.

A MODERN HERO (Warners).
Concerning life in a circus. Richard Barthelmess and Jean Muir.

MURDER IN TRINIDAD (Fox).
Heather Angel and Nigel Bruce in this mystery.

ONE IS GUILTY (Columbia).
Ralph Bellamy and Shirley Grey.

OUTCAST LADY (M-G-M).
Censorship hampers this one, but a fine cast including Constance Bennett, Herbert Marshall, Elizabeth Allan and Ralph Forbes saves it.

THE PARTY'S OVER (Columbia).
Stu Erwin, Ann Sothern and Arline Judge.

RETURN OF THE TERROR (First National).
Lyle Talbot and Mary Astor have the leading roles in this mystery drama.

THE SCARLET EMPRESS (Paramount).
Marlene Dietrich's latest.

SCHOOL FOR GIRLS (Liberty).
Reform school yarn. Sidney Fox, Lucille LaVerne, Lois Wilson, Paul Kelly and Toby Wing in the cast.

SHE WAS A LADY (Fox).
Story and direction are poor, but Helen Twelvetrees gives a sincere performance. Ralph Morgan and Doris Lloyd in supporting roles.

6 DAY BIKE RIDER (Warners).
Typical Joe E. Brown hokum. Maxine Doyle, Frank McHugh and Gordon Westcott.

STINGAREE (RKO).
Richard Dix and Irene Dunne together again.

STRAIGHT IS THE WAY (M-G-M).
Franchot Tone, Karen Morley and Jack LaRue.

STRICTLY DYNAMITE (RKO).
Jimmy Durante and Lupe Velez.

THEIR BIG MOMENT (RKO).
ZaSu Pitts and Slim Summerville are apt to disappoint you this time.

365 NIGHTS IN HOLLYWOOD (Fox).
Showing up some of Hollywood's phoney schools for acting. With Jimmy Dunn, Alice Faye, Grant Mitchell, and those two comedians, Mitchell and Durant.

TRANSATLANTIC MERRY-GO-ROUND (Reliance-United Artists).
Musical murder-mystery that doesn't quite hit the mark, in spite of a huge cast: Gene Raymond Nancy Carroll, Mitzi Green, Jack Benny, Boswell Sisters and many more "names."

WAGON WHEELS (Paramount).
Better-than-average Western, featuring Randolph Scott, Gail Patrick, Raymond Hatton and Monte Blue.

WAKE UP AND DREAM (Universal).
Nice musical. Russ Columbo, June Knight, Roger Pryor and Henry Armetta.

WEDNESDAY'S CHILD (RKO).
Interesting story about divorce. Edward Arnold's performance is outstanding. Frankie Thomas and Karen Morley here, too.

YOUNG AND BEAUTIFUL (Mascot).
William Haines, Judith Allen, Vince Barnett, John Miljan and the Wampas Stars of 1934.

THESE PICTURES GET "D"

BEGGARS HOLIDAY (Tower).
Hardie Albright, Sally O'Neill and Barbara Barondess.

BLACK MOON (Columbia).
Weak yarn. Jack Holt and Fay Wray.

DOWN TO THEIR LAST YACHT (RKO).
Sidney Fox, Mary Boland, Sidney Blackmer, Polly Moran, Sterling Holloway and Ned Sparks in this musical.

A GIRL OF THE LIMBERLOST (Monogram).
Marian Marsh, Ralph Morgan, Louise Dresser and H. B. Walthall.

I GIVE MY LOVE (Universal).
Paul Lukas, Wynne Gibson and Eric Linden fail to make this interesting.

THE LADY IS WILLING (Columbia).
Very disappointing. Leslie Howard, Binnie Barnes and Nigel Bruce are in it.

LET'S BE RITZY (Universal).
Lew Ayres and Patrica Ellis.

THE MOST PRECIOUS THING IN LIFE (Columbia).
Don't waste your time on this one. Jean Arthur, Richard Cromwell, Anita Louise and Donald Cook.

NO RANSOM (Liberty).
Leila Hyams, Phillips Holmes and Jack LaRue in an impossible story.

PARIS INTERLUDE (M-G-M).
Madge Evans, Robert Young, Una Merkel and Otto Kruger.

SECRET OF THE CHATEAU (Universal).
Very bad. Claire Dodd, Jack LaRue, Alice White, George E. Stone and Ferdinand Gottschalk.

STOLEN SWEETS (Chesterfield).
Charles Starrett and Sally Blane in a dull yarn.

Between You and Me

(Continued from page 11)

Boosting Bradford

This is just a rave over John Bradford, who took that difficult role of Adrian Almont in "365 Nights in Hollywood" and simply made it sit up and beg! He has everything—looks, personality and a grand speaking and singing voice. He did the villainous side of his role so well that the audience despised him, then found themselves warming to his whimsical, charming personality when he and Alice Faye sang their clever song, and liking the darn guy in spite of themselves! Here's a big bouquet for him, and a fervent hope that we'll see him soon, and often!—Louise Grant, Charleston, W. Va.

A Lew Crusade

I am a crusader for more and better roles for a very miscast star whom we all know as Lew Ayres. Why should his chances for some serious acting be drowned in some silly, if not mediocre, part? After seeing "All Quiet" several years ago and his outstanding performances in "O. K. America" and "State Fair," I think the public expects something better than he has had an opportunity to give. I'm sick of being disappointed in his pictures—I want to see him do something BIG. How's about it?—Virginia Haas.

Personal Nominations

Best male singing voice—Bing Crosby
Best female singing voice—Alice Faye
Best physique—Gilbert Roland
Best figure—Joan Crawford
Most beautiful face—Mary Brian
Most handsome man—Bing Crosby
Prettiest hair—Jean Harlow
Prettiest teeth for women—Mae West
Prettiest teeth for men—Bing Crosby
Best dressed woman—Kay Francis
Best coiffures—Norma Shearer
Best dressed man—William Powell
Best female dancer—Joan Crawford
Best male dancer—Fred Astaire
Best natured fellow—James Dunn
Best natured girl—Joan Blondell
Nicest smile (male)—Bing Crosby
Nicest smile (female)—Frances Dee
Prettiest eyes (male)—Gary Cooper
Prettiest eyes (female)—Claudette Colbert
Prettiest dimples (male)—Clark Gable
Prettiest dimples (female)—June Collyer
Sweetest face (male)—Lew Ayres
Sweetest face (female)—Dixie Lee
Ideal wife—Jobyna Ralston Arlen
Best all 'round fellow—Richard Arlen—These are Cecilia Joseph's selections. What are yours?

Eyes Have It

I have seen Jack LaRue in "Take the Stand" and he plays the part of the columnist as well as he does everything else. But why, oh why, isn't he given a chance at better roles? He has always been a favorite of mine and I have always considered him a great actor, and I'd like nothing better than to see him in a really worth while role. A lover role mostly. What those eyes of his could do to a female's heart is nobody's business.—Miss Jay Loiacono, Jersey City, N. J. (He's had a new nose made to go with his eyes—maybe the combination will bring him a break.)

Ginger Rogers is too good a sport to care if Lew Ayres stepped out one night with Sally Clark, divorced from director Eddie Buzzell after a two-month marriage.

SWEETENS STOMACH GENTLY (CONTAINS NO SODA)

Delightful Mint Relieves Gas.. Heartburn..Sour Stomach..Quick Relief for Millions

PHYSICIANS have warned against treating acid indigestion with harsh, raw alkalies—the tumbler and spoon method. Strong, water-soluble alkalies, taken in excess, may turn the stomach juices into an unnatural alkaline condition—actually arresting digestion!

TUMS free you from this danger. They act as an acid "buffer." The scientific explanation of TUMS is that it acts gently—just enough of the antacid compound is released to counteract over-acidity. When your heartburn or sour stomach is corrected—the balance passes on inert and undissolved, without affecting the blood or kidneys.

Try TUMS. Munch 3 or 4 when distressed. Millions have turned to this gentle, effective treatment—it's quite likely you will, too. 10c at all druggists. 3-roll carrier package, only 25c.

Free 1935 Calendar - Thermometer, beautifully designed in colors and gold. Also samples TUMS and NR. Send stamp for postage and packing to A. H. LEWIS CO., Dpt. 15AMM, St. Louis, Mo.

TUMS FOR THE TUMMY

TUMS ARE ANTACID . . NOT A LAXATIVE

For a laxative, use the safe, dependable Vegetable Laxative NR (Nature's Remedy). Only 25 cents. NR

PHOTO Enlargements

Clear enlargement, bust, full length or part group, pets or other subjects made from any photo, snapshot or tintype at low price of 49c each; 3 for $1.00. Send as many photos as you desire. Return of original photos guaranteed.

ONLY 49¢ EACH

SEND NO MONEY! Just mail photo with name and address. In a few days postman will deliver beautiful enlargement that will never fade. Pay only 49c plus postage or send 50c—3 for $1.00, and we will pay postage ourselves.

BEAUTIFULLY CARVED FRAME FREE! To acquaint you with the HIGH quality of our work we will frame, until further notice, all pastel colored enlargements FREE. Illustrations of beautifully carved frames for your choice will be sent with your enlargement. Don't delay. Act now. Mail your Photos today. Write NEW ERA PORTRAIT COMPANY 11 E. HURON STREET, DEPT. 641 CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

11 x 14 inches

Bewitching fragrance...

and subtle flattery in these lovely toiletries. French essential oils give their exquisite odeur; skin-blend powder tones harmonize with all complexion types. You'll love them . . . and they cost so little!

Use this COUPON for FREE SAMPLES

"RADIO GIRL", Saint Paul, Minn. Send me FREE Regular Size Radio Girl Perfume and Trial Size Radio Girl Face Powder. I am enclosing 10c (coin or stamps) for cost of mailing. (Offer Good in U. S. only.) M-1

Name.....

Address.....

They Visit New York

(Continued from page 12)

Gombell.

* * *

Don't send us any arsenic in the mail, girls. And don't drop by the office to pull our hair. But who do you think we had lunch with a few weeks ago? John Boles. Oh—all right—if you must be a stickler for accuracy—Marcellite Boles, Jawn's wife, came along, too. We said "lunch." As a matter of fact, we went for lunch and spent the day, because, between John's and Marcellite's grand sense of humor and that very good iced tea they were serving, there just didn't seem any point in leaving. (At least, they said it was iced tea.)

Here's a story John told. It's quite respectable, so the children can stay in the room. It's the one about the man who had eight sons. And an old friend, who hadn't seen him for a quarter of a century or something, bumped into him one day and asked what the great big family was doing.

"Well," said the father of eight, "the oldest one's a senator, and the second one is a half-wit, too. The third one got the Croix de Guerre, you know, and the fourth one never went to France either. The fifth one is a banker, and the sixth one is in the next cell. The seventh one is an intellectual and the eighth one is also a sissy."

Marcellite was wearing a gorgeous ring, present from her spouse, and someone made a remark about all Southern girls being born gold-diggers.

"Ye-e-s," drawled Marcellite in her Mason-Dixon accent, "Ah'm a terrible gold-digger. It has taken me fo' years to chisel a trip to New York from Jawn and seventeen years to get this engagement ring."

Which will give you the tip-off that even the fascinatin' J. B. has a few faults just same like other husbands.

* * *

To a certain all-niterie called the Elysée, we went diversion seeking and found there Miss Kay Francis with a very distinguished looking gen'leman who was not Maurice Chevalier. Champagne was being passed and everything was altogether too, too elegant, including Kay's evening wrap. We turned a livid green with envy the minute we saw her. A dyed-in-the-wool movie enthusiast in our party wrote on a menu card, "Dear Miss Francis—I have been a fan of yours for years. Will you please autograph this menu for me?" We grabbed the card before the waiter could take it and added a postscript, lika-dis: "Personally, Miss Francis, we'd settle for your evening wrap."

And what did Miss Francis do? She caught our eye, grinned and made as though to take off the garment. We exchanged winks, the fan got her autograph, and this department went out into the night liking Kay Francis even better than before, as a person who can take time to take a joke.

* * *

Gaumont-British Pictures put on a great deal of dog at a luncheon at the Waldorf-Astoria. It was all in honor of a fourteen-year-old English lassie named, believe us or not, Nova Pilbeam. Nova's name may not be one you'll find in every telephone directory, but what, after all, is in a name, as the chap said when he forged the cheque? Nova is cute. Nova is a brilliant little actress. Nova is a person you'll be seein' in pictures made here and in England, or we miss our guess. She looks less than fourteen, so we know she hasn't started to lie about her age yet. The picture shown after the luncheon was "Little Friend," and it's Nova's show from start to finish.

Incidentally, one of the guests at the speaker's table was Walter Huston, who really ought to do something about making another picture pretty soon. Why, we were a little tot in pigtails when he started this business of playing in "Dodsworth" on the New York stage. Or so it seems. Anyway, there was considerable cross-talk at this same luncheon about Mr. Huston doing a picture in England. Personally, we don't care whether he makes a picture in Hollywood, England or Timbuktoo, just so's he makes one.

At the Cohen Banquet. Seated, Henry Wilcoxon, stage-star Queenie Smith, Cohen, Katherine De Mille and Mary Boland. Standing, writer J. P. McEvoy, W. C. Fields and two boys with perfect sets of teeth—Cary Grant and Carl Brisson.

* * *

Our old friends, Bebe and Ben Lyon, were here on a flying trip. Interpret the word "flying" both ways, for Bebe and Ben came in their own plane and they were forced down outside Pittsburgh in bad weather and had sort of a heck of a time. Practically all they could talk about was their three-year-old Barbara and their conversation is a series of quotes from her bright sayings. They're to be forgiven, of course, just as all other parents of adorable children have to be forgiven. The only way to get Bebe Daniels off the subject of Barbara is to tell her you've discovered a new Chinese restaurant. At that signal, she screams for her hat and a taxi and wonders all the way to the Oriental eaterie whether she'll have a yak-u-mein and plain chop suey, or fuh-yan-deng with shrimp chow mein. But then, Chinese food is Bebe's only vice, so let's not be disagreeable about it.

Out of Their Sorrows

(Continued from page 47)

that lack in her.

Then came marriage and after that pitifully short period of happiness with Kenneth Hawkes, sorrow struck at her severely. When her husband's plane fell from the skies that day, Mary Astor's happiness crashed with him. That day she stopped being a child.

Out of the broken pieces of her life she built a new life for herself . . . a life that was founded on reality. And she knew that before she had only played at living. The illusion was gone now . . . the sense that the things she had must necessarily be permanent. But other things came to take their place. The philosophy she had worked out for herself, the rich understanding and the ability to feel sorrow. Something new came into her life.

She was no longer only a lovely shadow to the fans who saw her on the screen, but a woman who could make them laugh or weep with her . . . a woman who was great because she had become a woman.

A new love came to Mary Astor and a new marriage . . . the deep contentment of happy wifehood . . . the joy of being a mother. Maturity had come to her out of her sorrow and it was maturity that gave her the power to drink more deeply of her new happiness.

Sorrow brought poignancy to Joan Crawford.

Happiness had brought her peace. She had been such a restless girl, that little Lucille Le Sueur who first came to Holly-

Wadyuhknow? Lupe and Johnnie, not fighting. This was taken at the Vendome, just prior to leaving for New York and London, where Lupe is doing a picture.

FOR CHEST COLDS

Distressing cold in chest or throat, that so often leads to something serious, generally eases up quickly when soothing, warming Musterole is applied.

Better than a mustard plaster, Musterole gets action because it's NOT just a salve. It's a "counter-irritant"—stimulating, penetrating, and helpful in drawing out pain and congestion.

Used by millions for 25 years. Recommended by many doctors and nurses. All druggists. In three strengths: Regular Strength, Children's (mild), and Extra Strong, 40¢ each.

RADIO: Tune in the "Voice of Experience," Columbia Network. See newspaper for time.

Good Housekeeping Bureau

MUSTEROLE

BETTER THAN A MUSTARD PLASTER

REG U.S. PAT. OFF.

NRA CODE

BECOME AN EXPERT

ACCOUNTANT

Executive Accountants and C. P. A.'s earn $3,000 to $15,000 a year. Thousands of firms need them. Only 12,000 Certified Public Accountants in the U. S. We train you thoroly at home in spare time for C.P.A. examinations or executive accounting positions. Previous experience unnecessary. Personal training under supervision of staff of C.P.A.'s, including members of the American Institute of Accountants. Write for free book, "Accountancy, the Profession that Pays."

LaSalle Extension University, Dept. 1318H, Chicago

The School That Has Trained Over 1,200 C. P. A.'s

VICK'S VAPORUB

VICK'S CREAMS 10¢ Each

DEAFNESS IS MISERY

Many people with defective hearing and Head Noises enjoy conversation, go to Theatre and Church because they use Leonard Invisible Ear Drums which resemble Tiny Megaphones fitting in the Ear entirely out of sight. No wires, batteries or head piece. They are inexpensive. Write for booklet and sworn statement of the inventor who was himself deaf.

DRUM

A. O. LEONARD, Inc., Suite 986, 70 5th Ave., New York

U. S. GOVERNMENT JOBS!

START

$1260 to $2100 Year

Steady Work
Short Hours

Many Winter Examinations Expected

MEN—WOMEN 18 to 50

Mail Coupon today sure

FRANKLIN INSTITUTE
Dept. K301, Rochester, N. Y.

COUPON

Sirs: Rush to me without charge (1) 32 page book with list of U. S. Government steady Jobs. (2) Tell me how to get one of these jobs.

Name.....

Address.....

wood. Her days were so full of excitement and thrills that she never gave a thought to the years rushing by. Her work (she didn't call it her art, then) meant nothing beyond the things it gave her. Money to lavish on friends in that generous way of hers . . . clothes . . . parties . . . the opportunity of meeting people, gay, exciting people . . . a taste of fame that in turn made her exciting to the people she found stimulating.

Her nights were spent in dashing madly from one party to another, always in the fastest cars money could buy. Speed . . . change . . . that was the tempo of her life. Music . . . fast music . . . faster music . . . music racing in tune to her own restless pulses . . . Dancing . . . . she could never have enough of it . . . and every evening it was a new lad's arms that held her . . . a new lad's eyes that laughed into hers.

She had found a measure of success but critics did not wear out their typewriter ribbons hailing her as a Rachael or a Duse. But Joan Crawford did not care and there is a doubt she would have known then what those names meant.

IT was young Fairbanks who taught her what they meant . . . what other things meant. In all the flurry of amazement that greeted their romance no one could have been more surprised than Joan herself that she had fallen in love with this studious, sensitive boy. And no one was more surprised than she at the contentment that came to her in making his life her own.

Stars . . . she had probably thought the lights that flickered before Grauman's Chinese Theatre much more beautiful before . . . but now stars became tenderness. Books . . . she had never known how fascinating they could be, how they could open a whole world before her eyes. Music . . . how different was this music Douglas loved . . . this music that ached in your heart . . . from the turbulent rhythm she had once danced to. And home became more than a name to her.

All these things worked their change in her and her audiences felt that change. Slowly Joan began to emerge from the jazzy, carefree roles she had played, into fuller, more interesting ones. But there was still a long way to go before she would come into her greatest glory . . . before she would stand at the very peak of her profession.

Sorrow brought her to that peak. Sorrow moving in its devious way, carrying her first into the valley, that she would the more surely reach the pinnacle.

Something happened to the love that had seemed so unchanging and so sure. And the fact that there is so little known of the thing that came between them, that neither Joan nor Douglas would ever discuss each other except in the friendly, civilized way that brought them the respect of everybody, shows how much that love must once have meant.

Joan's face changed subtly. Her eyes held shadows, her mouth a hint of sadness that blotted out the smile that had always come too easily before. Her heart still held the things young Doug had given her . . . stars and music and gardens, fresh smelling and sweet in a spring rain . . . home and its quiet things, its gentle things. But Doug was no longer there to share them with her.

Poignancy came to her then, in her nostalgia for the love that had slipped away from her. And it is that yearning for something lost and unforgotten that has crept into her art. Her art that used to be her work. . . .

Sorrow brought glamor to Garbo.

It's become quite the thing to laugh at those old pictures of the Greta Garbo which Mauritz Stiller brought with him from Sweden. And yet the glamorous Garbo emerged from the drab chrysalis of that gauche, bewildered girl. But that was afterwards, when Stiller lay in his lonely grave and the width of the Atlantic was between him and the girl he had loved so selflessly.

There is no doubt that Garbo loved him, too . . . that he is the only man she ever really loved. Only for a while she lost sight of that love in the tumultuous wooing of John Gilbert . . . in the strangeness of the new life opening before her.

Mauritz Stiller did not live to see the new Garbo. The glamorous Garbo, the Garbo clothed in mystery, the enigmatic Garbo who has captured the imagination of the world. But even if he had lived he could never have seen her.

For it was his death that brought her solitude. Garbo shut her sorrow in her heart. And one can only guess how much remorse there was mixed in that sorrow. She could no longer endure to be with people . . . people who laughed and talked and were so unconscious of the fact that the world lay in darkness, that the light of the sun and moon and stars had gone out forever more.

In her sorrow she walked alone through soft spring rains and it was as if the heavens were weeping with her. And her eyes looked beyond the poppies in California fields to the delicate pink linnae trailing in her native woods, to the primroses and violets and bluebells they had gathered in their own Swedish meadows as they dreamed of glory in the promised land across the sea.

Heartache . . . loneliness became her life . . . the private life she so jealously reserved for herself. And the gods laughed as they twisted these things into a satirical gift for her. Heartache . . . loneliness . . . they because mystery and glamor to her millions of fans.

SORROW gave a new career to Mary Pickford.

She had worked so hard all her life. As a child trudging from one manager's office to another, as a girl pioneering as gallantly as any frontier woman in the mazes of a new art, as a woman holding the stellar position in the industry she had helped make great.

For years, fate gave with an unstinting hand to her. Fame . . . a fortune financiers have envied . . . love. Most prodigally of all, it gave love to her. Her mother's love that was so wholly complete it left her independent of friendship, her brother Jack's love, gay and irresponsible, brightening her days with laughter. Then the dearest love of all, the love that flamed so quickly between her and Douglas Fairbanks, the love that endured for so many years.

She grew from that shadow child who had won America's heart to the woman the years had made too mature for the roles her audiences demanded of her. She tried other roles but the public would have none of them. She knew that her work was finished. But it did not seem so hard then to retire. She could give all her time to the ones she loved. After all, love was the most important thing in the world.

In a little more than a year all that love was swept away from her. Her mother died first. She had expected that, of course, in the months when Charlotte Pickford lay helpless in her last illness, but it was no less cruel for all that. And then Jack . . . her little brother . . . Jack who had loved gayety so, and charming, stimulating people . . . Jack dying alone in a hospital in Paris. Then Douglas . . . that different loss must have been hardest of all . . . for it was to life she lost him.

Mary looked into her sorrowing heart and found the things that had seemed unimportant before. She found friends again, the old ones she had not needed before, the new ones that opened unexpected vistas for her. She found the knowledge of life that had come to her in all those years of climbing and working.

And out of them came her writing and the joy in it that has given her a new kind of happiness . . . a lasting happiness. For she has discovered that writing is the one thing fate cannot take away from her. Let sorrow come again . . . her stories will be the richer for it. Let age come . . . those stories will only be the more understanding. It is good to have a thing like that in your grasp, a thing that will never become familiar and stale . . . a thing that will remain forever new, exciting and unfinished. More recently, Mary has found radio opening its arms to her. New work to do. A new zest added to life.

Howard Hughes' charming companion is Warner Bros.' youthful and promising player, Patricia Ellis. Scotty snapped them at the Trocadero.

Elizabeth Allan and Frank Lawton of "David Copperfield" cast, at the Trocadero. Frank Lawton is a little tired of being thought Charles Laughton's son, and having his name spelled with an "ugh."

Sorrow brought freedom to Frances Marion.

When George Hill's tragic death shocked Hollywood, its heart flowed out in sympathy for Frances Marion who had been his wife and was still his friend. Sorrow had struck at her so repeatedly. She had seen so many friends go. Jessie, the secretary, whom she loved as a sister. Lorna Moon, the writer whose brilliant career was stopped by her early death. Marie Dressler, the most loved friend of all.

George Hill's will spoke of Frances Marion as his beloved divorced wife . . . a tribute that drew editorials from hard-boiled newspaper men all over the country. More than anything else that tribute reveals Frances Marion as the most truly loved woman in Hollywood.

She has always lived close to sorrow. It is because she has lived life so fully, drunk of it so deeply that she has become the great writer she is . . . the one writer for the screen who has remained at the very peak for the twenty years she has been writing for it.

Illness had made her childhood a cloistered one, shut away from other children. A strange child, a lonely child, she grew into a woman whose life became an amazing pattern of adventure and change and tragedy.

It was that lonely little girl, listening to the laughter of other children, who crept into her script of "The Poor Little Rich Girl" and lived in all those other stories she wrote for Mary Pickford. It is the woman who has travelled all over the world, taking its sorrow with the same unflinching courage with which she takes its joys, who breathes in every story she writes. "The Champ" . . . "Min and Bill" . . . "Emma" . . .the greatest box office attractions the screen has ever known were written from that understanding, tolerant heart of hers.

Her early sorrows brought success to Frances Marion, but the ones that have crowded each other so relentlessly in the last few years have brought freedom to her.

She thought she had lost her world when Fred Thompson died, her husband and the father of her two little boys. But it was because he died that Christmas afternoon that sorrow gave her freedom. Success had chattled her with possessions. The million-dollar home on a Hollywood mountain top, the priceless antiques they had collected together, the library of rare first editions, the house at the beach, the huge cabin in the mountains . . . all of them things chaining her to them . . . driving her to work beyond her strength to make the money for the taxes and the maintenance and the insurance it cost to keep them.

One day she stood looking out at the sunlight that slanted through the trees to the courtyard below her window and she remembered how she had come cantering over that courtyard with Fred Thompson and how they had laughed together as they had dismounted from their horses. Fred Thompson had loved that courtyard, those huge stables filled with blooded horses, that house with its priceless treasures.

INSTANT, SAFE, SURE RELIEF!

New De Luxe Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads for Corns, Callouses, Bunions and Sore Toes instantly relieve pain; stop shoe pressure; soothe and heal; prevent sore toes and blisters; ease new or tight shoes, and quickly, safely remove corns and callouses.

New SKINTEX Covering

De Luxe Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads have the marvelous new, velvety soft, flesh color Skintex covering which does not soil, stick to the stocking or come off in the bath. Hides foot blemishes. Sold everywhere. Get a box today.

NEW De Luxe FLESH COLOR WATERPROOF

Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads

Put one on—the pain is gone!

LANNY ROSS ENTERTAINS

Tune in each Wednesday for the romantic songs of Lanny Ross. America's favorite tenor. . . . Enjoy the danceable rhythms of Harry Salter's Log Cabin Orchestra. . . . And watch for the surprise artist presented each week by RADIO STARS Magazine.

7:30 p.m.—WENR-WLS, Chicago; KWCR, Cedar Rapids; KSO, Des Moines; KOIL, Omaha-Council Bluffs; WREN, Kansas City.

8:30 p.m.—WJZ, New York; WBAL, Baltimore; WMAL, Washington; WSYR, Syracuse; WHAM, Rochester; KDKA, Pittsburgh, WGAR, Cleveland; WCKY, Covington; WJR, Detroit; KPO, San Francisco; KFI, Los Angeles; KGW, Portland, Ore.; KOMO, Seattle; KHQ, Spokane; KFSD, San Diego.

9:30 p.m.—KOA, Denver; KDYL, Salt Lake

10:30 p.m.—WKY, Oklahoma City; WFAA-WBAP, Dallas-Fort Worth; KPRC, Houston; WOAI, San Antonio; KTBS, Shreveport; KTHS, Hot Springs.

But they were no longer his to enjoy.

Knowing that . . . they seemed no longer hers either.

Surprising, that sense of exultation that came with the knowledge that she was free from things. Today Frances Marion can do the things she wants to do. She has time for the music she loves and for her singing, time to write the novels and the plays she always wanted to write but could not because of the gamble it would mean.

If Frances Marion were writing the story of those tears Carole Lombard may be facing today, she would take some of her own heart-ache in fashioning it and the things that have come out of sorrow. Not only her own, but the sorrows of all those other valiant women of Hollywood . . . Mary Astor . . . Joan Crawford . . . Garbo . . . Mary Pickford. All these gallant ones.

Freedom . . . glamor . . . poignancy . . . maturity . . . a career . . she would take them all and fashion them into beauty and courage and power. Shape them from the experience that has come to her into a lasting inspiration.

He Was a Problem Child

(Continued from page 31)

THE many dramas in which March has appeared on stage and screen were spun of no more colorful threads than those woven into his own story—a story which carries a message to every mother's son and every son's mother. The fates must have intended him for the stage and screen, for his early background seemed to have destined him for something else. March says he might have been a gangster. You probably have read that after his youthful life of crime, he landed a job in a teller's cage in a bank. Rather different—yes. Thanks to certain influences, which I'll let him tell you about himself.

He was born in Racine, Wisconsin, on August 31, 1897, and was dunked Frederick McIntyre Bickel. His father was of German lineage; his mother, Cora Marcher (which name inspired him with his stage name), was of English, Scotch and Dutch extraction.

"As I said," March told me, "I was a tough kid. I did speak nice pieces at nice local functions when called upon. But at the age of six I was thrashed for doing an imitation of an old man who hobbled by on crutches. Soon thereafter our gang began building little clubhouses along the shores of Lake Michigan. We stole everything needed for construction and maintenance, from lumber to food and fuel. We engaged in gang fights, used bricks for weapons, and running amuck now and then, tipped over all the Chic Sales in Racine. We were headed straight for the penitentiary, according to all the town authorities, and some of the boys actually reached that destination. Had it not been for the environment of a good home and loving, understanding parents, I, too, might have been a jail bird. I might have been the right-hand man of an Al Capone or a 'Legs' Diamond.

"My boyhood nickname was Bottles. My abilities as a junk picker earned that sobriquet for me. I could 'find' more bottles, more scrap iron, more rags, more old washboards, than any boy in our gang. This might have been due to the fact that I was an observing child and knew just what days the good housewives of Racine went to town. However, the excitement of collecting and selling junk was nothing as compared to the thrill of the theatre—the circumstance that doubtless saved me from the eventual clutches of the law. Racine boasted the Jack Besse Stock Company, and, now and then, provided a good company on tour, such as Maude Adams in 'Peter Pan' and Richard Bennett in 'Damaged Goods.' It was after watching Bennett that I made up my mind to be an actor."

FRED finished high school and wanted to go to the University of Wisconsin but the family funds were low, so he went to work in the Manufacturers' National Bank and worked his way up from the Christmas savings cage to a position as assistant teller. He saved his money and in 1916 entered Wisconsin University. With the outbreak of war, he enlisted, was commissioned a shavetail, and was attending an artillery school when the Armistice was signed. Returning to the university, he won a scholarship for a course in training for foreign service with the National City Bank of New York. All very admirable. But—

"I soon realized it was the thought of foreign travel—not a banking career—that kept me at work," he confesses. "In my heart," he admits, "what I really wanted was to be an actor. I left the bank and went to work as a $3 a day extra in the Long Island studios. Then I went to work posing for illustrators and photographers, and met Norma Shearer, Neil Hamilton, Eleanor Boardman, and others who were earning their bread and butter, posing.

Then came the turning point in the life of Freddie Bickel.

"I stood, one day, in an automat in downtown New York, and flipped my last dime into the air. I was cold and hungry. I had not worked for days. The soles were gone from my shoes and I could not return to my rooming house without cash, for I had been locked out. I caught the dime in my palm, and closed my fist, before looking. Heads, and the dime would be inserted into a sandwich slot and I would eat, and abandon dreams of a stage career; tails, and I would use a nickel to telephone an agency for models, and use the other jitney for carfare.

"I opened my fist, looked, got two nickels for the dime from the cashier, went to the phone, talked to a man, grinned, and hurried for the uptown subway, hungry but happy. Leon Gordon, noted artist, needed a male model. For three hours I stood on the pedestal. At the end of that time Gordon yawned, laid aside his brushes, and turned to me. 'Three hours, three dollars,' he said, handing me three $1 bills. With thoughts of food I hurried for the door.

"'Wait a minute,' called Gordon. 'Would you mind doing an errand for me? Will you run over to the theatre and get me two seats for tonight for 'Lady of the Lamp'?"

"I took another notch in my belt and went to the theatre, bought the tickets, and on the way out, bumped into an agent who told me that two extras were needed at the Belasco theatre for 'Deburau.' He told me I'd better hurry. I ran all the way, and was engaged for a walk-on part. I ran back to Gordon's to deliver the tickets, hurried to the Belasco and was so excited I forgot I was hungry. It was a grand break for me.

"That was the beginning. I became call boy, understudy, stage hand, and bit player, and after twenty-five weeks found myself playing the juvenile lead in 'Deburau.' From then on, it was just plain hard work in stock companies. I wasn't an actor and everyone including myself knew it, and I was advised to get some stock experience.

FIVE years of hardship followed; five years of stock, third-rate companies, cheap boarding houses, thin overcoats, summer clothes for winter, and vice versa; half-soled shoes, second-hand hats, socks with holes in the toes; weary miles of trudging, looking for work, with blistered heels and burning feet. Long days—days during which the activities of gangsters who might even have been his boyhood pals filled the front pages—caused Freddie to wonder if he had chosen the right profession.

Then came Florence Eldridge; they were married in the spring of 1927. She was well known then. She has gradually put aside her career—her husband's was more important to her. She helped him tremendously. She has such a deep understanding for acting and the theatre.

A year later, March was offered the leading role in the Los Angeles production of "The Royal Family." He was offered that role because of his striking resemblance to the John Barrymore of a dozen years ago.

The chap with Mary Carlisle is James Blakely, N. Y. socialite and screen newcomer. At Junior Laemmle's going-away party.

I saw the opening of "The Royal Family" in Los Angeles, the guest of Richard Arlen and Jobyna Ralston.

At the conclusion of the performance Dick turned to me and said, "Ten to one some producer signs him for pictures."

I didn't take the bet. And—well, you sort of know the rest, I think.

March had finished his story. He reached for another drink.

"Do I sound like the sort of coddled egg that writers insist on painting me?" he demanded.

"It sounds like the confession of an egg that just escaped being a yegg," I admitted.

March grinned.

"I think that prefix of 'Freddie' may have had something to do with it," he laughed. "Say, how would 'Bottles' March look in electric lights?"

I reached for my hat.

Freddie led the way to the door. He paused, for a moment, and then, with a wistful look, said:

"I've a grand blurb for your story. 'I Might Have Been a Gangster.'

"And I might have, too," he added.

Reviews—A Tour of Today's Talkies

(Continued from page 55)

mystery," it does not follow the pattern of the ordinary picture of this kind. Instead of the murderer being run down by detectives, a system of psychology is followed and for that reason this number may not appeal to you folks who like your murder mysteries treated in the familiar stock manner. Really, though, there are some grand performances, principally by Anita Louise, the daughter, who rises to great heights in her confessional scene, and Verree Teasdale as the mother who tries to take the blame for the killing in order to save her daughter. Lionel Atwill registers effectively as the husband and father. Ricardo Cortez is the only one who fails to measure up brilliantly. His character just does not click. This is a picture for sophisticated audiences. It is beautifully directed and photographed. You should like it.

A: WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS (M-G-M)

Really enjoyable. Although this is the well known story of a woman who marries a man many years her junior, builds him into a success, loses him to the other woman, and through patience and loyalty wins him back again, it is told and acted with so much charm and sincerity that it takes a front seat in movie entertainment. Helen Hayes, bearing the brunt of bad photography, comes through with a fine performance as the colorless wife. But it is Brian Aherne who stands as the surprise hit of the picture. He makes the character of the conceited, self-satisfied husband so real and human that you never once lose sympathy with him. The remainder of the cast, including Madge Evans and Lucille Watson, is excellent and does much to add to the film. Don't miss it.

B: KENTUCKY KERNELS (RKO-Radio)

A rollicking Wheeler and Woolsey comedy. This combination has never been quite as good or as funny as it is in this little opus, which reeks with hilarity, funny goings-on and downright belly laughs. This time, Wheeler and Woolsey find themselves with a youngster on their hands, who falls heir to some real Kentucky dough. So the boys start South (with Southern accents and all), run smack into a feud, a little romance, and the fun's on. Mary Carlisle is the heart-throb in this case, Noah Beery is the villain and, in spite of the two W's, "Spanky" MacFarland remains the star of the picture. This little youngster practically steals every scene that he's in (and there are a lot of them). Take the whole family to this show and help yourself to a laugh.

Bob Woolsey, Spanky MacFarland and Bert Wheeler in "Kentucky Kernels."

B: THE ST. LOUIS KID (Warners)

A Cagney special. This one starts with a bang and ends with a bang. Jimmy Cagney and Allen Jenkins are two truck drivers. For one reason or t'other, Cagney spends most of his time behind bars. The real trouble begins when he meets Patricia Ellis, smacks into her car, lands in jail, and is even accused of murder. More fun and more laughs in this one. Cagney is his old self again, Jenkins is dumber and funnier than ever, and Patricia Ellis turns in a strong performance in spite of the meagreness of her role. You'll have a grand time for yourself the night you step out to see this.

Paul Cavanagh, Gertrude Michael and John Lodge in "Menace."

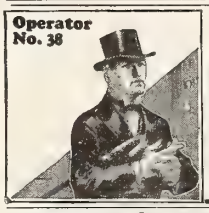
PERFORMS 'EYE MAGIC'

Learn the art of enhancing or changing your personality with a few deft touches of the Soft Luna Eyebrow pencil. Acquire sophistication—the allure of the siren—the attraction of intelligence.

Our booklet, "Eye Magic," tells you how. Write for free copy today.

• Sold in all 5 and 10 cent stores

J. S. Staedtler, Inc., 55 Worth St., N. Y. City



GENTLEMEN: Please send me your booklet "Eye Magic" MS-1

Name_____

Address_____

City_____ State_____

Brand now used_____ Where purchased_____

Follow This Man

Secret Service Operator No. 38 is on the job! Running down Counterfeit Gang. Tell-tale finger prints in murdered girl's room. Thrill, Mystery.

The Confidential Reports of Operator No. 38 made to his chief. Write for th.

Free

Earn a Regular Monthly Salary

YOU can become a Finger Print Expert at home, in spare time. Write for details if 17 or over.

Institute of Applied Science
1920 Sunnyside Ave.
Dept. 72-11 Chicago, Ill.

MAKE MONEY At Home!

EARN steady income each week, working at home, coloring photos and miniatures in oil. Learn famous "Koehne Method" in few weeks. Work done by this method in big demand. No experience nor art talent needed. Many become independent this way. Send for free booklet, "Make Money at Home."

NATIONAL ART SCHOOL, Inc.
3601 Michigan Avenue, Dept. 2361, Chicago, Illinois.

Finished in 18 Kt.

WHITE GOLD 15¢

To introduce our Beautiful Blue White Rainbow Flash Stones, we will send a 1 Kt. IMPORTED Simulated DIAMOND, mounted in Lovely 18 Kt. White-Gold Finish Ring as illustrated, for this ad. and 15c expense. Address: National Jewelry Co., Dept. 18, Wheeling, W. Va. (2 for 25c.)

VOICE

100% Improvement Guaranteed

We build, strengthen the vocal organs—not with singing lessons—but by fundamentally sound and scientifically correct silent exercises.. and absolutely guarantee to improve any singing or speaking voice at least 100% . . . Write for wonderful voice book—sent free, but enclose 3c for part postage. Learn WHY you can now have the voice you want. No literature sent to anyone under 17 unless signed by parent.

PERFECT VOICE INSTITUTE, Studio 72-11
308 No. Michigan Ave., Chicago

Law!

LEARN AT HOME

Are you adult, alert, ambitious, willing to study? Investigate LAW! We guide you step by step—furnish all texts, including 14-volume Law Library. Training prepared by leading law professors and given by members of bar. Degree of LL. B. conferred. Low cost, easy terms. Send NOW for Free, 64-page "Law Training for Leadership."

LaSalle Extension University, Dept. 1318-L Chicago

Read POPULAR SONGS and sing your blues away. Complete words and music to La Cucaracha ● Home on the Range ● Got the Jitters ● Neighbors ● Margie ● You're in My Power ● After You've Gone ● I Ain't Got Nobody ● and dozens of lyrics to your favorite song hits.

Here are some of the songs you'll find in the current issue: I'M WHISTLIN' FOR MY HONEY ● GIGOLETTE ● DREAM OF ME ● IS I GOTTA GO TO SCHOOL, MA? ● DID YOU EVER SEE A DREAM WALKING? ● LOVE THY NEIGHBOR ● ILL WIND ● HOW'S ABOUT TOMORROW NIGHT? ● SHE REMINDS ME OF YOU ● CHRISTMAS NIGHT IN HARLEM ● WITH MY EYES WIDE OPEN I'M DREAMING ● EMALINE ● MY BABY'S ON STRIKE ● IF IT ISN'T LOVE ● GIVE ME A HEART TO SING TO ● MANY THANKS FOR THE DANCE ● HOW CAN YOU FACE ME ● GEORGIE MAY ● AN ORCHID TO YOU ● A BOY AND A GIRL WERE DANCING ● UNDERNEATH THE HARLEM MOON ● HOME JAMES! AND DON'T SPARE THE HORSES ● MOONGLOW ● JUDY ● HE DIDN'T EVEN SAY GOOD-BYE ● SNAPSHOTS OF YOU ● P.S. I LOVE YOU ● IF YOU LOVE ME, SAY SO ● WAY DOWN SOUTH IN NORTH CAROLINA ● BECAUSE OF YOU ● FOR ME AND MY GAL ● BEAUTIFUL LAND OF MY DREAMS ● IN THE MIDDLE OF A KISS ● LA CUCARACHA ●

Popular SONGS

Now on sale - ten cents

B: MENACE (Paramount)

Creepy chill provoker. What with a madman on the loose trying to avenge the death of his brother, this murder mystery has plenty of what it takes to make your hair stand on end. Daggers flying, blood curdling yells, slinky shadows—it's got 'em all. The performers, headed by Gertrude Michael and Paul Cavanagh, are all very effective and the dialogue is better than usual. Halliwell Hobbs, as the butler, is excellent. Henrietta Crosman and John Lodge are fine, too. Lots of action here.

Jean Muir, Franchot Tone, Margaret Lindsay, Ross Alexander, Ann Dvorak, Nick Foran in "Gentlemen Are Born."

B: GENTLEMEN ARE BORN (Warners)

A really good picture. Franchot Tone, Ross Alexander, Nick Foran and Robert Light are four college boys who, upon graduation, go out to set the world on fire, each following a different line of pursuit. To watch their individual struggles—one almost finding success, one domestic hardships, one disgrace and the other death—makes for absorbing and intensely interesting movie fare. Franchot Tone has the finest role of his career and does himself proud, thus proving that he can act if given a chance. The remaining three actors, though not so well known on the screen as yet, are such grand troupers that you'll want to see more of them. Margaret Lindsay, Jean Muir and Ann Dvorak, as the feminine interests, are all good although their roles are secondary.

C: 365 NIGHTS IN HOLLYWOOD (Fox)

Pretty funny fare. Based on the book by Jimmy Starr, Hollywood columnist, this little number has an atmosphere of authenticity that is usually lacking in yarns about Hollywood. The angle here presents one of those phoney schools for acting, presenting its characters as either chiselers or suckers. Jimmy Dunn is the movie director and Alice Faye (from Peoria) is the school's favorite pupil. Through double-crossing means, Dunn turns out a winner with Alice clicking as the star. Alice Faye does right well by herself in this one and shows promise of bigger and better things in the future. Jimmy Dunn turns in a sincere performance and Grant Mitchell, of course, is always reliable. Jack Durant and Frank Mitchell are responsible for most of the howls.

Victor McLaglen, Walter Connolly and John Gilbert in "The Captain Hates the Sea."

A: CAPTAIN HATES THE SEA (Columbia)

A la "Grand Hotel." With all the action taking place on board a ship going from San Pedro to New York, plenty of opportunity is given for the introduction of many and varied characters, all very interestingly drawn. There is the captain, Walter Connolly, who really hates the sea, the perpetually drunk writer, as portrayed by John Gilbert, Alison Skipworth, the well-to-do widow, Helen Vinson and Fred Keating, the two thieves, and Victor McLaglen, as the detective who gets what he's after, plus others too many to mention. Besides the interesting characterizations, Lewis Milestone has directed the picture superbly, wringing the most out of every situation in this intriguing tale. Chalk this up as another Columbia winner that you should see.

C: 6 DAY BIKE RIDER (Warners)

Typical Brown farce. All you Joe E. fans can go to this show knowing that you will get just what you have come to expect from this actor—a funny, if somewhat "hick" comedy. Joe E. plays the usual small town lad who makes good in the end. The bike race sequence is extremely well done and provides a chance for plenty of gags, thrills, as well as an opportunity for Brown to exhibit his talents on a bike. Maxine Doyle is the love-interest in the case and a very nice one she is. Frank McHugh, as Joe's partner, comes in for his share of fun.

Joe E. Brown and Maxine Doyle in "6 Day Bike Rider."

A: ANNE OF GREEN GABLES (RKO-Radio)

Knockout entertainment. If this picture had the star names of "Little Women," I'd be tempted to say that you would like it just as much. The situations in the story will keep you on the edge of your seat all evening, with plenty of laughs to balance the tears. The real treat, though, is the personal hit scored by Anne Shirley. What a performance! This gal is going places. Helen Westley and O. P. Heggie contribute masterful performances and Tom Brown is fine. It is our sincere hope that you will not be scared away from this picture by the lack of big names. If you are, you'll miss one of the best pictures of the year.

Anne Shirley and Tom Brown in "Anne of Green Gables."

A: THE WHITE PARADE (Fox)

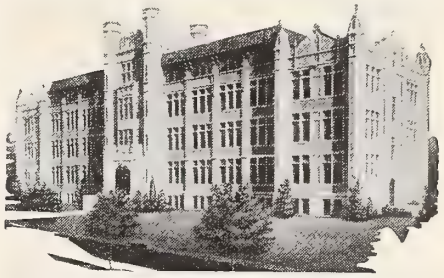
An excellent picture. It isn't often you run across a film that is as good as this one. Not only is the story of high interest—centering around a hospital and nurses' training school and containing moments of tense drama and sparkling comedy—but Loretta Young turns in a performance that places her right in the front ranks as a finished dramatic actress. She is superb. John Boles is unusually convincing and likeable as the wealthy bachelor who comes into Loretta's life. Jane Darwell as the head nurse is grand, and Dorothy Wilson shines in a tragic role. You'll laugh and weep.

John Boles and Loretta Young in "The White Parade."

C: TRANSATLANTIC MERRY-GO-ROUND (Reliance)

With a cast loaded with star names and a plot into which everything from a musical to a murder mystery has been crowded, this picture remains just so-so entertainment. All the action takes place on a transatlantic liner which is a good spot for committing a murder and also for bringing in plenty of musical entertainment. Along the latter line, the talents of Jack Benny, the Boswell Sisters, Jimmy Grier's orchestra are presented, plus Mitzi Green doing a George Arliss imitation. Gene Raymond and Nancy Carroll provide the love interest and do it mighty well. But in spite of all that, this picture just doesn't jell.

Nancy Carroll and Gene Raymond in "Transatlantic-Merry-Go-Round."



B: BY YOUR LEAVE (RKO-Radio)

Here we have Frank Morgan portraying a middle-aged married man who craves a last fling before settling down to stodgy old age, only to return contentedly to home and wifey. As is to be expected, Morgan gives a grand performance—without him, this picture would have very little to offer. Genevieve Tobin, as the wife, is okay but rather uninteresting, as are Neil Hamilton and Marian Nixon. Gene Lockhart, as Morgan's intoxicated buddy, plays effectively and humorously. But the picture still remains Frank Morgan's and little else. Use your own judgment.

Frank Morgan and Genevieve Tobin in "By Your Leave."

Home of the International Correspondence Schools

Go to High School at Home

You can secure a high school education right at home by studying the splendid new courses recently prepared by the International Correspondence Schools.

These courses are equivalent to the courses given in resident high schools. They have been specially arranged for men and women who wish to meet college entrance examinations, to qualify for a business position, or to make up the education they missed when forced to leave school too soon. A diploma is awarded at graduation.

Mail Coupon for Free Booklet

INTERNATIONAL CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOLS

Box 2621, Scranton, Penna.

Without cost or obligation, please send me full particulars about the course I have checked below—

☐ College Preparatory Course ☐ Advertising
☐ High School Commercial Course ☐ Chemistry
☐ English ☐ Radio
☐ Accounting ☐ Drafting
☐ Salesmanship ☐ Electrical Engineering

Name.....Age.....

Address.....

IS YOUR HAIR GETTING THIN?

Watch your temples and just back of the crown for beginning baldness. You can often prevent loss of your hair, say skin specialists, by stimulating the scalp and hair roots in time.

Japanese Oil is a real medicine containing ingredients prescribed by doctors for stimulating the scalp and encouraging hair growth. If you use it before your hair roots are dead, it may help you. Thousands have reported benefit. Delay may mean permanent baldness. Start using Japanese Oil today—only 60c at all druggists. Economy size, $1. It may save your hair if the roots are alive.

FREE booklet "The Truth About the Hair," explains baldness, its prevention and treatment. Write to NATIONAL REMEDY CO., 56 W. 45th St., Dept. 22B, New York.

JAPANESE OIL

 This advertisement was written by a registered physician.

WE PAY CASH FOR DIAMONDS & OLD GOLD

Diamonds of any size bought for $25 to $500 per carat. Old gold in any form, as high as $35 per ounce. Ship now; money sent immediately. Reliable jewelers for nearly fifty years. Send for free catalog.

I. PRESS & SONS CO. 517 CHESTNUT ST., PHILA., PA.

5¢ EACH LITTLE BLUE BOOKS

Send postcard for our free catalogue. Thousands of bargains. Address: LITTLE BLUE BOOK CO., Catalogue Dept., Desk 347, GIRARD, KANSAS

HARD OF HEARING?

SEND FOR THIS 30-DAY TRIAL TREATMENT

Which has restored the hearing, removed head noises and eliminated catarrh of the head for so many people. This treatment has been used by over 1,157,000 sufferers in the past 34 years. Write for full information about this ethical treatment used by a prominent ear specialist in his office practice, now simplified for home use.

DR. W. O. COFFEE CO.

1353 St. James Bldg. Davenport, Iowa

Be a Nurse

MAKE $25-$35 A WEEK

You can learn at home in spare time. Course endorsed by physicians. Thousands of graduates. Est. 36 years. One graduate has charge of 10-bed hospital. Another saved $400 while learning. Equipment included. Men and women 18 to 60. High school not required. Easy tuition payments. Write us now.

CHICAGO SCHOOL OF NURSING
Dept. 71, 26 N. Ashland Blvd., Chicago, Ill.
Please send free booklet and 32 sample lesson pages.

Name _____
City _____ State _____ Age _____

REVEALING Secret of NATURAL HAIR CURLS

ABOVE—ordinary curler reverses ends, curls friz and unwind. BELOW—Humphrey curls hair all one way, Nature's way—curls that last.

Marvelous! New Humphrey Coil Curler with the quick dry tab, sets beautiful permanent curls that last until washed out, even when combed daily. Forms end curls, hanging curls, roll bobs and waves in alluring effects before found impossible. Easy to use; invisible; light; comfortable; no metal to cut or injure. A new discovery. Millions sold by one user telling another about the Humphrey Coil Curler with the cloth tab. A new curling method—that's the secret! At your 5-and-10c store—if dealer can't supply, send 10c for trial card of 4.

HUMPHREY PRODUCTS CO., 1927 3rd Ave., DETROIT, MICH.

HUMPHREY COIL CURLER

with the Cloth Tab!

WANT TO BROADCAST?

If you have talent here's your chance to get into Broadcasting. New Floyd Gibbons method trains you at home in spare time. Fascinating course fully explained in Free Booklet, "How to Find Your Place in Broadcasting." Send for your copy today. Give age. Floyd Gibbons School of Broadcasting, 2000 14th St., N. W., Dept. 5A87, Washington, D. C.

GOLD-WIRE "FRIENDSHIP KNOT RING"

For Men and Women

This beautiful ring is hand made of 4 strands of genuine 12K Gold-filled Jeweler's wire by expert Gold Wire Artists. The twisted wire is woven around the band into a knot—a symbol of love and friendship. 5-year guarantee. Advertising price 50c postpaid. Give ring size. PRINT address. Wrap coin.

KERCHNER JEWELRY CO.

HAND MADE 2354D Boone St., Cincinnati, O.

Be an ARTIST

MAKE $50 TO $100 A WEEK!

Many of our successful students are now making big money. Our simple methods make it easy to learn Commercial Art, Cartooning and Designing at home, in spare time. New low tuition rate. Write for big free book, "ART for Pleasure and Profit," today. State age. Address:

STUDIO 421 WASHINGTON SCHOOL OF ART

1115—15TH ST., WASHINGTON, D. C.

HELP Wanted IN INSTITUTIONS & HOSPITALS

INEXPERIENCED & EXPERIENCED • Male & Female • All kinds of Positions Practically Everywhere. Write now, enclosing stamp. Scharf Bureau, Dept. 1-9, 145 W. 45th St., New York

Do you want

Beauty? Popularity? Poise?

We make chic, charming women out of plain, ordinary, self-conscious ones.

Write for details

SHARRON VAIL

Merchandise Mart Chicago, Ill.

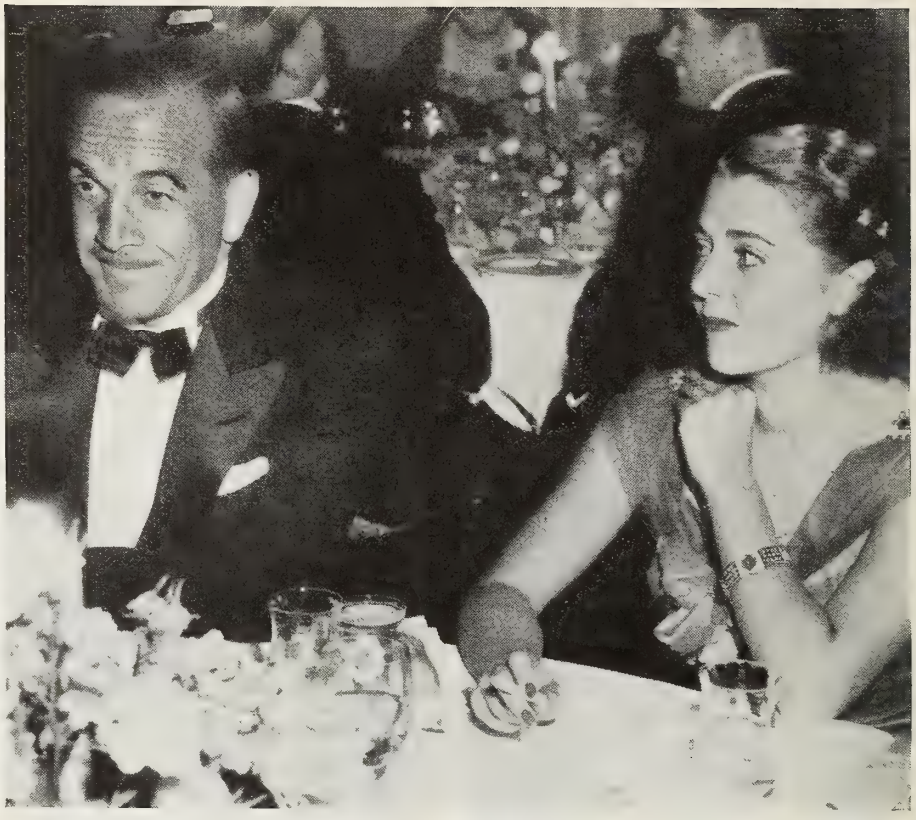
BUNIONS



Reduced Quickly

Pain stops almost instantly! Then blessed relief. Fairyfoot gradually reduces painful, ugly bunions. Enables you to wear smaller shoes. No cumbersome appliances. No messy salves. Used on over 2,000,000 feet since 1897. Write for FREE trial treatment. Fairyfoot Products Co., Chicago, Ill., 1223 S. Wabash Ave., Dept. 2711

FREE TEST

LESSONS IN GLAMOUR

Yes, we said lessons. In glamour. Also lessons in charm, in the art of talking to people and in the art of being likeable. We are pleased to announce these articles, which will appear in early issues of MODERN SCREEN.

Mr. and Mrs. Al Jolson at the Cocoanut Grove. Ruby and Al are co-stars in Warner Bros.' "Casino de Paree." Sounds swell, doesn't it?

Good News

(Continued from page 59)

producer of "Hell's Angels," returned to Hollywood yesterday and took Sally Blane to the Grove the first night . . . Paulette Goddard (Charlie Chaplin's heart) took a short trip to New York and captured the heart of a wealthy member of the 400, but we still have our bets on Chaplin . . . Fox must be afraid Shirley Temple is going to grow up overnight, they are putting her in most every picture they make so's to clean up while she's able . . . So many swell pictures this month that we almost ran out of "A's" to rate 'em with . . . Bill Gargan returned from England minus 36 pounds and most of his pals didn't even recognize him . . . The Marquis Hank went to the hospital for an operation immediately after arriving from Paris . . . Sari Maritza and Sam Katz up and got married . . . And Ginger Rogers and Lew Ayres announced their engagement . . . The most exciting news is Marion Davies' affiliation with Warners.

For Rainy Evenings

If you get stuck with a crowd and can't find anything else to amuse the gang, try this bunch of questions on them and keep score for the future answers. Time will give them.

Will Gloria Swanson and Herbert Marshall ever get married?

What reception will Bing Crosby get in his next picture when he tries to sing opera?

Will Spencer Tracy ever get over Loretta Young and get down to steady picture-making again?

Can you name the two biggest box-office stars of the year?

What star, just twenty-seven years old, is about to become a grandmother—and how come?

What famous actor in Hollywood possesses a British title—and not the inherited kind, either?

No, Indeed

Just because Dolores Del Rio hasn't seen a bull fight in nine years, she and her famous art-director husband, Cedric Gibbons, will fly to Mexico City and come back right after the "entertainment" is over. There are not so many Hollywood couples who have to go all the way to Mexico to see a fight.

Phew!

The recent rain storm in Hollywood did plenty of damage but here's one thing the water did that we bet you haven't heard about: a leak in the sound-stage roof allowed the water to drip through and right in the middle of a scene for "Caprice Espanole." Two huge light bulbs exploded as a result. The flying glass came close to Dietrich and Von Sternberg . . . but not too close.

A Break for Her Maid

Even movie stars have a time being original. Have you ever "seen yourself coming down the street?" Remember the first flush of embarrassment you felt when you realized that the person approaching happened to be wearing the same dress you had on at the time?

Well, it happens in Hollywood too, even with all the money in the world with which to be exclusive. The other evening, Sally Blane was seen to arrive at the Grove . . . take a quick look around . . . discover that Sylvia Sidney was already there with an exact duplicate of the dress she was wearing . . . and within five minutes, Sally had said her polite "Goodnights" and had left.

Horrors!

The studio is planning to call Joan Crawford's future picture "No More Ladies." What? with all those censors on the job?

Helping Hand

Lanny Ross has deserted Hollywood. Which statement comes under the heading of news, on account of Lanny was supposed to remain in our hamlet for another six weeks for his second picture, "Mississippi"—now being starred in by Bing Crosby.

While Lanny was working here, his new radio program was broadcast from Hollywood and he made thousands of friends with a very swell idea: each program, Lanny would use "an unknown but talented newcomer" and give him his first chance on a national hook-up. Radio Stars Magazine liked Lanny's idea so well that they helped him along by discovering the unknowns who were worthy of such a grand break. Did you hear Betty Borden sing? She was the lucky gal who got the first chance with Lanny . . . they tell us she is now headed places in a big way.

That's Settled

We've had a flock of letters telling us that we were a bit wrong in saying that Carl Brisson ever held the welter-weight boxing championship of middle Europe. We asked Carl and he put us right on the thing: it seems that Mr. Brisson fought under the name "Carl Peterson" and that he was also known as the "Fighting Dane."

These are the people who flew all the way to Mexico City, just to see a bull fight. Dolores Del Rio and her husband, Cedric Gibbons.

Don't let an UNSIGHTLY SKIN

rob you of
ROMANCE, HAPPINESS

DO MEN LOOK your way—or do they look away? An attractive complexion, naturally fresh, unmarred by sallowness and ugly blotches unlocks the door to the romance every woman wants. Thousands of happy women have regained the fresh skin of their childhood with Stuart's Calcium Wafers. Magic, they call it. But there's nothing magic about it. Stuart's Calcium Wafers simply rid the system of bodily wastes and supply the system with the little calcium nature needs to create a healthy, glowing skin! Even stubborn cases often show marked improvement in a few days. Isn't it worth a trial?

STUART'S CALCIUM WAFERS
AT ALL DRUG STORES, 10c AND 60c

the CHORE GIRL
PURE KNITTED COPPER
INSTANTLY CLEANS POTS AND PANS
Half-times kitchen work
~ ~Patented parallel outer layers provide~
"Double the Wear, where the Wear comes"

NO JOKE TO BE DEAF
—Every deaf person knows that—
Mr. Way made himself hear his watch tick after being deaf for twenty-five years, with his Artificial Ear Drums. He wore them day and night. They stopped his head noises. They are invisible and comfortable, no wires or batteries. Write for TRUE STORY. Also booklet on Deafness.

Artificial Ear Drum
THE WAY COMPANY
717 Hofmann Bldg. Detroit, Michigan

NEW EASY WAY
10¢
JUSTRITE PUSH-CLIP
KEEP WIRES OFF FLOOR
(LAMPS AND RADIO)
A neat job instantly. No damage to woodwork. No tools needed. Set of eight colored clips to match your cords, 10c.
At Kresge's

Here's a Queer Way to Learn Music!

No teacher—no confusing details. Just a simple, easy, home-study method. Takes only a few minutes—averages only a few cents a day. Every step is clear as A-B-C throughout. You'll be surprised at your own rapid progress. From the start you are playing real tunes perfectly by note. Quickly learn to play any "jazz" or classical selection—right at home in your spare time. All instruments. Send for Free Booklet and Demonstration Lesson. These explain our wonderful home study method fully. Mention instrument preferred.
FREE
U. S. School of Music, 1441 Brunswick Bldg., New York City

All Joking Aside .. by Jack Welch

CONRAD NAGEL WAS ONCE KNOCKED COLD BY A DUCK THAT HE HAD JUST SHOT.

DICK POWELL NEEDS NO ALARM CLOCK . . . . His dog "Ranger" comes in and wakes him at 8 o'clock every morning, howling.

GLORIA STUART ALWAYS SLIPS OFF HER SHOES WHILE BEING INTERVIEWED OVER THE RADIO . . . She says it gives her greater freedom of thought . . .

GENE RAYMOND IS ANOTHER EX-FOOTBALLER WHO RAN THE WRONG WAY TO A TOUCH-DOWN . . . It happened in prep school and was a 50-yard dash . . . . . His face is still red.

AS A BOY, PAUL MUNI WORKED IN A CANDY STORE AND RECEIVED, AS PAY, ONE CENT A DAY AND ALL THE CANDY HE COULD EAT.

Printed in the U. S. A. by Art Color Printing Company, Dunellen, N. J.

LEFT AT THE ALTAR

THERE were other men in her life and one in particular who would marry her in a minute, yet this beautiful girl clung to her first love even when he deserted her at the altar and married another woman. Not until he was divorced and was again planning to marry her did she find a true love and in this discovery gain a just revenge.

This unusual love story, Forsaking All Others, produced by M-G-M, is to be seen on the screen with Joan Crawford, Clark Gable and Robert Montgomery playing the principal parts. Read the story complete in the current issue of Screen Romances.

15 COMPLETE STORIES IN THIS ISSUE

FORSAKING ALL OTHERS, Joan Crawford, Clark Gable and Robert Montgomery; BORDERTOWN, Paul Muni, Bette Davis and Margaret Lindsay; NELL GWYN, Anna Neagle and Sir Cecil Hardwicke; REPEAL, Carole Lombard and Chester Morris; ROMANCE IN MANHATTAN, Francis Lederer and Ginger Rogers; WICKED WOMAN, Mady Christians, Jean Parker and Charles Bickford; MAYBE IT'S LOVE, Gloria Stuart, Phillip Reed and Ross Alexander; THE MAN WHO RECLAIMED HIS HEAD, Claude Rains and Joan Bennett; JEALOUSY, Nancy Carroll and Donald Cook; WEST OF THE PECOS, Richard Dix and Martha Sleeper; MURDER IN THE CLOUDS, Lyle Talbot and Ann Dvorak; GIGOLETTE, Adrienne Ames and Ralph Bellamy; BACKFIELD, Preston Foster, Robert Young, Betty Furness; AGAINST THE LAW, John Mack Brown and Sally Blane; CHEATING CHEATERS, Fay Wray and Cesare Romero.

Listen to "Hollywood Highlights" reported by Sam Taylor for Screen Romances over WMCA and Associated Stations every Monday and Wednesday Evenings at 6:30 P.M. Eastern Standard Time.

SCREEN ROMANCES

MRS. BOYER'S BERGDORF GOODMAN GOWN IS OF UNCUT VELVET.

Among the many distinguished women who prefer Camel's costlier tobaccos:

MRS. NICHOLAS BIDDLE, Philadelphia
MISS MARY BYRD, Richmond
MRS. POWELL CABOT, Boston
MRS. THOMAS M. CARNEGIE, JR. New York
MRS. J. GARDNER COOLIDGE, II Boston
MRS. BYRD WARWICK DAVENPORT New York
MRS. HENRY FIELD, Chicago
MISS ANNE GOULD, New York
MRS. JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL New York
MRS. POTTER D'ORSAY PALMER Chicago
MISS MIMI RICHARDSON, New York
MISS EVELYN WATTS, New York

Another Camel enthusiast is Mrs. Allston Boyer

In the gay young group that dictates what's "done" in New York, Mrs. Boyer plays a charming part. What to wear, where to dance, what to see, how to entertain, what people prefer to eat, to smoke—she knows all the answers. That is why you find Camels in her house and in her slim cigarette case.

"There seems to be more going on this winter than ever," she says. "Lunches, teas, parties, dances—everyone is gay and almost everyone is smoking Camels. They certainly add to your enjoyment with their mild, rich flavor and I notice that if I'm tired, a Camel freshens me up. Lots of people have told me the same thing. I can smoke all I want, too, and they never upset my nerves."

People find that Camel's finer and MORE EXPENSIVE TOBACCOS give them a healthy "lift" when their energy is low. Smoke one yourself and see.

Camels are Milder!.. made from finer, More Expensive Tobaccos .. Turkish and Domestic .. than any other popular brand

Copyright, 1934, R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company

LARGEST GUARANTEED CIRCULATION OF ANY SCREEN MAGAZINE

Modern Screen

ebruary 35
10
ENTS

FEB - 6 1935

Margaret Sullavan

HOW THE STARS KEEP YOUTH AND BEAUTY

New Kind of Dry Rouge

actually stays on all day . . . or ALL NIGHT

Created in 4 rapturous shades . . . the most paganly alluring colors ever seen.

TANGERINE
FLAME
NATURAL
BLUSH

How often you have noticed that most dry rouge seems to lose the intensity of its color within an hour or so of its application. That is because the usual rouge particles are so coarse or uneven in texture, that they simply fall away from your skin.

SAVAGE Rouge, as your sense of touch will instantly tell you, is a great deal finer in texture and softer than ordinary rouge. Its particles being so infinitely fine, adhere much more closely to the skin than rouge has ever clung before. In fact, SAVAGE Rouge, for this reason, clings so insistently, it seems to become a part of the skin itself . . . refusing to yield, even to the savage caresses its tempting smoothness and pulse-quickening color might easily invite. The price is 20c and the shades, to keep your lips and cheeks in thrilling harmony, match perfecty those of

SAVAGE LIPSTICK

. . . known as the one transparent-colored indelible lipstick that actually keeps lips seductively soft instead of drying them as indelible lipstick usually does. Apply it . . . rub it in, and delight in finding your lips lusciously, lastingly tinted, yet utterly greaseless. Only 20c and each of the four hues is as vibrantly alluring, as completely intoxicating as a jungle night. Everyone has found them so. To go with SAVAGE Lipstick and SAVAGE Rouge, there is the astonishingly new

SAVAGE FACE POWDER

. . . a finer grained, softer powder that clings as savagely as SAVAGE Rouge. Instead of roughly coating the surface as most powders do, SAVAGE, because of its extreme fineness, blends right in with the skin, achieving the skin's instant magical transformation to soft, smooth loveliness! Four lovely shades . . . the generous box is 20c.

SAVAGE. CHICAGO

NATURAL (Flesh)
BEIGE
RACHEL RACHEL (Extra Dark)

TANGERINE
FLAME
NATURAL
BLUSH

An ever-so-smooth indelible cream rouge for lips and cheeks. Prepared in the same four shades as Savage Lipstick.

SAVAGE

20 CENTS AT ALL LEADING TEN CENT STORES

A Dancing Darling (UNTIL SHE SMILES)

WHAT a heart-warming thing a lovely, swift little smile can be! And what a crusher of illusions it so often is.

It is true that a great many men and women are, unfortunately, afraid to smile. Neglect of the teeth, neglect of the gums, neglect of "pink tooth brush" have led to their own unsightly results.

No one is immune from "pink tooth brush." Any dentist will tell you that our soft, modern foods and our habits of hurried eating and hasty brushing rob our gums of needed exercise. Naturally, they grow sensitive and tender—and, sooner or later, that telltale "tinge of pink" appears.

DON'T NEGLECT "PINK TOOTH BRUSH"

And, neglected, that "tinge of pink" is often the preliminary to gingivitis, Vincent's disease—even pyorrhea.

Do the sensible thing—follow the advice of dental science. Get a tube of Ipana today. Brush your teeth regularly. But—care for your gums with Ipana, too. Each time, massage a little extra Ipana into your lazy, tender gums. The ziratol in Ipana with massage helps speed circulation, aids in toning the gums and in bringing back necessary firmness.

Your teeth will be whiter with Ipana. Your gums will be healthier. And your smile will be the magic thing it should be!

IPANA
TOOTH PASTE

BRISTOL-MYERS CO., Dept. K-25
73 West Street, New York, N. Y.

NRA CODE

Kindly send me a trial tube of IPANA TOOTH PASTE. Enclosed is a 3¢ stamp to cover partly the cost of packing and mailing.

*Name*_____

*Street*_____

*City*_____ *State*_____

DEC 31 1934

©CIB 247781

Modern Screen

THE MOST ROMANTIC STORY EVER TOLD (Part 3) ..... Katherine Albert 8
Another chapter in the movies' own thrilling biography

WHY I STAY MARRIED ..... Gladys Hall 26
There's wisdom for you in Clark Gable's marriage story

MARLENE ANSWERS ALL YOUR QUESTIONS ..... Ben Maddox 28
Direct, honest answers to everything you have been wondering

HOW THE STARS KEEP YOUTH AND BEAUTY ..... Katherine Albert 30
Tips from such famous beauties as Crawford, Colbert, etc.

MEN ..... Adele Whitely Fletcher 32
More feminine stars talk about their favorite topic

I CHAPERONE THE CROWD ..... Franc Dillon 34
A week-end party with Hollywood's younger set

SO SHE WON'T TALK, HUH! ..... Regina Cannon 35
Marion Davies does a Garbo on her private thoughts

I HATE! ..... Martha Kerr 36
Some amazing hates you never guessed the stars had

AVERAGE BUT WONDERFUL ..... Gladys Hall 37
A grand story about a great actor, Walter Connolly

SHOULD THE HUSBAND PAY ALL THE BILLS? ..... Lynde Denig 38
A debated question answered by two stars, one a recent bride

SHE WAS A ONE-DATE GIRL ..... James M. Fidler 43
Jean Muir, ex-wallflower, tells you why

FAME IS A THIEF ..... Faith Service 44
Why success rests heavily upon Ronald Colman

NONE OF THIS IS REAL ..... Cyril Vandour 46
You'll not be disillusioned by this thrilling story of how sets are made

LINES TO A LITTLE LADY ..... Robert Eichberg 48
Help us open and read La Belle Temple's fan mail

DRESSES YOU COULD REALLY WEAR ..... Adelia Bird 56
Screen clothes that have practical thoughts for your wardrobe

The Modern Hostess 10
Beauty Advice 12
Airmail—Special Delivery 14
Good News 16
Exclusive Portraits ..... 19 and 49
Picture News 40
Our English Cousins 42
Reviews 54
Modern Screen Patterns 61
Modern Screen's Dramatic School 62
The Information Desk 70
Report Card 108
All Joking Aside 116

MARY BURGUM, EDITOR; ADELIA BIRD, Associate Editor
ABRIL LAMARQUE, Art Editor REGINA CANNON, Western Representative

Published monthly and copyright 1935 by Dell Publishing Company, Incorporated. Office of publication at Washington and South Avenues, Dunellen, N. J. Executive and editorial offices, 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y. George T. Delacorte, Jr., President, H. Meyer, Vice-President, M. Delacorte, Secretary. Vol. 10, No. 3, February, 1935. Printed in the U. S. A. Price in the United States, $1.20 a year, 10c a copy. Canadian subscriptions, $2.40 a year. Foreign subscriptions, $2.20 a year. Entered as second class matter, September 18, 1930, at the Post Office at Dunellen, New Jersey, under act of March 3, 1879. The publishers accept no responsibility for the return of unsolicited material. Sole Foreign Agents: The International News Company, Ltd., 5 Breams Buildings, London, E. C. 4, England.

2 YEARS of waiting and now the motion picture that wins

SCREEN FAME!

Two years ago it was the dream of its producers, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer! The theme was so daring, so exciting that nothing since "Trader Horn" could equal its brilliant novelty. Now it is a stirring reality on the screen. Out of the High Sierras, out of the wilderness that is America's last frontier... roars this amazing drama of the animal revolt against man. A Girl Goddess of Nature! A ferocious mountain lion and a deer with human instincts! Leaders of the wild forest hordes! A production of startling dramatic thrills that defies description on the printed page... that becomes on the screen YOUR GREATEST EXPERIENCE IN A MOTION PICTURE THEATRE!

Pronounced "SEE-QUO-YAH"

SEQUOIA

A GIRL GODDESS OF NATURE LEADS THE ANIMAL REVOLT AGAINST MAN

with

JEAN PARKER

Produced by JOHN W. CONSIDINE, JR.
Directed by CHESTER M. FRANKLIN

Based on the novel "Malibu" by Vance Joseph Hoyt

A METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER PICTURE

I WAS SLUGGISH AND A MARTYR TO BILIOUSNESS

• My skin was pasty and even after 8 hours sleep I'd get up tired. I looked every day of my 35 years and then some. For 6 years I'd been a continuous sufferer from biliousness, sour stomach caused by constipation. I think I spent hundreds of dollars on medicines. Then the wife of our druggist told me about FEEN-A-MINT. It is the only laxative I have used for 2 years and it has worked marvels. My husband says I'm like a different person. FEEN-A-MINT has done wonders for my little girl, too—now she eats like a child should because it keeps her regular as a clock.

Pleasing taste makes FEEN-A-MINT easy to take Another experience typical of the hundreds of people who write us gratefully about the relief FEEN-A-MINT has given them. FEEN-A-MINT is not only positive in its purpose but a pleasing and delicious chewing gum. That is why it's so easy to take—children love it. And because you chew it the laxative works more evenly through the system and gives more thorough relief without griping or binding. Next time you need a laxative get FEEN-A-MINT. 15 and 25¢ at your druggist's. Used by over 15,000,000 people.

CHEW YOUR LAXATIVE FOR MORE EFFECTIVE RELIEF. THE CHEWING MIXES THE LAXATIVE WITH DIGESTIVE JUICES AND SPREADS IT NATURALLY THROUGH THE SYSTEM ...THAT'S WHY FEEN-A-MINT IS SO THOROUGH.

FOR EFFECTIVE RELIEF CHEW YOUR LAXATIVE

FEEN-A-MINT

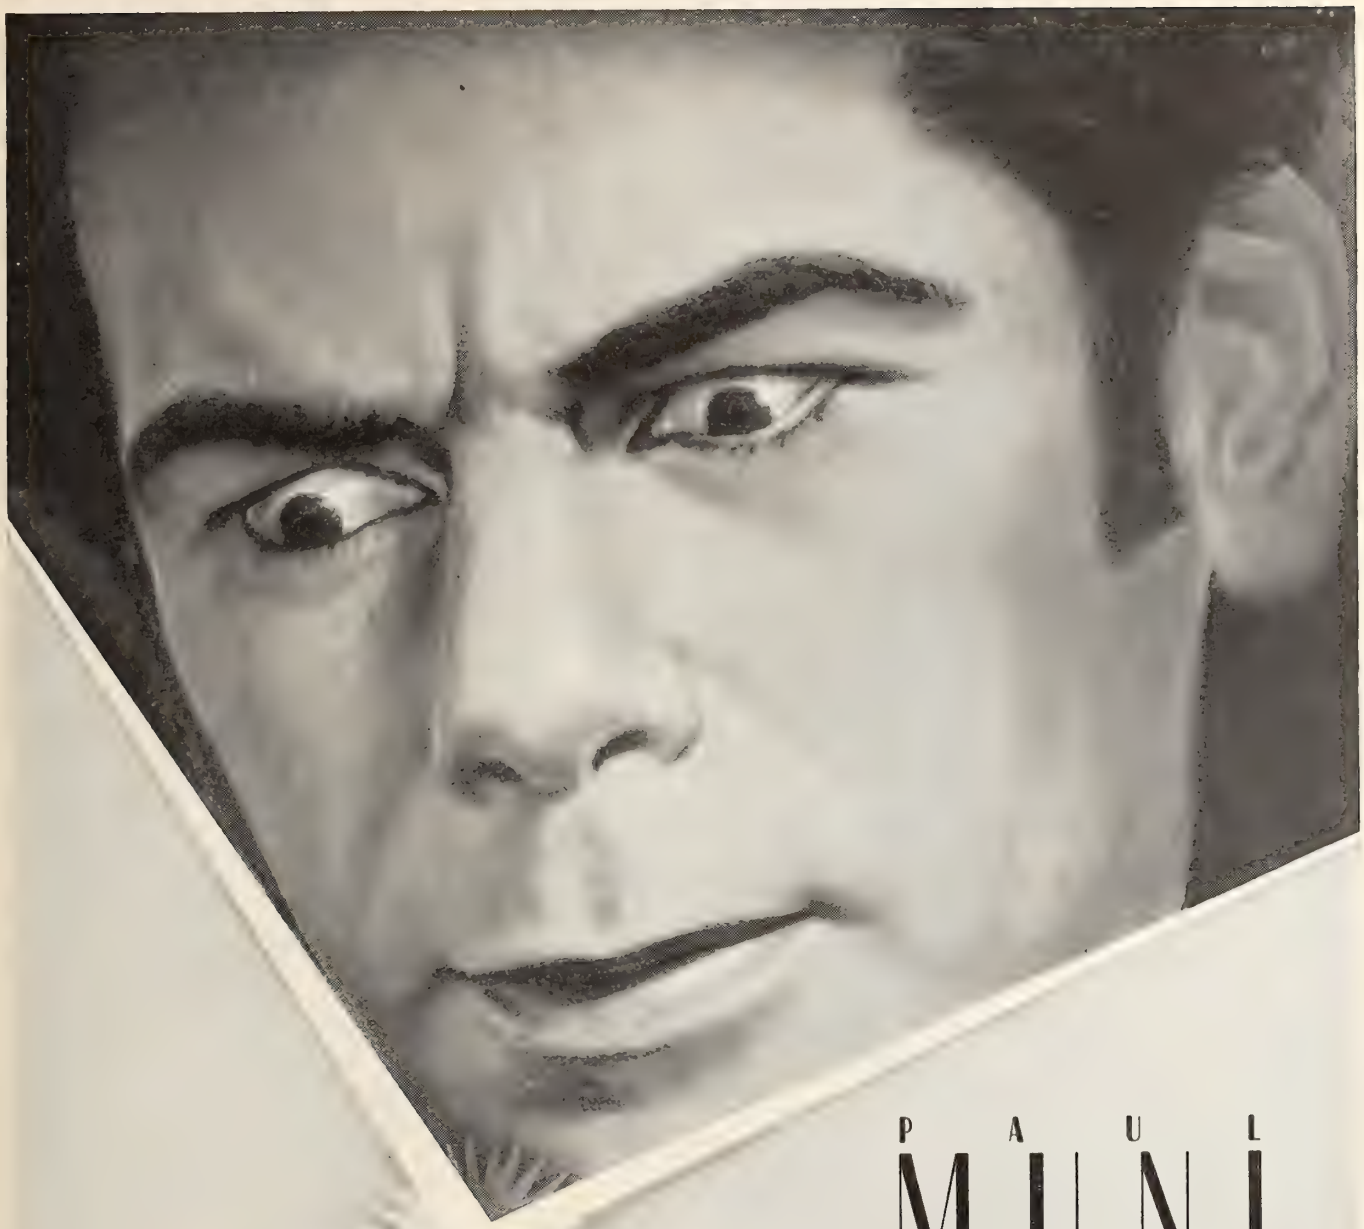
THE CHEWING-GUM LAXATIVE

We Announce A Contest . . !

Read the details—and get ready for the gala opening in our next issue!

A Song Contest!

No, you don't have to sing to be in it.



No, you don't have to be able to play the piano to get into it!

You can be tone deaf if you want to—see if we care—and still enter this contest and maybe win some of the $500 prize money.

Here's a hint of what it's all about:

Warner Brothers, who have produced so many grand musicals, and this magazine have had their heads together and decided that it might be an awful lot of fun to ask people an awful lot of questions about an awful lot of songs. And that's part of what we're going to do. You have to answer some questions—just how many and what kind, we'll tell you later.

But before the big rush starts, let us ask you a question: have you ever had a feeling that you'd like to try your hand at writing the words to a song? Have you ever felt almost sure that you could? And then—figured—oh, what's the use? Nobody would ever publish your efforts—one has to have pull to get any attention. And so on and so forth. Have you felt that way? Well, here's a chance to try your luck at writing the words for a song! It isn't (Continued on page 111)

The Picture of the Month

PAUL

MUNI

the fighting fury of the screen meets his match at last in

BETTE DAVIS

—a hellcat with murder on her conscience and Muni on her mind

And then things happen! . . . Things that will burn themselves into your memory of a drama which combines the best features of "I Am A Fugitive" and "Of Human Bondage"—Warner Bros.

"BORDERTOWN"

with Margaret Lindsay and Eugene Pallette delivering the other standout performances in a tremendous cast, superbly directed by Archie Mayo.

Gloria Swanson in the Sennett days.

The Most Romantic Story Ever Told

PART 3

by Katherine Albert

The fascinating history of movieland, with all its glamour

WHEN one thinks that the word "Hollywood" is almost a synonym for "movies," it is rather amazing that two complete installments of this story have been concerned with the progress of the motion picture industry before its arrival in Hollywood. Like the invention of moving pictures, making Hollywood its capital was an accident.

By 1913 the industry teemed with activity but it teemed in New York, Chicago, Oakland, Philadelphia. There were a few studios in Los Angeles but people who lived in the tiny suburb called—because of a large growth of holly there—Hollywood had seen cameras only very occasionally when members of the Los Angeles plants used the recently laid out streets for "location." Hollywood was a real estate project, nothing more. And those who had conceived the idea that it would make a nice residential district found themselves millionaires.

Robert Brunton is the name of the man most directly responsible for the vast and glamorous city you know so well today. Brunton was a Scotch set designer, scene painter and general theatre craftsman. He had come to America as part of Sir Henry Irving's staff and might have returned with the actor had he not become interested in the rapidly growing film industry. But he was a gruff sort of fellow and the hail-fellow-well-met attitude of those early mountebanks made him even more gruff. So he found himself without work a great deal of the time.

One Sunday morning he took a stroll along Sunset Boulevard. The casual gesture was history-making, for his eye fell upon a large, rather ramshackle barn. As he meditated upon this site he remembered having read in the papers that a newly formed film concern was moving to Los Angeles. The young men who had pooled their savings to get into the industry (Continued on page 113)

Mary Pickford, the first "star" name.

Fatty Arbuckle, the laugh-getter.

Ruth Roland, an early favorite.

Viola Dana, in a silent film.

NAPOLEON'S MASTER
with the troops . . . . with the ladies

Arliss surpasses himself!

•

Wellington, the Iron Duke, who out-maneuvered Napoleon on the battle-fields and in the ball-rooms of France!

Thrillingly portrayed by the electrifying genius of George Arliss!

GEORGE ARLISS
IN The IRON DUKE

Directed by Victor Saville

COMING TO YOUR FAVORITE THEATRE . . .

•

NOVA PILBEAM, in LITTLE FRIEND;
CHU CHIN CHOW; POWER;
EVELYN LAYE in EVENSONG;
JACK HULBERT in JACK AHOY;
JESSIE MATTHEWS in EVERGREEN;
EVELYN LAYE, HENRY WILCOXON
in PRINCESS CHARMING . . .

GB GAUMONT BRITISH PRODUCTIONS

The Modern Hostess

By Marjorie Deen

(Above) Carl Brisson, the singing Dane, enjoys his pet dish, Danish Apple Cake. (Left) And here's the Danish Apple Cake itself. Doesn't it make your mouth water?

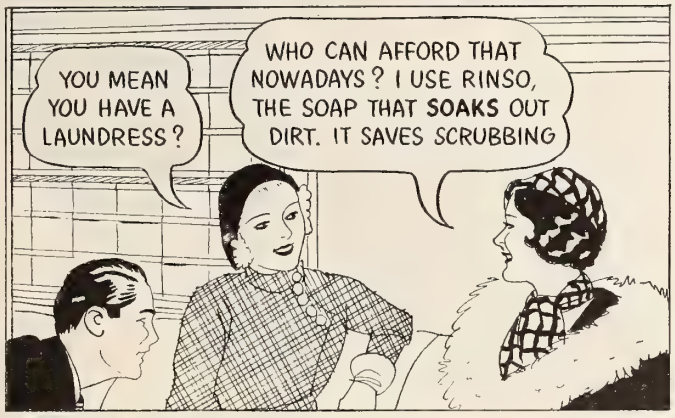
Here's something new! A genuine Danish dinner!

SOME one of these fine days you are going to say to yourself, "What on earth are we going to eat tonight?" When that day arrives and you realize that your food ideas have fallen into a rut and that you and your family (and your guests, if any) long for something new and different, then try a real Danish dinner—tantalizing, appetite-provoking and filling.

I learned all about such a meal recently from Carl Brisson, Continental singing favorite, imported from Denmark by Paramount to star in their pictures. And the important culinary details that Carl himself was unable to supply were given me by his brisk, attractive and efficient wife Fru Cleo.

Just hearing about their dinners is enough to make one long to set out immediately on a trip to the land of good Christian X, King of Denmark and Iceland. Fortunately, however, the description of what constitutes such a dinner, and recipes for the foods it features were given me by the Brissons with such a wealth of detail that from now on it will be possible for Modern Hostess readers to make and serve many delicious and typical Danish dishes.

The Brissons were most enthusiastic about furthering this feeling of international goodwill along culinary lines, particularly Fru Brisson who is first and always a good Danish housewife, priding herself on the competent direction of her kitchen with its staff of four helpers. So domestically minded is she, that she welcomes the hours spent in meal planning and preparation and loves the soft, springy feeling of dough in her capable, pastry-making hands.



Entertaining frequently, with places often laid for as many as sixteen or twenty guests at a mammoth dining table, the Brissons have done much to remove the blight of boredom from film city formal dinner parties and since their arrival in March have stepped into the top rank of popular Hollywood hosts.

"What, in your opinion, is the secret of the success of your dinner parties?" I asked Mr. Brisson.

"I thank you for the compliment, but there is no secret," answered that big, broad-shouldered, curly-haired Dane. "However, there are some rules we observe. For instance, we do not ask anyone for dinner unless we think he will be an agreeable and harmonious guest. The table, we feel, is the place for enjoy- (Continued on page 72)

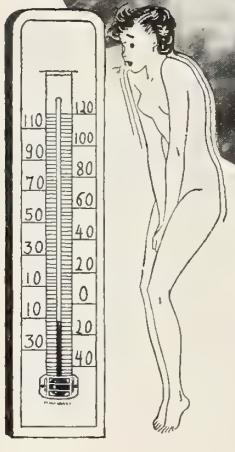
Keeps colors fresh and bright, too

RINSO is great in washers, too—makers of 34 famed washers recommend it. Tested and approved by Good Housekeeping Institute. Gives lots of rich, lively suds—even in hardest water. No matter how long you soak your wash in Rinso suds—for 15 minutes, an hour, overnight —or as long as you think necessary—you can be sure everything will be safe Easy on hands. Makes all cleaning easier.

AMERICA'S BIGGEST-SELLING PACKAGE SOAP

AT LAST — A WEDDING GIFT FOR HER!

NRA CODE



A grand complexion soap — Lifebuoy! Its creamy, penetrating lather is super-mild yet extra-cleansing. It gently washes away pore-clogging impurities—freshens dull skins to glowing health.

"B.O." (body-odor) is a year-'round problem. Cold days or hot—play safe! Bathe often with Lifebuoy. Lathers more freely; purifies and deodorizes pores. Its quickly-vanishing, extra clean scent tells you Lifebuoy gives extra protection. Approved by Good Housekeeping Bureau

Beauty Advice

Brrr! Just for contrast—Ann Dvorak warm in furs, and sketched, you and I any cold morning! Ann has the natural brows I mention, below.

"The Zer-r-ro Hour of Beauty" —Mary Biddle's leaflet on how to keep up your beauty when the temperature's down—is yours for the asking and a stamped, addressed envelope. Address Mary Biddle, MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y. She'll be glad to answer any of your personal beauty problems, too.

By Mary Biddle

WHAT kind of a "circulation manager" do you make for yourself these days? Is your skin rough and subject to "gooseflesh?" Do you quiver and quake at all weather reports that say "Colder tomorrow?" Do you walk to work almost doubled over in order to prevent the cold from striking at your "innards?" Do your legs feel like sandpaper, and ruin many a pair of hard-earned chiffon hose because they "catch" the silk threads? Then this article is for you . . . and I'm hoping it will lead you to stir up your circulation to the sizzling point, for all these things are signs of poor circulation.

It's going to take will power and a lot of plain ordinary gumption, you know, but good circulation is just as important from the beauty angle as it is from the health angle. A good circulation means a clear, smooth skin in about nine cases out of ten, and you'll agree that's a high percentage. Making the blood race through the blood vessels of the skin is a valuable beauty trick. So we're going to talk about such circulation stimulators as exercise and good old-fashioned scrubbing, as well as a lot of other beauty pointers for winter-r-r-r and the zer-r-r-ro hour.

First, we're going to talk about getting out of bed on a cold winter morning. Groans (I can hear a chorus of them) are permitted for the moment; but get them over with, because you're going to be as Spartan-like as possible from now on. I wish I could suggest a painless method by which to tear oneself away from a warm downy bed and into a rosy glow of circulation by means of some automatic machine, but I can't. There isn't any, unless it's to have someone announce to you that an aeroplane or a stream-lined train is waiting outside to take you to Hollywood to have breakfast with Robert Montgomery . . . or whom-have-you-for-a-hero?

However, I do have a sugar-coated method on tap which is the best I've found after some years of painful experiment on the subject. When the trusty old alarm clock has waked you from peaceful slumber and you have managed to get one eye open successfully, just lie where you are (that's easy enough, isn't it?) and breathe deeply. Breathe so deeply that your inflated lungs almost pull your stomach up under your ribs. Now breathe out, deflating your lungs and inflating your stomach. Do this from fifteen to twenty times. Your room, of course, will be filled with the cold fresh air that your wide-open windows have been sending in all through the night, so you'll be breathing in pure ozone that hasn't been gathering impurities and general stuffiness for hours. Now have a grand stretch . . . it's a good pick-me-up in itself. Stretch your neck, your arms, your legs, even your fingers and toes.

Need circulation increase? Cold weather beauty hints

After all your deep breathing and long stretching, you should be able to drag yourself up to sitting posture by this time. Your neck may still feel full of kinks, especially if you've been sleeping all huddled up in your blankets, hiding your nose from the nippy air. Roll your head around your neck, for all the world like one of those funny "golliwog" dolls that used to be so popular. Roll it in a circle from shoulder to shoulder, slowly feeling the pull of the muscles as you do so. You're apt to get dizzy if you don't do it very slowly, and you don't want to start out with a "merry-go-round" feeling the first thing in the morning. Incidentally, this exercise is very efficient in warding off any tendency to a double chin.

The second method is really the better one, but it calls for much more heroic will power. You start off with a big kick, a kick that sends the bedclothes flying, and leaves you shivering without benefit of cover. The only thing left for you to do then is to go through a lot of vigorous arm and leg exercises in order to keep from freezing on the spot. (I've some good exercises which are yours for the asking.) Or still better yet, jump up, pop yourself into a wooly robe, and take your deep breathing exercises in front of the window.

Then down with the window . . . and a scurry to the bathroom or some other warmer quarters.

A SHOWER is so nice in the morning . . . easier and quicker than the tub, and more of a circulation "stirrer-upper." We're inclined to be lazy and dawdle over the tubbing business. However, some of us don't have showers; nor is hot water always on tap, especially if you live in the country, or have the kind of a gas heater that takes so long to heat the water that you can't wait for its "circulation" to get going in the morning. So a warm sponge bath will do very nicely if you haven't a shower available . . . or hot water on tap. It's really speedier and hence more desirable than a tub bath in the morning, anyway. Hot baths of all kinds are to be avoided in the winter especially, when we have to face the other extreme of severe cold outdoors. As a matter of fact, mildly warm baths are always the happy medium to strike, regardless of the weather. If you can stand a cold shower or cold sponge as a rinse, after a good soaping and scrubbing with warm water, we take off our hats (or shower bathing caps) to you. We salute you as a brave Spartan, even if you squeal and shriek all the while the cold water is having its innings. However, Spartan or no Spartan, the cold water rinse is definitely out if you don't get a warm reaction immediately after your rub-down. It's really harmful unless the warm reaction sets in at once. Whatever temperature be the rinse, give yourself a thorough and energetic drying, a regular circulation treatment with the bath towel.

(Continued on page 71)

To the Lovely Lady
IN THIS PICTURE

LADY, you're lovely!

Radiant, fresh, and in the bloom of young womanhood.

And behind that young and lovely face is a mind full of an old wisdom . . . old as womankind itself . . . and it decrees "keep lovely."

So your dressing table is laden with fine creams and lotions and cosmetics fragrant as a garden in June. And every other aid devised to make lovely woman lovelier still . . . and to keep her that way!

Among these aids . . . and you're very wise . . . is a certain little blue box.

It won't be on your dressing table, but discreetly placed in your medicine chest. Its name is Ex-Lax. Its purpose . . . to combat that ancient enemy to loveliness and health . . . constipation . . . to relieve it gently, pleasantly, painlessly.

You see, while Ex-Lax is an ideal laxative for anyone of any age or either sex, it is especially good for women. You should never shock your delicate feminine system with harsh laxatives. They cause pain, upset you, leave you weak. Ex-Lax is gentle in action. Yet it is as thorough as any laxative you could take. And . . . this is so important! . . . Ex-Lax won't form a habit. You don't have to keep on increasing the dose to get results. And it's so charmingly easy to take—for it tastes just like delicious chocolate.

And That "Certain Something"

These are the cold facts about Ex-Lax. But there is more than that. It's the ideal combination of all these qualities—combined in the exclusive Ex-Lax way—that gives Ex-Lax a "certain something"—a certain satisfaction—that puts Ex-Lax in a class by itself. Our telling you won't prove that. You must try it yourself to know what we mean!

In 10c and 25c boxes—at any drug store. Or use the coupon below for free sample.

MAIL THIS COUPON—TODAY!
EX-LAX, Inc., P. O. Box 170
Times-Plaza Station, Brooklyn, N. Y.
MM 25 Please send free sample of Ex-Lax.
Name .....
Address .....

When Nature forgets—remember
EX-LAX
THE CHOCOLATED LAXATIVE

AIR MAIL

Special Delivery

By fast plane came these pictures of the Second Annual Screen Guild Ball, rushed to us by our spies on the Coast. (Above) Florence and Fredric March and Ralph Bellamy. Mrs. Bellamy said she didn't look nice enough to pose. (Below) First appearance in public of Joan Blondell since her son's birth. Husband George Barnes and sister Gloria with her. Looking grand, isn't she?

(Above) Mary Astor, having a good time with Lucille Gleason and James Cagney. (Below) The happiest married couple in Hollywood—and we're not even crossing our fingers when we say that about Stuart Erwin and his beautiful wife, June Collyer. The Airmail Letter on the next page tells you the lowdown on the goings-on at the Screen Guild Ball at the Hollywood Bowl.

Airmail Letter

Dear Editor:

The Second Annual Screen Guild Ball found Hollywood's upper-crust tripping gaily to the Biltmore Bowl. Everyone wore their best bibs and bent over backwards, being little ladies and gentlemen. As a result, the affair was pretty dull with most of the stars leaving early to stifle their boredom elsewhere at the Russian Eagle, Brown Derby, or Sardi's.

The Screen Guild, you know, is the group which broke away from the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences last year. They organized primarily to protect "the little fellow" on matters of jobs, salary, etc. Eddie Cantor is president, Bob Montgomery, vice-president.

Lyle Talbot was one of the high points of the evening, making a swell master of ceremonies. He revealed crooning talents that should cause Master Crosby to bite his nails privately!

Half the fun of the evening was watching the little feuds between the camera crowd and the stars—what memories those boys have! They ganged on Adolphe Menjou, each politely refusing to snap his fancy dressing. Adolphe, who made such a fuss last year as to cause the boycott, hung about wistfully.

Lee Tracy did a prima donna by refusing to pose with Mary Brian. Why, no one could find out—even Isabel Jewell appeared baffled...

Joan Bennett tilted her pretty nose at the boys, too. So they busily overlooked her. A few stars with a change of heart tried to ingratiate themselves with the camera gang later on. To no avail, however.

Joan Crawford, beautiful as ever, was beaued by Franchot Tone.

Helen Hayes appeared with Joan's party. The Eddie Robinsons, Otto Krugers and Rosamond Pinchot in another.

Genevieve Tobin, quite recovered from her recent automobile accident, was squired by a new heart from Santa Barbara.

Brilliance of gowns and jewels made up for what the party lacked otherwise.

Guess that's all.

Best wishes,
REGINA CANNON

"I hate tattle-tales!..

...and here's how I chased them out of my house"

"'You're a hard worker, Bess,' my sister said one day, 'but your clothes are such tattle-tales. That grayish look tells everyone they aren't really clean!'... I was furious, but I took her hint. I stopped buying 'trick soaps' and gave Fels-Naptha Soap a try."

"And what a lucky day! In a second, I chip Fels-Naptha into the water in my washing machine and get the grandest suds. I never dreamed golden soap is so much richer. And Fels-Naptha is full of clean-smelling naptha! Even grimy, greasy dirt floats right out."

"Everybody says nice things about my washes now—no more tattle-tale gray in my house. John says that red look is gone out of my hands, too. There's soothing glycerine in Fels-Naptha, you see." Fels & Co., Phila., Pa.

© 1935, FELS & CO. NRA CODE

Banish
"Tattle-Tale Gray"
with
FELS-NAPTHA SOAP

Hollywood goes on a romantic binge! While our news,

There's nothing as exciting as a wedding, unless of course it's two weddings, and the one in which Ginger Rogers and Lew Ayres figured was truly something to behold.

Ginger was dressed in pale green lace and her bridesmaids, Mary Brian and Janet Gaynor, wore blue and beige respectively. Lew boasted the slim Ben Alexander and the plump Andy Devine as attendants.

The Church of the Flowers in Glendale was a bower of posies and after the minister had united the pair, birds began to sing. If it had been planned to have the canaries come in on the chorus, it couldn't have worked out more perfectly.

The groom wondered if he should kiss the bride after the ceremony and, as she looked doubtful, too, they abruptly turned from each other and started down the aisle and on out into the limousine which was there to whisk them to the Ambassador Hotel for the reception. This car had a slight edge, pictorially speaking, on the sedan in which Lew drove to the church. When he alighted from that little number, his high silk topper bit the dust, much to his confusion and the amusement of interested onlookers.

The reception was punctuated with champagne and celebrities to quaff it, and, let it be said, for the good taste of the town, no one quaffed to the point of forgetting that he or she was a Beverly Hills blueblood or, at least, of the prominent Glendale gentry.

Lois Wilson caught the bride's bouquet. She said she was going to, and, b'gosh, she did. That's Lois, as good as her word, and a good gal anyway.

As the new Mrs. Ayres cut the huge, frosted cake, someone asked her, "How does it feel to be a bride?"

To which she answered blithely, "I don't know. I've never been a bride before."

Ginger! Tch, tch. Jack Pepper. Remember?

■ ■ ■

Here is a story as touching as it is tragic, for it at once shows the heart of Hollywood and how a budding career may be nipped before it has had a chance to blossom.

Little Mary Blackford, Fox player, was returning from the studio one day last fall when her car crashed into a pole. She was severely injured and is even today under doctor's care, for she's paralyzed from her neck to her waist.

And that is why the younger players got together recently and staged the Mary Blackford Benefit, held at the famous Cocoanut Grove, and toward which hundreds appeared and other hundreds, who could not be accommodated, contributed. Thus Mary, who in health was an unknown, suddenly became the town's most talked-of, in illness. The event, which Anita Louise, Tom Brown, Helen Mack, Patricia Ellis and Trent Durkin were responsible for, proved an overwhelming success. Will Rogers, who had Mary in his stage play, "Ah, Wilderness," took care of the child's hospital bills up until the Benefit and Joan Crawford has assumed them since. The huge affair was given to raise money for Mary's family, should the youngster be confined to her bed indefinitely.

Pretty nice, this Hollywood, isn't it?

■ ■ ■

Our Scotty and his ever-alert camera approached Ann Harding recently and asked her to pose. The pretty patrician star declined, saying that she didn't expect to be in movies much longer anyway, so what was the use?

But our guess is that her refusal was due to the fact that Harry Bannister, her erstwhile hubby, was with her and there are those who say a re-marriage isn't an impossibility. Miss Harding evidently wasn't in the mood to confirm rumors, you see.

■ ■ ■

Newly-wedded Ayres cut themselves a piece of cake—and what a cake!

Bridesmaid Janet Gaynor poses with her mother and Margaret Lindsay.

Will Rogers, shy benefactor, at the Mary Blackford Benefit.

as related by Regina Cannon, sizzles with human interest

We predict that Mary Brian will be our next movie bride. We realize, too, that she's been crying "wolf" for years, but you mark our prowess as a prophet. Dick Powell doubtless is slated to be the lucky lad.

Incidentally, Dick's brand new home at Toluca Lake is almost completed. In fact, when the little matter of gas is set, it will be ready for occupancy. You see, when the house was finished, it was discovered that it boasted everything from a grand piano to a private-panelled entrance; that is, everything but gas. The architect blamed it on the plumber and the plumber passed the buck to Dick. It took a few days to rectify this so-called minor deficiency, but now there's gas in the new Powell homestead.

■ ■ ■

Speaking of girls who cry "wolf," how about Garbo? Those reputed to be in the know claim she will wed George Brent. Now, don't jump at us! We, too, realize that "The Painted Veil" is about to be released, that the Great One was supposed to care for Mamoulian when "Christina" was issued and that she was said to be helping Jack Gilbert (also in the picture) at that time for a reason. But, nevertheless, Greta has taken a snappy little hide-out hut at Palm Springs and every evening, when he has finished his chores at Warners, Georgie hops a plane to see his "frand."

Incidentally, he has built a six-foot wall around his own home, so that when the lady visits him there she may be assured of complete privacy. Well, be philosophical (George is). Even if nothing comes of it, Mr. B. hasn't lost out by the publicity.

■ ■ ■

Walk-out night was unofficially staged at the Vendome recently. It wasn't on the program, but was featured just the same. The Gene Markeys (she is Joan Bennett, you know) were having a little tête-à-tête, which suddenly became a discussion and then developed into a rousing row. Joan put on her coat and left a by-then-tearful husband.

Later, not to be outdone by its competitor, the Brown Derby staged a miniature bout of its own. This time Lee Tracy and Isabel Jewell were featured. Miss J. also applied for her walking papers.

Well, the course of true love, etc., etc.

■ ■ ■

Someone once said that many assistant directors are studying to be morons. Just listen to this.

Aileen Pringle, recently engaged to make an independent picture, phoned the assistant director.

"I haven't seen the script," she said. "What type of role am I to play?"

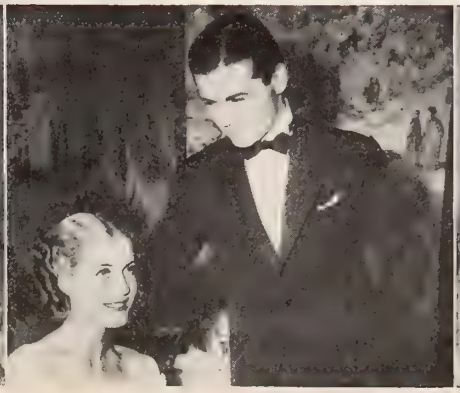
"It's an afternoon dress," he returned glibly. "Y'see, you meet the leading man and have a talk with him and then go out. Yeah, that's right, it's an afternoon dress."

"Someone" may be right after all.

■ ■ ■

Clark Gable and Gilbert Roland are off on a hunting trip together. Can it be that they're gunning for the dove of peace? Remember the little battle the boys put on recently, during which one applied a swift left to the other's chin? Well, all is palsy-walsy now, as indeed it should be between two such attractive young men.

■ ■ ■



Speaking of Clark, that gen'man sent Aimee Semple MacPherson a box of red roses right straight to the Temple. And did she announce the fact between sermons over the radio? Oh, g'wan, ask us? So you know Aimee, too, eh? (Con't on page 64)

Our reporter prophesies that the Brian-Powell wedding will be next!

Anita Louise and Tom Brown helped arrange the Blackford Benefit.

Pat Paterson and Mary Blackford. Taken before Mary's accident.

You've been waiting to see her in a picture like this

SHIRLEY TEMPLE

in Bright Eyes

with

JAMES DUNN

Produced by SOL M. WURTZEL

Directed by DAVID BUTLER

Lovers

It looks like the raven-haired Chester Morris is all set for a gr-rand romance with the gorgeous Carole Lombard—for the benefit of the cameras, anyway, in a scene from "The Gay Bride," for M-G-M. Carole, you know, can also be seen in "Lady By Choice" and "Now and Forever," Columbia and Paramount pictures, respectively. And Mr. Morris has been kept busy on his home lot, Universal, where he made "I've Been Around." His next will be "Princess O'Hara."

Salt of the Earth

Steady and regular has been Fay Wray's climb to success. She is the type too often taken for granted, because she is so dependable. Therefore we would like to remind you that her smooth work in "The Affairs of Cellini" and "The Richest Girl in the World" deserved much fancier adjectives than "dependable." Her recent pictures are "Woman in the Dark," an RKO release, Universal's "Cheating Cheaters," and Columbia's "White Lies." A busy lady, indeed.

Such Dancing

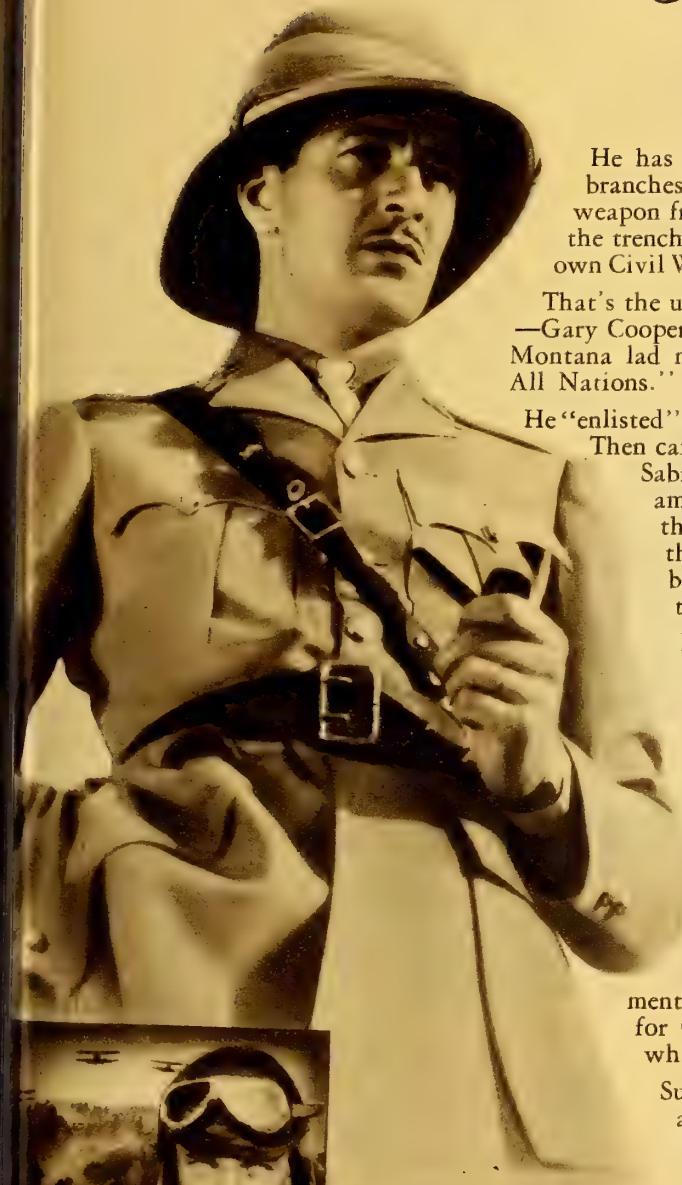
Terpsichorean devotees list all dances as "B.A." or "A.A.," meaning "before" and "after" Fred Astaire. And well deserved is this recognition of authority. For where is there another such exponent of the modern dance? Having seen him perform in "Flying Down to Rio," the RKO musical, you surely won't miss seeing him, again coupled with Ginger Rogers, in "The Gay Divorcee," and after that with Ginger and Irene Dunne in "Roberta."

Divine

The prima donna about whom the whole world is talking—Grace Moore. Her divine singing, intelligent acting, graceful figure and general delightfulness in "One Night of Love" will linger in our memories forever. As Tullio Carminati, who played the role of her maestro in the picture, so aptly expressed it, "It's grand to see a Carmen who weighs less than the bull." She will do some concert and operatic work in the East before she starts her next picture for Columbia.

Good Work!

John Gilbert deserves a nice pat on the back for coming through with such a swell performance as the newspaperman in "The Captain Hates the Sea," for Columbia. It's a different sort of rôle for Jack, and we were tickled to see him play it with the sureness and finesse of a real trouper. Although he isn't under contract to any studio at the moment, we're sure that some smart producer will sign him up after seeing him in his latest picture. We'd like to see Gilbert back to stay.



Romance

The very essence of romance is Irene Dunne in "Sweet Adeline," a Warner Bros. musical for which she was borrowed from RKO. It is a film that suits her well because it provides equal opportunity for her twin talents, singing and acting. Another costume picture, Irene? Yes—but let's not complain while she looks so divine in feathers and furbelows and bustled skirts. In her latest picture for RKO, "The Age of Innocence," she co-starred with John Boles. The same studio also has her scheduled for "Roberta," the N. Y. stage hit, with Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers.

Gary Cooper, Fighting Man of all Nations!

by James A. Daniels

He has worn the uniforms of a half-dozen nations and twice that many branches of the various services. He has carried every known form of war weapon from a six-gun to a cavalry lance. He has soldiered in the Sahara, the trenches of France, the mountains of Italy and on the battlefields of our own Civil War. He has fought hand-to-hand, in the air and astride a horse.

That's the unique record of filmdom's best-beloved portrayer of warlike roles —Gary Cooper. Too young to see actual service in the World War, the tall Montana lad nevertheless has earned the screen title of "The Fighting Man of All Nations."

He "enlisted" first as an aviator in that never-to-be-forgotten picture, "Wings." Then came brief periods of service in the French Foreign Legion in "Beau Sabreur" and again in "Morocco." Who can forget him as the American ambulance driver on the Italian front in "A Farewell to Arms"? Then there were the roles of the British Tommy in "Seven Days Leave," the U. S. Marine in "If I Had a Million" and the American doughboy in "The Shopworn Angel." More recently he turned time back to don the uniform of an officer of the Confederacy in the Civil War.

Nor is Gary through with uniforms. He has just finished the stellar role in Paramount's "The Lives of a Bengal Lancer" and both Gary and the studio believe it is the most colorful characterization of them all. As the heroic young captain in this picked British regiment stationed on the northern boundary of India, Gary alternates between the English Army service uniforms and the picturesque Indian dress uniforms worn in honor of the native allies of the British.

But more important than the uniforms he wears is the part he plays. It's the tensely dramatic role of a British officer who goes gayly into danger in order that the honor of the regiment, the Bengal Lancers, may remain unsullied and that a soldier-father may never know that his son betrayed the regiment. Critics who have seen the picture agree that it marks a new high for Cooper and that the picture promises to be to talking pictures what "Beau Geste" was to the silent screen.

Surrounding Cooper in this colorful setting are such excellent actors as Sir Guy Standing, himself an officer in the British Navy in the World War; Richard Cromwell, Franchot Tone, C. Aubrey Smith, Monte Blue and Kathleen Burke. Henry Hathaway directed "The Lives of a Bengal Lancer," a picture which has taken three years to make, and which was partially filmed in India.

Mrs. Gable never visits the set to check up on Clark's big clinches such as this one (above) with Joan Crawford in "Forsaking All Others." She is neither jealous nor suspicious and is content to remain in the background of his public life, serene in the knowledge that she is first in his private one.

Why I Stay Married

Are you wives on the spot? Jealous of your husbands?

A famous husband named Gable tells his side of the story

IF you have an attractive husband—or contemplate annexing one—you have the same problems that beset Ria Gable. She has the constant worry of predatory women—so have you. She has to fear flattery that turns a man's head, ego that breeds superiority—so do you. Her husband's reactions must be your husband's reactions, so I sought out Clark. His answer is revealing, helpful to us all.

I said to Clark, over the luncheon table, "What kind of a woman do you think an actor should marry? In order to make marriage successful, I mean?"

Clark said, without an instant's hesitation, "The kind of a woman I am married to—my wife."

We had been talking about Hollywood marriages and their failures and the why of their failures—Kay Francis and Kenneth MacKenna, Ruth Chatterton and George Brent, Ann Harding and Harry Bannister, Gloria Swanson and her exes, Jean Harlow and Hal Rosson, the sadly swelling list of them.

Clark said, "It's all predicated, I believe, on the basic law of things—where the husband, or in our business the 'star,' is the breadwinner, the marriage has a seventy-five per cent chance of success. You can look about and make, off hand, a list of vital statistics proving this contention.' For instance, the Jean Hersholts, the Clive Brooks, the Leslie Howards, the John Boles, the Warner Baxters, the Morgans, Frank and Ralph—in every one of these marriages the husband is the one in the arena and the wife is just the wife. And in every one of these marriages, too, the marriage has stood and appears to be standing on the firm bedrock of many years. Also, in every one of these marriages the husbands and wives are of approximately the same respective ages and the wives are intelligent, self-sufficient women who have been around and know what it is all about. They are real people, neither jealous rivals nor paper-doll appendages.

By Gladys Hall

The Gables in a party mood (left). She likes social life—he likes hunting, yet they never reach an impasse.

"On the other hand, and in such cases as Ann Harding's, Gloria Swanson's, and so on, the wives were the stars. The men were known as 'the husbands of . . .' To be 'a husband of' means the divorce court even as you stand at the altar. You can't get away from the fundamental laws separating and governing men and women. Grease paint on the face does not alter immutable laws. Man is born with a dominant ego—offend that ego or compete with it in the same field and, if you are a woman, you will soon be a divorcée."

I said, "You've never talked, specifically, about your own marriage, Clark, or your own wife. Do you mind?"

Clark said, "Not at all. You've asked me what kind of a woman an actor should marry and the only way I can answer that question is to describe my own wife.

TO begin, then, I am the 'star,' Ria is my wife. But she is a wife, who though not in my profession is in it—for me, not for herself. She is interested in it and she is thoroughly informed about every phase of it. She is ambitious about it for me. She is interested in it as she would be interested in medicine, in law, or in banking if any one of these were my life work.

"She is, also, a very self-sufficient woman, which is very important in the making of a successful 'movie marriage.' She has her own interests, her own friends, she has her bridge clubs and parties and children and our home. She doesn't seize hold of my life with idle, and therefore morbidly curious, (Continued on page 76)

Marlene Answers all Your Questions

Von Sternberg? Husband? Child? Career? Future?

by Ben Maddox

I HAVE just had twenty minutes with Marlene Dietrich.

It took me three months to get them. But when I finally got to La Dietrich she talked as she has never talked before. So this, really, will have to be an unusual sort of story. Because the woman herself is so extraordinarily different.

An appointment with Marlene can only be made after the greatest maneuvering. Her agent sorts the sheep. So few are chosen that half a year has elapsed since she was last interviewed. I felt complimented when her agent telephoned me that he would be glad to have me interview her.

Then came one broken date after another, for three months. Finally I was told to appear at the studio. I was walked out to her dressing-room. She hadn't yet come off the set. In two minutes a large, gray Rolls-Royce drew up and out stepped a maid who expressed disappointment at her mistress' absence. A few more minutes and Marlene came walking around the corner from the sound stage.

We were left alone in her dressing-room.

She was attired in a striking black satin Spanish gown of elaborate design and over one ear she wore a red flower. But I didn't pay much attention to her costuming. I came to see Dietrich.

Sitting on a small straight chair beside her desk, she turned toward me. She was gorgeous. She has the biggest blue eyes, in which lurk a constant twinkle. There was a slight curve of merriment on her wide, lovely mouth. I suspected that she classes interviews as amusing.

Marlene isn't a terribly curious person herself. She is polite and kind. But she distinctly has enough in her own life to keep her occupied.

"You have been subjected to such a lot of criticism," I began, "that I thought you might like to give me a story on what your four years in Hollywood have meant to you. We've had everyone's opinion but yours."

She smiled a little. Just as she does on the screen. To myself I stated that they can protest all they wish about beauty being no longer a woman's major asset. See Dietrich and succumb!

Perhaps her remarkable charm is due in part to her serenity. She is still, not silent. And friendly, though not fluttery. Her voice is slow, caressingly rich in tone.

"I should not like to do the story in the first person, as if I were writing it. Somehow, that sounds conceited to me," she said.

The 'phone rang. Excusing herself, she answered it. It was a good old-fashioned instrument, not a coy French hand-piece. She uttered one word—"No." With no attempt to explain something which didn't concern me, she faced me again, waiting for me to speak.

"In what ways do you feel that you have been changed by Hollywood?"

"I do not believe I have changed, except to grow older, of course. And I have more responsibilities. There is a realization that a whole production rests on one's shoulders. But Hollywood? It doesn't do anything drastic to people. Certainly not to those who have strong personalities and firm minds of their own."

"They say that you were dowdy when you arrived. And the Trilby legend has hung on."

Marlene smiled anew. A smile of hers can reveal so much. It makes questions suddenly seem trivial banter.

"That theory that I was dowdy, a dumb German housewife-kind-of-actress is absurd. I came from metropolitan Berlin. And I brought trunks full of Parisian gowns. If you will compare photographs of me then and today, I do look better, now. But that isn't any Hollywood polish. That is the effect of time. You examine old photographs of yourself. They, too, will be quaint."

That was a long speech for Marlene. She hesitated, then continued:

"As for this Von Sternberg-Trilby chatter, it is humorous to me. Anyone with intelligence can see that I'm not hypnotized. Obviously I have something of my own behind this face. You can't put a brain into a woman's head if it isn't there already."

I wondered about her approaching split with Von Sternberg. He has announced that she will not do her next film under his direction. Apparently, she will switch to Ernst Lubitsch. This report crops up every once in a while. It has come up again at this writing. Marlene stated, "People will make much of nothing. This is the situation: I do only one picture a year. Sometimes it has taken Mr. Von Sternberg nearly a year to find a proper vehicle. He will be a long time cutting and completing this one we are finishing now. He thinks I should not wait around when he hasn't a story for me. I did the one picture away from him, with Mamoulian, only because he telephoned me from abroad and advised me to. We are not separating now. If, until he is ready for me, I find something I like I will do it for another director."

All of which blasts beforehand the mystery that is apt to arise when she works in 1935 with a different man at the helm.

"How has Hollywood changed your mode of living?" I queried.

"Not at all. My parents had money. I live as I did in Germany, except that I have to have guards here."

She has been residing in the pretentious Colleen Moore place in Bel-Air and I had heard that she had leased it for two years, indicating permanency. So I inquired about it.

"But I just rent it from month to month," she retorted. "I never tie myself down. How do I know what will happen? Where I shall want to go?"

"But you do like Hollywood?"

"Oh, yes indeed. And this is strange. I am not bothered here as so many stars claim to be. Why, I am not even recognized on the streets. (Continued on page 90)

How the Stars Keep Youth and Beauty

We're willing to wager Claudette Colbert will be as beautiful at 40 as she is today. Her most important beauty treatment costs her nothing.

Loretta Young is only 22, to be sure, but she leads a star's nerve-wracking existence. Yet—there's not a sign of nerves.

They invariably look younger than they are. This story tells you about—not the expensive treatments and cosmetics—but the simple, daily routines which keep them so.

Joan Crawford has worked furiously and has undergone severe emotional crises besides. And—look!

Joan Bennett—married, divorced, remarried. Two children. A few years ago, she suffered a severe accident. Yet she played a 12-year-old in "Little Women."

by Katherine Albert

THOSE Hollywood girls are a source of constant amazement to me. They invariably look younger than they are. I'm not talking about the stars who, everyone knows, are "getting on" and who, by dint of constant and expensive devotional exercises before the Goddess of Beauty, manage to win that faint-praise tribute, "wonderfully well preserved." I'm not even talking about those stars, who are also "getting on," who cause us to lift our palms upward and sigh, "How does she do it!" No. I'm talking about certain of your favorite Hollywood actresses who are so genuinely lovely—with not a particle of fake or face-lifting about it—who look younger than they are and who will continue to do so for many years to come.

Some of these girls are, actually, in their early twenties. All right—so what? How many young girls do you know who are sallow, tired-looking, unhealthy of complexion and drab of hair? Some of the girls are in their late twenties—just edging thirty, perhaps, or just past that foolishly feared deadline. At twenty-five they look younger than they did at eighteen. And at thirty they look the same as they did at twenty-five.

They work all day and far into the night, sometimes. They are compelled, for policy's sake, to keep up a certain amount of social activity. They go through considerable emotional stress and strain. Yet they are healthy, slim, and fresh-looking in spite of it, when we might reasonably expect them to be old before their time.

THINKING about this one day, I reasoned that if the stars of Hollywood can achieve this, surely you and I can do the same thing. I asked five of the youngest looking and most beautiful stars in Hollywood to come clean and tell us how they do it.

I asked Claudette Colbert. Joan Crawford. Loretta Young. Joan Bennett. And Evelyn Venable.

These girls gave me sensible and workable hints for you all to follow. Not one of them mentioned expensive treatments or costly creams and cosmetics.

Here's what I found out from Claudette. She gives you some excellent, practical tips. It isn't a high powered beauty doctor who keeps Claudette looking so young. It's good common sense. She believes that the body is like a motor. If it is run down it (Continued on page 78)

THE Girl with the Strange Beauty told me this story:

The company was working on the back lot.

The back lot of a motion picture studio consists of acres which are transformed into slivers of whatever locale the pictures in production call for. A back lot may be a demure little New England village, with elms growing on the Green, and a staid brick church. It can be transformed, by the sheer wizardry of scenic designers, masons, and carpenters, into Limehouse, evil and old, mouldy and decayed, with buildings the color of the fog that so often obliterates London's waterfront, and ruts of wagon wheels sunk deep into the crooked, cobbled streets.

At the time this story took place, the studio's back lot was a European barnyard. There were thatched outhouses, with a creaking well under a gnarled tree, and chickens and geese pecking and waddling and cackling. Behind this set mountains made of laths, canvas and plaster rose three times the height of a tall man. Photographed skillfully, allowance being made for perspective, they would screen like the mountains which tower around the fertile farmlands of Hungary.

The company began arriving. They drove the mile or more from their dressing-rooms and parked their cars under the false-front mountains, where they'd be out of camera range.

The director, a European, sat making brief notes on the margin of his 'script. He wrote: "Intensify love scenes between gypsy and son. Gypsy girl should be the aggressor."

He liked the Girl with the Strange Beauty who was playing the gypsy. She was very young and fairly inexperienced. But she had that indefinable thing which makes a good actress. Furthermore, unlike most girls making headway on the screen, she didn't want to be the heroine always. In this picture, for instance, while she might have glamor as the gypsy, her rôle was entirely unsympathetic. It was, in fact, her unschooled passions and tempers that imperilled the happiness of the good family who had befriended and protected her—in the story.

As the director sat thinking about this girl, she came on the set with a young man in tow. He was, the director judged, the young man. He was tall and lean with broad shoulders, crisp hair and keen brown eyes. A fitting contrast to her, so small and round, with strange eyes, not blue, not quite green.

The director watched them as they came closer. Even under her greasepaint you sensed that indescribable radiance, that love light, in her beautiful young face.

"Hello," she said. "I want you to meet Mr. Blank, John Blank. John . . . My boss!"

An excitement went beating through her words. He was the young man, without a doubt.

"John's never seen a movie made," she explained. "So I invited him to sit on the set this morning."

The first scene to be shot showed the Girl with the Strange Beauty, as the gypsy, and the young actor who played the son of the house, together in the barnyard. She was supposed to be vamping him. With a toss of her head, a flip of her skirts, the lowering of her eyes, the pursing of her mouth, and the daring, seemingly accidental, baring of her smooth shoulder.

THAT scene showed a girl set on conquest, exerting her wiles.

Of course, it wasn't the boy in the scene the girl was alluring. It was the boy on the sidelines. She was showing off before John for all she was worth.

But all is grist that comes to the mill. The director sat chuckling. He had a marvelous scene and he knew it. They took it only once. No need to build up the feeling that scene should possess. It was there. In all its young, unadulterated glory.

On the sidelines John glowered. Little thunderclouds gathered in his eyes. The director, watching him, was amused and reminded of the first time he ever had been in love, years ago.

First love . . . with no experience, no philosophy, no humor to alleviate its sweet pain. So intense, so serious, so perspective-stealing.

When the scene was finished the girl came over. John tried hard not to let her see that he had been put out. He told himself he was stupid and awkward for feeling as he did. However, it's no easy matter for a man to fool the woman who loves him. The girl saw immediately that he was displeased. Her eyes went beseeching him. Her voice went caressing him. And before long everything was fine again.

The director sat stroking his chin. "In this next scene," he told the girl, "I want you even more predatory than the action suggests. I want you virtually to seduce the son of the house. Understand? You're a gypsy. You're untamed. You make that poor boy forget his simple little sweetheart. You sweep him right off his feet."

(From top to bottom) Myrna Loy, Miriam Hopkins, Ann Sothern and Sylvia Sidney, four glamorous stars, who continue to disclose certain secret love incidents in their lives. One is the Girl with the Flyaway Hair. Another is the Girl with Lovely Eyes. The third is the Girl with the Strange Beauty. And the fourth is the Girl of the Orchids.

As soon as he spoke she was all attention. Her absorption in her work was one of the many things he admired in her.

"I understand," she said quietly. "Shall I go on now? Are you ready?"

"Please," he said.

She left John with a gay little wave of her hand.

The end of the previous scene had found the gypsy and the son headed toward the old farm wagon overflowing with fragrant hay. This scene picked them up seated on top of it. Close.

The first rehearsal went beautifully. The Girl with the Strange Beauty ran her hands along the cheeks of the youth who played the son. She entangled her small brown hands in his fair hair. With her lips close to his lips she made feverish demands.

"Love me!" she urged. "Love me!"

The director bent forward in his chair. They began wheeling the camera close to get their angles. There was every indication this scene wouldn't be long in rehearsal.

She turned her body from the boy and one small brown hand flew under her heart, as if to still its mad pounding. She threw back her head and tossed her hair out of her eyes. It was all over. The spell was gone.

In that split second she caught a flash of the boy, John. Even if he had told himself that this was acting, that this was merely the girl's job, that it had no true meaning, it had done no good. His acute masculine displeasure showed in his face.

THE girl wanted to jump from that load of hay and run to him, throw her arms about him, tell him what only troupers ever really understand, that all this meant nothing, really, that it sprang out of some secret part of her that had nothing to do with him or anyone else. Perhaps it would have been better if she had done this. Perhaps this would have straightened things out. But, instead, she remained where she was and ran through the action again.

This time, however, her hands moving against the young actor's face were wooden. "Love me!" She said the words but they didn't come quick and breathless, as if her very heart had pounded them out of her, the way they had the first time she spoke.

John's face relaxed. This tepid, routine love-making didn't disturb him in the slightest. He could quite accept this as part of a job. That, in truth, was exactly what was the matter. It had no spirit. Photographed, it wouldn't have been at all convincing or have motivated the rest of the plot. No audience would have believed that gypsy had swayed the boy, or excused him for being untrue to the sweet, pretty girl who was his real sweetheart.

A frown appeared between the director's eyes. Members of the company crew leaned back, lit their pipes and cigarettes. They knew now they wouldn't be needed for some time. This, obviously, was one of those stymies. It might be the rest of the morning before they got what they wanted.

It was.

The harder the Girl with the Strange Beauty tried to recapture the quality she had brought to that scene the first time, the more nervous and strained she grew. She was embarrassed, too, obviously, at having such difficulty in front of the young man.

She was, you must remember, only a beginner. In pictures longer, she wouldn't have permitted herself any such self-consciousness. It was part of her novitiate, part of her youth.

"We'll rest for a few minutes," the director said. He knew that under circumstances like these, driving methods would get him nowhere.

He turned to John. "I wonder if you'd do something for me?"

"Glad to, sir," John answered. He was a nice kid.

"Go over to my office. It's number seven in the directors' building. Right near the commissary. In the upper left hand drawer of my desk you'll find my pipe. Fetch it here for me, like a good fellow."

"I'll get it," offered an assistant. "I'm going down that . . ."

But the director hushed him with a look. It wasn't his pipe he wanted. It was more emotion on the set and less off the set. And the only way to achieve that, he realized, was to get rid of John, give the girl a chance to forget her own emotions and submerge herself in the character.

OKEH, we'll try once more," the director announced as John Disappeared down the road. "Forget everything. Don't see or think about any of us. You two are alone in the world. You know nothing but that blind desire to draw closer to each other."

They rehearsed it again.

"We'll take it," he said. He counted on the emotion and abandon the girl had shown before.

"Quiet!" shouted an assistant. "This is the take! Quiet!"

The eternal hammering ceased.

They waited while an airplane flew overhead. Until the drone of its motors could not be heard any more.

Other assistants turned guard to keep anyone who might approach from coming too near, from making even the slightest sound.

The camera started turning. The microphone was lowered.

The girl ran her hands along the young actor's cheeks. They became ensnarled in his hair. Her body moving closer and closer to him seemed almost to drift.

It was as if she was relieved to escape from the restraint which had imprisoned her emotions. It was as if she was intoxicated with her newly found abandon.

"Love me! Love me! Love me!" she told the boy sitting there beside her in the sweet hay. And now it was a cry. Unfettered and untamed.

Again the director strained forward in his chair. The little frown disappeared from between his eyes.

The girl turned her body from the boy and one small brown hand flew under her heart, as if to still its mad pounding. And now those who were watching believed in its mad pounding. That was the important thing.

She threw back her strangely beautiful head and tossed her hair out of her eyes. And the boy flung his arms around her and caught her to him. Now he was tempestuous and unleashed in his passion, too. And you felt he had caught her fire.

"That's swell, wonderful, perfect!" the director cried out. "That will turn the trick and (Continued on page 92)

When women gather, what trend does their conversation follow? Do they talk about politics—finance—science? Seldom. Clothes—careers—their homes? Sometimes. But always—men! A quartette of beautiful stars conclude herein their experiences

By Adele Whitely Fletcher

How Hollywood's younger set goes week-ending

James Ellison, Gertrude and Grace Durkin, Henry Willson, Miss Dillon, Pat Ellis, Tom Brown, Anita Louise and Trent Durkin—all set for lotsa fun.

By Franc Dillon

"I chaperone the crowd"

NATURALLY, when eight of the most popular of Hollywood's younger set planned a week-end party and asked me to chaperone them, I felt quite elated. While I suspected that I had been singled out for the honor because word had got around that I get sleepy around nine o'clock, I nevertheless grasped at the opportunity to study them at close range—to find out for myself if they really are different from ordinary boys and girls of the same age.

"The crowd" comprised James Ellison (new M-G-M player), Henry Willson, youthful agent, Patricia Ellis, Tom Brown, Anita Louise, Junior Durkin (now called Trent) and his sisters, Gertrude and Grace. They had been invited as guests of honor to a dinner dance at the Casa de Mañana at La Jolla, a beautiful seaside resort some distance from Hollywood. It all sounded very interesting. But my enthusiasm for the trip waned when mothers began calling me on the telephone.

"I wouldn't have allowed Pat to go if you weren't going with them," said Patricia Ellis' mother. "You'll take good care of them, won't you?"

And I felt about as peppy as a plate of wilted lettuce when Mrs. Fremault called me about her child, Anita Louise. "You know, I don't often allow Anita to stay away all night," she said.

At least their mothers think they are still children, I thought to myself.

There were Tom Brown and Anita Louise, who is Tommy's everything; the two Durkin girls, Grace and Gertrude, and their brother, Trent (Junior); James Ellison, a handsome six-footer, who is under contract to M-G-M and looks like a potential rival for all the he-men heroes at that studio; Patricia Ellis and Henry Willson. Henry writes for the fan magazines and has nearly all of the younger players in town under his management.

The 100-mile trip to La Jolla (Continued on page 88)

So she won't talk, huh!

Marion Davies evaded all our questions. So we asked other people about her. That'll teach her!

By Regina Cannon

MANY people are "doing time" these days who might be at large making whoopee if they hadn't spoken out of turn—not to mention the bright boys who have talked themselves in and right out of big jobs. Yes, indeed, indiscreet gossip has caused more trouble than stocks, blondes, Hitler, hay fever—well, almost anything you can name that results in a first-class headache.

And so it would seem that he who has learned to hold his tongue is scheduled to make friends and money—to win the popularity contest and a bankroll.

Marion Davies is one of these. No one has ever heard Marion pull a verbal nifty on anyone. No one has ever heard her talk about herself. Thus we were more or less reliably informed upon setting out to interview Miss Davies.

However, not to be easily discouraged, we figured someone would be able to induce Marion to speak her piece—and it might as well be us. Just how we came out on the deal, you are respectfully requested to judge for yourself. Leniency will be appreciated.

Miss Davies had just returned from Europe. She had had a grand time travelling. She had encountered Douglas Fairbanks in the lobby of the Savoy in London. Mr. Fairbanks was awaiting the arrival of the King of Siam.

"Which reminds me," giggled Marion, "of the time I met the King at Pickfair. I thought he was the butler—dressed up as elegantly as he was—and flung him my wrap."

There are rumors afloat that the beauteous blonde never actually made that mistake. But it's a good story anyway and is indicative of her character. She is not only able, but makes opportunities to tell a good one on herself. How many people are capable of that?

And whatever we asked the girl, she changed the subject. We told her she was looking grand. Hadn't she lost a few pounds? And she said, "Oh, you ought to see What's-Her-Name these days. Remember her?"

WE said, "That's a duck of a hat you have on," and started to add a question or two about the clothes she had purchased abroad, if any, when Marion interrupted with the news that another old-time movie favorite had become deeply interested in—of all things—embryology. And was really making quite a name for herself, my dear, in scientific circles, my dear, and didn't we think it was wonderful? All of which was very interesting, no doubt, and indicative of Marion's friendly spirit and lack of absorption in her own personal affairs. But it wasn't what the doctor (Continued on page 85)

Franchot Tone simply cannot stand back-slappers.

By Martha Kerr

How do the stars' pet hates check with your own?

Don't ever mention "cockroach" to Jeanette MacDonald.

THE other day a friend of mine and I were talking about our various likes and dislikes. We discovered that our likes were pretty conventional —good food, clean linen sheets and eight-week-old puppies.

But it was when we got to our hates that we discovered vital bonds. And we decided that nothing draws people together so closely as rousing mutual hates. Just because we both simply loathe men who call us "dear lady," our rather mild friendship took on a vigorous palship and mutual understanding we had never had before.

Have you ever noticed that when someone says, "I like . . ." you just go on sipping your cocktail. But when a person cracks out with a good "I hate . . ." you give your undivided attention. And invariably by their hates ye shall know them. So it occurred to me that it would be fun to find out the pet hates of the Hollywood boys and girls. If their hates coincide with yours, you'll like them better, I'll bet. If not, they might as well give up your friendship. So see how your hates stack up against Hollywood hates.

There's Franchot Tone, for instance. He simply can't stand back-slappers. You know those guys who meet you on the street and start beating you on the back with a "Well, well, old fellow, how are you?" Franchot's antipathy began at college when one of his classmates slapped him on the back and looked over his shoulder while he was preparing for next day's classes. Later he discovered that the guy was copying all his work.

WHEN Tone came to Hollywood he was introduced to a publicity man who slapped him on the back and told him what a great actor he was. And from that day on . . . well, maybe you have a little pet hate in your home and know how Franchot feels about that press agent.

Then there's Ricardo Cortez. Gosh, how sore he gets when somebody mauls him. Recently a fellow actor came up to him and, after admiring his suit, tried to read the label inside the coat. Ric wanted to hit him. But Ric has a lot of hates, among them coffee with cream (he uses milk instead), people with dirty finger nails and women with too much make-up on. Ric craves natural feminine beauty and his wife uses little make-up.

Bill Powell despises chewing gum and you can't blame him when I tell you what happened when he was three years old. There were three packages of chewing gum on the living-room table. Young Willie mistook them for ordinary candy, chewed the sticks vigorously and swallowed the gum. It's an experience he hasn't forgotten, so don't offer Bill any chewing gum. Until recently he couldn't even use a toothpaste with a mint flavor, but he's getting over his antipathy. How? By consuming mint juleps. And that, it seems to me, is a swell cure for any antipathy.

When Jeanette MacDonald was a little girl she stepped on a cockroach in her bare feet. Of course, everyone dislikes cockroaches, but with Jeanette it amounts to a phobia. If you want to get in bad with Jeanette just mention the word "cockroach." She'll show you what a first-class spasm is (Continued on page 79)

A Little Lord Fauntleroy suit caused Jack Oakie's pet hate.

Crawford loathes telephoners who say, "Guess who this is?"

Average — but wonderful

Walter Connolly, the man who makes bad pictures good and good ones better

By Gladys Hall

THERE are thousands of men in the world who look like Walter Connolly.

There are thousands of men who were not born with the what-it-takes of Gable, the poetic beauty of Novarro, the muscular magnetism of Weissmuller.

Thousands and thousands of plain, slightly middle-aged men with thickening waist-lines and thinning hair and patient, tired eyes.

Thousands of such men who are chained to their desks year in and year out, who "get off," if at all, for a two weeks' vacation every summer, who are called "Hi, Dad!" by their children and "Yes, dear," by their wives. Taken-for-granted men who bring home the groceries on the 5:15, mow the lawns, put up the screens in summer and pay their insurance premiums while the insolent years gallop by.

And these thousands of men must wonder, with the especial wistfulness of plain, average men what it might be like to step out of the gray routine, to lead exciting, stimulating, emotional lives, colored with travel and exciting contacts and beautiful women and applause.

Many of them must think, as their secret dreams stir inside them, "Of course, if I had been born looking like Gable or Montgomery, it would have been easy then. . . ."

Many of them must gaze at average-looking Walter Connolly and wonder. For Walter Connolly does look like Any Nice Man. Like your Dad or mine. Like your husband or mine. He looks as though he might belong in a bank, a broker's office, or be the head of a string of chain grocery stores. He looks as though his wife might say, a little absently, "Yes, dear"; as though a troop of jolly children might hail him confidently as "Hi, Dad!"

He is certainly no Clark Gable. He is in his middle forties. He is five-feet-nine-inches in height. He weighs 190 pounds, knows he is too heavy and will do nothing about it save abstain from potatoes. His eyes are brown and very kindly. He is a plain man and he makes your blood pound and your tears flow and your pulses hum as even a Gable can't do.

And Max Reinhardt called him "The greatest dramatic actor in America."

How? Why? He is a very great artist, obviously. But what was it that sent this son of the late Walter James Connolly, head of the Western Union Relay Office in Cincinnati, Ohio, into the arena where the world's most beautiful women and handsomest men play, don grease paint and tangle their skilled hands in the heartstrings of the world?

Why is he not still sitting behind his desk as Third Assistant Cashier of the First National Bank of Cincinnati where, after St. Xavier's College and a polishing-off at the University of Dublin (the Connollys are Irish, in case you haven't guessed), he began the business of life. Because he did begin the business of life in business.

I asked him. It always fascinates me when one of these average, un-actorish-looking men — a Walter Connolly or an Edward Arnold—spur the public imagination and ride to stardom on these spurs. It is easier for a Gable, you know.

I spent the evening with Mr. Connolly. His wife, Netta Harrigan, and their ten-year-old daughter, Ann, had just gone back to New York. Mr. Connolly was to join them at their apartment there within the week, after the completion of Paramount's "Father Brown, Detective," for which he had been loaned by Columbia Pictures. In New York Mr. Connolly will do a play.

He said smiling, "My grandfathers are probably responsible. One of them was a whaling man and the other a railroad builder. They lived adventurously. They were not content with ledgers and filing cabinets and four walls. They wrestled with sandstone and steel, with monsters of the deep, flinging the tracks of travel over the untravelled face of the earth. They dealt with the raw material of life and death and change. It was not in them to sit at home and let the years limp by them, leaden-gaited.

"It was not in me. I really knew it from the beginning. I knew it when I was at St. Xavier's. But my family had all of the normal family's aversion to a son of theirs going on the stage. What, a Connolly! An Irishman! Nor did I look like the commonly accepted theatrical type even then. I wasn't a 'pretty boy.' Not by any means. Girls did not yearn over my romantic profile.

"What right had I to be an actor? Why didn't I stay in the bank and marry one of the (Continued on page 94)

Should the Husband

NO!

..says Ginger

● Marriage is a partnership. Expenses should be shared equally

Lew Ayres, at the right, and his bride, Ginger Rogers, above. Can they successfully follow Ginger's theory?

By Lynde Denig

I AM all for equality in domestic affairs."

With this defiant thrust Ginger Rogers, the tawny-tressed star, who first visioned the light of day in the appropriately named city of Independence, Missouri, began voicing her inner feelings on the much debated question of who should rule in the home: He or She.

A definite personality, with highly defined likes and prejudices, her answers never wavered. It was as though she had thought at length and deeply upon each ventured query; as though it was bred in her very being this expression of independence, of equality.

"I do not consider myself excessively modern," she continued. "But I do feel that marriage is a partnership from first to last, and whoever heard of a partnership where only one is responsible for expenses?

(I pause a moment to wonder whether Ginger, newly wed to Lew Ayres, will apply her theories to their marriage and find the arrangement a happy one. I wouldn't be surprised—Ginger being a woman of her word.)

"I have known more family quarrels to occur over money matters than anything else," said she. "I have seen young friends of mine start out with the best intentions and then get all messed up over bills. First they are mildly irritated; then there is an argument; then there are quarrels. Finally love flies out the well known window.

"I am sure this is not only true of Hollywood marriages. In every walk of life women are occupying important positions. Many wives are earning salaries that equal or surpass their husbands'. Certainly the fair-minded among them must feel it only just that they share expenses with their mates.

"If the equality of women (Continued on page 86)

pay all the Bills ?

YES!

..says Glenda

● There is only one head man in marriage. He pays all the bills

Above: A portrait of Glenda Farrell, who believes man should rule the home. Below: Glenda and Warren William in a scene from "Concealment," a Warner Bros. picture.

THERE must be one head of a house, and the visible sign of his authority is his hold on the purse strings."

Thus was I greeted when I questioned Glenda Farrell, attractive blonde star, on her opinion of a husband's status in the home.

Although thoroughly modern in every respect Glenda still clings to the age-old idea that man should be boss of the home.

"Please don't think me old-fashioned," she implored, seeing my expression of surprise. "I am judging by observations. It is my strong personal conviction that marriages following the old economic method, affording the wife just an allowance for housekeeping expenses, succeed, while other marriages, in which bills are paid by either or both, usually end in separation or divorce."

This was refreshingly interesting in a day when all is chaos concerning marriage, and I asked for further details. She gave them unhesitatingly.

"My philosophy of marriage is simple. Although I do not concern myself with other people's affairs, I have little sympathy for those who marry and play around as though they were single.

"I believe, as I said before, that there is only one head of the house and he, as head man, pays the bills. Whether a man realizes it or not, he inwardly resents the loss of dominance that has been conferred upon him through the ages. A gentleman may smile and say nothing, but behind that smile there are thoughts that a sensitive woman intuitively feels.

"When a man ceases to pay the bills he feels that the home ceases to be his home. Then there is danger ahead."

Perhaps Glenda comes to a portion of her conclusions because of her early marriage, (Continued on page 98)

PICTURE NEWS

(Above) Look who's twosoming—Roger Pryor and Ann Sothern. (Below) At the Trocadero, Connie Bennett, Clark and Mrs. Gable beam on Gilbert Roland.

Hollywood's social season is commencing. Take a look at who's who and what's doing (Below) Russian Eagle party for our Regina Cannon. Left to right, Gladys Hall, Gene Raymond, Regina, Ann Sothern and Mildred Lloyd.

She Was a One Date Girl

By James M. Fidler

PEOPLE called her "the one-date girl" because the men who took her out once never came back again.

You have read about such girls in magazine advertisements—you know, the girls in the ads who lament, "He kissed me once, but he never called to see me again." Those advertisements, you may recall, are often situated just across the page from the chap who boasts, "They laughed when I sat down at the piano, but when I began to play . . ."

Jean Muir, unlike the ladies of the advertisements, does not suffer from that insidious malady called halitosis. However, she does suffer, according to her own self-damning testimony, from the following faults.

She is not pretty in the accepted sense of the word.

She has no sex appeal.

She is much taller than the average Hollywood girl.

She lacks the ability to flatter men.

She cannot dance well.

She cannot play cards.

She cannot swim, play golf or tennis.

She has too much ego to please men, who like their own vanity appeased.

She will not inconvenience herself to be nice to men.

"And there are more reasons why I am unpopular with men," Jean confessed to me. "Men like to accompany girls who will cause other men to be jealous. They like to go out with pretty, vivacious girls—girls who dress well and dance divinely. I do neither.

"All of my life I have been a wall-flower. Until I was sixteen years old, I never had a date. No childhood sweetheart ever carried my books to school. As for fighting for me—well, no boy ever did. Fortunately, I was a big girl, and I was able to fight my own battles.

I HAD my first date when I was sixteen. Up to then no boy had ever attempted to kiss me. I made the first date myself. I was invited to attend a dance, and I was told to bring my own escort. I asked a neighborhood boy to take me. This happened back in the days when "cutting in" on dances was the fad; stags tagged boys who were more fortunate, and danced until they in turn were cut.

"I'll never forget that night! I'll never erase from my memory my growing dread as my escort danced, time and again, past the stag line and nobody cut in. After circling the ballroom a few times, I tried smiling at a few boys I knew at school, but none smiled back.

"Ashamed and barely able to suppress my tears, I finally pled the wall-flower's oldest, most pathetic excuse—I told my escort that I was tired. I asked him to take me to a chair, where I sat for the rest of the evening. I didn't see my boy friend again until the dance ended, when he apologetically arrived to escort me home. He need not have apologized; I understood.

"Perhaps that first experience is the reason why I hate dancing today. I have (Continued on page 84)

Jean Muir in a striking pose.

Jean Muir discusses the problems of unpopular girls

Fame is a Thief

Ronald Colman tells why. Do you agree?

by Faith Service

Ronnie with Loretta Young in the forthcoming "Clive of India" for 20th Century. Do you think Ronnie is as handsome without his moustache?

RONALD Colman can call his soul his own —but very little else.

Loretta Young once said to me, "Ronald Colman is like a man out of a book. He seems so subtle and sort of mysterious. He is like a character in a book you can't quite make out. You feel that maybe the author means one thing and maybe another . . ."

Loretta is right. Ronnie is like a man out of one of the very best English novels. He talks like a man in a book. And he is more exactly like his screen self in real life, than any other actor I know. He has that same remote smile, that look of one who remembers something lost, and rather sad, a long while ago, and who regrets that loss but is resigned to it.

He is utterly without pose. He hasn't one single mannerism or affectation. He never dramatizes himself. He never makes sensational statements. When, several years ago, he was called a woman hater in print I asked him about it, in the interest of all women. And he showed me his "little red book" wherein are inscribed the names and telephone numbers of Hollywood's most famed and fair. Whether he uses the telephone numbers or not he didn't say.

When I asked him for this interview he said, "Can't we just meet and talk, socially, and never mind the interview?" He sounded very reticent and English.

I said that I really couldn't be so piggy. I felt in honor bound to share him with the public. He conceded the point, graciously. He had finished his "Clive of India" scenes for the day and he changed into British looking tweeds, a bit worn, and took me to tea. He was smoking a pipe, he was tanned and very charming.

And once again I was impressed with the feeling one gets about him—that when he steps out of his life to meet you, or you, or me, he closes the door behind him.

What he really does in the house of his life, with whom he shares it, what hopes and dreams are closeted there, what memories haunt it, we have never known and probably never shall know.

I said on an impulse, "You really hate the things of fame, don't you? You hate to be famous?"

He said, "I'm afraid that I do."

"But why?" I asked. "What has fame done to you? What has fame taken away from you?"

And then Ronnie made the most sensational statement I have ever heard from him, made it with more passion, more of a show of emotion than I have ever heard him display in all the years I have known him.

"Fame has taken my life away, my life as I want to live it," he said. "Fame has taken away my privacy, which is infinitely precious to me, which happens to be more precious to me than money or any amount of publicity.

"Fame has robbed me of my confidence in my fellow men and women. It has robbed me of my old friends and prevented me from making new ones. It has robbed me of my right to harmless adventures, experiences, flirtations, if you will, and the general fun which should be a part of every man's earlier life.

"Fame has robbed me of my freedom and shut me up in prison and, because the prison walls are gilded, and the key that locks me in is gold, it isn't any less monotonous. I don't mean to be ungrateful, for I do send up praise that I've made more or less of a success in pictures, and do appreciate the plaudits of my admirers."

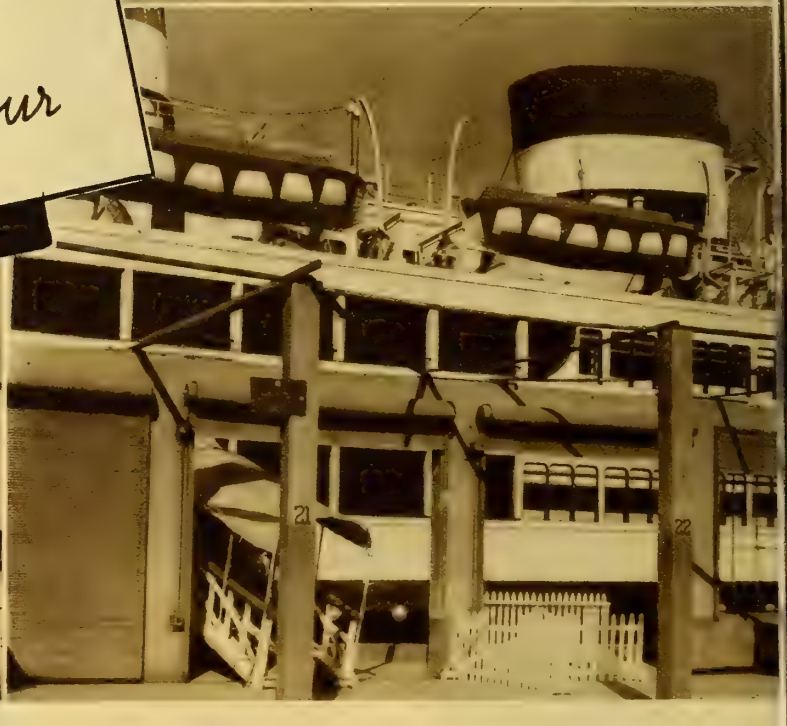
"But surely," I said, "surely there are compensations?"

"Yes, there is one decided compensation," Ronnie said, "and that is my work; I love the work, itself. But it is not of my work that I am speaking, now. It is of the smoke-screen that surrounds my work.

"There are no returns for me because I happen to be the unfortunate and no doubt stupid sort of person who does not care for the returns fame brings. They are not valuable to me. I don't want them. If you give a man a rare and costly gift and he has no use for it, then no matter how rare and costly the gift may be, it is not precious to him.

"There are only two gifts to be had from fame, (Continued on page 96)

"Fame has taken my life away," says Colman. "I love my work and I'm not complaining on that score, but . . ."



None of this is real

By Cyril Vandour

They're movie sets, every one of 'em! (Above, left) A section of lower London, and, right, part of a foreign village. (Below, left and right) An exact replica of a huge ocean liner built on top of a studio roof.

JUST as "all that glitters is not gold," so in pictures all that seems to be is not. The scenes you see, the sounds you hear, are, as often as not, achieved through trick devices handled skillfully by a group of technicians, who play a major part in the perfect production of a picture, yet who do not receive even an iota of the appreciation that is their due.

No fan or scribe ever sings the technician's praises. When the reviewers hand out their bouquets of choice adjectives, they never remember him, although he is the guy who transfers the bright ideas of writers and directors to the screen. The limitations of mortal man do not exist for him. He can pull from his bag of tricks almost anything you can name.

Take "One Night of Love," for instance. It has been lauded as one of the screen's finest musicals and is the personal triumph of that fascinating lyric butterfly, Grace Moore. The gentlemen who really put her over this time were the technicians in the sound department of the studio. They invented a new method of recording her voice, which they call the "hill-and-dale."

(Above) A New York street, complete to street cars, tracks and elevated railroad. Wouldn't you swear it was the real thing? (Below) A village square, monument and all, in a New England town. It was used in Will Rogers' "Dr. Bull."

(Above) A Chinese waterfront locale. (Below) A street in a Bavarian village. All of these pictures are of sets to be found in Fox Movietone City. The Bavarian set was used in "Music in the Air," with Swanson and Boles.

John P. Livadari, Columbia sound director, showed me under the microscope the difference between this new type of record and the old or ordinary type. His explanation of the obtruse scientific principles involved in the "hill-and-dale" was just so much fee-fo-fum to me, so I'll be satisfied by saying that it's a knockout. It enabled the studio to reproduce Miss Moore's warbling on the screen in all its marvelous range, which the usual type of recording could not do, and meanwhile saved her an endless amount of singing and temperamental fits.

This being the age of all-round (Continued on page 81)

Lines to a Little Lady

Shirley opens her daily mail-bag for you to read

by Robert Eichberg

JUST like Garbo, West, Bennett, Crawford and the other glamorous girls of the screen, Shirley Temple gets fan mail. But what can a person write to an actress who has not yet reached the advanced age of six years?

Having seen the hotcha letters some of the more mature ladies and gentlemen of the screen received, I wondered, as you doubtless do, too. So I managed to get a few hundred letters out of her file. Why don't you peep over my shoulder while we peruse some of the best? Shirley's letters are very nearly as cute as she is, and many of them are written by boys and girls only a few years older than "Little Miss Marker," herself.

"I'm mad at you," writes an eight-year-old girl from Detroit. "My Daddy and Mother took me to see you in 'Little Miss Marker' and they laughed very hard when you said 'Aw, nuts!' But when I said it to the minister at Sunday dinner, I got sent away from the table. Tell me, Shirley, how do you get away with it?"

Hmmmm! Pretty soon the reformers will be telling us she's a bad influence. Well, if they do, we'll just show them this next letter:

"You never heard of me and you won't give a damn, but I felt I just had to write to you. You see, I'm a two-time loser—just got out of the ——— State Pen after a five-year stretch. My first night out I went to see a movie and one of the pictures was 'Baby Take a Bow.' I knew it was hokum all the time I was looking at it, but Kid, you got to me. There I saw a guy like me, fresh out of the can, but his girl waited for him while he was away and mine didn't. I guess if she had, and we'd had a kid like you, I wouldn't have gone back the second time. Anyway, Kid, this can't be such a tough world as long as there is people like you in it, and maybe I will get a job, although things are tough.

I JUST wanted to tell you you taught me a guy can go straight if he has got a reason for it, and you are going to be my reason from now on. I am going to see every one of your pictures just like you were my little girl, and if you don't mind, I'm going to write to you every now and then to tell you how I'm making out. I'll be ashamed to write if I flop again, so I got a good reason for staying clean. If you do not hear from me again, you'll know I am just a lousy rat that will never be any good. But don't worry, Kid, I'll make out okay and sometime when you get big enough, you might write me a letter to tell me I'm doing pretty good, if it is not asking too much. I'll make you proud of me yet."

Doggone it, I'm sorry for that boy. Here's luck to him; he's got the right stuff.

From Utah comes a letter written by a woman who is not so modest in her requests. "Will you send me," she asks, "a small lock of your hair, to wear in a locket? Of course, if you can spare more, I would be very glad to get it, because my friends would die of envy if I could be wearing a whole bracelet made of Shirley Temple's hair. I know you will do this, because your hair will soon grow again if you cut it, and it would mean so much to me. By the way, if you have a lot of it cut off, please send it all to me, as I could make a lot of money selling rings and bracelets made of your hair to lots of my friends."

Quite a number of people have fallen in love with the famed Temple ringlets, and if she complied with all request for bits of her curls, the little lady would be kept as bald as an egg.

(Continued on page 74)

Miss Temple plays "lady" in "Bright Eyes." This opus will redouble her fan mail applause.

Virginia Bruce

What a charming "Jenny Lind" Virginia makes. Do you wonder that both Wally Beery and Adolphe Menjou fall in love with her in "The Mighty Barnum"? It will be a treat to hear Miss Bruce sing, for she has a lovely voice. Of course, you witnessed her successful screen come-back in "Jane Eyre." Didn't she look ravingly beautiful in it? She's happy now, too. Perhaps it's because of John Gilbert's success in "Captain Hates the Sea." You see, she's still fond of her "ex."

Wuxtra! Fox has elevated this handsome gentleman to the star ranks and what's more he's got a "singing clause" in his contract. With so many musicals lined up and his work in "Music in the Air" and "White Parade" so good, the Crosbys had better watch out.

John Boles

Jean Harlow

Although the screen's most famous platinum hasn't made a picture since "The Girl from Missouri," she'll hie herself and make-up kit to the M-G-M lot any day now to start work in "Spoiled." Her personal life? Well, she and Bill Powell have been having the usual number of dates.

Adolphe Menjou

Adolphe Menjou did such a swell job as the theatrical man in Universal's "The Human Side" that 20th Century decided to cast him as Bailey Walsh in "The Mighty Barnum." Wally Beery is seen as the famous circus man and Menjou is his habitually drunk but very clever partner.

Claudette Colbert

The Claudette who made you rave in "It Happened One Night," and more recently in "Cleopatra," will thrill you once again in the picturization of Fannie Hurst's novel, "Imitation of Life," with Warren William, for Universal. Right now, she's on the Paramount lot, making "The Gilded Lily."

MOVIES TO DELIGHT YOU!
MOVIES TO THRILL YOU!

Reviews

A: The Painted Veil
(M-G-M)

This is the story of a family's Ugly Duckling or Wallflower, whichever you prefer, who thought she knew what she wanted. And, as that famous philosopher, Mr. Emerson, so sagely pointed out to all of us, "Be careful what you want, you'll get it." Thus Garbo, in her latest dramatic hit, finds that roses turn to ashes when they're clasped too closely.

The story is unreeled before a colorful background, moving from an Austrian town to a sophisticated Chinese colony and thence to the disease-ridden cholera country, where the heroine is given ample opportunity to deplore her folly and redeem herself.

Herbert Marshall plays the man she married for convenience in a restrained and noteworthy manner. George Brent enacts the cad and, no offense, gives a thoroughly convincing performance. Garbo is quite superb and actually beautiful. Never has she looked so devastating. The picture boasts a temple dance sequence which is literally gorgeous. Yes, "The Painted Veil" presents the first lady of the screen in all that is first class in fine film entertainment.

A: Romance in Manhattan
(RKO-Radio)

You've been waiting for "Romance in Manhattan." Probably you won't realize it until you've seen this picture which is composed of everything scheduled to make for first-rate entertainment. There are laughter and tears, sentiment and sadness, good acting and the colorful setting which is little old New York. True, a lot of the scenes of the big town are stock and process shots, but that is not going to interfere with your enjoyment of the film one bit.

Francis Lederer, as attractive as he is sincere, is an immigrant boy imbued with the desire to make his living in America. Ginger Rogers plays a hard-working chorine interested only in caring for her young brother, Jimmy Butler. Fate throws them together and their road is a hard one, for there is always the villain just around the corner. Then, when all seems lost, their problem is solved by Farrell MacDonald in the funniest police station sequence you've ever witnessed. The audience fairly shrieks their appreciative laughter. We won't go into the details, because we don't want to spoil it for you. But don't come complaining if you miss this picture. You've been warned.

B: Flirtation Walk
(Warners)

Here is a delightful cinema concoction featuring Ruby Keeler, West Point and Dick Powell—not, of course, named in order of their importance. And if you like uniforms and parades, you're going to have a field day, the broad greens of the U. S. Military Academy serving as the field.

The story deals with the sentimental activities of the boy, the girl and the other boy, the lad who has already made the grade in the little lady's affections. Dick is not he—at first. But love laughs at locksmiths and First Lieutenants and a bumpy career at the Academy, and, in the end, triumphs.

There is a playlet within the picture that is not as amusing as it is intended to be, but there are two lilting tunes charmingly rendered by young Powell, who actually turns in a performance in this film and may no longer be disposed of as a song-and-dance man. Pat O'Brien, Ross Alexander and John Eldridge all give nice accounts of themselves, and Ruby Keeler, looking sweet and pretty, at least deserves "A" for effort.

B: Evelyn Prentice
(M-G-M)

It leaked out (and we wonder whose fault that was) that "Evelyn Prentice" was to be as gay and light and grand as "The Thin Man" and that Mr. and Mrs. Thin Man (Myrna Loy and William Powell to you) had duplicated their unusual performances of "Thin Man" memory. Well, 'tain't so, chillun, 'tain't so. "Evelyn Prentice" is a good, workmanlike, convincing picture and honesty compels us to put the period right there. Loy and Powell give good, workmanlike, convincing performances. Una Merkel, too, and Little Cora Sue Collins. Even Isabel Jewell in a drab and tearful rôle deserves a pat on the back.

A blackmailing gigolo is murdered and Isabel takes the rap, while Myrna stews around for some weeks, getting up her courage to confess that she fired the shot. But there were two shots, you see, which fact comes out in one of those good old hokum court sequences,

(Above) Myrna Loy and Warner Baxter in a romantic close-up from "Broadway Bill."

(Above) Keeler and Powell in "Flirtation Walk." (Below) Walter Byron and Janet Beecher in "The President Vanishes."

A TOUR OF TODAY'S TALKIES

By Regina Cannon

(Above) Herbert Marshall dines with the great Garbo; a shot from "The Painted Veil."

(Above) Lederer and Rogers in "Romance in Manhattan." (Below) Powell, Cora Sue Collins and Loy in "Evelyn Prentice."

with Powell berating the jury in his best style. We're not complaining—and neither will you, because you'll get enough thrills, laughs and tears out of it. But don't come around comparing it with "The Thin—" well, maybe we better not mention that again.

A: Broadway Bill

(Columbia)

Swellegant! Pardon the burst of enthusiasm but we happen to be horse lovers, and we'll bet the grand sweepstakes that you'll feel the same way after seeing this picture. In "Broadway Bill" there are the best shots of horses and horse racing this side of an English print. As if that were not enough, Myrna Loy, Warner Baxter and an excellent cast contribute to make a picture that is refreshingly different.

Walter Connolly, as J. L. Higgins of Higginsville, is grand. Surrounded by adoring daughters, fawning sons-in-law and the admiring townspeople, he rules the roost. But his little kingdom is abruptly upset when his eldest daughter's husband, Warner Baxter, leaves the security of Higginsville and the paper-box factory for his two loves, horses and freedom, and his youngest daughter, Myrna Loy, follows him. The climax comes when even J. L. can't stand the stuffiness of Higginsville and succumbs to the race-track fever.

Plenty of thrills, suspense and good laughs in this one!

C: College Rhythm

(Paramount)

Well, boys and girls, if you like Joe Penner, you're set. This picture hits on all sixes when Mr. Penner and his pal, the duck, are on the screen. But when they're off, it's a pretty jumbled, straining-at-comedy affair.

The love story is taken care of by Lanny Ross, Jack Oakie and Mary Brian. Mary, one of filmdom's fairest and most capable, wears a blonde wig. Your guess is as good as ours as to why, except perhaps because Helen Mack is a brunette. Anyway, it tends to blot Miss Brian out a bit.

Oakie plays the braggadocio in a mugging manner and just why he wins the girl has the Great Chinatown Trunk Mystery backed off the boards. Mr. Ross is rather colorless and Helen Mack is wasted in the rôle she plays.

There are a couple of catchy songs in the picture and a few intricate dance routines. But that is not enough.

A: The President Vanishes

(Paramount)

It looks as if Walter Wagner's first independent production is due to be one of the important pictures of the year. Though its theme is as fanciful as it is daring, the film emerges from the studio a realistic and thoroughly believable story.

True, this may be difficult for you to countenance until you see the President of the United States vanish from view, as a political group looks for him, seriously hoping their search will be in vain. Meanwhile a credulous public, loaded with propaganda, has unwittingly been instrumental in making matters difficult for the man who would give them peace and freedom.

The picture is replete with suspense, thrills and good characterizations. It has its lighter moments, too, and a human, homey touch difficult to discover in a story encompassing so serious a theme. Arthur Byron plays the rôle of the President, and Paul Kelly, Andy Devine, Peggy Conklin and Janet Beecher are members of the supporting cast. All give excellent accounts of themselves.

A: Sequoia

(M-G-M)

Warning! Warning! All adults, all children! Don't miss "Sequoia!" Here is Nature's age-old struggle for existence presented in a colorful and compelling manner. For sheer beauty and exquisite photography, it stands alone. The human angle, subjugated to the exciting adventures of Gato, the Puma, and Malibou, the Fawn, left motherless at birth, is stodgy and of secondary importance. The amusing antics and loyalty of these two natural enemies holds your interest every foot of the way. Its genuine humaneness, pathos, and thrills exhaust superlatives. Jean Parker both looks and handles her rôle well, but little Harry Lowe, with naive unawareness of danger in a rattlesnake sequence, steals top acting honors. The rest of the cast includes Russell Hardie, Paul Hurst and Ben Hall. This is a "must" for old and young alike.

B: A Wicked Woman

(M-G-M)

Mady Christians, who is new to American moviegoers and a particularly bright star, makes her cinematic (Continued on page 103)

Dresses You Could Really Wear

Isn't this a grand business dress of Anita Louise's? Navy wool with amusing churchly vest in white.

"Flirtation Walk"—I've named this after Ruby's new picture because it will catch all eyes! Navy crepe with silver stitching on white.

You could wear a metallic trimmed green crepe dress like this one of Margaret Lindsay's all day and for a dinner date, too.

A WELL-KNOWN Hollywood designer said recently that he designed real clothes for his stars because they are real people. He does not believe that screen clothes should be designed solely to appear glamorous but should be created so that you, who see them on the screen, would feel that they are in good taste—the type of costume you would care to copy, to wear.

This seems to be a general feeling among Hollywood designers today. Your increasing interest in the costumes you see on the screen has convinced them that they have to create styles that can be used as a guide to a star's public as well as a foil for her individual type. In other words, you have educated Hollywood to be less glamorous and more practical about fashions. Are you surprised to have accomplished this unwittingly?

This trend toward more wearable screen costumes has not hampered, in any way, the originality in detail which has characterized Hollywood designing for so long. I think it has made designers even more conscious of them to offset the simpler lines of the clothes.

The result of all this you-looking-at-Hollywood and Hollywood-looking-back-at-you, is screen clothes that you can picture yourself wearing. Clothes that are of star importance in their smartness but of everyday usefulness to you.

Orry-Kelly, who has created stunning clothes for such glittering ladies as Dolores Del Rio, Kay Francis, Lor-

Daytime, dinner, dancing! Screen designers keep you in mind by tempering glamor with practicality

by Adelia Bird

May we introduce our new fashion editor? She comes to us with a wealth of experience from the fashion world—experience which she wants to use in helping you solve your wardrobe problems. Address questions to her in care of this magazine. Enclose a stamped, addressed envelope.

Anita adds a matching short jacket to a simple evening gown and has a perfect outfit for five 'til midnight

You have to know your type to scramble sports details with evening formality as cleverly as Margaret does here.

The smartest sleeves begin at your waist—Ann Dvorak shows you. Black cellophane cloth with bright red velvet.

etta Young and those pictured above, has contributed a group of costumes this month that prove the fact that Hollywood is turning out costumes that you can really wear. He has to design all of his stars' clothes with an eye to the dramatic but with a definite leaning toward the wearable. You see, his clothes are copied and sold to stores all over the country. He can't have flights of fancy, or be carried away by a star's ability to wear bizarre things—he has to be both creative and down-to-earth. It's a large order which he carries out skillfully.

Look at the clothes on these three pages and I shall tell you why I like them and why I think that you could wear them with becomingness equal to that of the star for whom they were created.

In the first place, the fabrics are beautiful. They have texture interest; that is, the weave is unusual in several. The surfaces have character. If these gowns had no trimming or outstanding details you would notice them because the fabric creates an individuality for each. All good design starts with the fabric—the details come after. There's the trim daytime dress Margaret Lindsay wears, for instance. The crepe is rough but dull, so striped metal cloth is used for shining contrast on cuffs, neckline and buttons.

Three dinner dresses are distinguished by new and exciting materials. Anita Louise wears a double-duty affair in which the lack of trimming gives the fabric a starring part. The crepe is heavily ribbed in a wavy effect. Margaret Lindsay's white dress is ribbed, too, but in a diagonal pattern—it's a silk crepe striped with chenille, plaid velvet used for contrast. One of the most thrilling fabric discoveries of the season is the use of cellophane woven with cloth. Ann Dvorak has chosen one of these cellophane fabrics for a dramatic gown for informal evening affairs. The cellophane imparts a metallic glitter to it, red velvet makes a brilliant splash of color as accent.

You could shut your eyes and pick any one of this evening trio—they are all so charming. At left, Margaret Lindsay wears the classic formal gown in black crepe. She has a metal tunic that she wears over this for cocktail and dinner dates—clever ideal Center, Margaret again—in white crepe with silk fringe adding the trimming touches. And right, Anita Louise looking utterly bewitching in taffeta. Cording gives ripple to the collar and great flare to the bell-shaped skirt.

Taffeta has rustled its way into the smartest fashions again this winter. It is especially glamorous when used for the period type of frock, suggesting as it does, the era when great ladies waltzed slowly and skirts billowed and swished about their ankles. Youthful, yet sophisticated, is Anita Louise's version of the taffeta gown shown here.

After the fabric, the next big thought is the line of the dress. Each of these dresses was designed with simplicity and grace in mind. The small girl can wear them as well as the tall one. The "hippy" or hipless will not find that they exaggerate any figure discrepancy. The daytime group is youthful, designed to flatter the slender, girlish figures of Ruby, Margaret and Anita Louise. They are grand for all you young things who need a dress you can wear to classes or to work and yet could go right on to an informal date without a thought that you might not look right.

With the exception of Margaret Lindsay's very formal black evening gown, the other gowns are of the semi-formal type. Each with some little dodge that makes them perfect for the hours from five on 'til midnight. Every girl who leads a busy life socially, in school or in business, needs one dress of this kind. Now that small evening hats are considered dashing and smart, you can top a dinner gown with one and look correct for dining or dancing when your partner does not dress.

SO many girls have asked me what coat they should wear with a dinner gown of this type. It is a problem we all have. Unless you go hatless to a real evening party, you can't wear an evening wrap. If you are going to wear a small formal hat, then you have to wear a coat that fits into the general picture. I suggest a simple coat in a rich material such as velvet, broadcloth, velveteen or some of the other more formal materials. It should be either three-quarter length or full length because the regular daytime length looks very awkward with a long skirt. A short wrap or cape is the other alternative. If you own one of those cute fur capes or capelets, and it isn't too cold, that's another suggestion.

And last, the trimming details of these nine dresses are tricky but not fussy, just enough newness in each to mix dash with taste. There's a white clergyman's vestee for one, oddly square buttons and cunningly stitched fabric insets for another. (Continued on page 80)

HIDDEN SKIN TINTS IN THIS POWDER

do things for your skin

How Science discovered New Powder Shades

An optical machine, which reads the skin, color-analyzed the complexions of over 200 girls. Then it was discovered that the clear, pearly blonde skin held a tint of bright blue—the brunette had a note of brilliant green. These same beautifying tints, hidden in human skin, Pond's blends invisibly into their new powder shades.

Now you can get the shade of face powder that will make your skin thrilling.

You need not be content with powder that merely covers face shine. Now you can get glamorous new powder shades which actually do things for your skin.

See your skin Transformed

These new shades contain the actual skin tints found in beautiful complexions.

These hidden tints cannot be seen in the powder any more than in the skin. But they are there. Ready to glorify your skin.

Use this powder only once and those you know—you love—will compliment your new sparkling loveliness.

These glamorous shades are blended scientifically by Pond's. Read the amazing story of their discovery.

Look at the photographs above and see how they flatter girls of every type.

Among these six new shades is just the one you have been looking for.

The moment you film on Pond's Face Powder you will realize its texture is the smoothest. So fine—so closely clinging, Pond's never gives you a powdery look—yet it remains on hours and hours. And it is so inexpensive!

10¢ ¼ actual size

ONLY 55¢

FINEST POSSIBLE INGREDIENTS

Only 55¢ for a glass jar that contains as much powder as many $1 boxes. In boxes, 10¢, 20¢, 25¢. It's available everywhere.

But we want you to try it FREE. Just mail this coupon. You'll receive, free, three different shades. Select the most flattering. Discover today what this entirely new powder will do for your skin.

3 shades Free! Send for them today

(This offer expires April 1, 1935)

Pond's Extract Company, Dept. B. 04 Hudson Street, New York
Please send, FREE, Two Special Boxes of Pond's new Powder and an extra sample . . . three different shades in all.

I prefer 3 different LIGHT shades of powder ☐
I prefer 3 different DARK shades ☐

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ State_____

Copyright, 1935, Pond's Extract Company

Double Mint Gum

FOR BEAUTY OF MOUTH AND LIPS

P-5

NATURE HAS PROVIDED A WAY TO BEAUTY through chewing exercise. That is why DOUBLE MINT gum is so popular with the STARS of the screen and stage.

Modern Screen Patterns

612

612—(Above, right) Claudette Colbert in "The Gilded Lily" wears this smart shirtwaist dress in wool crepe. Boyish collar and cuffs. Sizes 14, 16, 18, 36, 38 and 40.

608—(Center) Claudette Colbert again in trim three-piece black wool suit. Tucked organdy for blouse and bow. Jacket slightly fitted. Sizes 14, 16, 18, 36, 38 and 40.

599

599—(Left, below) Peggy Shannon in lovely printed satin tunic frock for semi-formal wear. Square neckline and box-pleated trim are smart. Sizes 14, 16, 18, 36, 38 and 40.

Instructions for ordering patterns and Pattern Book on page 110.

608

KOOL
MILDLY MENTHOLATED
CIGARETTES
CORK-TIPPED

THE FINISHING TOUCH

Ho!..for the season of galoshes, sneezes, sniffles—and overheated rooms. Hurray for KOOLS, the cigarette that refreshes and soothes your sorely tried winter throat! Mildly mentholated: your throat never gets dry. Cork-tipped: KOOLS don't stick to your lips. B & W coupon in each pack good for gilt-edge Congress Quality U. S. Playing Cards and other nationally advertised merchandise. Send for latest illustrated premium booklet. (Offer good in U. S. A. only.)

SAVE COUPONS for HANDSOME MERCHANDISE

Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., Louisville, Ky.

Modern Screen Dramatic School

Director Van Dyke, our guest teacher, and Joan Crawford on the "Forsaking All Others" set.

Patience—first precept to success

Here is a message from Katherine Albert, the director of Modern Screen's Dramatic School. She says: Write me and ask me how to go about forming a dramatic club. But don't forget that self-addressed, stamped envelope. In fact, write me about any of your personal theatrical problems. The more, the merrier. Address your letters care of MODERN SCREEN'S Dramatic School, 149 Madison Ave., New York City. Don't forget the return envelope, stamped!

EVERY dramatic school prevails upon master minds of the theatre to talk occasionally to the students. So MODERN SCREEN'S Dramatic School has its guest teachers, too. And how wonderful it is for all you boys and girls, men and women who are interested in perfecting yourselves in dramatic art to have the greatest directors in Hollywood available to you. For on these pages you receive the most valuable sort of instruction—theoretical as well as practical advice.

This month I've persuaded "Woody" Van Dyke to talk to you and I'm so pleased with what he has to say that I want to hurry along this introduction. You all know his work. He is considered one of Hollywood's greatest directors. His list of hit pictures would reach around the globe. "The Thin Man" is his greatest triumph. It was he who guided the destinies of the "Trader Horn" company in Africa. And recently he directed Joan Crawford, Clark Gable, Bob Montgomery and the rest of the brilliant cast in "Forsaking All Others." In other words, that boy Van Dyke knows his stuff. And here is his personal message to you. You'll find his (Continued on page 112)

"IT'S WONDERFUL!" . . . Peggy Pool, Chicago, says: "I couldn't work. Had indigestion. Headaches. Skin broke out." XR Yeast helped her in a few days!

3 Millions already eating new "XR" Yeast...!

"RELIEVED IN 3 DAYS!"
South Bend, Ind. Mrs. Opal Haymaker says: "I had constipation. This XR Yeast relieved me in 3 days!"

"ACTED IN 72 HOURS!"
Norwood, Pa. David Evans says: "I developed indigestion. This XR Yeast acted in 72 hours."

"NEVER BELIEVED IN LAXATIVES"
Waltham, Mass. Mrs. W. R. Hickler says: "XR Yeast relieved my indigestion in just a few days! Headaches left."

"INDIGESTION STOPPED FAST!"
Elizabeth, N. J. Brewster S. Beach writes: "I tried yeast—the XR kind. My indigestion soon disappeared."

"SLUGGISHNESS LEFT IN A FEW DAYS"
Cable, Wis. Margueritte Bro, a writer, says: "I lost appetite, felt drowsy, miserable. Tried laxatives. Finally, I tried XR Yeast. Have only praise for it!"

"PIMPLES LEFT IN A HURRY!"
Chicago, Ill. Miss Florence Ryan writes: "Blotches all over my face! In a short time after starting XR Yeast, my pimples weren't noticeable!"

NRA CODE

DOCTORS—CLINICS are enthusiastic about XR Yeast, report: "Quicker than any yeast before!" The noted clinic head, Dr. H. Stevenin (above), says "XR Yeast gives unbelievably quicker results."

EVERYWHERE . . . people are eating this new yeast that corrects common ills twice as quickly!

You see, it's a stronger kind of fresh yeast. It speeds up your digestive juices and muscles . . . moves food through you fast.

Thus it banishes constipation and related troubles:—indigestion stops; pimples disappear; headaches cease; you have more appetite, energy—feel much better.

In addition, it supplies Vitamin A that combats colds! And it's very rich in Vitamins B, D and G . . . four vitamins you need to be healthy!

Eat 3 cakes daily. Get some Fleischmann's XR Yeast—at a grocer, restaurant, or soda fountain—now!

Copyright, 1935, Standard Brands Inc.

FLEISCHMANN'S "XR" YEAST...acts quicker

Everyone looks at your Eyes first

Make them attractive with

Maybelline

EYE BEAUTY AIDS

The Approved Mascara

BLACK, BROWN AND BLUE

BLACK AND BROWN

BLUE, BROWN, BLUE-GREY, VIOLET AND GREEN

COLORLESS

BLACK OR WHITE BRISTLES

● You cannot be really charming unless your eyes are attractive, and it is so easy to make them so instantly with the harmless, pure Maybelline Eye Beauty Aids.

First a light touch of Maybelline Eye Shadow blended softly on your eyelids to intensify the color and sparkle of your eyes, then form graceful, expressive eyebrows with the smooth-marking Maybelline Eyebrow Pencil. Now a few, simple brush strokes of harmless Maybelline Mascara to your lashes to make them appear long, dark, and luxuriant, and presto—your eyes are beautiful and most alluring!

Care for your lashes by keeping them soft and silky with the pure Maybelline Eyelash Tonic Cream—to be applied nightly before retiring, and be sure to brush and train your brows with the dainty, specially designed Maybelline Eyebrow Brush. All Maybelline Eye Beauty Aids may be had in purse sizes at all leading 10c stores. Insist on genuine Maybelline Eye Beauty Aids to be assured of highest quality and absolute harmlessness.

Good News

(Continued from page 17)

Little Shirley Temple has to stay home for the holidays. No more Santa Claus-seeing nor shopping for the Fox starlet, which proves that being a famous child actress has its drawbacks.

Shirley's Ma heard her suddenly scream while going through a big department store last week. She looked down at her child, just in time to see a female souvenir-seeker clip off one of the youngster's curls. Truly, there are such people in the world.

■ ■ ■

Gloria Swanson and Herbert Marshall are enjoying life at Palm Springs between pictures. Suddenly La Swanson discovered that the gentleman dwelling in the next bungalow to hers was none other than the Marquis Henri de la Falaise, one of her former husbands.

However, at the time of discovery, Hank had spotted Garbo striding down a desert road and ran to have a look. Meanwhile, Greta, sensing that she was being watched, took off like an airplane, a gazelle, or whatever else "takes off."

Oh, we tell you, there's nothing like life among the cactus, especially if the plant grows on the edge of the Colorado Desert.

■ ■ ■

Donald Duck, out at the Disney Studios, threatens to give even Mickey Mouse a run for his money. On calling the studio for news of him, the operator flipped back, "About Donald Duck? Would you care to speak to him?"

But, alas, Don proved to be too busy. However, we learned that he is now playing small roles in Mickey's pictures, but if he shows promise, he's to be promoted to the high estate of featured player.

■ ■ ■

Hollywood is noted for its rackets, but here's one that's new and different and explains why the stars change their telephone numbers every month. A star's number is never printed in the phone book. (One of the rare exceptions is Wally Beery's.) But it is available to the studio workers. And some bright lad—an office boy who'll probably be the next captain of industry—conceived the idea of selling telephone numbers to the fans.

The fee is modest. Twenty-five cents a number. The fan who has paid the two bits can then have the thrill of hearing his favorite star's voice saying "Hello." The best time to get the star (and not the maid) on the phone is about three A.M. Well, if it's a busy week for the office boy, it's a bad week for the stars. And now you know why they guard their numbers as Marlene Dietrich guards her eyelashes.

■ ■ ■

Von Sternberg—and don't tell me you don't know Von Sternberg—is directing his

(Continued on page 66)

Ginger Rogers' bridesmaids, Mary Brian and Janet Gaynor, pose with Ma Rogers. Doesn't she look every bit as youthful as the gals on her left and right?

A leading American Dermatologist says:

"Their Skin is years younger than their Age"

MRS. PAUL REVERE III of Boston and Cohasset, Massachusetts

• "Not a hint of sallowness. Skin supple—firm. Appears a full ten years younger than her age"—*Dermatologist's report.
• Mrs. Paul Revere III, speaking of Pond's Cold Cream, says: "It smooths away little lines around my eyes—keeps my skin soft."

MRS. ALEXANDER COCHRANE FORBES
Grandniece of MRS. JAMES ROOSEVELT

• "No blemishes. No lines. Her skin has the fresh radiance of the early teens"—*Dermatologist's report.
• Mrs. Forbes says: "Pond's Cold Cream frees my skin of blackheads, coarse pores, blemishes."

You, too, can keep your skin flawless . . . Young

BEAUTIFUL SKIN depends very little upon your age. Haven't you seen women of 40 with skin as fresh and blooming as that of girls in their teens?

Skin youth—skin beauty—is determined by conditions within the skin itself, dermatologists say.

An active circulation—vigorously functioning oil glands—firm, full tissue and elastic muscles—these make your skin look young, though your actual age may be sixteen or sixty.

These youthful conditions are often subject to the care you give your skin. Dermatologists' examinations prove this astounding fact—that women who use Pond's Cold Cream really keep their skin years younger than their age.

There is a scientific reason for this amazing power of Pond's Cold Cream to keep skin free from blemishes—enchantingly fresh and young.

This luxurious cream is rich in specially processed oils. It is exactly what the skin needs for deep-down cleansing. To revive depleted tissue. Its use stimulates flaccid muscles. And—most important—it recharges glands and cells.

Never let a night pass without cleansing your skin with Pond's Cold Cream. Always pat it in every morning—before you make up during the day.

Lines . . . Pores . . . Blackheads . . . disappear

As you use this oil-rich cream, you'll see your skin grow younger—lovelier. You can actually watch lines and crepiness fade. Blackheads, coarse pores disappear. Even drooping contours firm. While to your skin will come that fresh bloom—that silken texture—which invariably distinguish the flawless skin of the women who use Pond's Cold Cream. This same allure—a glorious gardenia skin—can be yours through the years.

Start now to use Pond's Cold Cream regularly. This coupon will bring you a generous gift package.

POND'S LIQUEFYING CREAM contains the same effective ingredients. It melts instantly on the skin. Cleanses thoroughly. Corrects skin faults. Delightfully prepares for powder.

Send for generous 3 DAYS' TEST

Pond's Extract Company, Dept. B-50, Hudson Street, New York City . . . I enclose 10¢ (to cover postage and packing) for 3 days' supply of Pond's Cold Cream with samples of 2 other Pond's Creams and special boxes of Pond's Face Powder.

I prefer 3 different LIGHT shades of powder ☐
I prefer 3 different DARK shades ☐

Name _____

Street _____

City _____ State _____

Copyright, 1935, Pond's Extract Company

Do you tire easily ?

✓ no appetite
✓ losing weight
✓ nervous
✓ sleepless
✓ pale

then don't gamble with your body

Life insurance companies tell us that the gradual breakdown of the human body causes more deaths every year than disease germs

IF your physical let-down is caused by a lowered red-blood-cell and hemo-glo-bin content in the blood—then S.S.S. is waiting to help you . . . though, if you suspect an organic trouble, you will, of course, want to consult a physician or surgeon.

S.S.S. is not just a so-called tonic. It is a tonic specially designed to stimulate gastric secretions, and also has the mineral elements so very, very necessary in rebuilding the oxygen-carrying hemo-glo-bin of the blood.

This two-fold purpose is important. Digestion is improved . . . food is better utilized . . . and thus you are enabled to better "carry on" without exhaustion—as you should.

You should feel and look years younger with life giving and purifying blood surging through your body. You owe this to yourself and friends.

Make S.S.S. your health safeguard and, unless your case is exceptional, you should soon enjoy again the satisfaction of appetizing food . . . sound sleep . . . and renewed strength.

S.S.S. is sold by all drug stores in two convenient sizes. The $2 economy size is twice as large as the $1.25 regular size and is sufficient for two weeks treatment. Begin on the uproad today.

Do not be blinded by the efforts of a few unethical dealers who may suggest that you gamble with substitutes. You have a right to insist that S.S.S. be supplied you on request. Its long years of preference is your guarantee of satisfaction.

S.S.S.

the world's great blood medicine

Makes you feel like yourself again

© S.S.S. Co.

(Continued from page 64)

last picture with Marlene Dietrich. You might think that, since he is leaving Paramount, he would be all sweetness and light and have only kind words for everyone—a sort of final softening. But no! Von is carrying on just as he always has—telling Dietrich in a torrent of German just what to do and how to do it. Marlene doesn't answer back. But Joel McCrea, who was to have been her leading man, does. He's just upped and walked out of the picture because he doesn't like Von's directorial tactics.

■ ■ ■

They were filming a big musical show. Gorgeous girls in those costumes—a piece of lace here and an ostrich feather there—were lolling about the set. The electricians, prop boys and assistants were paying them about as much attention as they'd pay just that many sacks of flour. Turning his back on the most luscious blonde of all, one electrician said to another, "Boy, you oughta of seen what I saw last night. I went down to the burlesque show on Main Street and was it hot! What dames! What dames!"

■ ■ ■

For one solid year Joan Crawford has been conferring with carpenters, interior decorators, drapers, etc., and at last the remodeling of her house is completed. It is beautiful and completely efficient. Joan wanders around in it, an Alice in Wonderland, happy amidst all that beauty.

■ ■ ■

It was during the making of "The Painted Veil." Director Boleslavski decided that he would like Garbo to hum a song while she rocked a baby to sleep. Greta refused point blank. "Boley" pleaded and begged, even got down on his knees and at last threatened to walk off the picture. After a long silence, Garbo finally gave in.

"Aw right," she said, "I'll do it." Lights were on, the camera started grinding. Greta began to rock the baby. Then in a deep, unemotional voice, she started humming "Lazy Bones!"

■ ■ ■

Here's another one on that same famous Hollywood producer. This actually happened on the golf course of the Hillcrest Country Club. Together with some friends, the producer had just finished playing eighteen holes. "Let's stop in at the club house," he said, "and have some tea and trumpets."

■ ■ ■

Things the innocent public never knows about: Pauline Lord, who hasn't yet gotten over the jitters of making her first movie, was prevailed upon to do a radio scene from "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch." She rehearsed all morning with Kent Taylor, fighting to remain calm. Just as they were ready to go on the air, someone discovered that the studio didn't have the radio rights to the picture. Everything was called off and now Paramount executives are making a detour every time they have to pass Pauline's dressing-room door.

■ ■ ■

When "The Affairs of Cellini" was shown in Hollywood, Louis Calhern, a member of the cast, made a speech to the first night audience.

"Ladies and gentlemen," he began, "I want to thank, for their kindness, Mr. Frank Morgan, Miss Fay Wray, Mr. Fredric March—and that's all."

Miss Constance Bennett starred in the picture. Remember?

■ ■ ■

The wives of famous stars have their busy moments, too, believe it or not. And those moments somehow or other occur in the kitchen. There is Mrs. Carl Brisson, for instance, who throws together a mean meal. (See page 10.) In fact, it's so delicious that one hungry young actor appeared at the Brisson home for dinner one evening and stayed a month.

Mrs. Gable's forte is preserving pickles, of all things, and so adept is she at this little trick that all her friends receive handsomely labelled bottles of 'em as gifts at the end of the canning season.

■ ■ ■

This is the way things happen in Hollywood. Ross Alexander of the New York stage had been under contract to Paramount and Metro, and had never worked a day. Finally, Warners signed him, but let him out before his first picture was shown. When the audience saw "Flirtation Walk," they simply went wild over him. Result: Ross has a new contract at twice the salary he would have signed for, before the preview.

■ ■ ■

When Francis Lederer was a struggling actor in Czecho-Slovakia, he occasionally saw a movie. On one of these rare visits, he viewed a picture featuring Eddie Quillan. Just recently Francis met the lad, long out of work, on Hollywood Boulevard. And so, Mr. Lederer has asked that his one-time idol be cast in his new picture. Nice?

■ ■ ■

Robert Montgomery was about to go into a comedy scene in "Forsaking All Others." Around his body was draped a woman's negligée, used as a gag in the picture.

"I'm glad my little daughter is too young to understand," sighed Bob, as he gathered up his skirts and approached the camera.

■ ■ ■

The Freddie Marches are taking great pride in their new Beverly Hills home. The surrounding gardens are filled with rare plants and flowers. However, right in the center of the plot, there's a solid square of bare ground.

"What are you going to plant there?" we asked.

"Vegetables," answered Freddie nonchalantly, as he stopped to pick an orchid.

■ ■ ■

Not long ago, Joan Crawford was shopping in Westwood Village. A new saleslady came blushingly toward her.

"Pardon me, Miss Crawford," she said, "but I have a customer who wants to buy a gift for a fifth wedding anniversary. Could you tell me what it is?"

Without hesitation, Joan, who has a memory like an elephant, replied, "For anything over six months, they deserve platinum."

■ ■ ■

Jean Muir tells one of the nicest stories of the year on Flo Ziegfeld. Several years ago she approached the famous impressario to apply for a job.

"Please, Mr. Ziegfeld," said Jean, "could

(Continued on page 68)

$10,000.00 IN PRIZES FREE

WILL BE OFFERED

FIRST PRIZE
NEW 1935 PLYMOUTH
Wouldn't you be thrilled if you won this new 1935 coach? (Value in cash, if you prefer.) You may win—it's easy. Delivered fully paid to your door.
NOTHING TO BUY—
NOTHING TO SELL—
TO WIN THIS PRIZE.

SECOND PRIZE
G. E. ELECTRIC REFRIGERATOR. Your chance is as good as anyone's to win this beautiful, latest model family size, G. E. Refrigerator. (Value in cash if you prefer.)
NOTHING TO BUY—
NOTHING TO SELL—
TO WIN THIS PRIZE.

THIRD PRIZE
COLSON BICYCLE
Boy's or girl's, man's or lady's model—your choice. Fully equipped, with coaster brake, etc., etc. (Value in cash if you prefer.)
NOTHING TO BUY—
NOTHING TO SELL—
TO WIN THIS PRIZE.

HUNDREDS OF OTHER PRIZES will be offered FREE

"JUST COUNT DOTS ON SHOE AND GIVE ONE OF BEST ANSWERS TO QUESTION WHAT IS SO-LO?'"

TO WIN ONE OF PRIZES ILLUSTRATED HERE

HOW MANY DOTS? SEE CLUE BELOW

HOW TO WIN
PRIZES SHOWN HERE
Honest Judges — See Paragraph 4

Easy, different, new kind of thrilling contest! Nothing to buy or sell to win any of 3 big prizes. Read how easy:

1. Count number of DOTS on shoe pictured here. Write number on Blank. (See IMPORTANT CLUE above the coupon.)
2. Answer Question: "What Is So-Lo?" Write answer in 25 words or less on separate piece of paper. Any answer about the economy feature, convenience, etc., of So-Lo, in your own words, may win — like: "World's lowest priced shoe repair," or "It's economical — just spread on like butter." (Note: Do not send the above answers—they are only examples.) Bad spelling won't count against you. Write in pencil, if you wish.
3. Prizes will be awarded primarily on the basis of the nearest correct number of dots; secondarily on the best answers (for advertising purposes) to the question, "What Is So-Lo." In event of ties for any prize, identical prizes will be awarded to tying contestants.
4. Entries will be judged by impartial committee: Miss Mary Marshall, Home Economics Editor, Tower Magazines; Miss Marjorie Deen, Home Economics Editor, Modern Magazines; E. H. Brown, President, E. H. Brown Advertising Agency, Chicago. Judges' decisions will be final.
5. All entries must be postmarked before midnight, February 28, 1935. Prize winners will be notified shortly after close of contest.
6. So-Lo Works employees or their relatives not eligible to enter. Only 1 entry to a family.

This offer WILL NOT appear again. ACT NOW — Mail Entry Coupon!

EASY!
ANYBODY MAY WIN

YOU may be the one to receive a telegram announcing that you've won the 1935 Plymouth! Send in the Entry Blank now. No tricks, no "schemes," nothing to buy or sell, no other puzzles to solve, absolutely nothing else to do to win prizes shown here. Money to buy these 3 big prizes is deposited in biggest Cincinnati bank now. Your chance to win as good as anybody's. Hundreds of other big, valuable, surprize prizes will be offered FREE OF CHARGE. Entry blank brings all sensational details. Act now!

WHAT IS So-Lo?

So-Lo, the amazing plastic, mends the Sole or Heel, 1c a repair! Spreads on half-soles as low as 8c a pair. Easy—just dig out a chunk of So-Lo and spread on sole like butter on bread. Dries hard, tough, and smooth—waterproof, flexible, non-skid. Guaranteed to outwear ordinary leather or rubber. One kit can save as much as $6.00 to $25.00. Over 5,000,000 families now use So-Lo to fix cuts in tires, holes in auto tops, hot water bottles, and over 247 other uses.

See So-Lo at WOOLWORTH'S, KRESGE'S, KRESS', W. T. GRANT'S, NEISNER'S, McCRORY'S, MURPHY'S, McLELLAN'S, WALGREEN'S, SCOTT'S, BEN FRANKLIN, MONTGOMERY WARD'S, SEARS ROEBUCK'S, 5 AND 10c STORES, OR HARDWARE STORES.

"Also at Newberry's and Green's"

SO-LO WORKS
World's Largest Makers of Money-Savers
CINCINNATI, OHIO

Important CLUE TO NUMBER OF DOTS ON SHOE

Look at Patent Number on the box of So-Lo at any of the stores listed below, or at 5 and 10c stores, or hardware stores. To get within 25 of the correct number of dots on shoe shown here, multiply the first three numbers of the patent number by three. IMPROVE YOUR CHANCE TO WIN: See So-Lo box at your neighborhood store today.

$200.00 CASH EXTRA!

Nothing to buy or sell to win prizes shown here, BUT if you send in part of So-Lo box showing PATENT NUMBER (or facsimile thereof) with your entry, you will receive $200.00 CASH EXTRA IN addition to Plymouth Auto if you are declared winner of First Prize. Hurry—don't wait. Rush your entry today.

SEND NO MONEY··MAIL THIS TODAY

PRIZE CONTEST ENTRY BLANK

SO-LO WORKS, "RED" Appleton, Contest Manager,
Cincinnati, Ohio. ☐ Check here if sending in part of So-Lo box.

Dear "Red":—

I want to win the FREE 1935 PLYMOUTH AUTOMOBILE, the G. E. ELECTRIC REFRIGERATOR, or the COLSON BICYCLE. Here is my entry:

There are.....dots on the So-Lo Shoe. My answer to the question "What Is So-Lo?" in 25 words or less is written on attached piece of paper.

NAME .....
(Print Plainly. Use pencil if you prefer)

ADDRESS .....

TOWN ..... STATE.....M .

Alone at first,

popular at last

Blue Waltz brought me happiness

If you're lonely . . . as I used to be . . . if you long to have more dates, let Blue Waltz Perfume lead you to happiness, as it did me.

Like music in moonlight, this exquisite fragrance creates enchantment . . . and gives you a glamorous charm that turns men's thoughts to romance.

And do try all the Blue Waltz Cosmetics. They made me more beautiful than I'd ever imagined I could be! You'll be surprised at how much these wonderful preparations will improve your beauty.

Blue Waltz Lipstick makes your lips look luscious . . . there are four ravishing shades to choose from. And you'll love Blue Waltz Face Powder! It feels so fine and soft on your skin and it gives you a fresh, young, radiant complexion that wins admiration.

Make your dreams of romance come true . . . as mine have. Buy Blue Waltz Perfume and Cosmetics today. For your protection, they are "certified to be pure" and they are only 10c each at your 5 and 10c store.

Now you can ensemble your beauty preparations. You find the same alluring fragrance in Blue Waltz Perfume, Face Powder, Lipstick, Cream Rouge, Brilliantine, Cold Cream, Vanishing Cream, Toilet Water, Talcum Powder. Only 10c each at your 5 and 10c store.

Blue Waltz
PERFUME AND COSMETICS
FIFTH AVENUE · NEW YORK

(Continued from page 66)

you use me as a show girl in the Follies?"

Ziggy looked at her kindly. Then, without a moment's hesitation, replied, "I'm very sorry. You are a very beautiful white rose. I need orchids."

■ ■ ■

Jimmy Cagney, Pat O'Brien and Frank McHugh were discussing a certain star on their lot, noted for her huge salary and dumb portrayals.

"But I hope you know she gets more fan mail than any other young actress in Hollywood," said Cagney.

"Yeah," cracked McHugh, "but you should read the names they call her."

■ ■ ■

We're wondering if that sterling actress, Alice Brady, is turning out to be an irresponsible one. 'Tother day the studio was frantically paging her for important scenes in Culver City, and a Woman's Club, which she was slated to address, were madly shouting for her from Los Angeles. Finally Alice's maid was reached on the phone. That worthy staunchly stuck to the story that her mistress was in bed nursing a severe headache.

■ ■ ■

Three long, loud British cheers for Harriett Parsons. Harriet is the young lady —and we mean young—who garners "Screen Snapshots" for Columbia. She writes the interesting running script and dialogue and goes on location to "take" the players scheduled to appear in it. One day Palm Springs, another Arrowhead, then Riverside. Wotta peppy existence! And little Miss Parsons makes that much money, she's going to build a home for herself, to be tagged "The House that Jack Built"—Columbia's "jack."

■ ■ ■

Maybe it's madness and maybe it's love and then again, maybe they're just good pals. But they're going places, all right. Nancy Carroll and Howard Hughes. The Clover Club, the Vendome and then out to charming El Mirador at Palm Springs, where Nancy played a little croquet while Mr. H. kept score.

Speaking of El Mirador—there is a spot! Right on the edge of the Colorado Desert, the stars, at this freezing moment, are splashing around in a huge pool of aquamarine water, playing tennis on green courts and horseback-riding along dirt roads as hard as asphalt. When MODERN SCREEN's scout visited there lately, a water fête was being held and Eleanor Holm surely executed some stunning backstroke swimming.

■ ■ ■

That dynamic director, Woody Van Dyke, who turns out such winners as "The Thin Man" in half the allotted time, having finished directing Joan Crawford, was called in for retakes on Garbo's "Painted Veil," which fact is probably the only grounds upon which an excuse could be offered for him continually addressing La Garbo as Miss Crawford.

Let it be said for the Swede that she never attempted to correct him—but merely smiled amusedly.

■ ■ ■

What a thrill Clark Gable gave a buxom, middle-aged housewife the other night!

It happened at the preview of one of Clark's pictures. When the lights flashed on, the enraptured female turned to her bored better-half, and gushed, "Oh, isn't Clark the most adorable thing!"

Upon which a voice to the right of her rang out with a "Thank you, Ma'am," followed by a flash of white teeth and a display of two devastating dimples.

Mrs. Hoozis is reported to have just come out of her ecstatic faint.

■ ■ ■

Victor Jory had just one week to rid himself of several pounds of avoirdupois before starting a picture. So he hied himself to Palm Springs, picked out a small out-of-the-way hotel, where he would be out of temptation, and began his rigid routine. His day consisted of a five-mile walk and dog trot, three sets of tennis, a three-hour horseback ride, filling in with

(Continued on page 99)

Mrs. Harry Lachman, Mrs. Irving Netcher (the hostess), Laura Hope Crews, and Jeanette MacDonald (still looking very Merry Widow-ish) smile for our Scotty.

TINTEX Brings Fashion's Colors to Wardrobe and Home Decorations

WHAT TINTEX DOES

TINTEX restores color to faded fabrics in a jiffy . . . keeps undies fresh and gay-looking . . . brings the season's smart colors to your wardrobe . . . makes your last year's apparel look like new . . . keeps curtains and drapes bright and fresh . . . keeps home decorations color-smart . . . gives professional results . . . is used without muss, fuss, or bother!

Faded Fabrics Become Gay and New Again!

THE new Paris colors can be yours in a jiffy . . . with easy Tintex. For the Tintex way is the shortest, simplest, surest road to color smartness. These magic tints and dyes are always at your command . . . ready to bring you up-to-the-minute in fashion.

Millions of smart women are finding a daily need for Tintex . . . giving fresh new color to their apparel and home decorations . . . and restoring original color to every faded fabric. Costs only a few pennies . . . saves many dollars. So easy, too. Simply "tint as you rinse". Perfect results—always. Select your favorite Tintex colors—today. 35 brilliant, long-lasting colors from which to choose.

PARK & TILFORD, Distributors

Tintex

The World's Largest Selling Tints & Dyes

AT ALL DRUG STORES, NOTION AND TOILET GOODS COUNTERS

"In a very short time I had reduced my hips 9 inches and my weight 20 pounds".

Reduce...

YOUR WAIST AND HIPS

3 INCHES IN 10 DAYS

with the

PERFOLASTIC GIRDLE

. . . or it will cost you nothing!

WE WANT you to try the Perfolastic Girdle and Uplift Brassiere. Test them for yourself for 10 days absolutely FREE. Then, if without diet, drugs or exercise, you have not reduced at least 3 inches around waist and hips, they will cost you nothing!

Reduce Quickly, Easily, and Safely!

The massage-like action of these famous Perfolastic Reducing Garments takes the place of months of tiring exercises and dieting. Worn next to the body with perfect safety, the Perfolastic gently massages away the surplus fat with every movement, stimulating the body once more into energetic health.

Don't Wait Any Longer... Act Today!

You can prove to yourself quickly and definitely whether or not this very efficient girdle and brassiere will reduce your waist, hips and diaphragm. You do not need to risk one penny . . . try them for 10 days at our expense.

SEND FOR TEN DAY FREE TRIAL OFFER!

PERFOLASTIC, Inc.

Dept. 532 41 EAST 42nd ST., New York, N.Y.

Please send me FREE BOOKLET describing and illustrating the new Perfolastic Girdle and Brassiere, also sample of perforated rubber and particulars of your 10-DAY FREE TRIAL OFFER.

Name _____

Address _____

Use Coupon or Send Name and Address on Penny Post Card

INFORMATION DESK

MURIEL SCHWARTZ, Northumberland, Pa.; ERNA AYRES, San Francisco, Calif.; A. A. "CAB", Jeannette, Pa.; VERA CAPPER, East Liverpool, Ohio—Lew Ayres makes a timely subject for this department to inform about, seeing as how he is in the public eye more than ever as a result of his recent marriage to Ginger Rogers. This handsome young actor was born in Minneapolis, Minn., on December 28, 1908. He attended the Lake Harriett School in Minneapolis until the age of ten, then high school in San Diego, and upon graduation entered the University of Arizona to study medicine. He was torn between medicine and music as a career—the latter won and he found a place as a musician with various orchestras in the capacity of banjoist, guitarist and singer. He later joined Ray West's orchestra at the Cocoanut Grove in Los Angeles. One afternoon, on his day off, he went tea dancing at the Roosevelt, danced with Lily Damita, was seen by an agent and signed up for a six months' contract with Pathé, where he made one picture. From there he went to M-G-M where he played with Garbo in "The Kiss" and from there to Universal where, as a result of his excellent work in "All Quiet on the Western Front," he was given a long term contract. He is 5 feet 11 in height, weighs 160 pounds and has dark brown hair and brown eyes. He was formerly married to Lola Lane. He is appearing currently in "Lottery Lover" for Fox, his contract studio.

GINGER, Evansville, Ind.—The names of the Wiggs children in "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" (and I don't blame you for asking, they were adorable) are as follows: Billy Wiggs, Jimmy Butler; Jimmy, George Breakstone; Australia, Edith Fellows; Asia, Carmencita Johnson; and Europena, Virginia Weidler. You'll be seeing more of them.

GERTRUDE HUNT, Winnipeg, Canada; CONNIE DEN, Lodi, N. J.; PAULINE GRACE CABLE, Steubenville, Ohio; FRANCES HUDSON, Nashville, Tenn.—So it's Clark Gable you want to know about? It's a pleasure. Born in Cadiz, Ohio on February 1, 1901 (which makes him just 33) he was christened William Clark Gable, but during his very normal youth was just plain "Bill." His mother died in his infancy and he was raised by his stepmother and grandparents. Educated in the Hopedale, Ohio, high school, he went to Akron where he became a timekeeper in a rubber factory until he caught the "theatre bug" and began playing extra parts on the stage. He then alternated between the theatre and odd jobs. In Portland, Ore., he met Josephine Dillon and married her in 1924. In 1927 he made his stage debut on Broadway which was followed by a series of other plays. It was in 1929 that Clark married again, this time to Ria Langham a lovely New York society woman. Two years later he made his first picture as the villain in "The Painted Desert" with William Boyd and Helen Twelvetrees. And this was only the beginning! You know the rest of the story of his rapid rise to fame and popularity. Clark is 6 feet 1 inch tall, weighs 190 pounds, has gray eyes and brown hair and is known as a regular fellow. He likes to watch polo games and football, and his athletic diversions are golf, hunting, swimming and tennis. He collects firearms, travelling is his favorite pastime and his latest interest is racehorses, of which he has several. He was born lazy and admits it, has a cleft in his chin, always walks as though he were about to break into a run and gets a tremendous kick out of living. After "Forsaking All Others" with Joan Crawford and Robert Montgomery, he will appear in a picture with Constance Bennett tentatively entitled "Town Talk." He is also scheduled to appear in "The Call of the Wild" and "Mutiny on the Bounty," two swell vehicles for him. He is under contract to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios, Culver City, Cal.

JAMES BLACK, Fairville, Canada—This will surprise you, no doubt, but here's hoping it doesn't make you lose your wager. Tom Mix was born on January 6, 1888, which makes him 5 years older than Tim McCoy, who was born on April 10, 1893, and is 41. Harry Carey is 55.

ELIZABETH SCHNITZIUS, Collingswood, N. J.; JOANNE MARKS, Long Beach, Calif.—Frank Lawton, whom you saw in that prize winner, "Cavalcade," and whom you will see shortly in the title role of "David Copperfield," was born in London, England on September 30, and educated at Langley Hall. Also, he studied for the stage at the Academy of Dramatic Arts. His father was Frank Mokeley Lawton, well known on American and London stages and his mother, Daisy May, was a popular English actress—which accounts for his histrionic proclivities. He played in many successful stage productions in London and made his first picture in 1929. He is an enthusiastic motorist, likes tennis, cricket and golf and in his spare moments tries his hand at amateur photography. His heart interest is rumored to be Evelyn Laye, Ramon Novarro's leading lady. He likes Hollywood and hopes to stay indefinitely—we hope he does.

MARJORIE WONDER, Santa Ana, Calif.—John Buckler played the part of Clayton in "That's Gratitude" and you can write him at Columbia Studios, 1438 Gower St., Hollywood, Calif. Thanks, that was easy.

F. NIGHTINGALE, Portland, Ore.—It was Patsy Kelly, no less, who played the part of the maid in "The Party's Over" and Jean Harlow's room-mate in "The Girl From Missouri." You can write her at M-G-M Studios, Culver City, Calif.

MELONI COLLIER, Courtland, Va.; MISS R. A. DODSON, Anderson, Ind.; SOPHIE YELEN, Housatonic, Mass.; E. NUDELL, Riverside, Calif.; ANGIE SOMMERS, Northampton, Pa.; STEPHANIE PAPROCKA and MARGARET SCHMITT of Jersey City, N. J.; TILLIE GERSHWIN, Detroit, Mich.—Here's another young man about whom this department receives numerous queries—none other than Richard Cromwell—and here's what's what about him. Roy Radabaugh is his real name and he was born in Los Angeles, Calif., on January 8, 1910, of Dutch-American descent. He was one of five children and had a pretty tough childhood because of the early death of his father, who was a brilliant inventor. After school hours at the Long Beach High School and later at the Chouinard Art School, Dick worked at odd jobs making what little money he could—which experience has stood him in good stead. Then he branched out as an artist, opening his own shop which was patronized by several well known stars who became quite interested in him. He had a secret desire to act and when an opportunity came for him to try out for a part in "Tol'able David" he did, and what's more, got it. A long term contract with Columbia resulted and it has been renewed regularly. (You can write him there at 1438 Gower St., Hollywood.) Dick lives alone in a restful, four-room house on a hilltop north of Hollywood. Romance has not seriously disrupted his life as yet, although he is rumored to be very fond of Katherine De Mille. Weighing 150 pounds, Dick is 5 feet 10 inches tall, has blue-green eyes and sun-streaked blonde hair. He plays tennis and swims, likes to eat oranges between meals and can scramble eggs—but that's all—dislikes having his picture taken, likes to paint and write and see good shows. Paramount borrowed him for "Lives of a Bengal Lancer" in which you will see him soon.

WONDERING, N. Y.—Neither Bebe Daniels nor Harold Lloyd had previous marriages. Bebe is married to Ben Lyon and they have one child; Harold is married to Mildred Davis and they have three children—two of their own and one adopted.

CAROLYN CAMERON, Odum, Ga.; MARGARET ALBANO, Dover, N. J.; ANNE GRADIZOR and FRANCES OKORN, Cleveland, Ohio; "RONNIE" HART, Omaha, Nebr.; MICKY and MINNIE of K. C. K.; M. P., Clifton, N. J.; JEAN L., Falmouth Heights, Mass.; LILLIE MAE HALL, Rockaway Beach, N. Y.; MISS L. C. S., Baltimore, Md.; EDNA NESPOR, Brooklyn, N. Y.; DOROTHY RHODES, Dayton, Ohio; BARBARA ANDERSON, DeWitt, Iowa; DORIS FAY, San Francisco, Calif.—This makes the third time Gene Raymond's biography has appeared in this column—yet people still ask about him. He deserves a platinum rosebud for popularity, all right! Raymond Guion he was christened and he is of French Huguenot descent. Born in New York City on August 13, 1908, he attended grade school and from the age of 4, the Professional Children's School in this city. In 1924 he made his stage debut and in 1931 his first movie appearance. His "likes" are solitude, long drives, horseback riding, tennis, golf, blue and green, thick steak, politics, fan mail and to be asked for his autograph. His "dislikes" are shopping, entertaining, jewelry on men and having "still" pictures taken. Dumas' "Three Musketeers" is his favorite book. He is 5 feet 10 inches tall, weighs 150 pounds and has blue eyes and light golden hair. He will be in "Behold My Wife" with Sylvia Sidney for Paramount Studios to which he was loaned by Columbia, his contract studio.

EDITH GRINDALL, Toronto, Canada — Ben Alexander is the boy who was in "The Most Precious Thing in Life" and "What Price Innocence." His address is Columbia Studios, 1438 Gower St., Hollywood.

Your questions will be answered in this magazine. Please do not ask questions which require too much research or which infringe upon good taste. Address: The Information Desk, MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Beauty Advice

(Continued on page 13)

Here's the very cleverest way I know to get your circulation into a positive glow, and to make your skin clear and smooth all over your body after several weeks of treatment. Soak a bath towel in a solution of one pound of ordinary table salt (salt is a recognized agent for beauty) and one pint of warm water. Let the towel dry, and then rub it between your hands to soften it. Incidentally, do this over the lavatory so the salt won't sprinkle on the floor. You only have to prepare the towel once a week, as it will last through a week of morning rubs. So after you have finished your very thorough drying mentioned in the preceding paragraph, rub yourself briskly with the dry salt towel. The friction caused by the salt towel peps up the circulation in the entire body, and, we can't stress it too often, good circulation generally means smooth skin.

Always finish off with a lotion to prevent chapping after your bath. Hand lotions are best, especially certain hand lotions, because they are so readily absorbed into the skin, and you can get such generous quantities for so small a price. And don't forget an underarm cream deodorant in this season of steam heated offices and wool dresses!

Be especially lavish with lotions and creams where your legs are concerned. They have such a rough time of it all winter, with the wind and snow always at their heels. Even a pair of Marlene Dietrich legs couldn't carry off the honors with rough, chapped, red-spotted skin. And such a condition has a sorry way of showing up through silk hose, which, of course, all of us insist on wearing through the winter, in spite of sensible grandmotherly advice to the contrary. Incidentally, I know of some lisle, silk, or wool comfies that slip on under or over your hose, and keep your feet warm without showing at all. You may also wear them to bed at night, if you're troubled with cold feet. We're stepping outside of our original trouble, however, so now for those "gooseflesh" legs. It's lack of circulation that brings "gooseflesh" and red spots. So include in your bath ritual the scrubbing of your legs with a fairly stiff bath brush. And if, as aforementioned, you will finish off with a generous massage of hand lotion, this lubrication will prevent the chapped condition that is so ugly. If your skin is very dry, use a rich cream at night, and slip on a pair of cotton hose several sizes too large for you (as a protection to clean sheets).

HANDS are subject to such constant exposure and such frequent washings and inadequate dryings that it is small wonder they need the most ardent cream and lotion allies. The natural oils get dried out of the skin, and something has to be done to make up for that lack, or your hands get scratchy as though in protest against their treatment. We talked about using hand lotions last month, and we hope that the holidays brought you some lovely creams and lotions to help you take advantage of our suggestions.

Now for make-up this bright morning; at least, we hope it's bright, and while we want bright faces, we don't want shining ones, too. According to the letters you've written me these past several months, a great many of you are troubled with dry skin. The dry type of skin is especially sensitive to harsh weather. Even a normal skin requires creams to prevent it from chapping, and a dry skin needs double the amount. A powder base is very important, not only because it helps to hold powder in an even film, but because it protects your skin from the icy air, and disguises the redness to which most of our skins are more or less subject in the winter. A good powder base and plenty of powder will soften the red into a glowing pink. Use a generous puff, and a soft-as-a-bunny's-ear powder brush to blend the powder, and smooth away the surplus.

Cream rouge is splendid in the winter because it is more impervious to wind and weather. Use it for morning make-up, and carry along a compact of dry rouge in your purse for "touching up" during the day. The proper way to apply cream rouge is with a stroke high on the cheek bone with the rouged cushion of the fingertip. Now, smooth and blend upward towards the corner of the eye, and then softly downward on the cheek. Cream rouge should always be applied to a slightly moist skin, which makes it both easier and more lasting of application. Therefore a foundation cream, vanishing or liquifying, or a cold cream which has been wiped off, leaving a slight moist residue on the skin, is absolutely essential says Beatrice Hudson

New York model

I never knew a perfume could be as perfect as FAOEN and I'VE TRIED THEM ALL

MANY expensive perfumes had intriguing scents, it is true, . . . but what I wanted was something different," says Beatrice Hudson, famous New York model. "FAOEN (with its $1 to $3 quality) was different! It actually transformed my personality, gave me an entirely new charm and sense of power!" Haunting, sophisticated . . FAOEN turns you from an attractive woman to an irresistible one! Men are enchanted by its mysterious fragrance!

FAOEN has made thousands of smart women more desirable.

In a "compact" ten-cent size at your local 5 and 10 cent store.

PARK & TILFORD'S
FAOEN
(FAY-ON)
Beauty Aids

Face Powder • Lipstick • Cleansing Cream • Cold Cream • Rouges • Perfumes

Gay TABLE Dishes . . . yet

you can bake in them

YOU never saw table dishes like these OvenServe dishes before. Every last piece . . . the serving dishes, platters, bowls, the smart one-handled French casseroles, even the very cups, saucers and plates . . . is built to stand oven heat. Their buttercup yellow color stays bright and fresh, too. They don't "craze," nor get brown and cooked looking.

You can oven-bake in OvenServe dishes and pop them direct from oven to table. Simplifies serving. And oh, how it cuts down on the dishwashing!

Another use is in the refrigerator. They stand cold as well as they do heat.

You can buy them by the piece or in complete service.

Guaranteed
To Withstand Changes of
Oven and Refrigerator Temperatures
OVENSERVE
"The Oven Ware for Table Service"
The Homer Laughlin China Co.
Newell, W. Va.

OVENSERVE

SOLD AT KRESGE 5 and 10¢ STORES AND OTHER 5¢—10¢ and $1 STORES in the application of cream rouge.

Now for your lipstick! Choose one with a cream base for winter. We know of one with a cream base which looks orange but which turns to natural looking rose when applied to the lips, and which makes a splendid wintry weather lipstick choice. If your lips are very dry and subject to chapping, use an oily pomadē on your lips out of doors, and your regular lipstick indoors.

Eyebrows should be groomed into shape, and kept from looking as though they had been swept upwards by a blast of wind. Be sure to pluck out straggly hairs, but don't pluck to change the character of the brow. Isn't it grand that Joan Crawford is setting the fashion for natural looking eyebrows now, and other Hollywood stars are doing likewise? A smart Hollywood trick is to apply a little eyelash grower to the eyebrows with a brush, or a cotton covered orangewood stick, and brush them into line.

If you want to know more about how to play a successful "skin game" with winter . . . what to do for a red nose . . . and other beauty hints for zero weather, I'll be glad to send you my leaflet on "The Zero Hour of Beauty" for the asking and a stamped, addressed envelope. Address Mary Biddle, 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y. I've some lovely creams to suggest if you want the names.

The Modern Hostess

(Continued from page 10)

ment. Nor do we ask to the same dinner, people that we know are not on friendly terms."

Another thing I learned about the Brissons' dinners is that the meal is served punctually. Carl has no patience with the type of parties where guests stand sipping their cocktails until almost ten o'clock and then adjourn for dinner. When the Brissons say "dinner at eight" they mean just that—and woe to the guest who is late!

If dinner punctuality is something new in Hollywood, so is Carl's habit of singing in his hearty baritone at the dinner table. Although rather startling at first, it is all very gay and jolly. Carl makes up the songs himself and insists that everybody warble with him. So that, by the time smiling Frau Cleo Brisson has risen and said "Welbeckommen," ("I hope everything has become you well!") which is the time-honored Danish signal for the ladies and gentlemen to go into the living room for their coffee, the entire table has been engaged in uproarious song and the two and one-half hours required to dine have fled unnoticed.

But what have the guests been eating during all this gaiety? What could possibly have taken two and one-half hours to eat—with scarcely a moment lost in plate-changing! Well, here's the menu:

THE BRISSON DANISH DINNER

Smörgåsbord
Consomme
Roast Pork Tenderloin, Stuffed with Apples and Prunes
Gravy
Sweet and Sour Cabbage
Apple, Currant, Strawberry, Jelly
Cheese
Pressed Cucumber Salad,
Piquante Dressing
Danish Apple Cake
Peppermints, Danish Chocolate
Dates Figs Nuts Grapes
Coffee

Accompanying all this grand food is a wine list which includes Schnapps (Holland gin) with the Smörgåsbord, Claret with the meat course, sweet Sherry with the dessert, Kirsch and Cherry Brandy preceding coffee.

PERHAPS you are a bit baffled by that word "Smörgåsbord." (I assure you it's even harder to say than it is to spell!) To the uninitiated, therefore, it might be well to explain that Smörgåsbord are the equivalent of French hors d'oeuvres, those fancy tidbits used as appetizers. In Scandinavian countries where hors d'oeuvres become Smörgåsbord, their quantity and quality constitute an actual threat to the ensuing meal, particularly in Denmark which is famed for its cookery.

"We have found it necessary to warn our guests in America that our Smörgåsbord is not the whole meal," Mr. Brisson told me, "and that the regular dinner comes later. We do not, like the Swedes, stand to our Smörgåsbord. Everything is served sitting at the table which is laid before the guests come in. All the pickled herrings, salmon in mayonnaise, egg and anchovy dishes—everything is in place when we come into the dining-room to take our seats. Along the side of our dining-room when we have a large party, is a long, narrow serving table that runs the entire length of the room. On it are nothing but dishes and plates! When the guest has eaten a helping of herring and chives, shall we say, his plate is whisked away and a clean one supplants it. Then he helps himself to some other dish. After that he has another type of Smörgåsbord on still another plate. Otherwise how could he appreciate the delicious cream sauce of one dish if some of the vinegar dressing of another dish remained on the plate?"

And here is a simple member of the Smörgåsbord family which has already become popular for cocktail parties. It seems that it had its origin in Scandinavia—where they call them "nam-nams."

COCKTAIL NAM-NAMS

Cut slices of lean, packaged bacon lengthwise into two strips. Cut each strip in half. (Making four narrow pieces of each bacon slice.) Wrap one of these slices around a large stuffed olive. Fasten securely with a toothpick. Just before serving time, fry the olive-bacon rolls in deep hot fat, until bacon is crisp and brown. Drain on white paper-kitchen-towels. Serve at once, piping hot, without removing toothpick.

Other Smörgåsbord recipes in the Brisson files call for caviar with minced Bermuda onions, spread on rounds of buttered bread; anchovies chopped very fine with onion added; poached eggs on rounds of bread fried to a golden brown in butter, the whole topped with mushrooms in a rich cream sauce; and herrings served with various sauces.

When the Smörgåsbord and Schnapps have been dispatched with songs and good cheer, the real dinner begins. The soup, light and clear, makes its appearance in a huge tureen.

With the soup comes cheese! Fancy that! From now on in the meal, cheese is a permanent feature on the table—any kind of cheese, according to Fru Brisson—American, Muenster, Port du Salut, Cheddar, Liederkrantz, Swiss, Cream. Danes believe that cheese "peps up" the appetite, she explained. Why don't you try it sometime?

INCIDENTALLY, in serving a true Danish meal nothing is served in the kitchen. Everything comes in whole to the table, where the hostess, not the host, does the carving and the serving as well.

After the soup course Fru Brisson's famous "Pork Tender" makes its proud appearance, with a really divine gravy. The vegetable accompanying this dish is Sweet and Sour Cabbage. This may be prepared in the morning or even the day before. After the meat and vegetable dishes comes more cheese (and more songs if you are dining with the Brissons), then the salad—a crisp, delectable concoction of pressed cucumbers. The accompanying Piquante Dressing does things to this lowly vegetable. (You can take our word for it, it is excellent for other salads, too.)

Finally the dessert course—and what a dessert! Danish Apple Cake. Other sweets may appear on the table, too, but all are dwarfed by the appeal of this marvelous confection. Fru Brisson's "guest recipe" serves twenty and is made in a large bowl, like those made from a Mexican gourd, towering to a height of at least ten inches. On other occasions, however, she reduces the proportions to have a smaller cake which is more in keeping with the requirements of the average family. A round or oblong baking dish makes an excellent container as it allows the layers of delectable sweets to be seen, whetting the appetite for the treat in store. A pleasant feature of this dessert-cake is that it requires no baking. Merely put it in the refrigerator after it has been assembled and the arctic temperature does the rest. Fru Brisson always makes it in the morning of the day of her dinner. The recipe is one that Fru Cleo has never given out before and I'm terribly flattered that she was willing to part with it for the benefit of the readers of MODERN SCREEN. As this Danish Apple Cake is quite worth writing in for, in itself, I'm sure that when you learn that three other

Scott Photo

Glenda Farrell seems to have forsaken Bob Riskin for Bernard Newman, with whom she's pictured at the Blackford Benefit.

Small
FOR HER AGE AND UNDERWEIGHT TOO

but you ought to see the way Betty is shooting up now!

EVEN ON tiptoes, Betty was smaller than the smallest playmate of her own age. While other youngsters shot up, filled out, gained in height and weight—Betty remained thin, scrawny, small for her age—because she did not drink enough milk.

But you ought to see Betty now! How she has added inches to her height—how strong, sturdy, well-proportioned she has become. And the reason is that Betty is now drinking every day, a quart of milk mixed with Cocomalt.

Milk is the almost perfect food for children. Mixed with Cocomalt, it provides extra carbohydrates for body heat and physical activity; extra proteins for solid flesh and muscle; extra food-calcium, food-phosphorus and Sunshine Vitamin D for the formation of strong bones, sound teeth.

Help your child gain as he grows

The famous Lanarkshire milk experiment in 1930 among 20,000 school children shows definitely that children who received milk daily during the test grew faster and were healthier than those who did not.

If milk alone can aid growth and improve nutrition, think what an advantage your child will have if you give him Cocomalt in milk. For, made as directed, Cocomalt almost DOUBLES the food-energy value of every glass or cup of milk.

Cocomalt is accepted by the American Medical Association, Committee on Foods.

Wonderful for adults, too

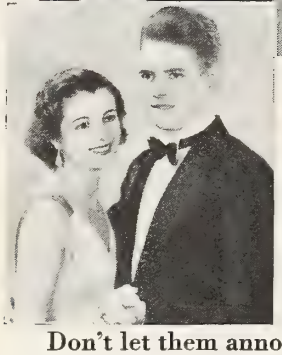
Not only does Cocomalt and milk help children thrive, but for grown-ups, with its nutritional value and extra food-energy, it is a pleasant way to maintain and restore strength. A hot drink promotes relaxation for sound, restful sleep, drink Cocomalt HOT before retiring.

Cocomalt is sold at grocery, drug and department stores in ½-lb., 1-lb. and 5-lb. hospital-size air-tight cans.

SPECIAL TRIAL OFFER: For a trial-size can of Cocomalt, send name and address (with 10c to cover cost of packing and mailing) to R. B. Davis Co., Dept. MA-2 Hoboken, N. J.

Cocomalt

Prepared as directed, adds 70% more food-energy to milk



ACCEPTED AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSN. Committee on Foods

Cocomalt is accepted by the Committee on Foods of the American Medical Association. Produced by an exclusive process under scientific control, Cocomalt is composed of sucrose, skim milk, selected cocoa, barley malt extract, flavoring and added Sunshine Vitamin D. (Irradiated ergosterol.)

Annoying Little Blemishes!

So easily corrected . . . when you know this simple way

WHO escapes them—those occasional pimples that seem always to come when you particularly want to look your very best?

Don't let them annoy you, however, for nature can clear them up quickly with a little external aid which Resinol Ointment provides.

This safe, dependable ointment contains medicaments specially selected to soothe and promote healing of skin irritations. That is why it is so effective and so widely used. When applied after washing with a warm lather of pure Resinol Soap, the results are even more satisfying. Get Resinol Ointment and Soap from the druggist today.

For free sample write Resinol, Dept. 1-A, Baltimore, Md.

recipes from Fru Brisson's own files are included in this month's Modern Hostess recipe leaflet, you'll want to fill out and mail the coupon at the end of this article immediately.

Each recipe is a joyous and unusual taste sensation—the Sweet and Sour Cabbage is a picture for the eye, a delectable treat for the palate—the Cucumber Salad with Piquante Dressing is everything I said of this combination previously, and then some—and the Pork Tender is a cold weather dish from Denmark that merits an immediate place in every American home. And finally the Apple Cake! What more could one ask? And all you need do is ask—and they all are yours! Then you can serve an entire Danish dinner or incorporate one Danish dish at a time into otherwise prosaic meals to add variety. Then you, your family and friends can enjoy the same delicious foods that have made the Brissons famous in Hollywood.

These unusual dishes have earned for the Brissons the reputation of being worthy exponents of their native cookery. Send for the recipes and add to your own reputation as a cook, too.

MODERN SCREEN STAR RECIPES

HOME SERVICE DEPARTMENT
149 Madison Avenue, N. Y., N. Y.
MODERN SCREEN Magazine

Please send me the recipes for February, 1935.

Name .....
(Print in pencil)

Address .....
(City) (State)

.....
(Street and Number)

Lines to a Little Lady

(Continued from page 48)

Here's something cute! A little girl who writes "Age—9 years" after her name, says, "I have seen you in every one of your pictures including the one-reelers, and expect to see all your new ones, I think you dance very well—for your age. In fact, you are my favorite child actress."

Shirley gets her mash notes, too! Can't you just picture this little boy as he twists up his mouth while writing in pencil on a page torn from his school notebook: "I seen you in 'Stand Up and Cheer' and fell in love with you. I don't like girls much, but wouldn't mind if you was my little sister. Hoping this finds you well, I am respectfully yours,"—.

Girls as well as boys want to have Shirley in the family. "I am the only child in our family," writes one eleven-year-old miss, "and we live in a hotel. There isn't much for a little girl to do with no place much to play so I go to a lot of pictures and think you are my favorite star. I know you are a little girl, too, so I hope your mother reads this to you. Even though there's not much doing here we could have a lot of fun if you were my little sister. I could teach you to sew doll clothes and mama would teach you to play bridge which I am trying to learn. If you ever feel like coming to New York for a while you can stop with us. I would let you wear my prettiest dress, the one with the lace ruffles, but I don't guess it would fit you very well, and I wouldn't want to have it made over."

So a child of the rich—the letter was on the stationery of one of the most exclusive hotels—doesn't find life any too much fun. Neither, for that matter, does a poor child. A very pathetic letter was sent by a little girl who says:—

ALTHOUGH Daddy got a job now, he was out of work for a long time and he owes everybody a lot of money, so we are not spending very much now because he is paying off a lot of old bills to people who trusted him when he didn't have any money at all. About the time you get this letter my dollie, Mary Jane, should arrive at your house. She isn't very pretty I know, but she is a very good dollie. You see, it is all Daddy can do to pay the rent and buy food and clothes for mama and me and the baby, so Mary Jane is pretty shabby. I have tried to make over some of my things for her but when I get done with them they are not much good any more and I want her to have nice things. So if you will give her a good home and some nice dresses, I know she will be happier with you than here with me although I love her very much. I know that she will love you too, because I can see you'll be a good mother to her. Write and tell me how you like her and if she is behaving herself all right and please don't ever spank her. I never did."

On the brighter side is a letter written by—oh, let it speak for itself:

"Dear Miss Temple:—Do you in need of a shofer? I doant expect so yet because you is very younge but I would wish to opply for the job. Of cours I canot shofer yet because I am only ten years old but my pop is a verry good shofer for a white fambly down here in Ala. and I would wish to be a shofer too when I am big like him.

"You coud save a lot of sallery on me Miss because I woud not charge you nothing to shofer for you because I would likely get into lots of shows free because I am your shofer and I would have enuf money to live because pop has promissed to give me a pare of shureshot dice which canot miss when I am big enough to youse them.

"I think you is an anjel from heaven Miss but I wish you was colored too because then maybe you would not think I had an awfull nerv for riting to you but I hope you will no that I am very respectfull and would only wish to no you as a shofer. Respectfull yours, ——— (colored)."

No, that little boy hasn't "an awful nerv"—but how about the one who got his girl-friend to write a mash note for him? She writes:

"I have a friend who goes to see all your pictures and is simply crazy about you. It's a He, and he's awfully cute, with black hair and blue eyes, and I'm sure you'd like him lots. Although he's too shy to write to you himself, and asked me to do it, he says he's going to Movietone City to see you when he gets a little older, but if he does I'll be awfully, awfully jealous. He's fifteen and I'm fourteen and we'd each like a picture of you. If you can't spare two, will you at least send him one, and make his life happier?"

"Teacher took all of our class who were reading about King Arthur to see you in 'Little Miss Marker,'" writes a grade school boy, "and when you walked onto the screen it was the first time I ever saw a smile on his sour old puss. When Old Iron-face says he thinks you're a darling, I guess you must be.

"All the kids in my class save pictures of movie stars and I had more than ten, but the next day I swapped the whole lot of them and my jacknife to boot for a picture of you. I think you're swell and when I grow up I'm going to marry you if you haven't been spoiled by then. X O X O X O X O X—for you." And the envelope had, scribbled on the back of it, "W.L.O.L.& K." Remember what that means? "With Lots Of Love & Kisses."

Not all of her fans are so youthful, though. Up in the Canadian backwoods there's an old couple who write:—

"We went in to town the other night and saw your picture. Is it true that you are an orphan like the picture showed you? If you are, we would be very glad to adopt you. It is true that we haven't got much of this world's goods, but you remind us of our little daughter who was taken from us by newmonia when she was a little younger than you are and we would love you like our own and what with what you make the three of us could live very comfortably. Even if you are not an orphan, you would like it very much up here and we would be very glad to have you as our guest for a few weeks. We would not charge you much for room and board as you are our favorite movie actress. Say about $35 a week. Would that be alright and, if so, when should we expect you?"

AND now for a few short excerpts from several other of Shirley's letters:—"I think you are very cute," says a seven-year-old girl, "and I'd like to be like you. You dance so much better than I do. I've been taking lessons for three years and can't do the steps you can."

And a boy of ten is so skeptical as to write, "Although you are only five and probably cannot read, perhaps you will send me your photograph with your signature scrawled on it, if you can write, which I doubt."

Sad, isn't it? He, so young, and disillusioned already! But perhaps the acme of cynicism was reached by the Florida man who said, "To Shirley's Mother or Father:— One who at least sees his ideal brought to life before his eyes requests that you send him a picture of her. I certainly hope she never grows up, and I'll bet you do too, for where are the prodigies of yesteryear? Busted!"

And a mother writes, "I have a little girl who looks just like you. How about giving her a job as your understudy? Give her a break, won't you?"

"How's chances," asks a woman, "for getting some of Shirley's clothes that she wore in the pictures? My little niece saw her in several of them and won't believe she's a live little girl; she thinks she's a doll and keeps pestering me to buy some clothes for her doll like Shirley wore. If you possibly can, please send them so that a worn-out auntie can get a little peace from a persistent three-year-old."

And there are hundreds of others who write—grown-ups praising her, many of them asking for photographs—children telling her how sweet she is, discussing their dolls and toys and ambitions.

Shirley Temple's mail, however, is quite unique. Not only has she the youngest fans of any actress, but I think fewer of them make unreasonable requests of her than do those who write to the grown-up stars of Hollywood.

FREE

Just mail coupon for the most complete book ever written on eye make-up. Note also trial offer.

• • •

A MESSAGE FROM LOUISE ROSS

DO YOUR EYES ATTRACT OR REPULSE MEN?

No girl, I assert, need have dull, uninviting eyes—it's a handicap to happiness. In 40 seconds you can give your eyes depth, glamour, sparkle—that "come hither" look is yours when you Winx your lashes. No need to be jealous of other girls. You can make your eyes alluring.

Like magic, Winx Mascara, the superior lash darkener, improves your appearance! You'll wonder why you didn't accept my help sooner. Your friends—particularly "he"—will find you doubly attractive.

TO MAKE MEN STOP, LOOK AND LISTEN

I want every girl to give herself a chance on the road to romance—to win real happiness. Remember, your eyes are your fortune. So buy a box of my Winx Mascara today—it's super-fine, safe, non-smarting, smudge-proof—the perfection of years of experience.

Winx Mascara and my other Winx Eye Beautifiers are presented in generous purse sizes at 10c. Millions of smart girls prefer them to ordinary ones. So will you, I'm sure.

To learn all the precious secrets of Eye Beauty, mail the coupon for my book—"Lovely Eyes—How To Have Them." It's free. Also send for a trial box, if a 10c. counter is not handy.

Louise Ross

WINX 10¢
EYE BEAUTIFIERS

Winx Eyebrow Pencil molds brows into charming curves.

Winx Cake Mascara darkens Lashes instantly, perfectly.

Winx Eye Shadow gives depth and glamour — a fine cream.

Winx Eyelash Grower promotes luxurious soft lashes.

Winx Liquid Mascara preferred by many — easy to apply. Waterproof.

FREE Merely send Coupon for "Lovely Eyes—How to Have Them"

Mail to LOUISE ROSS, M-2-35
243 W. 17th St., New York City

Name.....

Street.....

City.....State.....

If you also want a generous trial package of Winx Mascara, enclose 10c, checking whether you wish ☐ cake or ☐ liquid ☐ Black or ☐ Brown.

Keep your hair aglow with the glory of "youth". The "Sheen of Youth" is every woman's birthright and it's a distinctive beauty asset, too. Make your friends wonder how you obtained that joyous, youthful, vibrant color tone so necessary for beautiful hair.

If your hair is old or faded looking, regain its "Sheen of Youth" by using ColoRinse—use immediately after the shampoo. It doesn't dye or bleach, for it is only a harmless vegetable compound. Yet one ColoRinse—ten tints to choose from—will give your hair that sparkle and lustre, that soft, shimmering loveliness, which is the youthful lure of naturally healthy hair.

Also ask for Nestle SuperSet, Nestle Golden Shampoo or Nestle Henna Shampoo.

THE NESTLE-LEMUR COMPANY
MAKERS OF QUALITY PRODUCTS
NEW YORK

10c at all 10c Stores and Beauty Shops ... Nestle ColoRinse, SuperSet, Golden Shampoo and Henna Shampoo

Why I Stay Married

(Continued from page 27)

hands. When I come home at night and am too tired to talk about the studio or what I've been doing I don't have to. Ria doesn't care. There are dozens of other things, vitally important, to talk about. On the other hand, if I do feel like talking about what has been going on, she is as keen about it as I am, and knows as much. If I want advice, I get it.

"I could not, I would not, be married to an actress. In the first place, one professional ego is enough in any home. Two egos of the same stamp would blow the roof off Buckingham Palace. If I were married to an actress, and I never will be, here is what would happen: We would have had a bad day, each of us. We would come home with nerves frayed and teeth on edge and we would want to talk about it; we would want peace and comfort and sympathy. We wouldn't get it, either one of us. And all hell would break loose. In the course of many times like this one or both of us would look for comfort and sympathy elsewhere. Or we would have had a good day in the studio and would be full of it, wanting an admiring and appreciative audience, eager to do a little strutting, a bit of boasting. We would both want the floor, in other words.

"I don't have to combat that situation. If I'm tired and fed up, Ria has other things to talk about; other things to do. And because she is a mature woman and knows men and how to handle them, she does just that. If I'm keen about something, want to blow off steam over some scene I think I've done especially well, I can do it without having the nervous fear that she will want to break in with some similar bragging of her own.

AND just as I wouldn't be married to an actress neither would I be married to some sweet young thing, many years my junior, even though she were a non-professional and stayed at home. A younger girl could not know what it is all about. She would not be able to cope with the difficult and trying life of an actor's wife in Hollywood. Because wives in Hollywood are on a spot and don't you forget it. A young girl would be jealous. She would be suspicious. She would be resentful. Resentful of all the limelight flattery shown me. She would, at least subconsciously, crave the same flattery, the same attention for herself. She would be an easy victim of all the well-meaning 'friends' who would come to her and say, 'My dear, I think you ought to know, Clark and that So-and-So, etc, etc.

"Things like that do happen. Ria had a lot of it to put up with during our first year in Hollywood. Any number of people came to her with little tales calculated to prove that I was stepping high, wide and handsome with this one or that. I was going here, I was going there, I was having an affair with a certain star . . . did she know . . . what did she intend to do? It was rather hard for her, just at first. It takes a good deal of adjusting. And only because my wife is a balanced, sane and wise woman did she survive.

"And also because she believes me. No actor should marry a woman to whom he cannot tell the truth and be believed. Ria knows that I always have and always shall tell her the truth. And so, when people came to her with trouble-making tales they got no reaction. Which is one reason, no doubt, why they have about given it up of late. It's no fun to try to stir up trouble where it can't be stirred. Ria always came to me and said, 'I've heard this or that about you and so-and-so, Clark, is it so?' And I would say, 'It is not so.' And that would be the end of it. I would never hear about it again. No nagging. No subterfuges in an effort to find out. I'd told her the simple truth and she knew it.

Una Merkel, Madge Evans and boy friend, Tom Gallery—a few more of the celebrities who turned out for the Mary Blackford Benefit at the Cocoanut Grove.

"Because Ria is a woman who has been about, who knows the world and life, she is intelligent. She knows how to handle life and how to handle men. I have none of the uneasy fears and compulsions under which many actors have to labor. If I forget to phone her during lunch hour, I do not have to spend the rest of the day with the uneasy knowledge that when I get home that night I shall be greeted with tears and reproaches, martyred looks or suspicious sniffs. I do not have to work on half a cylinder because I fear I'll get the devil all evening. If I do not call at noon, that's that. Ria doesn't even expect me to. She'd probably be out somewhere if I did.

"My wife has never been on the set with me since we've been in Hollywood. Not once. Once or twice, when I've had to work late, she has come to the studio to have dinner with me and has left immediately after dinner.

MARRIAGE is a see-saw. If the balance is an uneven one, one or the other crashes down. Our marriage balances evenly and one side is equally as important as the other.

"Ria enters into every one of my interests. She makes them hers—or she makes me believe that they are hers. Who has said that many a good actress is a good wife, but more good wives are good actresses? Whoever did, spoke the truth. Between you and me, I've a pretty good idea that Ria does a lot of things with me she wouldn't do if it were not for me. Hunting, for instance. I don't honestly believe she gets a big kick out of that. But she plays the part with such realism you'd never suspect.

"For my part, I share her interest in the children, in their plans and interests, in what they like to do. For a time the girl thought she would like to be in pictures. Louis B. Mayer saw a picture of her and offered to have a test made. I said that I'd make it with her and I did. Clarence Brown directed us. It wasn't so good and she gave the idea up, then and there. Now she is interested in one particular boy and I imagine she'll marry before long and settle down. Personally, I'm rather relieved. I think it is a better life for her, better chances for happiness, and so does Ria.

"Allen is absolutely anti-movies, or rather, he's simply not interested at all. He never asks to come to the studio. He takes no interest whatever in me as a movie star. I think he forgets most of the time that I am one. I take him on hunting trips with me. We play ball together and swim and ride. Their friends are in and out of the house so much, both girls and boys, that they accept me, too, not as a man in pictures but just as a man. Allen is really funny. The other night he and Ria and I went to a movie together. As we came out Scotty, MODERN SCREEN'S photographer, was there and wanted to take some snaps of Ria and Allen and me. The boy wouldn't do it. He edged away. He said, 'Aw, I can't be bothered. You and Mother do it.' We did."

Amazing New Way to beautify yourself almost instantly

Nose too large, too small? Face too narrow, too round? Chin too prominent, too weak?

Which face is yours?

ROUND

Mold a darker shade on the lower side of the jaws, blending into neck.

TRIANGULAR

Mold a lighter shade on the lower side of the jaws, blending into neck.

SQUARE

Darker shading should be done on the lower jaws and on sides of forehead.

NORMAL

Use only the one shade of Soft-tone that matches your skin coloring.

How to bring out your best features

How to "Shadow" your handicaps

NOW comes a scientific discovery of vast importance to women, the greatest step in modern make-up.

. . . A way so simple, so practical that you'll be amazed . . . A way that costs so little that you'll be delighted. No plastic surgery. No long, costly treatments.

This wonderful discovery is called Mello-glo Modeling, a new and exclusive way to apply face powders . . . now instead of using only one shade of powder, you get an utterly changed, alluring effect by using two different, related shades.

EXCLUSIVE

Mello-glo Modeling is made possible by the creation of a completely new face powder called Soft-tone Mello-glo, a super-powder that permits two-shade modeling never before possible. Now the shades blend together perfectly because Mello-glo is stratified, that is, rolled into tiny, clinging wafers. Hence Mello-glo Modeling can be achieved only with Soft-tone Mello-glo — not with ordinary powders.

Authentic charts and diagrams, based on practices of artists and sculptors, show you exactly what to do, how to do it. Now you can model your face as you wish, highlighting your best features, subduing your handicaps. The results are truly satisfying.

This revolutionary contribution—worked out after years of research and experiment—is offered by the staff of Mello-glo experts, and approved by all leading beauty specialists and consultants. It is today's sensation in beauty circles.

Once you try Mello-glo Modeling, you'll agree that it creates wonderful effects. Here's how to prove it. Buy one box of the shade that matches your complexion in general. Then buy another box—lighter if you wish to accent certain features, darker, if you want to shadow them.

For instance, if your nose is too small, and therefore needs accent, use a lighter Mello-glo powder than on the rest of your face—if your nose is too prominent and needs to be subdued, use a darker shade.

Then stand off 5 feet from your mirror and note the artistic effect — how the shades blend unnoticeably yet give that artistic oval effect.

Try the various Mello-glo Modelings — how to widen or narrow your face, how to bring out or shadow features, how to normalize your contour, how to create new interest. The whole fascinating, easy method of Mello-glo Modeling is told in our free booklet, "The New Vogue in Powdering." Don't wait, send for a copy NOW.

Then try Mello-glo Modeling—introductory packages of the new Soft-tone Mello-glo Powder may be had at all 10c counters. Buy your two needed shades. For only 20c you can glorify your face, your features, as never before.

new SOFT-TONE MELLO-GLO

the close-up powder that gives an UN-powdered look

AT ALL 10¢ COUNTERS

Merely send Coupon for fascinating booklet: "The New Vogue in Powdering". FREE

The Mello-glo Co., Boston, Mass. M.-2-35

Name . . . . . .

Street . . . . . .

City . . . . . State . . . . . .

For a generous package (not a sample) of new Soft-tone Mello-glo, enclose 10c, checking shade you wish:

☐ Ivory ☐ Flesh Pink ☐ Natural ☐ Rachel ☐ Brunette.

© 1935—The Mello-glo Co.

Bid That COLD Be Gone!

Oust It Promptly with this 4-Way Remedy!

A COLD is no joke and Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine treats it as none!

It goes right to the seat of the trouble, an infection within the system. Surface remedies are largely makeshift.

Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine is speedy and effective because it is expressly a cold remedy and because it is direct and internal—and COMPLETE!

Four Things in One!

Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine and only Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine does the four things necessary.

It opens the bowels. It combats the cold germs in the system and reduces the fever. It relieves the headache and grippy feeling. It tones and fortifies the entire system.

That's the treatment a cold requires and anything less is taking chances.

When you feel a cold coming on, get busy at once with Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine. For sale by all druggists, 35c and 50c. The 50c size is the more economical "buy".

Ask for it by the full name—Grove's Laxative Bromo Quinine—and resent a substitute.

World's Standard

GROVE'S LAXATIVE BROMO QUININE

Listen to Pat Kennedy, the Unmasked Tenor and Art Kassel and his Kassels-in-the-Air Orchestra every Sunday, Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, 1:45 p. m., Eastern Standard Time, Columbia Coast-to-Coast Network.

How the Stars Keep Youth and Beauty

(Continued from page 31)

cannot do its best work. She believes that the reason women age is because they do not get enough sleep and rest. But how, you ask, can a busy girl who works for her living and also wants to have some pleasure do a great amount of resting? Claudette has the solution, for she—like you and me—is a working girl.

This is her iron-bound rule. If she goes to a party, a theatre opening or some entertainment which keeps her up late, she always goes to bed the next night immediately after dinner.

She believes that her body should rest. She also believes that her skin should rest, too. Naturally, at night her skin is free of all make-up. It gets a chance to breathe. So, I hope, does yours. But Claudette does more than that. Some time during every day, she takes off her make-up—the heavy grease paint, if she is at the studio, or her regular street make-up, if she isn't—and lets her skin rest for half an hour. Then she makes up her nice, clean face all over again. You girls who work in offices all day say you can't do that. Well, perhaps you can't. But you can take time to do it every evening when you get home from work. You can even steal a short while to do this if you have a date right after office hours. (Steal the time from the date, not from the office hours, I mean.)

THOSE of you who aren't slaves to a regular job have a better opportunity to keep your youth and beauty with you as the years advance. Oh, yes, you have. I don't care how pressing the housework is or how numerous the social engagements. Make a promise to yourself, as Claudette does, to go to bed early on certain nights. Remember the trite wisecracks, "Sit down and rest your hands and face?" Well, take it literally. Lie down and rest your hands and face. The face should be free from make-up and the hands should flop limply at your sides and your eyes should close.

Joan Bennett managed to look like a child of twelve in "Little Women" and will keep that child-like look for many years to come. (It's so alluring, in a petite person!) Joan really lives, as much as possible, like a child of twelve. She can give herself a child's mental outlook. For example: instead of bringing up her children to think of her as an adult, she puts herself on the children's level and is growing up with them all over again. It's a bit difficult to explain, but you who have children will understand. When Joan isn't working, she spends almost all her time with the children. Not as their mother, but as their playmate. Young mothers, try that. You'll profit by it and your youngsters will think of you as real pals.

Joan has another recipe for youth. She never worries. She is a fatalist and believes that good things and bad things come in life without your doing anything about them. I realize that you can't become a fatalist to order, but you could worry less. Joan accepts things as they are. After all, why not—one can't alter them? She isn't apathetic—I don't mean that. The smaller things of life win her unbounded enthusiasm. And small joys are wonderful youth preservers. You can't be an old worry when the simple pleasures of life still give you a kick. Worry destroys the contours of the face. Keep as free from it as possible and your face will keep the illusion of youth.

Loretta Young claims that a little playacting is a wonderful thing. She has kept, to this day, a talent which all children have—the talent for make-believe. Fifteen years ago, she loved to play "lady," dressed up in her mother's clothes. Now, when she puts on an evening dress, she has the same feeling. She is playing "lady." That sense of make-believe keeps reality from becoming too important.

How can you reap any benefit from Loretta's aid to beauty? Well, let us suppose that you have invited a number of people for dinner and that it is extremely important that everything goes properly. If you will play-act a little bit—make believe that you are a hostess in a story and try to be that hostess—you'll have a lot better time and the party will be much more successful than if you are constantly fretting about the roast burning and the dessert spoiling. Furthermore, you won't be tired and hot and cross before your guests arrive and a nervous wreck after they leave.

EVELYN VENABLE looks like an artist's dream of youth. Beautiful skin. Soft, rounded face, completely lineless. She has recipes for beauty which she follows religiously.

These are the things she does: She was brought up to love animals and she thinks it a sin to eat meat of any kind. That is the ascetic's point of view. It is also her greatest beauty secret. Evelyn lives on fruits and vegetables. She eats no meat at all—not even soup cooked with meat stock or gravies. She thinks it unnatural to eat meat and naturalness in all things is the key to her beauty.

"My advice to women who want to stay young is this: stay away from people as much as possible. I cannot stress this point too much. People sap your vitality needlessly. They take your strength and cause you every sort of worry. I have a few friends, but they are all quiet and soothing. The amount of effort it takes to be true to one's self in a crowd shows on your face. I see so many people during the day at the studio that I must revivify myself by being alone when the day's work is done. That, I firmly believe, is the best way to keep young.

"I have trained myself not to worry over the fact that I cannot act or look like someone else. I try to make the best of my own advantages, be they ever so small. I have gotten to the point where life holds no problems for me. I have troubles, of course, but I accept them instead of fighting against them!"

And that will surely tell you why her face betrays no inner unrest. She accepts her troubles instead of fighting against them.

"I believe in utter relaxation," she told me. "I find that relaxation on the bridle path. I ride hours daily—but always alone. In this way I am saved from arguments, petty gossip and mental strain. Yes, indeed! Staying away from people is the best of all youth preservers."

And now—Joan Crawford.

"I've got to have perfect freedom," Joan told me. "I believe that to keep young, one must have freedom of mind as well as freedom of movement. Look!" She made a long, sweeping gesture with her arm. It was such a vigorous gesture that I expected to see the sleeve of her gown rip from the armhole. But it didn't.

"I can't stand to wear any dress that is tight around my shoulders and arms," she said. "If you are bound in, physically, you're the same way mentally. If I have to wear a dress with tight sleeves in a picture I have the sleeves detachable so that I can rip them off the minute I'm through with a scene. To stay young, you should stay alive. And how can you stay alive if you're bound up like a mummy? I won't have either my body or my mind bound."

Physical and mental freedom, then, is Joan's biggest youth secret. Naturally, she goes farther than this by taking excellent care of herself. Except for a glass of wine on rare occasions, she never touches liquor. She eats the most strengthening and non-fattening foods and she believes in eating between meals if one is hungry. She gets her exercise by swimming and on days when she has no time to swim she'll have a body massage. She washes her face three or four times a day, after which she polishes her skin with a rough towel.

So there you are. These five stars believe that there is no sense in getting old. They have given you their simple recipes for youth. I hope you find them as inspirational as I have.

I Hate

(Continued from page 36)

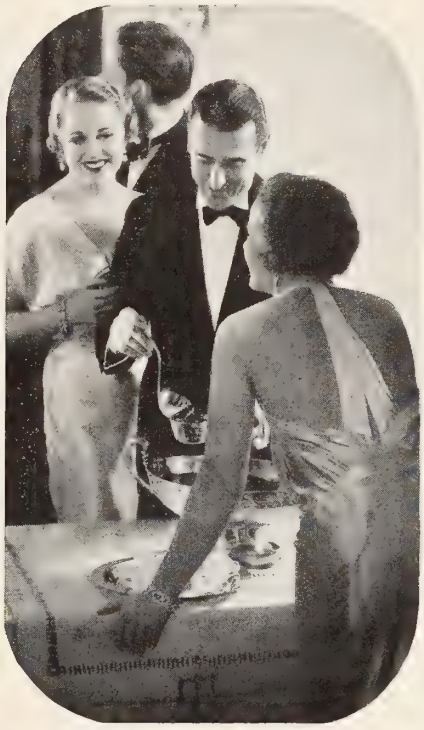
like.



Joan Crawford might make friends with a cockroach, but a fly . . . Lordy, Lordy, how she hates 'em. Every window in her house is covered with screens and even the locks in the doors are inspected regularly. Once she heard that castor-oil plants keep flies out of the house by attracting them to the leaves. Outside of every entrance in Joan's house is a castor-oil plant. She swears this device works.

Joan has many more hates. She loathes people who write anonymous letters and begin a telephone conversation with "Guess who this is!" But her greatest hate concerns those folks who call her by her first name the very first time they meet her. It irritates her because she never becomes over friendly until she has known a person for quite a long time. But when she makes a real friend the friendship lasts forever.

Kent Taylor can't tolerate a person who won't look him straight in the eye. Ever since he was in the window-decorating business with a supposed friend who helped himself to the contents of the cash register drawer, Kent has hated people who can't meet his gaze directly. His partner's eyes were shifty. You can tell him all you please that some of the greatest crooks in the world have cultivated a firm, direct gaze. It won't make any difference to Kent. Not so long ago a Hollywood agent offered him a wonderful business proposition—by letter. The day Kent went to the man's office to sign the contract, he discovered that the agent couldn't look him straight in the face. Kent didn't sign the contract.

Know what gets Glenda Farrell's dander up? Well, it's the over-zealous dress shop salesgirl who honeys, dears, and darlings you from the moment you enter a shop until the time you leave it. You know the type—the salesperson who has never seen you before, and who, by the affection which she lavishes upon you, would seem to be a lifelong friend, at least. And, of course, every dress you try on looks "marvelous," "wonderful," and "divine." But she doesn't sell Glenda any dresses, for she's behind headaches

Little Stories

Mr. and Mrs. N. went to a party . . . at the Browns' last night, and the next morning woke with a bit of a head.

But Bromo-Seltzer soon fixed all that. Those citric salts in Bromo-Seltzer are fine for building up a depleted alkaline reserve!

When Mr. R. awoke this morning . . . he had a dull headache and the symptoms of a nasty cold. He took a Bromo-Seltzer the first thing . . . another at noon. Now here he is back home and feeling fine, thanks to the citric salts in Bromo-Seltzer with their helpful alkalizing effect.

THE BALANCED RELIEF

Bromo-Seltzer is a balanced compound of five medicinal ingredients, each having a special purpose. It does so much more than products containing fewer ingredients. Relieves headache and its after-effects. Calms you. And builds up depleted alkalinity. A stand-by for over 40 years, Bromo-Seltzer contains no narcotics, never upsets the stomach. Emerson Drug Co., Baltimore, Md.

In cases of persistent headaches, where the cause is unknown to you, of course, consult your physician.

BROMO-SELTZER

Listen to "THE INTIMATE REVUE" every Friday, 8:30 E. S. T.

B R I G H T

EYE IDEAS

by Jane Heath

CAN EVERY MAN you know name the color of your eyes, this minute? If not, you are not making good in the beauty game and it's time to take steps. You might take to Kurlash too. Slip your lashes into this fascinating little implement—press for an instant—and presto! They're curled back like a movie star's, looking twice as long, dark and glamorous. Notice how they frame your eyes, deepening and accentuating the color! No heat—no practice—no cosmetics . . . and Kurlash costs just $1 too!

Art in Archery

JANE L. is right when she writes that it's worth the trouble to pluck her brows slightly along the upper line because it makes her eyes seem larger. But the reddened skin and discomfort she complains about are caused by using an old-fashioned tweezer. Do you know Tweezette? It works automatically, plucking out the straggly offending hair, accurately and instantly, without even a twinge. It costs $1 in any good store.

100 Strokes in a Jar!

RUTH W. brushes her eyelashes when she does her hair. Not 100 strokes a day—simply an instant's brushing with a compound of beneficial oils called Kurlene ($1). You'll be surprised how much silkier, softer and darker looking it will make yours too!

Kurlash

Jane Heath will gladly give you personal advice on eye beauty if you write her a note care of Department G-2, The Kurlash Company, Rochester, N. Y. The Kurlash Company of Canada, at Toronto, 3.

Copyright 1934 T. K. Co.

so fed up after the first ten minutes that she gathers her belongings and walks right out. And the saleslady's parting words usually are, "Come in again, darling, when you have more time." To which Glenda says a mental "Gr-r-r-r."

It's a little thing that worries Ralph Bellamy but it can—and has—stopped a romance. In his trooping days he had what he thought was a really serious crush on a girl. It was love at first sight. But when he saw her biting her finger nails, it was all off. Chewing nails is something that Ralph just can't take.

Call Paul Muni temperamental if you like, but his pet hate is meeting strangers or, at times, even his wife's women acquaintances who drop in for a casual chat. But he's lucky. He can escape from his pet hate, for a hundred yards or so from his house there is a tiny cabin which is all Paul's. He goes there when he doesn't want the company of others.

Louise Fazenda gets simply furious when people "drop in" to see her without letting her know in advance. And if anyone enters her room without knocking—well, watch out for the Fazenda temper.

Some other hates? Well, listen to these. Put Clark Gable down as hating stupidity in all forms. Constance Bennett, a gal who always speaks her own mind, loathes hypocrisy. And don't ask Bob Montgomery silly questions. He can't stand it. Madge Evans' Public Enemy No. 1 is the practical joker. She could cheerfully murder about half a dozen of them.

Mary Brian, whose telephone rings oftener than any girl's in Hollywood (all those beaux trying to make dates with her), despises the telephone. Every time she has ever received any bad news it has come via telephone. Don't gossip in front of Loretta Young. People who do are her pet hates. The color old rose will send Miriam Hopkins into a tantrum. A woman whom she disliked intensely wore old rose all the time. And Bruce Cabot thinks the world would be a better place to live in if he never had to wear dress clothes.

Jack Oakie shares Cabot's hatred of dress clothes. He loathes stiff shirts more than anything else in the world. Why? Well, hear Jack Oakie tell you himself. "I bruise easy. The starched tops and collars cut into my dainty neck and ruin my manly beauty. The first time I ever met a stiff shirt was in a Little Lord Fauntleroy suit. I borrowed a jack-knife from a pal and cut my way out. Since then I've had nightmares of being strangled to death or bled to death from neck-cuts."

Okay, there you are. And how are your pet hates today?

Dresses You Could Really Wear

(Continued from page 58)

A jewel-studded buckle, a cowboy 'kerchief on a dinner gown, a jeweled pendant dangling from a cord and cording on taffeta—just to enumerate a few of the most individual details.

I think one of the worst mistakes we make in trying to copy screen clothes, is to think that because a certain tricky idea looks well on a star, it will look well on us. An idea is only as good as it looks on you. Spotting smart fashions in a picture or seeing them pictured here is really a glorified form of window shopping. You mentally have to try the clothes on, then decide which is for you and which should be left for someone else. That is why I picked these particular dresses—each one is suitable and easy to adapt to individuals. Now and then, you will find, screen costumes are of the exciting type that start a trend for Russian styles, period dresses, a new style in hats or such, but in themselves, they are not suitable for practical wear. Lovely to look at, grand to admire, but better in a modified version for you and me.

If you want assistance in your fashion problems, Miss Adelia Bird will be glad to help you. Just write to her at MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y., and enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

A gay little group at the Cocoanut Grove—the inseparable Isabel Jewell and Lee Tracy and the happily married Cy Bartlett and Alice White.

None of This Is Real

(Continued from page 47)

realism on the screen, the modern studio technician tries to give us the real thing in the reels. The mechanical devices for imitating the noises made by nature, man and beast, have been tossed into the ash can.

"Nowadays we actually go out and record sounds at their sources," said Mr. Livadari. "In 'It Happened One Night' we had $30,000 worth of equipment taken out to the fields in San Fernando Valley to record the creaking of crickets. We chased a meadow lark all over the Valley and had the darndest time in getting two satisfactory calls. In 'No Greater Glory' we spent four hours to record the croaking of a frog.

"We have stored away millions of feet of genuine sound effects, and the footage increases with every new production."

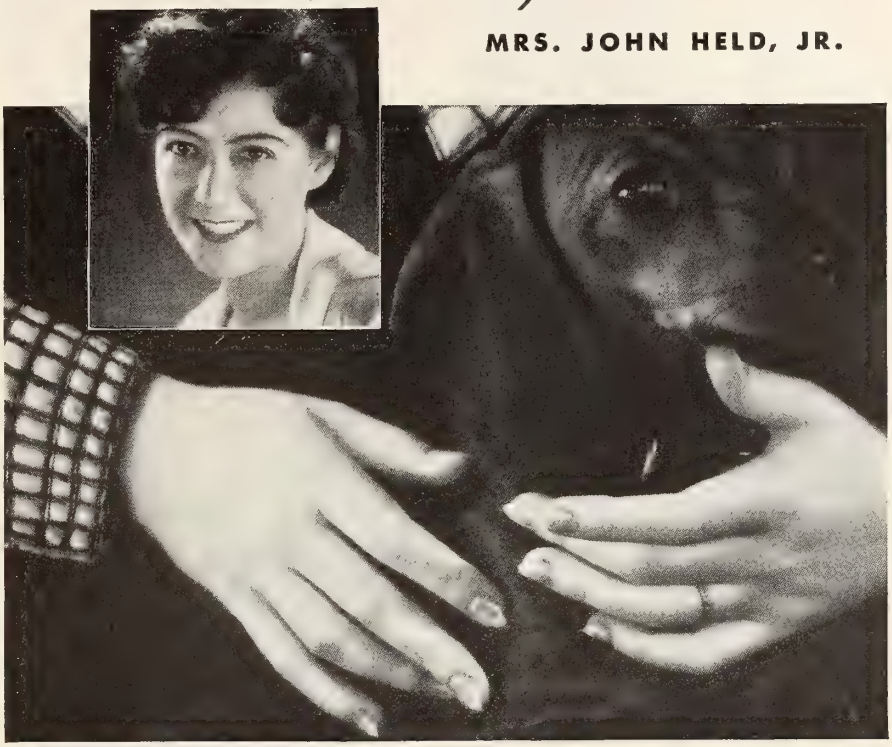
In the sound library, cans of sound effects of every conceivable variety are neatly shelved in alphabetical order. Here are a few of the labels I jotted down on my pad: bed squeaks; mosquito buzz; shell whines; cattle stampede; chewing celery; Tarzan yell; Arab commands; man selling peanuts; pop-corn and chewing gum; cocktail shaker; laughing hyena, and so on.

THERE are inumerable variations of applause, footsteps and cars of every make stopping and starting. The sound effects of the Cadillac are entirely different from those of the Packard, according to Mr. Livadari, who must have absolutely the genuine sound in each case.

"Such background noises as a door being shut, footsteps across the room, turning on the radio, the music in ballroom scenes, etc., are dubbed in weeks later, if necessary," explained Mr. Livadari. "They might have been recorded two or three years before. The main job of the microphone during the actual process of filming a scene is to pick up the dialogue of the players. We take care of the rest."

Employees of the department are called upon to furnish some of these sound effects.

"They stuffed black pepper in my nose to make me sneeze," complained Miss Mary Bachtel, secretary in the department. "The heroine playing opposite Leslie Howard in 'The Lady Is Willing,' was suffering from hay fever and had to sneeze. They took me before the microphone with all that pepper in my nose, but no matter how hard I sniffed it in, I couldn't sneeze to save my soul. But soap suds did the trick."



The prop department is called upon to furnish anything required in the shooting of a picture. And when I say anything, I mean anything. It may be a request for a South American fish, an Egyptian mummy, or the hotel menus of the Pera Palace in Istanbul. As for producing such natural phenomena under studio lights as storms at sea, fog, rain, snow, and the like, it's merely routine work for the lowly prop man.

The prop department, for instance, can bury a New England village under snow faster than Nature can.

You think of cornflakes as a breakfast food. But to the prop department cornflakes is snow falling from dark, leaden skies "back East." Here, in our land of perpetual sunshine, the soft, clinging snow you see blown about in pictures by the icy blasts of winter is made of shredded asbestos. Where the withering incandescent lights glare, drifts and hard ground snow

"I have no time for sticky hand lotions"

MRS. JOHN HELD, JR.

Wife of the famous artist, who created "Margie" and other flappers, keeps her hands lovely this way

"NATURALLY, I want to keep my hands attractive—a husband who is an artist notices every detail. But I certainly haven't any time to spare waiting for sticky hand lotions to dry—not with a house to run and a lively two-year-old daughter to look after, and a pair of dachshunds to keep track of. That's why I'm so delighted with Pacquin's—it doesn't leave any sticky film at all, just seems to disappear into the skin and make it soft and smooth and beautifully white."

There's an excellent reason why Pacquin's leaves no sticky film on your skin—because this cream actually sinks right into the inner layers of the skin where it is needed. Your skin absorbs it—very different from the old-fashioned lotions that remain on the outer skin until evaporation dries them.

Make your hands lovelier this convenient, modern way. Send for the lovely introductory jar today.

"I Do my Own Work and Still Am Proud of my Hands"—Mrs. S. C. Hahner

"There's no excuse for even the busiest woman not having pretty hands when Pacquin's is so quick and easy to use. It seems to feed back into the skin all the softness that house-work takes out. And no waiting for a sticky hand lotion to dry, as I used to. And Pacquin's keeps my hands whiter and smoother than they ever were."

Pacquin's Hand Cream

THE QUICK, MODERN WAY TO LOVELY HANDS

PACQUIN LABORATORIES CORPORATION, DEPT. 4-C, 101 WEST 31ST STREET, NEW YORK, N. Y.

Please send me your generous trial jar of Pacquin's Hand Cream, for which I enclose 10¢.

Name.....

Address.....City.....State.....

"Through every dance ... HOLD-BOBS hold"

—says Ruth Harrison
... of Harrison & Fisher
featured dancers of Ziegfeld Follies, Strike Me Pink and other Stage and Screen Successes

"... that's why I stand by HOLD-BOBS. Then, too, they match my blonde hair exactly ... I like the way HOLD-BOBS slide in the hair ... not the slightest scratching, and their small, round heads are absolutely invisible ... Yes, HOLD-BOBS play an important part in all our performances".

What more could any woman ask? But remember, only HOLD-BOBS have small, round, invisible heads; smooth, round points and flexible, tapered legs, one side crimped, to hold hair securely. And HOLD-BOBS come in harmonizing colors to match all shades of hair.

Try a card free!

THE HUMP HAIRPIN MFG. COMPANY
1918-36 Prairie Avenue, Dept. E-25, Chicago, Ill.

Hump Hairpin Mfg. Co. of Canada, Ltd.
St. Hyacinthe, P. Q., Canada

Gold and Silver Metal Foil cards identify HOLD-BOBS.

All sizes and colors to meet every requirement. Also sold under brand name of BOBETTES.

MAIL COUPON for Gift CARD

The Hump Hairpin Mfg. Co.
Dept. E-25, Chicago, Ill.
I want to know more about these new HOLD-BOBS that match my hair. Please send me a free sample card and new hair culture booklet.

Name.....
Address.....
City..... State.....
☐ Gray and Platinum ☐ Blonde ☐ Brown
☐ Auburn ☐ Brunette

Copyright 1936 by The Hump Hairpin Mfg. Co.

are excellently imitated by a mixture of gypsum and salt.

We make icicles by dipping cellophane in paraffin. They melt and drip under the lights. As for frost, we can produce it instantly by spraying crystal camphor on the window panes. If you were to rub noses against them, the frost would clear away in exactly the way real frost would when coming in contact with human breath.

TAKE the matter of fog. The studio can produce it at will, by spraying mineral oil on the set. It remains suspended in the air for several hours at a stretch. During the three weeks of shooting the mystery picture, "Fog," featuring Mary Brian, Donald Cook and Reginald Denny, only eight gallons of mineral oil were needed to fill the promenade deck of the huge Atlantic liner, the vast salon, the corridors and the dining-rooms, with a sticky London fog.

Directors have their favorite prop men. Lewis Milestone's is John Orlando, who has been with him for ten years.

"I read the story over twice and break it down into sections, according to the props required," Orlando said.

"We were on the set of 'The Captain Hates the Sea,' watching Victor McLaglen make love to Helen Vinson like a big, bashful boy.

"The hardest part of the prop man's job is what he doesn't read between the lines," continued Orlando. "Take this scene, for instance. Maybe the director wants the leading lady to smoke, or try to read a book. It isn't in the script. But I must anticipate his needs and have cigarettes, matches, and a book or two ready at hand.

"My troubles start when the company goes on location. If the director asked for a wrist watch right now, I could run to the prop department or to the nearest jewelry store and get one. But on location I would be stuck. A little item like that will hold up the whole set and cost the studio thousands of dollars.

"When we went on location on the steamer Ruth Alexander, to shoot the exterior scenes of this picture, I took along everything that might be needed not only in the picture but also for the comfort of the players. When an actress develops a bad case of headache, as so often happens, she asks me to give her an aspirin. The prop man is required to furnish everything from a toothpick to an aeroplane on five minutes notice. They call us the Minute Men.

"When Mr. Milestone got ready to shoot the fire scene on the ship, the assistant director called for a fire hose spool.

"I felt as if somebody had hit me on the head and knocked me over. I had forgotten to take a fire hose spool along!

"I ran all over the ship like a crazy man, trying to find one. It was important for the action of the scene that the fire hose be wound around a spool. Presently I dashed down to the engine room, and, lo and behold, there was a fire hose spool on the steel wall!

"It belonged to the ship, but I had to have it to save my reputation and keep my job. So, when nobody was around to see me, I grabbed a piece of iron. I think it was a big monkey wrench. I was so excited that I really didn't know what I was holding. With the wrench I tried to tear the spool off the steel wall. My hands were all black and blue by the time I gave it one final jerk and snatched it off. I ran up to the deck with it, yelling, 'I've got it! I've got it!' Was I happy the rest of the day!"

THE greatest jugglers of movie magic are the art directors.

They take the drab sound stage and dress it up in a jiffy to look like a DeMille edition of Cleopatra's barge, a Moscow cathedral of barbaric splendor, or a toney niterie on the gay White Way of New York.

Art Director Lionel Banks, who began life as an honest architect, took me behind the scenes of make-believe he had set up for "Lady by Choice." The Cafe Montmartre, where a blonde bundle of hot-cha stuff, impersonated by Carole Lombard, fan dances her way into the heart of a gentleman engaged in battering down the courts of Gotham with volleys of rhetoric (Roger Pryor turned lawyer), had all the swank and éclat of a real night club. The lady's apartment, dressing-room, shower bath, etc., were all exact reproductions of their real counterparts down to the minutest details. But sad, sad it was when I touched a bunch of orchids an admirer had given her, only to discover that it was artificial.

The Madison Square Garden at which Miss Lombard looks so wistfully through the windows of her apartment, and the whole background of far-off New York were faked through "process" shots.

It's a case of the mountain coming to Mahomet. Any background in the world can be projected on the stage, where the actors are performing, through a process invented by an eighteen-year-old kid, Dodge Dunning. The illusion is perfect. The use of this innovation, however, is limited. Costly location trips have still to be made and outdoor sets still constructed.

The world's queerest jobs are to be found in Fox Movietone City, where on a space of 110 acres there are characteristic sections of New York, London, Paris, Shanghai, or any other city on the globe you care to name, in permanent outdoor sets.

Touring through Movietone City is like taking a trip around the world. It is the newest, largest plant for the manufacture of film romance, and the only one that is not devoid of scenic and architectural beauty. Winfield Sheehan may well be proud of this place. It's a whopper.

To those who have never been inside the portals of a studio, it's a place of strange fascination and mystery, indeed. There, behind those grilled gates guarded by uniformed police, behind those forbidding high walls, live persons of great fame and allure, the Garbos, Dietrichs, Bennetts and Hepburns, mortals that commoner clay worships.

As we walked along Tennessee Avenue, we passed by the bungalow of George White, he of the pulchritudinous "Scandals."

Across the street called Avenue A, my guide pointed out to me the dressing-room bungalow of Will Rogers. It is built in desert style, surrounded by cacti, century plants, mesquite and greasewood. Here the sage of Claremore keeps his portable typewriter and pounds out his daily letters to newspaper editors.

WE turned right and went on to Berkeley Square. A small army of expert gardeners is needed to keep this exact duplicate of the great historic London park in good condition. The three cat-faced lions that lay at the base of the Nelson Monument in the Trafalgar Square scene in "Cavalcade," now gaze stonily into a high, stucco wall. The distinctive lamp posts of London, with their wide yard-arms, electroliers, red mail boxes, traffic islands and wooden buffers, are all faithfully reproduced.

Around the corners of this arterial center of London lies a Mexican hacienda, a replica of a typical ranch beyond the Rio Grande.

Turning left into Avenue D, we faced a huge transatlantic liner that has never been in water, a scale model of the "Rex," queen of the Italian fleet. The superstructure towers high in the air. It carries the regulation life boats mounted on the new-type davits in use on Italian ships. There are portholes in the lower decks, ventilators on the forward deck, booms, derricks, and hatches, promenade decks protected by plate glass and de luxe cabin suites.

We swung around into Avenue B and passed the cottage of Janet Gaynor, an Irish hut with a rustic, thatched roof.

Passing the Norman chateau that houses the writing staff, we turned down to Fifth Street, and inspected the dressing-room bungalow of Claire Trevor. It is a charming building, sky blue and white, with an arched entrance and white picket fence.

Strolling along batteries of gigantic sound stages we took a look at the "Garden of All Nations," where trees, shrubs, vines, flowers and other plants from the four corners of the globe are grown, under mercury vapor lamps, if need be, in order to have a Spring scene shot in December.

Continuing on our way to the right, we reached the wild West sets of "In Old Arizona," the first outdoor talkie ever made. Here are typical scenes of old frontier towns, jails and saloons, hitching posts and "The Paris Store," the Chinese laundry, and Wells Fargo Express office.

WE visited, in turn, the Grand Canyon and the Boulder Dam; the harem of the Sultan of Morocco at Fez; a Mississippi River steamboat; the murky harbor of Singapore jammed with sampans and native craft; the hot jungles of Africa; the secretariat of the League of Nations at Geneva; the harbor of Stockholm bristling with Swedish ships; Park Avenue, Manhattan; a typical New England village, where "Dr. Bull" was filmed; the Epsom Downs; the shell-shattered devastated war zone of Belgium; Engine Company 54 of the New York Fire Department; a Russian railway station, etc., etc.

My guide finally took me to a Bavarian village, where "Music in the Air" was being filmed. Designed by the ace art director of the studio, William Darling, it covers some three city blocks.

Climbing to one of the picturesque balconies we watched the rehearsal of a Bavarian folk dance. It was market day for the good peasants and a gay carnival air prevailed in the village. Cows lay contentedly in the shade, their horns decorated with flowers. The booths and beer stands were all set for a busy day. A throng of Bavarian Schuhplattler dancers, thirty of them, especially imported for this picture, in which Gloria Swanson, as you know, makes her screen come-back, were jigging around to the loud and merry music of a native orchestra. Douglass Montgomery and that charming Minneapolis girl, June Lang, were footing it together. Montgomery, deeply bronzed, wore nothing but a pair of trunks and a handkerchief twisted around his perspiring neck. June Lang was rigged out like the other hippy fraulein, sporting a green hat with a white pompon and a skirt of flowered silk.

Many amazing things had these husky Bavarians seen on their six-thousand-mile journey to Movietone City. Yet as I gathered from my conversation with them, carried on through an interpreter, the thing that surprised them most of all was this realistic reproduction of a hamlet in their beloved native mountains. They could not believe their eyes when they first saw it. They thought the studio had purchased an entire village and had it transported bodily to Hollywood. They still seemed to be wondering, after two weeks of familiarilty with the set, if they weren't really dancing in Bavaria. This bit of Hollywood magic was too much for those simple villagers from the old world.

DO BRUNETTES LOOK OLDER THAN BLONDES

No!

THE ANSWER IS THAT 7 OUT OF 10 BRUNETTES USE THE WRONG SHADE OF FACE POWDER!

● BY Lady Esther

If there's one thing women fool themselves about, it's face powder shades.

Many women select face powder tints on the wrong basis altogether. They try to get a face powder that simply matches their type instead of one that enhances or flatters it.

Any actress will tell you that certain stage lights can make you look older or younger. The same holds true for face powder shades. One shade can make you look ten to twenty years older while another can make you look years younger.

It's a common saying that brunettes look older than blondes. There is no truth in it. The reason for the statement is that many brunettes make a mistake in the shade of the face powder they use. They simply choose a brunette face powder shade or one that merely matches their type instead of one that goes with the tone of their skin. A girl may be a brunette and still have an olive or white skin.

One of Five Shades is the Right Shade!

Colorists will tell you that the idea of numberless shades of face powder is all wrong. They will tell you that one of five shades will answer every tone of skin.

I make Lady Esther Face Powder in five shades only, when I could just as well make ten or twenty-five shades. But I know that five are all that are necessary and I know that one of these five will prove just the right shade of face powder for your skin.

I want you to find out if you are using the right shade of face powder for your skin. I want you to find out if the shade you are using is making you look older or younger.

One Way to Tell!

There is only one way to find out and this is to try all five shades of Lady Esther Face Powder—and that is what I want you to do at my expense.

One of these shades, you will find, will instantly prove the right shade for you. One will immediately make you look years younger. You won't have to be told that. Your mirror will cry it aloud to you.

Write today for all the five shades of Lady Esther Face Powder that I offer free of charge and obligation. Make the shade test before your mirror. Notice how instantly the right shade tells itself. Mark, too, how soft and smooth my face powder; also, how long it clings.

Mail Coupon

One test will reveal that Lady Esther Face Powder is a unique face powder, unparalleled by anything in face powders you have ever known.

Mail the coupon or a letter today for the free supply of all five shades that I offer.

(You can paste this on a penny postcard) FREE

LADY ESTHER
2010 Ridge Avenue, Evanston, Ill.

Please send me by return mail a trial supply of all five shades of Lady Esther Face Powder.

Name.....

Address.....

City.....State.....

(If you live in Canada, write Lady Esther, Toronto, Ont.) (9)

. . . No! She's Not Really Artificial and "COMMON" . . . but

SHE NEEDS THIS NEW and DIFFERENT

Face Powder

YOU can't blame a man for misjudging! That constant powdering does look shallow, frivolous and a trifle common! Of course it's usually the result of nervousness—fear of an ordinary powder that won't stick. But how is a man to know that?

It's so needless to run the risk of being misjudged! Thousands of women have said good-bye to "nervous powdering" since they discovered the amazing new Golden Peacock Face Powder! It has two vital new features. In the first place it is really moisture-proof—made with finest French ingredients. Skin moisture cannot take the powder off; and it cannot "cake" it into pore-clogging, coarsening blackheads.

Four Times Finer!

But more than that, Golden Peacock powder is four times finer than any other powder we know about! This super-fineness makes it blend with your skin perfectly. No more artificial "powdered-up" look; instead, your skin presents that flawless, natural peach-bloom look that is the sign of dewy youth. Entrancing!

Just try Golden Peacock Face Powder and see. You may get the 50-cent size at any drug or department store; and the generous purse size is only 10 cents at all 5-and-10c stores. Or, send 6 cents in stamps to Golden Peacock, Inc., Paris, Tennessee, for a generous size box sufficient for three weeks. Please specify shade you use. There is a complete range of ravishing, flattering shades.

Tested and Approved 4820 Bureau of Foods, Sanitation and Health — Good Housekeeping Magazine

At Drug and Department Stores, 25c-50c At All 5 and 10c Stores, 10c

Golden Peacock
Face Powder

She Was a One-Date Girl

(Continued from page 43)

been to less than a half-dozen dances in my life. Dick Powell took me to the Beverly-Wilshire and to the Cocoanut Grove one evening, but Dick, like all the others, has never asked me to go out again. Perhaps I should not have mentioned that, because he may read this story and feel obliged to ask me for another date. Under the circumstances, I would have to refuse him now."

And, of course, the most recent glaring example is Francis Lederer. Jean and Francis were reported cuh-razy about each other for a time, but that little romance seems to have gone the way of all the others, too.

"As a child, I was heartbroken because boys avoided me. I thought I was doomed to be unhappy all my life. Like all young girls, I believed that happiness resulted from popularity with boys. Now that I am older, I have learned that there are other things in life. While I admittedly miss the companionship of men, I am not entirely unhappy without them.

OH, I had girlhood crushes, but they were always with dream princes, men I never met, or never even hoped to meet. My sweethearts were kept in bureau drawers; they were only photographs. Pictures of the Prince of Wales, Wallace Reid, and Rudolph Valentino, far-away public idols, but to me they were real and near. They were my only romances."

Without doubt, these were the most astonishing admissions I have ever heard come from a woman's lips. During my many years as an interviewer, I have heard nothing to equal them. I sat amazed while Jean Muir talked. She talked freely, without prompting, without shame. I wanted to pinch myself to make sure I was awake. Why, it had never occurred to me that a woman, any woman—not even the homeliest woman alive—would admit that she was unattractive to all men.

"Don't Hollywood men take you out at all?" I managed to ask.

"A few have taken me out, once, and on very rare occasions a few times each," she answered, and I am positive that I heard the vestige of a sigh.

"My own stupidity is to blame for the failure of some of them to return, I'll admit. For example, there was a man who invited me to a symphony concert at the Hollywood Bowl. I thought the music was awful. I twisted and squirmed through the first half of the program, and then, without a word to my escort, I left my seat and fled from the place. He never asked me to go out again. He even avoids me when we meet in public." Miss Muir shrugged her shoulders and added, "I don't blame him.

"I wear clothes like a cornfield scarecrow. Perhaps that makes men self-conscious when they take me out. Men like to be seen with girls who are attractive and who dress beautifully. Men like other men to turn their heads and stare enviously. But other men never turn their heads to stare at me.

"I realize that I am greatly to blame myself. I suppose I could make myself more attractive. But I hate tight-fitting, formal gowns. I detest high heels. Consequently, because I enjoy personal comfort so thoroughly, I flounder about in ill-fitting dresses and low-heeled shoes. I refuse to make myself uncomfortable merely to please men. Perhaps, if I were to fall in love . . ." her voice faded musingly.

"Well, if you should fall in love?" I prompted.

"I really don't know what I would do," she answered. "But how can I fall in love, if no man gives me the opportunity?"

"Things may soon be different," I encouraged. "As a child, you were poor. As a motion picture actress, you are famous, and with growing fame will come riches. Fame and wealth will win you attention. Will you like that?"

I'LL love it!" she burst out, impulsively. I will be perfectly frank with the readers of this story. At this point of my interview with Jean Muir, I was in a haze. The woman admits that she has hungered for masculine companionship since she was old enough to feel her first interest in the opposite sex. She further admits that if her screen success brings this companionship, she will be happy. Why, there is actual bitterness in her voice when she confesses that her childhood was devoid of boy friends. Yet, she will not make even the slightest effort to be attractive to men.

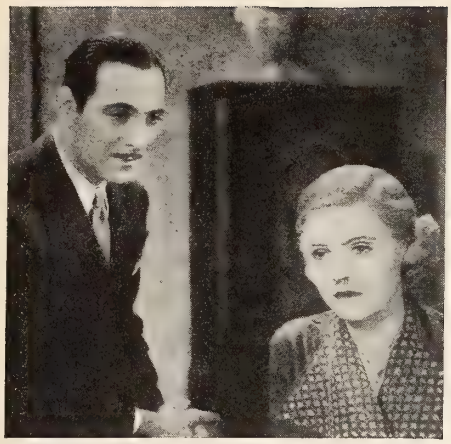
Jean could be attractive. I am positive. Despite her assertion that she is not pretty, Jean has uniform features and a fascinating dimple in each cheek. She uses no make-up. I am certain that the correct use of rouge and, perhaps, some lipstick would make her off-screen face more interesting. But, alas, she refuses to use artificial beautifiers.

Offering one man's opinion: I like Jean Muir. She has a charming sense of humor, particularly with regard to herself. No woman could condemn herself as Jean does unless she had a sense of humor. Miss Muir carries on an interesting conversation, although she may be rather too abrupt to please most men. For instance, two minutes after we met she said she disliked the tie I was wearing. Naturally, for a few minutes thereafter, I was annoyed; but because I was more or less obliged to remain long enough to secure my interview, I soon discovered that she is acutely frank, and that her remark about my tie was as honest as were the later censures of herself.

But do you see how her remark might have affected me had I been a "date?"

"There are millions of girls who are unpopular, just as I am," Jean commented.

OF course, they can make themselves interesting to men, provided they have more initiative than I possess. They should learn to flatter men, do the things they like to do, and dress snappily. Clever women can fool men into forgetting mere beauty.



"I am not clever, nor will I subdue my own ego enough to flatter men."

This self-defamation is not mere talk on Jean Muir's part. She is positive of her own unattractiveness. When she was signed to an optional contract by Warner Brothers, she told company executives in no adorned words that she thought they were crazy.

"I am not pretty. I have no sex appeal. I cannot act," she protested. "Why send me to Hollywood? You are wasting your time and money."

Nevertheless, the film officials persisted. They offered her a contract with a most substantial salary.

"I took it; I'm no fool," Jean laughingly told me. "Money is money, and I'm Jean Muir, the girl who thought she wouldn't be a success in pictures, in her latest release, "The White Cockatoo," with Ricardo Cortez. It's a wow.

not the girl to refuse it."

However, before she left New York, she told a chum, "I'll be back. This contract is for six months, with options. They'll never exercise the options; I'll be back in six months."

A year has elapsed and Jean Muir is still in Hollywood—and very much so, at that. She has appeared in a great many pictures, and in each she has scored an increasingly important hit—"As the Earth Turns," "Dr. Monica," "Desirable," "Gentlemen Are Born," and her most recent release, "The White Cockatoo."

The strange part of it all is that despite her success, Jean retains her inferiority complex. She still insists that she is neither pretty, talented, nor possessed of sex appeal. And although the cameras offer evidence to disprove her assertions, one indelible fact protrudes itself across her Hollywood history like an ugly, black scar:

Hollywood men are not trampling each other in a rush to make social engagements with Jean. In fact, as far as Hollywood men are concerned, Jean Muir still remains "the one-date girl."

So She Won't Talk, Huh!

(Continued from page 35)

ordered—or what the editor wanted.

"Tell us about your charities!" we said, And this time it was a command.

"Oh, I don't really do anything." Aha, she looked panicky. "And besides, I think that's been written about before."

It was then that we picked up our coat —or the best looking one on the bed—and departed. The gal wouldn't talk—so what? So go find people who would talk about her. There's nothing like having one's revenge, you know.

And what luck! We met a man from West Los Angeles who knew plenty about Miss Davies. So draw up your chairs and learn something.

"Have you heard," he asked, "about the Marion Davies Foundation? It's a children's clinic. Six thousand youngsters are taken care of there every year. There are surgeons and dentists and nurses and every sort of medical aid possible to ob-

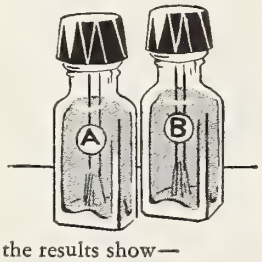
So Beautiful Now!

WHAT Yeast Foam Tablets did for Sue, they should do for you. A muddy, blotchy or pimply skin results from a disordered condition of your system—usually constipation or nervous fatigue. Both of these common ailments are often caused by the recently recognized shortage of vitamins B and G in the average diet. To correct this shortage, you need a food superrich in these health-building elements.

Yeast Foam Tablets supply these precious substances in great abundance. They are pure, pasteurized yeast — and pure yeast is the richest known food source of vitamins B and G. These tablets strengthen the digestive and intestinal organs, give tone and vigor to your nervous system. With the true causes of your trouble corrected, you enjoy new health and new beauty. Eruptions and blemishes vanish. Your complexion becomes clear and glowing. Your skin is the envy of men and women everywhere.

You can get Yeast Foam Tablets at any druggist's. The ten-day bottle costs 50c—only a few cents a day. Get a bottle now. Then watch the improvement in the way you look and feel! Northwestern Yeast Co., 1750 N. Ashland Ave., Chicago, Ill.

162 HANDS TALK IN 7-DAY MANICURE TEST



Test proves Chic Nail Polish equal to "salon" polishes costing 75c or more

This test was made with Chic, costing only 10c, on one hand and an expensive "salon" polish on the other. The polishes were supplied in plain unlabeled bottles, simply marked "A" and "B." The women testing them did not know which was which.

"A"—expensive "salon" polish

"B"—Chic Nail Polish

After 7 days' wear the results show—

81% find Chic equal to costly salon polishes or better . . . and two out of three of them say Chic is actually better and give definite reasons for saying so!

This test proved to them that Chic Nail Polish applied evenly and did not crack or peel . . . that Chic retained its color . . . that its luster was of lasting quality.

You can make this simple test yourself and discover a really fine polish for only 10c.

5 CHIC SHADES

CLEAR
PINK
CORAL
RUBY
DEEP

• ALSO •

Chic Creme Polish
Chic Cuticle Remover
Chic Polish Remover
Chic Oily Polish Remover

AT THE 10c STORES

tain, ready for sick and needy kids. Marion usually presents the youngsters' parents with a bill of ten cents for all this, just so they won't feel as if they're accepting charity. Yes, there's no angle she doesn't think of."

We remembered vaguely that we had heard of that foundling home and the one the star has set up in New York, too. The children who have benefitted by its aid go around singing her praises, although they have never actually seen their benefactress; that is, unless they've glimpsed her on the screen.

Next, we ran into a lad working at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio.

"Tell us something about Marion Davies," we begged. "She won't talk!"

"She won't, huh? Well, we'll fix that blonde for that!"

Ah, here was truly sumpin'.

"Have you ever heard about her Christmas party? The one she gives for about five thousand kids at the studio every year? Oh, boy! You should see those youngsters. Each one gets an enormous basket; you know, with a turkey in it and fruits and vegetables and candies. Well, enough stuff to last a month. Besides that, each may select a toy. And what toys! Bicycles for the boys and big dolls for the girls. Every doll talks, because when Marion was a kid she always wanted a doll that could—and never was able to afford one.

"Marion never appears at the party personally. She doesn't want the youngsters to feel indebted to her. But she has movies made of it and after they've all gone home, she has the picture developed and run off to see if the well-known 'enjoyable time was had by all' really was."

It sort of looks as if Miss Davies is a great girl, doesn't it? However, there might be something else to learn, so our sleuthing and research work again came into play.

"Did you hear about the newsboy who sold papers along Hollywood Boulevard?" a little movie extra asked. No, we hadn't.

WELL, he was crazy to get an education and was mad about books, that Marion—we all call her that—decided he should have an opportunity. So she sent him to a Prep School and when he graduated from there, she sent him to Military School. He's getting along fine. And then there was the office boy. But you heard about him, maybe?" No.

"Oh, that poor kid had cataracts on his eyes so that he was almost going blind. Marion sent him to a specialist who performed an operation and now he can see as well as anyone."

At any rate, if Marion Davies won't talk, it looks as if she is to be alone in her silence. Everybody else is not only willing, but anxious, to speak up.

The next man we looked up did odd jobs around the Soldiers' Home out Santa Monica way.

"Why there isn't a Memorial Day nor an Armistice Day that Miss Davies doesn't send cigarettes and books and mufflers to the soldiers," he volunteered "She's one fine young woman, she is."

And now for a little human interest story we came across quite by accident. It seems that Marion was giving a big party. Eleven o'clock rolled around and the guests were growing more than impatient, for their hostess had not yet appeared. About midnight she arrived and explained that she had been working to finish a picture. There were a couple of people in the room who felt that the alibi was not exactly true, but of course nothing was said.

The next morning one of the newspapers carried a yarn stating that Miss Davies had been four hours late to her own party and inferred that she was becoming so high hat that her guests were lucky that she put in an appearance at all.

Here is what actually happened. An old woman, the caretaker of Marion's studio bungalow, lay dying. She called for Marion and asked that the actress look after her little girl when she was gone. Of course this request was promptly granted. And then Miss Davies sat with the woman for hours—until she passed on, in fact. And when she went, it was with a blessing for Marion on her lips.

Marion Davies kept her word. She always does. The caretaker's little girl was put into a good school, then sent to college, and is now enjoying a trip abroad. When she returns to California, she is scheduled to take a business course so that she may be self-supporting and, therefore, independent.

Lack of space prevents our going on recounting Marion's good deeds. Suffice it to say that she is one of the kindest and most charitable girls in the world, who looks for neither recognition nor gratitude for the benefits she has performed, and indeed, won't even mention them. And so it is with real pleasure that we send this "get-even" message to Miss Davies:

"So you won't talk, huh? Well, we've got a story, anyway! Let that teach you a lesson!"

Should the Husband Pay the Bills? No, says Ginger

(Continued from page 38)

means anything, and I believe it does, it means the doing away with foolish pride about matters of money. Nowadays, it is the rule rather than the exception for a girl to have some sort of an occupation and, particularly in the last few years, it has become necessary for the woman of the house to be the provider. This does not mean that the man is lazy or irresponsible or deserving of less respect. It is merely a condition brought about by economic circumstances.

"I doubt if there is any place in the world where sex equality is more prevalent than in Hollywood. Women have earned their freedom.

"Hollywood is a colony of artists, all aiming for some sort of greatness. The life of anyone connected with the creative end of motion pictures is apart from old-time conventions, such as the rule that a man, in order to keep his standing, must pay the bills.

"You see," she explained, "in some of the happiest marriages in Hollywood the wife earns ten times the amount brought in by her husband whose work may be equally important but less lucrative.

"What should be done in cases like these? Should the wife hoard her money and live in a cottage when she wants a spacious house? Or should the pair realize that money is only important in so far as it supplies congenial surroundings?

"As women have developed their personalities they have increased their needs and they have equipped themselves to pay for these needs.

"In the old days, I understand, the wife was expected to cajole and wheedle her husband into buying her a new gown or a new hat. Nowadays she is able to buy her own wardrobe without any apologies, and you can't tell me that a husband is not pleased to find himself relieved of a stack of bills around the first of the month."

I sensed a fine feeling of fairness and justice in her reasoning. These expressions were not for the sake of creating an impression of bravado, of daring, of desire to be different. Here was an ideal, a principle which I felt the spirited young star would make every effort to preserve. I continued to probe deeper.

"But surely," I speculated, "there must be other reasons to justify your unconventional stand. Do you feel, as I assume you do, that both can work with greater abandon if money worries are dismissed?"

"Yes, that is exactly the way I feel," she answered eagerly, her eyes shining at the sudden kinship in our view. "When money problems are removed, no matter which side does the removing, a lot of useless worry and emotion are spared. Instead of fretting about the details of living, there is an opportunity to concentrate on a career.

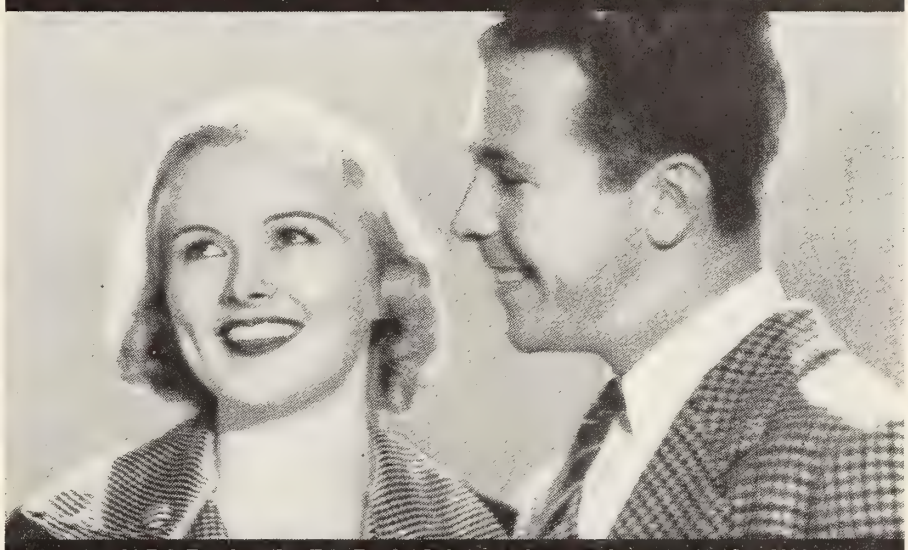
"Instead of puzzling over a budget of household accounts the husband and wife will find time and energy to discuss the play on which they are working, or some bit of acting, or music, or a book. They will develop themselves and deepen their common interests."

"But," I ventured, "wouldn't such a plan tend to rob a man of his ambitions? Wouldn't the lack of financial responsibilities weaken his morale?"

"No, indeed," she assured me. "The arrangement I have in mind does not tolerate the type of man who is ready to sit back and allow himself to be supported. Nobody wants that kind of man, anyway. In this sort of scheme the man must feel that his work is important and necessary and that he must share in proportion to his earnings the expenses of the partnership. In many instances the husband is laying the foundation for fame in later years.

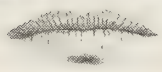
"For example," elucidated Ginger, "I know of a wife who is a contract player for a big producing company. She goes about her business earning fat pay checks, while her husband sits at home pecking at a typewriter. Some day his novels are going to be published, at least that is his belief, and there is no thought of inferiority because his wife brings home the bacon.

"Another somewhat similar case is that of a painter who occasionally gets a portrait assignment. But I know his yearly commissions would be insufficient to pay for his wife's wardrobe let alone the upkeep of two cars.



"Then there are unknown script writers whose education and intellect far more than compensate for their lack of fame and cash. More than one actress of my acquaintance owes a lot more to men of this caliber than she can possibly repay.

"The old idea of possession on the part of a man and being possessed on the part of a woman is vanishing.



"After all, we are individuals first and individuals we must remain however close the contacts brought about by love.

"I do not believe in free love, but I do believe in love being free and it is never more free than when equality, social and economic, is recognized."

"No other lips appealed to me!" SAID DICK POWELL

HERE ARE THE LIPS DICK POWELL SAW

UNTOUCHED Lips often look faded

PAINTED Lips look unnatural

TANGEE Intensifies your natural color

Popular young star tells why he chose Tangee Lips

• One girl wore no lipstick, one used Tangee, another used ordinary lipstick. We caught Dick Powell between scenes of "Flirtation Walk", a Warner Brothers picture . . . asked him which lips were most appealing . . . instantly, he picked the Tangee girl—the one with soft, rosy, natural lips.

• "I work with girls made up in grease paint all day long", Dick Powell explained. "In the studio you've got to have it. But off the lot, I don't like it—there's no romance in lips with that hard, coarse, painted look. No man finds them really attractive."

Millions of men feel exactly that way about painted lips. But Tangee isn't paint! It makes your lips soft and rosy and appealing, because it brings out your own natural coloring—without coating the lips with a smear of paint.

In the stick, Tangee looks orange. On your lips (because of the exclusive Tangee color-change principle) it changes to the one shade of blush rose most becoming to you. Get Tangee today. There are two sizes, 39 cents and $1.10. And if you'd like the special 4-piece Miracle Make-Up Set, containing Tangee Lipstick, Rouge Compact, Creme Rouge and Face Powder, send 10 cents with the coupon below. •

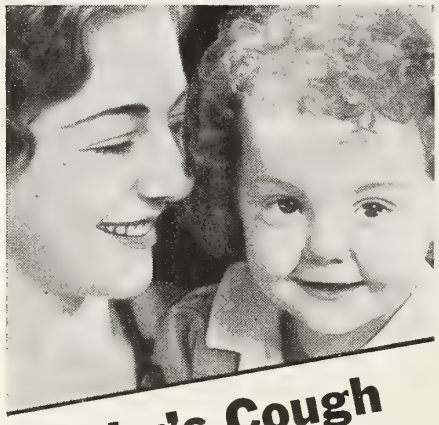
World's Most Famous Lipstick
TANGEE
ENDS THAT PAINTED LOOK

New FACE POWDER

★ 4-PIECE MIRACLE MAKE-UP SET

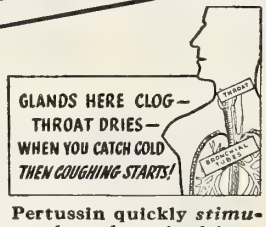
THE GEORGE W. LUFT COMPANY MM25
417 Fifth Avenue, New York City

Rush Miracle Make-Up Set of miniature Tangee Lipstick, Rouge Compact, Creme Rouge, Face Powder. I enclose 10¢ (stamps or coin).



Check Shade ☐ Flesh ☐ Rachel ☐ Light Rachel

Name _____ (Please Print)



Address _____

City _____ State _____

"LITTLE ANN COUGHED SO HARD," says Mrs. Betty Kammerling, of Columbus, O. "Doctor said 'Pertussin.' The first spoonful soothed the irritation; in 3 days Ann's cough was completely gone!"

"Baby's Cough disappeared in 3 days," by "MOIST-THROAT" METHOD!

Pertussin quickly stimulates these glands!

THIS extract of a famous medicinal herb stimulates the throat glands, restores throat's natural moisture quickly, safely! Doctors advise it.

When you cough, it's usually because your throat's moisture glands have clogged. Then your throat dries, because infection has changed the character of your glands' secretion. Thick mucus collects. First you feel a tickling—then you cough!

Stimulate your throat's moisture glands. Take PERTUSSIN! The very first spoonful increases the flow of natural moisture. Throat and bronchial tissues are lubricated, soothed. Sticky phlegm loosens. Germ-infected mucus is easily "raised" and cleared away. Relief!

Pertussin contains no harsh or injurious drugs. It is safe even for babies. Won't upset the stomach. "It is wonderful for coughs"—"I give it to my own children," say doctors. Get a bottle from your druggist and use it—freely—today!

DOCTORS EVERYWHERE have prescribed Pertussin for over 30 years. Try it!

PERTUSSIN

Tastes good, acts quickly and safely

I Chaperone the Crowd

(Continued from page 34)

was filled with interruptions, for each one in his turn would remember something he had left or thought he had left at home. Once Henry was certain he had forgotten his tuxedo and to make sure unpacked his suit-case on the sidewalk in a small town about thirty miles outside of Hollywood.

The others stood around, eagerly awaiting the outcome of the search because, knowing Henry, they were well aware that if the missing garment was not in the suit-case the entire caravan would travel back to Hollywood to get it. And a crowd of local residents gathered around and learned what the young-man-about-town carries in his suit-case when he goes on a week-end party. The tuxedo was there!

Grace Durkin thought that she had left her dog at home, which necessitated a telephone call to Hollywood; then it was discovered that her thoughtful brother, Trent, had the dog in the car with him. Jimmy Ellison had left the script of a play he was rehearsing in a friend's car and that meant another telephone call.

However, everyone arrived at La Jolla safely and in good humor. Jimmy Ellison and Gertrude Durkin got lost en route, just as sweethearts in any town in the United States would have gotten themselves lost, but they, too, reached their destination.

That night at the dance, sitting at a special table, they made an ideal little group. The girls looked sweet and the boys were charming. They autographed everything; they danced with the local society boys and girls; they were patient with all the people who had gone to school with their mothers and fathers; they had a grand time.

AT two o'clock in the morning, when the dance was over, they decided to go to Mexico and dutifully asked my permission. I knew that no amount of persuasion would stop them, so I borrowed a warm coat and prepared to go with them. When I saw the dismayed looks on their faces I could only conclude that they didn't want me to go along. Later they confessed that they were SO disappointed that I went willingly because they had planned to throw a blanket over my head, and force me to go.

When we started for Mexico they all piled into the first cars that were ready to start. There was no running off in couples, with the exception of Anita and Tom. They always ride together and are kiddingly called "the old married folks."

These boys and gals get along like one big happy family. They are fond of one another, in a purely platonic way in most cases. Pat Ellis' name has been linked frequently with Henry Willson's, but it's really because they like to dance together. And all those New York calls on Henry's telephone bill every month are to the girl he likes best of all—Paula Stone.

Each one knows the other's problems. They talk freely about their contracts, their salaries, and their worries, large and small. Utter frankness about everything is the keynote of their conversations. They hate being referred to as ingenues or juveniles. They don't want to appear young, rather, they like to be thought sophisticated. Although they get pleasure from youthful pursuits, they wish to discard an appearance of youth as quickly as possible. There was no chaperoning for me to do. They asked me to go with them because it was the thing to do and it would please their parents. They do a very good job of chaperoning themselves.

One thing I couldn't understand was why the juveniles in Hollywood act so awfully young. So I asked Tom Brown, who is one of the best known juveniles on the screen, the reason for it.

"Why is it, Tommy," I said, "that when you have a good, serious character role to play—something you can get your teeth into—you give a grand performance, but when you play a boy of seventeen or your own age, you make him act like a nine-year old?

AND why do you act so young off the screen? For instance, last night when you and Trent Durkin sneaked into our bedrooms and put burnt cork on the girls' faces. No normal eighteen-year-old boy would do a childish trick like that."

"Perhaps it's because I never was eighteen or nineteen years old," he replied seriously. "Perhaps I don't know how a boy that age would act because I never was that age. I was on the stage when I was seven. I associated with grown people; I was treated as an older person; I earned as much money as a grown person and I had the responsibilities of a grown person.

"Of course I went to school, but I attended a professional school, where the other children were all in the same position I was in. It was like associating with grown people. We had fun, of course. After all, we were children, but we had responsibilities and we felt them. We all looked forward to a career when other children our age were looking forward to college. Before I was grown up I felt that I was a man. There never was any in-between age for me. Perhaps that's the answer to your question—we can't really 'feel' kid roles and therefore we have a tendency to exaggerate them."

A majority of Hollywood's younger players have the same responsibilities and feel the same way about things in general that Tommy does, but they don't take life so seriously as he does. They call him "grandpa" and laugh about the time he wanted to play a certain part so much that he tried to raise a moustache to make himself look older. When the home-grown moustache refused to put in an appearance, he pasted one on and got the part.

These youngsters are all more or less their own bosses—not legally, of course. Most of them are the breadwinners of their families and they assume a protective attitude toward their parents. When our party was invited to spend another night at La Jolla and attend a dance at the Beach Club most of them telephoned home for permission to remain. Pat Ellis' father answered the telephone when she called.

"But Pat, you're working," he remonstrated. "You have to be on the set at eight in the morning. You should be home."

"I know, Alex," she giggled, "but every once in a while we have to do these things. Don't worry, I'll be at work on time."

She left the dance at eleven-thirty and was in bed at midnight. Next morning she arose at three-thirty and, with Trent Durkin, left at four in order to reach Warner's studio at eight o'clock. They were pretty sleepy but they hadn't forgotten their responsibilities.

Pat's life has been a pretty carefree one as far as finances are concerned, but one of hard training. Her stepfather, Alexander Leftwich, well known New York producer, trained her from childhood for a career. When he produced a show, Pat understudied every feminine part in the show. "And I had to be prepared to step into any role," Pat told me. "I had to be letter-perfect in every part. It was hard work but excellent training."

Pat was never treated as a child, her mother told me. "We always had lots of company at our house. Well known actors, singers, and writers were frequently our guests. She always heard adult conversation and has always seemed grown-up."

The three Durkins, who have been known to stage and picture audiences since they were babies, don't feel they are in the "kid" class, either. Orphaned two years ago they manage their own affairs, both social and financial, with a good deal of nonchalance. They have a guardian, whom they adore, but they always decide what they are going to do before they ask his advice. They talk everything over together. They have no secrets from one another and the way they conduct their lives would put many an older person to shame.

Recently, Junior Durkin, who made his name famous when he became a star over night in the New York play, "Courage," changed it to Trent. "He had to have a name sometime," Grace explained, "or people would think he was still 'Huckleberry Finn.'"

"Oh, yes," jeered Tom Brown, "he's a big character actor now and has to have a name." The name "Trent" was the result of the entire group's going into a huddle.

They love to play jokes on each other and when they do, the unfortunate one is kidded unmercifully. However, they never let an outsider in on it. If one receives an invitation or an opportunity for a publicity break or even a role in a picture, and can't accept it for one reason or another, he or she immediately telephones around to the bunch in an effort to pass it on to one in their own set.

Sharing is their motto. For example, Henry Willson has been ill and is not allowed to drive his car, so he employs a chauffeur, which he can't afford. Trent Durkin can't afford to buy a car, so he uses Henry's and pays the salary of the chauffeur. Nice coöperation, what?

At the Beach Club dance they discovered Tom Brown in the clutches of the "village vamp," a cute little trick from New York.

Fay Wray, as she arrived in New York on her way to London to appear in "Alias Bulldog Drummond" for Gaumont.

The thrill of smooth HANDS goes to his HEART!

What a thrill! He loves to touch excitingly smooth hands. So get that smoothness quickly and surely with Hinds Honey and Almond Cream—

Hinds does real good to the hands because it actually soaks the skin with rich fragrant balms. It is the truly penetrating liquid cream—it soothes dry or chapped hands—gives your hands that thrilling smoothness men adore!

Use Hinds on your hands after they've been in water, and at bedtime. It gives inexpensive beauty care —25¢ and 50¢ sizes at your drug store, 10¢ size at the dime store!

© Lehn & Fink, Inc., 1935

Hinds
Honey and Almond Cream

Griffin Manufacturing Co., Brooklyn, N. Y.

DON'T NEGLECT A COLD

Distressing chest colds and minor throat irritations—that so often lead to something serious—usually respond to the application of good old Musterole. Musterole brings relief naturally because it's a scientific "counter-irritant"— NOT just a salve. It penetrates and stimulates circulation, helps to draw out congestion and pain. Recommended by many doctors and nurses—used by millions for 25 years. Three kinds: Regular Strength, Children's (mild), and Extra Strong, 40¢ each. All druggists. Hear "Voice of Experience"—Columbia network. See your newspapers.

MUSTEROLE
BETTER THAN A MUSTARD PLASTER
NRA CODE

They swooped down on him like an army attack and rescued him for Anita, who was very annoyed because she was quite interested in one of the local boys at the moment. They were willing to fight for their Anita, but they do wish that "just once she would wear a spotty dress or get one hair out of place."

It was with a feeling of regret that we started home. Everyone was happy. There had been no quarrels. I decided that these boys and girls are just as normal, just as nice as any boys and girls their age. It's true, they don't have taffy-pulls to pass away a dull evening but neither do other young people their age in this advanced year of 1935. They do snatch at any opportunity for fun (like putting burnt cork on the girls' faces), because in their entire lives they haven't had much "young" fun. Responsibilities that belong to older people have been heaped on their immature shoulders. They had to be old before they had a chance to be young. They had no playtime. Now that success has come to many of them, and with it leisure and money, they try to be young—to crowd as much fun and play as possible into every leisure hour. And sometimes, if they seem to be "putting it on" a little, as their critics have said, what does it matter?

They have had adulation and flattery all their lives but they know it doesn't mean a thing, so it doesn't affect them. They have seen all kinds of life in their work, and consequently in their playtime they are remarkably clean-minded. They are true sophisticates.

All these things I learned, when I was a chaperone.

Marlene Answers All Your Qustions

(Continued from page 29)

"There are too many stars for one to be a novelty. Nor do they try to disturb my home life. No one ever attempts to climb over my walls, to break into my house. A few children come and ask for autographs, but that is no nuisance. I think all this talk of lack of privacy is odd. I notice it only when I am away from Hollywood. Then everyone stares and I am scared. I am eager to get back here where it is quiet and peaceful."

Rudolph Sieber, Marlene's director husband, has decided to stay in Hollywood permanently. That is, as long as his wife is fated to remain. Their four-year separation, which was punctuated by twice-a-year visits, is thus over.

"I was only away from my little girl for the first six months I was here. I didn't bring her from Germany because I was very uncertain. I didn't know whether I was to succeed here. It was for her own good that she stayed at home until I learned. Now she is growing up to be very American. I think that personality is determined when one is very young. I was never allowed to express any emotion in my face, to show dislike for anything. That is why I couldn't act all over the set. I would be ashamed to be unrestrained. But Maria is being raised to have freedom."

Hollywood plays such jokes on ambitious women. Marlene has escaped the town's capricious whims. She has had no terrific disillusionment because she never was lured into a worship for fame.

"I always had an admiration for the screen. But I never dreamed of becoming a star," she said. "Even when I first came to Hollywood it was not the fame and the money which attracted me. I came to work with Mr. Von Sternberg."

"But doesn't the money mean a lot to you?" I probed.

"No. Half of what I earn goes for income tax. I could accumulate more in Europe. Or I could go on the radio here and make enough in a year so I should never need to work again."

"The applause, the flattery, do they please you?"

NO," she replied. "I am not proud of being a film star! I see no reason to be. Compared to important professions this, that I am doing, is so unimportant. Even in comparison to the stage this work of mine falls far short. On the stage you must struggle for years before you can advance to a lead. In pictures, stars are made overnight because of their beauty. There is a haste and a lack of dignity to film stardom. I do not mean to criticize. There are many stars here who have great talent. I merely say that from my own standpoint I am not at all proud because I have become a film star."

Such modesty had never come my way from a Hollywood lady. So I asked:

"But what makes all this worth while to you then?"

"The sheer joy of acting, of creating a characterization, of being associated with Mr. Von Sternberg."

"And," I reiterated, "have you no desire to stand on your own feet, to work with another director? A fine actress should be as fine under any guidance, shouldn't she?"

"Certainly she should. But I do not understand why I must prove I am not an automaton. As I said, if I find an interesting story I will do it with someone else. Then I shall return to Mr. Von Sternberg's direction."

"And the stage . . .?"

"No. I haven't command enough of English to act on the stage in this country. Perhaps some day again in Europe. As for the screen, when there are no more plots which are appealing, then I will stop.

"I have never been the kind who could mix with many people, so I have few close acquaintances in Hollywood. In Berlin I had three or four friends. Does anyone really have more? Here I go straight home from the studio. I am perfectly content to have just a few friends. I do not want any more. There isn't time. Between my home and my work I am kept busy."

"But how can you develop your personality if you don't notice what others are doing and adapt yourself in various ways to suit those others?"

"I said I thought one's personality was determined when young. I don't believe in making one's self over. I have never tried to please everyone. If it is someone I respect highly I pay attention. But I don't want to make other people over, either. And as for developing, I have never endeavored to consciously improve myself. That is confusing. I mean, of course, that I do my best to be my best. But I simply trust to life to mold my personality."

I was becoming more and more intrigued with this amazing woman. So feminine is she, and yet so thoroughly brave in her convictions. Every article about her has been an attempt to reveal how she has been changed by Hollywood. They've missed the point. Marlene has been perfectly poised. It's the rest who have been doing the flustering.

But if her replies to my pertinent questions have astonished you, wait until you hear her sum up these four film years in America. I asked her what she considers her accomplishments to date.

"I have a child," she said, without a second's pause. There was no mention of Hollywood peaks! I must have looked startled for she then added, "And I have made a few people happy. That is all."

"But your career!" I exclaimed, so used to listening to the cinema stars chatter on and on endlessly, egotistically.

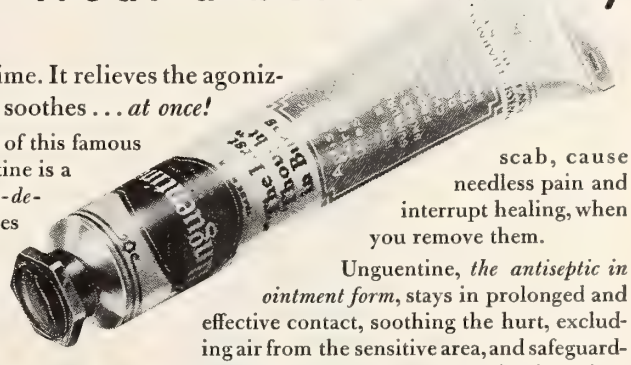
"Ah," she declared, "there is so much more in life for me. Earning the respect of the people I love, carrying out my duties to them, bringing up my child . . ."

You have read numberless tales about Marlene. No one had ever gone to her and frankly asked for her own explanations. I'm glad I did because now she seems not a high-hat mystery, but a normal, eager, and loyal woman. Four years have brought overwhelming changes to Hollywood. But none to the tranquil, tantalizing Dietrich.

Even if she hadn't behaved so intelligently during my twenty minutes with her, I'd have approved of her. She is so marvelously beautiful.

Do you suppose she has ever delved into Lord Chesterfield's tomes? Remember, he advised, "address yourself to the senses if you would please; dazzle the eyes, soothe and flatter the ears of mankind, engage their hearts and let their reason do its worst against you."

I am sure of few things in this perplexing world, but one of my certainties now is that none of the slams on Marlene could have been written by a man who has met her!



Mr. Arliss is back from London after completing "The Iron Duke" for Gaumont British.

agony ends

Pain stops...and healing begins when you treat a burn this way

Unguentine wastes no time. It relieves the agonizing pain . . . quickly! It soothes . . . at once!

But that is only one virtue of this famous first-aid necessity. Unguentine is a trustworthy, effective, germ-destroying antiseptic for all types of skin injuries. Hospitals use it. So do doctors and first-aid nurses in industrial plants. It is the ideal first-aid dressing—because it not only allays pain but stays on the job continuously to safeguard against infection.

FIRST THOUGHT IN FIRST AID

For burns, scalds, cuts, scrapes, scratches, pimples, irritations, any skin injury. Unguentine is the first thought of millions of people in first aid. It is the all-purpose antiseptic. It will not smart or sting. It will not stain the skin. Nor will Unguentine dressings grow into the wound, stick to the scab, cause needless pain and interrupt healing, when you remove them.

Unguentine, the antiseptic in ointment form, stays in prolonged and effective contact, soothing the hurt, excluding air from the sensitive area, and safeguarding against infection and dread re-infection.

CONTAINS PARAHYDRECIN

Unguentine is reliably antiseptic because it contains powerful antiseptic ingredients, notably, Parahydrecin. This remarkable substance is destructive to germs in a dilution as great as 1 part to 10,000 parts yet does not harm or irritate human or animal tissue. Parahydrecin, the discovery of the Norwich laboratories, is exclusively confined to Norwich products: Unguentine, Norforms and Norwich Nose Drops. No other products contain it. Remember that.

Unguentine

The Norwich Pharmacal Company, makers of Unguentine offer a variety of other medicine cabinet necessities bearing the famous Norwich seal. They are of known high standard and uniformity.

1885 Fiftieth Norwich Anniversary 1935

FIFTY YEARS IN THE SERVICE OF BETTER HEALTH

HOW MANY Eyelids has a Dog?

■ A dog has three eyelids—the third, an inner lid with which all animals are provided for "super-protection."

In a very real sense, Campana's Italian Balm gives to your skin the same kind of super-protection. This Original Skin Softener is guaranteed to banish dry, rough, red and chapped skin more quickly than anything you have ever used before.

Why not start using Italian Balm today and get the genuine kind of skin protection that has made Italian Balm the largest selling skin protector in Canada (for over 40 years)—and in thousands of cities in the United States? Italian Balm costs less than ½c a day to use liberally. Get your Vanity Gift Bottle now. Use the coupon. (At drug and department stores—10c, 35c, 60c and $1.00 in bottles—25c in tubes.)

Now also in tubes, 25c

Campana's
Italian Balm
THE ORIGINAL SKIN SOFTENER

Free CAMPANA SALES CO., 3902 Lincoln Highway, Batavia, Illinois.
Gentlemen: Please send me VANITY SIZE bottle of Campana's Italian Balm—FREE and postpaid.
Name_____
Address_____
City_____ State_____
If you live in Canada send your request to Campana Corp., Ltd., MM-2 Caledonia Road, Toronto, Ontario.

Men . . . !

(Continued from page 33)

no mistake."

John returned. "Sorry, sir," he said. "I couldn't find your pipe. It wasn't in the desk drawer, and I didn't like to rummage."

The director dropped his hand into his pocket and brought his pipe forth.

"You're right," he said with a grin, looking a little guilty. "Thanks anyway, old man."

He turned to his company and announced: "Luncheon recess. Be back at one-thirty, please!"

He watched the girl and John, arm in arm, going toward her car which was parked under the false front mountains. And there was something about them so young, so poignant, that he remembered a spring long lost and grew a little sad.

"Get a look at that girl's eyes," he told his assistant. "Listen to her voice. Soft, eh?" Then, realizing he was spilling over a bit, he turned gruff. "It's a damn shame there's no camera or mike trained on them," he said. "That's what it is, a damn, wasteful shame."

AND now we hearken to the experiences of the Girl of the Orchids.

She looks as though she might think babies were found in cabbage patches. Her hair is a pale gold fluff. But in her eyes, dark blue, there's wisdom, an early wisdom.

She's been in the theatre and in pictures since her early 'teens, you see, and she's smart. She has profited by all the things she's seen and read and heard. And she has the knack of handling any situation in which she finds herself, without seeming to handle it at all.

Under all circumstances, knowing her as I do, I'd expect her to have sympathy and understanding. It's curious how knowledge and experience coming to some girls in a rush turns them hard. And coming to other girls in a rush it makes them warmly wise, charmingly capable.

This girl is one made wise and capable. Therefore, to one love scene at any rate, she was able to bring a certain quality which made it the talk of Hollywood. And a trial to the young man who loves her dearly.

Hollywood's a funny place. You'd expect it to be blasé and sated. Indifferent really. But nowhere on earth is there a town quicker with understanding and appreciation. Or, for that matter, with criticism and prejudice.

The leading man in this love scene came to motion pictures after he had found great popularity. Learning she was to play with him, the Girl of the Orchids had been apprehensive. She felt he might be high-hat and pretentious. Difficult. His success had come to him quickly enough to turn his head. No doubt of that.

However, he proved a pleasant surprise. He was shy, actually shy. Unsophisticated and sensitive, too. He looked so scrubbed and brushed and shiny clean that she had no feeling about the intimate scenes they would play together.

The picture progressed. They came to the love interest and finally to the big love scene itself. This scene was laid in the garden of an inn, an inn somewhere in Europe. To add romance to the setting, one of the stage-hands was relegated to the catwalk, a narrow walk erected around the sides of a set, so that, at appropriate moments, he might shake down blossoms of white silk from a drooping wisteria vine.

THE lights and the microphones were set up. Behind the camera, mounted on its rubber-tired dolly, was the inevitable camp-chair line-up of director, assistant director, 'script girl, and several members of the company not working in this particular scene.

The leading man came on the set and his eyes went hunting for the Girl of the Orchids. He found her at last standing in the inn doorway and he went directly to her.

"Hello, there," she said. "It's a pity you had to miss the rushes last night. You were splendid in them. You would have delighted your own heart."

She knew the need you feel for encouragement when you are making your first picture. She hadn't made her first picture so long ago that she had forgotten.

His face brightened. "Was I? Thanks, loads! I'm glad to hear that."

She had her make-up box propped on a ledge before her. She held it there with her weight against it and powdered her face smoothly over its thin layer of grease-paint.

"We're doing the love scene this morning, I believe," he said, plainly embarrassed. "And, er . . . well, I wondered how you wanted me to—to kiss you."

The girl laughed. "Any way you like," she told him easily. "A long one. Or a short one."

He was utterly relieved. "I'm new at this sort of thing. And I want the scene to have emotion, of course, but I don't want to do anything that would . . . er . . ."

"You couldn't," she told him. And she meant it.

"Ready?" the director called.

The girl snapped her make-up box shut and the leading man went over to his position under the vines.

"You run to him," the director told the girl, rehearsing the action described in the 'script. "This isn't a long sequence, you know, so we've got to make every moment count. We've got to cram in the emotion.

"You can't wait to reach him. You seem to fling yourself across that little distance."

The girl nodded. She knew. Only too well. It was like that with her when she saw the young man she loved.

The director turned to the leading man. "You see her coming. You move a few steps forward. Your arms open. They close around her. You kiss. Okeh, let's try it!"

They tried it. The Girl of the Orchids ran to the young man standing there so straight and eager under the wisteria flowers and, as the director had suggested, she seemed to fling herself across that little distance. The leading man moved forward to meet her. His arms closed around her.

However, his effort to make every moment count, to cram in the emotion, didn't end there. In a minute he held her a little from him, a little to one side. His hands went caressing her. Intimately. The way no hero caresses a heroine on the screen, whatever heroes may do in reality.

The girl couldn't believe this was happening. She had heard stories of actors with exploring hands but it was incredible to her that this shy young man was taking advantage of the scene to make personal advances.

"We'll try it again," the director called. There was a curious note in his voice, as if he had noticed, too. Indeed, he couldn't have helped it.

They did it over again, and the same thing happened. One property man, an old hand in the studios, wiped an involuntary grin from his face. And there was an unmistakable snicker from the lad relegated to shake down silken petals at opportune moments.

"We'll try it again," the director said. This time he didn't even try to curb the amusement in his voice.

They did it still another time. And still another time the young man proceeded to act the way no hero on the screen may act.

The girl went over to the director. Under cover of having to sit down to remove her slipper she talked to him.

"This is happening, isn't it?" she asked. She wasn't offended. For obviously there was no intent on the leading man's part to be unpleasant or unduly familiar.

"It's happening all right," the director agreed. Like the girl he found it difficult to grasp any sense of reality.

WHAT can we do?" she asked. "You can't photograph it that way, that much is sure. And it would be a pity to hurt his feelings. He's so nice."

"Beat it for a few minutes," the director advised. "I'll talk to him."

The Girl of the Orchids disappeared gladly.

Almost immediately, everybody on that set, realizing something was in the wind between the director and the leading man, became very busy, completely absorbed by some job. There's a lot of hullabuloo about professional jealousy and not nearly enough mention of the grand fraternity you so often find on a set.

"Look," the director began when he'd brought the leading man over beside him on a pretext, "that, that massaging bit . . . You'll have to cut that out."

He had decided not to beat around any bushes, to say what he had to say frankly, to kid a little.

The leading man looked wretched. "I wondered," he admitted. "I don't mind telling you I've been dreading this—this scene. I haven't known what to do. You see, they had me up in the front office last night talking about my next picture. They're pleased about the exhibitors' in-

Anna Sten and an armful of fluff. Cute?

If a very small shoulder carries a chip . . .

DEFIANT . . . cross as a bear . . . when your child has "days" like this, take warning!

You may think it is "just a passing mood." But all too often there's a physical cause for a child's naughtiness. And usually it is simply —constipation.

Give a Child's Laxative

Or perhaps your child has sour stomach. Maybe she is catching cold. In any event it is a wise precaution to give her a laxative. Not an adult laxative which may cause her griping pain, or leave her more upset than before . . . but a child's laxative. Give her Fletcher's Castoria!

Fletcher's Castoria is made especially for children—from babyhood to 11 years. It is safe—contains no harsh purgatives, no narcotics. It is gentle. It is effective. And it has a pleasant taste, so that children take it without a struggle . . . actually enjoy taking it!

Ask your doctor

Next time you see your doctor for your child's regular health examination, ask him about Fletcher's Castoria. He will assure you that Fletcher's Castoria contains only such ingredients as are suitable for a child's system.

Buy a bottle of Fletcher's Castoria tonight. (If you're thrifty you'll buy the family-size bottle.) Keep it handy, always, for relieving colic due to gas, diarrhea due to improper diet, sour stomach, flatulence and constipation. And give it as a first aid at the first sign of a cold. The signature Chas. H. Fletcher is always right on the carton.

Roxy and his Gang — Every Saturday night your radio is the ticket window to a grand new show—musical surprises presented by that master showman—Roxy. Tune in this Saturday. Let the children listen, too. Columbia Broadcasting System—8 o'clock E.S.T.

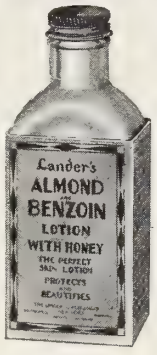
Chas. H. Fletcher

CASTORIA



The Children's Laxative

from babyhood to 11 years

· · · no finer, purer toiletries, at any price · than LANDER's

for a beautiful skin

If you had a MILLION, and could afford the most expensive toiletries, you could not buy a finer, purer skin lotion! Softens, smoothes, beautifies. Banishes red, rough skin.

10¢
AT ALL 10c STORES

for hand beauty

Quick, sure, economical! This unusually large bottle contains the beauty-secret of a master chemist. You'll find nothing superior, for chasing "dishpan hands" and keeping the skin youthfully soft and inviting.

10¢
AT ALL 10c STORES

Lander, inc.
NEW YORK MEMPHIS BINGHAMTON

NEW EASY WAY 10¢ JUSTRITE PUSH-CLIP

KEEP WIRES OFF FLOOR (LAMPS AND RADIO)
A neat job instantly. No damage to woodwork. No tools needed. Set of eight colored clips to match your cords, 10c. At Kresge's

AMAZING TYPEWRITER BARGAIN

New Remington Portable only 10c a day

10-DAY FREE TRIAL OFFER
Only 10c a day buys this latest model machine. Not a used or rebuilt typewriter. Not an incomplete machine. A beautiful brand new regulation Remington Portable. Standard 4-row keyboard; standard width carriage; margin release on keyboard; back spacer; automatic ribbon reverse; every essential feature found in standard typewriters. Carrying case free. Lowest prices in history . . . absolutely the biggest value ever offered! Try it in your home or office 10 days free. If you do not agree that it is the finest portable at any price return it at our expense. Don't delay. We pay cost of shipment direct from the factory to you. You save on the purchase price, you don't risk a cent. Write now!

FREE TYPEWRITER COURSE
Write Remington Rand Inc., Dept. 140-2, Buffalo, N.Y.

terest in me. But they advised me to get more 'umph' in my love scenes."

"Umph!" said the director. "Well, they usually know what they're talking about up there in the front office, all reports and jokes to the contrary. They've managed to keep their Rolls Royces all through this depression, I've noticed. And that means they're shrewd. Undoubtedly they're right about the need for 'umph'. But you're wrong, feller, about the way you're getting it."

A few minutes later the director met the Girl of the Orchids outside the set to explain to her what had happened.

"Poor darling," she said sympathetically. "This means so much to him, his first picture . . . and they have him so confused."

They rehearsed the scene again. And the girl gave it everything she had. Perhaps she was remembering her eagerness and uncertainty as a novice. Perhaps, terribly in love, she felt closer and more sympathetic to everyone, her leading man included. Or perhaps, in his quandary, he appealed to her maternal instinct. It's always so futile to attempt to analyze anyone's reactions.

In any event she brought emotion to that scene. And emotion photographs.

She ran to that young man so impetuously, so swiftly, that he had to catch her up in his arms to save her from falling. And in doing this he somehow caught the tempo that scene should have and carried through with it.

Still in his arms the Girl of the Orchids threw back her lovely golden head to laugh up into his face. And for one small second, before his mouth closed on hers, he seemed lost in the tender blue of her eyes.

Dictionaries have yet to include a definition of "umph." However, if "umph" means desire and a dash of hotcha wrapped up in something beautiful and spiritual, and I think it does, that scene had "umph." Lots of it.

A few weeks later when the picture was previewed at a local theatre the film colony turned out to see it. Hollywood also is a curious town. And everyone wanted to see the handsome young leading man recruited with his bright fame. They were agreed he was a potential star, a good bet. But, leaving the theatre, it was the love scene they talked about. They said it had something poignant and tender about it. They marvelled at its charming youth.

It was the love scene the Girl of the Orchids and her beau talked about, too. Or, perhaps, it would be more exact to say it was the love scene the girl's beau talked about.

They left the theatre by a side exit to avoid the autograph hunters who crowd around the marquee after a preview. And he headed his Ford roadster for their favorite Drive-In. (A Drive-In, for the benefit of those who lack these excellent enterprises in their home towns, is a large stand built in the center of a corner lot. Cars pull up to it and pretty waitresses come out to clamp trays on the car's sides and to take orders for anything from hamburgers to turkey and cranberry sauce).

"Did you like it?" the girl asked.

"It's a very nice picture," he granted, without enthusiasm.

"Like him?" she wanted to know.

"Sure," even less enthusiastically, if possible. "He's all right. If you like that type. You do. Apparently!"

She giggled. The way girls do when the young man, in trying not to show how much he cares, proceeds to give himself away completely.

"I do like that type," she said. Then her voice dropped. She moved closer to his side. The little quill in her rakish hat tickled his ear. "But there's another type I like better. Much better. Dark curly hair goes with it."

As I said in the beginning, she's a girl able to handle any situation in which she finds herself. Better than ably. Admirably!

Average—But Wonderful

(Continued from page 37)

season's débutantes and become a substantial citizen of commerce? What had I? Well, my heart, I guess. My imagination which rode me and drew blood. I didn't pose in front of mirrors as a youngster. I did not inflate the family pride by reciting 'pieces.' But I did read omniverously. I did live in a fantastical world of my own where I encountered strange adventures and met exciting people. I knew that somehow I must continue these adventures, must meet the glamorous people of the world in flesh and blood. And I went to the theatre all of the time, with every scrap of time and every piece of money I had. I saw Sir Henry Irving do "Rip Van Winkle" and I have never forgotten it. I think I knew, then."

Columbia Pictures' studio biography of Walter Connolly says, "As versatile an actor as ever trod the boards, can play any character part no matter how young or old, no matter what nationality, no matter what walk of life. He thinks nothing of being a senile watchman ("Man's Castle") in the morning, a prosperous business man ("It Happened One Night") in the afternoon, and a suave European ("Lady For A Day") at night, and makes each performance ring with authenticity . . ."

I reminded Mr. Connolly of this deserved encomium. He said, "We'll waive the question of whether that is flattery or truth. But this is the truth: I went on the stage in order to play those parts. And others. As many others as possible.

"It was because I so desperately wanted to be all men rather than one man that I left my 'cage' at the bank. It was because I couldn't tolerate the idea of being Walter Connolly, bank clerk, all of my days that I—well that I made my professional début in Norfolk, Virginia, in 'Classmates,' in 1909. Two years later I was on Broadway in the revival of 'The Shepherd King,' starring Wright Lorimer. And for twenty-two years I never left Broadway again save for some summer stock.

"Matter of fact," Mr. Connolly chuckled (and he does chuckle—all nice men do), I really picked the job at the bank because banking hours are such that I had time off for amateur theatricals.

"I simply could not bear monotony, that's all. Psychologists would call it an escape. So it was. I felt as though dust would accumulate on me if I stayed where I was. I rose to my feet and shook myself. I wanted variety. And if you ask me what gift of all gifts my years on the stage have given me I would say just that —variety.

"The stage and the screen have enabled me to be many hundreds of persons in my own person. I do not have to get dog-tired of being Walter Connolly, because I am Walter Connolly for so small a part of the time.

"But best of all, most important of all, I have been able to meet and to know most of the vital persons of my generation. Musicians, sculptors, statesmen, as well as actors and actresses.

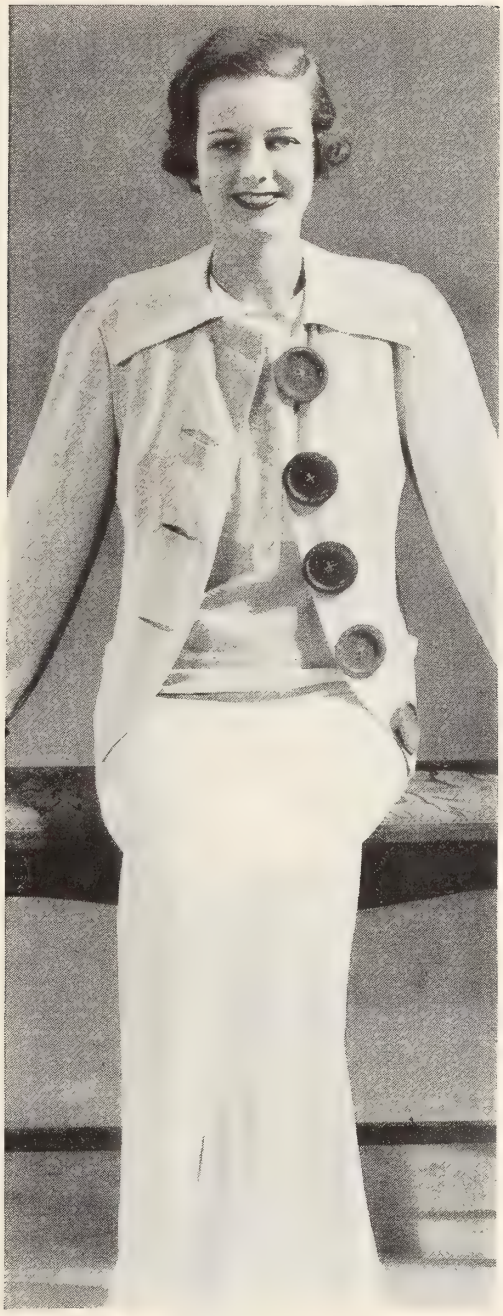
"And I could not have known these people if I had not been in the theatre. A millionaire may be able to order a 'command performance,' that is true, and entertain the great of the earth. But he doesn't really know them. Only when you are doing some form of creative work yourself can you know others in similar fields. I think about the finest thing life has given me is knowing those others.

"I have worked with Gilbert Miller, Jed Harris and George M. Cohan. I knew Charles Frohman, the greatest showman of them all. I have worked with Helen Hayes, Margaret Anglin, Pauline Lord and innumerable others. I have known the Barrymores, Sothern, Marlowe, John Drew, Leo Dietrichstein and Minnie Maddern Fiske. I have known Broadway in 'The Affairs of Anatole,' 'Possession,' 'Way Down East,' 'The Late Christopher Bean,' and other plays too many to list here. (And I remember an old slogan of Broadway which said that Connolly was always in demand with the theatrical impresarios and feminine stars because "he always saved a bad play and bettered a good one.")

"I was not off Broadway for twenty-two years," Mr. Connolly was saying. "However, I did take time off to make one picture in 1917, 'The Soldier's Oath,' with William Farnum. I hope, some day, to be able to forget it. The only other interlude was during the World War when I joined the 13th Division of the Marine Corps under Major General Smedley Butler.

"This life of the theatre offers rich gifts and highly colored adventure. And it's a happy life, too. Actors may be down, very far down, but they are never out. You can go to any lot in Hollywood today and talk to dozens of old-timers on whom the last curtain has gone down and they never know it. Because there is always hope in the heart of the actor. No actor ever believes that he is through.

"Also, an actor is safer than a business



A scene from Walter Connolly's latest picture, "White Lies," with Victor Jory and Fay Wray.

"I keep my teeth brilliantly white for only . . .

$1 A YEAR!"

Actual Size
Ten Cents

"I HAVE found a marvelous toothpaste that costs only 10¢ for a tube as big as the regular 25¢ size—and it lasts me more than a month!" You can have teeth so white that they sparkle and save up to $5 a year by merely asking for Kay Milk of Magnesia Toothpaste at any Kresge store. It is the choice of hundreds of thousands who want just the kind of tooth protection that Kay Toothpaste gives.

Containing over 50% milk of magnesia, Kay Toothpaste fights the acid that is so ruinous to brilliant teeth. Leading dental books agree that tooth decay begins with acidity. Kay proves that a toothpaste need not be expensive to keep teeth clean and sparkling. No toothpaste contains finer cleansing and polishing ingredients, free from grit, than Kay.

If you have been waiting for cut-rate toothpaste sales, you need wait no longer. Kay Toothpaste, in a tube as large as the ordinary 25¢ size, is only 10¢ at any time in any Kresge store. You can also buy Kay Toothpaste in a tube more than double the 10¢ size for only 20¢. Ask for it by name; identify it by the red, white and black tube, and remember that Kay Toothpaste is for sale only in Kresge stores.

A suitor's ever on my arm when F-O polishes my charm

F-O polish does not crack or peel . . . is made in five lovely shades . . . retains its original charming color until removed . . .

At all 10c stores . . . Cuticle Remover . . . Creme Polish . . . Polish Remover Oily Polish Remover . . .

Ft. Orange Chemical Co., Albany, N. Y.

TAP DANCING

LEARN AT HOME NEW EASY WAY. Professional Stage Method. Surprise and entertain your friends. Be popular, earn extra money, develop hidden talent. No music or experience needed. Begin dancing first day. Beginner's fundamentals and complete Professional Tap Dance included. Equal to $40 instruction. Easy way to reduce or build up figure. For ladies or men. Send only $3.75 money order for Complete 17-Lesson Course. Or send no money (if in U. S.) and pay postman $3.98 on delivery. No more to pay. Try 5 days. If not delighted, money refunded. Limbering exercises Free if you enroll now. THORNTON DANCE STUDIOS 827 Irving Park Blvd., Suite 103 Chicago, Ill.

Remove that FAT

Be adorably slim!

Money-back guarantee

Photo of myself after losing 28 lbs. and reducing 4½ inches.

Feminine attractiveness demands the fascinating, youthful lines of a graceful, slim figure—with firm, rounded, uplifted contours, instead of sagging, unbecoming flesh.

Hundreds of women have reduced with my famous Slimcream Method—and reduced just where they wanted, safely, quickly, surely. I myself, reduced my chestline by 4½ inches and my weight 28 lbs. in 28 days.

J. A. writes, "I was 37 inches (across the chest). Here is the miracle your Slimcream has worked for me. I have actually taken 5 inches off. I am overjoyed."

The Slimcream treatment is so entirely effective, so easy to use, and so beneficial that I unhesitatingly offer to return your money if you have not reduced your figure both in pounds and inches in 14 days. What could be fairer than that!

Decide NOW to achieve the figure of your heart's desire. Send $1.00 today for the full 30-day treatment.

FREE Send $1.00 for my Slimcream treatment NOW, and I will send you entirely free, my world-famous, regular $1.00 beauty treatment, with a gold mine of priceless beauty secrets. This offer is limited, so SEND TODAY. Add 25c for foreign countries.

DAISY STEBBING, Dept. MM-1, Forest Hills, New York

I enclose $1. Please send immediately postpaid in plain package your Guaranteed Slimcream treatment. I understand that if I have not reduced both in pounds and inches in 14 days, you will cheerfully refund my money. Send also the special free Beauty Treatment.

Name.....

Address.....

City.....

man. He is a one-man concern. If he goes down to defeat, he doesn't take a corporation with him or stockholders or investors. His failure, as well as his success, is his own. That's why there are so many suicides among big business men. When they go down, they usually drag their friends and associates with them. They could take it for themselves. They can't take it for the others.

"And now I have come to Hollywood, the most dramatic and colorful place in the world. A place about which the real story has never been written. Because the real story is not a daily account of the various girls Lyle Talbot lunches with or whether or not Joan Crawford and Franchot Tone are exchanging gardenias. In an industry so vast, so vital, so mechanically miraculous, it seems a pity to stress such trivia. It would be a tremendous job, the real story of Hollywood. My 'other ambition' has always been to write and I spend most of my spare time at my desk.

"Hollywood is a place of terrific extremes. Of unimaginable ironies. Imagine a place where they allow Tod Sloan, who once rode for kings and is conceded the fastest jockey in the world, to judge turtle races. Turtles, the slowest animals in the world!

"If I had not chosen the stage (it didn't choose me), I would have missed meeting my wife. And today, after fourteen years of marriage, that remains for me a painfully unpleasant thing to contemplate."

Mr. Connolly's wife is, you know, Netta Harrigan, daughter of the famous vaudeville team of Harrigan and Hart.

"We were playing together on Broadway when we met," Mr. Connolly told me. "I happened to know that she was supposed—doctor's orders—to drink a bottle of milk before every performance. She always forgot and so I undertook to remember for her. With the result that I would bring the milk to her dressing-room every evening and stand by, patiently, while she drank it. It suddenly occurred to me that it was a very husband-like patience I was manifesting and also that I had never seen a lovelier sight than Netta drinking milk. I still think," chuckled Walter Connolly, "that the loveliest sight I have seen is Netta drinking milk."

The hands of Mr. Connolly's clock were speeding to the midnight hour. I made polite gestures, signifying my immediate departure.

"No, don't go," Mr. Connolly said, "I never go to bed until two-thirty, even when I am by myself. I never got up before noon until I came to Hollywood. They're theatre hours, you know, and they have become my hours. I'll never get over it. In New York I liked to play poker with newspaper men and talk the hours away with Alexander Woollcott, Rollin Kirby, Odd McIntyre and other cronies.

"Let's see, I was just about to say that if I had not come to Hollywood I would have missed being a part of what I believe is destined to become the greatest art the world has ever known. If it misses, it is its own fault. The theatre will go on forever. Because the theatre is tangled up in the roots of our being. It has been since the beginning of time and it will be until the end.

"But the capacities and potentialities of the screen are limitless. There are no boundary lines. There is nothing it cannot do, no resources it cannot command, no artist it cannot, or has not persuaded. The brains and the artistry of the world are here today. The screen has yesterday, today and tomorrow to draw on. I believe that pictures are changing now. For the better. Better pictures are being made. Better stories are being written. A more discriminating audience is going to see pictures. The world is ours and that," said Mr. Connolly, "is something I could not have endured missing."

How?

Why?

But I think our questions are answered.

There are thousands of men in the world who were not born with the what-it-takes of Clark Gable, the poetic beauty of Novarro, the muscular magnetism of Weissmuller. True. But Walter Connolly is not among them. For that what-it-takes, that magnetism, that poetry are in his capacious heart, in the rich tones of his voice, in the wisdom of those keen brown eyes, in the humanitarian spirit which so loves the world and all mankind that his finest dream was to know all men and to be all men—rich man, poor man, beggar man, thief. . . .

Fame Is a Thief

(Continued from page 45)

publicity and money. I have little use for the latter. I detest the former. And there I am. And this is not in the nature of a complaint, please understand. No one forced me to be an actor. I am an actor because I happen to like the work itself and because I am no good for anything else. I was one man when I went into the war. When I came out I was an actor. Along with the majority of my fellows I left the man-I-might-have-been on the battlefields.

"If I had it to do over again I would wish that I might have skipped the war. I would buy a bit of land somewhere. I would marry the right woman for me, I hope. I would raise cattle and garden produce that I might feed my family from the earth itself. I would certainly have children. I would do some laboratory work — research — fool about with glands and things. I'd be a sort of dilettante Arrowsmith. I have lived with unrealities long enough to know that these are the only realities: home, land, children.

"Fame has, by this time, robbed me of these realities. I think I shall never marry again. Fame has conspired with events to take away, piecemeal, more than twelve years of my life which might have been lived otherwise, domestically, perhaps; at any rate more satisfyingly than I have been able to live them. I shall not try again.

"Fame has robbed me of my self-confidence. Not as an actor, as a man. How can I be sure that people really like me for myself alone? They may like me, instead, because I bear the trade-mark, 'Ronald Colman,' or because I am a 'public character' with whom it is amusing to be seen.

"I don't want to sound like a misanthrope. There are exceptions, of course. There are times when my instinct tells me that my friends are my friends, irrespective of conditions. But we have, all of us, had a good many unpleasant experiences and, after a time, one's self-esteem takes a body-blow and doesn't ask for more.

FAME has robbed me of my courage. I don't dare to talk as freely as I'd like to talk. I don't dare to do a good many of the things I would like to do if I were John Doe, unknown. Reticent? Of course I am. Why not? It isn't that I am afraid of what people will say about me, nor even what they may print about me. There are more serious possibilities to be considered. You must realize that all of us in public life are excellent targets for all kinds of shyster claims, alienation suits, blackmail of all sorts. I am afraid of those. On more than one occasion one of us has taken some young woman to dine one evening and been served with papers the next.

"So, you see, Fame has robbed me of the possibility of charming friendships with charming women, which is an abnormal situation and downright theft.

"Fame has deprived me of a good many friendships with men. It has robbed me of old friendships and has prevented the development of new ones. Some old friends who have not, perhaps, done so well with the world's goods as we of the screen, feel inhibited about accepting hospitality they are not in a position to return. Or their egos very naturally resent being seen with a man who is by way of being a household word. They feel a sense of inferiority. Unjustifiable, essentially, but a normal reaction.

"It is the same with potential new friends. I meet men I like quite often. I feel that they like me. Nothing comes of it. I know that it is because they say to themselves, 'Colman seems like a pretty good sort but he's a movie actor; I can't keep up with him.' I don't blame them.

"I have a few close and intimate friends, of course. Old friends in England. Dick Barthelmess and Bill Powell and Clive Brook and a few others over here. And they are the only people in the world with whom I can feel at ease, with whom I can relax, be myself. I am exceedingly grateful for them. But it is a definite limitation not to be at ease in the world at large. It is a definite torture to me to feel like a monkey on a stick expected to do his tricks when I—I have no tricks.

Swishing his Scotch and soda around in his glass, Ronnie continued. "I seem to have got going. You'll be sorry you asked me this question before I am through."

"You are breaking my heart, but go on, I like it," I replied.

"All right, then, if you can forgive me. Fame has robbed me of the things I like to do, or rather, it has robbed me of the possibility of doing them pleasantly. I might be enjoying this tea hour much more fully, for instance, if there were not a determined looking lady two tables away eying me speculatively. No, but seriously, travel, I mean. I would rather travel than do anything else there is to be done. I like to dig about in strange corners of the world. I like to walk the boulevards of foreign cities, to poke about in remote little villages, watching people. But my pictures have always been there before me. That fixes everything. I can never be the observer, I am always the observed. I can never be in the audience.| I must always be on the stage.

BILL POWELL and I once tried to see London together. I wanted to show him my London. We got into an open taxi, one of the deep ones into which you can sink with only your heads showing. We hadn't gone half a mile before, from the tops of buses, from windows of shops and houses, people actually mounted on crates and boxes, were staring at us. We gave it up.

End pimples, blackheads with famous medicated cream

DON'T let a poor complexion spoil your romance. Don't permit coarse pores, blackheads, stubborn blemishes to rob you of your natural loveliness. Rid yourself of these distressing faults. But not with ordinary complexion creams. They cleanse only the surface.

Try the treatment that nurses use themselves. Already 6,000,000 women know this "perfect way to a perfect complexion" . . . Noxzema, the famous snow-white medicated cream that works beauty "miracles".

Not a salve. Snow-white—greaseless, instantly absorbed. Its gentle, soothing medication penetrates deep into the affected pores. Cleanses them of germ-breeding impurities that cause skin blemishes. Soothes irritated skin. Refines coarse pores. Note how Noxzema's first application leaves your skin far clearer, finer, smoother than before.

HOW TO USE: Apply Noxzema every night after all make-up has been removed. Wash off in the morning with warm water, followed by cold water or ice. Apply a little Noxzema again before you powder as a protective powder base. With this medicated complexion aid, you, too, may soon glory in a skin so clean and clear and lovely it will stand closest scrutiny.

Wonderful for Chapped Hands, too

Improve them overnight with this famous cream

10,000,000 jars sold yearly

Make this convincing overnight test. Apply Noxzema on one hand tonight. In the morning note how soothed it feels—how much softer, smoother, whiter that hand is! Noxzema improves hands overnight.

Special Trial Offer

Try Noxzema today. Get a jar at any drug or department store—start improving your skin tonight! If your dealer can't supply you, send only 15c for a generous 25c trial jar to the Noxzema Chemical Co., Dept. 52, Baltimore, Md.

Noxzema

"I THOUGHT I'd go mad with the suffering I had to bear in secret!"

That's the situation of the person who suffers from Piles!

Almost always in pain yet dreading to seek relief, because the affliction is such a delicate one. Yet no ailment is more needful of treatment than Piles. For Piles cannot only ruin your health and looks, but they can develop into something very serious.

Real relief for Piles is to be had in Pazo Ointment! Pazo almost instantly stops the pain and itching and checks any bleeding. What is more important, Pazo tends to correct the condition of Piles as a whole. This is because Pazo is threefold in effect.

First, it is soothing, which relieves the soreness and inflammation. Second, it is healing, which repairs the torn and damaged tissues. Third, it is absorbing, which dries up any mucous matter and tends to shrink the swollen blood vessels which are Piles.

Pazo comes in two forms — in tubes and tins. The tubes have a special Pile Pipe for insertion in the rectum. All drug stores sell Pazo at small cost. Mail coupon for free trial tube.

Grove Laboratories, Inc.
Dept. 33-M, St. Louis, Mo.

FREE

Gentlemen: Please send me, in PLAIN WRAPPER, trial size of PAZO Ointment.

NAME _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ STATE _____

GO PLACES! with a

BUESCHER

Popularity . . pleasure . . fame . . fortune . . all may be yours when you play a sweet-toned Buescher Saxophone. Easy playing qualities and exclusive Buescher features give you quick mastery. Play tunes the first week . . make new friends . . go places with a Buescher!

FREE TRIAL; Easy Payments on saxophone, trumpet, trombone, clarinet—any instrument for band or orchestra. Write now for free Buescher Book—mention instrument which interests you. 1003

BUESCHER BAND INSTRUMENT CO.
247 Buescher Bldg., Elkhart, Ind.

TRUE TONE

WANT A STEADY JOB?

$1260 to $3400 Year

Work for "Uncle Sam"
Many Winter Examinations Expected
Common Education
Men—Women 18 to 50
Mail Coupon Today Sure

COUPON

FRANKLIN INSTITUTE
Dept. L 302, Rochester, N. Y.

Sirs: Rush to me without charge (1) 32 page book with list of U. S. Government Steady Jobs; (2) Tell me how to get one of these jobs.

Name .....

Address .....

"Talk about 'He Who Gets Slapped'! He Who Gets Watched is in a far more painful predicament. At least it is painful to me. Genuinely. It is not Fame that is at fault, it is I.

"Mind you, there is Fame and Fame. If, at any time, some person should approach me and speak to me about some picture of mine, whether critically or appreciatively, I should be pleased. But that is not the kind of public attention we get, we who are watched, not the kind of attention given to public characters in other walks of life. When we go out in public we are the targets for all of the drunks, for all of the wise-cracking, ready-to-fight individuals there are.

"I was dancing at a Club one night recently when a man dancing by poked me in the ribs and said, 'Say, I just heard you talking to your partner. You talked like that to Loretta Young in 'Bulldog Drummond Strikes Back.' Do you always talk to women the same way?'

"On another occasion a man came up to me in a hotel dining-room and demanded that I dance with his wife. When I explained that I was with a lady he sneered and said, loudly, 'Wassa matter, gettin' too good these days?' He was very noisy about it. They usually are.

"And so, I go out in public as seldom as possible, which is a definite loss. An actor should be objective as well as subjective. He should be able to meet and mingle freely with his fellow men.

"I may sound unpleasant. It must seem more than a bit ridiculous, in these difficult days for a man to be moaning over the gifts of Fame when so many thousands of people are moaning for them. But you happened to hit on a nerve which is, in me, very much exposed and very sensitive.

"I am grateful for the work itself. I do enjoy it when I am actually on the set and in production. I am enormously interested in making 'Clive of India.' I enjoy the acting, the reading of the script, the preparation for a picture. But the rest of it, the notoriety, the recognition in public places, the violation of my privacy, all of that is positively abhorrent to me and I can't help it. Call it a complex, a neurosis, a psychosis, anything you want, but there it is.

"The money reward is pleasant, of course. But less important to me, perhaps, than the others. It enables me to meet my obligations. Beyond which it can do very little for me. I live in an average sized and very pleasant house, as you know. I don't want a larger one. Even if I did, I doubt that I would have one. For Fame gives you gifts with her right hand and threatens you with her left. For if you live in mansions and exhibit the full fruits of success you are under all kinds of threats, kidnapping among others.

"I am not in the slightest degree clothes-conscious. I seldom think of my appearance unless it is for a picture. I have no desire for yachts nor a fleet of expensive cars. I have no costly habits. I like books, but they are cheap. I enjoy tennis, but I play with Dick or Clive or Bill on their courts. And as for travel, I like to travel as simply as possible.

"My work, and a certain sense of satisfaction, in that I have not precisely failed in life, are my two rewards. Fame has robbed me of everything else."

Should the Husband Pay the Bills? Yes, Says Glenda

(Continued from page 39)

which ended unhappily. Probably she has, coupled with her observations, actual experience upon which to base her theories. Certainly this first unhappy venture with love and marriage has made her wary for, although she has, during the last year been rumored in love with Robert Riskin, the writer, she has avoided a second marriage. Is it because the men of Glenda's acquaintance are relinquishing their hold on the old standards, and are beginning to believe that a common financial meeting ground is necessary in present-day marriage? Or is it because the wound left by Glenda's first marriage has as yet not been healed?

"Of course," Glenda hastened to explain, interrupting my reverie, "conditions are exceptional in Hollywood. They are bound to be. I venture to say that in the majority of homes, or at least in an equal number, the larger income is earned by the wife. When this is the case it requires tact to preserve the male's authority.

"To prove my point let me tell you the story of a friend, a prominent screen star of the silent days. She was famous, beautiful, wealthy and popular. Like most of us she was idealistic in the matter of her first love, which led to marriage. She was on the up grade and a favorite of the company for which she worked. Her husband, also young and ambitious, was a director in the same company. But he had two faults: drinking to excess and philandering. These faults kept him from success.

"The actress in question, at the expiration of her contract, was offered a substantial advance, which she took only in part insisting that the balance be given to her husband without his knowledge of the transaction. 'You see,' my friend said, 'I didn't want my husband's feelings to be hurt by the thought that I was earning more money than he. That might have given him a feeling of inferiority. Worse yet, I dreaded a condition, likely to cause envy, that would eventually separate us.'

"My friend believes her marriage was saved by her effort to appear dependent. I am wondering how many other Hollywood alliances might have been preserved by some such feminine wisdom as this.

"Yes," continued Glenda, "the real men that I have known have been possessive, egotistical in a naive sort of way, and proud of their masculinity. In their youth they take pride in giving physical protection and when grown to manhood generally fall for the clinging-vine type of girl who flatters them by her dependence. Later they glory in the utter dependence of the woman they have chosen to love."

"But certainly," I offered, "there are men to whom this does not apply. For instance men who are doing creative work; men who find it necessary to have all financial matters handled by another so that they can work without worry."

"I feel differently about that," said Glenda. "I believe that no matter what business or profession a man is engaged in, his inclinations in domestic affairs are the same. Therefore, I would want to make my home a true one, and I would work at accomplishing that just as faithfully as I am working at my career.

"If I were extravagant, I would expect my husband to scold me. That would be his privilege as head of the house. And that is what I would want my husband to be under all circumstances."

Good News

(Continued from page 68)

bicycling—with just enough food to keep a canary partially nourished.

At the end of the week, Vic stepped on the scales. He had gained two pounds!

■ ■ ■

At the opening of the "Milky Way" recently, Mary Brian and the mother of Jack Oakie did a neat sneak-in behind the crowd of autograph-seekers and cameramen. The reason for the secrecy came to light later. Oakie, himself, staggered in between the narrow lines of spectators, head down and stopping for no one. The trio had been out partying together, but the "women folk" up and refused to accompany him to the theatre.

■ ■ ■

Carl Brisson and Maxie Adelbert Baer gave fight fans a treat recently at the Olympic Stadium by presenting silver cups to the winners of amateur bouts. The boys clowned a bit and Brisson let one go that Baer forgot to duck. As he picked himself up off the canvas, Carl was seen making a hasty exit.

■ ■ ■

Poor Ketti Gallian is literally and physically suffering for her art. Up at Arrowhead Springs, where the innocent girl was led to believe she was going for a rest, her energetic friends plunged Ketti into one of the famous cave "baths." They are great little reducers, you know. After that, Miss Gallian was treated to the minstrations of a banger-upper (masseuse, to you). When it was over, she pleaded for a little piece of watermelon. To which her companions replied, "Why, you had coffee and orange juice only four hours ago. For pity sake, don't you want to get thin?"

■ ■ ■

It took bachelor Lee Tracy to solve the problem of photographing Master Dickie Walters, age two, in a sleeping scene for "Carnival" after everyone connected with the picture, including Sally Eilers, who has just joined the mother ranks herself, and

When the last scene of "Lottery Lover" had been taken, Pat Paterson dashed off to N. Y. to meet hubby Charles Boyer on his arrival from his native Paree. His next screen appearance will be in "Private Worlds" for Paramount.

SKINNY? THEY'LL NEVER CALL ME SKINNY ANY MORE

NEW QUICK WAY TO PUT ON 5 TO 15 POUNDS fast

Posed by professional model

Astonishing gains with new double tonic. Richest imported brewers' ale yeast concentrated 7 times and combined with iron

NOW there's no need to have people calling you "skinny" and losing all your chances of making friends. Here's a new easy treatment that is giving thousands solid healthy flesh, lovely enticing curves—in just a few weeks.

As you know, doctors for years have prescribed yeast to build up health. But now with this new discovery you can get far greater tonic results than with ordinary yeast—regain health, and also put on pounds of firm, good-looking flesh—and in a far shorter time.

Not only are thousands quickly gaining beauty-bringing pounds, but also clear, radiant skin, freedom from indigestion and constipation, new pep.

7 times more powerful

This amazing new product, Ironized Yeast, is made from specially cultured brewers' ale yeast imported from Europe—the richest yeast known—which by a new process is concentrated 7 times —made 7 times more powerful.

But that is not all! This marvelous health-giving yeast is ironized with 3 special kinds of strengthening iron.

Day after day, as you take pleasant Ironized Yeast Tablets, watch flat chest develop, skinny limbs round out attractively. Skin clears to beauty, constipation and indigestion vanish, new health comes—you're an entirely new person.

Results guaranteed

No matter how skinny and weak you may be, this marvelous new Ironized Yeast should build you up in a few short weeks as it has thousands. If you are not delighted with the results of the very first package, your money will be instantly and gladly refunded.

Special FREE offer!

To start you building up your health right away, we make this FREE offer. Purchase a package of Ironized Yeast at once, cut out seal on box and mail to us with a clipping of this paragraph. We will send you a fascinating new book on health, "New Facts About Your Body." Remember, results guaranteed with very first package—or money refunded. At all druggists. Ironized Yeast Co., Inc., Dept. 32, Atlanta, Ga.

12 pounds in 4 weeks

"I was so skinny I'd hide off alone. Nothing helped till I tried Ironized Yeast. In 4 weeks I gained 12 lbs." Dorothy Gregory, Angier, N. C.

THE NAIL POLISH ☆ OF THE STARS ☆

MOON GLOW

Cream—NAIL POLISH—Clear

Here is the nail polish sensation from Hollywood—a new blend of nail polish that instantly glorifies the nails. 6 lively colors in CREAM. Gives the nail a smooth, perfect coating—covers all blemishes. 6 smart colors in CLEAR. Will not chip, fade, crack or peel. The new Moon Glow Oil Polish Remover is the latest treat for the nails. 25¢ for large size bottle. At better toilet goods counters. Send coupon and 10¢ for generous trial bottle.

Moon Glow Cosmetic Co. Ltd., Dept. M-25
Hollywood, Calif.

Please send generous trial bottle Moon Glow Cream Polish. I enclose 10c (coin or stamps) for each shade checked.
( ) Natural ( ) Medium ( ) Rose ( ) Blood Red ( ) Carmine ( ) Coral. ( ) Oil Nail Polish Remover.

Name_____

St. and No._____

City_____ State_____

SHUMWAY'S

New Double Scarlet Gleam

NASTURTIUMS

First time ever offered; dazzling new double scarlet gleam, sweet-scented Nasturtiums, gorgeous 3-inch flowers; pkt 10 seeds, also 125 seeds my New Sensation Tomato, big solid scarlet fruit, disease-resistant, heavy cropper; both pkts, 25c value, mailed for 10c with my big 1935 catalog of seeds, plants, bulbs; 800 illustrations, 85 in colors, 500,000 customers save money annually on my seeds direct from grower.

FREE AMERICA'S BEST SEED CATALOG

Send 10c today for the above sensational offer. Catalog free.

New SENSATION Tomato

R. H. SHUMWAY SEEDSMAN
ROCKFORD, ILL. BOX 381
GOOD SEEDS CHEAP

The Secret of a New Enchantment

RADIO GIRL

PERFUME and FACE POWDER

Few can resist the alluring fragrance of RADIO GIRL PERFUME. And you can enjoy this exquisite French odeur because domestic manufacture reduces the cost. You'll want RADIO GIRL FACE POWDER, too—its skin blend tones and its soft texture, are so flattering.

Use this COUPON for FREE SAMPLES

"RADIO GIRL", Saint Paul, Minn.
Send me FREE Regular Size Radio Girl Perfume and Trial Size Radio Girl Face Powder. I am enclosing 10c (coin or stamps) for cost of mailing. (Offer Good in U. S. only.) M2

Name.....

Address.....

Dickie's own ma had given up in despair.

Lee merely suggested that the scene be taken after the youngster's regular bedtime when he would be sleeping naturally, which bit of advice saved the studio from the brink of bankruptcy and the directors from the verge of insanity.

■ ■ ■

The newest dog hero in town is none other than Michael, Dolores Del Rio's white bull.

It seems the star was lying on a lawn mattress reading, when Michael raced up, growling ominously. She ordered him to be quiet. Usually obedient, Michael continued his lusty warnings, and jumped over her. Dolores turned in time to see him sink his teeth into a snake, coiled within a few feet of her head. Michael held on until frightened servants appeared and now he owns a brand new collar.

■ ■ ■

Besides having a new coiffure, a new Paramount contract and a new beau, Gail Patrick is now the proud possessor of a set chair with her name on the back. And is Gail thrilled!

■ ■ ■

Woe be unto Hepburn the next time she leaves Hollywood! The news cameramen have gotten together and purchased a flock of rubber raspberries. As Katie enters the railway station or airport, she will be greeted with one big blast, as the cameramen walk out with folded equipment.

■ ■ ■

A daisy or sumpthin' should be presented to our own cameraman, Scotty, and a photographer pal. Recently, Paramount was on the spot on its "Wings In The Dark" opus. Production was held up and expenses mounted as a fruitless search was made for extras who could handle a camera without fumbling. The boys stepped in, became actors for the moment and eased the producer's headache. They were quite generous in praising their supporting cast, too, cheerfully lauding the efforts of Myrna Loy and Cary Grant.

■ ■ ■

Although he doesn't play a note, Eddie Robinson considers himself quite a connoisseur of music.

Recently he decided he should do something about his vast knowledge on this subject, so he hit upon the plan of creating a "Robinson Symphony." This was accomplished by purchasing forty rolls of music, taking out certain parts in each and piecing them together.

After days of labor, the masterpiece was finished. Elated, Eddie asked his wife to be his one and only guest and critic at the audition. Seating himself at the player piano, Eddie began the unwinding of the Robinson special. Mrs. R. sat very quietly. After it was over, she made just one caustic remark. It was, "Enough is enough!"

■ ■ ■

Richard Barthelmess is a very shy and retiring man. (!?!?)

At a recent football game, fans could hardly miss his bright sweater vividly monogrammed, nor his cigarette holder which carried another "R. B."—nor was his hatband neglected. However, in case anyone was still in doubt, his cigarette case bore the full name, "Richard Barthelmess."

■ ■ ■

What Hollywood male wouldn't be considered sumpin' if he could crash the exclusive "Domino" (all females) Club?

But it took Snoopy, Fred Keating's purp, to accomplish this miracle. Seems Snoopy got himself lost one day and not only Fred, but some of the Domino gals, were so dee-lighted at his discovery, that he was initiated as the club mascot—a male one at that!

■ ■ ■

There have been scores of stories printed about the so-called temperament of movie stars. Perhaps the most malicious is the one now circulating Hollywood about the blonde star who broke the back of one of her dogs with a poker when said pup misbehaved on her parlor rug. This story, however, is being refuted by the less evil-minded, who really are "in the know," stating that this particular star is an animal lover, her home being overrun with dogs, cats, birds and wotnot.

Because of her seeming coldness on the screen, this actress has come in for more than her share of "cracks" and therein probably lies the foundation for this tale.

Not content with being a success in the movie field, Doris Kenyon has tried her luck at opera. Here she is after her first singing performance in "The Secrets of Suzanne" at the Shrine Auditorium.

At the "Milky Way" opening—the Joe E. Browns, with Lyle Talbot and his latest heart interest, Polly Walters.

One of the best rifle shots in Hollywood is Glenda Farrell. When Glenda was able to shatter the "clay pipes" with regularity, she started clipping off their stems with well-placed bullets, until now she is able to snip the black smudge off a burning candle wick at fifty feet.

Glenda's young son, Tommy, is in on the game, too, and the pair go to the beach for target practice at least once a week.

■ ■ ■

Out at Warner's studio, an electrician was rearranging a heavy lamp above the set. In moving around, a large coil of rope fell over and hit the stage with a resounding thud. As a nimble-footed extra sidestepped in time to miss the impact, he shouted upward, "Hey, you! Be careful. I ain't Von Sternberg."

■ ■ ■

George Raft has discovered a new player. One morning as he was walking into the studio he was approached by a negro boy with an ingratiating smile. The lad was looking for a job and had hitch-hiked all the way from North Carolina to get it. George didn't particularly need a valet, but was so pleased with Alex Hill's personality, he hired him on the spot. Alex has taken everyone on the lot by storm, so shy and anxious to please is he. And now, Eddie Sutherland, director of "Mississippi," has given him a part in that picture.

■ ■ ■

Gene Raymond is not making any more personal appearances. Decidedly not!

Between pictures recently, Gene went to Palm Springs, intending to stay several days. Shortly after his arrival he was approached by an amiable stranger, apparently a "native," who insisted he be guest of honor at a gathering of a newly organized art group nearby. Gene agreed.

However, after the stranger had gone, Raymond said to the hotel clerk, "Tell me, what sort of organization is this 'New Art Colony'?"

"'New Art Colony'," the clerk repeated, puzzled. "Oh! That chap who was just talking to you?" He laughed heartily. "Not 'New Art', Mr. Raymond. 'Nude' is the word. You see, this flock of nudists have settled . . ."

But he was talking to thin air. Mr. Raymond had fled!

DOES YOUR SKIN LOOK LIKE SILK OR CANVAS?

It's that Hard-to-Get-at "Second Layer" of Dirt that Makes Your Skin Coarse and Gray

By Lady Esther

A black slip under a white dress will make the white dress look dark—grayish!

The same holds true for dirt buried in your skin. It will make your skin look dark—give it a grayish cast. It will also clog your pores and make your skin large-pored and coarse.

It's safe to say that 7 out of 10 women do not have as clearly white and radiant and fine a skin as they might, simply on account of that unsuspected, hidden "second layer" of dirt.

There is only one way to remove that underneath dirt and that is to use a cream that penetrates the pores to the bottom.

A PENETRATING Face Cream

Lady Esther Four-Purpose Face Cream is a penetrating face cream. It does not merely lie on the surface of your skin. Almost the instant it is applied, it begins working its way into the pores. It goes all the way down to the bottom of the pores—doesn't stop half way.

Going to work on the waxy dirt, it breaks it up—dissolves it—and floats it to the surface where it is easily wiped off. When you cleanse your skin with Lady Esther Face Cream you get dirt out that you never suspected was there. It will probably shock you when you see how really soiled your skin was.

Two or three cleansings with Lady Esther Face Cream will actually make your skin appear whiter—shades whiter. You would think almost that you had bleached it, but that's the effect of thoroughly cleansing the skin. When your skin has been thoroughly cleansed it blooms anew, like a wilting flower that has been suddenly watered. It becomes clear and radiant. It becomes fine and soft.

Supplies Dry Skin with What It Needs

As Lady Esther Four-Purpose Face Cream cleanses your skin, it also does other things. It lubricates the skin—resupplies it with a fine oil that overcomes dryness and makes the skin velvety soft and smooth.

Cleansing the pores as thoroughly as it does, it allows them to function freely again—to open and close—as Nature intended. This automatically permits the pores to reduce themselves to their normal, invisible size.

Also, Lady Esther Face Cream makes so smooth a base for powder that powder stays on twice as long and stays fresh. You don't have to use a powder base that will ooze out and make a pasty mixture on your skin.

No Other Quite Like It

There is no face cream quite like Lady Esther Face Cream. There is no face cream that will do so much definitely for your skin. But don't take my word for this! Prove it at my expense.

Let me have your name and address and I'll send you a 7-days' supply. Just mail a penny postcard or the coupon below and by return mail you'll get the 7-days' supply of Lady Esther Four-Purpose Face Cream. Let your own skin tell you how different this face cream is from any you have ever tried.

Copyright by Lady Esther, 1935

(You can paste this on a penny postcard) (9) FREE

Lady Esther, 2010 Ridge Ave., Evanston, Ill.

Please send me by return mail your 7-day supply of Lady Esther Four-Purpose Face Cream.

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

*City*_____ *State*_____

(If you live in Canada, write Lady Esther, Toronto, Ont.)

INSTANT RELIEF!
CORNS
CALLOUSES, BUNIONS, SORE TOES

New, FLESH COLOR, WATERPROOF

The instant you apply these soothing, healing pads, relief is yours! Corns or callouses are quickly loosened for easy, safe removal! New Improved Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads stop shoe friction and pressure, the cause of corns, sore toes, callouses and bunions. New waterproof, flesh color Skintex covering gives greater ease and comfort; hides foot blemishes; does not soil, stick to the stocking or come off in the bath; invisible under sheer hose. By all means try them. Sold everywhere.

NEW De Luxe
Dr Scholl's Zino-pads
Put one on—the pain is gone!

Brand New NOW ONLY $17.95 up
TYPEWRITER
PORTABLES
10¢ a Day · Easy Terms

Sensational Low Prices and easy terms on limited supply only. All brand new, up-to-date —4 row keyboard. Fully Guaranteed.
SEND NO MONEY—10 Day Trial
Send for special new literature and money-saving, easy pay plan with 10 day trial offer. Also amazing bargains in standard size, rebuilt office models on FREE trial offer.
International Typewriter Exch., 231 W. Monroe St. Dept. 261, Chicago

■ ■ ■

Lilian Harvey has been signed up by British International Pictures for three (probably musical) films to be made during 1935. However, she will make "Once a Gentleman" for Columbia, before going to England.

■ ■ ■

FREE!
TO INEXPERIENCED WRITERS!

OPPORTUNITY to test and scientifically measure your writing ability without cost. If you have ordinary command of the English language and can express yourself in writing, you may discover that your natural style, properly directed, might make money for you. Write for this Aptitude Test today and find out whether you are eligible for enrollment in a new, practical Writing Clinic and Simplified Training Course which offers personal, sympathetic instruction and criticism in every phase of modern writing, including short story, news reporting, play, radio, advertising, publicity, news articles, columns and other forms of profitable writing. A new course directed by experienced writers which offers a short cut to sound writing technique. Costs less than one month at college. Special Deferred Payment Plan. Helpful marketing advice while training. Write today for full details and FREE Aptitude Test.
U. S. SCHOOL OF WRITING
Dept. B-19 20 W. 60th St., New York N. Y.

The marriage merry-go-round is in full swing again. Evelyn Laye and Frank Lawton trotted off to Yuma to say "I do" and Evelyn Venable and Hal Mohr, cameraman, also Yuma-ed it—all on the same day.

■ ■ ■

"Not a chance," has become the stock answer Alice White gives news-gatherers who show up on the set. Alice, busily engaged in knitting between scenes, doesn't even look up any more when she's asked, "Knitting baby clothes?"

Incidentally, Miss White seems to bear the brunt of mishaps on the "Sweet Music" set. In one scene, four "takes" were made showing her movie brother attempting to kidnap her. In the first, Alice rated a scratched face; on the second, a punch in the nose and on the third, she was sent spinning by a shove and sprained a leg muscle. Alice was, oh, so careful, on the fourth "take" but Allen Jenkins' foot caught her square on the chin. She went down—and out—and called it a day!

■ ■ ■

When you see a picture of Norman Foster alone, close your eyes and visualize a blonde bit of femininity beside him for, ten chances to one, she's just outside camera range. The girl is Joan Gale, Wampas Baby Star, who wants to keep her yen for the actor-beau a dark secret. At the Sunday Night Ebell Club vaudeville show recently, Joan had our cameraman, Scotty, playing hide-and-seek among the ticket-purchasers trying to "snap" her. When it looked as if the two might be arrested for lunacy, the game stopped and Scotty contented himself with a photo of Norman. However, when the ever-lovin' pair entered the theatre, they were arm-in-arm. Well, maybe no one was supposed to see them there, or were they making out to be ostriches, or what?

Incidentally, speaking of Mr. Foster reminds us of the attractive physician Claudette Colbert is being seen about with these days. No one can seem to learn the gentleman's name.

■ ■ ■

Jack Osterman, Master of Ceremonies, spotted Will Rogers in the audience at the Ebell Show and begged the wit, editorialist, actor to GIVE. But Will claimed it was his night off, his birthday and that vodevil wasn't talking pitchers anyway, and went back to his gum-chewing.

■ ■ ■

Virginia Bruce Gilbert has sorta turned out to be a female Lyle Talbot. All the boys want a date—and a lot of 'em are lucky. But Billy Bakewell, 'twould seem, rates first, which, if rumor holds with us, is said to have made Spencer Tracy that sore. Well, youth must be served—to Virginia anyway.

■ ■ ■

The Hollywood Virginia Reel would seem to be on again. You know—time to change partners and all that. Of course, it may have been because Anita Louise was in New York, but anyway Tom Brown took French leave of Francis Lederer's erstwhile inamorata, Steffi Duna. So Mr. L., just to prove he was heartbroken or didn't give a hang (pick your own answer) is going places with some of Hollywood's prettiest.

Margaret Sullavan, divorced from Henry Fonda several years ago, became Mrs. William Wyler recently when they surprised Hollywood and the fan world by eloping to Yuma, Arizona. Mr. Wyler, a nephew of Carl Laemmle, Sr., directed Miss Sullavan in "The Good Fairy."

Reviews

(Continued from page 55)

bow as a wicked woman. When you've seen the picture you may just happen to take time out to wonder if her series of self-sacrifices, as depicted, proved her a baddie, just what in the name of heaven and M-G-M would make her an all-right gal.

The story is the time-worn one about the woman who struggles and suffers that her little ones may rise above the gutter, which has been her habitat through force of circumstances. Just to heap one more straw on her already overburdened back as she is about to grasp happiness—her past, her conscience and a promise to square herself confront her. Well, fiction writers call it conflict and cruel critics charge it all to that little product which the butchers sell for ten cents a pound, sliced.

Anyway, Miss Christians is very nearly perfect. Her appearance is reminiscent of Ruth Chatterton and her performance excellent; so fine indeed that it rates this picture a B. Jean Parker, Betty Furness and Charles Bickford are among those present, and all doing nicely, thank you.

B: Maybe It's Love

(Warners)

"Maybe It's Love" and maybe it's only hokum, but one thing is certain and that is that this little picture will please the fans despite the fact that it is given a cheap production and the photography is scarcely better than fair.

There is only one situation recognizable as gleaned from the stage play and that is when Big Sister gives Little Blonde Baby lessons on how to land a husband in nothing flat. It seems all one needs is a knowledge of shorthand, a lot of nerve and a stop watch. Of course, the premise that all men are ga-ga will help, too.

Even when the boy has been landed and it is proven to everybody's satisfaction that two can live as cheaply as four—that is, if a lad doesn't try to keep a car and her family on the side—the path of true love is punctuated with rocks and boulders.

Granted that the dialogue is frankly wisecracking and aimed directly at the masses; that Joseph Cawthorne, good actor that he is, purposely overplays; that, as a thespian, Gloria Stuart makes a real beauty, and that Ross Alexander is consistently miserable, you're still in for some good rowdy fun.

Gloria Stuart and Ross Alexander in "Maybe It's Love," for Warners.

It's Never TOO LATE FOR A WIFE TO LEARN

The world is full of women who say to themselves, "My marriage was a mistake." No scandal. No open break. Just submission to a life without joy, without hope.

Many women give up hope too soon. These cases are sad. They are doubly sad because the woman has largely herself to blame. No wife should let herself become faint-hearted about marriage. She should go right after the real facts.

Times have changed. The days when a woman was compelled to use a poisonous antiseptic, or none at all, have fortunately passed. The trouble is that some married women have not yet learned this.

The truth about antiseptics

Of course women do not want to use poisons. Those who do take the risks of such a practice are simply living in a past age before modern improvements in antiseptics had been announced by the medical profession. Any excuse for using these poisons disappeared when Zonite was first offered in drug stores.

Doctors now, without reservation, recommend the practice of feminine hygiene. They know that the tragedies are over. They are confident that delicate tissues will not be burned or desensitized. No lives will be ruined by Zonite.

Zonite is safe, as safe as pure water. And Zonite is powerful. Taking carbolic acid as the standard for comparison, Zonite is far more powerful than any dilution of carbolic acid that may safely be used on the human body.

Also Zonite Suppositories

Besides the liquid Zonite (three sizes 30¢, 60¢, $1.00) there is a newer form, Zonite Suppositories. These are $1.00 a dozen or 35¢ a box of three. They are dainty, white, cone-like forms which provide continuing antiseptic action. Some women prefer the liquid and some the suppositories. Others use both.

Be sure to write for "Facts for Women." It is an up-to-date booklet giving a plain, clear statement on the whole subject of feminine hygiene. An actual education in marriage. All women can profit by its teaching. Just mail coupon.

ZONITE PRODUCTS CORPORATION MM-52
Chrysler Building, New York, N. Y.

Please send me free copy of the booklet or booklets checked below.

( ) Facts for Women
( ) Use of Antiseptics in the Home

NAME .....
(Please print name)

ADDRESS .....

CITY .....

STATE .....

(In Canada: Sainte Therese, P. Q.)

INSTRUCTIONS are FREE

New! MAKE FLOWER BASKETS OF CLOTHES-PINS and DENNISON CREPE

Women everywhere are positively excited about them—these quaint floral baskets you make yourself. And they are so easy and fascinating to make. All you need—a handful of clothes-pins, a few strips of brightly colored crepe paper, and the simple step-by-step instructions that Dennison sends you FREE. The instructions show how to make 4 different lovely flower baskets. Be the first to make these clever novelties—for home decoration, for friends, as gifts, to sell. Send the coupon now.

DENNISON'S, Dept. B-192, Framingham, Mass.
Please send me the FREE instructions for making the new Clothes-Pin Flower Baskets.

*Name*_____

*Street (or R.F.D.)*_____

*City*_____ *State*_____

Why not let us include some of these Dennison Books? Check those you want and enclose 10c for each.
--Crepe Paper Flowers --New Dennison Crafts
--Money-Making Bazaars

Dennison Crepe

ECZEMA TORMENTS quickly pacified. For efficient help use concentrated POSLAM

Send for FREE SAMPLE Poslam Station G New York

Be Your Own MUSIC Teacher

Learn at Home

by wonderful new method that teaches in half usual time. Simple as A. B. C. — a child can learn it. Your lessons consist of real selections instead of tiresome exercises. When you finish one of these delightfully easy lessons, you've added a new "piece" to your list. You read real notes, too—no "numbers" or trick music. Method is so thorough that many of our 700,000 students are band and orchestra LEADERS.

PLAY BY NOTE Piano, Organ, Violin, Cornet, Mandolin, Harp, 'Cello, Trombone, Flute, Clarinet, Piccolo, Saxophone, Ukulele, Guitar, Voice and Speech culture, Harmony and Composition, Drums and Traps, Automatic Finger Control, Banjo (Plectrum, 5-String or Tenor) Piano Accordion, Italian and German Accordion, Juniors' Piano Course.

Automatic Finger Control

Our own invention—limbers, trains and guides your fingers so that they fall into proper place almost automatically.

Free Book and Demonstration Lesson

You may quickly become a fine player or singer through the U. S. School home study method. Write now, however, before Free Books and Free Demonstration Lessons are gone. Mention your favorite instrument or whether you prefer vocal music. Please write your name and address plainly.

U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC
1442 Brunswick Building
New York City

B: It's a Gift

(Paramount)

Another Fields-Day! Which means red-letter day on any calendar. W. C. is twice as potent as any giggle gas yet invented. One moment he'll wring your heart with his pathetic dumbness; the next, he is endangering your ribs merely by a vague mutter or a shift of the chronic cigar. Kathleen Howard is swell as his martyred (that's what she thinks!) spouse, and Jean Rouverol and Tommy Bupp do well as their indifferent offspring. Baby LeRoy seems to have suddenly reached the futility-of-it-all age and is, therefore, rather disappointing.

The story drags a bit in spots, but then, so would any trip from New York to California, especially if undertaken in the dilapidated car in which the Bissonet family is stowed, plus household goods, camping equipment and the family pets.

Here is really an evening's entertainment.

B: Imitation of Life

(Universal)

If you are in the market for a good cry—but a good one, don't miss "Imitation of Life."

The story is a Fannie Hurst yarn with Fanny doing her human document stuff, and when that lady gets around to that type of material, you are bound to witness a woman come through struggles that seem insurmountable and in the end bring home the bacon——financially, romantically, social-successfully, et al.

The picture needs a generous application of the shears. Each sequence—and especially the sobby ones—is drawn out almost to the breaking point. Sentiment, too, is squeezed dry, and situations in general are inclined to be over, rather than under, done.

However, it's very humaneness and tender moments will strongly appeal. There are several fine performances—Claudette Colbert as the business woman and mother who finally loses her heart; Louise Beavers, the suffering and sacrificing Mammy; and Fredi Washington, her wayward daughter. Fredi is distinctly a "comer." Ned Sparks, as usual, proves a laugh-getter in a familiar-to-him role. And Warren William comes through with a good performance.

Yes, there is plenty for you to like about this picture, much of it too intangible to describe.

C: Father Brown, Detective

(Paramount)

Just another one of those mistakes, which will happen in the best of regulated studios. Here is an excellent cast, trying in vain to make the best of a bad deal. There are too many lilies and bluebirds in this story of a criminal who is reformed and transformed by the platitudes of a village priest and the honest love of a good girl—though we must admit that Gertrude Michael could work wonders on even the most calloused hearts. Walter Connolly, as Father Williams, strains to put a note of whimsicality into his role, but only succeeds in being pompous. Paul Lukas, as the famous jewel thief, supposedly a dashing, devil-may-care fellow, strives nobly with a part that is inane both in motive and action. This picture is guaranteed to delight the most conscientious censor.

B: The Silver Streak

(RKO-Radio)

For engineers, conductors and anyone interested in railroading, this is good entertainment. However, if you are not a member of this charmed circle, you're apt to find it only fair. The "Silver Streak" is a streamline, aluminum train which an ambitious young engineer (Hardie Albright), has designed. He attempts to sell the idea to a railroad magnate (William Farnum) without success. However, Sally Blane, the R.M.'s attractive daughter, prevails upon a rival firm to finance the idea. Guess why! After an unsuccessful first trial, the new train finally proves its worth with a record-breaking run to save the son of the hard-hearted railroad executive. The lad's life depends upon the immediate use of an artificial respirator. By the time the train arrives, after a series of treacherous turns and narrow escapes from collision en route, the audience, too, could use the respirator. William Farnum and Sally Blane handle their roles capably, but honors for the best performance go to the locomotive.

C: The Curtain Falls

(Chesterfield)

As this picture opens, Henrietta Crosman, a former actress of renown, is dying, alone, forgotten and poverty-stricken. But she suddenly—and startlingly—decides to stage one last act before the "curtain falls." Aha, title clue! With the announcement that she is their long-lost wealthy aunt, she surprises a supposedly happy family. However, it doesn't take long to discover that the household is desperate from financial reverses, intrigues and a baddie son. So Aunt Hetty busies herself with pulling the family out of the "slough of despond" forgetting her own search for happiness.

Sounds sorta Pollyannaish, doesn't it? Right. It is. Henrietta Crosman tries to save the day by a brusque line of wisecracks and hearty back slappings. But there's still too much sweetness and light.

Dorothy Lee, John Darrow, Holmes Herbert and the rest of the cast do well when they have the opportunity to interrupt Miss Crosman's monologue, which opportunities are few and far between, to be sure.

D: The Gay Bride

(M-G-M)

Just another revived gangster film with an alleged new angle which fails to live up to its promise. Indeed, when you see this you're apt to feel as if you're wandering around in a London fog. From all indications, neither the writer nor the cast knew whether to play straight comedy, drama or slap-stick. So slap-stick got the breaks and predominates throughout the picture.

Nat Pendleton, a too dumb boss of racketeers, falls for a chiseling chorus gal who is determined never to go hungry. Carole Lombard calls upon some of her "Twentieth Century" characterization and with hysterics and what-nots manages to marry her way through the gang, winding up with Chester Morris, an honest hombre who longed for nothing more than a little garage in Jersey.

Chester plays a flippant, poorly written role and carries off the cast's first honors. Zasu Pitts is completely wasted, Leo Carrillo does well enough with a small part and Sam Hardy is fair as the boss's double-crossing henchman.

The picture is unworthy of its fine cast and unless you are a staunch Morris-Lombard supporter, you'll be able to say very little for this one.

C: I Am a Thief

(Warners)

"I Am a Thief" and corned beef hash

A scene from "Imitation of Life" with Claudette Colbert and Warren William.

have something in common—everything's in 'em both. Of course the latter hasn't Ricardo Cortez and Mary Astor but, come to think of it, that may be what is especially wrong with the hash.

As you might well suppose, even if imagination has not been your long suit, this one deals with the big jool robbery; in fact, the bigger and better jool robbery, for it takes in everyone from insurance agents to gents after the Karenina diamonds who aren't taking up time fooling with premiums and policies, either.

Of course, Mary suspects Ric and he keeps an eye on her—proud and haughty bee-ooty though she be, and Hobart Cavanaugh suspects Irving Pichel—or is it t'other way around—and you suspect the girl whose admission you just paid. No fooling, it's that exciting.

The action takes in a lot of territory; in fact, the entire cast find themselves on the Simplon Express speeding all over Europe. Oh well, let's skip it, after giving Cortez a gold star.

C: Babes in Toyland

(Hal Roach-M-G-M)

It's grand fun, if you have your health and your youth—youth to the extent of being under ten. For, if the producer of this picture had the kiddies and the holidays in mind when he had his cameramen turn the crank, his work and contribution to juvenile jollity has not been in vain. But if he expected the big boys and girls

"Limehouse Blues" with George Raft and Anna May Wong, for Paramount.

FOLKS WHO ARE "NATURALLY SKINNY"

NOW GAIN 5 LBS. IN 1 WEEK AND FEEL FINE!

New, Natural Mineral Concentrate from the Sea—RICH IN NATURAL IODINE, Building Up Thousands of Nervous, Skinny, Rundown Men and Women Everywhere

Here's good news for "Naturally Skinny" folks who can't seem to add an ounce no matter what they eat. A new way has been found to add flattering pounds of good, solid flesh and fill out those ugly, scrawny hollows even on men and women who have been under-weight for years. 5 lbs. in 1 week guaranteed. 15 to 20 lbs. in few weeks not uncommon.

This new discovery, called Kelp-a-Malt now available in handy tablets offers practically all the vitally essential food minerals in highly concentrated form. These minerals, so necessary to the digestion of fats and starches in your daily diet—the weight making elements—include a rich supply of precious NATURAL IODINE.

Kelp-a-Malt's NATURAL IODINE is a mineral needed by the vital organ which regulates metabolism—the process through which the body is constantly building firm solid flesh, new strength and energy. 6 Kelp-a-Malt tablets contain more NATURAL IODINE than 486 lbs. of spinach, 1600 lbs. of beef, 1389 lbs. of lettuce.

Try Kelp-a-Malt for a single week and notice the difference—how much better you sleep—how your appetite improves, how ordinary stomach distress vanishes. Watch flat chests and skinny limbs fill out and flattering extra pounds appear. Kelp-a-Malt is prescribed and used by physicians. Fine for children, too. Remember the name, Kelp-a-Malt, the original kelp and malt tablets. Nothing like them, so do not accept imitations. Try Kelp-a-Malt. If you don't gain at least 5 lbs. in 1 week, the trial is free. Kelp-a-Malt comes in jumbo size tablets, 4 to 5 times the size of ordinary tablets and cost but little. It can be had at nearly all drug stores. If your dealer can't supply you, send $1.00 for special introductory size bottle of 65 tablets to address below

SPECIAL FREE OFFER

Write today for fascinating instructive 50-page book on How to Add Weight Quickly. Mineral Contents of Food and their effect on the human body. New facts about NATURAL IODINE. Standard weight and measurement charts. Daily menus for weight building. Absolutely free. No obligation. Kelp-a-Malt Co., Dept. 333, 27-33 West 20 St., New York City.

KELPAMALT Tablets

Helping Millions to

END COLDS SOONER

WHEN a bad cold gets you down, just rub on Vicks VapoRub. It goes right to work to fight a cold direct—two ways at once. Through the skin it acts direct like a poultice or plaster. At the same time, its medicated vapors are inhaled with every breath direct to the inflamed air-passages of head, throat, and bronchial tubes. This combined action loosens phlegm—soothes irritated membranes—eases difficult breathing—helps break congestion.

Follow daytime treatments with an application at bedtime—to get the effect of VapoRub's powerful two-way medication through the night. Often by morning the worst of the cold is over.

VICKS VAPORUB

(VapoRub is the foundation of Vicks Plan for Better Control of Colds. This unique Plan fully described in each Vicks package.)

To Help PREVENT Colds
VICKS VA-TRO-NOL
for nose and throat

Quick!—At the first nasal irritation, sniffle or sneeze—just a few drops up each nostril. Va-tro-nol aids the functions provided by Nature—in the nose—to prevent colds, and to throw off colds in the early stages.

"It's a Gift" with Kathleen Howard, W. C. Fields and the fast-growing-up Baby LeRoy.

to be anything but bored, he's a bloomin' optimist.

Every fairyland character pops up from somewhere in the celluloid and occasionally stays a bit too long. There is Bo-Peep, played by Charlotte Henry, and a sorta sad performance it is, too; and Tom-Tom, essayed by Felix Knight, warbling a few fine notes and a lot of sour ones; and the Three Little Pigs and Mickey Mouse and all the boys and girls of Make-Believe to give the flesh and blood youngsters a treat.

The March of the Toys should have been grand, but it fell quite flat and the bogey men might have scared us, but they merely succeeded in being grotesque, and Laurel and Hardy could have been funny, but they weren't—very often. Well, cutting might have helped, too—say, from six reels to three.

C: Limehouse Blues

(Paramount)

This little number will never reach any great heights in movie entertainment no matter how you look at it, or from where you sit. Set in the musty atmosphere of Chinatown, the action creeps along in the usual slinky manner, revealing shadowy figures with long fingernails and bad intentions. George Raft, aided and abetted by a pair of slanting eyebrows (no more, no less) makes a stiff and rather unbelievable Chinaman. Jean Parker is the Walter Connolly and Gertrude Michael in "Father Brown, Detective" for Paramount.

A marriage between Katharine Hepburn and Leland Heywood is practically a sure thing. His wife finally divorced him for the second time, and Hepburn has been free from Ludlow Smith for several months.

■ ■ ■

George Arliss may now be among the honorary nobility of England—that is, if King George includes him on his New Year's Knighthood list this year as is expected.

Eric Linden, in case you've been wondering what in the world has happened to him, is playing in "Ladies Money" on the New York stage. He seems to be firm in his decision to remain off the screen.

■ ■ ■

After the completion of "Vanessa" at M-G-M, Helen Hayes plans to return to the East where she will resume her role in "Mary of Scotland" for a fifteen weeks' tour.

DENISON'S PLAYS
57 YEARS OF HITS
Musical Comedies, Operettas, Vaudeville Acts, Minstrels, Comedy Songs, Make-up Goods.
Catalog Free
T. S. Denison & Co. 623 S. Wabash, Dept. 25, Chicago

QUICK
SEE FOR YOURSELF!
IRONINGS
NO STICKING—NO SCORCHING

Here's that new way to do hot starching without mixing, boiling or straining as with old fashioned lump starch. Everything already included in powdered form. Makes starching easy. Makes ironing easy. See how elasticity and that fresh new look are given back to curtains, aprons, play clothes, soft collars and shirts. Your iron fairly glides. A wonderful invention. Send now.

TRY THIS FREE

THANK YOU——
THE HUBINGER CO., No. 899, Keokuk, Ia.
Your free sample of QUICK ELASTIC, please, and "That Wonderful Way to Hot Starch."
.....
.....

Be Smart! Save Money!
Dry Clean 1 Sweater
5 Neckties
1 Scarf with 1 can of

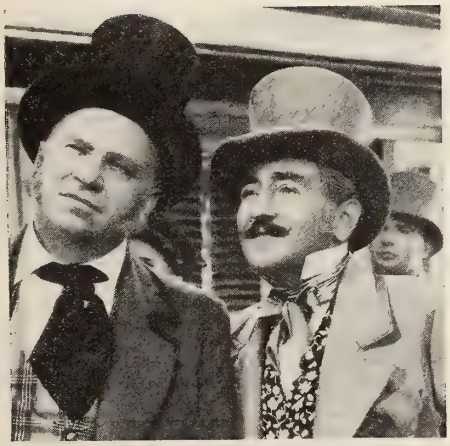
HOME DRY CLEANER
Only 25¢ Qt.
Cleans Like Magic
Blouses, Spats, Hats, Furniture and Auto Upholstery, etc. Odorless . . . non-explosive . . . just dip, rinse and dry.
Home Dry Cleaner Lab., Uniontown, Pa.
On Sale at Leading 5 & 10c Stores

Sylvia Sidney's latest effort, "Behold My Wife," with Gene Raymond.

White Flower, blooming amidst the grime and dirt of the Chinese underworld, whose love choice is the sweet and unsullied owner of—believe it or not—a dog store, thus giving Raft a chance to do an heroic fade-out. This final sequence is perhaps the redeeming note, if any, of the film, as it affords a little excitement and suspense, both sadly lacking in the first few reels. A rather dull evening among the celestials, if it's anything to you.



C: Successful Failure

(Monogram)

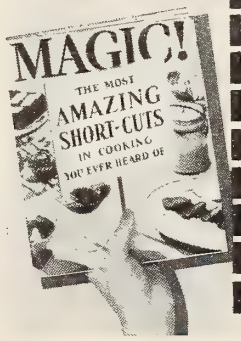
Like the old gray mare, this just "ain't what it otta be." In fact, it isn't even the successful failure which its title implies.

The story involves a middle-class family with the usual complications of too little money and too much bickering. William Collier, Sr., does well in spite of having to pose as a 100 per cent American. That's no mean handicap, you'll admit. Lucille Gleason makes the most of a bad deal and George Breakstone as the twelve-year-old cynic is quite convincing. Russell Hopton, news sleuth, gets the proverbial lily from Gloria Shea, blonde daughter of the house, when the wealthy gentlemen with ulterior motives shows up. Of course, in the end she takes back the ex-B.F.—though one wonders why.

If you aren't getting your quota of family squabbles at home, by all means see this.

Wallace Beery and Adolphe Menjou in "The Mighty Barnum."

A de luxe Dessert..easy!



EAGLE BRAND SURPRISE APPLE CAKE

2 tablespoons butter, melted
½ teaspoon cinnamon
2 cups graham cracker crumbs
3 eggs, separated
1⅓ cups (1 can) Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk
2 tablespoons lemon juice
Grated rind of 1 lemon
2 cups canned or drained, sieved apple sauce

Add butter and cinnamon to graham cracker crumbs. Spread thick layer of crumbs on bottom of buttered spring mold or deep 10-inch layer cake pan. Beat egg yolks well, add Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk, lemon juice, rind and apple sauce. Fold in stiffly-beaten egg whites. Pour into mold. Cover with remaining cracker crumbs. Bake 50 minutes in moderate oven (350° F.). Serve hot or cold.

● Tender and moist and delicately flavorous inside, and nice and crumb-y outside—here's a chef's creation. Yet a beginner could make it! ● But remember—Evaporated Milk won't—can't—succeed in this recipe. You must use Sweetened Condensed Milk. Just remember the name Eagle Brand.

FREE! World's most amazing Cook Book!

Rotogravure picture-book (60 photographs) showing astonishing new short-cuts. 130 recipes, including: Lemon Pie Filling without cooking! Foolproof 5-minute Chocolate Frosting! Caramel Pudding that makes itself! 2-ingredient Macaroons! Shake-up Mayonnaise! Ice Creams (freezer and automatic)! Candies! Refrigerator Cakes! Sauces! Custards! Cookies! Address: The Borden Co., Dept. MM-25 350 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Name_____
Street_____
City_____ State_____
(Print name and address plainly)

Borden Quality

Hair Men Adore

Fascinating Glints brought out in one shampoo!

DON'T let drab hair make you look tired and commonplace. A single Blondex shampoo will wake up radiant charm—will fluff your hair to new, enchanting softness. Blondex is not a dye or bleach. It's a glorious shampoo-rinse—made originally for blondes—but quickly adopted by thousands with dark and medium hair—who find it brings out gleaming lights and lustre like nothing else! Wonderfully cleansing, Blondex completely removes all hair-dirt and film. Your scalp feels gloriously clean, refreshed. Your hair is not only brighter, but healthier, too! Try Blondex now—it works magic. At all good drug and department stores. Two sizes, the inexpensive 25¢ package, and the economical $1 bottle.

WEAR Perfume
THAT LURES TONIGHT

Be divinely exciting tonight... be utterly irresistible. Wear Irresistible Perfume that lures . . . that stirs the senses . . . thrills . . . awakens love.

Use Irresistible Perfume and your heart will beat faster with joy as you find yourself the center of an admiring group. Your friends will envy your strange new power over hearts! And you'll be following the secret of fascinating Parisiennes who always use an exotic, seductive perfume when they wish to set hearts on fire.

Use all the Irresistible Beauty Aids . . . each has some special feature that gives you glorious new loveliness. Use Irresistible Brilliantine, especially after setting your wave, to give your hair a lustrous, silky sheen.

Treat yourself to a refreshing body rub with Irresistible Cologne . . . and use Irresistible Talc for complete daintiness . . . never harsh or gritty . . . always soft, soothing and delicately fragrant. All Irresistible Beauty Aids are perfumed with the famous Irresistible Perfume. Guaranteed to be absolutely pure and of the finest quality. Full size packages only 10¢ each at your 5 and 10¢ store.

B: The Mighty Barnum
(20th Century)

This picture, with Wallace Beery in the title role, somehow doesn't quite come off. It is too episodic, which is, perhaps what chiefly lets you down.

Mr. Beery plays the famous figure as a kind of Peck's Bad Boy, a lovable soul who is always in mischief. And so, it is difficult to associate him with a great showman imbued with the spirit of a Steve Brodie. Indeed, Wally has portrayed this character before. As recently, for instance, as in "Treasure Island."

Jenny Lind, Horace Greeley and the poet, Longfellow, contemporaries of Barnum, are all there for you to see. And there are the freaks, a parade, a fire, a banquet for Jenny, during which P. T. thoroughly disgraces himself; well, just about everything and yet it doesn't seem to much matter.

Adolphe Menjou, as Barnum's aide, gives the best performance. Janet Beecher is good in the thankless role of the wife and Virginia Bruce makes a lovely Jenny Lind. When she sings, you'll get a thrill. It shows just how far synchronization has progressed.

However—and not to be a "backer-outer" either, "Barnum" should make money for its producers.

B: Behold My Wife
(Paramount)

Here is a story of hate and love, revenge and sacrifice, dealing with life among the blue-bloods and the redskins. Despite these various elements and castes, the yarn is rather weak and wandering and most of the roles sadly underwritten. Now, having given you in a couple of sentences the "what's wrong with this picture," we'll right about face and mention its good points.

First of all, there are the characterizations; and how the cast rose to and above the occasion! Gene Raymond, as a young man out to get even with his social family upon whom he blames his middle-class sweetheart's suicide, handles his role with real finesse. Sylvia Sidney makes a luscious-looking Indian maiden, who completely captivates the smart set arraigned to laugh at her, and Laura Hope Crews, as usual, gives a fine account of herself.

Of course, if you've been wondering how the "other harf" live, don't take too literally the antics of the "ritzies" in this picture. There is something of the Bowery about them, but then, perhaps they're laboring under the delusion that it's swank to be cruel. At that, after messing up each others' lives in the first part of the story, everyone sort of goes "self-sacrificy" in the last.

B: West of the Pecos
(RKO-Radio)

Out in the wild and woolly West where men are men and women are scarce, lies the locale of this picture. Due to that dearth of damsels, Terrill Lambeth (Martha Sleeper) disguises herself as a boy, when she and her father (Samuel Hinds) leave the destitute South after the Civil War and strike out for the West to seek a living. Complications begin to pile up when Pecos (Richard Dix) joins their party. His introduction to Terrill is a swift kick in the breeches, which necessitates a series of readjustments before the final clinch. Dix is a convincing cowboy, Martha Sleeper is excellent in a difficult role, and the entire cast is uniformly good, while the photography is exceptionally beautiful. There's plenty of shooting, wild Indians, and cattle rustling, too. Indeed, the only missing ingredient is the "Mellerdrammer" touch. In short, it's a Western that even an Easterner would relish.

B: La Cucaracha
(RKO-Radio)

Here's a short that deserves a review! "La Cucaracha" is just the type of picture to which technicolor adds such charm. Director Lloyd Corrigan has captured all the flavor of Old Mexico in this gay, colorful portrayal of an evening in a Mexican café.

The native dances are beautifully done and accentuated by vivid costumes and scenery. Steffi Duna is the fiery, black-eyed chiquita, who uses all her powers of wit, malice and beauty to hold the love of the dashing Don Alvarado.

THE REPORT CARD

Short Reviews of Current Pictures

THESE PICTURES GET "A"

ANNE OF GREEN GABLES (RKO).
You'll love Anne Shirley in the title rôle. Helen Westley, O. P. Heggie, Sara Haden and Tom Brown do excellent work, too.

BABY TAKE A BOW (Fox).
Shirley Temple, Jimmy Dunn and Claire Trevor in a fast-moving tale.

THE BARRETTS OF WIMPOLE STREET (M-G-M).
Don't miss it. Norma Shearer, Charles Laughton and Fredric March.

BELLE OF THE NINETIES (Paramount).
Typical Mae West fare. John Miljan, Roger Pryor, John Mack Brown and Katharine DeMille in supporting rôles.

BROADWAY BILL (Columbia).
Horse racing enthusiasts will get a kick out of this. Swell work by Myrna Loy, Warner Baxter and Walter Connolly.

BULLDOG DRUMMOND STRIKES BACK (20th Century).
Thrilling mystery. Ronald Colman, Loretta Young and Charlie Butterworth.

THE CAPTAIN HATES THE SEA (Columbia).
A fine cast insures good entertainment—Walter Connolly, John Gilbert, Alison Skipworth, Victor McLaglen, Helen Vinson, Fred Keating and Wynne Gibson.

CLEOPATRA (Paramount).
Beautiful DeMille production. With Claudette Colbert, Warren William and Henry Wilcoxon.

THE GAY DIVORCEE (RKO).
Musical de luxe with Fred Astaire's divine dancing. And Ginger Rogers, Edward Everett Horton, Alice Brady, Erik Rhodes and Eric Blore.

THE GIRL FROM MISSOURI (M-G-M).
Jean Harlow as a society-minded chorus girl. With Franchot Tone, Lionel Barrymore, Lewis Stone and Patsy Kelly.

GREAT EXPECTATIONS (Universal).
The Charles Dickens' classic superbly enacted by Henry Hull, Florence Reed, Phillips Holmes and Jane Wyatt.

HAPPINESS AHEAD (First National).
Rich girl, Josephine Hutchinson, falls for window-cleaner, Dick Powell. Dick's songs include the hit tune, "Pop Goes My Heart."

THE HUMAN SIDE (Universal).
Adolphe Menjou, Doris Kenyon, Reginald Owen and Charlotte Henry.

JANE EYRE (Monogram).
Virginia Bruce and Colin Clive in the screen version of the Bronte novel.

JUDGE PRIEST (Fox).
Will Rogers does an exceptionally fine characterization. Berton Churchill, Henry B. Walthall, Rochelle Hudson, Anita Louise and Tom Brown in supporting rôles.

KID MILLIONS (Sam Goldwyn).
Another Eddie Cantor special. Ann Sothern, George Murphy, Ethel Merman, Warren Hymer, Block and Sully deserve praise for their work.

LADY BY CHOICE (Columbia).
In which fan dancer, Carole Lombard, adopts a mother, May Robson. Walter Connolly and Roger Pryor here, too.

MADAME DU BARRY (Warners).
Dolores Del Rio in the title rôle of this beautiful production.

THE MERRY WIDOW (M-G-M).
Jeanette MacDonald and Maurice Chevalier will delight you. Don't miss it.

MURDER AT THE VANITIES (Paramount).
A musical-murder comedy, with Carl Brisson and Kitty Carlisle.

ONE NIGHT OF LOVE (Columbia).
One of the best pictures of the year—a triumph for Grace Moore. With Tullio Carminati, Luis Alberni, Mona Barrie, Lyle Talbot and Henry Armetta.

THE PAINTED VEIL (M-G-M).
You'll like the Garbo in her latest effort. Herbert Marshall and George Brent are with her.

THE PRESIDENT VANISHES (Paramount).
Exceedingly interesting film entertainment. With Arthur Byron in the title rôle and Paul Kelly, Andy Devine, Peggy Conklin and Janet Beecher in the supporting cast.

THE PURSUIT OF HAPPINESS (Paramount).
Concerning the Revolutionary Days and the quaint custom of "bundling." You'll enjoy Francis Lederer, Joan Bennett, Charlie Ruggles and Mary Boland in this charming picture.

ROMANCE IN MANHATTAN (RKO).
Francis Lederer as an immigrant boy and Ginger Rogers as a chorus girl. It's a swell picture.

ROMANCE IN THE RAIN (Universal).
Nice comedy. Roger Pryor, Heather Angel, Victor Moore and Esther Ralston.

SEQUOIA (M-G-M).
Beautiful photography and excellent acting by Jean Parker, Russell Hardie and Harry Lowe, Jr., make this a "must."

SHE LOVES ME NOT (Paramount).
Swellegant comedy. Bing Crosby, Miriam Hopkins and Kitty Carlisle. Bing sings "Love in Bloom."

THE THIN MAN (M-G-M).
Exceptionally exciting mystery. Myrna Loy and William Powell.

TREASURE ISLAND (M-G-M).
The Robert Louis Stevenson tale brought to the screen, with Jackie Cooper, Wallace Beery, Lewis Stone, Otto Kruger and Lionel Barrymore.

WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS (M-G-M).
The James M. Barrie play superbly enacted by Helen Hayes and Brian Aherne, who, incidentally, will surprise you—he's that good.

THE WHITE PARADE (Fox).
Loretta Young is amazingly good in this hospital tale. John Boles, Dorothy Wilson and Jane Darwell.

THESE PICTURES GET "B"

THE AGE OF INNOCENCE (RKO).
John Boles and Irene Dunne.

BACHELOR BAIT (RKO).
Amusing story about a matrimonial agency. Stu Erwin, Pert Kelton, Skeets Gallagher and Rochelle Hudson.

BEHOLD MY WIFE (Paramount).
Sylvia Sidney as an Indian gal and Gene Raymond as a blue blood give fine accounts of themselves. Laura Hope Crews here, too.

BEYOND THE LAW (Columbia).
A Tim McCoy thriller. Shirley Grey supplies the feminine interest.

BY YOUR LEAVE (RKO).
Frank Morgan steals the show. Genevieve Tobin, Neil Hamilton and Marian Nixon.

CARAVAN (Fox).
Its gypsy music and lovely settings make it very worth while. Charles Boyer, Loretta Young, Phillips Holmes and Jean Parker.

THE CAT'S PAW (Fox).
You'll enjoy Harold Lloyd's latest comedy. Una Merkel, George Barbier and Nat Pendleton with him.

CHU CHIN CHOW (Gaumont-British).
Something decidedly different in musicals. With Anna May Wong and Fritz Kortner.

COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO (United Artists).
Robert Donat and Elissa Landi in Dumas' thrilling story. Be sure to see it.

DESIRABLE (Warners).
Excellent performances by Jean Muir, George Brent and Verree Teasdale make this worth seeing.

ENTER MADAME (Paramount).
Concerning a temperamental prima donna, Elissa Landi. With Cary Grant, Lynne Overman, Sharon Lynne, Frank Albertson and Cecilia Parker.

EVELYN PRENTICE (M-G-M).
Myrna Loy, William Powell, Una Merkel and Cora Sue Collins.

THE FIREBIRD (Warners).
Swell murder mystery. Verree Teasdale, Ricardo Cortez, Anita Louise and Lionel Atwill.

FLIRTATION WALK (Warners).
West Point locale. Ruby Keeler, Dick Powell, Pat O'Brien, Ross Alexander and John Eldredge.

GENTLEMEN ARE BORN (Warners).
Concerning the fate of four college boys, Franchot Tone, Ross Alexander, Nick Foran and Robert Light. Margaret Lindsay, Jean Muir and Ann Dvorak provide the heart interest.

HAT, COAT AND GLOVE (RKO).
Exciting courtroom drama. Ricardo Cortez, Barbara Robbins, John Beal and Dorothy Burgess do excellent work.

HAVE A HEART (M-G-M).
Jean Parker, Jimmy Dunn, Una Merkel and Stu Erwin.

HERE COMES THE GROOM (Paramount).
Swell comedy. Jack Haley and Mary Boland.

HIDE-OUT (M-G-M).
Charming little story, with Bob Montgomery and Maureen O'Sullivan.

IMITATION OF LIFE (Universal).
If you want to weep, this will do the trick. Claudette Colbert, Warren William, Louise Beavers, Fredi Washington and Ned Sparks.

IT'S A GIFT (Paramount).
A W. C. Fields laugh-getter. With Kathleen Howard and Baby LeRoy.

KENTUCKY KERNELS (RKO).
Wheeler and Woolsey do their stuff again, aided by Mary Carlisle, Spanky McFarland and Noah Beery.

TITLE CHANGES

Old Title	New Title	Company
Backfield	The Band Plays On	M-G-M
Back Porch	It's a Gift	Paramount
Bad Penny	The Blind Road	Select
Black Hell	Black Fury	Warner Bros.
Burnt Ranch	The Westerner	Columbia
Casino de Paree	Go Into Your Dance	Warner Bros.
Code of the West	Home on the Range	Paramount
Concealment	The Secret Bride	Warner Bros.
Girl of the Islands	Red Morning	RKO-Radio
I Murdered a Man	Dangerous Gentleman	Universal
Me Without You	One Hour Late	Paramount
Mystery Blonde	The Mystery Woman	Fox
A Perfect Week-End	St. Louis Kid	Warner Bros.
Portrait of Laura Bales	Grand Old Girl	RKO-Radio
The Queen's Affair	The Runaway Queen	United Artists
Racing Luck	Red Hot Tires	First National
Quicksands	Square Shooter	Columbia
Repeal	The Gay Bride	M-G-M
Spring 3100	Jealousy	Columbia
Stake Out	Men of the Night	Columbia
State vs. Elinor Norton	Elinor Norton	Fox
The Wedding Night	Broken Soil	United Artists

HAVE lips
THAT LURE TONIGHT

Irresistible Lip Lure is an utterly new, different lipstick. Its cream base carries gorgeous color deep into your lips so that they seem to glow with an inner fire...that makes them beg for kisses.

Prove to yourself how different it is. Hold a piece of tissue paper over another piece of paper. With your fingers rub some Irresistible Lip Lure into the tissue paper. You will find that the color penetrates right through onto the second sheet! In the same way... your lips absorb Irresistible Lip Lure...no paste or film remains...just soft, warm, ripe, red indelible color. Four ravishing shades to choose from. Have lips that lure tonight. Buy Irresistible Lip Lure today.

Use Irresistible Cold Cream to remove Irresistible Lip Lure and Powder at night . . . and to restore fresh, glowing youth to your skin. Irresistible Vanishing Cream heals chapped skin and hands. Irresistible Face Powder is so satin fine and clinging that it absolutely hides blemishes . . . stays on for hours . . . gives you a skin that invites caresses. Buy Irresistible Beauty Aids today. Full size packages only 10¢ each at your 5 and 10¢ store.

SO TIRED, SO BLUE

Till This ALL-VEGETABLE Laxative Solved Her Constipation

SHE was so tired—depressed—always having colds and headaches. And she had tried so many things she almost despaired of getting relief. Then she discovered the real answer. A laxative that gave thorough, natural cleansing, not mere partial bowel action.

Can there be such a difference in laxatives? Stop and think for a minute. Nature's Remedy (NR Tablets) contains only natural plant and vegetable laxatives, properly balanced. No phenol derivatives. Ask any doctor the difference. You'll be surprised at the wonderful feeling that follows the use of NR. You're so refreshed—toned up—so pleasantly alive. You'll want to give NR's a fair trial immediately. They are so kind to your system—so quickly effective for relieving headaches, colds, biliousness, chronic fatigue or bad skin. They're non-habit forming—another proof that nature's way is best. The economical 25 dose box, only 25c at any drug store.

FREE 1935 Calendar-Thermometer, beautifully designed in colors and gold. Also samples TUMS and NR. Send stamp for postage and packing to A. H. LEWIS CO., Desk 148BY, St. Louis, Mo.

Nature's Remedy NR TO-NIGHT TOMORROW ALRIGHT GET A 25¢ BOX

"TUMS" Quick relief for acid indigestion, sour stomach, heartburn. Only 10c.

VIVION CREAMS 10¢ Each

PHOTO Enlargements

Clear enlargement, bust, full length or part group, pets or other subjects made from any photo, snapshot or tintype at low price of 49c each; 3 for $1.00. Send as many photos as you desire. Return of original photos guaranteed.

ONLY 49¢ EACH

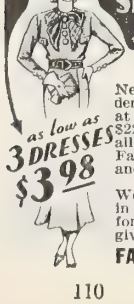
SEND NO MONEY!

Just mail photo with name and address. In a few days postman will deliver beautiful enlargement that will never fade. Pay only 45c plus postage or send 50c—3 for $1.00, and we will pay postage ourselves.

BEAUTIFULLY CARVED FRAME FREE! To acquaint you with the HIGH quality of our work we will frame, until further notice, all pastel colored enlargements FREE. Illustrations of beautifully carved frames for your choice will be sent with your enlargement. Don't delay. Act now. Mail your Photos today. Write NEW ERA PORTRAIT COMPANY 11 E. HURON STREET, DEPT. 646 CHICAGO, ILLINOIS



11 x 14 inches

Women up to $22 a Week and your own Dresses FREE

Showing Latest FROCKS

. . Direct from Factory!

as low as 3 DRESSES $3.98

No House-to-House Canvassing

New kind of work for ambitious women demonstrating gorgeous Paris-styled dresses at direct factory prices. You make up to $22 weekly during spare hours and get all your own dresses free to wear and show. Fashion Frocks are nationally advertised and are known to women everywhere.

No Investment Ever Required

We send you an elaborate Style Presentation in full colors and rich fabrics. Write fully for details of this marvelous opportunity giving dress size and choice of color.

FASHION FROCKS Inc. Dept. B-250 Cincinnati, O.

KISS AND MAKE-UP (Paramount).
A burlesque on beauty parlors. Cary Grant, Helen Mack, Genevieve Tobin and Edward Everett Horton.

LA CUCARACHA (RKO).
A technicolor short that's a sensation. Steffi Duna and Don Alvarado.

LADIES SHOULD LISTEN (Paramount).
A nice little comedy. Cary Grant, Frances Drake, Nydia Westman, Edward Everett Horton and Charlie Ray.

THE LAST GENTLEMAN (20th Century).
George Arliss, Edna May Oliver, Janet Beecher and Ralph Morgan.

LET'S TALK IT OVER (Universal).
A comedy with Chester Morris and Mae Clarke.

MAYBE IT'S LOVE (Warners).
Lotsa fun here. With Joseph Cawthorne, Gloria Stuart and Ross Alexander.

MENACE (Paramount).
Thrilling murder mystery. Paul Cavanagh, Gertrude Michael, Henrietta Crosman and John Lodge.

THE MERRY FRINKS (Warners).
Aline MacMahon, Guy Kibbee and Allen Jenkins make this very amusing.

MIDNIGHT ALIBI (Warners).
Richard Barthelmess as a gangster. Helen Chandler and Ann Dvorak.

THE MIGHTY BARNUM (Twentieth Century).
Picturization of the great circus man's life with Wally Beery in the title rôle and Adolphe Menjou as his partner. Janet Beecher and Virginia Bruce in supporting rôles.

MILLION DOLLAR RANSOM (Universal).
Plenty of action here. Edward Arnold, Phillips Holmes, Mary Carlisle and Andy Devine.

MURDER IN THE PRIVATE CAR (M-G-M).
Chills and laughs in this one. Charlie Ruggles, Mary Carlisle and Una Merkel.

NOW AND FOREVER (Paramount).
Gary Cooper, Carole Lombard and Shirley Temple.

THE OLD-FASHIONED WAY (Paramount).
W. C. Fields at his best.

OUR DAILY BREAD (Viking-United Artists).
Karen Morley and Tom Keene.

PECK'S BAD BOY (Sol Lesser-Fox).
You'll enjoy Jackie Cooper and Thomas Meighan in this.

PRIVATE SCANDAL (Paramount).
Mary Brian, Phillips Holmes and ZaSu Pitts in a mystery with laughs.

READY FOR LOVE (Paramount).
Enjoyable comedy. With Richard Arlen, Ida Lupino, Marjorie Rambeau and Trent Durkin.

THE RICHEST GIRL IN THE WORLD (RKO).
Miriam Hopkins does beautiful work in the title rôle. Joel McCrea, Fay Wray, Reginald Denny and Henry Stephenson deserve praise, too.

THE ST. LOUIS KID (Warners).
Lots of pep and some good laughs in this Jimmy Cagney picture. Allen Jenkins and Pat Ellis here, too.

SERVANTS' ENTRANCE (Fox).
The Janet Gaynor fans will like it. Lew Ayres plays opposite her.

THE SILVER STREAK (RKO).
All about railroads and a new streamline train. Hardie Albright, Sally Blane and William Farnum.

SMARTY (Warners).
Worth while comedy. Joan Blondell, Warren William and Edward Everett Horton.

STAMBOUL QUEST (M-G-M).
A spy story. With Myrna Loy, George Brent and Lionel Atwill.

STUDENT TOUR (M-G-M).
"Professor" Butterworth and Jimmy Durante will make you laugh.

SUCH WOMEN ARE DANGEROUS (Fox).
Warner Baxter and Rochelle Hudson.

WE LIVE AGAIN (Sam Goldwyn).
Anna Sten and Fredric March in a talkie version of the silent picture, "Resurrection." See it.

WEST OF THE PECOS (RKO).
A western with a lot of snap. Richard Dix and Martha Sleeper handle their rôles beautifully.

WHOM THE GODS DESTROY (Columbia).
Walter Connolly.

A WICKED WOMAN (M-G-M).
You're going to like Mady Christians in the title role. Jean Parker, Betty Furness and Charles Bickford.

THE WORLD MOVES ON (Fox).
Madeleine Carroll, Franchot Tone and Raul Roulien head a large cast.

YOU BELONG TO ME (Paramount).
A tale about vaudeville actors. Lee Tracy, Helen Mack, David Holt and Helen Morgan.

THESE PICTURES GET "C"

BABES IN TOYLAND (Hal Roach).
The kids will enjoy this one. Laurel and Hardy, Charlotte Henry and Felix Knight.

BRITISH AGENT (Warners).
Leslie Howard and Kay Francis in the film version of the popular book.

CHARLIE CHAN IN LONDON (Fox).
Warner Oland, Drue Leyton and Mona Barrie carry on the latest "Chan" thriller.

CRIMSON ROMANCE (Mascot).
A war picture. With Ben Lyon, Sari Maritza and Eric Von Stroheim.

THE CURTAIN FALLS (Chesterfield).
Henrietta Crosman, Dorothy Lee, John Darrow and Holmes Herbert.

DEATH ON THE DIAMOND (M-G-M).
Baseball yarn. With Robert Young, Madge Evans, Nat Pendleton, Paul Kelly and Ted Healy.

THE DRAGON MURDER CASE (Warners).
Dull mystery. Warren William and Lyle Talbot.

THE DUDE RANGER (Fox).
George O'Brien and Irene Hervey.

THE FOUNTAIN (RKO).
Fine performances by Ann Harding, Jean Hersholt and Paul Lukas rescue it.

GIFT OF GAB (Universal).
Huge cast includes, Edmund Lowe, Gloria Stuart, Paul Lukas, Alice White, Chester Morris, Roger Pryor and a flock of radio headliners.

GRAND CANARY (Fox).
A weak yarn. Warner Baxter and Madge Evans.

HELL BENT FOR LOVE (Columbia).
Tim McCoy and Lillian Bond.

HOUSEWIFE (Warners).
Dull. With George Brent, Bette Davis and Ann Dvorak.

I AM A THIEF (Warners).
Concerning a jewel robbery. Ricardo Cortez and Mary Astor in the leads.

JOURNAL OF A CRIME (Warners).
Ruth Chatterton and Adolphe Menjou.

LIMEHOUSE BLUES (Paramount).
Slow-moving tale with a Chinatown locale. George Raft, Jean Parker and Anna May Wong.

KANSAS CITY PRINCESS (Warners).
Joan Blondell and Glenda Farrell in a comedy.

THE LEMON DROP KID (Paramount).
Lee Tracy, Helen Mack, Baby LeRoy, William Frawley, Minna Gombell and Kitty Kelly.

LOVE TIME (Fox).
Concerning the life of Franz Schubert. Nils Asther and Pat Paterson in the leading rôles.

MERRY WIVES OF RENO (Warners).
Trite comedy. Glenda Farrell, Guy Kibbee, Margaret Lindsay and Donald Woods.

ONE IS GUILTY (Columbia).
Ralph Bellamy and Shirley Grey.

OUTCAST LADY (M-G-M).
Suffers from censorship trouble. However, Constance Bennett, Herbert Marshall, Elizabeth Allen and Ralph Forbes do their best.

THE PARTY'S OVER (Columbia).
Stu Erwin, Ann Sothern and Arline Judge.

RETURN OF THE TERROR (First National).
Lyle Talbot and Mary Astor have the leading rôles in this mystery drama.

THE SCARLET EMPRESS (Paramount).
Marlene Dietrich's latest. Rather heavy.

SHE WAS A LADY (Fox).
Helen Twelvetrees and Ralph Morgan try to save a weak yarn.

6-DAY BIKE RIDER (Warners).
The Joe E. Brown fans will like it. Maxine Doyle,

COUPON FOR ORDERING PATTERNS ILLUSTRATED ON PAGE 61

MODERN SCREEN Pattern Service
149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

I am enclosing.....(in coin or United States stamps) for which please send me the following:

Pattern No..... Size..... Pattern No..... Size.....

Pattern No..... Size.....

Do you want our latest Pattern Book?

[Patterns are 15c each. Book 10c when ordered with pattern, 15c when ordered separately. Patterns are 20c if you live outside of the United States. Books 20c separately, 15c with pattern. No foreign or Canadian stamps accepted.]

Name.....

Street Address.....

City and State.....

(Please write in pencil)

REVEALING Secret of NATURAL HAIR CURLS

ABOVE—ordinary curler reverses ends, curls friz and unwind.
BELOW—Humphrey curls hair all one way. Nature's way—curls that last

Marvelous! New Humphrey Coil Curler with the quick dry tab, sets beautiful permanent curls that last until washed out, even when combed daily. Forms end curls, hanging curls, roll bobs and waves in alluring effects before found impossible. Easy to use; invisible; light; comfortable; no metal to cut or injure. A new discovery. Millions sold by one user telling another about the Humphrey Coil Curler with the cloth tab. A new curling method—that's the secret! At your 5-and-10c store—if dealer can't supply, send 10c for trial card of 4.

HUMPHREY PRODUCTS CO., 1929 3rd Ave., DETROIT, MICH.

HUMPHREY COIL CURLER
with the Cloth Tab!

BLACKHEADS!

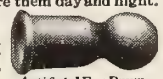
NEVER SQUEEZE BLACKHEADS. IT CAUSES SCARS, INFECTION!

Dissolve Blackheads scientifically with amazing KLEERPLEX WASH. THIS WONDERFUL NEW DISCOVERY CONTAINS 5 SCIENTIFIC INGREDIENTS. Also refines Large Pores, stops embarrassing Greasiness, Shine. Clears Muddy, Sallow, Tanned Skin. Has marvelous medicated pore purifying powers. Gets at the cause QUICKLY! SAFELY! RENEWS! LIGHTENS! BEAUTIFIES your skin. Gives you that clean-cut attractive look. SEE INSTANT IMPROVEMENT. No chemicals. No staying home. A GUARANTEED PURE NATURAL PRODUCT APPROVED BY HEALTH AUTHORITIES AND THOUSANDS OF HAPPY USERS—Men and Women. Nothing like it! Stop wasting time and money on ordinary products. Your skin deserves the best. Get your 2 months' supply of Kleerplex Wash TODAY. Just send $1, (plus .10 postage) to KLEERPLEX (Dept. MK81) 1 W. 34th St., N. Y. City or pay postman (plus C. O. D. charges). Outside U. S. $1.25 and no C. O. D.s. MONEY BACK GUARANTEE!
Copyright 1934: Kleerplex.

BUNIONS
Reduced Quickly

Pain stops almost instantly. Then blessed relief! Fairyfoot helps reduce painful ugly bunions. Foot soon appears more natural. Fairyfoot is easy to use, entirely harmless. Used on over two million feet since 1897. Write for FREE trial treatment today.
Fairyfoot Products Co., Chicago
1223 S. Wabash Ave. Dept. 2712

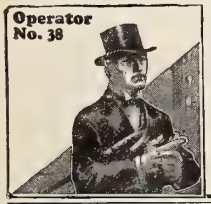
FREE TEST



5¢ EACH LITTLE BLUE BOOKS

Send postcard for our free catalogue. Thousands of bargains. Address:
LITTLE BLUE BOOK CO., Catalogue Dept., Desk 348, GIRARD, KANSAS

No Joke To Be Deaf



—Every deaf person knows that—
Mr. Way made himself hear his watch tick after being deaf for twenty-five years, with his Artificial Ear Drums. He wore them day and night. They stopped his head noises. They are invisible and comfortable, no wires or batteries. Write for TRUE STORY. Also booklet on Deafness.

Artificial Ear Drum

THE WAY COMPANY
717 Hofmann Bldg. Detroit, Michigan

Operator No. 38

Follow This Man

Secret Service Operator No. 38 is on the job! Running down Counterfeit Gang. Tell-tale finger prints in murdered girl's room. Thrill, Mystery.
The Confidential Reports of Operator No. 38 made to his chief. Write for it.
Free
Earn a Regular Monthly Salary
YOU can become a Finger Print Expert at home, in spare time. Write for details if 17 or over.
Institute of Applied Science
1920 Sunnyside Ave.
Dept. 72-12 Chicago, Ill.

35¢ BUYS A DANDY CLASS PIN

SEND FOR NEW BIG 1935 CATALOG!
Shows over 300 smart, up-to-the-minute pin and ring designs. Prices even less by dozen. Money back guarantee. Oldest, largest makers. Write today

BASTIAN BROS. CO.
74 Bastian Building
ROCHESTER, N. Y.

$1.60 A BEAUTIFUL RING

Be a Nurse

MAKE $25-$35 A WEEK

You can learn at home in spare time. Course endorsed by physicians. Thousands of graduates. Est. 36 years. One graduate has charge of 10-bed hospital. Another saved $400 while learning. Equipment included. Men and women 18 to 60. High school not required. Easy tuition payments. Write us now.
CHICAGO SCHOOL OF NURSING
Dept. 232, 26 N. Ashland Blvd., Chicago, Ill.
Please send free booklet and 32 sample lesson pages.
Name _____
City _____ State _____ Age _____

Frank McHugh and Gordon Westcott.

STRAIGHT IS THE WAY (M-G-M).
Franchot Tone, Karen Morley and Jack LaRue.

SUCCESSFUL FAILURE (Monogram).
Concerning a middle-class family. William Collier, Sr., Lucille Gleason, George Breakstone, Russell Hopton and Gloria Shea.

THEIR BIG MOMENT (RKO).
Pitts and Summerville don't come up to expectations this time.

365 NIGHTS IN HOLLYWOOD (Fox).
About Hollywood's phoney movie school racket. With Jimmy Dunn, Alice Faye and Mitchell and Durant.

TRANSATLANTIC MERRY-GO-ROUND (United Artists).
A musical that doesn't jell. Gene Raymond, Nancy Carroll, Mitzi Green, Jack Benny, the Boswell Sisters, and many more stellar names.

WAGON WHEELS (Paramount).
A Western, featuring Randolph Scott, Gail Patrick, Raymond Hatton and Monte Blue.

WEDNESDAY'S CHILD (RKO).
The New York stage hit brought to the screen. Edward Arnold's performance is outstanding. Frankie Thomas and Karen Morley here, too.

YOUNG AND BEAUTIFUL (Mascot).
William Haines, Judith Allen, Vince Barnett, John Miljan and the Wampas Stars of 1934. Uninteresting.

THESE PICTURES GET "D"

BEGGARS HOLIDAY (Tower).
Hardie Albright, Sally O'Neill and Barbara Barondess.

BLACK MOON (Columbia).
Jack Holt and Fay Wray in a dull yarn.

THE GAY BRIDE (M-G-M).
The gangster theme again. Chester Morris, Carole Lombard, Nat Pendleton, ZaSu Pitts, Leo Carrillo and Sam Hardy try to overcome a weak story.

I GIVE MY LOVE (Universal).
Paul Lukas, Wynne Gibson and Eric Linden can't put this one over.

THE LADY IS WILLING (Columbia).
Disappointing, in spite of Leslie Howard's presence.

LET'S BE RITZY (Universal).
Lew Ayres and Patricia Ellis.

THE MOST PRECIOUS THING IN LIFE (Columbia).
Jean Arthur, Richard Cromwell, Anita Louise and Donald Cook. Skip it.

SECRET OF THE CHATEAU (Universal).
Pretty bad. Claire Dodd, Jack LaRue, Alice White and George E. Stone.

STOLEN SWEETS (Chesterfield).
Charles Starrett and Sally Blane in a dull yarn.

We Announce a Contest

(Continued from page 6)

compulsory—you can enter the contest without doing this—but if you want to try, you can. You stand just as good a chance of winning a prize—even first prize—if you don't write the set of lyrics, but we have arranged for an extra added honor to be given to the person who writes the best set of lyrics.

We have arranged, also, for a worthwhile judge, should you submit the words for a song. A gentleman by the name of Julius P. Witmark, Jr. We know that you have heard of the firm of M. Witmark and Sons, who have published most of the songs for the Warner musicals. Well, Julius Witmark, Jr., who, for many years was connected with this firm, has worked out this contest for you and will judge not only the answers to the various questions, but also the lyrics which you submit. As you can well imagine, with the experience he has had, Mr. Witmark can spot a good set of lyrics. And he will judge yours as carefully as any of the famous lyric writers' he has judged in the past.

We repeat—this isn't compulsory (but don't you think it would be fun?) and you can enter the contest just the same, if this idea scares you. Watch for the opening—in our next issue—dated March. Cheerio!

PERFORMS 'EYE MAGIC'

Learn the art of enhancing or changing your personality with a few deft touches of the Soft Luna Eyebrow pencil. Acquire sophistication—the allure of the siren—the attraction of intelligence.

Our booklet, "Eye Magic," tells you how. Write for free copy today.

• Sold in all 5 and 10 cent stores . . . . .

J. S. Staedtler, Inc., 55 Worth St., N. Y. City

GENTLEMEN: Please send me your booklet "Eye Magic" MS-2
Name _____
Address _____
City _____ State _____
Brand now used _____ Where purchased _____

MAKE YOUR OWN
"SKIN PEEL"

A guaranteed harmless effective lotion which eliminates imperfections of the skin such as blackheads, freckles and the like, including indications of age. The process is gradual so that it causes no embarrassment to the user. A remarkable transformation is easily produced. I will send formula and full directions for making and using for only $1.00. Send money order to Mrs. M. McCool Box 604 Danbury, Conn.

WANT TO BROADCAST?

If you have talent here's your chance to get into Broadcasting. New Floyd Gibbons method trains you at home in spare time. Fascinating course fully explained in Free Booklet, "How to Find Your Place in Broadcasting." Send for your copy today. Give age. Floyd Gibbons School of Broadcasting, 2000 14th St., N. W., Dept. 5B87, Washington, D. C.

Sell 7 Big Bars

OF FINEST TOILET SOAPS
for only 25¢
Seven cakes of finest toilet soaps in handsome package sells for only 25c. The kind of soap used in every home every day. Selling price marked on box $1.00. You sell for only 25c. Housewives buy on sight. Up to 100% profit for you. Write for money-making details and facts about other sensational Victor Soap deals. For quick action send 25c for actual full sized sample.
VICTOR SOAP CO. Dept. MO-25 Dayton, O

VOICE

100% Improvement Guaranteed
We build, strengthen the vocal organs— not with singing lessons—but by fundamentally sound and scientifically correct silent exercises . . and absolutely guarantee to improve any singing or speaking voice at least 100% . . . Write for wonderful voice book—sent free. Learn WHY you can now have the voice you want. No literature sent to anyone under 17 unless signed by parent.
PERFECT VOICE INSTITUTE, Studio 72-12
308 No. Michigan Ave., Chicago

3 Perfumes

SUBTLE, fascinating, alluring. Sell regularly for $12.00 an ounce. Made from the essence of flowers:—

Three odors:
(1) Admiration
(2) Gardenia
(3) Irresistible

A single drop lasts a week!

Send only 20¢

To pay for postage and handling send only 20c (silver or stamps) for 3 trial bottles. Only one set to each new customer. PAUL RIEGER, 148 First St., San Francisco, Calif.

End Wrinkles, Age Lines New Beauty Method

Look 10 Years Younger
Clearer, Prettier Skin Overnight

FREE Gifts if You Send at Once

Mail Coupon Today for Amazing Discovery

LOOKS YEARS YOUNGER

"People marvel at my skin and youthful looks. I look 20 years younger than I really am, thanks to Sem-Pray."—Mrs. M. B. Spillers, Richmond, Va.

Use Sem-Pray Creme and skin instantly looks fresher and prettier than ever before. Use also at bedtime and further improvement by morning will amaze you. Cleanses, clears, softens, whitens, enlivens skin. Erasable wrinkles and age-lines quickly begin to fade away. Tones skin tissues without growing hair. Reduces large pores. Different; unique. Contains rare Eastern oils combined by secret process never used in jar creams. The only beauty and youth aid you need. The only creme of its kind in the world. Safe, pure. Dainty, oval container fits handbag. Carry it with you, gives many beauty treatments a day or use whenever skin needs freshening. Wonderful foundation cream, too. Large, economical size at drug and department stores. 60c. Smaller size at 10c stores. Or mail coupon.

Sem-Pray

FREE Mail coupon today for 7-day package Sem-Pray Creme. Will include introductory packets Sem-Pray Face Powder and Rouge FREE.

Madame LaNore, Sempray Salons
Suite 1787-F, Grand Rapids, Michigan

Send generous 7-day package Sem-Pray Creme. Include introductory package Sem-Pray Rouge and Face Powder FREE. I enclose 10c for packing and mailing.

Name.....

Address.....

THE MYSTERIOUS WORLD WITHIN YOU

Those strange feelings of intuition and premonition are the urges of your inner self. Within you there is a world of unlimited power. Learn to use it and you can do the right thing at the right time and realize a life of happiness and abundance. Send for new, FREE, SEALED BOOK that tells how you may receive these teachings. Address: Scribe R. P. S.

ROSICRUCIAN BROTHERHOOD
SAN JOSE, CALIFORNIA

HARD OF HEARING?

SEND FOR THIS 30-DAY TRIAL TREATMENT

Which has restored the hearing, removed head noises and eliminated catarrh of the head for so many people. This treatment has been used by over 1,157,000 sufferers in the past 34 years. Write for full information about this ethical treatment used by a prominent ear specialist in his office practice, now simplified for home use.

DR. W. O. COFFEE CO.
1399 St. James Bldg. Davenport, Iowa

CONDON'S GIANT EVERBEARING TOMATO

"QUEEN OF THE MARKET." Big Money Maker. Large, solid fruit; excellent canner. To introduce to you our Northern Grown Live Seeds and Plants, we will mail you 125 seeds of Condon's Giant Everbearing Tomato and our big 1935 Catalog of Seeds, Plants, Shrubs, 196-Page Book with complete planting instructions. Send 3c stamp to cover postage.

Lowest Prices For Quality Seed
CONDON BROS., SEEDSMEN
BOX 137, ROCKFORD, ILLINOIS

Stoves AT FACTORY PRICES!

SALE CATALOG—FREE

Over 200 Styles and Sizes of Stoves, Ranges, Furnaces at Factory Prices and Easy Terms—as little as 18c a day. More Bargains than in 20 Big Stores. New styles, new features, new colors. Year to Pay—30 days free trial—360 days approval test—24-hour shipments. The Kalamazoo Stove Co., Mfrs. 405 Rochester Avenue, Kalamazoo, Michigan.

Over 900,000 Satisfied Users
35 Years in Business
Write for FREE Catalog

"A Kalamazoo Direct to You"

Modern Screen Dramatic School

(Continued from page 62)

words thrilling if you want to make theatrical work your career, or if you're merely interested in amateur dramatics. Read every word carefully.

Says W. S. Van Dyke, "The first and most important piece of advice I would give to dramatic students is this: drop all expectations of success, cultivate shatterproof patience.

"Success comes as the result of many factors, luck being an important one of these. By wooing it too hard you're apt to miss it. The best thing is to forget about it and concentrate on work.

"Clark Gable gives an example of this. He'll tell anyone that he never expected success. He became an actor because he liked to act, because he enjoyed it. He never thought about being successful. It never occurred to him and he wasn't much interested in it. But he did want to learn all he could about acting. Today Clark is a reigning star. Was it luck, or what? Ask him. He doesn't know, either.

"Patience speaks for itself. It is an absolute necessity in this business. A scene must often be taken over several times. Then, again and again from various angles. If you become impatient, you lose poise and sureness. You get ruffled. But that's after you're in the business.

"Before this, you need more patience. Patience in rehearsing over and over again. Patience in studiously learning how to stand, to walk, to talk, to enunciate—in short, learning how to change yourself from a mere individual into a highly polished reflector of the playwright's or scenario writer's mood, emotion, feeling.

"People often enter the dramatic field with an 'arty' point of view. Vaguely they seek self-expression through dramatics. They pretend to an abhorrence of commercialism, wanting to be something 'artistic.' This is a major mistake, and no one who continues with this point of view can possibly succeed. Although the motion picture industry is in the business of manufacturing shadows and illusions, it must be practical and down-to-earth. And so must its actors.

DON'T misunderstand me. I don't say there's no place for art in films. It's what the industry needs. But art is not 'arty'; instead it is the result of hard work, patience, observation, intelligence and more hard work.

"If you wait for 'inspiration,' you'll wait until you grow grey. It comes but rarely and then means nothing if you're not prepared for it. You must have the groundwork of technique and experience to know how to direct inspiration, if it touches you.

"Acting requires the same thing as any job, including a talent for it, and including the factor of luck. Luck is important. Many good actors are starving; luck just didn't come along. But again, the important thing is to be ready for it in case it does. You can only study, work, observe—train, train, train—then hope for the best.

"In general I advise all prospective students to be careful of the dogmatic dramatic school. There are some very excellent schools but other schools sometimes do more harm than good and few of them have kept pace with the times. Acting now is much different from what it was twenty years ago, but many schools don't seem to have noticed this.

"Some schools teach how to 'read' lines, while lines, as a matter of fact, are no longer 'read.' They teach stereotyped precision gestures and technique. If a potentially good actor imbibes this at a formative age, it may take him years to learn differently when he reaches professionalism. It may even make him a bad actor for life.

"Today actors don't act; not, at least, as much as the audience does. Plays and film stories are more psychological. There is far less ranting and running about.

"All good actors have found that repressed emotion is far more pointed than the extravert kind. A mere quick dilation of the eyes is apt to be more effective than a scream. Real people don't thrash about in the dramatic moments of their lives. And neither do actors any more.

"Remember, too, that the audience is always a step ahead of you. Usually they know what you're going to do or say before you do or say it. Thus you must be quick, be fast, don't drag, hurry to keep up with them—or be ingenious enough to fool them.

"Being ingenious comes only from training. In general the following is true: Figure out how you would naturally do a thing, then do it naturally some other way. It sounds like a puzzle but I believe it to be sound advice. It's a method of fooling the audience, keeping them interested by being 'fresh' about your slightest movement.

"Here's an example. Say you have to respond to a knock on the door, cross the room and open it. Do it as you would naturally. You'll find it would make a humdrum, uninteresting scene. You open doors all the time, doing it automatically, uninterestingly. Now studiously do it some other way. You'll find you're thinking of your every movement, and thus each movement has a sparkle and freshness. The audience will be more interested. If you're ingenious and, possibly, stop at a table to pick something up on your way to the door, the audience will be even more interested.

"Fearlessness is important—learning to be afraid of nothing and not to care a hoot. You'll have a grace and a swing instead of the frozen technique of too-carefulness. It's a psychological factor that affects every word and movement.

"Joan Crawford has taken that stand on this new picture, 'Forsaking All Others.' It's a swift comedy and she's playing it swiftly, disregarding any conventional 'staginess.' The result is that she's turning in a swell performance.

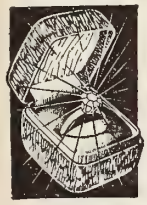
"Think what a job an 'arty' actress would have with that role. Think what would happen if she tried to get literary, blank-versy or read-y. The audience would run away with the situations while the actress stopped to emote.

NATURALNESS is the new kind of acting and it is here to stay. In real life people don't begin speaking precisely when some one else has finished. They interrupt and overlap, and that's what good actors do now. They can't stand stiffly, or studiously regard their position. They must move about naturally and speak naturally and laugh naturally.

"Now about those questions which some of your readers have asked you. I'll do my best to answer them.

"Crying before the camera is an individual thing. Some actresses must get angry to cry at all. Some do it with music. Some can sit and think themselves into the mood. It all depends, and you must work out your own salvation.

"If you have poise you can face any camera or audience without fear, but poise is the direct result of experience and sure-



FREE LESSON
HomeArtCrafts

GOOD MONEY FOR SPARE TIME
A new easy way. Art novelties in big demand. Get free lesson and quickly learn to decorate Gifts, Bridge Prizes, Toys, etc. No experience necessary. Anyone can succeed with simple "3-step" method and you earn as you learn. Everything furnished including supply of novelties for you to decorate and Homecrafters Outfit.

NO CANVASSING
Just sit at home and make up to $50 a week spare time or full. Write today for big illustrated book and FIRST LESSON FREE. Absolutely not one cent to pay. Lesson is free. Openings in every locality. Write quick.

FIRESIDE INDUSTRIES
Dept. 147-B, Adrian, Mich.

SAMPLE 15¢

To introduce our beautiful blue-white Rainbow Flash Stones, we will send a 1Kt. IMPORTED SIMULATED DIAMOND, mounted in lovely White Gold Finish Ring as illustrated, for this ad. and 15c expense. Address:
National Jewelry Co., Dept. 19 Wheeling, W. Va. (2 for 25c)

MAKE MONEY At Home!

EARN steady income each week, working at home, coloring photos and miniatures in oil. Learn famous "Koehne Method" in few weeks. Work done by this method in big demand. No experience nor art talent needed. Many become independent this way. Send for free booklet, "Make Money at Home."
NATIONAL ART SCHOOL, Inc.
3601 Michigan Avenue, Dept. 2362, Chicago, Illinois.

KILL THE HAIR ROOT

My method positively prevents hair from growing again. Safe, easy, permanent. Use it privately at home. The delightful relief will bring happiness, freedom of mind and greater success.

We teach Beauty Culture. Send 6c in stamps TODAY for Booklet. For promptness in writing me, I will include a $2.00 Certificate for Mahler Beauty Preparations.
D. J. Mahler Co., Dept. 36B, Providence, R. I.

Lincoln & Indian Head
Pennies Wanted
We pay up to $2 each
if more than 11 years old . . . and up to $500 for certain U. S. Cents. Send 10c for 16 page catalog.
NATIONAL COIN CO.
Box 731 Y Milwaukee, Wis.

Deformed or Injured Back

Thousands of Remarkable Cases

A Man, helpless, unable to stand or walk, yet was riding horseback and playing tennis within a year. An Old Lady of 72 years, suffered for many years, was helpless, found relief. A Little Child, paralyzed, was playing about the house in 3 weeks. A Rail Road man, dragged under a switch engine and his back broken, reports instant relief and ultimate cure. We have successfully treated over fifty-nine thousand cases in the past 30 years.

30 DAYS' TRIAL FREE

We will prove its value in your own case. The Philo Burt Appliance is light, cool, elastic, and easily adjusted—how different from the old torturing, plaster-cast, leather and celluloid jackets or steel braces.

Every sufferer with a weakened, injured, diseased or deformed spine owes it to himself to investigate. Doctors recommend it. Price within reach of all.

Send for Information
Describe your case so we can give you definite information at once.

PHILO BURT MFG. CO.
273-14 Odd Fellows Temple
JAMESTOWN, NEW YORK

ness. It can't be put on.

"Memorizing is also an individual matter. Some learn lines by reading the whole play or script over and over again, learning it all in a lump by some subconscious process. Some say their lines aloud until they know them. Some have naturally good memories, some naturally bad.

"And now one final word. Don't worry about 'types.' Nobody would have taken Charles Laughton for a type. A type is whatever the individual creates. No matter what you look like, first learn to act! Let all other considerations follow afterwards."

Thanks a thousand times, Woody. And you'll be surprised at how many thousands appreciated your talk. Mark my word, the letters of thanks will come pouring in.

And now you kids, don't forget this is your department. Its purpose is to teach you everything possible to teach about dramatic art. A lot of the boys and girls have founded little dramatic clubs and are having grand times with MODERN SCREEN as their guide. So write to me!

Most Romantic Story Ever Told

(Continued from page 8)

were one Jesse Lasky, one Samuel Goldfish (who later took the name of Goldwyn) and Arthur Friend, a lawyer. These young men had hired as their director an actor, stage manager and playwright named Cecil B. DeMille. Dustin Farnum had just made a success on the stage in "The Squaw Man." The new group had decided to make a film version of this with Farnum in the title rôle.

Remembering all this, Brunton dashed to the Alexandria Hotel and presented himself to the dynamic Goldwyn. Brunton was a man of few words.

"I know the perfect place for your studio," he said.

Goldwyn was no person to waste words, either. "Does it cost much?"

And that is how Hollywood was made.

THE barn and the land did not cost much—only a few hundred dollars an acre—and in a few weeks the deal was completed and the Lasky Studio which was later to know such great stars as Wallace Reid, Gloria Swanson, Bebe Daniels, Dorothy Dalton, to name but a few of that bright galaxy, began its operations in the barn on Sunset and Vine Streets.

The success of this venture led other producers to turn their eyes westward. Southern California was the ideal movie climate. The sun, as the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce will tell you today at the drop of a hat or during a cloudburst, shone continually and since all scenes, even those supposedly indoors, were taken without artificial light, this was perfect. Besides land was cheap, there were many old barns available, lumber could be purchased for next to nothing and wages were about half what they were in New York.

By 1916 Hollywood was the center of the movie universe and with a few exceptions all of the biggest producing companies were located there. And in a very few more years the eyes of a great part of the world were turned toward the little subdivision where Robert Brunton had discovered a barn which he thought would make a good cinema workshop.

People from the stage were taking a serious interest in the films. Mary Pickford's mother had persuaded the producers to give Mary terrific salary boosts, which paved

Beauty hint for hands that will be ADMIRED

Every one can enjoy lovely hands, hands that you are proud to show. How? By a simple beauty treatment—Chamberlain's Lotion used daily. Containing 13 different, imported oils, Chamberlain's Lotion soothes, smooths, re-beautifies. A clear liquid, not gummy, Chamberlain's Lotion is absorbed in 37 seconds, without bothersome stickiness. Try Chamberlain's Lotion today. See what it can do for you. Two sizes—at all drug and department stores.

USE THIS COUPON
Chamberlain Laboratories, Des Moines, Iowa.
Please send free trial size of your lotion.
M.M.
Name_____
Address_____
Chamberlain's Lotion

"HUSH"
FOR BODY ODORS
AT ALL 10¢ STORES

Gray Hair

Best Remedy is Made At Home

You can now make at home a better gray hair remedy than you can buy by following this simple recipe: To half pint of water add one ounce bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and one-fourth ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it yourself at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained.

Barbo imparts color to streaked, faded or gray hair, making it soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.

STAR SHEEN

Liquid
Hair Rinse and Tint

Beautifies the hair by softening . . . toning and bringing out the natural high lights.

Check your shade, ☐ platinum, ☐ henna, ☐ black, ☐ blonde, ☐ dark, or ☐ golden brown.
Send 10c for one bottle

8 RINSES for 10¢

FOR SALE AT 10¢ STORES

STAR SHEEN COSMETICS
P.O. BOX 131, HOLLYWOOD, CALIFORNIA

Name_____
Address_____
City_____ State_____

A famous doctor says: "Ambrosia not only cleanses thoroughly and deeply, but is antiseptic, healing and tonic. It reduces large pores."

.....LARGE PORES.....

DON'T suffer from large pores and blackheads another minute. Use Ambrosia, the pore-deep liquid cleanser, three times a day. You feel Ambrosia tingle; you know it is cleansing as nothing has done before.

Using Ambrosia is like putting your skin on a liquid diet. There's nothing to clog or coarsen pores. In as little as three days blackheads begin to go, complexions are smoother and clearer.

Begin to have a lovelier skin at once. Get a bottle of Ambrosia today. 75¢ at all drug and department stores. In smaller sizes at 10¢ stores.

AMBROSIA

THE PORE-DEEP CLEANSER

DEAFNESS IS MISERY

Many people with defective hearing and Head Noises enjoy Conversation, Movies, Church and Radio, because they use Leonard Invisible Ear Drums which resemble Tiny Megaphones fitting in the Ear entirely out of sight. No wires, batteries or head piece. They are inexpensive. Write for booklet and sworn statement of the inventor who was himself deaf.

A. O. LEONARD, Inc., Suite 986, 70 5th Ave., New York

Now you can get the same Coiffure as the stars . . . with

HOLLYWOOD Rapid-Dry CURLERS

Lu Anne Meredith, 1934 Wampas Baby Star

Scintillating screen stars have to be neat and immaculate—set the style in hair dress as well as the vogue in clothes. So naturally they use Hollywood Rapid-Dry Curlers to get the full, soft, lasting curls that distinguish the truly smart coiffure.

Only Hollywood Rapid-Dry Curlers have the soft rubber lock that keeps both hair and curler securely in place. As the name implies, Hollywood Rapid Dry Curlers are quick-drying—the perforations permit abundant air circulation. And they fit so snugly that you can wear them comfortably while you sleep. Insist upon Hollywood Rapid-Dry Curlers.

At 5c and 10c stores and notion counters 5c Ea

the way for other stars to make salary demands. Thus obscure boys and girls, unknown men and women became rich and famous overnight.

There came May Allison, a beautiful girl from a tiny town in Georgia, who, co-starred with Harold Lockwood, achieved terrific popularity. She was one of the great Metro stars, yet, she remained as simple and unaffected as if she had never even heard of Hollywood.

But there also came Nazimova, a tempestuous Russian woman whose presence gave Hollywood some of its first real glamor. These two, May Allison and Nazimova, were at opposite poles of temperament. Hollywood is like that and has always been. The type is never standardized. It takes every sort of person to make the movie world.

There came a rotund fellow from Smith Center, Arkansas, named Fatty Arbuckle who was destined to make the world laugh. There came Viola Dana, one of the three Flugrath girls from Brooklyn, whose poignant little face brought tears and laughter to the picture fans of that day. And then there came the great stage star Alice Brady, a smart, sophisticated girl from New York. And there was Mary Miles Minter of Shreveport, Louisiana, and Mabel Normand from Atlanta, Georgia, and Dorothy Phillips of Baltimore, and Ruth Roland of San Francisco and hundreds more.

Oh, it was a bright firmament which shone, so short a time ago, yet only Alice Brady is on the screen now. But what wonderful stories they wove into the pattern of Hollywood.

Nazimova, the great artiste, guided the destinies of her own films. She had elaborate sets built, she wore elaborate costumes and introduced the fantastic note into her productions. She was so assured, so brilliant that everyone thought she lived for her art alone and that the sufferings of the human heart could not touch her. But everyone was wrong.

She came to Hollywood with Charles Bryant. It was taken for granted that he was her husband. And then a cruel thing happened. The announcement of Bryant's marriage to another woman appeared in the papers. And there was no record of his ever having divorced Nazimova. So they were not married after all!

The gossip buzzed from coast to coast but no one believed that Nazimova would in any way be affected by it. No one, that is, but Paul Bern, whose soul was greater and whose heart was more understanding than any man's in the picture business. He realized that the aloof, ambitious Nazimova was suffering.

She was in New York at the time that the story of Bryant's marriage "broke" and she was so humiliated that she left an order with the hotel where she stopped that she would see no one or take any incoming calls. Paul tried to reach her. He could not. At last he bribed a bell boy to let him into her room and he appeared before her with a gorgeous corsage in one hand and a bottle of champagne in the other.

"See here," he said, "you cannot hide like this. You must not let the world know that you're hurt. Put on your loveliest evening gown. You and I are going to make the rounds of all the gay places in town. We're going to be seen by everyone. And you, for the sake of your own courage, are going to look the world in the face!"

Film celebrities out to make the annual Screen Guild Ball at the Biltmore Bowl a success. Bob Montgomery and Chester Morris with their wives seem set for a lot of fun.

Relieves Teething Pains Within 1 Minute

WHEN your baby suffers from teething pains, just rub a few drops of Dr. Hand's Teething Lotion on the sore, tender, little gums and the pain will be relieved within one minute.

Dr. Hand's Teething Lotion is the prescription of a famous baby specialist, contains no narcotics and has been used by mothers for almost fifty years. It is strongly recommended by doctors and nurses instead of the unsanitary teething ring.

JUST RUB IT ON THE GUMS

DR. HAND'S Teething Lotion

Buy Dr. Hand's from your druggist today

the PURE KNITTED COPPER CHORE GIRL

INSTANTLY CLEANS POTS AND PANS

patented parallel outer layers give

"double the wear, where the wear comes"

Metal Textile Corporation, Orange, New Jersey

WOMEN WANTED

TO DISPLAY NEW DRESS STYLES

Single or married women. No experience necessary. Big pay, full or part time. Chance to earn up to $23.75 in a week. Even inexperienced housewives earn money first day. Your own dresses furnished without cost. Write quick. Send no money—just name and address on postal. I. V. SEDLER CO., INC., Dept. 21-2, Cincinnati, Ohio.

3 LOVELY DRESSES $5.50

ANY PHOTO ENLARGED

Size 8x10 inches or smaller if desired. Same price for full length or bust form, groups, landscapes, pet animals, etc., or enlargements of any part of group picture. Safe return of original photo guaranteed.

47c

SEND NO MONEY Just mail photo or snapshot (any size) and within a week you will receive your beautiful life-like enlargement, guaranteed fadeless. Pay postman 47c plus postage—or send 49c with order and we pay postage. Big 16x20-inch enlargement sent C. O. D. 78c plus postage or send 80c and we pay postage. Take advantage of this amazing offer now. Send your photos today. Specify size wanted.

STANDARD ART STUDIOS
104 S. Jefferson St. Dept. 1325-B CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

BACKACHES CAUSED BY MOTHERHOOD

Those months before baby comes put such a heavy strain on mother's muscles, that she frequently suffers for years.

Allcock's Porous Plasters do wonders for such backaches. They draw the blood to the painful spot—whether it be on the back, sides, legs, arms or shoulder. This has a warm, stimulating effect, and the pain soon vanishes. It takes only 2 seconds to put on an Allcock's Porous Plaster, and it feels as good as a $2 massage treatment.

Don't take anything but Allcock's Plasters. They're best because they bring quickest relief. Easy to apply. Over 5 million people have used Allcock's, the original porous plaster. They stay on longer. All druggists sell Allcock's Plasters—only 25c.

She did it, too, and held her chin up as she entered every night club where her very presence caused a hum of whispers and a buzz of gossip. It was a courageous gesture, courageously made.

On the same lot with Nazimova worked a kid named Rudolph Valentino. There was also Ramon Novarro, Alice Terry and Mae Murray.

Charles Ray was one of the great favorites of his day. A country boy, himself, he brought something infinitely sweet and fine to the screen as the bashful, timid lad. Having achieved tremendous popularity, Ray decided that he wanted to throw away the battered straw hat and overalls and play a part which contained real depth and drama. His experience has been repeated so often in film history that it bears telling here. And again I must hark back to my original theme that the movies belong to you and that you make and break stars.

YOU were crazy about Charlie Ray as a country boy and you didn't want him any other way—just as you love Janet Gaynor in sweet and simple roles, today, and no matter how rebellious she grows and how capable she feels of doing adult characters, you won't let her. But at that time Charlie didn't know what a supreme dictator his audience was. He determined to make a great and lasting picture. He organized his own company, invested his own money in it and began the film version of the well known "Courtship of Miles Standish."

He put not only his money but his heart into this picture. Determined to have it accurate in every detail he hired the best research experts and historians available, it was an ambitious production but Ray had no doubts of its artistic value. It was artistic but the public was shocked at seeing their beloved country boy all decked out in Puritan garb. They put thumbs down on the picture. The venture cost Charlie not only his money but his popularity. Years later he attempted a comeback with M-G-M but he could not regain what he had lost. He wore a silk hat and was starred in a film called "Paris" which was notable only because a vivid girl, one of the M-G-M stock actresses, played the role of an apache. Her name was Joan Crawford. The old and the new order were combined. There was Charlie Ray struggling pitifully to make a come-back and Joan Crawford struggling just as hard to rise to heights. He didn't and she did. Now he's playing bit parts.

You see, the picture business is so highly personal, its stock in trade being personality, that once the public learns to love a star and think of that star as a certain type almost nothing can be done by star or producer to change the star in the fan mind. Think it over for yourself. Janet Gaynor is sweet, so you won't allow her to go sophisticated. And Golly! what a howl you would raise if Garbo decided to toss mystery aside and play light comedy. You have always been that way and, from all present indications, you will continue like that through all the years of film history.

And there I go, getting ahead of my story as usual. Well, next month I'm going to try to give you the real flavor of the Hollywood of 1919. It has sparkle, verve and glamor, I assure you; yet the meaning of the word "glamor" was probably not known by more than ten citizens in the whole town.

See Joan Crawford's Gorgeous New Clothes In Our March Issue

DO YOU LONG FOR AN

These little wafers have done wonders for thousands

YOU CAN MAKE your dream complexion come true. But remember this—you can't rub away a bad complexion with expensive creams and ointments. You can't cover it up with cosmetics. Get at the cause. Most muddy, pale complexions, pimply, blotchy skins, are caused by sluggishness of the bowels and lack of calcium in the system. Stuart's Calcium Wafers correct both of these troubles—quickly, easily, pleasantly. Thousands of charming women owe their clear, healthy skins—their satin-smooth, radiantly fresh complexions to these marvelous little wafers. Try them for a few days—then look in your mirror!

AT ALL DRUG STORES—10c and 60c

STUART'S Calcium Wafers

BECOME AN EXPERT

ACCOUNTANT

Executive Accountants and C. P. A.'s earn $3,000 to $15,000 a year. Thousands of firms need them. Only 12,000 Certified Public Accountants in the U. S. We train you thoroly at home in spare time for C.P.A. examinations or executive accounting positions. Previous experience unnecessary. Personal training under supervision of staff of C.P.A.'s including members of the American Institute of Accountants. Write for free book, "Accountancy, the Profession that Pays."

LaSalle Extension University, Dept. 2318H, Chicago
The School That Has Trained Over 1,200 C. P. A.'s

IF YOU HAVE

GRAY HAIR

and DON'T LIKE a MESSY MIXTURE.... then write today for my FREE TRIAL BOTTLE

As a Hair Color Specialist with forty years' European American experience, I am proud of my Color Imparter for Grayness. Use it like a hair tonic. Wonderfully GOOD for the scalp and dandruff; it can't leave stains. As you use it, the gray hair becomes a darker, more youthful color. I want to convince you by sending my free trial bottle and book telling All About Gray Hair.
ARTHUR RHODES, Hair Color Expert, Dept. 3, LOWELL, MASS.

CORNS AND CALLOUSES

MOSCO

REMOVES THEM

AN OINTMENT - QUICK AND EASY TO APPLY. DOES NOT SOIL STOCKINGS

30c a jar at your Druggist's

Generous SAMPLE for Thorough Test

Paste this coupon on 1c post card and Mail Today.

Your Name _____

Street _____

City and State _____

Druggist's Name _____

Address _____

THE MOSS CO., Rochester, N.Y.

All Joking Aside .. by Jack Welch

IN 20 YEARS TED HEALY HASN'T WORN A COAT WITH TROUSERS THAT MATCHED —AND THIS GOES FOR EVENING DRESS.

WHEN HE HAD TO GO TO A HOSPITAL RECENTLY, CECIL B. DEMILLE TOOK ALONG HIS OFFICE STAFF AND CARRIED ON BUSINESS AS USUAL. The bed was moved out of an adjoining room to make way for the office.

ONE OF THE THRILLS OF ELISSA LANDI'S EARLIER LIFE WAS THE WINNING OF FIRST PRIZE IN A TYPING CONTEST.

SHIRLEY TEMPLE WANTS TO GROW UP TO BE A HAIRDRESSER She takes lessons almost daily from the studio coiffeuse.

JOAN CRAWFORD APPEARED AT A RECENT PREVIEW WITH HER HAIR IN PAPER CURLERS.

Printed in the U. S. A. by Art Color Printing Company, Dunellen, N. J.

WIN A GIFT FROM Jean Harlow

Read "Sweet Adeline", Broadway's greatest hit. This great story, now being produced by Warner Brothers, appears complete, illustrated with beautiful stills from the actual production in the February SCREEN ROMANCES. You will enjoy this and ten other screen novelizations in the February issue.

Whom would you pick to be Jean Harlow's leading man? Why? That's what the producers want to know. They want you to select someone to play opposite this glamorous star and if you are lucky enough to make the best selection and can write the best reasons for your selection, you will win a beautiful gift from Jean Harlow.

COMPLETE DETAILS IN THE FEBRUARY ISSUE

Listen to "Hollywood Highlights" reported by Sam Taylor for SCREEN ROMANCES over WMCA and Associated Stations every Monday and Wednesday evening at 6:30 P.M. Eastern Standard Time.

SCREEN ROMANCES

ON SALE NOW AT ALL NEWSSTANDS

LUCKY STRIKE
"IT'S TOASTED"
CIGARETTES
LUCKY STRIKE
Luckies
They Taste Bett
Copyright, 1941, The American Tobacco Company

LARGEST GUARANTEED CIRCULATION OF ANY SCREEN MAGAZINE

Modern Screen

April 35

10 cents

MAR 18 1935

Earl Christy

Miriam Hopkins

Kay Francis

Picks Hollywood's 8 Most Fascinating People

WHO'D EVER THINK YOU COULD USE THESE LOVELY DISHES IN THE OVEN

. . . but you can!

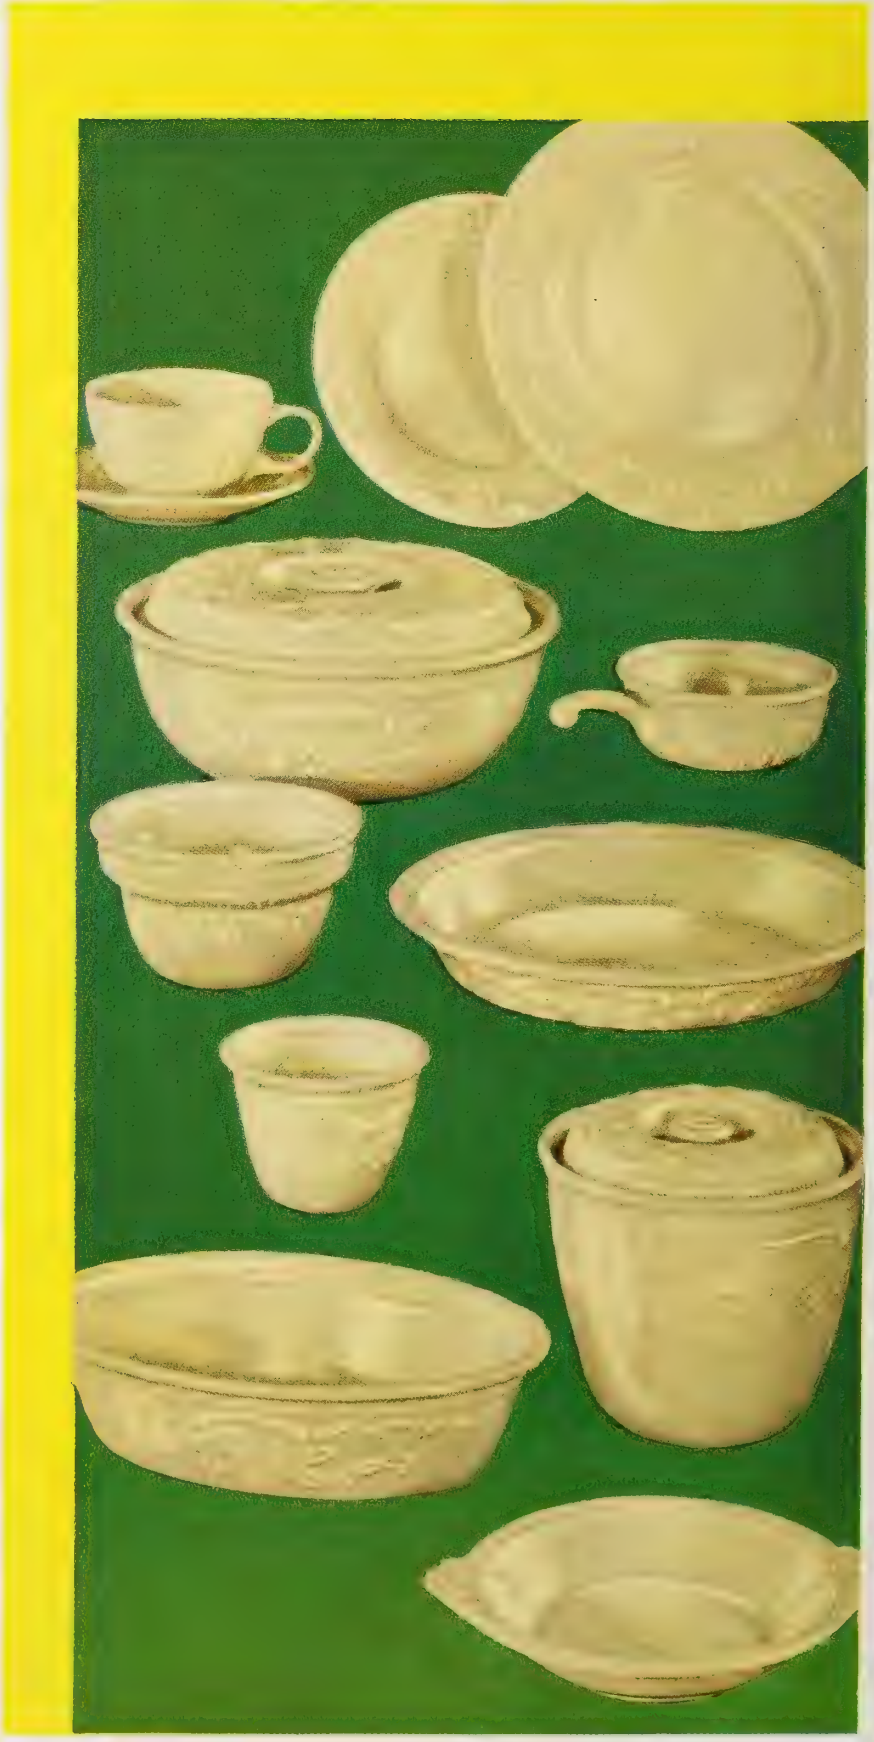
YES, you can actually bake in the oven with these pretty buttercup yellow table dishes. Bowls, platters, serving dishes . . . every single piece of OvenServe, even to the cups, saucers and plates, is built to stand full oven heat. That's something new in table dishes. There's never been anything like them before.

You can, for instance, bake a meat loaf on its serving platter, delight the family with a juicy fruit pie baked in the pie plate, or individual custards made in the custard cups, or any one of a hundred other things. And all of them come direct to the table from the oven. Think of the fussing around that saves in serving . . . and how it cuts down on the dishwashing!

You'll notice, too, the clever design and sizes of the various pieces . . . handy for parking left-overs in the refrigerator.

Expensive? Not a bit of it! A fraction of the cost of the kitchen ovenwares you know about. And OvenServe dishes are not kitchen ware, but table dishes! Buy them by the piece. And fill in as you wish.

FISH FILLETS BAKED ON OVENSERVE FISH PLATTER



1 pound fish fillets (any kind)
2 tbsps. flour
½ tsp. salt
⅛ tsp. pepper
¾ cup water
¾ cup evaporated milk

Wash and dry fillets. Place fillets on well-greased OvenServe Fish Platter and dust with flour, salt and pepper. Combine water with milk and pour over fillets. Bake in hot oven (400°F.) 20-25 minutes, or until fish is tender. Then lift dish from oven to table.

OVENSERVE

Sold at Kresge 5 and 10¢ Stores and other 5¢—10¢ and $1 Stores

Guaranteed To Withstand Changes of Oven and Refrigerator Temperatures
OVENSERVE
"The Oven Ware for Table Service"
The Homer Laughlin China Co.
Newell, W. Va.

"TERRIBLE!"—SAY THE BOOKS OF ETIQUETTE

"EXCELLENT!"—SAYS DENTAL AUTHORITY

IT ISN'T BEING DONE, BUT IT'S One Way TO PREVENT "PINK TOOTH BRUSH"

OF course it's terrible to the dictators of etiquette and the arbiters of polite society. "Why," you can hear them chorus, "such a performance would make any girl a social outlaw."

But it certainly isn't terrible to the modern dentist—to your own dentist.

"Excellent," would be his emphatic retort. "If you and every one of my patients chewed as vigorously, I'd hear a lot less about 'pink tooth brush.' And if we moderns all ate more coarse, hard foods, a big group of modern dental ills would practically disappear."

Dental testimony is unanimous! Modern gums need more work for health—vigorous workouts with coarse, raw foods. Our modern soft and well-cooked foods are to blame for the wide spread of that tell-tale dental warning, "pink tooth brush."

DON'T IGNORE "PINK TOOTH BRUSH"

"Pink tooth brush" is a first warning. But neglected—it often proves to be the first downward step towards such serious gum disorders as gingivitis, Vincent's disease and pyorrhea.

Play safe—rouse your gums to health with Ipana and massage. Clean your teeth regularly with Ipana—and each time rub a little extra Ipana into your gums. Ipana with the massage speeds circulation through the gum tissues—and helps them back to healthy firmness. And healthy gums mean whiter teeth and a brighter smile.

IPANA
TOOTH PASTE

WHY WAIT FOR THE TRIAL TUBE?

Send the coupon below, if you like, to bring you a trial tube of Ipana. But a trial tube can be, at best, only an introduction. Why not buy the full-size tube today and begin to get Ipana's definite advantages now—a month of scientific dental care . . . 100 brushings . . . brighter teeth and healthier gums.

BRISTOL-MYERS CO., Dept. K-45
73 West Street, New York, N. Y.
NRA CODE

Kindly send me a trial tube of IPANA TOOTH PASTE. Enclosed is a 3¢ stamp to cover partly the cost of packing and mailing.

*Name*_____

*Street*_____

*City*_____ *State*_____

MAR -1 1935 /

©C1B 254283

MODERN SCREEN

MODERN SCREEN'S MOVIE SCOREBOARD New way to check your movies by famous critics..... 14
8 MOST FASCINATING PEOPLE IN HOLLYWOOD According to Kay Francis....Ben Maddox 26
YOU CAN MAKE PEOPLE LIKE YOU Many stars made people like them Adele Whitely Fletcher 28
A CHANCE TO LIVE AN IDEAL Loretta Young's role gives her inspiration .....Walter Ramsey 30
WHY ONE MAN LOVED HER An anonymous young man's love for La Lombard ....Dell Hogarth 32
"YOU MAY BE GOING BLIND!" How John Beal met this shocking announcement Katherine Albert 34
IS THIS GRATITUDE? Proving that stars aren't always grateful to Hollywood.....Eric Ergenbright 40
MODERN SCREEN-WARNER SONG CONTEST Get into this exciting contest and win a prize..... 42
MAE WEST IS IN PRISON! Mae's so guarded, she hasn't a private life any more....Virginia T. Lane 44
MARRIAGE OF CONVENIENCE A short story based on a true Hollywood incident.... Dale Eunson 48
MY CARDS ARE ON THE TABLE Connie Bennett tells her side of the story.....Katherine Albert 51
AMAZING THINGS HAVE HAPPENED TO HER Anna Sten finds life tame now....Hilary Lynn 52
WHO IS THAT MAN? Several Hollywood actors the fans never seem to place.....Harry Brundidge 54
HIGH-HAT HOOFING Fred Astaire does some high stepping for the camera..... 56
A PAL AND CRITIC TELLS Rudy Vallee's best friend gives you the real dope on him Richard English 58
LET ME BE A MAN FOR A CHANGE Talbot wants to shelve the "ladies' man" tag Jewel Smith 60
SO MUCH ABILITY Mady Christians' versatility mustn't be wasted.....Maude Cheatham 61
HOLLYWOOD SETS THE TEMPO FOR YOUR SPRING SHOPPING Advance tips..Adelia Bird 62
STRONG-MINDED WOMEN Aline MacMahon knows what she wants..... Dorothy Spensley 65
TO MY WIFE, BELLA! The woman behind Paul Muni.....Dena Reed 66
THE MOST ROMANTIC STORY EVER TOLD (Conclusion) Advent of talkies....Katherine Albert 74

Between You and Me..... 6
Information Desk..... 8
Modern Screen's Dramatic School..... 10
The Modern Hostess..... 12
Beauty Advice..... 16
Exclusive Portraits.....19 and 50
The Sport of Kings..... 35
Good News..... 36
Reviews..... 46
Patterns 69
All Joking Aside..... 124

MARY BURGUM, EDITOR; ADELIA BIRD, Associate Editor
ABRIL LAMARQUE, Art Editor REGINA CANNON, Hollywood Editor

Published monthly and copyrighted 1935 by Dell Publishing Company, Incorporated. Office of publication at Washington and South Avenues Dunellen, N. J. Executive and editorial offices, 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y. George T. Delacorte, Jr., President; H. Meyer Vice-President; M. Delacorte, Secretary. Vol. 10, No. 5; April, 1935. Printed in the U. S. A. Price in the United States, $1.20 a year 10c a copy. Canadian subscriptions, $2.40 a year. Foreign subscriptions, $2.20 a year. Entered as second class matter, September 18, 1930, at the Post Office at Dunellen, New Jersey, under act of March 3, 1879. The publishers accept no responsibility for the return of unsolicited material. Sole Foreign Agents: The International News Company, Ltd., 5 Breams Building, London, E. C. 4, England.

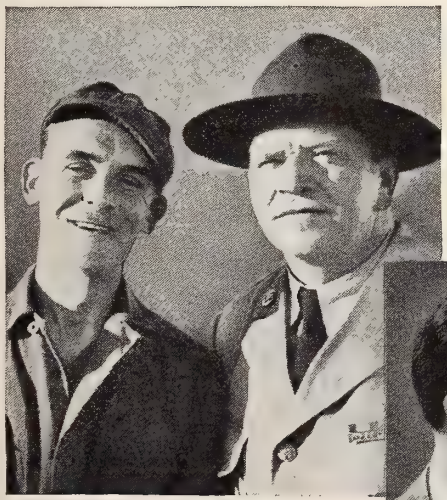
HEADS UP, FILM FANS!

. . . for M-G-M's greatest film festival o'er land and sea!

Now all the heaven's a stage for Uncle Sam's fighting, flying men. You'll thrill as never before when you see the famed "Hi-Hats" wing into action! You'll grin as you watch the West Pointers getting a P G course in courage and daring! And you'll weep with the girls they leave behind as they soar into the skies to keep a date with the angels!

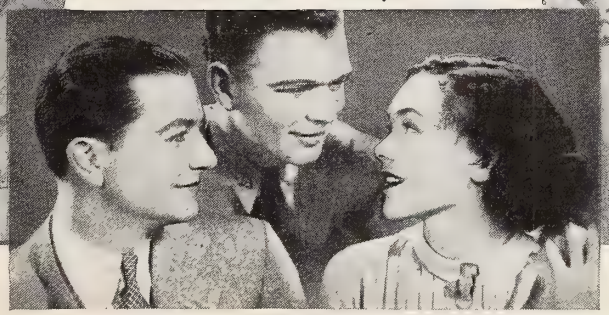
It took six months, thousands of men, $50,000,000 worth of equipment to make this exciting saga of the sky devils. You'll never forget it!

Wallace Beery



in

WEST POINT of the AIR



with

ROBERT YOUNG
LEWIS STONE
MAUREEN O'SULLIVAN
JAMES GLEASON

A Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Picture

The two old-timers who sat around... and wore out their brains!

The three mosquiteers of Randoph Field
... whose cradle was a cockpit!

The girl who loved as they lived... dangerously!

I was half sick all the time

● I am a practical nurse and for the benefit of others I am writing this. It's no fun taking care of others when you're half sick all the time from constipation. Everything I took for it either griped or left me completely tired out. One of my doctors suggested I try FEEN-A-MINT. I consider it the ideal laxative—I don't have to worry about upset stomach and distress any more. FEEN-A-MINT certainly gives the system a marvelous and comfortable clearing out. It's so easy and pleasant to take that it's wonderful for children and saves struggling with them when they need a laxative.

Chewing gives greater relief

We have hundreds of letters telling of the relief FEEN-A-MINT has given people. It works more thoroughly and more comfortably because you chew it and that spreads the laxative more evenly through the system, giving a more complete cleansing. People who object to violent laxatives that cause cramps and binding find FEEN-A-MINT an ideal solution of their problem. Over 15,000,000 men and women can testify to the satisfaction FEEN-A-MINT gives. And it's so easy to take, with its refreshing mint flavor. Try it next time. 15 and 25¢ at all drug stores.

CHEW YOUR LAXATIVE... BY CHEWING, THE LAXATIVE IS SPREAD MORE EVENLY THROUGH THE SYSTEM SO THAT IT WORKS MORE COMPLETELY. THAT IS WHY FEEN-A-MINT GIVES MORE COMPLETE AND PLEASANT RELIEF.

CHEW YOUR LAXATIVE FOR EASIER RELIEF

Feen-a-mint

The Chewing-Gum LAXATIVE

BETWEEN YOU AND ME

Quite a Feat

In reading the letters sent to the movie magazines by the fans, one can't help but notice that the stars come in for their share of the bitter with the sweet, justly or unjustly; one letter praises, the next pans. But there seems to be one star about whom one rarely reads any adverse criticism—Irene Dunne.

In the past two and a half years, I have read countless magazines and papers, looking for articles about this grand actress, and only once have I seen an adverse criticism—and as criticism goes, it was very mild. This seems to be quite a record and one of which Miss Dunne should feel very proud.

Irene Dunne is one of our finest and most versatile actresses, but it has been only recently that her host of admirers have been given a chance to enjoy one of her greatest talents—her glorious singing voice. Now that the public knows what they can expect of her, I am sure they will not be content to be deprived of such talent any longer.—E. Shotwell, Saranac Lake, N. Y.

Merely a Suggestion!

What a grand team Helen Hayes and the handsome Lew Ayres would make! Both have the same wonderful quality of sensitiveness which imparts to their roles in any picture a refreshing sincerity in these days of posturing and aping mannerisms.

The two of them—Hayes and Ayres—in a story done by Hugh Walpole—is my idea of a movie-goer's seventh heaven.—Helen Raether, Albion, Michigan.

Ode to Dick Powell

Who says Lanny Ross and Bing Crosby can act? That's a laugh. Why, Ross stands as straight and stiff as a poker with his arms hanging at his sides like a stuffed dummy. And when I say stuffed dummy, I mean just that. And as for Crosby, he can't act, either. His acting is very stilted. As for his singing, it's stale. Why, his younger brother, Bob, can sing ten times better than he.

Ah, but Dick Powell (pictured)! He can sing and act. And even if the story isn't so good, Dick is just the person to put the picture over with a bang. And he won't fade out with musicals, either. "Happiness Ahead," for instance, didn't have an awful lot of singing in it and Dick proved what a swell actor he is.—Marie Rippel, Philadelphia, Pa.

Do You Agree?

The following actors are in my opinion the personification of charm. You will notice that all of them are Europeans. I can only attribute this to their spontaneity of spirit. The American screen heroes are too staid and lacking in romance. Well, here goes: Francis Lederer (pictured), Tullio Carminati, Robert Donat, Fred Astaire and Maurice Chevalier.—R. M. J., Long Island City, N. Y.

(This will most certainly rouse those of you with a patriotic strain to action. Ah, but you're wrong about the Astaire gentleman, R. M. J. We'll have you know that he was born right here in these United States—Omaha, Nebraska, to be exact.)

Temperament Is Taboo

The really big stars of Hollywood haven't had to depend on temperament, indifference, assumed boredom or snobbishness to get them where they are, as Miss Hartley asserts in your January issue. Shearer (pictured), Crawford, Gaynor, Harlow, Moore, MacDonald, and even Mae West, all answer her definition of "nice." These stars are amiable to the press and friendly with their fans, and they're the ones who bring in the money at the box office.

They don't throw things, swear in public, or act sullen. They don't have to. For, after all, a really exciting personality doesn't have to explode every few minutes to let us know she exists.—A Fan.

Potpourri

Why don't you send Garbo home? She's just wasting your good money. Joan Crawford's smile beats Joe E. Brown's all to pieces. Hot-cha-cha! Am I glad that we'll have a real actress soon, and by that I mean no one but that great flame, Pola Negri (pictured).

Myrna Loy and William Powell are gr-rand.

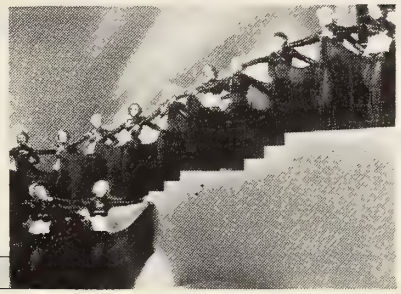
Hurry, Mae West and make a picture! You keep us in too great suspense.

Jean Harlow, you're beautiful.

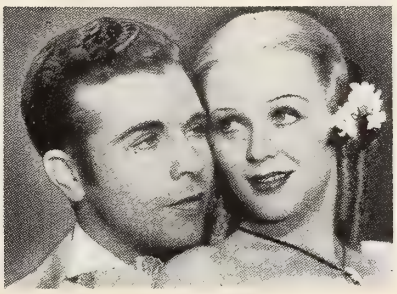
And tell those censors to take a long nap.—Geneva Miller, Flint, Mich.

(Continued on page 98)

Do you want to vote? See page 98



THE PICTURE OF THE MONTH



At Last, After Two Years of Preparation, Warner Bros. Have Completed the Sumptuous Successor to the World-Famous "Gold Diggers of 1933"—a Show so Indescribably Stunning that We're Tempted to Change Our "Picture of the Month" Rating Right Now to "The Picture of the Year"!

GOLD DIGGERS OF 1935

In dance numbers such as "The Ballet of the Baby Grands", Warner Bros. touch a new high in spectacular surprise.

The hundreds of gorgeous Gold Diggers seem actually more beautiful than they were two years ago . . . And DICK POWELL leads a round dozen of Hollywood favorites in the most side-splitting story that's ever been set to music—GLORIA STUART, ADOLPHE MENJOU ALICE BRADY, GLENDA FARRELL FRANK McHUGH, HUGH HERBERT WINIFRED SHAW, DOROTHY DARE JOE CAWTHORN, GRANT MITCHELL and famous RAMON & ROSITA

Credit BUSBY BERKELEY for the brilliant direction of both story and spectacle . . . And a low, sweeping bow to Warren & Dubin for authoring the widely radioed songs that have made "Gold Diggers of 1935" famous long before it reaches your favorite theatre — "Lullaby of Broadway"—"The Words Are in My Heart"—"I'm Going Shopping With You."

. . . thanks to

BROMO-SELTZER

and its FIVE medicinal ingredients

No reason for headaches ever to interfere—not with Bromo-Seltzer at hand. You drink it—either fizzing or after the fizz stops. Headache goes before you know it. You're steadied; relaxed. If your alkaline reserve is low, Bromo-Seltzer quickly builds it up. You feel fresher and more alert. Contains no narcotics. Emerson Drug Co., Baltimore, Md., and Bromo-Seltzer, Ltd., Toronto, Canada.

Tune in WJZ Blue Network . . . every Friday night . . . 8:30 E. S. T.—7:30 C. S. T.—9:30 M. S. T.—8:30 P. C. T.

INFORMATION DESK

Fair lady Faye

Greek god Manners

Have Your Questions Answered Here

ELAINE DOLAN, Chicago, Ill.; ESTHER GEDMAR, North Chicago, Ill.; LEELA HUEBNER, Arlington, N. J.; B. F. HAWKINS, Toledo, Ohio—This time it's Alice Faye, a young lady who's going to steal some of Harlow's glory first thing you know. She was born in New York City some twenty years ago on a May 5 and obtained her schooling in this city. She studied dancing and obtained her first job in Broadway's Palais D'Or, after which she appeared in vaudeville, the "Scandals" and N. T. G.'s revue as a dancer. She never sang except for her own amusement until the day when Rudy Vallee's lawyer, a friend of hers, happened to overhear her. He asked her to have a record made of her voice and this he played for Rudy. The latter was so impressed that he insisted on Alice becoming featured soloist in his orchestra. That was the real beginning of her rise to popularity and the movies. Her first picture was "George White's Scandals" for Fox, her contract studio, and this year she will be in the 1935 version. She has always been a blonde, more or less, but she is much, much more of a one now. Her complexion is fair and she has blue eyes. She tips the scales at 111 and measures 5 feet 4½ inches in height. She likes horseback riding and walking, but has no time for hobbies. Nope, she's not married, but she and Rudy are awfully good friends.

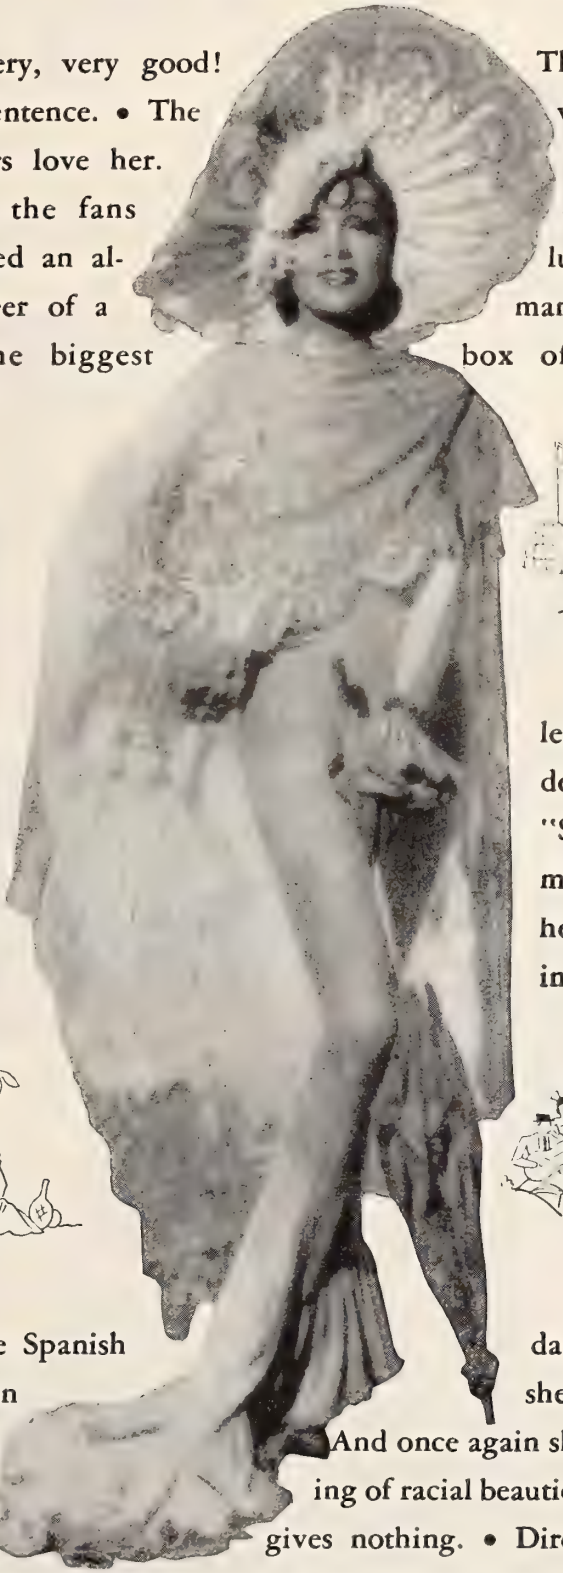
R. M. B. of Rib Lake—In "Happiness Ahead" Marjorie Gateson was Mrs. Bradford and John Halliday, Mr. Bradford. Yes, Allen Jenkins was the chauffeur.

BERNICE, C., South Bend, Ind.—This business of ages and birthplaces seems to pique the curiosity of many fans, so others please take note. Sylvia Sidney, August 8, 1910, New York City; Neil Hamilton, September 9, 1899, Lynn, Mass.; June Knight, January 22, 1913, Hollywood, Cal.; Joe E. Brown, July 22, 1892, Holgate, Ohio; Nick Stuart, April 10, Rumania; and Katharine Hepburn was born in Hartford, Conn., in 1908.

PAT S., Auburn, N. Y.; BETTY STONE, Seattle, Wash.; MISS F. DOLNIAK, South Bend, Ind.; GLADYS COHEN and IDA LIPSCHITZ, Bronx, N. Y.; MARGARET TANNER, Dwight, Ill.; DORIS KELLY, Linesville, Pa.; DOLLY REILLY, Hollywood, Cal.—Here is what you've been wanting to know about Rauff Aklom — David Manners to you. Far away Halifax in Nova Scotia was his birthplace, and April 30, 1905, the day. His mother's name was Manners, so that accounts for his nom de film. At the University of Toronto he was prominent in athletics and dramatics, but his desire to become an author led him to the stage in order to get technical experience. Then he wanted to go to the South Seas, but he never got there, for when he was passing through Los Angeles the director of "Journey's End" met him and insisted that he create the role of Raleigh in that film. That was the start of his screen career. To keep fit he rides horseback, plays tennis and swims. He also sleeps at every opportunity, he confesses, and likes to read, play pinochle and rummy. He dislikes diets, cup custard and women with red finger nails. Astronomy and explorations interest him greatly. He is 6 feet tall, weighs 175 pounds and has brown hair and hazel eyes. He has just finished making "The Mystery of Edwin Drood" for Universal, the address of which studio is Universal City, Cal., where you can reach him.

EUNICE McNAMARA, Torrington, Conn.—The little brunette prig and menace in "Bright Eyes" who took the part of Joy Smythe, was Jane Withers. She made such a hit in this part that she was signed to a term contract by Fox and will appear first in "Dante's Inferno" then "Dice Woman" and after that with Jackie Searle in still another. Dorothy Christy was Mrs. Smythe in "Bright Eyes."

MRS. M. ROGERS, Detroit, Mich.—Spencer Tracy, whose real name is Spencer Tracy, was born in Milwaukee, Wis., on April 5, 1900. He made his picture debut in 1930, in Fox's "Up the River." Joan Crawford was born on March 23, 1908 in San Antonio, Tex., and Marion Davies on January 1, 1900, in Brooklyn, N. Y.



BARBARA GREENWELL, Ogden, Utah; HELEN MOSTE, Ithaca, Mich.—Maybe you wouldn't guess it, but Mae West, the belle of New York, Chicago, St. Louis, New Orleans and what-not, is part French. Her mother was une belle Francaise and her father, Jack West, was prominent as a featherweight boxer. She was born in Brooklyn on August 17 (she says in 1900) and her childhood was spent in studying for the stage. In fact, she made her stage debut at the age of 5, and at 6 joined a stock company. Thereafter, she appeared in musical comedy, vaudeville and burlesque. Then she started writing her own plays and appearing in them, and in 1932 went to Hollywood for Paramount to appear in "Night After Night." As a result she was starred in "She Done Him Wrong" and you know the rest. She has platinum blonde hair and violet eyes, is 5 feet 4 inches tall and weighs 116 pounds. Miss West has never married, she says. She has a sister, Beverly, and a brother, Jack West, Jr. Her next

(Continued on page 90)

Questions asked most frequently and the most interesting ones rate first preference. Don't ask questions which require too much research or infringe upon good taste, and not too many at a time, please. Address: The Information Desk, Modern Screen, 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

"Spanish Blonde"

By JAMES A. DANIELS

When she's bad, she's very, very good! That's Marlene Dietrich's success story in one short sentence. • The wickeder she is on the screen the more the screen-goers love her. The more masculine hearts she shatters the louder the fans cheer. • Look at the record: In "Blue Angel" she played an alluring but heartless siren who wrecked the life and career of a man who adored her. The fans promptly voted her the biggest box office attraction of the day.

"Blue Angel"

"Shanghai Express"

"Morocco" added new legions of Dietrich fans. And when their Marlene swept devastatingly across the colorful Chinese background in "Shanghai Express" the whoops of delight from her admirers could be heard from Times Square to Timbuctoo. So here's the good news of the day: La Dietrich is back in character—this time as the

"Morocco"

"Carnival In Spain"

heartless and exotic blonde Spanish dancer in Paramount's "Carnival in Spain." • Once again she exercises the fatal charm that brings men to her feet. And once again she tramples on their hearts. As that rarest and most alluring of racial beauties, the Spanish blonde, Marlene takes everything and gives nothing. • Directed by Josef von Sternberg, "Carnival in Spain" unfolds a gripping story of the love of two men for the Spanish Blonde, the idol of all Spain. Unhappiness and tense drama follow in her wake. And through it all, this loveliest of all sirens, continues to prove that, when she's bad, she's very, very good!

ADV.

"Better than sticky Hand Lotions"

SAY THESE FAMOUS WOMEN

MRS. ELY CULBERTSON says: "Sticky hand lotions are impossible for bridge players. I use Pacquin's all the time because I don't have to wait for it to dry."

MRS. FRANK BUCK says: "Tropical countries are dreadfully hard on the hands. Mine would be leathery if I didn't use Pacquin's. It's so quick and sure."

MRS. JOHN HELD, JR., says: "Naturally, I want my hands attractive. It's wonderful how white and smooth Pacquin's keeps busy hands."

WOMEN with lots to do find that Pacquin's saves them time and keeps their hands lovelier. There's no more waiting for a sticky hand lotion to dry—Pacquin's Hand Cream goes right into your skin, without leaving any greasy or sticky film—you can put your gloves on the next minute if you want. And Pacquin's gives you such smooth and soft hands—younger looking, more appealing.

Pacquin's Hand Cream

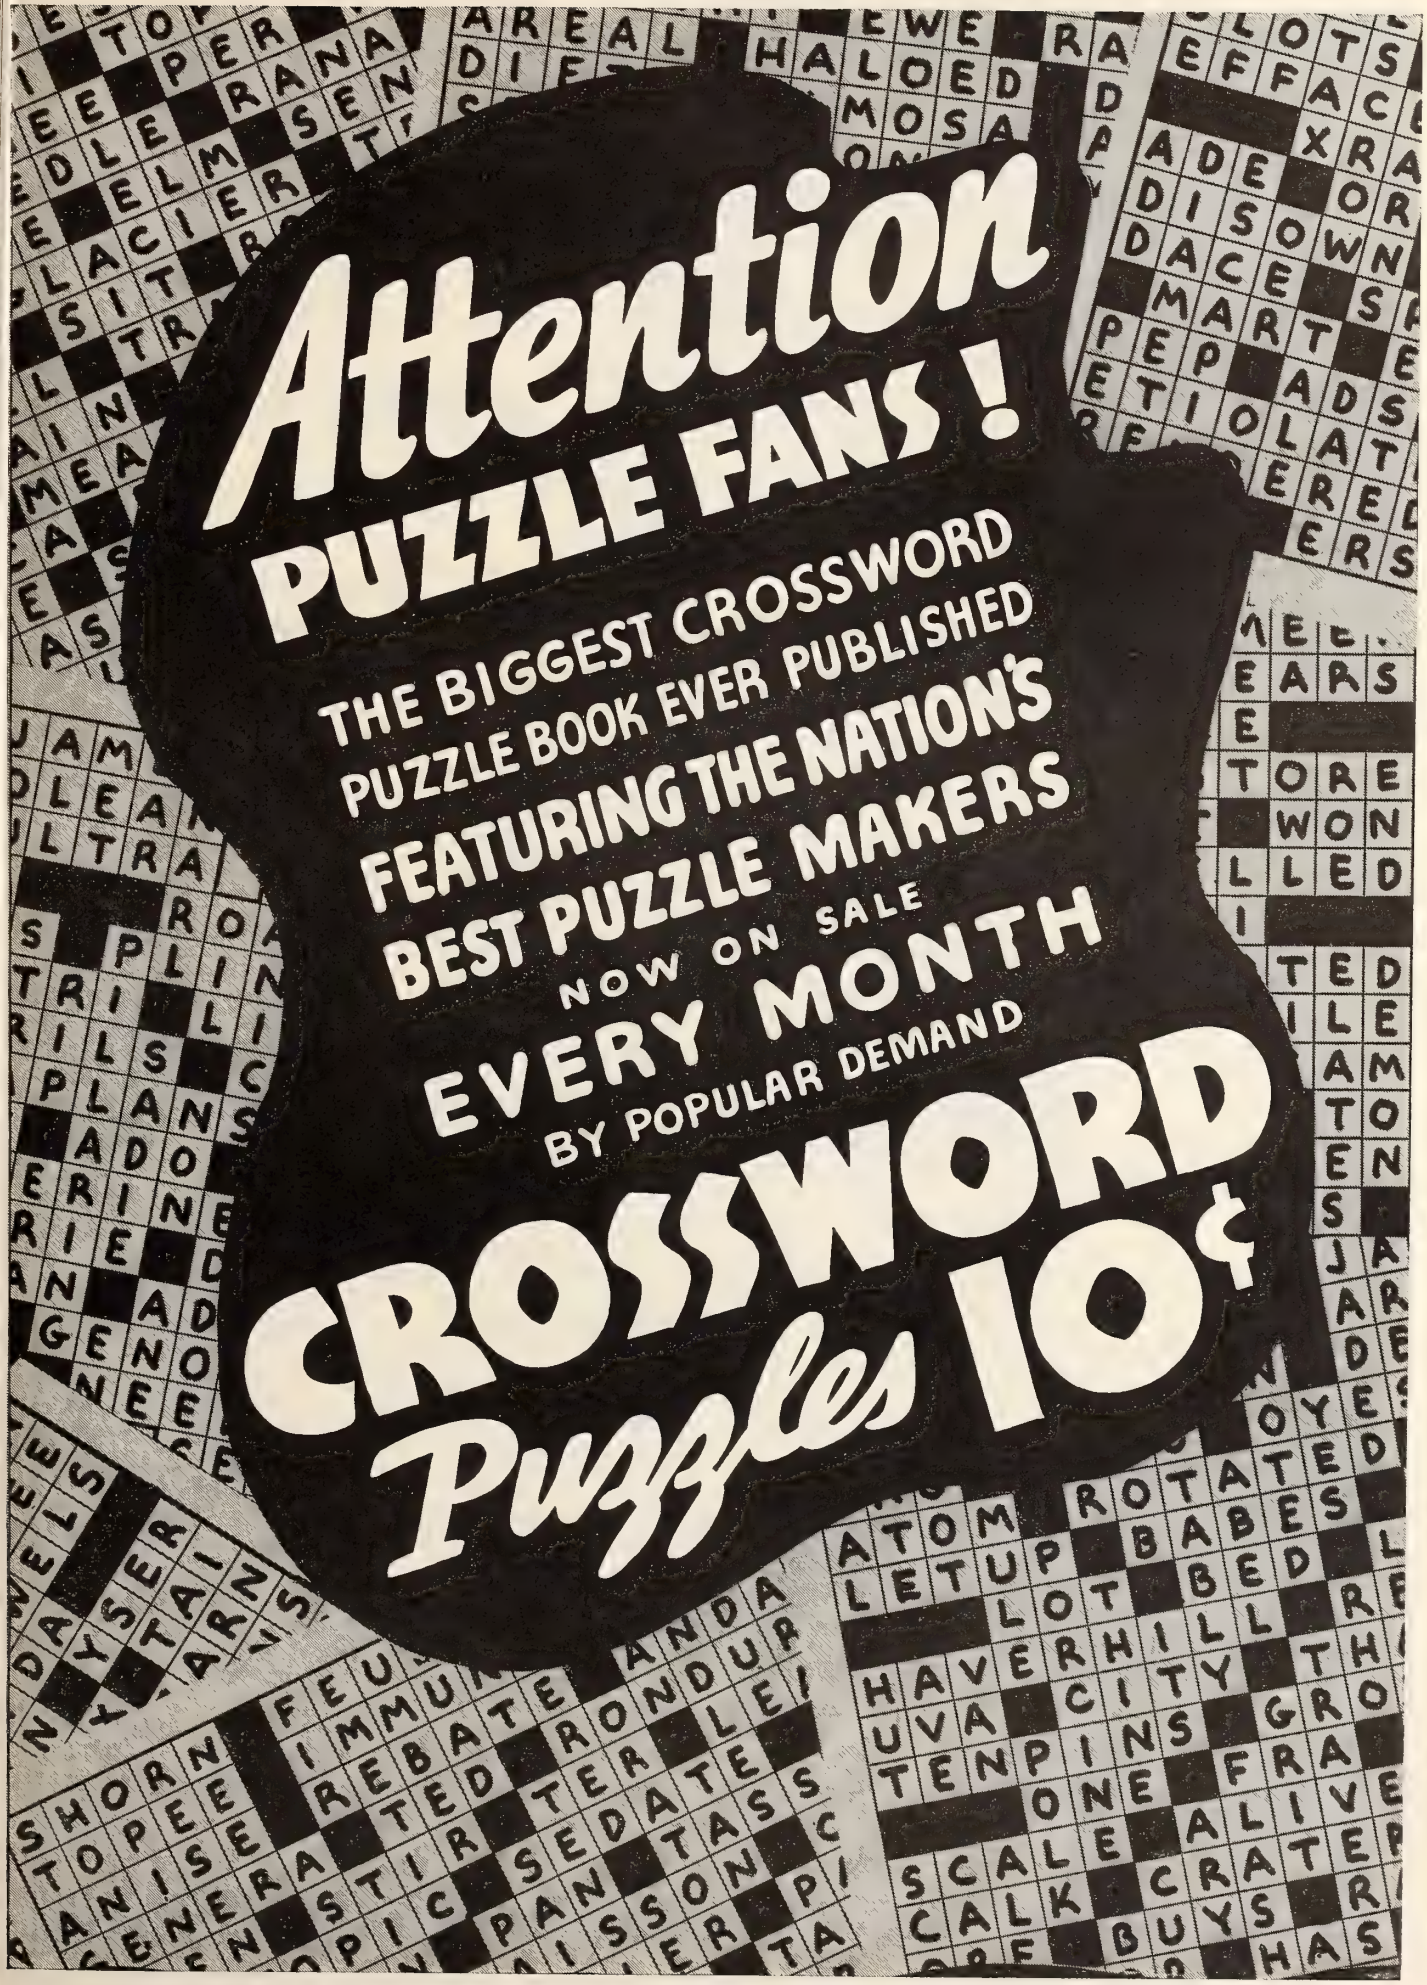
Do you want to organize a dramatic club in your own community? Katherine Albert, the director of MODERN SCREEN'S Dramatic School, has prepared complete, detailed instructions about organizing such a club. Here is an opportunity to have a lot of fun and to do something really worth while. Fill in the information asked for below (please type or print plainly) and send it, with a stamped, addressed return envelope to Katherine Albert, MODERN SCREEN Dramatic School, 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Please send me your instructions for organizing a dramatic club.

Name.....

Street.....

City and State.....



MODERN SCREEN DRAMATIC SCHOOL

Some hints for changing a poor voice—or bettering a good one

DIRECTED BY KATHERINE ALBERT

BEFORE I give the message from our guest star, Sylvia Sidney, to all you MODERN SCREEN Dramatic School students, I want to tell you how thrilled I am that so many of you are organizing dramatic clubs. And I want to tell you not to despair when your letters are not answered immediately. Right now, I'm still up to my ears in queries. So have patience. But don't stop writing. I love it and I hope everyone who hasn't already done so will write me for the information about dramatic clubs and start a group going right away. I've had so many letters asking me about voice culture that this month I prevailed upon Sylvia Sidney to take the class for us. There was a reason for Sylvia's being picked, because at one time her career hung in the balance for lack of a good speaking voice. I want you to know that story to realize how important voice training is.

There were one hundred and twenty boys and girls assembled before the Board of Directors of the Theatre Guild School. Out of this group, sixty were to be retained (Continued on page 91)

Attention
PUZZLE FANS!
THE BIGGEST CROSSWORD PUZZLE BOOK EVER PUBLISHED
FEATURING THE NATION'S BEST PUZZLE MAKERS
NOW ON SALE
EVERY MONTH
BY POPULAR DEMAND
CROSSWORD Puzzles 10¢

The MODERN HOSTESS

BY MARJORIE DEEN

Above, you see Anna about to add the touch of sour cream that gives Borsch soup its exotic taste. Below, Anna eats American salads for lunch now.

Why not treat yourself to a real Russian dinner à la Anna Sten?

COUNTLESS thousands of words have been used in trying to describe Anna Sten, striving to catch the elusive quality that is the secret of her appeal, to plumb the mystery and the tragic memories back of those grey-blue eyes. Some have succeeded in a measure, others have failed dismally. But certainly there are two things outstandingly true about the star of "Nana" and "We Live Again"—she is lovely to look upon and she is typically Russian! And in nothing is Anna more Russian than in her love for Borsch, Pirojikis, Shashlyk and other traditional foods of her native land.

Please, at the very outset, let me urge you not to be frightened by those difficult names. They may sound mystifying but it is surprising how totally lacking in strange ingredients or condiments are the dishes Anna told me about. And if the description of these foods makes you as hungry as it made me, you'll want to join in a rousing cheer when you learn that I was able to secure recipes for all of them.

"When I first came to this country," Anna told me in her low, musical voice, "I insisted on having two hours for lunch! Those two hours were spent in consuming a full-course Russian meal. But now that I have lived almost three years in California, I eat like an American at noon—salads and light, healthful dishes.

"However, when I am not working too hard, I ask our Russian friends in Hollywood to come to the house in the evening for a real Russian dinner. I get a longing for the foods of my homeland and so do they. We want a meal that starts off with hors d'oeuvres, both hot and cold, followed by borsch with which we serve pirojikis and then on and on through the lengthy menu.

"One thing that my guests always request is a baked fish dish for which my cook is famous. The recipe is so simple that I am sure any American housewife can duplicate it successfully in her kitchen. But I am getting ahead of myself since we really should start with the complete menu."

With pencil in hand, hair tumbling about her face, Miss Sten then wrote down a menu for a Russian dinner which contains a great many of her favorite foods. It reads like this:

Hot and Cold Hors d'Oeuvres
Borsch with Sour Cream Pirojikis
Baked Fish
Shashlyk or Beef Stroganoff
Vegetables
Fruits Cheese Nuts
Profiteroles Demi-tasse

"There are many strange names on that menu but with a little translation they are not one bit baffling," Anna Sten assured me. And so it proved.

BORSCH is actually a Russian variation of that good, old American stand-by, vegetable soup. I learned. Pirojikis (pronounced "peroush-kees," by the way) are richly shortened biscuits filled with interesting things like chopped chicken. Shashlyk is lamb, pickled overnight, and then barbecued. Profiteroles is a delicious Russian dessert consisting of pastry shells filled with ice cream or whipped cream and then drenched in a delicious chocolate sauce.

And that, my dears, is a dinner such as Anna Sten would serve to her husband, Dr. Eugen Frenke, and their friends, Rouben Mamoulian, Berthold and Salka Viertol, Dmitri Tiomkin (orchestra composer-conductor) and his wife, the famous ballet teacher, Albertina Rasch, and other members of the Russian colony. The setting of the Soviet actress' dinner would be her wood-finished dining room, done in broad panels of light-hued, highly polished hardwood. The floor of this room is covered in blue carpet and the chairs are upholstered in exactly the same shade of blue. The room is typically modern with one exception—a silver samovar of Old Russia reigns from the top of the built-in buffet.

On this buffet, for this typical Russian dinner, would be twenty or thirty kinds of appetizers to which the guests help themselves. (Unlike the Danes, Russians stand as they eat their Hors d'Oeuvres.)

Miss Sten's favorites among her country's many appetizers are the two which I am about to describe. The first may be at slight variance with the average American taste but you'll find that most men like it. It is "Marrow on Toast."

Have the butcher give you a pork, beef or lamb bone containing a large amount of marrow. Boil the bone in slightly salted water until the marrow is tender and can be scooped out with a spoon. Remove marrow from bone and spread on rounds of hot, buttered toast. Season lightly with salt and pepper to taste. Top with a small green onion and serve hot.

The second Hors d'Oeuvres is "Radishes (Continued on page 89)

"Careless little bride!"

SAID TATTLE-TALE GRAY

It had been the first big party in her own new home—she had been so thrilled—but suddenly she saw a guest eyeing her tablecloth—and that critical glance ruined her evening.

Why did her clothes have that tattle-tale gray look? She always worked hard over her washes—but why must she seem so careless?

Then next day, she found the answer . . .

The thing that robs your clothes of their nice fresh whiteness, a friend told the bride, is left-over dirt—and there's one sure way to get out ALL the dirt.

That way is to use Fels-Naptha—for it's made of golden soap that's richer—and there's lots of dirt-loosening naptha right in it. You can smell the naptha.

Another nice thing this bride learned about Fels-Naptha—it's perfectly safe for daintiest things. And kind to hands—there's soothing glycerine in every bar.

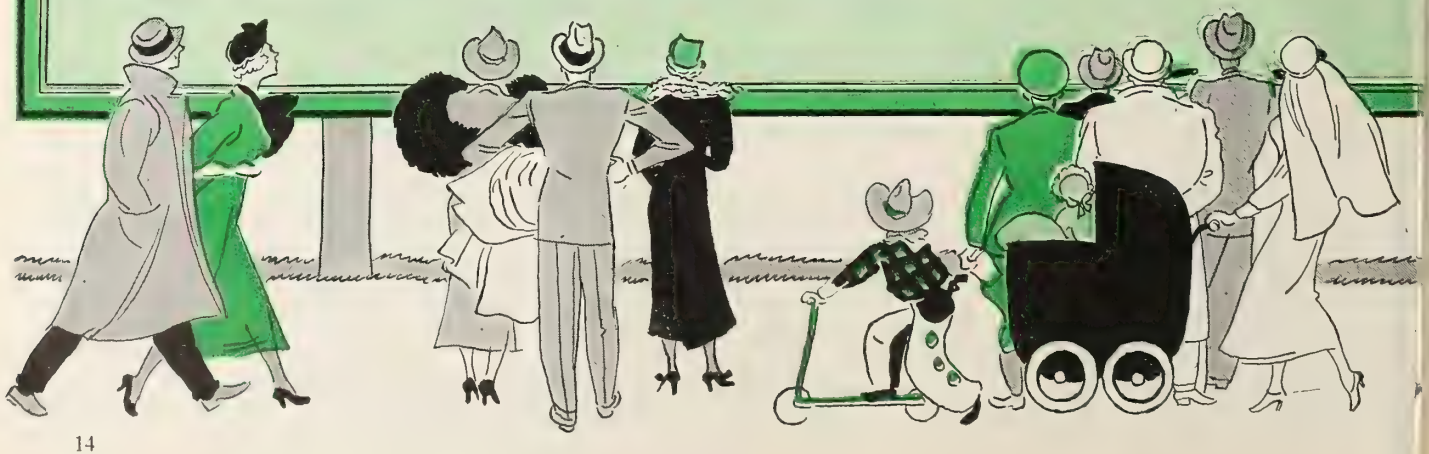
Now Alice is married a year—her linens still look as fresh and snowy as new—and there's never a hint of tattle-tale gray to make people think she's careless!

Just try it! Give Fels-Naptha Soap a chance at your own wash. You'll get the sweetest, sunniest clothes that ever bobbed on a line.

Whitest, too—because they're clean clear through! "Trick" soaps and cheap soaps skim over dirt—they leave specks behind. But Fels-Naptha gets ALL THE DIRT—even the grimiest, ground-in kind.

Fels-Naptha now sells at the lowest price in almost twenty years. Get a few bars at your grocer's today.

NRA CODE



© 1936, FELS & CO.

BANISH "TATTLE-TALE GRAY" WITH FELS-NAPTHA SOAP!

MODERN SCREEN'S

Name of Picture and Company	Modern Screen	N. Y. Times	N. Y. Herald Tribune	N. Y. American	N. Y. Evening Journal	N. Y. Post	N. Y. Sun	N. Y. Daily News
Age of Innocence (RKO)	+	+	−	+	+	+	+	+
Anne of Green Gables (RKO)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+
Babbitt (First National)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+
Babes in Toyland (M-G-M)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+
Baboona (Martin Johnsons)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+
The Band Plays On (M-G-M)	−	+	+	+	+	○	−	−
The Barretts of Wimpole Street (M-G-M)	++	++	++	++	++	++	++	++
The Battle (Leon Garganoff)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+
Behold My Wife (Paramount)	+	○	○	○	○	○	○	○
Behind the Evidence (Columbia)	−	−	−	−	−	−	+	−
Belle of the Nineties (Paramount)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+
The Best Man Wins (Columbia)	+	−	+	+	+	+	○	+
Big Hearted Herbert (Warners)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+
Biography of a Bachelor Girl (M-G-M)	−	○	○	○	○	○	○	○
Bordertown (Warners)	+	+	+	+	+	−	+	+
Bright Eyes (Fox)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+
British Agent (Warners)	−	+	+	+	+	+	+	+
Broadway Bill (Columbia)	++	++	++	++	++	++	++	++
By Your Leave (RKO)	+	○	○	○	○	○	○	○
The Captain Hates the Sea (Columbia)	+	−	+	+	+	+	−	+
Caravan (Fox)	+	−	+	+	+	+	+	+
Charlie Chan in Paris (Fox)	+	−	+	+	+	+	+	+
Cleopatra (Paramount)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+
Clive of India (20th Century)	++	++	++	++	++	++	++	++
College Rhythm (Paramount)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+
The Count of Monte Cristo (United Artists)	++	++	++	++	++	++	++	++
The County Chairman (Fox)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+
Dangerous Corner (RKO)	+	○	○	○	○	○	○	○
David Copperfield (M-G-M)	++	++	++	++	++	++	++	++
The Dude Ranger (Fox)	+	+	○	○	○	○	○	○
Enter Madame (Paramount)	+	+	+	−	+	−	−	+
Evelyn Prentice (M-G-M)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+
Evensong (Gaumont-British)	+	+	+	+	+	○	+	+
Evergreen (Gaumont-British)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+
Father Brown, Detective (Paramount)	−	○	○	−	○	○	○	−
The Firebird (Warners)	+	+	+	+	+	−	+	+
Flirtation Walk (Warners)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+

(Continued on page 70)

MOVIE SCOREBOARD

N. Y. Daily Mirror	N. Y. World Telegram	Chicago Herald-Examiner	Los Angeles Examiner	Hollywood Reporter	Film Daily	Variety	RATING
+	+	+	+	+	+	+	93
+	+	+	+	+	+	+	100
+	+	○	+	+	+	−	94
+	+	○	+	+	+	+	100
+	+	○	○	○	+	+	100
○	○	○	+	−	+	−	60
++	++	++	++	++	++	++	100+
+	+	○	+	−	+	+	94
○	○	○	+	+	○	○
+	−	○	−	+	+	○	40
+	+	○	+	+	+	+	100
+	−	○	+	+	−	−	69
+	+	+	+	+	+	+	100
○	○	○	+	+	+	○
+	−	○	+	+	+	+	86
+	−	+	+	+	+	+	93
+	+	+	+	+	+	+	93
++	++	++	++	++	++	++	100+
○	○	+	+	+	+	−	80
+	+	+	+	+	+	+	87
+	−	+	+	+	+	+	87
+	+	○	+	+	+	+	93
+	+	+	+	+	+	+	100
++	++	++	++	++	++	++	100+
+	+	+	+	+	+	+	100
++	++	++	++	++	++	++	100+
+	+	+	+	+	+	+	100
○	○	+	+	+	+	○
++	++	++	++	++	++	++	100+
+	+	○	−	+	+	+	88
+	+	○	+	+	+	+	79
+	+	+	+	+	+	+	100
+	−	○	+	+	−	+	85
+	+	○	+	+	+	+	100
+	○	○	+	+	+	+	63
+	−	+	+	+	+	+	66
+	+	+	+	+	+	+	100

At last! You can tell at a glance what the nation's most popular film critics have to say about current pictures. Ratings: favorable, plus; unfavorable, minus; zero, no review or review unavailable. Percentage rating based on number of reviews available. When adequate number of reviews not available, percentage is not given.

Modern Screen
REGINA CANNON

New York American
REGINA CREWE

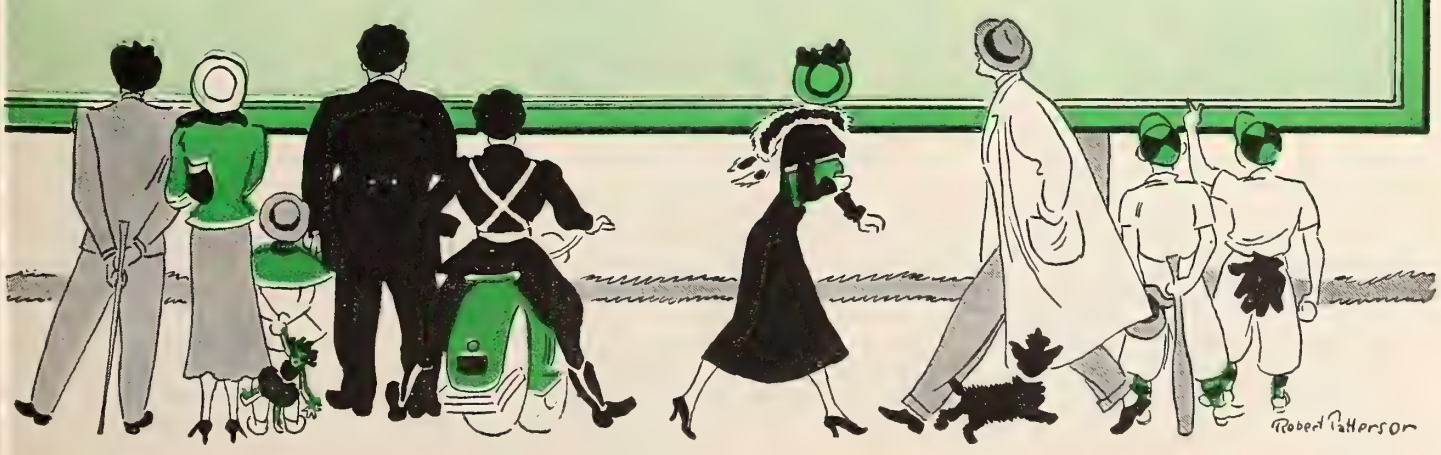
New York Daily Mirror
BLAND JOHANESON

New York Daily News
KATE CAMERON
WANDA HALE

New York Evening Journal
ROSE PELSWICK

New York Herald Tribune
RICHARD WATTS, Jr.

New York Post
THORNTON DELEHANTY
IRENE THIRER



New York Sun
EILEEN CREELMAN

New York Times
ANDRE SENNWALD

New York World Telegram
WILLIAM BOEHNEL

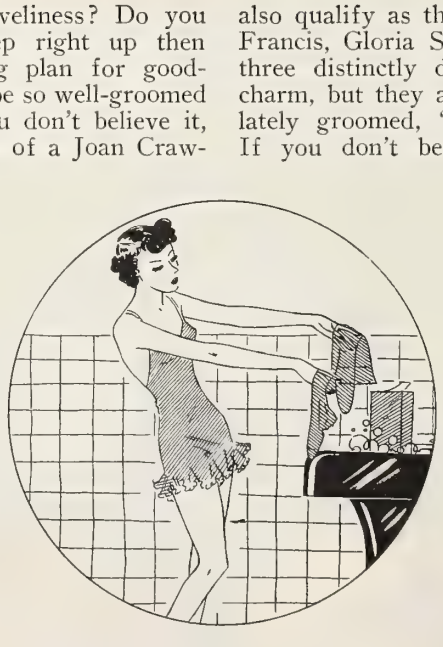
Chicago Herald-Examiner
CAROL FRINK

Los Angeles Examiner
MURIEL BABCOCK
JERRY HOFFMAN
LOUELLA PARSONS

Norma Shearer is the personification of loveliness and good grooming.

Always immaculately dainty and tastefully gowned is Kay Francis.

Beauty Advice



Try to acquire that just-stepped-out-of-the-bandbox look

DO YOU WANT a formula for loveliness? Do you want a prescription for charm? Step right up then and order yourself a definite working plan for good-grooming. You're the doctor! You can be so well-groomed that your loveliness is assured. If you don't believe it, try it. Try it with all the thoroughness of a Joan Crawford or a Norma Shearer, and you'll agree that that doesn't mean any slap-dash, lick-and-a-promise sort of routine.

Let's tear away the mystery from all this glamor business. It is something of a business, you know. Think of the most glamorous women on the screen, and you'll realize they are not the ones with the perfect noses and figures built exactly to scale. They are the ones who have brought skill and determination to bear upon their natural endowments, and have willed themselves to be attractive and admired.

We're really tremendously lucky to belong to this day and age. Men's adoration of beauty and woman's determination to win that adoration has survived through the ages. But of all ages, this is the most advantageous for beauty-building. Never has grooming been placed on such a high pedestal . . . never has daintiness and fragrant cleanliness so outweighed the advantages of classical features.

Three of the most glamorous women on the screen also qualify as three of the best groomed women. Kay Francis, Gloria Swanson, and Norma Shearer represent three distinctly different types of glamorous feminine charm, but they are each alike in their radiant, immaculately groomed, "just-stepped-out-of-the-bandbox" look. If you don't believe that good-grooming is the best formula for loveliness that ever came your way, study the stars, and you'll be convinced.

By MARY BIDDLE

You can't start too early. Young girls will grow into much lovelier young women if habits of daintiness are instilled at the start. We talked about manicuring last month, but since that time a clever little manicuring set has been put on the market for "the very young ladies" which seems worthy of calling to your attention right now in connection with this personal grooming business. It is the neatest trick we've seen yet for encouraging children to be particular about their fingernail grooming. Many a discouraged mother who has tried threats and cajoling to put an end to fingernail biting will find this an easy solution to her problem because it appeals to the child's natural pride. The set is packaged in a way that will appeal to a child's imagination, and to her sense of possession, for it will be her "very own" in her very own shade of polish. She won't want to spoil that beautiful shiny polish on her fingernails for anything!

Here is one important point in connection with cleanliness and daintiness to which we don't give enough consideration. Perhaps some of you aren't entirely aware of it. Did you know that each one of you has a distinct "personal" perfume which is the result of the natural odors that emanate from your skin, your hair, your person? You yourself are probably unconscious of it, but that is because your nose always comes to disregard any scent to which it is habitually accustomed. The sense of smell is the most delicate of all the senses, and becomes fatigued very easily. Thus since your nose won't remember for you, you've got to do your own remembering and keep yourself irreproachably dainty. Lovely and unlovely scents have tremendous power to attract or repel emotionally. People are affected by them almost subconsciously when they meet other people. Hence the best protection for your own happiness is a remembrance of those details of personal grooming which contribute to your natural fragrance. Keep your person wholesomely sweet, and you don't have to worry about giving offense.

MANY a story and poem has romanticized the perfume of a woman's hair. That perfume is the perfume of clean hair. Clean, healthy hair has a delightful fragrance all its own. Whether your hair is inclined to be dry or oily, shampoo it at least once every ten days or two weeks. If you live in the soot-filled city, once a week is better. Brush your hair every night, and keep your brush so clean that the brushing is as much a cleansing process as a stimulating one. It's a smart idea to have a towel, or a clean piece of old linen, to wipe your brush on every once in a while during your routine of vigorous strokes. Part your hair in strands, and brush until you cleanse and burnish every strand.

I can hear your protests already about "spoiling the wave." Don't put off shampooing or brushing when it's a question of healthful cleanliness in preference to a perfect wave. I know you think it's easy enough for me to say that, and you answer me back under your breath that I'm not the one who is going to have to pay for that new wave. If you have naturally curly hair, or a good permanent, let me knock over that old superstition of brushing "spoiling the wave" for you. Every hair specialist who really knows her business will tell you that brushing actually helps to set a permanent or natural wave. Brush your hair, and then push it up into the waves that the brushing will help to reveal. Of course, a finger wave is a little different. It sometimes needs coaxing back (Continued on page 97)

Two of the 46,000,000

WHEN we tell you that 46 million people bought Ex-Lax last year we aren't just bragging. And we aren't talking about ourselves . . . but about you and a problem of yours!

Here's why it is important to you. Occasionally you need a laxative to relieve constipation. You want the best relief you can get . . . thorough, pleasant, painless.

And when 46 million people find that one certain laxative gives them the best relief . . . well that laxative must be good. When 46 million people agree on one thing, there must be something about it that is different . . . and better.

Why America buys more Ex-Lax than any other laxative

Here are the reasons: People realize more and more how bad it is to blast the system with harsh laxatives. Ex-Lax is as thorough as any laxative you can take, yet it is gentle. Unlike harsh laxatives, it won't cause stomach pains, it won't upset you, it won't leave you feeling weak afterwards. People realize that habit-forming laxatives are bad. And they have found that Ex-Lax doesn't form a habit—you don't have to keep on increasing the dose to get results. People hate nasty-tasting medicines. Ex-Lax is a pleasure to take . . . for everybody likes the taste of delicious chocolate.

That "Certain Something"

There's something else these millions of Ex-Lax users find in Ex-Lax. A "certain something" beyond the facts just listed. It can't be described in words, or pictures. But it's there. It is the ideal combination of all these Ex-Lax qualities, combined in the exclusive Ex-Lax way. Once you try Ex-Lax you'll understand. And nothing else will ever do.

Ex-Lax comes in 10c and 25c boxes—at any drug store. If you would like a free sample, mail the coupon.

• • •

COLD WAVE HERE . . . and we mean colds. Sneezing, sniffling, coughing, misery-creating colds. To help keep your resistance up—KEEP REGULAR . . . with Ex-Lax.

MAIL THIS COUPON—TODAY!
EX-LAX, Inc., P. O. Box 170
Times-Plaza Station, Brooklyn, N. Y.
MM 45 Please send free sample of Ex-Lax.
Name _____
Address _____
_____

When Nature forgets - remember

EX-LAX

THE CHOCOLATED LAXATIVE

The bigger you are the harder you'll fall for Shirley in "THE LITTLE COLONEL"

Another honey from the greatest trouper of them all—Shirley Temple. Watch fans of all ages go for this one. Here is the darling you adore in a new type of story . . . the kind of dramatic entertainment you'd expect with Lionel Barrymore as co-star!

What a heart-stirring team they make! . . . this tiny star with Lionel Barrymore, veteran of a thousand hits

"Now we're going to baptize Henry Clay just like the big folks do."

"If the old Colonel ever finds out where we got these sheets, he'll baptize us good."

You're going to laugh, cry, lose your heart as Shirley steals the heart of Lionel, her grandfather, an embittered Kentucky Colonel of the hectic 70's . . . as she charms him into forgiving her mother (Evelyn Venable) for marrying a Yank (John Lodge). And you're going to cheer Bill Robinson, who'll show you some high and fancy steppin'

And the finish—GUESS WHAT! A gorgeous, Technicolor sequence, showing Shirley with her peach complexion, golden curls, smiling, blue eyes and dimpled cheeks!

So take the whole crowd to see "The Little Colonel." It's another in the list of "must-see" pictures coming from the Fox lots this month!

John Lodge and Evelyn Venable

Shirley TEMPLE Lionel BARRYMORE in "THE LITTLE COLONEL"

A B. G. De Sylva Production

Based on the story by Annie Fellows Johnston which thrilled millions!

More BEST BETS from the Fox Studios!

WILL ROGERS in "LIFE BEGINS AT 40"

The riotous story of a modern country editor. With Richard Cromwell, Rochelle Hudson, George Barbier, Jane Darwell and Slim Summerville supporting your favorite star. Suggested by Walter B. Pitkin's best seller

GAYNOR & BAXTER in "ONE MORE SPRING"

This unusual story from Robert Nathan's stirring novel tells what happens to two men and a girl when a winter of discontent melts into a spring of romance. With Walter King, Jane Darwell, Roger Imhof, Grant Mitchell, Stepin Fetchit and others.

GEORGE WHITE'S SCANDALS OF '35

The big musical smash of the year! Beauty, Songs, Comedy with George White himself, Alice Faye, Jimmy Dunn, Ned Sparks, Lyda Roberti, Cliff Edwards and gorgeous gals.

FOX

Too Lovely!

To a Spaniard there is no one more thrilling than a blonde beauty of his native country. And to Marlene Dietrich's fans, there is no one quite as lovely as she. In her role of Concha, a Spanish dancer, in "Caprice Espagnol," Dietrich reveals a new warmth and humanness in her acting. Von Sternberg directs her despite the fact that Hollywood buzzes with the oft-repeated rumor that the famous acting-directing combination is definitely split this time. Marlene has been seen about town with escorts other than Von Sternberg but that has happened before. Meanwhile work on the picture continues and Marlene sheds her tailored costuming for some of the most gorgeous costumes she has ever worn. This magnificent white lace creation is one. In place of a mantilla, she wears this dramatic hat of lace wired to affect a brim.

Folies Bergères Girl

Ann Sothern never dreamed, when she was signed to a lead with Maurice Chevalier in "Folies Bergères," that life was going to be so riotous! You see, they're shooting a French version along with the American one, and since French censors aren't so particular, it's pretty spicy. What with everyone on other sets doing "peeping Toms" and French chorus girls imported to replace modest American ones who quit for lack of proper costuming! Ann made such a hit in "Kid Millions" that she was rushed right into another musical extravaganza. Ann and her best boy friend, Roger Pryor, make one of Hollywood's most wistful couples. There's still that matter of a Reno decree for Roger, you see. Such a pretty damsel should never have to look wistful, do you think?

It's a man's size job to to drag Janet Gaynor into the studio gallery for picture taking—that's why a grand picture like this is a special prize. Janet is having a high old time in Central Park, New York City, in her current picture, "One More Spring," with Warner Baxter. The fur covering, above, which may appear to be rather unseasonable, is protection against Central Park zephyrs inasmuch as Janet sleeps under it on an antique bed of Napoleon Bonaparte's. It's all part of the plot. Janet continues to side-step any romantic rumors linking her with a new swain. She is impartial with her escorts, frequently confounding the rumor hounds by taking her mother along to Hollywood social events which she attends.

Ever-Adorable

Smooth

Ole Massa Bing Crosby, all done up with side-burns and frilled shirt bosom to give the fair damsels a new heart flutter in "Mississippi." However, this sad, where-art-thou expression doesn't last throughout the picture because Bing becomes known as a bold, bad river gunman who gets into some pretty scrapes out of which he can't croon himself! Joan Bennett is the lovely flower of the South whom he wins despite his carryings-on. You can always depend upon Bing for a swell performance and that banjo gives you the idea that there probably are some songs you'll be humming long afterwards.

Suave

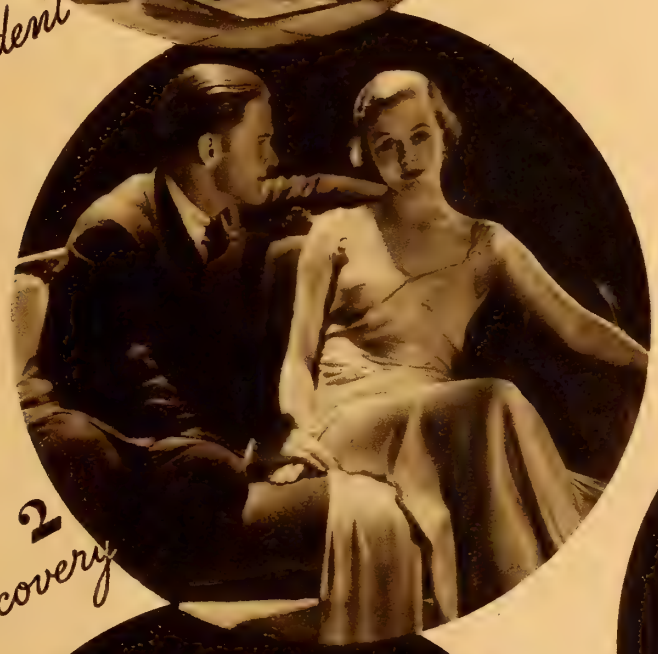
When Mr. Tullio Carminati looks at his leading lady with this same slightly puzzled but intrigued look, thousands of devoted wives go home to stare unhappily at the nice, open expressions on their hard-working husbands' faces! Everyone has been telling us how disappointed they were not to have Tullio sing in "One Night of Love." They were crazy about his acting but a duet with Grace Moore or even a short ditty on his own would have fixed things up. But just wait for his next picture, "Let's Live Tonight," in which he sings with Lilian Harvey. Victor Schertzinger has written two hit songs for them.

Great Dane

Meet King Rudolph who rules a mythical kingdom but takes time out to swap places with a screen star. In other words, Carl Brisson, the smiling and singing Dane, adroitly plays a dual role in "All the Kings' Horses." Brisson and his charming wife have become very popular in the social swim of Hollywood. They seem to have pleasantly adjusted themselves to a new home, far from their native Denmark. Carl is a grand actor whom we don't see half often enough on the screen. Perhaps this teaming of him with Mary Ellis, of opera fame, will bring him many future roles and more frequent appearances.

Watch him!

Quietly but expertly young Cesar Romero has stolen the picture plum of the season. After brief appearances in "British Agent" and as the gigolo husband in "The Thin Man," he emerges without previous fanfare as the leading man for Dietrich in "Caprice Espagnol." This is a marvelous chance for the handsome Cuban and it is predicted that he is a rising star to watch with interest. Already his "bit" parts in several pictures have caused the fem fans to sit up when he walks into a scene. His romantic Latin appearance is a perfect foil for the blonde Dietrich and as you can see, the Spanish costuming is becoming.



Come-hither

There may be Hollywood sirens who do their "come-hithering" more blatantly than Claudette Colbert, but there's none who receives more increasing acclaim from fans and box-office. It's gotten so that Claudette can't get a toothbrush packed for a well-earned vacation without the studio begging her to please do one more picture first. She'd hardly finished "Gilded Lily" before she was rushed into "Private Worlds" to emote opposite those two dashing leading men, the French Charles Boyer and that very American young man, Joel McCrea. Claudette can look back upon the past year with complete satisfaction. Never before has she shown such versatility and depth to her acting. From the gay, sophisticated comedy of "It Happened One Night," to the sympathetic and understanding mother of "Imitation of Life." A romantic interest in Claudette's life seems to be singularly nil at the moment. Since her marriage with Norman Foster met an impasse, she has devoted herself to work and made very few public appearances about Hollywood. We can't imagine a spinsterish existence appealing to her for long, however, and neither can any of her legion of masculine fans!

Smooth Hands light the flame of LOVE!

1 Accident

2 Discovery

3 Capture

4 Rapture!

Are your hands a thrill? They should be! It's not the chapped rough little hands of this world that men want to hold!

So many girls say that Hinds Honey and Almond Cream does more for their hands. This is why: Hinds is richer. It is a luscious cream in liquid form. Hinds is penetrating—as you smooth it in, it soaks the skin with soothing healing balms. Hinds Honey and Almond Cream works deeply—that's why dry, rough or chapped hands quickly become smooth!

Every time your hands feel dry and drawn, rub in a little Hinds. It supplies the skin with beautifying oils to replace skin-oils stolen by soap suds, March winds, housework. And always Hinds at night—to keep your hands thrillingly smooth. Economical! Big 25¢ and 50¢ sizes in drug stores, 10¢ size at dime store.

© Lehn & Fink, Inc., 1935

Hinds
Honey and Almond Cream

THE 8 MOST FASCINATING

I CAN think of just eight people in Hollywood who are intriguing. That is to me, anyway.

In my five years here I have been introduced to nearly all of the "big names" in the movie colony, either on studio sets or socially. I've heard the inside stories about practically all those who matter. And I am including not only actors, but the workers behind the scenes.

I am not a blasé, ungrateful cynic, either. Indeed I am thrilled to be among those present in pictures today, for automatically this puts me in contact with so many exceptionally interesting men and women. I frankly adore the stimulation that knowing them gives me.

But with all respect to my personal friends, and I rate myself lucky in having quite a few who are grand, regular sports, only one whom I know really well goes into my group of Hollywood's intriguing people. And in this very special class I number one whom I've never succeeded in meeting.

Perhaps I first should explain my term.

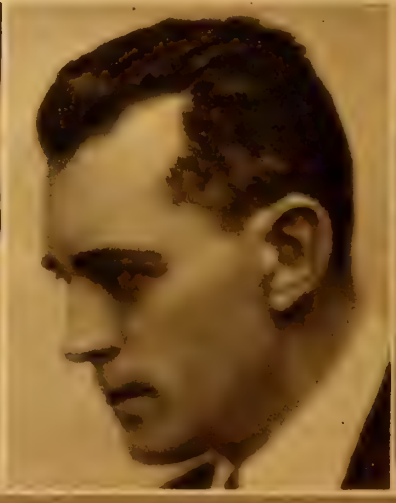
You find many who are attractive; you like them because an inexplicable bond of sympathy and understanding links them to you. There are certain persons whom you admire for their accomplishments; others whose characters draw your respect.

By intriguing, however, I mean something more than all that. I reserve this distinction for those who fascinate me, for those who have a strangely provocative quality that perpetually enchants me.

When you stop to carefully consider all the people in your own sphere, how many could you truthfully say possess this rare characteristic?

As I stated, I can think of only eight in all of Hollywood.

I choose Fred Astaire because his quiet humor piques my fancy. He always has a sly twinkle in his eyes and you are never quite sure of what's going on in his rapier-like brain. There is a calm sweetness about him that isn't in the least sappy. You sense that behind his unassuming manner is real power.



He never reveals much about himself, but when he does care to talk he has something worth saying. I can't think of any other man who is so kind and so gentle, and yet who has such a steely determination hidden within.

Kay likes Perc Westmore's humanity.

. . . Frances Goldwyn's vitality.

. . . W. S. Van Dyke's sincerity.

. . . Anna May Wong's good taste.

PEOPLE IN HOLLYWOOD !

Here's a game! Who are your eight Hollywood entries? Let's hear

By KAY FRANCIS as told to BEN MADDOX

A hard worker with a serious attitude toward his particular line, his shyness, his charm, and his unquestioned ability as a dancer combine to make him a thoroughly captivating man in my estimation.

One more important thing to his credit. I have been so pleased with the way he has behaved in Hollywood. He came here a world-famous stage star and wasn't temperamental when the movies cast him first in a small, supporting role. A genuine trouper, he relied on merit to bring him his deserved attention. Nor did he discourse wildly on his private life to gain publicity.

I pick Joan Blondell because her amazing forthrightness fascinates me. It pervades her every move. And this proves right off that being mysterious is not a requisite for easing into this group. Joan meets life face to face and endeavors to conceal nothing.

Her honesty is so wonderfully consistent. Her wholesomeness, the fact that she is such a devoted wife and mother—these are subordinate reasons for my being intrigued by her. Primarily it's her lack of artifices and complexes that thrills me. It's an achievement to be one hundred per cent sincere and frank.

I don't know Joan well, but I feel that she must have a whirlwind temper when she's imposed upon. I fancy that, with all her sweetness, there is terrific fight in her and that she'd battle to the last ditch for anyone she loves. And she wouldn't care what happened to herself. I shouldn't want her to ever get mad at me!

And then I nominate Jimmy Cagney because he simply enchants me on the screen. He is my favorite actor and so I'll admit I may be prejudiced! It's an instinctive liking that I have for him. I often try to analyze his appeal. He isn't handsome. But every single muscle of his seems to be taut. Jimmy is like a leopard, ready to spring. I sit through all his pictures twice because I get such a kick out of watching him.

Because his film personality "gets" me he is to me a fascinating person. We are only casual acquaintances and I run into him just at the studio and at actors' meetings and parties. He is astonishingly quiet and modest, a strange contrast to that fiery self the camera tempts forth. I guess it's a good thing he isn't as devastating "off" as "on," for Cagney in celluloid is irresistible to me!

Next comes Greta Garbo. She is the one on my list whom I've not yet met. One day I was driving down the boulevard when I caught a glimpse of Garbo's back. She was striding the other way and it was the first and only time I've ever seen her in person. If I hadn't been terribly late for an appointment, I would have turned around and gone chasing after her to see exactly what she's like.

She is alluring to me because she is so beautiful on the screen and I want to learn whether she is as glamorous in reality. There's a different quality about Garbo that no one can copy. I feel that although she is giving everything when she expresses her emotions for a film scene, she simultaneously is a woman apart from everyone and every- (Continued on page 93)

. . . Joan Blondell's frankness. . . . Jim Cagney's screen appeal. . . . Fred Astaire's quiet humor. . . . Garbo's great screen beauty.

YOU CAN MAKE

BY ADELE WHITELY FLETCHER

Meet people with friendliness, you'll be rewarded by popularity

Loretta Young puts a ban on catty remarks about other women. You must be kind in your judgments or others will distrust you.

Above, lovely Karen Morley gives loyalty to your own sex as first step in being thoroughly likeable.

TO BE likeable. That's the thing. To have people say, "Oh, I like her! She's swell!" To have people quick to raise their hat or hand in greeting when they see you on the street. To have voices warm when they talk to you. To have people smile when they greet you.

Of course there are some misanthropes who don't care a hoot whether they're likeable or not. But they can be left out of all calculations since they're neither natural nor, fortunately, numerous. Everybody else wants to be likeable.

And everybody can be. That's the grand part of it. Being likeable is simply a matter of acquiring understanding, of doing a good job about adjusting yourself to life.

And you can learn to be likeable. Thousands of people have done it. Among them many of the motion picture stars.

There's Joan Bennett, for instance.

"The first thing you must do," according to Joan, "is give people a chance to like you. If you're naturally shy, and so many of us are, this isn't an easy thing to do, I know. For the very defense you adopt to cover your shyness puts others off. For most likely they're diffident, timid and shy, too, and the barrier you present causes them to become even more defensive.

"And there you are for all the world like a couple of porcupines who meet and immediately shoot out quills."

PEOPLE LIKE YOU

We were lunching at Joan's. Her dining-room, with the rest of the house, had just been done over. Joan had planned it herself, in cool, peaceful grays and beiges as a background for the intimate dinners she and her husband, Gene Markey, like to give.

Melinda, eighteen months old, was at luncheon, too. She sat beside Joan and was buckled into a little canvas swing. That morning Joan had been at the studios. That afternoon she was going to the tennis matches where her box, marked Mrs. Gene Markey, would be a favorite gathering place between sets.

AND if I don't have Melinda for a little while every day, I get so lonesome for her," Joan explained, kissing her baby on the top of her head, beside the little blue bow that held a tuft of yellow hair.

"But," I said to Joan, bringing the talk back to the business of learning to be likeable, "you're a Bennett. You probably were born with a natural magnetism for people. You probably never had to learn to be liked."

Joan just looked at me. "Don't be crazy," she said. "I was not born with magnetism for people. I most certainly did have to learn to be likeable.

"I was born a Bennett all right, and that for me was no help. The others all had their stride when I came along. And I was more like my mother, quiet and shy.

"Growing up, in defense, I became haughty. I didn't think haughtiness was attractive. I never was that stupid. I knew darn well haughtiness was no fun. I simply preferred seeming haughty to seeming shy.

"I doubt that it ever is easy to be the little sister. It's no boon to anyone's pride to start out socially by being allowed to trail along, by being suffered, so to speak. But to be the little sister of Constance Bennett! That's something! That means taking a back seat and sinking into oblivion. Not because of anything Connie does, but because Connie's naturally a glittering and magnetic personality.

"Both Barbara and I grew up feeling pretty unimportant. Barbara developed sarcasm in defense of her hurt ego and had all the bother of overcoming it later on. Just as I had the bother of overcoming haughtiness before I could get anywhere, personally or professionally."

Then I remembered Joan when she first came to Hollywood. She had been a very haughty young woman indeed. And, needless to say, not the charming and popular person she is today.

"What was the first step you took towards overcoming your haughtiness? Do you remember?" I asked.

JOAN laughed. "I remember well, I took a plunge. One afternoon, at a tea-party, I admitted how difficult it was having a brilliant, magnetic sister. I went on to tell how this relegated you to the background whereupon your ego was hurt and, confused, you proceeded to hide behind haughtiness or something else equally silly. And equally unfriendly.

"Well, several other people at that party had been younger brothers or sisters, too. (Continued on page 82)

Below, Jean Harlow is warm and friendly with women as well as men—that's why she's liked. She never acts bored, either.

Below, Sylvia Sidney begs you to be true to yourself first and people, in turn, will be true to you.

A CHANCE TO LIVE AN Ideal

In her "Clive of India" role, Loretta Young finds a spur to high courage and renewed faith in earthly love

BY WALTER RAMSEY

In "Clive of India," with Ronald Colman, Loretta portrays a woman fifteen years her senior.

WHEN Darryl Zanuck cast Loretta Young in the role of Meg in "Clive of India," Hollywood thought he had made the mistake of not reading the book!

Every thirty-year-old actress in town who had been "up" for the role—and several who hadn't—almost swooned at the thought of Zanuck's selection. One columnist wrote: "Another of those strange cases of Hollywood casting is the assigning of Loretta Young in the role of Meg opposite Ronald Colman in 'Clive of India.' During a great portion of the action, Meg is a woman thirty or thirty-five years of age . . . with two children. Miss Young is just barely twenty-two!"

But if the critics, the actresses and the casting boys were surprised, theirs might be called a mild case compared to Loretta's own reaction, which was just one degree short of being flabbergasted. For two or three years now, Loretta has been doing character-ingenues in such dramatic offerings as "A Man's Castle" and "White Parade," but even at that, the cinema life span of the leading lady seldom went over the twenty-year mark. It is not at all unusual for an actress of thirty to portray belles of eighteen, but for a girl in her twenties to portray a woman past thirty (when Hollywood is practically overcrowded with the correct-age type) was indeed something!

"I haven't an inferiority complex," smiled Loretta, who looked like a vision of loveliness in the ruffled gown of soft lace she was wearing for a scene in the picture, "but I never went into a part with such an uncomfortable feeling of doubt, wondering if I would be adequate in such a role, wondering if I would be able to look the part, but, more important still, wondering if I would be able to convincingly portray the mature emotions of Meg."

Loretta and I were sitting on the set representing the London home of Loretta and her husband (in the picture) Ronald Colman. Cameramen and electricians were scurrying about "setting up" for the next scene, a very dramatic moment in the film in which Meg chooses between remaining in London with her child or once more accompanying her husband into the dangerous life he leads in India. At this stage of the story, Meg is almost thirty. I stole a curious glance at the girl who plays Meg. Loretta's own soft, brown hair was covered by a marvelously effective transformation of curls built high on her head. Soft shadows of the make-up artist's magic were discernible under her eyes, but with these outward exceptions, no other changes had been made in Loretta's own beautiful face. Later, I learned that Loretta matures in this role through sheer characterization, not by the usual trick make-up effects, using but her voice and a change in carriage to gain the effect of maturity and dignity. Certainly, no telltale lines marred the fresh loveliness of her face as we sat talking. (Continued on page 116)

Loretta Young—the most sought-after leading lady in all filmdom.

WHY ONE MAN Loved HER

He loved Carole Lombard for years—and can't forget her!

BY DELL HOGARTH

THE sole reason for relating this episode is because of the insight it affords into the character of Carole Lombard. Otherwise, it's strictly personal.

Jim and I had gone to the El Rey Club to celebrate his last night in town. He didn't want to see Carole while he was in Hollywood—that I knew. And he was anxious to be leaving the next day when he'd be beyond any hazard of a chance meeting.

His motives, at this point, must be explained. They were tragically simple. Jim had been in love with Carole for nearly five years; so hopelessly in love that he couldn't endure the ordinary friendship which she desired. Carole is staunch in her friendships and she wanted, desperately, to keep Jim as one of her closest and best. But Jim's emotions couldn't withstand the strain. He resolved, at last, to save his mangled feelings and preclude, as well, the constant probability of playing the fool.

There was only one way he could do this. Never see her, never to set his yearning eyes on her again. So he straightway packed all his belongings, pulled up stakes and went to New York to start life over. Thus it was, more than two years later, that returning to the Coast on a brief business trip, Jim and I got in touch with each other once more. He hadn't changed. We hadn't been together an hour before I realized that his heart still was ensnared hopelessly by the blonde Diana. For his three days in Hollywood, therefore, he had to control himself sternly. It was largely because of this, his triumph over his rampant emotions, that we went to the El Rey to celebrate.

We celebrated for ten minutes when Carole entered.

SHE came in with a well known actor. As she descended the stairs on his arm, she smilingly acknowledged the sudden ripple of salutations. Before her wraps could be removed, friends eagerly surrounded her. Soon they were laughing and talking with that air of nervous excitement which she always inspires. Her bubbling spirits seemed to affect not only this group but everyone in the room. Indeed, the pulse of the whole place quickened; came suddenly and tensely alive. It was as if her arrival provided the excuse for a high gaiety for which the revelers glumly had been waiting. But during this time my eyes were on Jim. His face had turned pale. For a full, agonizing minute he didn't move. Then he grabbed his glass with shaking fingers, gulped his whiskey sour. "Let's get out of here," he muttered hoarsely.

But we didn't leave. At that moment Carole and her escort were being directed, by the beaming head waiter, toward a table next to the dance floor. As they passed close by, Jim turned his head in the opposite direction. From then on there was nothing to do but stay. From where Carole was seated she could see us walk toward the door. We stayed and drank.

And how Jim drank! The liquor brought on the inevitable result. Finally, he commenced to talk. All about the various ways he tried to get Carole out of his blood. But this phase of his confession is strictly his private concern. What does concern us here are the rather revealing things he said about Carole. He had known her extremely well, as I inferred before, for nearly five years. But it wasn't until he settled down in New York that he really understood her. Understood, that is, the reasons for his love.

Jim swirled the amber liquid in his glass and spoke, now, without lifting his eyes. I had to lean close to catch his voice above the chattering din in the room.

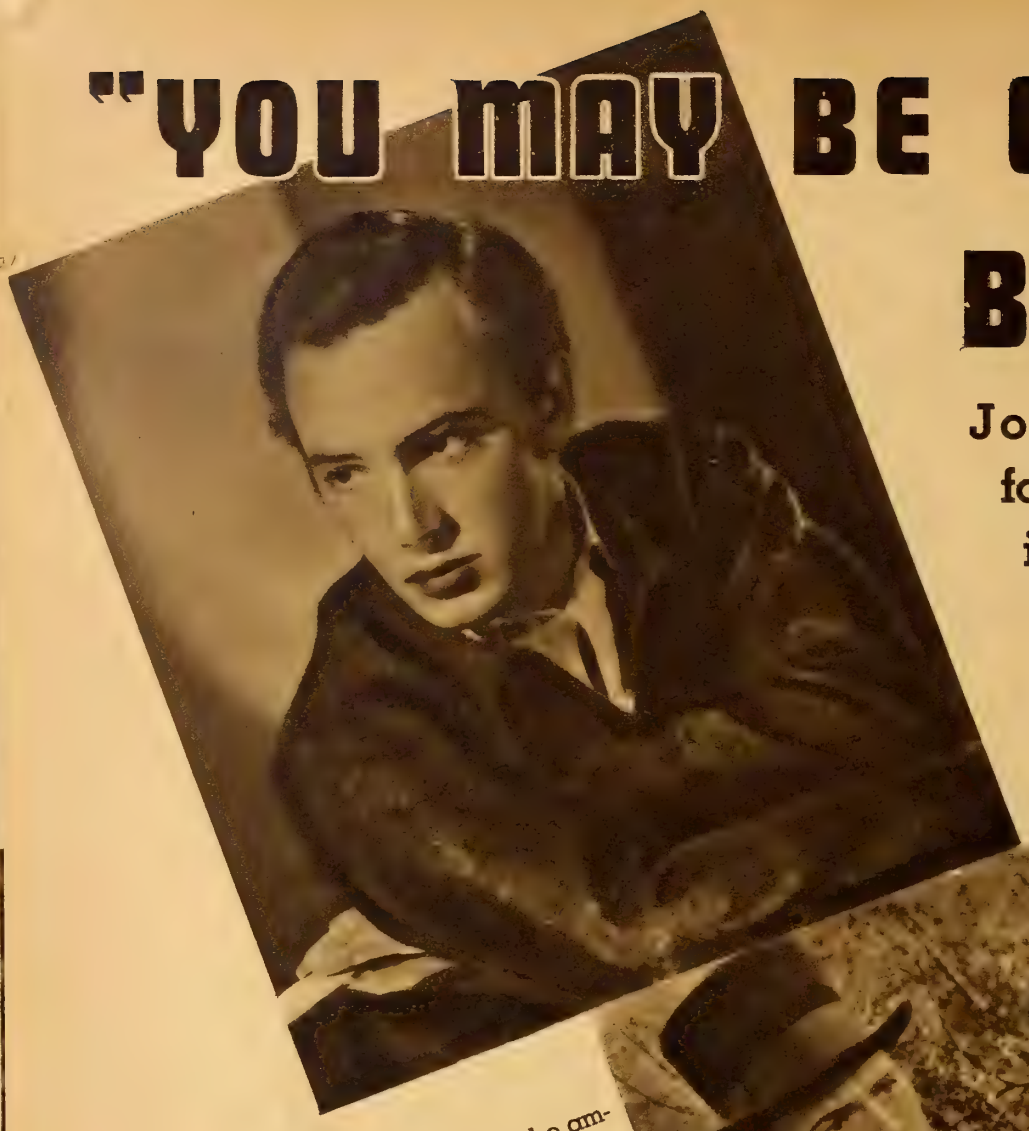
Carole's boundless affection for her friends is one quality which endeared her to this young man.

"I had to understand the reason why I cared for her so," he said. He formed his words with deliberate slowness so that he wouldn't sound mawkish. "I had to. I felt that it was the only thing that would help me get a line on myself. I wanted to know why she stood out among all the women I had ever met. So I began an analysis. I decided, finally, that she possessed just four qualities, four principal qualities, which made her the most irresistible woman I had ever met. They all are ordinary. They all are exceedingly difficult to develop to the highest degree. Well, perhaps that statement is not entirely correct. Perhaps it's natural endowment. For, you see, the first quality Carole possesses is . . ."

I missed the word. The orchestra had started up a rumba. The lights were dim. Couples began shuffling on the floor to that feverish tempo which pounded like blood in your veins. I looked across the floor and soon discovered a sleek, blonde head framed against the dark shoulder of her partner. The head and shoulders didn't move as she and her partner slowly glided among the other couples. "Stepping on eggshells" is the best phrase to describe Carole's dancing. It's so effortless and light; yet imbued, then, with the torrid abandon of the music. I glanced at Jim. As he stared across the smoke filled room, I could perceive that he was following her every move. His eyes were lost in that old enchantment. I touched his hand. He looked at me quickly, unseeing, like one who is under a spell.

"You were telling me something," I said.

HE shook his head and ordered a whiskey neat. The muscles of his jaws flexed. He didn't look back toward the floor. It took one stiff gulp, a long pause, before he could recapture his thoughts.



"Oh yes, I was speaking of beauty. That is the first quality Carole possesses. No man ever falls in love with a woman unless she is beautiful. A woman may not be attractive to other men but to the eyes of her lover she is beautiful. And did you ever (Continued on page 76)

Carole and George Raft team again for "Rumba," a thrill for their fans.

"YOU MAY BE GOING BLIND!"

John Beal had to face the tragic realization that he might eventually lose his eyesight

John Beal had the ambition and the talent to become a great artist, but it would have meant too much of a strain on his eyes. (Left) He was outstanding with Hepburn in "The Little Minister."

BY KATHERINE ALBERT

JOHN BEAL didn't want to tell this story. He was afraid it might sound as if he were making a bid for sympathy. As a matter of fact, he would not even have told the story to me if I hadn't stumbled upon it.

He had just finished "The Little Minister" with Katharine Hepburn which, incidentally, is going to put him right up there with the big stars, and he was raving about Hepburn's acting. Well, I know a lot about mad Kate. I wanted to know more about John Beal. So to change the subject I asked him to show me some of his drawings.

"I'm afraid they'd bore you," he said simply.

But I finally convinced him that world-famous bores had tried to make me yawn and that I could stand a couple of portfolios without falling asleep. So he brought out his sketch books.

Bored? Not much! I was fascinated. He draws beautifully—vivid character sketches, quick flashing likenesses, nice ironies, strong, sure lines.

"But these are grand," I enthused. "Why don't you do more?"

I expected the usual actor alibi "no time" and then I looked at his face and saw some curious emotional drama struggling in his eyes.

"I do as much as I can," he said softly. "It's my eyes. You see, I almost went blind once. I thought that I would never be able to see again." (Continued on page 78)

Here, above, is where you find all of sporting Hollywood when the races are being run—the beautiful new Santa Anita track. The gee-gees are lining up!

THE SPORT OF KINGS

Left above, Ricardo Cortez is snapped by Scotty as he arrives at the track. Ric's grin indicates an advanced tip on the races. Left below, Mary Brian gives one of the jockeys her autograph. Right above, it bodes no good for the hosses with this huddle going on! Arline Judge, husband Wes Ruggles and the old Maestro, Ben Bernie, tell each other what's what. Right below, Mae Clarke (and it's nice to see her recovered again), looks amazed at the horses George E. Stone has marked for her.

Regina Cannon on the wire! She tells you the latest hot-from-Hollywood lowdown! Read all about the parties, races, romances—not to mention the etceteras

Mr. and Mrs. Ansunsolo pay their daughter, Dolores Del Rio, their annual visit.

No sooner had Mary Pickford obtained her two-minute, record-breaking divorce than the rumor hounds got busy and predicted that Buddy Rogers would be America's Sweetheart's "next." In fact, word to that effect even traveled across the Atlantic, where Buddy is playing in London. An enterprising reporter there interviewed the lad, who emphatically replied, "Miss Pickford and I are dear friends. Indeed, I may marry, but I have an English woman in mind."

Mary was born in Canada, remember? So—are we a sleuth or just a bad guesser?

■ ■ ■

That ace romantic, Francis Lederer, has transferred his affections from the tempestuous Steffi Duna to scenarist Anita Loos' charming niece, Mary Anita. But is the foreign lady taking the change philosophically? No, indeed. 'Tis said she's been making things around Hollywood, generally, and around Mr. L., particularly, slightly warmer than a Mexican menu! Battle-staging seems to be the gal's forte—and Francis, himself such a pacifist! How embarrassing, to say the least.

Incidentally, the premature announcement of the Czech's engagement brought out the fact that he had once been married, which matter came as sort of front-page news to his enthralled female public.

■ ■ ■

Those famous wits, Ben Hecht and Charlie MacArthur, have met their match at last, and what's more, they enjoy telling about it! It seems that a Mr. Adams, who owns a little movie house somewhere in Illinois, sent in his exhibitor's report after running the boys' first movie venture.

Mary Brian and Norman Foster have a gay old time at the Trocadero, too.

"'Crime Without Passion'," it read, "is terrible. The audience walked out of my theatre when it was shown. Never send me another like it!"

Well, what did Messrs. Hecht and MacArthur do? They sat right down and wrote Mr. A. "Now," they said, "don't throw this note out with your circulars. In the first place, it's probably the only envelope bearing a three-cent stamp you've ever received. And, we're writing in two-syllable words so that you'll be able to understand, etc., etc., etc."

To which, Mr. Adams replied, "Your letter was so swell, it is now framed and hanging in my lobby, where it is affording my patrons much more entertainment than did your picture. You attack me as an exhibitor? Well, boys, I'm okay there, too. Remember, I got the audience in, but it was your film sent 'em out."

Whew! One up for Adams.

■ ■ ■

Marlene Dietrich has always said that she wanted to bring up her little daughter, Maria, in an "individual" manner. So perhaps that is why, on a recent midnight, the youngster was glimpsed with her famous mother and her Egyptian escort, and her dad and his beautiful female companion at the gay Trocadero, one of Hollywood's brightest night spots. Wouldn't a lot of children, who have to be in bed by eight, love a treat like that?

■ ■ ■

The fact that most of the cast of "Shadow of Doubt" have donned British accents with their make-up may be laid at the door of the celebrated English actress, Constance Collier. Yes, indeed, the day our scout visited the set, there was cute little Isabel Jewell giving her dialogue the broad "A" with a vengeance.

Incidentally, all is definitely over between Isabel and Lee Tracy, with each displaying enough good taste to refrain from discussing the whys and wherefores. Miss J. has a brand new beau already and Lee isn't the stay-at-home type either.

■ ■ ■

He's known to his public as Mala, and to his intimates as plain Ray Wise, and they do say he actually leans a long way toward being an honest-to-goodness Esquimaux. Anyway, 'tis whispered that Ray is tired of being associated with the frozen North and has asked that stories to the effect that he is part Hawaiian—not Four Hawaiians like Joe Cook's famous quartette—be circulated. Well, get hot, Mala! It's all right with us fans, who think you're a pretty good actor whether your manly form is draped in furs or grass! We still remember your perfectly swell performance in "Eskimo" and would like to see you soon again.

Mary Astor and Fredric March dancing at the writers' shindig at the Trocadero.

This looks like a romance. Jean Negulesco and Landi see "Lives of a Bengal Lancer."

That pretty little southern belle, Gail Patrick, is at the moment slightly puzzled over life and studio casting directors. It seems that it took Gail nearly two years to lose her soft Ala-balmy drawl and, no sooner had it gone the way of all memories, than she was put into Bing Crosby's "Mississippi," where she must talk like a girl from way down below the Mason-Dixon line.

■ ■ ■

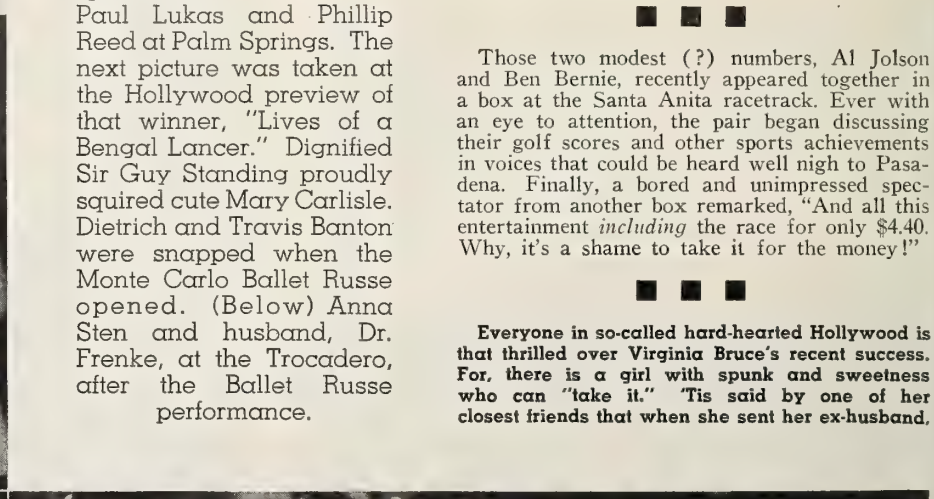
Believe it or not, Dick Powell has a secret passion. Ah ha! It is not the lovely Mary Brian, nor the equally pretty Margaret Lindsay, but Myrna Loy. Yes, Dick never misses a Loy picture. In fact, he goes to see them all by himself and admits he has stayed through the same feature two or three times. Of course, the last person to know about this is Myrna herself.

Incidentally, Dick has had a heck of a time furnishing his new home in Toluca Lake. Yep, almost all the furniture had to be sent back, as it proved to be just about as uncomfortable as it was expensive. Add trials and tribulations of a rich young bachelor.

More Good News

(Above) The Gables, snapped at the Santa Anita races, don't look precisely chummy—do they?—in spite of denials of divorce rumors. (Down the page) Bob Montgomery, Mrs. Bob, and Chester Morris, at the races. Those two sporty-looking gents are Paul Lukas and Phillip Reed at Palm Springs. The next picture was taken at the Hollywood preview of that winner, "Lives of a Bengal Lancer." Dignified Sir Guy Standing proudly squired cute Mary Carlisle. Dietrich and Travis Banton were snapped when the Monte Carlo Ballet Russe opened. (Below) Anna Sten and husband, Dr. Frenke, at the Trocadero, after the Ballet Russe performance.

If you would like to attract a little attention—or a whole lot, for that matter—why not try wearing blue denim overalls with a huge corsage of orchids pinned to the shoulder strap? Margaret Sullavan succeeded in stopping traffic on the Universal lot recently by so doing. Of course, that was her intention, and she surely made the grade! By the way, what is the other peppy little exhibitionist, Katie Hepburn, up to these days? No fun lying on the ground reading fan mail any more, what with the dirt all replaced by nice, clean cement.



■ ■ ■

Those two modest (?) numbers, Al Jolson and Ben Bernie, recently appeared together in a box at the Santa Anita racetrack. Ever with an eye to attention, the pair began discussing their golf scores and other sports achievements in voices that could be heard well nigh to Pasadena. Finally, a bored and unimpressed spectator from another box remarked, "And all this entertainment including the race for only $4.40. Why, it's a shame to take it for the money!"

■ ■ ■

Everyone in so-called hard-hearted Hollywood is that thrilled over Virginia Bruce's recent success. For, there is a girl with spunk and sweetness who can "take it." 'Tis said by one of her closest friends that when she sent her ex-husband,

More Good News

Jack Gilbert, a lovely gift lately, he returned it unopened. Even so, Virginia generously tells everybody that she wishes her baby's father good luck in whatever he undertakes.

■ ■ ■

The players over at Warners' studio have learned a great, big lesson. It seems that all the boys and girls who were not satisfied with their cinematic assignments tried to duck out of 'em by saying they wanted to be in "A Midsummer Night's Dream." Well, just for that, the Powers That Be answered right back with, "Certainly, you can appear in that production and your other films, too." Now that's what you call an obliging bunch of executives, even though the actors called them something else!

■ ■ ■

W. C. Fields proves to be his studio's "problem child" when it comes to the question of interviews. It seems that the gent just doesn't like to be bothered very much by the writing fraternity. Lately, however, he consented to see a reporter at his home, but on the morning the lad was due, Bill phoned Paramount and murmured sorrowfully, "That poor fellow won't be able to get in here today because this rain has washed away practically my whole driveway. Yes, I'm sure disappointed." What the studio didn't learn until much (Continued on page 110)

(Above) The Broadway hit, "Merrily We Roll Along," picks a cast for the Pacific Coast run. Rehearsing are Erin O'Brien Moore, Douglass Montgomery, Virginia Cherrill and Dorothy Wilson. (Down the page) Ruby Keeler and Al Jolson—very excited—at the Santa Anita races. Next, meet the writer of those hits, "It Happened One Night" and "Broadway Bill," Bob Riskin, with Carole Lombard at the Trocadero. Below them are Maureen O'Sullivan and her blond beau, Johnnie Farrow, at the same party. Next, Mr. and Mrs. Chawles Laughton (Elsa Lanchester) at the Ballet Russe. (Below) Anne Shirley with her San Francisco boy friend, Frank O'Connor, at the Grove.

All Photos by Scott

IS THIS Gratitude?

Hollywood takes it on the chin from the very people whom it has made world-famous and wealthy

BY ERIC ERGENBRIGHT

IF, almost overnight, you found yourself lifted from poverty to wealth, from obscurity and frustration to world-wide fame and the idolatrous worship of a hundred million fans; if the portals leading to the realization of all your ambitions and your desires were thrown open before you as though by magic . . .

Would you be grateful?

Don't be too hasty, or too self-confident, in answering. Ponder the question well, for human nature, whether in Hollywood or Timbuctoo, is a tricky, incalculable thing and genuine gratitude is to be found more rarely than pirate gold. Remember the ancient tale of the flounder and the fisherman's wife—or, more apropos, give a thought to the ungrateful guests of Hollywood. They are legion! You can't begin to list them.

Consider, for example, the case of Greta Garbo. Hollywood, to her, has been an Aladdin's Lamp, a Fortuna's Purse. She came here, only a few years ago, a nobody; today, she is, unquestionably, the most famous woman in the world. She came here poor; today, she is — or should be — very wealthy, for her weekly salary is in the neighborhood of $10,000—more than five times that of the President of the United States.

Hollywood has given her mansions to live in, servants to wait upon her, fine cars to drive, the means to care for her once impoverished family, money to gratify her least whim! Hollywood has given her fame and adoration. And Hollywood is merely a mirror — sometimes distorted, usually faithful—which reflects the likes and dislikes of the world's theatre-goers. It is you, the untold millions of yous, who have done all these splendid things for Garbo!

Is the Great One grateful?

Just consider the evidence:

The poor, obscure Swedish girl who found a fortune in America, as far as we know, has never applied for citizenship in America. On the contrary, she has frequently intimated that she might retire to her native Sweden whenever her screen career is ended. It's her annual threat.

Nothing is known regarding her charities—if any. Perhaps she gives generously to the unfortunate members of that world-wide audience which has given her stardom and wealth. If so, she has kept her secrets well—for no other star, in all Hollywood history, ever has been able to conceal, completely, his contributions to a deserving charity.

HER attitude toward her adoring fans is too well known to need recounting here. No interviews, no autographs, no personal appearances, no contacts of any kind! En route to Europe, she is said to have demanded that an entire deck be cleared so that she might promenade without rubbing elbows with people. Vacationing in a mountain resort near Los Angeles, she is said to have demanded that all other guests should keep to their cabins, with their window shades drawn, while she and her small retinue registered. Since becoming a star, she has never posed for press pictures, never signed an autograph album, never answered a fan letter—in short, never expressed any sentiment toward those loyal people, her fans, except the frantic desire to avoid every contact with them.

There are those who contend, from all this evidence, that she nurses contempt and dislike for the very public which has made her a star. There are others who argue that her actions are proof indisputable of excessive humility and desire for self-effacement.

Take your choice and bring in your own verdict: "Is Garbo grateful?"

The same question can be asked, or could have been asked, from time to time, about many other stars. For instance, there was a kid named Lew Ayres—a mighty likable kid, too—who skyrocketed to stardom in "All Quiet on the Western Front." He certainly was no great shakes as an actor, but "All Quiet" was so tremendous a story, and the picture was so magnificently directed and produced that it made him a star.

And what did he do, in the first flush of his fame, but put the cart before the horse and conclude that he had made the picture.

A year or so later, with Universal paying him the miserable stipend of some $1250 a week to grace with his presence one box-office disaster after another, he is said to have expressed his gratitude by ranting bitterly against the stupidity of the producers and indicting them for forcing him to play in pictures unworthy of his talents.

And, to tell the truth, Lew wasn't greatly to blame, for Hollywood actually goes out of its way to invite ingratitude by making too much fuss over its stars. There isn't a person connected with the motion picture industry who isn't fully aware of the fact that the credit—or blame—for every picture should be shared equally by the authors, the producers, the director, the film editors and the cast. But, unfortunately, of all those who contribute to the finished picture, only the actors are seen by the audience. Consequently, the studios always have concentrated their publicity barrage on their stars. And the critics, recognizing the fact that John and Jane Public have been blinded by that publicity, pretty generally follow suit.

What wonder, then, if a sudden deluge of fan mail and publicity raves, turns many a stellar head? A few reverses, a few critical "pannings" and salary-loss periods usually suffice to restore the sufferer's sense of proportion.

(Reading down, left to right) How have Dietrich, Stuart, Sullavan, Garbo, Gilbert and Lew Ayres shown their gratitude to Hollywood?

Speaking of gratitude —or lack of it, if you prefer—Hollywood was rather flabbergasted to read a recent interview granted by Margaret Sullavan, the Laemmles' newest hope. It was entitled "I Hate Everything" and in it what a knouting that young lady gave Hollywood, the picture business and everything and everybody connected with it!

"I hate Hollywood," she said. "I hate pictures! I hate producers . . . and interviewers . . . and hairdressers . . . and portrait photographers! I hate everything about this place but the climate!"

Hollywood was just a trifle bewildered, for it was paying Margaret a sum slightly less than the national debt each week and making her name, heretofore unknown outside a limited stage circle, a household word. The thought of all the millions of girls who would barter half of their lives for such a salary and fame becomes a melancholy reflection at times like that.

Hollywood was less shocked when Gloria Stuart went on the warpath about a year ago and is alleged to have declared:

"I might have been a good actress if I hadn't gone into the movies. I might still be if I get away from Hollywood in time. I don't care if I never see another picture. I'd be better off doing nothing than the things I'm doing now. Hollywood is just a razzle-dazzle—I hate all this bickering and pretense!"

Of course, the razzle-dazzle pays Gloria pretty well. It's made her a star, it's given her fame—but after all, what's that? Gloria majored in philosophy.

AND then, there's Dietrich. Marlene, legs and all, was practically an unknown, until Dame Hollywood—which is to say, you and you and you —came along and made her an idol from Nantucket to Point Arguello, and, incidentally, paid her enough in the process that she could afford such trifling extravagances as $1700 a month for the rental of three houses. Marlene was so overcome by gratitude that she informed the world that her daughter would be educated abroad. Being somewhat proud of our school system, we were hurt.

And there's John Gilbert. John was "up" for years, up to the tune of $10,000 a week—and Hollywood was a grand, wonderful and altogether lovely place. And then he was "down" for a while (Continued on page 99)

. . . MODERN SCREEN

Some clues to this month's set of song titles: one of the pictures was a last year's hit, one is not so new, and the star of the third is an Englishman.

$500 in prizes!
A lot of fun!
Read the details

GATHER 'round, good people, and we will tell you all about this grand contest. The rules and everything are set forth in the two boxes in heavy type on the next page, but perhaps we can explain a little more fully here.

You are probably well launched in last month's installment of this contest—that was the first installment—but in case you missed the last issue of MODERN SCREEN (tch, tch! never let that happen again!) and in case you cannot obtain a copy elsewhere, we will be glad to mail you a copy of that issue, if you will send such a request, your name and address and ten cents to MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

We have received a number of questions regarding this contest and we think maybe some of you may be helped if we print the answers to those questions here.

Question: In order to win one of the prizes in the Modern Screen-Warner Song Contest, does a contestant have to submit a complete set of lyrics?

Answer: No. All that is required of a contestant, in order to win one of the prizes, is to send in the complete list of songs, titles and tell who sang them, according to the rules given, and to write a composition of not more than one hundred words telling which Warner musical the contestant has liked best to date, with reasons.

Question: Does a contestant have to submit three compositions of one hundred words (or less)—that is, one for each month?

Answer: No. Only one composition of a hundred words or less must be written for the complete contest.

Question: Does neatness count?

Answer: Yes. Neatness will bear weight when the judges decide on the winners. Elaborate entries, however, are not encouraged. Keep your entry simple—and neat.

Question: If a contestant submits five, instead of three answers, for each month's set of Warner musical titles, will he be more favored for a prize?

Answer: No. All contestants will be judged on a three-out-of-five basis.

THERE now! Do those questions and answers clear up any doubtful points in your minds? We hope so.

The titles of the five pictures for this month are listed on page 43. Next month we will give you the final list of five. And as we have said, five were listed last month. Every one of these fifteen pictures were Warner musicals, produced by the same company, in which one or more popular songs were featured.

You are asked to tell what was the most popular song in three out of each set of five pictures. That is to say, three from last month's list, three from this month's list and three from next month's list. That makes nine in all. You must choose three from each set of five—not any nine from the complete set of fifteen. You need not necessarily have seen the picture to be able to fulfill the requirements. You need only to have heard the song and to have known who sang it in the picture. Of course, you may, if you wish, fill out the (Continued on page 117)

WARNER SONG CONTEST

The two nearest pictures contain clues to two more song titles and the picture at the far left is a scene from Warners' "Golddiggers of 1935."

HERE ARE THE RULES:

The Modern Screen-Warner Song Contest commenced in the last issue of this magazine—the one dated March. If, by any chance, you missed that issue of Modern Screen, and cannot obtain a copy elsewhere, we will be glad to forward you a copy. Send your name and address and ten cents to MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

The winning contestants in the Modern Screen-Warner Song Contest will be those who fulfil accurately and aptly the following requirements: 1. You are to name the most popular song from three out of each set of five pictures, given in three consecutive issues of this magazine, and tell who sang the song in the picture. For example: "Why Do I Dream Those Dreams," from "Wonder Bar," sung by Dick Powell.

In the paragraph below, you will find this month's list of pictures. Next month, we will give you five more picture titles. You will be asked to fulfil the same requirements next month, with next month's installment of picture titles. DO NOT SEND ANY ENTRIES IN UNTIL YOU HAVE THE COMPLETE LIST.

Here is this month's list: GOLDDIGGERS OF BROADWAY, PARIS, BRIGHT LIGHTS, GOLDDIGGERS OF 1933, and FOOTLIGHT PARADE.

2. Write 100 words—or less—telling which Warner musical you have liked best to date. Give your reasons. The words "a", "an" and "the" do not count.

3. The person, who, in the opinion of the judges, most accurately fulfils requirement number 1 and most aptly fulfils requirement number 2, will win the First Prize of $250. The subsequent prizes of Second Prize, $100; Third Prize, $50; Fourth Prize, $25; 5 Fifth Prizes of $10 each; and 5 Sixth Prizes of $5 each will be awarded, in the order named, to those persons, who, in the opinion of the judges, come nearest to fulfilling the requirements correctly.

4. Each contestant may send as many entries as he wishes.

5. In case of ties, duplicate prizes will be awarded.

6. No entries will be returned.

7. Contest closes at midnight, May 15, 1935. All entries must be mailed before that time to be eligible for the contest.

8. The judges are the editors of MODERN SCREEN and Julius P. Witmark, Jr.

9. Send all entries to Modern Screen-Warner Song Contest, 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

10. Everyone is eligible to compete in this contest except employees of MODERN SCREEN and Warner Brothers.

Elaborate entries stand no better chance of winning a prize than simple ones. Neatness is important.

EXTRA HONOR FOR ALL CONTESTANTS

Have you ever tried your hand at writing the words of a song? We'll bet you often felt that you could. Well, here's your opportunity to try your luck at writing a set of lyrics and having them used in a forthcoming Warner musical production. The article at the bottom of the page tells you in detail about this optional part of the contest—please read it carefully. The rules are listed below, as follows:

1. Each contestant may send a set of lyrics along with his selection of songs, singers and 100-word description. This part of the contest is entirely optional—you may try it if you like, or leave it out, and still stand an equally good chance of winning one of the prizes.

2. The lyric which, in the opinion of the judges, is the best will be used in a forthcoming Warner musical production.

3. For the lyric which will be used in a Warner production, the usual royalties on music publication and commercial, mechanical instrument use will be paid by the music publishers.

4. Keep a copy of your lyric for your own use. If it isn't accepted and you wish it returned, merely send a stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request. We will try to comply with your request, but we assume no risk.

5. Remember the contest closes at midnight, May 15, 1935. All lyrics, like entries, must be mailed before that time to be eligible for this contest.

6. The judges of the lyrics are the editors of MODERN SCREEN and Mr. Julius P. Witmark, Jr., formerly a member of the music publishing firm of M. Witmark and Sons.

MAE WEST IS IN PRISON!

Dates are taboo for La West. "You can't go out with a man and take a bodyguard along," drawls Mae.

BY VIRGINIA T. LANE

"I've always liked a man in the house, but I didn't count on four!" says Mae. Recent threatening letters are the reasons for all this male protection

FOR a year Mae West has lived behind chained doors. For a year that dazzling Diamond Lil gal has gone around more heavily guarded than the crown jewels.

"Private life?" Mae chuckled. "Baby, did you ever try to have one with four special policemen shadowing you, with headquarters checking every telephone call, and no one allowed to see you without a pass? Honey, I have to be a lady now!

"See this car?"

I did. It looked like Model A from the auto show, but that was not what Mae meant. She pointed to the especially designed safety lock on the doors. "They can't be opened from the outside, not by hook or crook. The body of the car is made of the same steel as that of armored cars and the glass is bullet-proof. That gadget over there . . . No, it doesn't hold cigarettes. It's a revolver case. The chauffeur totes a gun, too." She settled herself in the back seat, the tiny West feet disappearing in a thick fur rug.

Mae and her entourage at the fights—her manager, Jim Timony, and two bodyguards on the left and right. Two more are lurking around somewhere.

The sex-appeal lady herself in a romantic scene from "How Am I Doing?" with her newest leading man, Grant Withers. Grant appears to like the assignment.

"What I mind most is this subway effect in the tonneau. I used to love to look at store windows and all the life and excitement on the streets. I used to study people's faces. Why, sometimes you could catch a whole drama between the 'stop' and 'go' signs! But now I'm lucky even to hear the signals! I'm a prisoner!"

It all came about through that spectacular robbery of Mae's. Remember? The papers were full of it for days and headlines blazed across the country. There had been a series of such robberies in Hollywood and the police finally rounded up the gang. Mae didn't prosecute but she was obliged to testify as the state's witness. Then began the most weird succession of mysterious phone calls, messages and letters that any filmite has ever received. It gave everyone the jitters—except Mae. Her life was threatened, her career was threatened. It's an unnerving thing never to be sure when you pick up a letter whether you'll read those ominous words, "If you step into that courtroom, you'll get yours!" Or to hear in cold, deadly tones over the wire, "You speak out and one of these days somebody's going to throw a bottle of acid into your face."

But Mae has enough fight in her to stop a couple of armies. She didn't, however, know that when she said she'd "stick to her guns" she was practically putting herself under padlock and key.

"Me! The gal who told the world to come up and see me some time! That's life for you . . ."

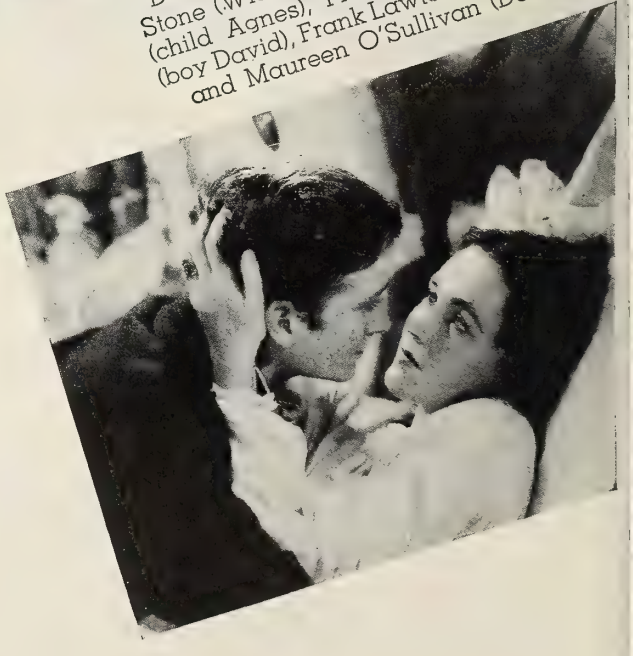
But the District Attorney's office and the studio are taking no chances. The chain on the door of Mae's exclusive apartment is two and a quarter inches thick. There's a grilled slot through which every visitor is inspected before being admitted. Even when they're announced by the office downstairs the butler has been trained to take this precaution for fear someone else has trailed along with them. And there is plenty of evidence that such precautions are necessary.

Just a short time ago Libby, Mae's personal colored maid, was awakened about four (Continued on page 88)

REVIEWS

A TOUR OF TODAY'S TALKIES

A: David Copperfield
(M-G-M)



You will see about the best that the screen can afford when you witness the unreeling of Dickens' immortal novel. Large shares of credit are due all around; the director, adapters and photographer come in for at least a gold star apiece. But best of all is the acting. Never has such a list of splendid portrayals been seen in a single picture. No stellar names; just brilliant players.

Edna May Oliver is so realistic as Aunt Betsey Trotwood that she might have just stepped from the novel's pages. Roland Young superbly underplays the "humble" Uriah Heep; W. C. Fields is excellent as the ever-hopeful Micawber; Jessie Ralph is perfect as Peggoty; Elizabeth Allan, charming as the flower-like Mrs. Copperfield; little Freddie Bartholomew marvelous as the boy David, and Frank Lawton superb as the grown-up Copperfield.

The picture is necessarily episodic and the second half tends to drag a bit, but it was no mean task to confine this lengthy tale to program-length entertainment—and such entertainment. However, there is comparatively so little to criticize, that one would be splitting hairs to do so. Yes, "David Copperfield" is a picture gem made lustrous by its many brilliant characterizations.

(Above and below) Scenes from "David Copperfield" with Lewis Stone (Wickfield), Marilyn Knowlden (child Agnes), Freddie Bartholomew (boy David), Frank Lawton (big David) and Maureen O'Sullivan (Dora).

A: Clive of India
(Twentieth Century)

Here indeed is a picture for your "must see" list, for it offers well-nigh everything from the standpoint of cinematic entertainment. First and foremost, there is a tender love story, which is never permitted to meander in the interest of action, counterplot or colorful atmosphere. It deals with loyalty and self-sacrifice, not in a maudlin manner, but by presenting them as thrilling qualities which actually add suspense to the story. One wonders just how long Clive will stand by India, and how long his patient, devoted wife will stand by her adventurer-husband.

Richard Boleslawski can tilt his nose skyward when this film is released, for he has handled the exciting production in a thoroughly tasteful manner, giving due importance to battle sequences, characterization, artistic touches and romantic moments. "Clive of India," replete with thrills and romance, reveals Ronald Colman at his best and Loretta Young as an actress with depth as well as rare beauty.

A: The Gilded Lily
(Paramount)

Chalk up another hit for Paramount, Claudette Colbert and an attractive newcomer named Fred MacMurray, who is a "natural" when it comes to acting ability and charm.

The story itself contains all the ingredients—some of them familiar, but who cares?—calculated to make an A-1 picture pie. There's the roving reporter and the gal who becomes internationally famous through no fault of her own, and the titled Englishman, Ray Milland, who is up to no good. There are many human notes struck, truly dramatic moments unreeled and delightful accents of light comedy injected to lift you to laughter.

And, of course, it all revolves about the luscious-looking Claudette, who makes the most of every scene, by dint of convincing portrayal and divine dressing. Why gild the lily? Ask Paramount! They seem to know the answer.

A: The Whole Town's Talking
(Columbia)

This seems to have turned out to be a veritable picture-praising month and so, we add Edward Robinson's latest film to the list of hits.

With few exceptions, you'll find that this month's movie calendar insures A-1 fare

BY REGINA CANNON

(Above) "Clive of India" with Ronald Colman and Loretta Young. (Below) Fred MacMurray, handsome newcomer, and Claudette Colbert in a charming film called "The Gilded Lily." Another hit for Claudette!

(Above) Jean Arthur and Edward G. Robinson score in "The Whole Town's Talking." (Below) A vital scene from "Bordertown," with Margaret Lindsay, Bette Davis and Paul Muni, who makes too few pictures.

See page 14 for Modern Screen's Movie Scoreboard.

The actor has every opportunity to score and doesn't miss a trick in a dual role packed with sinister and light comedy points. Eddie plays a meek office worker whose appearance is identical to that of "Killer" Mannion, Public Enemy Number 1. Of course you realize the possibilities of this situation—and they're carried out to the fullest.

The film's most hilarious sequence takes place when the meek Robinson gets himself tangled up in the boss's liquor and "tells off" the office force. Another "gay" spot is when the clever Jean Arthur is "taking" the third degree. There is plenty of gun play and thrills galore and splendid incident, all calculated to keep you on the edge of your chair, which indeed they do. Etienne Girardot, as the office manager, and Donald Meek, as the busy-body responsible for Eddie's troubles, come in for their share of praise. Don't miss "The Whole Town's Talking." It's packed with excitement, laughs and perfect portrayals.

And while this glowing mood is upon us, we might as well say that we're glad to see so good an actor as Robinson in a good picture again.

B: Bordertown
(Warner Bros.)

Here is a picture that is worth while. No extravagant praise need be sung as far as the story itself is concerned, but from the standpoint of character portrayal, it is excellent.

Paul Muni gives a brilliant performance as the Mexican lad, brought up in the picturesque but poverty-stricken Mexican section of Los Angeles. His great aim is to follow the life and teachings of Abraham Lincoln. But—maybe you've guessed it—it doesn't take long for him to discover that all men are not created equal! His struggles for recognition, for justice, and for love, afford plenty of dramatic suspense.

Bette Davis' role as the cheap murderess-wife is well acted, but suffers by comparison with her unusually good work in "Of Human Bondage." Soledad Jeminez, a Mexican actress, is deserving of a few laurels for her beautiful interpretation of the aged mother, as is the cameraman for consistently good photography.

Even if the story's a bit long-winded, we miss our guess if you aren't sufficiently amused.

B: The Iron Duke
(Gaumont-British)

George Arliss, as the Duke of Wellington—the magnificent warrior who loved peace—is, as always, the superb actor. We found the picture, on the whole, a little dull. There are some good short scenes—in which a slice of history is crystallized before your eyes in dramatic manner. These bits are too few (Continued on page 118)

"Maxine and I are ready whenever you gentlemen are," Saunders said.

BY DALE EUNSON

Dale Eunson is that brilliant young man whose first novel, "Homestead," is being acclaimed by the critics. He has lived in Hollywood, knows the stars and writes about them expertly. "Marriage of Convenience" is based on a true Hollywood incident.

MARRIAGE of

IT WAS funny to watch them together—little, drab Bartlett Saunders, tie never quite right, shoes the grimy black that bespoke home-polishing, trousers bagging at the knee and seat, red hair graying slightly and innocent of a comb for the-Lord-only-knew how long and eyes blinking behind horn-rimmed spectacles at the glitter, dazzle and veneer that was Maxine Vane. They were funny to watch even then, before the vent which could have occurred nowhere except in that exotic, publicity-scorched town masquerading under the innocuous, innocent title—"Hollywood."

It was said that Bartlett Saunders had once been a college professor, and it was easy to believe. He was so true to type that Storm Ericson, the big Swedish casting director, once spotted him on the lot and tried to persuade him to play such a part in a picture. But Bartlett refused. And that seemed perfectly in character, too.

What amazed everyone was that he had ever chanced to cast his lot with motion pictures in the first place, even in such a dull, routine office as voice instructor. People said, afterward, that it must have been that same occasional spirit of rebellion against the commonplace that enabled him to find anything attractive beneath the brittle, hard surface of Maxine Vane.

Maxine had been a star for a little more than a year when "talkies" came along. There were a dozen or more highly colored and somewhat lurid tales concerning Maxine's ascent of the ladder of fame, and some of them were undoubtedly true. A clever studio politician, it was said that she had known where to scatter her favors skillfully.

MAXINE HAD TO GET MARRIED! BEAUTIFUL, FAMOUS, DESIRABLE

Illustrated by Floherty, Jr.

CONVENIENCE

Be that as it may, by the time talkies came in she had boosted her salary to three thousand a week, had brought her mother and father, numberless brothers and sisters out of the squalor of a Brooklyn tenement to the pseudo-Spanish elegance of a Beverly Hills mansion. And she had perched herself in a magnificent aerie (created by an architect and decorator in a moment of modern madness). Polished chromium staircases and geegaws jutted out and swooped dangerously where least expected, tables of steel and glass, chairs that squatted ridiculously and uncomfortably on the floor itself, and colored lights contributed nothing to the sanity of it all. It was a house that few persons could have lived in, but Maxine liked it. And since it was her home, that was all that mattered. It was so different from the poverty and filth which had spawned the bright plumage of Maxine Vane that it never occurred to her what an atrocity the place really was. When she first took Bartlett Saunders there and he exclaimed over it in somewhat horrified politeness, she said very simply, (Continued on page 104)

MAXINE, WHOM ALL MEN LOVED, BUT DID NOT WANT AS A WIFE

WHAT A TEAM..!

Here's the close-up Hollywood is most interested in at the moment—Jean Harlow and Bill Powell. This is all part of their work in "Reckless"—but off-screen, it's love, if you'll believe rumors.

"MY CARDS ARE ON THE TABLE"

Constance Bennett tells why she can't say "yes" when she means "no!"

BY KATHERINE ALBERT

THE publicity girl and I stood in Constance Bennett's dressing-room. Connie nodded briskly in my direction and then turned to the press agent.

"That story," she said, "you let it go out without my okay. How did that happen?"

"I'm sorry," the girl said. "Some messages got confused. It's just one of those things that happen even in the best regulated departments."

"But a promise was made to me, wasn't it? And that promise wasn't kept. I was furious about it. You wouldn't want me to tell you that everything was all right when it wasn't, would you?"

"N—no," said the girl. "No, I wouldn't."

"All right," said Connie. And then she smiled that disarming, frank smile of hers. "Let's not let it happen again."

As I watched this little inside studio encounter, my mind raced back and I recalled a similar situation which had been handled so differently by another star. This other star had smiled sweetly upon the press agent, had thanked him for some favor—oh, if she had had butter in her mouth it would have turned to stone—and the minute he left she said to me, "Do you know what that dirty-double-crossing so-and-so did to me?" I knew all about it half an hour later.

Connie couldn't do that. There is something in her nature that makes it utterly impossible for her to say "yes" when she means "no." Connie is frank—utterly and completely frank. She stands or falls by that and you can take her or leave her.

AS a result, of course, she has the reputation for being brutal. Hundreds of stories are repeated concerning her telling people off. So far has this reputation gone before her, that folks who work with her for the first time come near her in fear and trembling. Connie has the Indian sign on Hollywood. Yet to my immediate knowledge nobody has asked for her side of the story. Nobody has really wanted to know why she behaves like that. It was for that purpose that I had come to her. I was just in time to witness the scene I've described.

"Do you do that deliberately?" I asked. "Do you try to intimidate people?"

"Good heavens, no!" she said, "I only treat others as I want to be treated. But I know what they say about me. You always know everything that is said about you in Hollywood. I know that I'm supposed to be a devil. I'm brutal. I'm mean. And I'm sorry if that's what they think, but I am as I am and I can't change.

"I've never wilfully hurt anyone. I don't go around deliberately trying to be nasty. I've a healthy temper, I'll admit, and if I think I've been done a wrong, I go to the source. But I've never said one thing to a person's face and another behind his back, (Continued on page 123)

Connie Bennett and Clark Gable in a scene from "After Office Hours."

AMAZING THINGS HAVE HAPPENED TO HER

Anna Sten possesses a rare, compelling beauty.

CAN you imagine your emotions if you suddenly rounded a corner and found yourself running head-on into a glittering rank of bayonets? Icy bayonets of either the advance guard of the new provisional government or the retreating guard of the defeated government, extended and ready to plunge into the heart of any unfortunate pedestrian caught out in the streets.

But the two little Russian girls, watching from the high parade grounds of Kiev that fierce battle on the opposite bank of the narrow Dnieper River, were not terrified.

They took those bloody engagements as a matter of course. What else had they known in their brief lifetime? Every other day Kiev was besieged by another ill-assorted army, and the shaky governments rose and fell almost as regularly as the sun rises and sinks. White Russians fighting Red Russians; peasants fighting townspeople; and, as if that didn't provide enough excitement, guerilla raids, led by savage bandit women from the neighboring woods, frightened citizens off the streets and sent them scuttling to their cellars like so many rats.

Considering the terror of those times, and the nonchalance of these two little girls, it was no wonder they were nicknamed "bashi buzouk." Which is a Caucasian expression for daredevil.

Suddenly one of them sprang up from her hiding place behind the bushes. The sun had set, it was growing unpleasantly chilly, and they could no longer distinguish the figures on the other side of the river.

"We must go before the soldiers reach the town," she said.

So they ran past the bandstand, zigzagged through the beautiful, cultivated flower beds, so ghostly now in the fast diminishing light, and down into the narrow cobbled streets of the town. Both were giggling at the excitement of the adventure, but the giggles were a little forced. For they knew that in times of civil war there was little respect for sex or age, and if the soldiers had already crossed the river, they stood a good chance of being shot down.

They began to run faster, taking the narrow corners like polo ponies.

Thud, thud, thud, went the feet of the approaching soldiers—and the hearts of the two bashi buzouk. They rounded another corner—and stopped short just about two feet from death! Dozens of glittering bayonets were menacingly aimed at their beating hearts. A squad of soldiers were marching backwards to protect the advancing army from any stray attacks by disloyal citizens.

But there was (Continued on page 122)

After revolution and famine do you need ask why Anna Sten finds Hollywood tame?

BY HILARY LYNN

Anna and Gary Cooper are co-starred in "The Wedding Night."

(Above) It's Russell Hardie, not Hardie Albright, with Jean Parker in "Sequoia."

who IS

His last name isn't Standing. It's Stephenson.

First name, Roscoe. Last name, Karns—not Ates.

He's your favorite "Greek" waiter—Henry Armetta.

BY HARRY BRUNDIDGE

HOW do you feel when people whom you've been introduced to fail to remember your name? Doesn't it make you simply furious? Most of us are annoyed at a mere misspelling of our name—an "e" where there should be an "a," for instance. Taking all that into consideration, how do you suppose a screen player reacts when he's been in two hundred or more pictures—as many of them have—to overhear a person watching his performance in a movie say, "Who is that man?" Well, we've asked some of them and here's what we found out.

I was sitting in the roped-off preview section of a little Hollywood theatre with a friend, enjoying a grand picture. Henry Stephenson was giving a swell performance in his big scene. The debonair Stephenson, incidentally, was just two seats removed from us. It was right then that one of those whispering voices that sound like a wind in an empty barn whispered to my companion:

"Who IS that man?"

"Sir Guy Standing," she answered.

Stephenson, I think, turned purple; I couldn't tell for certain, in the semi-darkness. I do know that he choked a bit, and had to adjust his collar. I did not blame him. But later I had to laugh when I recalled an experience of only a few days back. I was lunching with Harold Lloyd. As we started for the door a feminine autograph seeker had grabbed my arm, and asked:

"Isn't your friend a picture star?"

"Sure," I replied. "That's Buster Keaton."

That familiar face on the screen . . . Oh, what IS his name?

that man?

The Morgans—Frank (left) and Ralph (right).

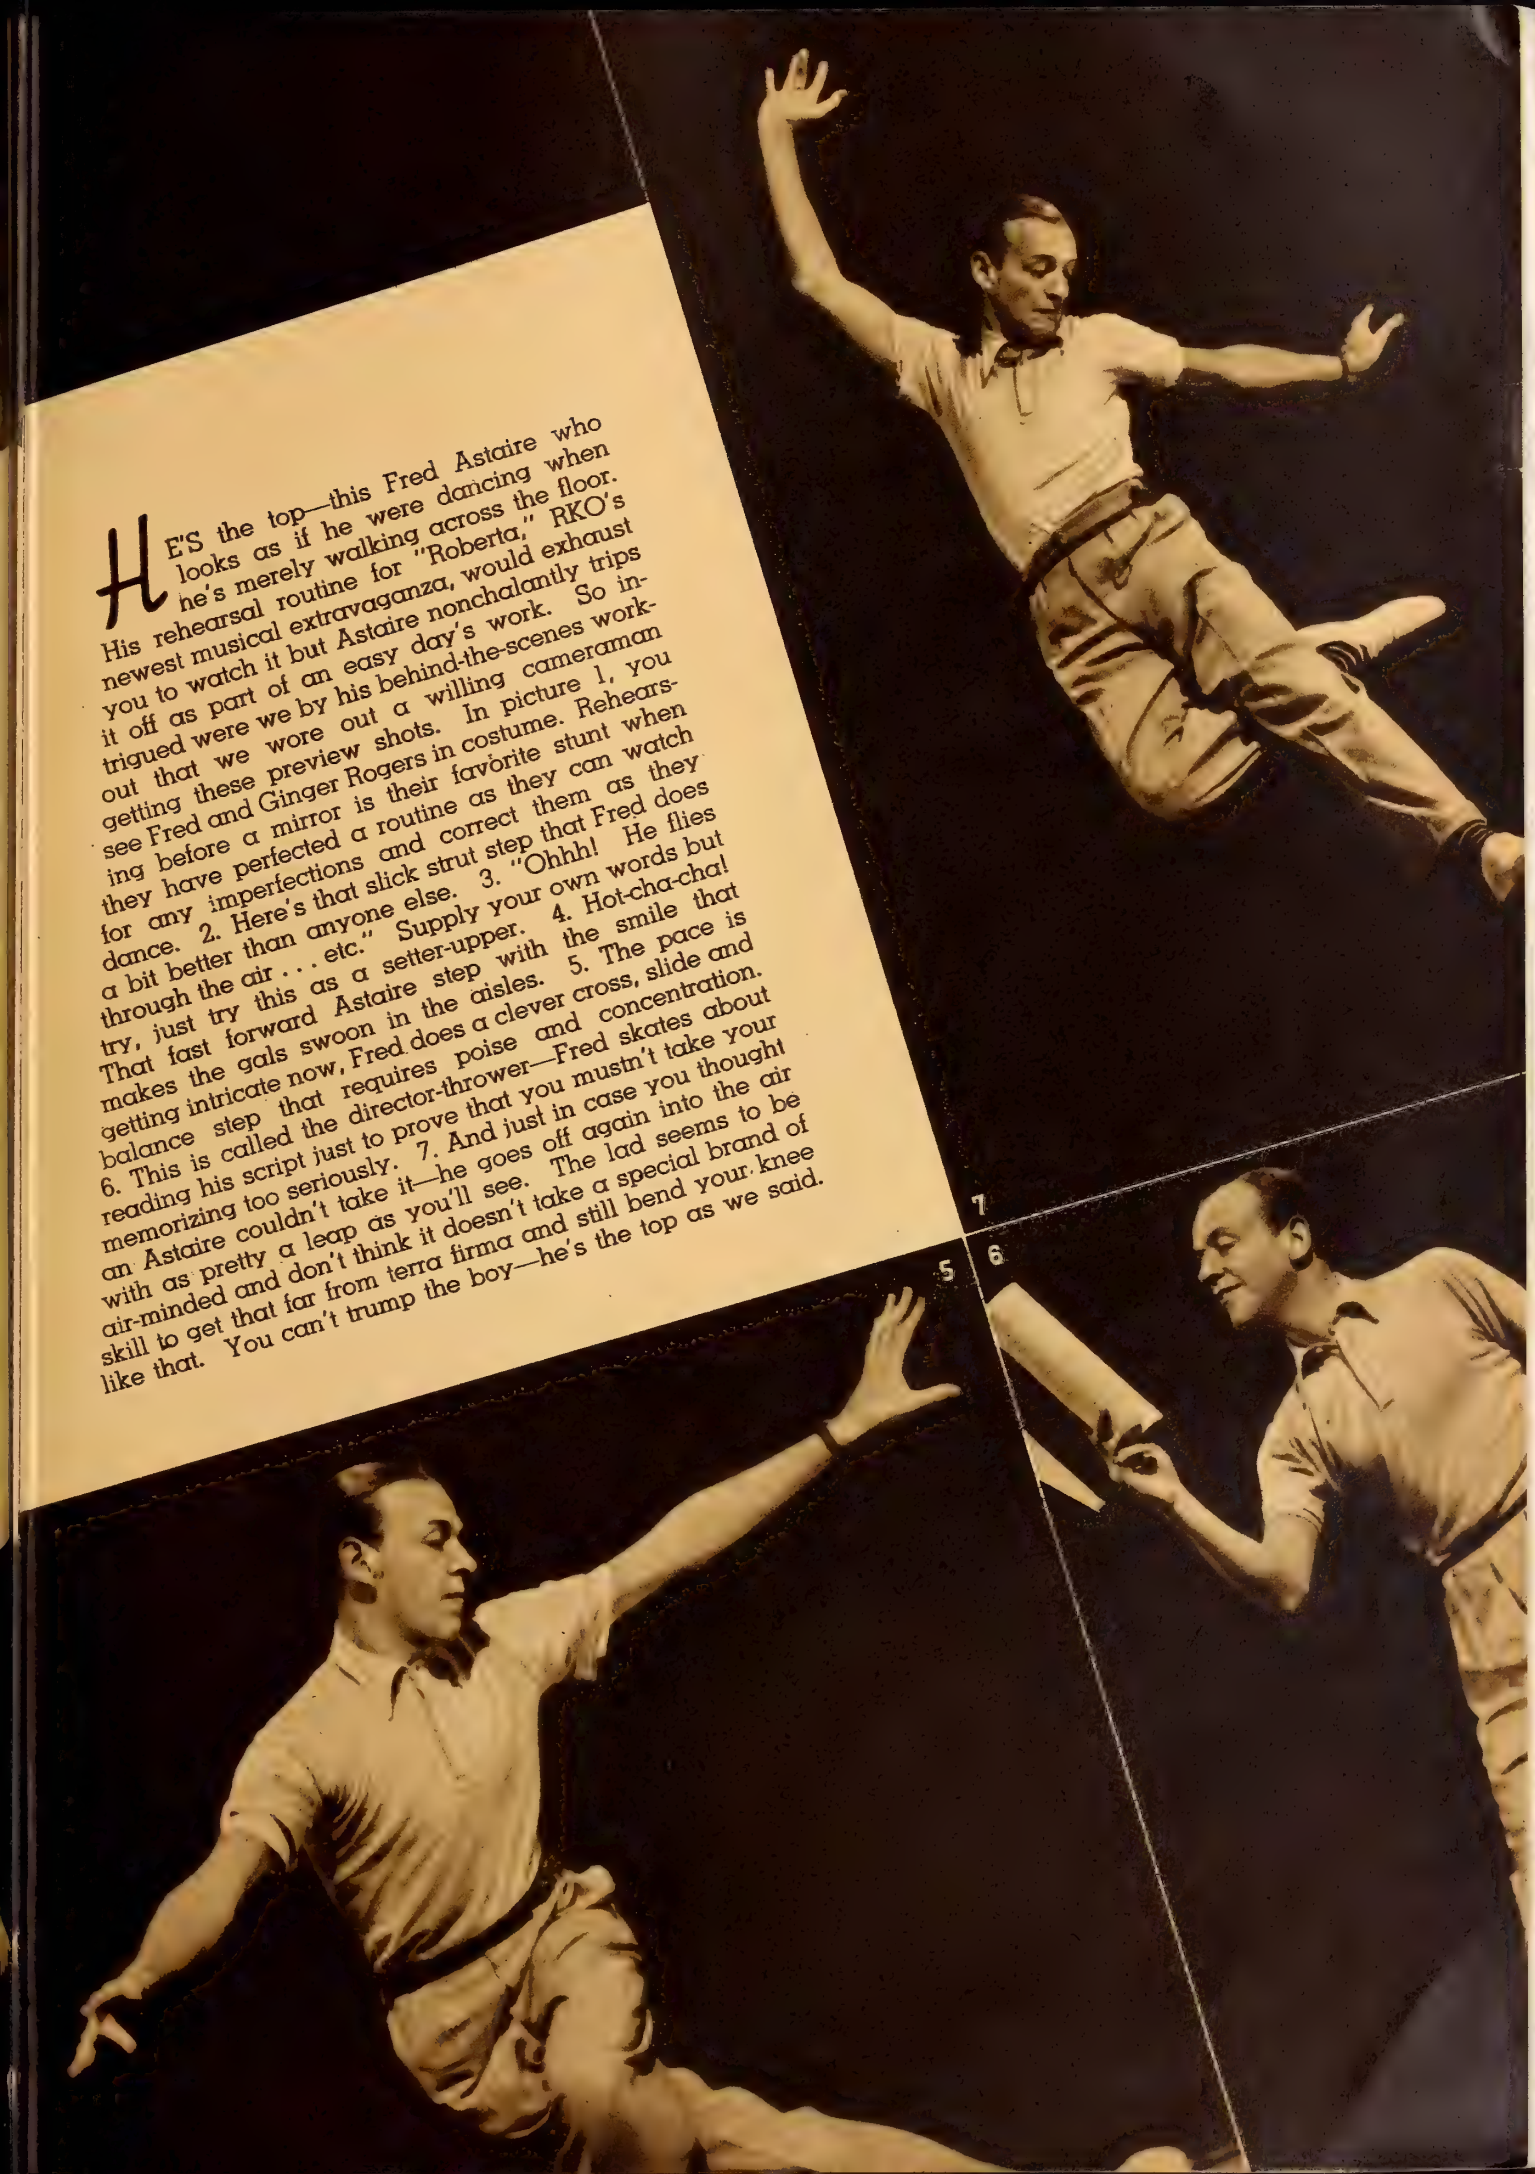
Roland Young as Uriah Heep in "Copperfield."

Nat Pendleton always plays "dumb cluck" roles.

"I knew it," she exulted, and leaving me she grabbed Lloyd and said, "Oh, Mr. Keaton, won't you sign my book?"

THE grinning Lloyd signed "Buster Keaton," and because he is as mischievous as a ten-year-old boy, drew a likeness of his own famous spectacles under the signature! I can imagine what her later confusion must have been!

Lloyd got a terrific kick out of it, admitting that his bronzed and freckled mug is seldom recognized on the streets, although people do turn frequently, look again, and ask, "Who is that man? He's in pictures, but I can't place him."



However, that isn't half as embarrassing as having strangers inquire as to your identity while you're doing a swell scene on a screen in front of them. I recalled the fact that, although I've known Eugene Pallette for years and years, I can never recall his name, offhand. I knew the difficulty I always experience in trying to tell whether it's Frank or Ralph Morgan I'm looking at. And I realized that Hollywood is full of featured players—actors who rank very close to stardom—whose names the fans can never remember. We know their faces, can recite long lists of pictures in which we have seen them, but simply can't name them, at the moment. And so I decided to call on a round dozen of Hollywood's Best Known Unknowns, and obtain, at first hand, their experiences, and their reactions to this sort of thing. I was determined to ask, "How does it feel to watch yourself on the screen and hear your neighbor ask, 'Who is that man?'"

Because he's a good friend, (Continued on page 80)

Have you asked this question? Here are the answers

HIGH-HAT
Hoofing
Exhausted cameraman chases Mr. Astaire thru "Roberta" dance step rehearsal!
1
2
3
4

HE'S the top—this Fred Astaire who looks as if he were dancing when he's merely walking across the floor. His rehearsal routine for "Roberta," RKO's newest musical extravaganza, would exhaust you to watch it but Astaire nonchalantly trips it off as part of an easy day's work. So intrigued were we by his behind-the-scenes working before a mirror is their favorite stunt when getting these preview shots. In picture 1, you see Fred and Ginger Rogers in costume. Rehearsing they have perfected a routine as they can watch out that we wore out a willing cameraman for any imperfections and correct them as they dance. 2. Here's that slick strut step that Fred does a bit better than anyone else. 3. "Ohhh! He flies through the air . . . etc." Supply your own words but try, just try this as a setter-upper. 4. Hot-cha-cha! That fast forward Astaire step with the smile that makes the gals swoon in the aisles. 5. The pace is getting intricate now, Fred does a clever cross, slide and balance step that requires poise and concentration. 6. This is called the director-thrower—Fred skates about reading his script just to prove that you mustn't take your memorizing too seriously. 7. And just in case you thought an Astaire couldn't take it—he goes off again into the air with as pretty a leap as you'll see. The lad seems to be air-minded and don't think it doesn't take a special brand of skill to get that far from terra firma and still bend your knee like that. You can't trump the boy—he's the top as we said.

Our admiration for Rudy Vallee increased when we read this frank story by his best friend

BY RICHARD ENGLISH

WITH Rudy Vallee, you always know where you stand! He wastes less time quibbling than any man I've every known, celebrity or no celebrity. And I know him well—well enough to have lived with him in Hollywood during the filming of his latest picture, "Sweet Music." Well enough to share a New York apartment with him—the apartment where I am writing this story. I know that, when I get out of line, I'll get the devil deservedly bawled out of me. For the great Vallee has a temper—oh, yes!

One of the greatest factors in his success is that Rudy spares no pains, nor any individual, to achieve perfection. And spares himself least of all. Just recently he was making a recording of "Everyday," a tune from his new picture. When it was over he merely looked at his orchestra, the famed Connecticut Yankees, and remarked emphatically, "Your work was swell, boys, but Vallee stunk!" They made it over. And over again. Until it was the very best that he could do.

(Center) Rudy and the author and (right) Phil Regan, Alice White, Allen Jenkins, Ann Dvorak and Rudy in "Sweet Music."

A PAL AND CRITIC TELLS

Not that he's a hard guy to get along with exactly. But Rudy doesn't mix business and friendship. All he asks of those who work with him is that they work just as hard as he does. And Vallee will work eighteen hours a day for seven weeks at a time and not complain. Every bit as shrewd a business man as he is a showman, Rudy has not one but five careers to handle—five separate businesses. Radio, pictures, night clubs, theatres and recordings. He has no guardian angel, no manager—doesn't need one and wouldn't have one. When it comes to business, Rudy Vallee is a one-man band.

No one will agree more readily than Rudy to the charge of being quick-tempered. But why he has a temper and how, strangely enough, it has become a business asset, has never been told before. He doesn't seek justification, doesn't need it.

HAVE a laugh on me and you'll understand this crooning star a great deal better. As his Hollywood contact man, I'd arranged for a place for him to live during the making of "Sweet Music." Rudy arrived by plane, following a crowded week in Chicago. The rest of the band trailed in two days later on the Chief. Five members of his orchestra lived with us and in the mad scurrying about town, I forgot to get keys for the other boys.

Well, Rudy, the servants and myself retired early that night. The new arrivals, however, decided to find out what made Hollywood tick. In the wee sma' hours, they started coming home, one by one. Arriving every hour, on the hour, with the regularity of street-cars. I was doing a Rip Van Winkle personally, (Continued on page 96)

"LET ME BE A MAN FOR A CHANGE!"

Lyle plays a he-man role in "Red-Hot Tires." Mary Astor's the gal.

Lyle Talbot begs you to forget his Lothario publicity. He's a man's man

BY JEWEL SMITH

I'M tired of being "The guy seen with so-and-so."

"I'm tired of being Hollywood's sleek-haired little play-boy written up monthly as engaged to this woman or that.

"I'm disgusted with myself for letting the world think all I'm good for is to escort ladies to night clubs and buy them engagement rings. I'm through making myself seem what I'm not, on the screen or off. A lover's all right in his place. All men are lovers at times. But men are men despite women rather than because of them. I know I'm a man, and I'm going to be one on the screen and off, for a change. Just give me a chance to show you!"

Lyle Talbot's eyes blazed as he poured out this tirade to me across the luncheon table at Warners-First National Studios. I laughed, I laughed because I knew how few people would believe him. Most writers would have said, "Hollywood bologna. Another gag for another story," and let it go at that, I would have, too, if most men had poured out such a tale.

I'M afraid it's going to sound like a press-agent story. I'm afraid my editor isn't going to believe what I have to say about Lyle Talbot. So I'm going to tell you right now, this is a press-agent story, for I was once in that capacity for Lyle!

And because I was his press-agent, I believed him. In fact, I knew all about it long before he told me. I've wondered for months how long it would be before he blew up at playing sleek lover's roles, on the screen and off. I've wondered if he was going to ride along forever upon the publicity he'd created for himself by actually letting himself become known as Hollywood's most famous ladies' man, play-boy unexcelled around town.

I suppose the world knows very little about the relations between a motion picture actor and his press agent. It's one of our untold stories, and I have little room to go into it here. But there's a close bond between the actor and the person he pays to both publicize and protect him. There has to be, because the press agent must know the truth about his client. And he must understand that truth with a humanness and a to-be-trusted spirit or he does not remain long a press agent. An actor always trusts his press agent to know all and tell only what will help create illusions.

While I was acting in this capacity for Lyle Talbot, I did many, many stories about his Hollywood personality. I learned the truth about his real one. I could not tell it, then. He was not ready for it. He had made up his mind there was only one way to become known quickly in pictures—through women. He had made five tests in New York and failed in each of them. He had come to Hollywood on his own and managed to get started. He had studied each man and how he had risen to fame. There was Gary Cooper. He'd discovered that Gary's name became a household word before his pictures had even been seen on the screen because his name had been linked with Clara Bow's, Evelyn Brent's, Lupe Velez' and that long list of others. He'd seen how Gilbert Roland had become an international figure . . . how women had helped to build Valentino, George Brent, George Raft, Harry Richman, Joel McCrea, Richard Dix, Max Baer, Adolphe Menjou, etc. He knew that being seen with one glamorous Hollywood woman after another meant international publicity and fame, long before a man (Continued on page 94)

SO MUCH ABILITY

Mady's name is short for Marguerite. And you will see her soon again in "The Flame Within."

Hollywood, attention! Don't "type"

Mady Christians, she's too versatile

BY MAUDE CHEATHAM

A DAZZLING beauty in Vienna, Mady Christians was imported to Hollywood only to find herself cast as a drab, hard-working drudge in "A Wicked Woman."

As we chatted over the luncheon table at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio, I recalled that lovely Berlin-made film, "The Waltz Dream," which introduced an exciting Mady to our screens a few years ago and I wondered how she felt about drab roles.

Her reply was diplomatic, "Perhaps," she said, "it is well to establish me as an actress first, not just as a personality. We need all sides of life in our film dramas but I believe screen audiences, especially the American ones, prefer romances with glamor."

She added, I thought a bit wistfully, "I hope in my other pictures I can sometimes be decked out in peacock feathers and dazzling frocks. And I want to sing and laugh, too."

Her name, Mady Christians, intrigues one. And the girl herself, a tall, willowy blonde with exuberant spirits and sensitive moods, very definitely stirs the imagination. There's nothing exotic about her and she has no desire to envelop herself in mystery. She's a laughing, wholesome girl finding joy in each hour of the day.

She greets you with a firm clasp of the hand, like a man. She is utterly sincere and has no pretenses whatsoever. She looks straight at you when she talks—and her eyes are the bluest, most expressive I've ever seen. Fearless, independent, yet she is always deliciously feminine.

Born in Vienna, Mady is, however, a citizen of the world, a true cosmopolite. She has lived in many countries and this contact with the peoples of various nations has influenced her basic character and her emotions; her understanding embraces all humanity.

WHILE "A Wicked Woman," offered opportunity for her ability and one senses the power and authority of the finished actress whenever she is on the screen, this story of a Texas swamp woman and her rise in life never once revealed Mady's beauty, her humor or her glamorous personality, which is rather too bad considering how much of all three she has to give.

Nothing could have kept Mady from becoming an actress. Her father was Rudolph Christians, one of Germany's foremost actors. Her mother was an opera singer whose greatest fame was won in singing the role of Marguerite in "Faust." So, it was but natural that this name, lovingly shortened to Mady, should be chosen by the romantic young couple for their baby.

Mady spent her childhood traveling all over Europe with her parents on their professional tours and, while she was still very young, the family came to New York where they established the German Theatre. Their home became the center of a brilliant group of artists, writers and actors. The child was reared in an environment of the finest traditions of the theatre.

Oddly enough, in view of their own successes, neither her father nor her mother wanted her to go on the stage. She explains this by saying that all actors have a sentimental yearning for a home and a quiet family life, both so impossible in their profession. With this in mind, they urged their daughter to marry, have children and settle down far from the excitement of the treatre. But already the love of the stage was (Continued on page 86)

Hollywood suggests four charming ideas for spring evenings in this group, above. A bold black and white print for Carole Lombard's tunic dinner gown, at left. Next, back view of the graceful chiffon gown worn by Gail Patrick—the long sash and double tier of skirt flounces give that diaphanous, floating silhouette that is new. Carole again, this time in a thrilling black sheath with over-dress of soft soufflé dotted with paillette discs. Next a sweet spring party frock for a young girl is that of Anne Shirley's. It's crepe in a soft blue with little muff to match. And just below Anne, is the front of Gail's chiffon, showing the cluster of corsage flowers and the flattering ruffled cape which was removed in the back view.

BY ADELIA BIRD

HOLLYWOOD SETS THE TEMPO

HOLLYWOOD has to force itself to think of fashions in terms of seasons. The weather out there doesn't change as radically as it does with us. Not long ago I was discussing this with Madge Evans, who happened to be in New York on a shopping jaunt. Madge had asked me up for tea and I was replying by plying her with questions about what she had bought for spring. She gave me an amused look.

"I'm afraid you aren't going to get much inspiration from me about spring fashions because I have been doing all the resort shops."

"Are you going on to Florida or to Palm Springs when you get back to the coast?" I asked.

"No, indeed, I'm buying my spring wardrobe! We

I have picked three classic suit types for you to use as guides in your shopping. Left, Anne Shirley wears a boldly checked brown and white woolen with a seven-eighths length coat. Lower right, Steffi Duna in contrasting jacket and skirt. Her box jacket and vest are of Scotch plaid woolen, the skirt in a mixed tweed. Another suit is the man-tailored favorite of Hollywood. Above, right, Lombard wears it with a short tuxedo jacket with a pin striped skirt. Rene Hubert, designer, suggests some interesting suit accessories. First a set of bag, scarf and gloves in necktie silk. And a white leather belt with your name in red script. Also a dead white necklace of unusual design.

FOR YOUR SPRING SHOPPING

really jump right into warm weather in California, there's not much of this in-between sort of business you have here. In fact, we try to follow your seasons and change our wardrobes accordingly, but it is a bit of a strain. You see, there's no need to buy heavy winter clothes, and what you term spring clothes, such as suits and light woolen dresses, we wear all through your winter season. I know it must sound confusing but it's true.

"One of the funniest things we do in Hollywood is to start the fall season going. It means introducing fall accessories while we still need to wear summery looking costumes. But in the spring, we really have the jump on you because we are wearing spring-like clothes long before you even start thinking about them!"

What do your favorite stars wear when they are caught by the camera in their off-screen moments? Here's the answer in this group of informal shots made recently. Above, left to right, Rosalind Russell waiting for a traffic light to change and looking very chic in a tweed reefer with belted back. Madge Evans, on a rainy day, wearing a trim brown and white checked raincoat. Jean Harlow—and isn't it a lovely picture of her?—Jean wears a white twin sweater set with a gray woolen skirt. Note the printed linen scarf she wears like a tie under the small sweater collar. And Anne Shirley, at the Santa Anita racetrack, in a perfect, youthful riding habit. At left, you see Astrid Alwyn fence-sitting in a blue, white and gray striped woolen dress which boasts a trimming of ten-penny nails.

Madge went on to explain that she had been buying a whole wardrobe planned around blue and white, the blues from navy to a very soft, light tone. Many of her costumes were white trimmed with blue and complemented by blue accessories.

"I have one linen suit that I've worn for three years. That doesn't sound very exciting, does it? It is one of those grand, comfortable outfits that won't wear out and I can't bear to part with it until it does. I buy new accessories for it and let it go at that. Probably everyone sighs when they see me!"

And this is a very good point to adopt for your own wardrobe: buy one costume so good and so becoming that it can be worn for several seasons with only new accessories to freshen it up. You need never worry about anyone's commenting upon its age; if it's good, it will withstand any amount of comparison with newer and less expensive costumes.

Madge also contributed an interesting suggestion for your spring shopping scheme. She never buys her coat until after she has bought her other clothes. This is the reverse plan of anyone I (Continued on page 108)

Aline wants what she wants when she wants it. She's firm against doing too many pictures.

The MacMahon-Kibbee team in a thrilling mystery drama, "While the Patient Slept."

STRONG-MINDED WOMAN

BY DOROTHY SPENSLEY

Get better acquainted with Aline MacMahon; she's one of our more determined actresses

DEAR EDITOR:

Well, I've just come in from doing that interview with Aline MacMahon, like I said I would, and as soon as I change into dry stockings and wring out my coat, I'll tell you how it was.

They were doing a rain scene for "While the Patient Slept" and I haven't seen such wet weather since the Brothers Warner made "Noah's Ark." They had an entire sound stage devoted to the vagaries of the equinox, and mighty moist the whole thing was, with the carpenters drilling holes in the floor to let the excess water escape, and me drilling Miss MacMahon with questions, and her trying to escape.

The press agent was very obliging, although he might have provided galoshes and umbrellas, inasmuch as everyone was scurrying around, busy as beavers (and as wet), in sou'westers and rubber boots, and the thunder (artificial) was clapping merrily, just like life. About every two minutes there would be a reverberating crash, like a heavenly cannonade, and then a blinding flash of lightning (also artificial). It made interviewing just dandy.

"What do you want from life?" I shouted at Miss MacMahon, right off, because there's nothing like being vital about such things.

"Why—er—I don't know," she shrieked back, with a giggle, and dodged as a clap of thunder broke over her head. "What does one want from life?"

"Well . . . security?" I said as a starter. And just then a streak of green-blue lightning bolted toward me.

"Oh, not that," she said, with a low laugh that started way down in her throat. "I've always had that. It's nothing new. I'm an only child. My parents didn't mind that I went on the stage. I never had to pinch and starve to become an actress. I've always had everything I wanted, and I never wanted a great deal. My life has been very normal, ordinary, with plenty of ease."

Her answer rolled off in a clap of thunder, and the wind machines started their deadly work of whipping the fast-falling rain into a hurricane.

EXCUSE me a moment, please," MacMahon said, "if that girl is going to walk into that rain, she will need my rubbers and a couple of towels, and this umbrella." She pushed her way through the glistening sou' westers, and left me to my thought. There was only one thought, Editor, and that was "Will my lungs hold out if I have to yell above this tropical storm?" because by that time wind machines (huge 'plane propellers, they are), cymbal-like thunder, and flashing lightning were united in one huge Reinhardtian finale. Back came MacMahon, smiling, the ankle-length blue serge of her nurse's uniform, with its fitted bodice, whipping about her sensible black Oxfords. She plays a nurse, a cross between Philo Vance and Florence Nightingale, who solves this mystery drama.

"I understand, Miss MacMahon," I yelled, lustily, "that you are a strong-minded woman. Are you a strong-minded woman?

"Perhaps. Am I?" she answered with a smile. It was a quizzical smile, Editor, MacMahon is past mistress of the quizzical smile, full of unspoken query, amusement, doubt.

"I mean, Miss MacMahon, (Continued on page 100)

At eleven, Muni portrayed the role of an old man. When he was twenty-five, a producer said, "I always thought you were 60."

Though they'd rather stay at home and read or dine quietly with friends, occasionally, the Munis do join in Hollywood's gaiety.

TO MY WIFE, BELLA!

BY DENA REED

She's Paul Muni's manager, advisor, pal, cook, nurse, best friend and severest critic

PAUL MUNI, or Muni Weisenfreud as he was named thirty-seven years ago in Vienna, is recognized as one of the finest actors on the screen today. Perhaps you know how he rose step by step from the grind of character parts in the Yiddish Art Theatre, but the Man behind the Actor, and even more so the Woman behind the Man, has remained in a haze of obscurity as far as the general public is concerned. Over ten years ago, that woman was known as Bella Finkel, star of the same Yiddish Art Theatre where Muni rose to prominence. Today, she is known socially as Mrs. Muni, but "Bella Finkel" she remains—especially on the set where Muni's pictures are made, for Bella is the power behind the throne.

It is perhaps bromidic to observe that in the life of every man there is always some woman whose influence either makes or breaks him. Bella has always been that woman for Paul—to her he gives all the credit for his present success. The fact that no one knows much of Bella Finkel Muni is entirely her own fault. Her husband is only too eager to tell the world about her. This petite, dark, round-faced girl has gone all the way with him, perfectly willing and content to stay out of the glaring light of publicity which has fallen upon her man and to take her only reward in the satisfaction of knowing that it is she who helped put him where he is.

Bella Finkel is not merely her husband's inspiration. She is his stabilizer, his tower of strength, his aide de camp, his secretary, his nurse, his pal, his play reader, his cook, his best friend and severest critic. A tough assignment? Perhaps—but not for Bella Finkel.

Their romance began when he was leading man in the Yiddish Art Theatre and she was leading lady. After the show, he would escort her across the street to the Café Royal, a restaurant where actors of all types and denominations gather, and which is still a favorite hang-out of theirs when Muni is playing in New York.

THERE, with the clatter of dishes and the hum of conversation as its accompaniment, Paul Muni asked Bella Finkel to be his wife, and there it was that Bella Finkel willingly and unhesitatingly gave up her own career, and centered all the ambitions that she had had for herself, upon the man whom she later married. Her intuition told her that this quiet, modest man possessed a remarkable genius which only needed development and she decided to direct all her efforts to see that it was recognized.

Under her guidance, his career began to prosper. But the going wasn't easy. There were heartaches and disappointments for Paul Muni. Like many others who are gifted, he has a high-strung and nervous temperament. He might have gone all to pieces, had it not been for the sane ministrations and counsels of his clever and unselfish wife. Fortunately for them both, her own disposition is easy-going, calm and not easily ruffled. She is the cushion which softens the hard blows; she is the shock-absorber which keeps the ship from rocking too much. She is the door which (Continued on page 101)

Among the many distinguished women who prefer Camel's costlier tobaccos:

Mrs. Nicholas Biddle, Philadelphia
Mrs. Allston Boyer, New York
Miss Mary Byrd, Richmond
Mrs. Powell Cabot, Boston
Mrs. Thomas M. Carnegie, Jr. New York
Mrs. J. Gardner Coolidge, II, Boston
Mrs. Byrd Warwick Davenport New York
Mrs. Henry Field, Chicago
Mrs. James Russell Lowell, New York
Mrs. Potter d'Orsay Palmer, Chicago
Mrs. Langdon Post, New York
Mrs. William T. Wetmore, New York

Copyright, 1935
R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company
Winston-Salem, North Carolina

Miss Paine's Hattie Carnegie gown is typical of the new "peasant" evening dresses

"Of course I smoke Camels..." MISS DOROTHY PAINE

"They're the most popular cigarettes—everyone is smoking them now," continued this alert young member of New York's inner circle. "Camels have such a grand smooth flavor. I suppose that's because they have more expensive tobaccos in them. And they never make my nerves jumpy. When I'm tired out and my nerves feel frazzled, then a Camel gives me a nice gentle 'lift' that restores my enthusiasm."

The reason you feel better after smoking a Camel is because it releases your latent energy, which overcomes fatigue. Whether it's social activities, concentration, or exacting work that makes you feel tired, you can get a pleasant, natural "lift" by enjoying a Camel. And you can smoke as often as you wish, for Camels never upset the nerves.

Camels are Milder! MADE FROM FINER, MORE EXPENSIVE TOBACCOS... TURKISH AND DOMESTIC...THAN ANY OTHER POPULAR BRAND

For beauty of lips and neck-line enjoy Double Mint gum. Every day! Wherever and whenever convenient! It is a sure beauty exercise
WRIGLEY'S
DOUBLE MINT
CHEWING GUM
PEPPERMINT FLAVOR
DOUBLE-MINT
DISTILLED
PEPPERMINT
P51

Modern Screen's First Spring Patterns

874

874—(Above) Gertrude Michael in a charming two-piece ensemble. The short-sleeved dress has a striped silk bow. The coat in smock style has shirring at sleeves and back yoke. Sizes 14, 16, 18, 36, 38 and 40.

885

864

885—(Above, left) Dorothy Sanders in a lovely white evening gown. The cape-jacket and the belt with bow tie are nice details. Suited to both silk and cotton fabrics. Sizes 14, 16, 18, 36, 38 and 40. 864—(Above, right) Wearable silk or woolen jacket dress worn by Susan Fleming. Dress has monotone skirt and figured, short-sleeved top. The one-button jacket has a collar of the print. Sizes 14, 16, 18, 36, 38 and 40.

MODERN SCREEN Pattern Service
149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

I am enclosing.....(in coin or United States stamps) for which please send me the following:
Pattern No..... Size..... Pattern No..... Size.....
Pattern No..... Size.....

Do you want our new Spring Pattern Book?.....

[Patterns are 15c each. Books 10c when ordered with pattern; 15c when ordered separately. Books 20c separately, 15c with pattern. Patterns are 20c if you live outside of the United States. No foreign or Canadian stamps accepted.]

Name.....

Street Address.....

City and State.....

(Please write in pencil)

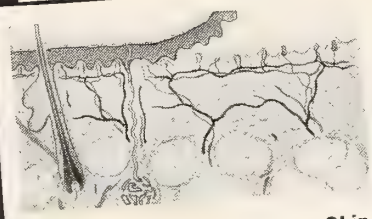
Modern Screen's Movie Scoreboard

(Continued from page 15)

Name of Picture and Company	Modern Screen	N. Y. Times	N. Y. Herald Tribune	N. Y. American	N. Y. Evening Journal	N. Y. Post	N. Y. Sun	N. Y. Daily News	N. Y. Daily Mirror	N. Y. World Telegram	Chicago Herald-Examiner	Los Angeles Examiner	Hollywood Reporter	Film Daily	Variety	RATING
Forsaking All Others (M-G-M)	+	+	+	+	+	−	+	+	+	−	+	+	+	+	+	87
Fugitive Lady (Columbia)	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	+	○	○	○	+	+	+	−	80
Gambling (Fox)	−	−	−	−	−	−	+	+	+	+	○	−	−	+	−	36
The Gay Bride of the Rackets (M-G-M)	−	+	−	−	+	−	○	+	+	+	○	+	−	−	−	46
The Gay Divorcee (RKO)	++	++	++	++	++	++	++	++	++	++	++	++	++	++	++	100+
Gentlemen Are Born (First National)	+	+	−	+	+	−	−	+	+	+	+	+	−	+	+	73
Gift of Gab (Universal)	−	−	−	+	+	−	−	+	○	+	○	○	+	+	−	50
The Gilded Lily (Paramount)	+	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	+	+	○	○
Grand Old Girl (RKO)	+	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	+	+	+	+	○
Great Expectations (Universal)	+	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	+	+	+	+	+
Happiness Ahead (Warners)	+	+	−	+	+	−	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	87
Have A Heart (M-G-M)	+	+	+	○	+	+	−	+	+	+	○	+	+	+	−	85
Helldorado (Fox)	−	+	+	+	+	+	−	○	+	−	○	+	+	+	−	69
Hell in the Heavens (Fox)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	100
Here Is My Heart (Paramount)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	100
I Am A Thief (First National)	−	−	−	+	+	−	−	+	+	−	○	−	+	+	−	57
Imitation of Life (Universal)	+	+	+	+	+	−	+	−	+	−	+	+	+	+	+	80
The Iron Duke (Gaumont British)	+	+	+	−	+	+	+	+	+	−	○	−	−	+	−	64
I Sell Anything (First National)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	○	+	+	−	+	−	86
It's A Gift (Paramount)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	−	+	+	○	+	+	+	+	93
Jealousy (Columbia)	−	○	○	+	○	○	○	○	○	−	+	+	−	+	−
Judge Priest (Fox)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	100
Kansas City Princess (Warners)	−	+	−	+	+	+	+	+	+	−	−	−	−	−	+	53
Kentucky Kernels (RKO)	+	−	+	+	+	+	−	+	+	−	+	+	+	−	+	73
Kid Millions (Sam Goldwyn)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	100
Lady By Choice (Columbia)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	100
The Last Gentleman (20th Century)	+	○	−	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	−	85
The Lemon Drop Kid (Paramount)	−	+	+	+	+	−	+	+	+	−	−	+	−	+	+	67
Limehouse Blues (Paramount)	−	−	−	−	+	−	○	−	+	−	○	+	−	−	−	23
The Little Minister (RKO)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	100
Lives of a Bengal Lancer (Paramount)	++	++	++	++	+	++	++	++	++	++	++	++	++	++	++	100+
A Lost Lady (Warners)	−	○	−	+	+	○	−	+	+	−	+	−	+	+	−	54
Madame Du Barry (Warners)	+	+	+	+	+	−	−	+	+	−	+	+	+	+	−	73
Man of Aran (Graumont-British)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	○	○	+	○	○	100
The Man Who Reclaimed His Head (Universal)	+	+	−	+	+	−	+	+	+	−	−	+	+	+	+	73
Marie Galante (Fox)	−	−	−	−	+	+	+	+	+	−	+	+	−	+	−	53
Menace (Paramount)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	○	−	+	+	+	92
The Merry Widow (M-G-M)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	100

(Continued on page 72)

LINES, WRINKLES, signs of wasting of the underskin—loss of tone—impaired nutrition—lack of invigorating oils.



COARSENESS is made worse by clogged pores, neglect, improper cleansing.

BLACKHEADS come from pores clogged by thick secretions from overactive skin glands.

DRYNESS is often attributable to poorly functioning underskin, inadequate oil supply.

BLEMISHES. Many factors lead to blemishes—among them loss of tone, inactive circulation, improper cleansing.

SAGGING TISSUES, due to loss of nerve tone, impaired circulation, fatty degeneration of the muscles. All occur in underskin.

Little known facts about Your Skin

Your skin has two parts—the outer skin, epidermis; the true skin, or corium. It consists of blood vessels, nerves, fat, muscle, oil, sweat glands . . . When your underskin grows sluggish, faults develop.

Miss Maribelle Rodiger, one of the most charming of last season's debutantes, says: "Pond's Cold Cream keeps my skin free from blackheads and blemishes."

If You Could look Under Your Skin!

There's where Lines Wrinkles Blemishes first develop Skin Authorities say

ONE of America's leading dermatologists says: "The beauty of the outer skin depends on the underskin. You cannot be too emphatic about that."

Yet women try one thing and another for faults they see on the outside of their skin—never dreaming that what their skin really needs is help underneath.

How skin faults develop

The underskin is the workshop where the outward beauty of the skin is constantly being created. Once the teens are past, the underskin begins to lose vigor. Oil glands decrease their supply. Fibres lose their snap. All of this slowly but surely shows up in your outer skin in the form of blackheads . . . lines . . . blemishes . . . wrinkles!

How can you ward them off? By invigorating your underskin!

There is one cream that goes right in, stirs your underskin to vigorous action—

H. R. H. MARGARET OF DENMARK
Princess René de Bourbon de Parme

"Skin remarkably smooth. Not a trace of lines or crepiness"—Dermatologist's Report. "Pond's Cold Cream keeps my contour firm," Her Royal Highness says.

Pond's Cold Cream. Its specially processed oils sink deep. As you pat it on, your circulation is quickened. The fresh blood rushes up to nourish shrinking tissue. Failing oil glands are stimulated.

Never let a night pass without cleansing your skin with this thorough germ-free cream. Pat it in briskly—you will feel your skin roused. All the day's dust and grime will float right out of the pores.

The first thing every morning—during the day—every time you make up—cleanse with this cream first, and powder and rouge will go on like a charm.

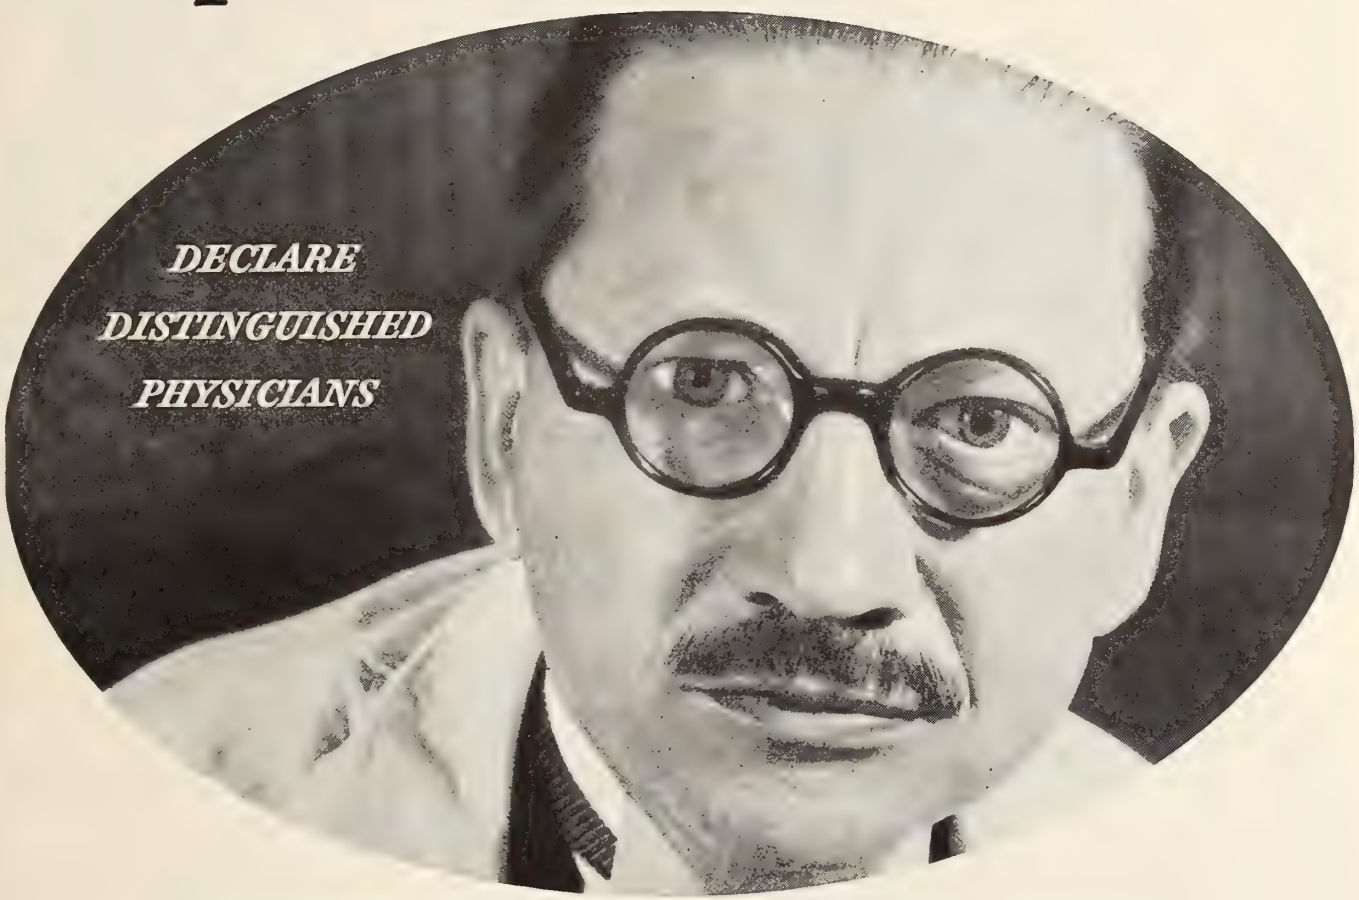
Send right off for this cream. Use it daily, soon you will see skin faults fade. Lines soften. Blackheads, blemishes disappear. Day by day, your skin will look finer—smoother. Until it glows with that enchanting "bloom of youth."

Mail Coupon today for 9-Treatment supply—

POND'S, Dept D 50 Clinton, Conn. I enclose 10¢ (to cover postage and packing) for special tube of Pond's Cold Cream, enough for nine treatments, with generous samples of 2 other Pond's Creams and 5 different shades of Pond's Face Powder.

Name_____

Street_____



City_____ State_____

Copyright, 1935, Pond's Extract Company

(Continued from page 70)

Name of Picture and Company	Modern Screen	N. Y. Times	N. Y. Herald Tribune	N. Y. American	N.Y.Evening Journal	N. Y. Post	N. Y. Sun	N. Y. Daily News	N. Y. Daily Mirror	N. Y. World Telegram	Chicago Herald-Examiner	Los Angeles Examiner	Hollywood Reporter	Film Daily	Variety	RATING
The Mighty Barnum (20th Century)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	100
Mills of the Gods (Columbia)	−	○	○	−	○	○	○	○	−	○	○	+	−	−	−
Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch (Paramount)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	100
Murder in the Clouds (First National)	+	+	+	+	+	+	○	+	+	+	○	+	−	+	+	92
Music in the Air (Fox)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	−	+	+	+	○	92
My Heart Is Calling (Gaumont-British)	+	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	+	+	○
The Mystery of Edwin Drood (Universal)	+	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	+	○	○
Mystery Woman (Fox)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	○	−	+	+	+	92
The Night Is Young (M-G-M)	+	+	+	+	+	−	−	+	+	−	+	+	+	−	−	67
Now and Forever (Paramount)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	100
Outcast Lady (M-G-M)	−	−	−	+	+	−	+	−	+	−	−	+	−	−	−	33
The Painted Veil (M-G-M)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	−	+	−	+	+	87
Peck's Bad Boy (Fox)	+	+	+	+	+	−	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	93
The President Vanishes (Paramount)	++	++	++	++	++	++	++	++	++	++	++	++	++	++	++	100+
The Private Life of Don Juan (United Artists)	−	−	+	−	+	−	+	+	+	−	○	+	−	+	−	50
The Pursuit of Happiness (RKO)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	100
Ready for Love (Paramount)	+	○	○	○	○	○	○	−	○	○	○	−	+	+	−
Red Head (Monogram)	○	−	+	−	○	+	○	−	+	−	○	−	−	+	−	36
Romance in Manhattan (RKO)	+	+	+	+	+	+	−	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	93
The Scarlet Pimpernel (United Artists)	+	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	+	+	○
Sing Sing Nights (Monogram)	−	−	−	+	+	+	−	○	○	−	○	−	+	+	−	42
Six-Day Bike Rider (Warners)	+	+	+	+	+	−	○	+	+	+	○	+	+	+	−	85
The Silver Streak (RKO)	+	−	+	+	+	−	+	+	+	−	○	+	−	+	+	71
Sweet Adeline (Warners)	−	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	−	87
Sequoia (M-G-M)	−	○	○	+	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	+	+	○
There's Always Tomorrow (Universal)	+	+	+	+	+	−	+	+	+	+	○	+	+	+	+	92
365 Nights in Hollywood (Fox)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	−	+	+	○	+	+	+	−	85
Transatlantic Merry-Go-Round (United Artists)	−	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	−	−	+	+	+	+	80
Under Pressure (Fox)	+	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	+	○	○
Unfinished Symphony (Gaumont-British)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	−	+	+	○	+	+	+	+	92
The Wandering Jew (Twickenham)	+	+	+	+	+	○	+	○	○	+	○	+	+	+	+	100
Wednesday's Child (RKO)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	−	+	+	+	+	93
We Live Again (Sam Goldwyn)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	−	+	+	+	+	93
West of the Pecos (RKO)	+	+	+	+	+	−	○	+	+	−	○	+	+	+	+	85
What Every Woman Knows (M-G-M)	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	100
The White Cockatoo (Warners)	+	−	+	+	+	+	+	−	+	−	○	+	○	+	−	64
The White Parade (Fox)	+	+	+	−	+	−	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	+	87
The Whole Town's Talking (Columbia)	+	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	+	○	+	○	○
A Wicked Woman (M-G-M)	+	+	−	−	−	○	−	−	○	−	○	+	+	+	−	42
Women Must Dress (Monogram)	+	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	○	+	+	○

The new XR Yeast will solve the cathartic problem for thousands!

DR. JULES BELOUX, noted specialist on the stomach and intestines, editor of a medical publication, reports: "XR Yeast is twice as effective as the former yeast for constipation, indigestion and skin troubles. No one need keep on taking harsh cathartics now!"

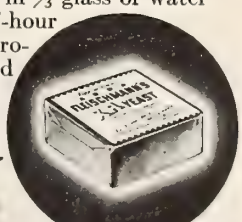
Stronger new yeast is far speedier for Constipation, Upset Stomach, Broken-Out Skin and Lack of Energy!

NO LONGER need you constantly "dose" yourself with violent cathartics, for a discovery that doctors call "the greatest advance for treating constipation in years" is here!

It is a far stronger new yeast . . . an entirely new kind of yeast . . . discovered by a great medical scientist in a leading American university!

It has given results to make physicians marvel. As the noted Dr. Beloux says, "It is almost unbelievable how well the new XR Yeast works! It acts by speeding the digestive juices and muscles!

"Food," Dr. Beloux adds, "is digested better . . . carried through the body faster . . . expelled more easily. Also, skin troubles end sooner.



"It is the best remedy I know for constipation and its related ailments—such as indigestion, complexion ills, headaches and lack of energy."

Won't you start eating Fleischmann's XR Yeast today? See how speedily you feel full of pep . . . how quickly your skin is cleared of pimples!

See how you avoid frequent colds—with a clean system and the Vitamin A in this new yeast. It has Vitamins B, D and G, too, and hormone-like substances that aid health.

Start Feeling Better Now!

So get some Fleischmann's XR Yeast right away. Eat 3 cakes every day—plain, or dissolved in ⅓ glass of water—preferably a half-hour before meals. At grocers, restaurants and soda fountains!

3 millions already eating Fleischmann's new XR Yeast

NRA CODE

(As good as ever for baking, too)

Copyright, 1935, Standard Brands Incorporated

Lonely Girl...

Now "The Only Girl"

Blue Waltz brought me happiness

Are you as lonely as I used to be? Sitting home alone night after night?

Then try this easy way to become popular, alluring and to find the man who'll call you his "only girl"... let Blue Waltz Perfume bring you happiness, as it did me.

Like music in moonlight, this exquisite fragrance creates enchantment...and gives you a glamorous charm that turns men's thoughts to romance.

And do try all the Blue Waltz Cosmetics. They made me more beautiful than I'd ever imagined I could be! You'll be surprised at how much these wonderful preparations will improve your beauty.

Blue Waltz Lipstick makes your lips look luscious... there are four ravishing shades to choose from. And you'll love Blue Waltz Face Powder! It feels so fine and soft on your skin and it gives you a fresh, young, radiant complexion that wins admiration.

Make your dreams of romance come true ...as mine have. Buy Blue Waltz Perfume and Cosmetics today. For your protection, they are "certified to be pure" and they are only 10c each at your 5 and 10c store.

Now you can ensemble your beauty preparations. You find the same alluring fragrance in Blue Waltz Perfume, Face Powder, Lipstick, Cream Rouge, Brilliantine, Cold Cream, Vanishing Cream, Toilet Water, Talcum Powder. Only 10c each at your 5 and 10c store.

Blue Waltz
PERFUME AND COSMETICS
FIFTH AVENUE · NEW YORK

THE MOST ROMANTIC STORY EVER TOLD

The talkies made the first wealthy and more famous than he had dreamed of being—Maurice Chevalier. The talkies took gold from the hands of the other and sent him back to Germany—Emil Jannings.

Concluding the movies' history

By KATHERINE ALBERT

BEFORE he died, Edison witnessed his first sound film. I wonder how he felt. I wonder if he laughed when he recalled how many years had passed before the movies had carried out his original plan. For it was Edison's original idea that the movies should talk.

In 1926, the movies were thirty years old. When Edison invented the kinetoscope, his idea was to use it merely as a subsidiary gadget for his gramophone. He thought it would be amusing for those listening to the talking machine to see the speakers.

Since, however, as we have seen, the history of motion pictures has been entirely accidental, somewhere along the line motion and sound were divorced and for thirty years the movies were mute.

All during this time, men in laboratories were experimenting and every now and then an obscure item, announcing that talking films were "just around the corner," appeared in the papers. Nobody paid much attention.

The producers themselves were becoming gray haired with worry because their magnificent theatres were but half filled, in spite of the fact that they gave the customers elaborate stage shows along with the movies. These producers blamed many outside influences for this drop in attendance. Mostly they blamed the radio—and that was as stupid as if they had blamed mystery novels. What they didn't see was that movies had reached a peak—that the public had become jaded with stupendous productions—and that nothing could lure that (Continued on page 102)

Wise girls guard against Cosmetic Skin the screen stars' way...

YOU can use cosmetics all you wish if you remove them thoroughly the screen stars' way. It's when you leave bits of stale rouge and powder choking the pores that you risk Cosmetic Skin.

Do you see enlarged pores, dullness, tiny blemishes—warning signals of Cosmetic Skin? Better begin at once to use Lux Toilet Soap—the soap especially made to remove cosmetics thoroughly.

Cosmetics Harmless if removed this way

To protect your skin—keep it lovely—follow this simple rule:

Before you put on fresh make-up during the day—ALWAYS before you go to bed at night—use gentle Lux Toilet Soap. Its ACTIVE lather will sink deep into the pores, carry away every vestige of dust, dirt, embedded powder and rouge. Your skin will feel soft and smooth—and look it! 9 out of 10 screen stars use Lux Toilet Soap—have used it for years!

BARBARA STANWYCK

STAR OF WARNER BROS.' "THE WOMAN IN RED"

KOOL
MILDLY MENTHOLATED
CIGARETTES
CORK-TIPPED

THE BEST THROAT GUARD...

A cool smoke is always better for you. A KOOL smoke is still better! Light one; draw deep. Refreshing—eh? They're mildly mentholated so that your tongue enjoys the full Turkish-Domestic blend while your throat stays cool and relaxed. Cork-tipped; each pack carries a coupon good for handsome merchandise. (Offer good in U. S. A. only.) Send for FREE illustrated premium booklet and switch to throat-protecting KOOLS!

SAVE COUPONS for HANDSOME MERCHANDISE

Brown & Williamson Tobacco Corp., Louisville, Ky.

Why One Man Loved Her

(Continued from page 33)

think of what an elusive thing beauty is? It's much more than a perfect face and a bewitching figure. Some girls strike you immediately as the most stunning creatures you have ever seen. Then you realize, despairingly, that they are not beautiful at all. They merely have certain attractive features. Why is that? One girl opens her mouth and her voice is rasping. Another has an unpleasant laugh. So many are ungracious in their movements. Most of them are dumb. What has that got to do with beauty, you say? I'll tell you later, but first look at Carole."

We looked across the room. The music had finished in a primitive throb of drums. Carole and her escort were walking back toward their table. Jim brought his head down quickly so that he wouldn't be recognized. He nervously lit a cigarette, inhaled deeply, and continued.

"Well, you know what she looks like. Everyone knows that she has a magnificent figure. But it's the little things that give her her genuine beauty. Her voice is alive and vibrant. When she laughs you know that she is genuinely amused. It has the mirthful quality of a silver bell that is ringing. And, then, grace! That is one of the most precious qualities a woman can possess. Beauty of movement. Is there anything more disappointing than to see a nymph-like figure that is slightly awkward? Look at Carole's hands the next time you are with her. Note the fingers. She is so alive with energy that they are constantly moving. Not jerkily, but with rhythmic vitality. She is like a gazelle. Her whole body expresses her nervous animation with unconscious grace. Then, too, she is intelligent."

Jim raised his eyes to beckon the waiter. His eyes were getting bloodshot, but his voice was steady. "Bring us two more," he said.

I LOOKED over the tiers of heads to one that was shining blonde. Carole was absorbed in some conversation with her escort. Whatever they were talking about I knew it wasn't the movies. She doesn't like to talk shop. The orchestra leader was coming over toward her table. "What piece would you like?" I knew he would ask her. The waiter set the drinks down before us.

"Well," Jim continued, "perhaps I can best illustrate what I mean by beauty and intelligence by recalling one evening at Carole's house when you were present. Beside ourselves, remember, there was a young scientist from Cal-Tech, a chap from Wall Street, some kind of an engineer, and a correspondent of the Washington Post. Carole was the only woman. Yet I don't think six men ever spent a more enjoyable evening. Carole kept the conversation leaping from one subject to another. Every man got to talk about his particular interest, and everyone joined in. Ever stop to think why that evening was so successful? Because Carole didn't try to be the thoughtful hostess, that's why. She was genuinely interested in everything we talked about. She has a greed for knowledge. And she knew enough to keep us all on our toes. And when she didn't know, she wouldn't pretend.

"Now here's the point. When we finally left, I'll wager each man thought she was one of the most beautiful women he had ever met. Why? Because she was so gorgeously ornamental? Because she looked like a Kohinoor diamond framed against that old rose damask of the Empire chair? Partially that, yes. But principally because she was beautiful as a human being. She was like a stimulant. She made everyone feel alive. Her mentality was a challenge. She had the gift to make each person feel important.

CONSIDER the sirens of history. Caesar didn't tarry in Egypt because Cleopatra had a pretty leg. She was plump and fortyish; but she had a brain that he couldn't find among the girls of Rome. And all the others: Diane de Poitiers, Pompadour, Catherine the Great, Madame de Sevigné. Madame de Stael even had young men fall in love with her when she was eighty years old. Their intelligence made men feel that they were beautiful. They had grace. They were charming. In short, there are two kinds of beauty. That which strikes you, and that which grows. Carole has both. The cool loveliness of a painting and the glowing warmth of a vital person. Her personality supplements her external appearance. She . . . say, am I boring you?"

I had glanced up to see some people cluster around Carole's table. The tango had finished and a few friends followed as she left the floor. My mind went back to that evening to which Jim referred. I remembered particularly how she . . . but Jim was talking again.

"I'll make it snappy now. I'm overflowing with words too much, I guess. The second reason I can't get her out of my blood is—those other points I classified as one—is her caprice. An utterly feminine quality. She changes her mind in such a provocative manner. At first you think it is whim. It's not that. Not entirely, anyway. Realizing that all things change, she changes with them. If a person doesn't progress as he lives, she leaves him far behind. She has, as I mentioned, a greed for life. Yet always changing, she still is herself. Get what I mean? Fancy anyone ever being bored around her?

"And then—what is it the French say? —she has the joie de vivre. She enjoys every moment of life. She won't permit herself to worry. Each day, for her, is too full of possibilities to allow one precious minute for worry or regret. And I guess she'll be that way when she's sixty years old. Always a kid, eager for tomorrow's adventure.

"But the principal reason of all, I think, is her boundless affection. Remember when I was laid up in the hospital? She sent flowers every day. And I know it is the same with everyone she knows. If she hears that you are discouraged, she'll call you up. It is those little attentions, when a person needs them, that you can't forget. There are a million other things I could mention but these. . . ."

Jim suddenly stopped talking. Carole and her escort were leaving. As they walked toward the door, waving goodbye to friends, Jim bent over his glass. When he looked up, he stared for a moment after his departed dream. Then he shook his head, called for the check, and got unsteadily to his feet. "Let's go," he said.

The reader, I hope, has surmised correctly. My friend's name isn't Jim. I wouldn't dare reveal his real identity.

NOW NEW POWDER SHADES make their skin Thrilling!

Over 200 Girls' Skin "Color Analyzed"
Six Flattering New Colors Perfected

How Science discovered hidden Skin Tints

An optical machine which records color in human skin read more than 200 girls' complexions. It showed that blonde skin owed its beauty to hidden notes of brilliant blue—brunette skin to hidden tints of green. These tints Pond's blends invisibly in their powder to flatter every skin.

Is your skin dull? Uninteresting? Are you going along powdering—repowdering—with the same old powder shades that don't do a thing for you?

Now there is a new face powder that does exciting things for your skin.

Just film on this new powder—and be prepared for admiring glances, for it gives sparkle. Conceals blemishes. Lends a seductive softness. And your skin holds this radiant loveliness for hours.

Hidden Tints flatter Every Type

No ordinary powder could do such thrilling things to your skin. The flattering effect is due to hidden tints scientifically blended into this entirely new and different face powder by Pond's.

These hidden tints are the actual tones in beautiful skin. Read above the story of their discovery. Then you'll know how Pond's Powder gives your skin the one needed tone that lifts an ordinary complexion to a glamorous one.

But another surprise! This pure, clinging, flattering powder, made of the finest ingredients, is inexpensive. In glass jars, it's 55¢ and $1.10. In gay boxes, 10¢, 20¢ and 25¢. You can get it everywhere.

We want you to try this new Face Powder, free. Rush this coupon right off. You will receive 5 different shades absolutely free. See this scientifically blended powder make a more glamorous "You!"

10¢
¼ actual size

ONLY 55¢
FINEST POSSIBLE INGREDIENTS

5 shades FREE! Mail coupon

This offer expires June 1, 1935

POND'S, Dept. D-94, Clinton, Conn. Please send free samples of five different shades of Pond's new Powder enough of each shade for a full five-day test.

Name_____

Street_____

City_____ State_____

Copyright, 1935, Pond's Extract Company

THESE early spring days, with the tang of winter still in the air—how inviting they are—but how hard on the complexion! Dried by exhilarating but cutting winds—with sticky, sooty dust getting into the pores and clinging to the roughened surface, your skin tends to become grimy and "muddy looking" and irritations develop.

To combat this ravaging effect, particular care is necessary, and skin specialists say that cleansing with a pure, mild soap, at least once a day, is indispensable.

When you use Resinol Soap, you can be sure of thorough, safe cleansing, because it is a soap that is kind to every type of skin. Its pure, lightly medicated lather is so creamy, so soft, and leaves your skin so refreshed.

Now, the wind-roughened, irritated skin surface is ready for soothing Resinol Ointment. Its special medication is just what nature needs to help heal the sore, rough, reddened spots. It acts so quickly, too. Just spread it on lightly but freely and you will be amazed to see how soon the surface blemishes and discomfort disappear.

Your druggist sells Resinol Ointment and Soap. Why not start this treatment today—before these smiling, but rough spring days can seriously mar your complexion? For free trial size package, write to Resinol, Dept. 1-C, Baltimore, Md.

"You May Be Going Blind!"

(Continued from page 34)

He said it so quietly, so simply and without dramatization that I begged him to tell me about it. He didn't want to say any more, and most of all he didn't want me to pass it on to you. But when I assured him that I would stress the fact that he was not trying to rouse your sympathies, he consented to its repetition. And I want you to know about it because I think it is an inspiration to all those who have struggled to overcome some handicap.

In college John wanted to be an artist. He was tremendously impressed by what he saw and it seemed to him that if he could interpret his impressions on canvas his soul would be completely satisfied. John, with sketch book and pencil, was a familiar figure on the campus, and those who saw the results of his work knew that talent guided his hand.

John is an intense person. I think you realize that when you watch his fine, sincere performance in "The Little Minister." And being intense, he worked too hard.

It didn't happen suddenly and dramatically, as things like that happen in stories. For several weeks John noticed that after he had drawn a line it looked fuzzy. At first he thought the fault was in his hand and he tried to make the lines sharper. But then he noticed that the faces of the people he saw on the street were blurred.

He thought that he needed glasses, so he made an appointment with an oculist. The doctor examined his eyes and sent him to another specialist. It was the second man who told him what the first had feared.

"YOU must wear glasses, of course," the doctor said. "Also, you must give your eyes a complete rest. Use them only when it is absolutely necessary. I don't want to frighten you unduly. But I do want to impress upon you how important complete rest and relaxation are. I think you may be going blind."

I wonder if, for a moment, you can put yourself in John Beal's place. Imagine what torments would grip the heart of any boy or girl just on the threshold of life and a career who was told that he was going blind. Does the very thought clutch your soul with terror? Then add to this the fact that John was hoping to be a serious artist and that his sole ambition was to interpret on paper the things that he saw. And now he was told that there was a great possibility that he would not be able to see.

I'm sure I don't know how he managed to leave the doctor's office. I don't know what dark thoughts possessed his mind. He wouldn't talk about that part of it. He had bargained to give me the facts. The answer, of course, is that his emotions at that time were too deep to be brought to light by conversation. It would have hurt him too much to recall them with words.

How did he face it? I'll tell you, even if he won't. Courage was the watchword. This thing was given to him to bear and he must go through it as best he could.

First of all he was in college. It was necessary to him, he knew, to finish his education if he must plan for a sightless future. He hired a man to read to him. He paid him fifty cents an hour to read text books. He told no one what the doctor had said, but merely tossed it off with, "I've strained my eyes. Drawing too much, you know. I must give them a complete rest."

With his drawing denied him he knew that he must do something else to fill his life, and that's when he turned to college theatricals. That's when he laid the foundation for the career which has just been climaxed so brilliantly in "The Little Minister." But his sketch books and pencils were piled on a corner of his desk and he could not return to them.

AND then a miracle began to happen. Again it happened slowly. For months he had not used his eyes at all. He had absolutely obeyed the doctor and then he began to notice as he walked along the street that the faces he saw were sharper. The blur seemed to be lifting. It came so slowly that he could not believe his tired eyes at first. He thought: "This is only the wish to see that makes me see better. This isn't real. I simply imagine it."

But even as he thought this he found that objects were much clearer. He went to the doctor again. "Thank God, my fears have not been realized," the doctor told him. "The rest has done the trick. Take it easy for a little while longer. You can't make painting your career, of course, but you can certainly sketch again. You will not lose your sight."

I do not need to describe the waves of relief which swept over him. I'm sure there is something in your own life comparable to it. It cost him something, of course, to give up the thought of being a truly great artist, but in the meantime he had became so interested in dramatics that he felt he could find happiness on the stage. And the important thing—the thrilling, exciting truth was that he was not going blind!

You know his life from then on. You know how he came to New York against his father's wishes—his father wanted him to be a business man—and hounded the Broadway producers until they gave him roles in their plays. You know how he worked at the Hedgerow Theatre—Ann Harding's beloved workshop—with Jasper Deeter. And then, when fame had touched him on Broadway, you know how he came to Hollywood and the movies. You also know that a little less than a year ago he married Helen Craig, an actress and a charming girl, and is now one of the happiest actors in the picture colony.

He might have been able to put those dark months when he thought he was going blind completely out of his mind, had it not been for an anti-climax which occurred while he was making "The Little Minister."

He was doing the fight scene, standing in the midst of the extras who were hurling spears. Suddenly he felt a sharp jab of pain in his temple. There was before his eyes a terrific great white light. It was as if all the world were nothing but brilliant whiteness. He could see nothing but that white, white light. And in that moment, before he fell to the ground, all of the torments of those months in college came back to him. He thought: "It's got me this time. It was planned for me and I couldn't escape."

The next thing he knew the white light was gone and there was nothing but darkness. He felt his head. His eyes were bandaged. Quietly he asked the question, "Will I ever be able to draw again?"

Someone laughed. "Certainly. You're

(Continued on page 80)

Sh-h! BILL HAD A RIGHT TO BE CROSS!

(After the party)

MABEL: I think you're awfully mean to be so critical! I feel just as badly about it as you do!

BILL: You haven't any business being so careless—do you think I can afford to buy you a new dress every day?

(Next day)

MABEL: Isn't it a shame! My new dress is all stained under the arm and Bill is furious.

BETTY: I don't blame him, Sis! You certainly ought to know by now that whatever else you use, you still need Kleinert's Dress Shields to feel absolutely safe!

(In the store)

CLERK: Like all Kleinert's Dress Shields—these are guaranteed to protect your dress not only from perspiration but from friction and chemical cosmetics, too.

(That evening)

MABEL: Bill, I'm really sorry I was so careless last night. I bought some Kleinert's Dress Shields today so I can promise you it'll never happen again.

BILL: That's the girl! Maybe I can dig up enough for a new dress now that I'm sure you'll get your money's worth out of it!

Whatever else you may do about the perspiration problem, you still need Kleinert's Dress Shields. They have no "in-between" days—they are always on the job protecting your dresses from friction and perspiration chemicals as well as from the moisture itself. You can buy genuine Kleinert's protection for as little as 25c a pair, or indulge yourself a bit more for Kleinert's Blue Label Shields which are specially treated to make them BOILABLE.

Kleinert's
T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

DRESS SHIELDS

MARY BRIAN, just one of the Hollywood stars who glorifies her hands with MOON GLOW Nail Polish.

Gives you

MORE POLISH

for your Money

These days, women are entitled to a larger bottle of nail polish for their money, because they use so much more of it. Fashion says a different shade for day, a different shade for night — one shade to go with today's dress, another shade for tomorrow's. And toe nails are getting their share of polish, too.

Moon Glow gives you what you deserve—a 25 cent bottle of marvelous lustrous nail polish, two or three times the size you have been getting for twenty-five and thirty-five cents.

One use of Moon Glow Nail Polish will show you why it is a Hollywood favorite. Moon Glow is a new and better blend of polish —applies more smoothly, sets more lustrously—will not chip, peel, crack or fade.

Moon Glow Nail Polish is featured at 25 cents by the country's finest department stores from Sak's in New York to Marshall Field in Chicago and Bullock's in Los Angeles. Leading druggists will tell you that Moon Glow is one of their fastest selling nail polishes. And at your ten cent store, ask for the generous size Moon Glow bottle.

Write for Sample

Try either the clear or new cream Moon Glow, the nail polish made popular by the screen stars in Hollywood—there's a treat in store for you. Send the coupon for a sample size of any one of the six smart shades.

Moon Glow
NAIL POLISH

Moon Glow Cosmetic Co., Ltd., Dept. M 45
Hollywood, Calif.
Please send generous trial bottle Moon Glow Polish ( ) cream ( ) clear. I enclose 10c (coin or stamps) for each shade checked. ( ) Natural ( ) Medium ( ) Rose ( ) Blood Red ( ) Carmine ( ) Coral. ( ) Oil Nail Polish Remover.

Name .....

St. and No. .....

City ..... State .....

(Continued from page 78)

okay. But, boy, you had a close call. That spear missed your eye by just one-eighth of an inch."

You've seen that scene in the pictures. Now you know the drama that lay behind its filming.

John is well now. There is only the tiniest of scars near his eye. He can still draw. He simply must go easy, that's all. But not a day goes by that he doesn't remember to be thankful that he still has the precious gift of sight.

Who IS that Man?

(Continued from page 55)

plump and jovial, I selected Edward Arnold for my first victim. Maybe you saw Arnold in "Sadie McKee" and realized that a man can be fat and forty-five and still have an abundance of that certain something the censors are now frowning upon. He was swell, too, in "Hide Out," "Biography," and a lot of other productions. I put the question to him.

"It has happened so often that I get a laugh out of it," he chuckled. "But it wasn't funny at first. I'd be sitting up straight watching myself, thinking how good I am, and what a big shot I am, when somebody, sitting right next to me, would say, 'Who is that guy? I saw him in a picture onct.' And I'd hear her friend answer, 'I saw him onct, too, but he isn't important or I'd know his name.'

"Early reactions were painful. I wanted to stand up on my seat, beat my chest, and answer. 'It's me—Edward Arnold.' Instead, I slid a bit lower in my chair, hoping I wouldn't be recognized. The more I heard the question, 'Who is that man?' the more I wondered if I would ever really make good. I felt I had been in enough good parts in good pictures to warrant recognition—by name. Then, one night, I heard three people, watching a grand performance by Walter Connolly, debate as to his identity. Again, I was enjoying Roland Young's startling characterization of Uriah Heep in 'David Copperfield' when a woman, sitting next to me, turned to her escort and asked, 'Isn't that Lon Chaney?'"

Here's another personal experience which will serve to drive home the theme of this piece. As a newspaperman I had lots of contacts with gangsters and my favorite screen gangster was—and is—a gent whose name I did not know, but who always does those "dumb cluck" roles —roles, like the pal of Clark Gable in "Manhattan Melodrama," the mug in "Penthouse," the detective in "The Thin Man," and a dozen others. Now, out at M-G-M, during the course of this investigation, publicity hounds were insisting I talk to Nat Pendleton. The name meant nothing to me, but I agreed to see him. Imagine my surprise when in walked my favorite gangster!—Powell's pal in "Reckless," Gable's right-hand man in "Manhattan Melodrama."

Pendleton is one of Hollywood's most unusual characters. He's been about everything from a wrestler to an auditor on the west coast of Africa, prior to his advent in Hollywood. In the past two years he has appeared in 55 pictures. He was a gang leader in "Sing and Like It," the baseball player in "Death on the Diamond," the husband of Carole Lombard in "The Gay Bride," the college wrestler in "Deception" (which he wrote) and the dumb cluck gangster in more films than he can remember.

"I can top any story told by any 'unknown,'" grinned Pendleton. "I was sitting in the preview room of a certain studio, watching a picture in which I had a big part, when some executive turned to the director and said: 'Who's that mug?' That mug was me. The director took another look and said, 'That's—, that's— what the hell is that guy's name?' For the one and only time in my life I stood up and said, 'Me—Pendleton!' I've wanted to do it a dozen times since, but I lacked the nerve. Instead, I just slide down in my seat and hope my mug won't be recognized by the folks who ask, 'Who is that guy?'"

HERMAN BING, that nervous little German, is even more honest than his fellows. Bing, you know (or don't), plays those nervous waiters, impresarios and what-nots, and has a part of some kind in about every third Hollywood production, asserts that his complaint is not that he is not recognized by name, but that the audience never likes him. "I go to the previews to study myself, to see my faults, to determine what is good, and what is bad. I scrutinize my every move, so that I may better myself next time. But I am constantly diverted, constantly disturbed, by what I hear. What do I hear? I will tell you.

"I hear them say, 'I hate that guy, who is he?'

"And do you know what I say to them, when they sit very close to me, and I hear them? I turn and say, 'I am very disgusted with that guy myself.' I am too! I am a dialect comedian. I always try to talk like a zither—but sometimes it comes out like a trombone, and then, when it does, I am especially disgusted. I have heard many questions asked about myself which had to do with 'Who is that bird?' Only once I was complimented. I heard a woman answer, 'Don't you know him—that's George Sidney.'"

One of the most outstanding illustrations of my theme is Henry Armetta, the Italian, who once barbered the "Who's Who" of the Lambs Club, New York. I doubt that any reader will recognize the name, yet Armetta is one of your very favorite character actors. Think of the Greek waiter with the lower lip that rolls up over the upper one and you'll have him spotted. A check-up of actors' activities by the Producers' Association for 1934 reveals that Armetta was fourth among 9,000 thespians in the number of pictures and number of days before the camera.

Armetta has been in so many pictures, hundreds of 'em, that I hesitate to name even one. He's under contract to Universal for some 1600 smackers a week, with a contract that has six years to run. Universal actually makes money "renting him." It was Julius Klein of Universal who introduced us. I shook his hand. "My favorite Greek waiter," I beamed. "Make your face," grinned Julius, and Armetta pouted!

"The number of the pictures in which I have had a role has long since passed 250," said Armetta. "And yet I doubt that ten fans, seeing me, can call my name.

"To most of the fans, I'm a Greek waiter."

"Well," I consoled, "I'll admit you are my very favorite Greek waiter, too."

"Thanks," said Armetta, in a mournful tone. "But dammit, I'm an Italian."

WHICH brings me to Roscoe Karns, Paramount player. He's been in hundreds of pictures, and yet he, too, experiences the sinking feeling of hearing people ask, "Who is that man?" He's heard the fans say, "There's Roscoe Ates" and "Isn't that Lee Tracy?" Old ladies and kids, Karns feels, are his best audiences. "When I come on the screen some kid is sure to say, 'There's that guy.' The kids recognize me, but don't know my name. Nor do the shoe salesmen. Only yesterday I was leaving a store, after having purchased a couple pairs of shoes, and gave the clerk, who had been most courteous, a check for my purchase. As I went to the door the clerk bowed, and said, 'Thank you, Mr. Tracy.' And this despite my check. What's a guy gonna do?"

So we come to Russell Hardie, the star of "Sequoia." I'll agree with Hardie that it is about time fans recognize him when he appears on the screen. He had swell roles in "Back Field," "West Point of the Air," "Pursued," "The Band Plays On," and sufficient other M-G-M productions to warrant recognition. But, let's allow Hardie to tell his own story:

"I can't tell you how many times I've heard fans ask, 'Who Is That Guy?' since I broke into pictures. But believe me when I tell you, that at my very lowest ebb, in Buffalo, New York, everybody seemed to know me. I had clicked in stock, in Buffalo, and then, after the company flopped, I had to go to work. I was a horse shoer, by trade, but there were few horses in Buffalo and I got a job in a department store, demonstrating vacuum cleaners.

"I used to put silver dollars and talcum powder on the floor, after which I would demonstrate how OUR cleaner would pick 'em up. Now, I'd been somewhat of a success in stock in Buffalo and it seemed to me that every woman who passed the home economics department in the store

Meet the Armettas! You know Henry, but not the Missus, or John and the twins, Louis and Rosalie. Swell family!

dividends
in every Dentyne package

You slip a piece of Dentyne into your mouth . . . and, as you enjoy it, you are earning dividends.

AN AID TO MOUTH HEALTH—Your teeth, your whole mouth, need exercise which they don't get from today's soft foods. Dentyne provides this regular vigorous exercise so necessary to general mouth health. It stimulates the salivary glands, helps the mouth clean itself, and improves the condition of the teeth.

AS WELL AS A DELICIOUS GUM — You will be delighted with the flavor of Dentyne. Its fresh, stimulating spiciness makes it the favorite chewing gum of thousands and thousands of critical people. You will like, too, the handy vest-pocket package . . . an exclusive feature with Dentyne. The shape originated with, and for many years has identified, Dentyne.

DENTYNE

KEEPS TEETH WHITE · MOUTH HEALTHY

B R I G H T

EYE IDEAS

by Jane Heath

MEN may hate extreme styles, but there's one beauty point that always gets them, in business or in ballrooms. Lovely eyes! Practice looking eager and attentive; two-thirds of the trick of that "starry-eyed" look is a matter of concentration. The other third is a little patented implement called Kurlash. Slip your eyelashes into this for a few moments each morning. They emerge with the lovely, lasting curl Nature forgot to give them. Curled lashes look much longer and make eyes sparkle . . . and Kurlash costs only $1 at any leading store.

Improving on Nature

Men do not like an artificial "beaded" look on eyelashes, which is why so many professional beauties are using new liquid mascara Lashtint. $1 buys a charming dressing-table bottle . . . water-proof and tear-proof (remove it with cold cream) to make thin or pale lashes appear dark and luxuriant.

Beauty in the Handbag

Shopping or business over—and a sudden urge for beauty overcomes you! How lucky you are if out of your handbag comes Lashpac. From one end a stick of mascara pushes forward to use both on lashes and eyebrows. A tiny brush for grooming swings from the other end. Mrs. D. N. writes that it makes a most original $1 bridge prize!

Kurlash

Jane Heath will gladly give you personal advice on eye beauty if you write her a note care of Department G-4, The Kurlash Company, Rochester, N Y. The Kurlash Company of Canada, at Toronto, 3.

Copr. The Kurlash Co., Inc. 1935

took a look at me and said: 'Look, there's that Hardie boy from the stock company trying to sell cleaners.' I couldn't take it. I quit and started doing my demonstrating from door to door.

"It was all very personal back there in Buffalo when I was out of a job, but it's certainly impersonal out here in Hollywood, now that I'm working. Now the ladies say, 'Look, who is that chap?' Why, I ask you, couldn't this situation be reversed? In Buffalo, everyone, it seems, recognized me as a vacuum cleaner salesman who used to be a stock actor. But in Hollywood I'm not even recognized as the ex-home economics expert. As a matter of fact, I'm not even recognized!"

And now speaking quite confidentially, here's a thrilling twist to this story. Not so long ago an unknown sang a song in the M-G-M production, "Student Tour."

The very next day after the picture was released, a thousand or more telephone calls were received at M-G-M, asking the name of the man who sang the song. And throughout the nation, interested persons called newspapers, and film exchanges, asking, "Who is the man who sang the song."

Nelson Eddy sang it. And because of the interest in "Who is that man?" Eddy is being co-starred with Jeanette MacDonald in "Naughty Marietta."

Who IS that man?

You Can Make People Like You

(Continued from page 29)

And they had pretty much the same experience. They pounced upon what I said and we all began to talk and laugh and to confess to the perfectly horrible times we had endured.

"And I found myself the center of a lively group instead of a haughty young woman sitting in lonely splendor. I liked it and went on from there." So we come to our first rule for being likable:

> Don't be haughty. Admit your fears and doubts and mistakes. All human beings have these things and feel warmer towards you when you admit having them, too.

Loretta Young and I were propped up on opposite ends of a hospital bed, drinking Coca Cola. Beyond, on another stage, the "White Parade" company was working on a scene in which Loretta didn't appear.

We were talking about a girl we both know. Alone with this girl you find her delightful, warm and understanding. But place her in a group and she soon becomes impossible. She will pick out certain people or one person in that group and quarrel with everything they say and do, pounce upon any tiny flaw in a story they tell and hold it up for general inspection.

"And she actually wonders," Loretta said, "why she isn't asked to more parties. She's surprised that she isn't a social success. I really don't believe she's conscious of the trial she proves at times."

I WATCHED Loretta wiggling her straw around in the bottle, intent upon getting the last drop of coke. And I thought how unusual it was for anyone as pretty and as young as Loretta to take the time and energy to think things out the way she does.

"Another thing," she said, referring again to the girl we'd been discussing, "more and more people are coming to distrust her for fear that when they aren't around she will make the same kind of sport at their expense that they've heard her make at the expense of others."

Whereupon we come to our second rule:

> Never place anyone at a disadvantage even lightly for the sake of a joke. As the Chinese put it, never make anyone lose face. People are afraid of unkindness and instinctively withdraw from those who practice it.

It was this loyalty, which too, too few women possess for each other, which occupied Karen Morley not long ago as we sat over a late luncheon at the Beverly Hills Brown Derby.

"You'll hear one woman say of another 'Oh, she's just a little waitress!'" Karen explained. "Or 'My Dear! If you could see her family!'

"As if the girl who earns her living by waiting on table, or the girl born to humble people were even made differently. As if they bore some eradicable mark which forever set them apart as inferior.

"I don't mean to propose that women turn ardent feminists. But I very definitely do propose that they devolop something of the fine fraternity that men have."

UNTIL this happens, certainly the woman who does evince loyalty for her own sex is going to have an advantage. She's going to be more generally liked by women and she's sure to seem warmer and kinder to men. Rule three then:

> Have loyalty for your own sex. It will endear you to women as a confidante to be trusted and recommend you to men as a good sport.

No story about Hollywood people who have learned to be likable would begin to be complete without reference to Sylvia Sidney. Sylvia has become likable in spite of herself.

Sylvia's an independent piece with definite ideas. She hasn't always been especially likable and this used to worry her. A rising young actress at the time, she felt she should make a mark socially, that it was important for people remember her pleasantly.

Her difficulty lay in the fact that she was too definite an individual, that she never tried to tell herself that she was having a good time or interested in things when she wasn't.

"I've never had any gift for social conversation," Sylvia says. "I can't talk about the horse-show because, not particularly interested in horse-shows, I don't go to them. I haven't the faintest idea what it was Freddie did at the last Mayfair party. And I'm always completely in the dark about the terribly amusing thing that happened at Mary's wedding or the Graves' priceless week-end."

"If," Sylvia went on, "it's important to you to be able to take part in such conversations, it's a simple matter to acquire a smattering of all the things people rate smart. With time and effort you can sound like a Michael Arlen heroine.

"If that's what you really want, all right. Then it's time and energy well spent. It simply happens that I've discovered that by directing the same amount of energy in other directions I can acquire things more important to me. So. . . ."

Use TINTEX to Give Color to

Negligees · Underthings · Dresses
Sweaters · Scarfs · Stockings · Slips
Blouses · Curtains · Drapes
Bed Spreads · Luncheon Sets · Doilies
Slip Covers · Children's Clothes · Men's Shirts · and hundreds of other articles of apparel and home decorations

SO EASILY AND QUICKLY RESTORES FADED COLORS OR GIVES NEW COLORS TO YOUR WARDROBE AND HOME DECORATIONS

IS THERE any wonder that millions of smart women insist on Tintex? They know that only Tintex can give them such swift, sure, professional tinting and dyeing results. They know, too, that Tintex never fails...that, although it costs only a few pennies, Tintex saves many dollars. And then Tintex is so easy. Simply "tint as you rinse". No muss, no fuss, no bother. 35 brilliant, long-lasting colors from which to choose. Be a Color-Magician with Tintex!

PARK & TILFORD, Distributors

Avoid Substitutes...
Tintex quality never varies! Perfect results every time. That's why millions of women
INSIST ON TINTEX

COPYRIGHT 1935, PARK & TILFORD

Tintex
The World's Largest Selling TINTS and DYES

Nestle
COLORINSE

GLORIFIES THE HAIR

● Would you give your hair natural color lustre and that soft "Sheen of Youth" every woman cherishes above all else? No matter what your "type", you can select one of the ten ColoRinse shades, use it in the shampoo wash, and never worry again about dull, faded, lifeless hair. ColoRinse neither dyes nor bleaches, for it's just harmless vegetable compound. Try it? . . . of course you will!

Also ask for Nestle SuperSet, Nestle Golden Shampoo or Nestle Henna Shampoo.

THE NESTLE-LEMUR COMPANY
MAKERS OF QUALITY PRODUCTS
NEW YORK

10c at all 10c Stores and Beauty Shops . . . Nestle ColoRinse, SuperSet, Golden Shampoo and Henna Shampoo

(Continued from page 82)

SO! Exactly! By applying herself to the things which sincerely interest her Sylvia has become stimulating and interesting. By refusing to pretend a knowledge of things she knows and cares little or nothing about, she has gained a reputation for sincerity and individuality which serves her very well indeed. And we find ourselves with a fourth rule:

> Be true to yourself. Have the courage to be what you are, to follow your own interests. Don't attempt to make yourself into a pattern of somebody else.

Jean Harlow is another star rated especially likeable. Not because she's exciting and glamorous and all the other things you'd expect, judging by her screen personality, but because she's quite different really. Because she's warm and friendly with women as well as men.

"I received a great dressing-down the other day," Jean told me the other afternoon as we sat talking in her big white sunroom. "I announced that a certain person annoyed me, and a man I know criticized me severely.

" 'That man whom you say annoys you, is as sensitive a person as there is in Hollywood,' I was told. 'You should sympathize with him if anyone should. If he's rude it's because he's afraid you won't like him and he doesn't want you or anybody else, including himself incidentally, to realize how much he hopes for friendship and favor.' "

Jean played with the zipper at the throat of her pajamas nervously, impatiently.

"I was ashamed of myself," she admitted after a minute or two "for having been so stupid and blind. I'd have recognized that man's rudeness for a defensive measure if I hadn't been so concerned about his behavior towards me.

"So often, of course, it's the nicest people who appear the most unpleasant. Nice people are apt to be shy and sensitive. And people who are shy and sensitive inevitably set up a defensive mechanism and parade as rude or haughty, patronizing or effusive."

Jean need not be ashamed of herself in this instance for she's not given to complaining that people either annoy her or bore her. Generally she has an instinctive understanding for people and an intuitive wisdom as to why they act one way when deep inside they feel another way entirely. Which is why Jean's as likeable as she is. Rule five, then:

> Like people. Look beyond any unpleasant characteristics they may manifest at first. And you'll find you will be rewarded with more than enough warm relationships to repay you.

The other day a young girl, just starting out in pictures, came bursting into Ann Meredith's. Ann Meredith's, incidentally, is Hollywood's premiere beauty salon where the walls papered with autographed pictures attest to the esteem in which the different operators are held by the stars.

This girl was enthusiastic in her praise of Claudette Colbert.

"I'm mad about her," she announced. "I just met her and she was so warm and friendly. Why if I'd been somebody important she couldn't have been more interested in what I had to say."

She's so warm and friendly. Why if I'd been somebody important she couldn't have been more interested in what I had to say. . . .

In those two sentences, it seems to me, that girl came pretty close to summing up exactly what makes people likeable.

The average person, as we've seen, has an inferiority complex even though she may hide it fairly successfully. This must be accepted even by those who resent the labels with which the psychiatrists tag certain recognized emotions, fears, and reactions. Most of us would like to be more stimulating, attractive and glamorous than we have any reason to think we are.

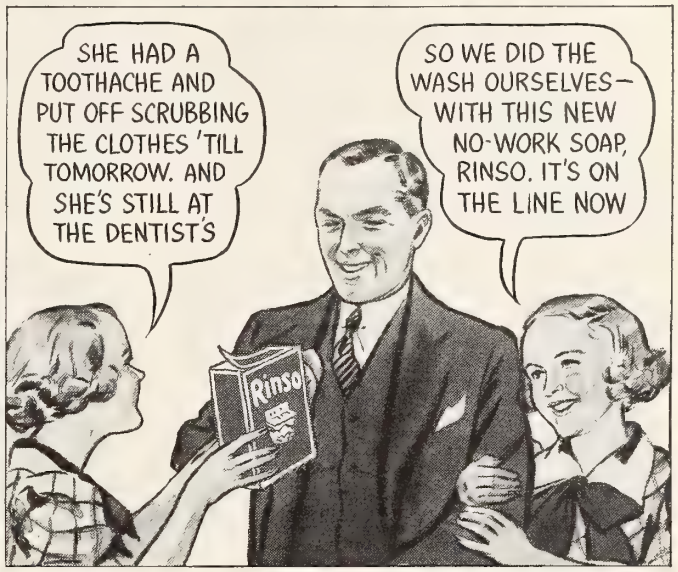
I know exactly what that girl meant about Claudette, who has been one of my favorite people for years. Claudette is an intelligent and alert young woman and, therefore, she has many interests. So many subjects of conversation hold importance for her that immediately, by her eager questions and comments, she charms people who introduce these subjects into conversation.

AMONG other things Claudette is interested in people, themselves, as human beings. She is interested in the way they go about shaping their lives, in their ambitions, in their emotions, in the valor they display a hundred different times in a lifetime.

"When I was in school," Claudette said to me, one day when we were driving together, "I remember thinking it smart to be bored by people."

"At that time it never occurred to me," she went on, "that to be bored with most people was an indication that you must be rather dull yourself. Practically everybody has some charm, or an arresting point of view on some things, provided you take the trouble to bring them out." Which brings us to our sixth and last rule:

> Increase your interests so you bring warm attention to many more conversations and, by the same token, to many more people. And, above everything else, be interested in people for their own sakes.

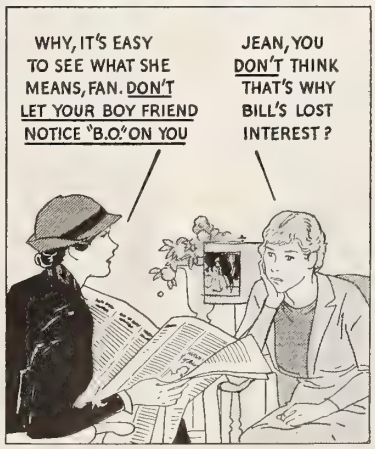


Learning to be likeable is, after all, such a simple process. People are only too eager to like you, if they're given half a chance. For others, in turn, are lonely and eager to be liked. All right then, let's go! Let's:

1. Quit being haughty. Admit our fears and doubts and mistakes.
2. Never cause anyone to lose face, as the Chinese put it.
3. As women, have loyalty for our own sex.
4. Be true to ourselves. Follow our own interests. And never attempt to make ourselves into a pattern of someone else.
5. Look beyond the unpleasant defensive characteristics people may manifest at first.
6. Increase our interests. And be interested in people for their own sakes.

Write Mary Biddle about your beauty problems and be sure to ask her to send you her Pre-Easter Beauty Bulletin, at no cost to you.

THE TWINS HELP MOTHER GET WHITER WASHES

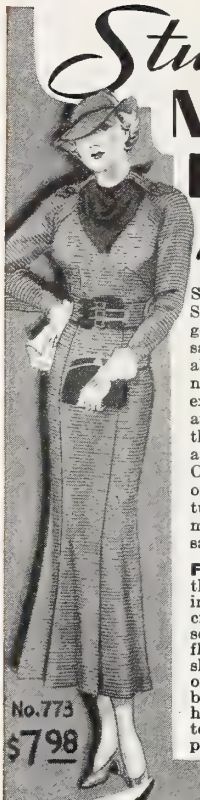


DON'T wear out yourself and your clothes with washboard scrubbing. Get Rinso. Even in hardest water it gives rich, lasting, lively suds that soak out dirt. Clothes come 4 or 5 shades whiter. Last 2 or 3 times longer because they are not scrubbed threadbare. Colors stay bright. Recommended by the makers of 34 leading washing machines. Rinso will not blacken the aluminum on your washer. It's grand for dishes and cleaning. Easy on the hands. Does not give them that red, rough look. Tested and approved by Good Housekeeping Institute. Get the BIG household package.

A PRODUCT OF LEVER BROTHERS CO.

A DISCOVERY ABOUT LOVE

NRA CODE



GENTLE, purifying Lifebuoy makes complexions fairly glow with fresh, healthy beauty. Tests made on the skins of hundreds of women show Lifebuoy is more than 20% milder than many so-called "beauty soaps." Yet it cleanses deeply, thoroughly. Deodorizes body pores, stops "B. O." (body odor). Even in the hardest water, Lifebuoy lathers freely. Its own fresh, clean scent vanishes as you rinse.

Approved by Good Housekeeping Bureau.

Stunning New Spring Frocks inexpensively priced

Select Fashion Frocks for Spring and Summer wear. You get the smartest styles, yet save money. These authentically styled frocks reflect every new style tendency and offer exceptional value because they are sold direct to you from the maker through specially appointed representatives. Or you may, if you want, order these two styles featured here, right from this magazine. Either way your satisfaction is guaranteed.

Frock No. 773—Shown at the left. An unusually engaging sport frock of finely ribbed crepe. Raglan shoulders, chic scarf, smart polo belt and flattering cut of skirt. Two shades, fashionable sun orange or peacock blue. Scarf and button trimming are softly harmonizing brown. Sizes 14 to 40. Direct from factory price only $7.98.

Fashion Frocks
CHARMINGLY DIFFERENT

Sold Direct To You from the Maker

Fashion Frocks are never sold in stores and can only be bought direct from the maker through our special demonstrators who are now showing our complete new spring line. However the two styles shown here may be ordered direct from this magazine. This economical method brings you finest quality and makes these low prices possible. Our expert stylists in world's fashion centers assure you most authoritative styles.

Frock No. 737—Shown at the right. A stunning two piece frock. A brown everlin jacket and a darling pique print dress in combination of brown and emerald green, or schooner blue and green. The jaunty jacket has deep front points to give it smartness. The collar and belt are elaborately stitched while capelet sleeves terminate in a complete cape across the back. See picture of dress in circle. Note pointed yoke, big buttons, pleats, stitched linen belt and slim straight skirt with inverted pleats. Guaranteed fast colors. Sizes 14 to 40. Both jacket and dress direct from factory, 2 pieces only $3.98. Postage paid. Send money order or cashier's check.

SPECIAL WORK FOR WOMEN

We have openings for more reliable women to take care of the tremendous demand for our lovely Fashion Frocks. Pleasant, dignified full or spare time work. Ambitious women can make a good income without canvassing, experience or investment and earn their own dresses free. Write for particulars and give dress size. No obligation.

FASHION FROCKS, INC.
Established 27 years — Representatives everywhere
Dept. D 250 Cincinnati, Ohio

So Much Ability

(Continued from page 61)

in her blood.

After a brief fling in her father's company, when he reluctantly permitted her to play the part of a German girl because she could speak the language fluently, she knew definitely that the stage was her very life.

So, in 1917, after months of discussions, her father gave in and Mady was sent to Berlin where she entered the Max Reinhardt School.

BEING Rudolph Christians' daughter made it hard, for all her father's friends expected so much of her. She didn't know it at the time, but Christians had written ahead to Reinhardt, telling him to disregard all the sentiment of their life-long friendship and make it as difficult as possible for his daughter. He wished to test her sincerity for the career she had chosen.

Mady says she was a tall, lanky girl, terribly scared but stubbornly determined. The more obstacles that appeared, the harder she worked. She knew she had to succeed not only for herself but for her father, whom she adored so extravagantly.

Now, it takes much more than a certain temperament and an inherent aptitude to develop a really fine actress. It requires hard work, hours upon hours of study. It takes experience in a variety of roles in order to learn how to visualize emotions. Above all, one must be imbued with a burning passion to achieve his goal.

Mady was diligent. She studied music and now sings everything from grand opera to the latest jazz in a rich mezzo-soprano voice. She is also, an accomplished pianist. She studied elocution, history, languages. She speaks five languages fluently and has appeared in plays and films in Vienna, Paris, Berlin and London. Already she has eighteen talking pictures to her credit and most of these were made in three languages. To show how sincere she is, she employed a Texas gardener and learned from him how to give the Southern slur to words of her dialogue for "A Wicked Woman," so as to create the authentic color and atmosphere of the Texas locale.

Mady's enthusiasm might deny that struggle and hardship trailed her path, but her triumph as one of the most brilliant actresses of Europe was won slowly and painfully. No spectacular climb to the top, no sudden applause marked those early years of struggle. Her entire career is a lesson in fortitude that should be memorized by every aspiring young actress.

ONE time, when things were going badly and Reinhardt had no place for her in any of his plays, Mady sang torch songs in a little café in the basement of one of Reinhardt's theatres in Berlin. Here she found a warm response from the patrons that bolstered up her courage and renewed her confidence—both so desperately needed at that zero hour.

A year and a half later, she was starring in a great tragedy, "Orestie," in the theatre above. Frequently during the four months' run of the play, Mady would slip down into the cellar café and sing a song just for old time's sake.

Looking back over these years of hard work, heartbreak and disappointments with an occasional bright spot, I think she is grateful that she had a hard beginning, for it built up a spirit of endurance and courage, of which she is very proud. Sudden and easy success is dangerous because it lacks foundation. She insists that to become a good actress requires a lifetime of effort.

"Among my cherished treasures," she told me, "are two yellowed theatre programs. One is of 'The Miser,' the first play I did under Reinhardt's management. The other is that of 'The Son of Casanova,' my first starring play in Berlin, after four years of intensive study. That marked the happiest moment in my life and—my saddest.

Hollywood gaiety at the popular night rendezvous, the Trocadero. Left to right, Frances Drake, Dick Powell and his best girl, Mary Brian, and the big horn blower, Bill Gargan.

"Father had lost his German theatre in New York after the World War and when he was summoned to Hollywood to make 'Foolish Wives,' he accepted. He was there at this time and I sent him a cable on the opening night, the next morning I mailed a program and some clippings, hoping he would be proud of me. They were returned unopened; my father had died away off in California on the very day of my success in Berlin. He never knew I had won my fight."

Afraid of its memories, Mady determined never to come to Hollywood. Refusing many offers, she waited eleven years, then found that time had softened the sorrow.

It was while she was in New York last year doing Vicki Baum's play, "The Divine Drudge," and Rachel Crothers' "Talent," that she first seriously considered Hollywood. Neither of these plays scored but Mady Christians was lauded by every critic as one of the great artists of the stage. With her theory that all things work for the best, she looks upon this experience as a precious interlude in her career, for it fulfilled her girlhood ambition to return to New York as a dramatic star. Too, she considers both plays a success from a professional point, and the day "Talent" closed she received ten offers from stage, films and radio.

A dozen screen tests for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer sent the studio executives into raves and they heralded Mady as the next great foreign star. She was immediately put under contract and given what was considered a choice role of the season, that of the tragic wife in "A Wicked Woman." Although the story was mediocre, Mady proved what a splendid actress she really is.

NOW Mady is settled in Hollywood. A tiny house with a tiny garden clinging to a sunny slope in Benedict Canyon is her home. It is all very simple, the only pretentious thing being an electric fountain which is her delight as it is a rendezvous for all the neighboring birds.

Hollywood being the crossroads of the theatrical world, she has met many old-time friends and has become popular with a lot of new ones. She is fast losing the relentlessness that has always been her curse. She is hoping that her young husband, Sven von Muller, a brilliant writer on German national financial affairs in Berlin, will visit her soon. Their marriage is one of those rare, understanding romances where each honors the other's career with no attempt whatever at interference.

She looks to be about thirty but she is the ageless type. Her beauty and appeal do not depend upon the more perishable feminine qualities. She is strong, vital, robust and one wouldn't associate nerves with this girl. Yet, she confesses that, despite her many stage and screen premières, she has never suffered such agonies of apprehension as she did the night her first Hollywood film was to be previewed. It seemed the crux of her career.

She has the humble spirit of the truly great and is not striving for superficial fame that may be won in a single role and forgotten tomorrow. She is building to whatever is worth while in the acting art.

You are going to like her on the screen—she's so real. While laughter and bubbling merriment are always near the surface, Mady Christians is tremendously serious about her work. To her, acting is the greatest of all the Arts!

Let them give your baby this new and greater SAFETY

Of course, you want your adorable, lovable baby to have every possible safety and comfort. So read this:

In the last few years a new, a safer method of caring for baby's skin has been developed—a method that's now recommended by most hospitals — by thousands and thousands of doctors. Yes, your baby can now have the added protection provided by the two Mennen Guardsmen.

Constant research under the personal direction of W. G. Mennen steadily adds to your baby's safety.

First is Mennen Antiseptic Oil. More than half of all the hospitals, important in maternity work, now give their babies a complete body rub every day with this Oil. They have proved it gives baby a lovelier, smoother, healthier skin—and, above all, it keeps baby safer—guarded against many infections because of its antiseptic protection. Doctors recommend that the daily oil rubs with Mennen Antiseptic Oil be continued during at least the first six months of baby's existence. So, mother, give your darling this greater safety—will you?

And then, when you gradually discontinue the daily oil-rubs, dust baby's body with the new antiseptic baby powder—Mennen Antiseptic Borated Powder. It's everything a fine baby powder should be—makes the skin satiny smooth, temptingly lovely—prevents chafing—and, in addition, it's antiseptic. It continues the protection which the oil gives against germs.

Now—try these products—at my expense. For the sake of your darling—just send me the coupon below—will you?

W. G. Mennen

The MENNEN guardsmen free

THE MENNEN CO., Dept. M4
345 Central Ave., Newark, N. J.
Send me free trial sizes of Mennen Antiseptic Oil and Mennen Antiseptic Borated Powder. Also Baby Chart — about the modern care of baby's skin.

_____

(Print Plainly.)

dazzling!
dashing!
dacing!

Genevieve Paddleford, "Queen of Crooks," was all of this and more. She was the international adventuress, cruel, cold-blooded but invariably charming, who left a path of broken hearts and deflated bank accounts over this country and Europe during the past quarter-century. She had five husbands . . . three of them millionaires . . . and if they escaped going to the poor house, it was through no fault of Genevieve's. When she could no longer find a lawful mate to support her in the lavish style to which she was accustomed, she forced her innocent adopted daughter to work with her in nefarious blackmail plots. No swindle was too brazen for this amazing woman; no man was too influential or too respectable for her to tackle. But she couldn't continue forever in her giddy course. Ultimately she met defeat. Now, for the first time, the intimate life of Genevieve Paddleford is revealed in complete detail. The absorbing "lowdown" on the cleverest international adventuress in history will be found in the

April
INSIDE DETECTIVE
now on sale 10c

Mae West Is in Prison!

(Continued from page 45)

o'clock in the morning by a slight scraping at the door. During the last twelve months the ever-faithful Libby has learned to sleep with one ear open and a police whistle under her pillow. She ran to the door and peered out. But the intruder was too quick for her. He was already halfway down the hall. Later she described him to the guards as a "short, stocky man."

"If I could have got my hands on him, he'd be using a couple of collar buttons for vertebrae. Yes sah!" said the girl.

These guards, the District Attorney's men, go through the entire building several times during the night on the lookout for anything or anyone who looks suspicious. And, of course, some funny mix-ups are bound to occur.

There was the time when two very doubtful-looking people appeared in the lobby in the wee sma' hours. They were dressed in patched overalls and wore enormous red bandannas around their necks, and pulled-down caps. One of them had a patch over his eye. "Humph," said the officer, "I'd better see into this." What he discovered were two prominent Hollywood stars who had been attending a "hill-billy" party! They had apartments in the place, but even the night clerk failed to recognize them.

Mae's whole family lives there, too. Her sister, Beverly, and her husband occupy one suite, "Dad" West, when he was living, had another, and the brother had one, but since the scare he's moved in with Mae as extra protection.

They're a devoted lot, these Wests. The threats on the famous daughter of the house have been pretty disturbing so that when a perfectly strange woman came meandering into Beverly's rooms looking for Mae, Mae got decidedly restless. She hadn't bothered to knock. "I've been searching on every floor of this building for Mae!" she told her. Why she hadn't inquired at the desk for her wasn't explained.

"What do you want?" asked Beverly.

"I'm a friend of hers."

"Well, I have never met you," asserted Beverly.

THAT'S all right," said the Unsquelchable One. "You're a New Yorker and so am I. What's the difference?" It was at this moment that the nurse came in from her afternoon walk and the other woman went out.

Crazy or clever? And what would have happened if she had actually found Mae's apartment and had been able to enter?

It's easy to understand why even the electricians on the West set have to have passes. Her own brother can't get in without one. And each extra has a pass issued to him in the morning and taken up at night, no matter how long he works in the picture. There must be no slip-ups in protecting Hollywood's curvatious queen of hearts!

Not that she isn't absolutely capable of taking care of herself! "I can honestly say that I have never in my life known fear," she told me once and I believe her. Put her in a lions' den and she'd be telling the little beasties bedtime stories. Drop her off in Zulu and the savages would be her stooges before the next ship docked. That's Mae.

The District Attorney's men thought she ought to know how to shoot. "It's, well, it's wise to be able to," they explained not wanting to scare her.

"Sure," said Mae.

They took her out to the rifle range. They gave her a gun. They spoke to her in the considerate tones gentlemen reserve for poor, helpless ladies. "Now don't get nervous! All you have to do is just look through that sight and don't lift the gun when you shoot!"

Mae nodded. "Okay, boys. Let's start."

The target stood a good hundred and fifty feet away. She took aim . . . fired . . . . Someone gulped. A bull's eye! Calmly, she pulled the trigger again. They couldn't believe it. Once perhaps, a beginner might hit the mark like that, but twice! After the third time Mae dusted her hands eloquently. "I guess that's that."

The men clamored around her. It was sensational! Where had she learned to do it? She gave them that slant-eyed West look, "Boys, I used to work in a shootin' gallery." And that's how Mae established a Los Angeles "police record."

ONE of the things that has puzzled Hollywood most during the past year is the fact that Mae didn't "circulate." She, the "Love Dictator" of the screen, went out only with her business associates. Now the reason comes to light. "I have to sacrifice dates. You see, it's this way. You can't go out with a man and take a bodyguard along. It's apt to cramp your style, if you know what I mean. Besides, it embarrasses him. So when I want to go places, someone like James Timony escorts me. He's been my attorney and manager, so he really understands."

Maybe it would take a bit of understanding at that. When Mae attends the fights, for instance, the four guards close around her. Two go ahead to clear the path and they continue to flank her inside. Picture to yourself, having a "date" like that! She doesn't stop to autograph things on the street anymore. She does it all from the safety of her car. And she's one of the few women I know who would take the trouble to sign autographs under the circumstances.

Mae does an heroic amount of work and she's never alone to do it. When she writes her plays in that white satin bed of hers at night, Libby is nearby to watch. When she's studying her script in the back of the car, there's always someone beside her. Imagine, never being alone. Place yourself in her position.

"It's true I can't go shopping anymore —and I loved that. I went for long walks by myself, too, and to a lot of movies. I like to see the audience's reaction, to find out what makes them laugh and what makes them cry. Now there's always a guard to help me!"

It would probably drive the ordinary person mad—that sense of watchful waiting, of being constantly under surveillance. But Mae isn't ordinary. She shrugs, she gives you that fascinating little half-smile of hers. "I've always liked a man in the house, but I didn't count on four!" says Mae.

The Modern Hostess

(Continued from page 13)

in Cream." It is served traditionally, with black bread. (For the bread I recommend a visit to the nearest delicatessen or the substitution of one of the whole wheat breads.) To fix this dish you really should have the large white radishes which, in America, are called Chinese radishes. The more common variety of red radish may be used, however. Cut radishes into thin slices. Pour one-half pint of sour cream into a bowl and add salt and pepper to taste. Add sliced radishes, cover bowl and shake well, just as though you were shaking a cocktail. When well mixed turn into serving plate.

AFTER the Hors d'Oeuvres, the guests are seated and the Borsch is brought in with silver bowls of sour cream on the side. A tablespoon or more of the sour cream is floated on top of the steaming soup as it is eaten.

I learned an interesting thing about this soup course from another expert on Russian cooking, General Theodor Lodijensky. The General is very much a soldier of the old school and is the proprietor of the film colony's popular Russian Eagle Café, where all of smart Hollywood goes to indulge in the rich mysteries of Russian cookery. According to the General, soups formerly were of vast importance and often as many as ten were served at a meal—crawfish bisque, mushroom or cauliflower purée, soups made of tender young nettles and, of course, Borsch. Anna's memory, however, does not extend back to the more lavish days of Imperialistic Russia since the closest contact Anna has with Czarist days is in her table's flatware. The Sten-Frenke guests eat with the very knives, forks and spoons that were in use in His Imperial Majesty's palace before the Revolution. Anna's husband, Dr. Frenke, secured this elaborate gold service, bearing the Czar's insignia, following the overthrow of the Czarists and brought the beautiful pieces to America with him.

For Anna's guests, then, but one soup, Borsch, is served. It is made the night before. With this comes Russia's most fascinating and palatable morsel. It is Pirojikis which I described briefly before and which you will find in recipe form in this month's Modern Hostess Recipe [illegible] with a simple recipe for

"THE MINIMUM OF MILK A DAY SHOULD BE A QUART FOR CHILDREN"

CLARENCE W. LIEB, M. A., M. D.
"THE INDISPENSABLE FOOD"
Courtesy Crowell Publishing Co.

Cocomalt mixed with milk provides almost twice the food-energy of milk alone

NO MOTHER needs to be told how important milk is for the growing child. Doctors have long emphasized its value in the daily diet of all children.

When Cocomalt is mixed with milk as directed it provides growing youngsters with a rich supply of Sunshine Vitamin D and 70% more food-energy than milk alone. A pure, wholesome, nourishing food such as Cocomalt can play an important part in the physical development of your child. Every child needs proteins for developing muscles, carbohydrates for food-energy for supporting the energy demands of the body for work and play, food-calcium and food-phosphorus plus Sunshine Vitamin D for building strong bones and sound teeth.

Supplies important food essentials

Cocomalt is a delicious food product that supplies the food essentials just mentioned. These food essentials often are lacking in the average diet. Prepared according to directions, Cocomalt increases the protein content of the milk with which it is mixed 50%, the carbohydrate content 170%, the food-calcium content 35%, the food-phosphorus content 70%. In addition Cocomalt is rich in Sunshine Vitamin D, which milk alone does not usually provide.

Cocomalt is sold at grocery, drug and department stores in ½-lb. and 1-lb. airtight cans. Also in the economical 5-lb. hospital size. In powder form only, easy to mix with milk—delicious HOT or COLD. High in food-value, economical in price.

SPECIAL TRIAL OFFER: For a trial-size can of Cocomalt, send name and address (with 10c to cover cost of packing and mailing) to R. B. Davis Co., Dept. MA4, Hoboken, N. J.

Cocomalt

Prepared as directed, adds 70% more food-energy to milk

Cocomalt is accepted by the Committee on Foods of the American Medical Association. Prepared by an exclusive process under scientific control. Cocomalt is composed of sucrose, skim milk, selected cocoa, barley malt extract, flavoring and added Sunshine Vitamin D. (Irradiated ergosterol.)

New indeed — and the color is actually in advance of the season—thanks to a new RIT service.

Write today for PARIS COLORS with silk samples of the newest shades for Spring and Summer—and RIT "Color Recipes" for matching them. Simply by combining 2 Rit colors according to the recipe—you get fashionable shades never possible before in home dyeing!

Instant Rit (not a soap) soaks in deeper—sets faster—and lasts longer than ordinary "surface" dyes. Insist on Rit and Rit only! For either tinting or dyeing.

NOT A SOAP!

RIT

TINTS and DYES

Rit is a convenient scored wafer; easier to measure; won't sift out of the package.

FREE Miss Rit, 1401 W. Jackson Blvd., Chicago, Illinois

Please send me your FREE folder C-74 of Rit Color Recipes with actual silk samples of leading Paris shades for Spring and Summer.

Name.....

Address.....

City.....State.....

(If more convenient, paste on penny post card)

as Russians use to broil the meat, I prefer to give you another of Anna's meat dishes which is equally good. It is far easier to prepare, too, since it calls for foods and equipment with which we are entirely familiar, even though the combination is an unusual one. This is a dish known as Beef Stroganoff. The recipe will be found in the leaflet, too.

WITH the Shashlyk (which originated in the Caucasus) or the Beef Stroganoff, vegetables are served. Nothing spectacular, nothing unusual, simply asparagas, beans, peas, cauliflower or Brussels sprouts cooked by the steam method with which American housewives are well acquainted. In Russia, vegetables are served as a separate course, but Miss Sten has simplified the service in her American home so that they come in with the meat.

The conventional salad course is omitted (since it does not exist in the Russian meal). The next course, therefore, is that dessert with the tantalizing name of "Profiteroles" and if I may be permitted a really frightful pun—it would profit you to learn about these delicious, individually filled pastries. The recipe is yours for the asking, together with the Borsch, the Beef and the Pirojikis—all four of them conveniently printed on cards of filing case size and awaiting but the coupon to make their way to you.

Anna Sten's wine card for this dinner is almost as elaborate as her Romanoff flatware, ranging from Vodka with the appetizers on through Madeira, white wine, red wine and numerous liqueurs and including Champagne, when she is celebrating the completion of a film. With this there is an accompaniment of a great deal of gay and brilliant conversation.

It all sounds very festive and appetizing, doesn't it? Why then don't you imitate Anna Sten and have a Russian dinner—complete or in part? Just send for the recipes—which are free, as always—and you'll find that they are easy to follow, even for the inexperienced cook, and deliciously different as well. Besides, think of the distinction it will give you as a smart hostess to serve a real Russian meal à la Anna Sten!

MODERN SCREEN STAR RECIPES

HOME SERVICE DEPARTMENT
149 Madison Avenue, N.Y., N.Y.
MODERN SCREEN Magazine

Please send me Anna Sten's recipes for April, 1935.

Name .....
(Print in pencil)

Address .....
(Street and Number)

.....
(City) (State)

The Information Desk

(Continued from page 8)

picture for Paramount will be "Now I'm a Lady" with Paul Cavanagh and Grant Withers.

BARBARA OLCOTT, Troy, N. Y.—Come, come, Barbara, six questions! Neil Hamilton was born September 9, 1899 and Fay Wray on September 10, 1907. Miriam Hopkins' birthday is October 18 and she is about 26. Neil Hamilton's next flicker isn't scheduled as yet. His last two pictures were "One Exciting Adventure" and "Blind Date." Miriam Hopkins' latest flicker is "Becky Sharp," and her next will be "Barbary Coast" for Samuel Goldwyn Studios, 7210 Santa Monica Blvd., Hollywood, Cal. She might send you a picture if you write her there, or at least tell you how much she charges for one. Miriam is separated from Austin Parker.

ELLEN RIDLEY, Collingswood, N. J.—Tsk! Tsk! Why don't you ask a few questions? Just to teach you I'm not going to answer all eight, so there. Dick Powell's next will be "Gold Diggers of 1935" and after that he's appearing in "Midsummer Night's Dream." Robert Donat is in such demand now, since his big hit in "The Count of Monte Cristo," that the studios are fairly fighting for his services. However, he has signed a long term contract with Warners, his first picture to be "Captain Blood." He is now making "Thirty-nine Steps" with Madeline Carroll for Gaumont British. Carl Brisson's current picture is "All the King's Horses" and his next may be "Waikiki Wedding." Mady Christians made her American screen debut in M-G-M's "A Wicked Woman" and she will appear next in "The Flame Within." Randy Scott has finished two pictures—"The Rocky Mountain Mystery" and "Roberta." Harold Lloyd, Eddie Cantor and Pauline Fredericks are not scheduled for anything at this writing. And that's all eight, cracky!

MISS R. R., Youngstown, Ohio—Yes, indeed. We Barry is still acting, and you can see him in versal's "Night Life of the Gods," his latest.

GLORIANA, Dallas, Tex.—Gene Raymond's recent picture is "Transient Lady." I'm s but there's no telling when and where old tures will show up next. He is also in Woman in Red" with Barbara Stanwyck.

B. ANN WELLY, Fostoria, Ohio; EDITH MARTIN, Chicago, Ill.—More ages and Franchot (Frahn-show) Tone is about 29 and next picture after "Lives of a Bengal Lancer "Reckless." Fred Astaire is about 35 and is ried to Phyllis Potter. Dick Powell is 30. Ma O'Sullivan was born in Boyle, Ireland, on Ma 1911. She is under contract to M-G-M. Her f ite color is green.

INTERESTED—Irene Dunne (that's her real n was born in Louisville, Ky., on July 14, 190

W. LEWIS, Kansas City, Mo.—The natural of Joan Crawford's hair is reddish-brown. R Novarro's real name (prepare yourself) is Ra Samaniegoes.

A BICKFORD FAN—Charles Bickford has back to the screen in a big way. He recently pleted a very strong part in "Under Press for Fox. Did you see him in "Little Marker"? Kay Johnson was the leading lad "Dynamite," and Conrad Nagel was the man. Remember?

HARRIET E. SPIVACK, Oshkosh, Wis.—In in the Heavens" William Stelling played the of Corporal May. He is about 22 and is contract to Fox Studios, Hollywood, Cal.

J. E. FREMAN, Rochester, N. Y.; VIRGINIA HELLER, Columbus, Ohio; H. S., Chicago, Ill.—Did you know that Tullio Carminati is a Count? He is, and his full title is Count Tullio Carminati di Brambilla, born in Zara, Dalmatia (an Italian province) on September 21, 1895. An only son, he was educated in Vienna and Salzburg. Because his parents refused to permit him to become an actor, he ran away at the age of 15 and joined a theatrical troupe. He later appeared in a series of Italian motion pictures until the war, and then joined the Italian forces. In 1919 he returned to the movies and in 1920 was again on the stage in Rome. Then Eleanora Duse asked him to be her leading man and director, which he was for 2 years. After Duse's death, Tullio retired from the stage for 6 months; his father died, leaving him his title; and he continued on the stage once again. In 1926 Joseph Schenck brought him to Hollywood to appear with Constance Talmadge in "The Duchess of Buffalo." After making several other films, the advent of the talkies halted his screen career for, although he spoke Italian, French, German and Spanish, he knew very little English. He mastered this language quickly and returned to the stage in America and London. In 1932 he was brought back to America for a role in "Gallant Lady." He next appeared in "Moulin Rouge" and finally in "One Night of Love" in which he was such a hit. He is now making "Let's Live Tonight" for Columbia, opp Lilian Harvey, and is scheduled nex a Te Mary Ellis.

Modern Screen Dramatic School

(Continued from page 10)

as pupils to be developed into full fledged actors and actresses for the Broadway stage.

During the course of the afternoon, one young girl of sixteen stepped forward and did a little recitation. The girl was small, intense, charming, and in the few moments allotted to her, she showed so much repose and concentration and was able to project her mood so completely that the board of directors watched her with particular care.

They were eager to give her a chance, but there was one drawback, talented as she obviously was. They could hear her only faintly, yet they were all seated in the tenth row. The voice of the little actress was tiny—a piping, delicate voice pitched way up in the top of her head. So small was the instrument through which she tried to express her emotions that the effect of what she had to say, charming though it was, was almost lost.

THE members of the board turned to Dagmar Perkins, one of its members, and an accomplished and experienced trainer of the speaking voice. They told her that the fate of the girl rested with her. The board would admit her to the school if Miss Perkins felt she could develop her speaking voice.

Miss Perkins saw the intensity and concentration in the girl's performance and said, "The girl's a worker. If she will work with her voice, as she works with her acting, she should be able to develop it so that it's an asset, not a handicap. The girl should be given a chance."

She asked the girl her name. It was Sylvia Sidney.

Sylvia described her own piping voice to me. Yet it was almost impossible to believe that the warm, rich tones which issue from her throat, today, were not God-given. I assure you, they weren't. Sylvia gives all the credit to Dagmar Perkins and she asked Miss Perkins to be this month's guest teacher.

"In order to improve a voice," Miss Perkins told me, "you must, first of all, set yourself a standard. You must be conscious of your own shortcomings. In order to set yourself a standard, it is necessary to listen to good speech and to accustom yourself to the modulations and inflections of refined speaking. Go to good plays, listen to the voices of good actors in motion pictures, over the radio and on phonograph records.

"Good speech is never exaggerated. A good speaking voice should be pitched low and should be melodious but should sound—above all—natural. A voice should be allowed to grow like a flower and, in starting to do things with the voice, you should always relax—let go the muscles of your throat. It is most important to open up and loosen the throat—and you do this with conscious concentration upon relaxation—so that the voice itself has a chance to grow.

"Here's a good exercise: Let the jaw drop. Now practice vocal consonant sounds such as D, G, V, etc., focusing the tone at the roots of the upper teeth. This opens up the pharynx space and amplifies the tone.

"Remember that the voice is partly physical, partly mental and a little vocal. It is vitally necessary to hear, yourself, what's wrong with your own voice.

"It's a good exercise to take a serious

WIVES KEEP MAKING THE same OLD mistake

EACH season of the year sees another happy lot of girls go confidently into marriage. They are so young, so lovely, so light-hearted about it all. And many of them are as pitiably lacking in understanding as their mothers were before them. The older women know this. Sometimes they are rather inclined to be sad at weddings.

"MY FRIENDS WERE ALL CONFUSED"

It is a shock to the young wife to find that friends married for quite a few years are still confused about the matter of feminine hygiene. Some of these modern women actually talk the way her mother talks.

Some of them seem to have changed from method to method—as though to learn by trial and error. Surely this cannot be right. Surely certain of these methods could never have been right.

"I HAVE SEEN THE TRAGIC RESULTS"

Before the days of Zonite, as any nurse or doctor will tell you, there really was no antiseptic powerful enough for the purpose except poisons. It was a question of poisons or nothing. Surgical cleanliness could be attained in no other way. The practice of feminine hygiene was always right. It was the old-fashioned poisonous antiseptic which was wrong.

Then came Zonite. How gratefully women received Zonite! At last an antiseptic providing surgical cleanliness with safety! Zonite is not caustic. Zonite is not poisonous. Yet Zonite is far more powerful than any dilution of carbolic acid that can be used without danger on the human body. Zonite will never harm delicate membranes. Nor leave an area of scar-tissue. Despite its germicidal strength, Zonite is gentle, positively soothing. It comes in bottles: 30¢, 60¢ and $1.00.

Then there are Zonite Suppositories which are semi-solid, dainty white and greaseless forms. They come hygienically sealed in individual glass vials, 12 to a box: $1.00. Ask your druggist.

"NOW I'M HAPPY BECAUSE I KNOW"

Women everywhere say that knowledge and happiness came to them from the pages of "Facts for Women." Send for this booklet. Read it. Pass it on to others. It is honest. Up-to-date. Most helpful to all women. Just mail coupon.

ZONITE PRODUCTS CORPORATION
Chrysler Building, New York, N. Y.

Please send me free copy of the booklet or booklets checked below. MM-54

☐ Facts for Women
☐ Use of Antiseptics in the Home

Name .....
(Please print name)

Address .....

City ..... State .....
(In Canada: Sainte Therese, P.Q.)

If you feel low—

✓ no appetite
✓ losing weight
✓ nervous
✓ pale

then don't gamble

with your body

Life insurance companies tell us that the gradual breakdown of the human body causes more deaths every year than disease germs

IF your physical let-down is caused by a lowered red-blood-cell and hemo-glo-bin content in the blood—then S.S.S. is waiting to help you . . . though, if you suspect an organic trouble, you will, of course, want to consult a physician or surgeon.

S.S.S. is not just a so-called tonic. It is a tonic specially designed to stimulate gastric secretions, and also has the mineral elements so very, very necessary in rebuilding the oxygen-carrying hemo-glo-bin of the blood.

This two-fold purpose is important. Digestion is improved . . . food is better utilized . . . and thus you are enabled to better "carry on" without exhaustion—as you should.

You should feel and look years younger with life giving and purifying blood surging through your body. You owe this to yourself and friends.

Make S.S.S your health safeguard and, unless your case is exceptional, you should soon enjoy again the satisfaction of appetizing food . . . sound sleep . . . steady nerves . . . a good complexion . . . and renewed strength.

S.S.S. is sold by all drug stores in two convenient sizes. The $2 economy size is twice as large as the $1.25 regular size and is sufficient for two weeks treatment. Begin on the uproad today.

Do not be blinded by the efforts of a few unethical dealers who may suggest that you gamble with substitutes. You have a right to insist that S.S.S. be supplied you on request. Its long years of preference is your guarantee of satisfaction.

S.S.S. TONIC

the world's great blood medicine

Makes you feel like yourself again

© S.S.S. Co.

The winners of the Agfa-Ansco Beauty Contest who are currently appearing in "Women Must Dress," with Minna Gombell, for Monogram. Left to right: Nell Rhoads, Anne Kasper, Madelyn Earle, Harriet deBussman, Anne Johnston.

passage from a book or a poem and read it aloud, and your own good taste will come to your aid, once you have established a standard. For instance, fancy delivering Marc Antony's oration over the death of Caesar in a squeaky voice, or through your nose. It's incongruous, isn't it? There is dignity and repose in every line.

"Likewise, if you take one of the humorous speeches from 'A Midsummer Night's Dream,' your voice must, in the very nature of things, be light and airy and flexible. It's utterly incongruous to deliver comedy lines, even when reading aloud in the privacy of your own room, in sombre, sonorous tones.

"If a young man or woman has used the voice incorrectly and his own ear hasn't told him it's wrong, then he should have a teacher, but if he knows what his defects are then he can do much to correct them himself.

"A voice is like a violin. It has to be kept in good order—it is the instrument through which emotional content is conveyed. Just as a violinist must keep his arm relaxed, so must the speaker keep his throat relaxed."

THERE—I think those are some good points from one of the world's greatest voice and speech teachers. Often you will hear Miss Perkins over the radio. Her own lovely voice is an inspiration in itself.

And now I want you to have some exercises for volume and control that I have gleaned from some of the speech teachers and coaches in Hollywood.

Volume and the ability to throw the voice, so that even a slightly deaf friend on the back row can hear you, is a matter of breathing properly. When you are speaking on the stage, think that some dear friend who doesn't hear very well is sitting on the last row. Do your utmost to make him hear you.

Learn to breathe from your diaphragm. The way to do that is to lie on the floor with a book on your chest and another on the diaphragm. Breathe so that the book on your chest keeps still and the one on your diaphragm rises and falls as you breathe.

When you have accomplished that, then stand up and speak certain sounds. The vowels are good—A, E, I, O and U. Keep the tip of your tongue at the base of your lower teeth. Without moving the tongue say the vowel sounds and project them out of your mouth as if the breath from your diaphragm were hurling them outwards. Then begin practicing words the same way, except, of course, that your tongue will have to move. But get your volume by practicing on vowels alone.

FOR resonance and flexibility, sit at the piano and strike the key of C. On the note C, sing A, E, I, O, U, with the tip of the tongue held at the base of the lower teeth. Now strike the note D and repeat. Go up and down the scale as far as you can without straining. Whenever your voice becomes strained, too breathy or squeaky—stop at once.

Take the same exercise singing "bee, bay, by, bow, boo" as fast as you can.

Now practice this volume exercise. Completely relaxed, breathing from the diaphragm and keeping the voice low and resonant, repeat some nice passage. A good one is "Beauty is truth and truth beauty, that is all we know on earth and all we need to know." Throw the words out, letting them ride on your breath.

Repeat the same sentence, accenting various words. Now repeat it, making the words rise and fall. Then make the sentence rounded and meaningful—put rhythm in it, as you would into poetry.

Make your voice stronger and stronger, but do it with breathing, never, never strain the voice!

And remember to read aloud an hour a day, thinking every minute about the sound of your own voice. If you've already formed a dramatic club, it would be a splendid idea to open each meeting by having every member of the club read a short passage aloud and then have the others point out voice faults. If you haven't formed a club ask a friend to hear you read and to criticize your speech.

And don't forget that I'm ready at all times to help you with your problems. Be sure to write to me and ask for help in speech problems or ask me for any exercises that I haven't given here. Be sure to address all letters care of MODERN SCREEN's Dramatic School, 149 Madison Avenue, New York City, and enclose a self-addressed, stamped envelope for reply. Ask anything that will help you in dramatic work and I will try to help you—but don't forget that self-addressed, stamped envelope or else I cannot answer you.

The 8 Most Fascinating People in Hollywood

(Continued from page 27)

thing. She is alone.

Of course I have heard a lot about her through mutual friends. And her avoidance of publicity hasn't whet my interest in the slightest. I don't give a hang whether she's brilliant or dumb, or whether it's a magnificent act she's putting on about wanting to be alone.

I BELIEVE that Garbo has utilized all kinds of artificialties to enhance her film glamor. But so skillfully that she gives the impression of being a stern realist. She exudes beauty and strength.

My one close friend who strikes me as intriguing is Frances Goldwyn, wife of Sam Goldwyn, the producer. Her love of life overwhelms me. I've never encountered anyone with such a zest for living. She appreciates everything she has; she squeezes the good from each waking moment and detests going to bed for fear she'll miss something.

Possessing great firmness of character, a brilliant mind, wholesomeness and sophistication, she also has an elegantly ridiculous sense of humor as the final touch. She understands people as well as anyone I've ever known. She's one of the best wives and mothers I know. But it's her unfailing vitality and enthusiasm that delight me most.

A director, W. S. Van Dyke, follows on my line-up. He is a Richard Harding Davis character. As hard as nails, a hard-boiled hombre, he is at the same time sincerely thoughtful of others. To me he's a steel trap with a brain allowing for reservations as to when it should snap.

Van Dyke happens to be a movie director. He is a kindred spirit to a Foreign Legionnaire. A leader of men, a soldier of fortune, he is truly adventurous in this modern, tame world. His kindness is unexpected and so all the more potent. Virile, dominating, he has tramped the by-paths of the world and, somehow, this seeps through.

The fourth man in Hollywood who is intriguing is neither actor, director, nor executive. He is Perc Westmore, the make-up genius. He excites me because he is a man who started from the bottom and built up a splendid organization and yet has time to be absolutely crazy about children. Great tenderness in a self-made success is a very bewildering quality to me.

Very thorough, extraordinarily conscientious, Perc has gathered about him in his business, people who are nice as well as artistic and capable. That's a reflection on his own intrinsic worth, in my estimation.

But I can't get away from his love for children. He has three, two of whom are adopted, and his love for them is marvelous. It denotes much that is beyond mere words.

THE other woman, among all the women of Hollywood, is Anna May Wong. She stands out head and shoulders above the crowd because of the fine manner in which she has handled her personal life. Anna May's exotic, Oriental appearance; her lovely face, hands, and figure are unique in their allure. She is in a class by herself.

Yet it is her sane rise that somehow stimulates me. I don't know her intimately, but I believe that she, more than any woman in pictures, has made the best of her opportunities. So few do, it seems. Here in Hollywood, in New York, and in London, Anna May is a gracious person. Thanks solely to her own efforts, for she easily could have gone berserk. Her problems were peculiarly complicated, but she wasn't daunted in the least.

And there you have them—!

It's really an intangible something that makes one intriguing, and it's been difficult for me to find precisely the right words to explain why only these eight strike my fancy as qualifying for this distinction in Hollywood.

My choice may not be correct. It may bring a flood of rebuke down upon my head. But, at least, I've dared to be perfectly candid about the Hollywoodites whom I honestly like and deeply admire!

To me, Faoen (FAY-ON) is the essence of romance says Anne C. Parke

Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. NORMAN H. PARKE of New York and a descendent of DUNCAN PHYFE.

AMONG the gay young moderns who set the pace for what's correct, Miss Anne Parke plays an important part. What's new in clothes, places to dine, things to see, perfumes to use—she knows what's "being done." It is not surprising therefore, to learn of her preference for FAOEN.

"To me," she says, "perfume must express romance. FAOEN suggests it so subtly and yet so definitely that I really prefer it to more costly scents."

Miss Parke is right—FAOEN's fragrance makes every occasion rife with romantic possibilities. There's sheer magic in the way it transforms comeliness into irresistible glamour. Let FAOEN show you the way to enchantment!

In a ten cent (10c) tuckaway size as illustrated at all 5 and 10 cent stores.

PARK & TILFORD'S

FAOEN (FAY-ON)

Beauty Aids

FACE POWDER • LIPSTICK • COLD CREAM
CLEANSING CREAM • ROUGES • PERFUMES

Yesterday

AN UGLY MONSTROSITY

MARIAN MARSH
Charming Columbia Star

Today HOLD-BOBS AND BEAUTY

Which hairdress do you prefer? A ridiculous question, of course. Modern women demand modern methods of hairdress...and that means HOLD-BOBS!

HOLD-BOBS can't show in your hair—their heads are small, round and invisible, and—they come in harmonizing colors to match every shade of hair. They keep deep, soft waves beautifully in place—the flexible, tapered legs, one side crimped, take care of that. And, HOLD-BOBS cannot scratch or pull—thanks to their smooth, round points and a new satin-smooth finish.

Try HOLD-BOBS once and you'll use them always. Send for your Gift Card.

THE HUMP HAIRPIN MFG. COMPANY
1918-36 Prairie Avenue, Dept. E-45, Chicago, Ill.
Hump Hairpin Mfg. Co. of Canada, Ltd.
St. Hyacinthe, P. Q., Canada

Gold and Silver Metal Foil cards identify HOLD-BOBS.

All sizes and colors to meet every requirement. Also sold under brand name of BOBETTES.

MAIL COUPON for Gift CARD

The Hump Hairpin Mfg. Co.
Dept. E-15, Chicago, Ill.
I want to know more about these new HOLD-BOBS that match my hair. Please send me a free sample card and new hair culture booklet.

Name.....

Address.....

City..... State.....

☐ Gray and Platinum ☐ Blonde ☐ Brown
☐ Auburn ☐ Brunette

Copyright 1935 by The Hump Hairpin Mfg. Co.

Let Me Be a Man for a Change

(Continued from page 60)

could prove himself an actor. He'd gone into the game as had so many before him.

And I used to wonder if he'd stop in time. For a man may fall from fame on the very ladder he uses to create it. Look over the list of men I've just named and you'll understand exactly. It has been written many times that Rudy Valentino really passed away just in time. The world was weary of reading about his being just a ladies' man and was ready to turn to a new romantic hero. Incidentally, Rudy knew that. He felt defeat approaching from the fair hands that had made him famous. Yet he could not change a world's mind.

Gary Cooper did change it. Others have. Would Lyle Talbot? How often I had wondered. And it was when I read he'd gone to Warner Brothers and demanded the lead in "The Brute," that he-man picture that contributed to Milton Sills' fame years ago, that I dashed right out to ask him if he'd really awakened in time and was going to be himself at last.

Lyle Talbot is a true man's man. How often I've wanted to write those little truths about him to prove it. And yet I didn't dare because what is good publicity for a man's man is not for a ladies' man!

TAKE the day he saved Margaret Lindsay's life while they were making "Fog Over Frisco." She was wearing a flimsy white dress and someone carelessly threw a lighted match against her. She was in flames in a second, but, in less than a second, while the rest of the men, from prop boy to director, were thinking what to do, Lyle Talbot had his coat off and had rolled Margaret Lindsay on the floor in it. She hardly was scarred and anyone present, I was there, too, will tell you his quick wit and courage saved that girl's life, to say nothing of her beauty.

Could we print it as a story of courage? Certainly not! Lyle Talbot was a ladies' man. He began taking Margaret Lindsay places. He had saved her life and that commenced a romance. He capitalized willingly upon an incident of true bravery as one of romantic import. A part of his Hollywood campaign as he had figured it out from the very beginning.

I have sat for hours and listened to incidents from his life story. I have read his life stories as printed and laughed aloud. The perfect build-up for a ladies' man when, in reality, he was a daredevil from the very beginning.

When his school teacher had hay-fever, he bought some powder that would make her sneeze, put it on an eraser and patted it on the blackboard behind her. She was in bed for several days, and Lyle got a good whipping. But he could take it—he'd had his fun.

Eventually he got tired of that cat o' nine tails because he was always caught. So he decided to do away with it, he buried it where nobody could find it. And the moment that it was gone, there was no real reason to be courageous.

When he left home at seventeen, it wasn't necessary. A ladies' boy would have stayed around home in nice, cozy comfort, but Lyle preferred to take the road. He wanted to become an actor. He wanted to begin young because he figured you could stand starvation better when the blood of youth could make even starvation an adventure. He found it. On his "first night," while playing the old man in a wandering stock company in "Cappy Ricks," he had stage fright so badly he forgot to pull his punch and actually knocked the leading man out. Of course, he was fired. But he begged to be allowed to remain with the company—begged so hard they retained him as the stage hand who swept the theatre and cleaned up the actors' dressing rooms. He could take that, too, with all his dreams of fame! Hard as nails from the beginning.

Eventually, of course, one of the actors became ill and since there was no one else, he was given a second opportunity. At the end of three years, when that company folded, he was exactly where he started. No money. He could have gone home. A sissy would have. He didn't. He became a ballyhoo man at the "Hoopla" stand for a carnival.

There was a fire in that show, too. Lyle was in the tent with one old man. The next show was about to start when he saw flames. He knew what a fire meant to a carnival. If he yelled, there would be panic. There were buckets of water standing ready for the players—wash buckets. First he clapped his hands over the old man's mouth to keep him from giving the alarm, then releasing him, he put out the fire, alone, with their coats and the water from the buckets.

ALL this time, there were no women. A he-man—no time for women. But there was one eventually, a dancer. Perhaps you have read a little about her. But I wonder if anyone has read the true story. Romantic? Of course. Love stories are always romantic. But romance wasn't what I sensed when he told me about it. Rather bravery and determination.

They loved madly. So madly that I wonder if Fate, who seems to stack the cards for or against us, wasn't just a little jealous of this divine love. I sometimes think that when people are too happy they simply magnetize tragedy. These two did. When happiness had crooned its sweetest lyrics for only a short time, Lyle lost his position. She was dancing. They had no money. He could not get a job near her.

What to do? He could give up his career as an actor and get something else. But that would mean regrets later. They could separate and work in separate cities. But that meant tempting a happiness so great that neither could bear to think of it. What would a man do in such a situation?

A man faced the facts. Faced them with a heart so heavy, but a courage so great that I have never heard a story exactly its equal. They would separate—legally. They would go their own separate ways, remembering bliss, before separation or sacrifice of his career and pride, brought disillusionment. And when he was able to support her, they would marry again. They would not spoil marriage, but they would give it a second chance when he had proven his ability to provide for it, forever.

Women! A ladies' man! I remember I cried when Lyle Talbot first told me that story. "I have always loved one woman," he told me. "I have hoped against hope for that second marriage."

So I'd write about his romances with other girls, about his big cars, his purchase of orchids and champagne dinners for the ladies, with both a tear and a smile in my eye. And I didn't feel sorry for the other women, either. Because I knew he'd told them about it. A man would!

Put back on that mustache, Frank Morgan, we know you! Frank looks serious and kinda nude at the races.

I knew he'd made them understand—Sally Blane, Genevieve Tobin, Claire Trevor, Mary Brian, Billie Seward, Margaret Lindsay, Patricia Ellis. One of them told me, "I like to go out with Lyle Talbot because he never tries to maul me. There's nothing synthetic about him—he'd have to mean it." How many men can she say that about?

But could I print that a girl was safe with a man who was building a reputation for being a sheik? Could I say that the most-engaged man in motion pictures was merely a companion, and a pal for pretty ladies? Could I tell the truth and remain his press agent?

I COULDN'T even tell his best friends, Pat O'Brien and Joe E. Brown—men's men if you ever saw one. I couldn't explain that between pictures Lyle dashed to the mountains with men pals, that he was an adroit fisherman and skillful sailor. I couldn't write that a ladies' man left the ladies on his holiday.

But then I learned that he had demanded "The Brute"; that he'd refused to play any more namby-pamby heroes until he'd played some he-men.

His eyes kept right on blazing as he continued talking to me. "I've served my apprenticeship, Jewel. If I don't cut out this rot about being a sissy ladies' man, I'll end up a Hollywood gigolo. You take an awful gamble when you start that rep. I knew it then. I know it now. It's a gamble when you try to get out of it, too. People think it's a gag. You've pulled one gag, probably you're pulling another.

"However, spill the beans, now. Be a sport and make them believe it. You see, my ex-wife is coming to Hollywood soon. We're going to talk things over—"

I hope this helps do the trick, Lyle. There's something so heart-warming about a man who plays the game to win, with the knowledge he may lose. He's done it throughout his life. He's doing it now—with his career and his one woman.

"Let me be a man for a change," he leaned forward.

And I answered, as I could have answered few men about whom I've written publicity, "There'll be no change, Lyle Talbot."

FREE

Just mail coupon for the most complete book ever written on eye make-up. Note also trial offer.

NOW

An Eyelash Make-up that gives the alluring effect of

LONG, LOVELY LASHES

so fascinating to men!

Dull, lifeless eyes are a handicap to happiness. Yet you can have lovely eyes in 40 seconds! There's no need to envy girls who always have "dates"—you can beautify your eyes so easily, so inexpensively. See how quickly my Winx Mascara glorifies your lashes, giving your face a new charm. Like magic, little eyes appear big. Skimpy lashes look long, lustrous, soft.

FOR "COME HITHER EYES"
WINX YOUR LASHES AND BROWS

Millions of women prefer Winx to ordinary mascaras—so will you, I'm certain. Winx is refined to the last degree—so it's safe, smudge-proof, non-smarting, tear-proof—scientifically perfect. Try Winx today—learn how easy it is to darken your lashes with Winx.

Winx Mascara and my other Winx Eye Beautifiers are presented in generous purse sizes at 10c. Think how little it costs to accent your eyes and give yourself added attraction.

To learn all the precious secrets of Eye Beauty, mail the coupon for my book—"Lovely Eyes—How to Have Them." It's free. It tells how to care for the lashes and brows, how to use eye shadow, how to treat "crow's-feet," etc. Also check coupon for a trial box, if a 10c. counter is not handy.

Louise Ross

WINX 10¢
EYE BEAUTIFIERS

Winx Eyebrow Pencil molds brows into charming curves.

Winx Cake Mascara darkens Lashes instantly, perfectly

Winx Eye Shadow gives depth and glamour—a fine cream.

Winx Eyelash Grower promotes luxurious soft lashes.

Winx Liquid Mascara preferred by many—easy to apply. Waterproof.

FREE Merely send Coupon for "Lovely Eyes—How to Have Them"

Mail to LOUISE ROSS, M-4-35
243 W. 17th St., New York City

Name.....

Street.....

City.....State.....

If you also want a generous trial package of Winx Mascara, enclose 10c, checking whether you wish ☐ Cake or ☐ Liquid ☐ Black or ☐ Brown.

Posed by professional models

NEW WAY ADDS 5 to 15 LBS.

—in just a few weeks

STOP being ashamed of your figure—so "skinny" you lose all chances of making friends. This new easy treatment is giving thousands solid flesh and shapely attractive curves—in just a few weeks!

Marvelous new discovery

Doctors for years have prescribed yeast to build up health. But now, with this new yeast discovery in pleasant little tablets, you can get far greater tonic results—regain health, and in addition put on pounds of solid, good-looking flesh —and in a far shorter time.

Not only are thousands quickly gaining beauty-bringing pounds, but also clear skin, relief from indigestion and constipation, new strength and pep.

Concentrated 7 times

This amazing new product, Ironized Yeast, is made from specially cultured brewers' ale yeast imported from Europe—the richest yeast known—which by a new process is concentrated 7 times—made 7 times more powerful.

But that is not all! This marvelous, health-building yeast is ironized with 3 kinds of iron which strengthen the blood, add tireless energy and vitality.

Day after day, as you take Ironized Yeast tablets, watch flat chest develop, skinny limbs round out attractively, skin clear to beauty, new health come—you're a new person.

Results guaranteed

No matter how skinny and weak you may be, this marvelous new Ironized Yeast should build you up in a few short weeks as it has thousands of others. If you are not delighted with the results of the very first package, your money will be instantly refunded.

Special FREE offer!

To start you building up your health right away, we make this absolutely FREE offer. Purchase a package of Ironized Yeast tablets at once, cut out the seal on the box and mail it to us with a clipping of this paragraph. We will send you a fascinating new book on health, "New Facts About Your Body," by a well-known authority. Remember, results are guaranteed with the very first package—or money refunded. All druggists. Ironized Yeast Co., Inc., Dept. 34, Atlanta, Ga.

A Pal and Critic Tells

(Continued from page 59)

so that each time the doorbell rang Windy, Rudy's dog, would bark an effusive greeting to each newcomer. Waking Rudy, not me. Throwing on a bathrobe Rudy would have to gallop to the door and let them in. After the second interruption he couldn't get back to sleep for the rest of the night.

When I got up in the morning, a haggard Vallee confronted me. With a few well chosen words he told me all the events of the night before and then, with solemn face, presented me with a scroll he'd printed during his wakeful hours. As I recall, it was entitled "A Bark in the Dark or the Story of a Sleepless Night." It gave me one of the finest ribbings I ever received and one that neither he nor the boys will ever let me forget.

"But," you say, "why is he so unreasonable? Why get so upset by that?"

You haven't heard the whole story. That morning was Thursday, on which the first work of the picture was scheduled to begin. It was also the day of his first broadcast from the Coast, in which he was welcomed to Hollywood by Mary Pickford. If his broadcast that day was poor, the public would blame Rudy. And if a tired Vallee did badly in the first shots of the picture, he was on the receiving end of the comments. Not me. And yet it was all my fault.

YOU see, Rudy doesn't think so much how adverse criticism affects him, but of its effect on the whole organization, the forty-odd people whose very bread and butter depend on his continued success. The band, his secretaries, all of them are affected. And that's why Rudy will not tolerate slipshod work on the part of anyone, because everybody is hurt by it. The picture public or his radio sponsors might say, "Vallee's slipping!" and with his dismissal, where would the others be?

Rudy has said to me, "The boys in the orchestra wonder why I call them down when things go wrong. So very many musicians are like little children in that you have to explain every little thing to them. Usually, the better musicians they are, the screwier they are. Because our radio hour has long been ranked near the top, the boys are content, willing to rest on their oars. They can't do it any more than I can. There are too many top-notch competitors willing and ready to replace us!"

One result of Rudy's temper and temperament is that everyone is electrified into keeping on his toes. They work harder and do better work and are more alert than they would be with some plodding director at the helm. Musicians will tell you that after having worked with Vallee they find it very easy to get other jobs because leaders know they must be very definitely alert and capable.

Essentially a leader, Rudy has the dogged determination that demands perfection at any cost and gets it, or else—Other band leaders are called "sweet" to work for, yet when you make a mistake you're told in a sad, gentle voice that you're fired. Vallee blows up, there and then, and it's all over with. And you're still working.

Musicians who work with him may have forgotten what it feels like to be fired, out of a job. Rudy hasn't. Some six years ago, he and his band were discharged from the Heigh Ho Club after almost a year's engagement. There was no work in sight. They sat in a band booker's office one morning, plenty downcast, while Rudy said, "Stick with me, boys, and we'll make the real top together. We've just got to hang on until all this radio work we've done helps us." Less than two months later, police reserves were needed to handle the crowds at their initial theatre appearance!

THERE'S also a practical psychology to his occasional outbursts of temper. Intent on his five careers, Rudy has no idle time on his hands. People know him and his reputation for quick action and when they have business to discuss, they tell it fast. And get just as rapid an answer. Rudy says, "There are forty or fifty people a day who want just four or five minutes of my time. If I gave everyone that much time, we wouldn't be able to do our own work and then where would we be?"

Vallee's bark is much, much worse than his bite. To realize what he's up against, you should spend just one full day with him. We can't go into a coffee shop but what some song writer will come up to our table and croon his latest brainchild while we try to down our coffee. Entering his office building, Rudy has to run a gauntlet through the lobby of those who want an audition for their cousin's child, the fellows who know a sure way for Rudy to make them some money, and all types of mysterious individuals with "some very confidential business, Mr. Vallee!" He's as good-natured as the rest of us, but how would you feel after the thirty-fifth interruption?

When he is recording or working in a picture, Rudy keeps his boys working constantly, never leaving their chairs for five hours at a stretch. And does he crack the whip! But when it's over, he'll take them all out to the finest dinner he can buy.

An incident which occurred when Rudy was making the "George White Scandals" a year ago caused a great deal of comment and not even Hollywood knows to this day why Vallee contemplated walking off the picture. There was one sequence that called for Alice Faye and Rudy to skip—and skip is the right word—across some rocks among the lilypads of a garden. He pointed out that such antics might well be offensive to the men in the audience and certainly added no value to the picture as a whole. After cajoling without avail, the executives said that they would omit the scene.

Coming to work the next morning, Rudy was amazed to learn that the company had already been shooting an hour. Going on the set he found they had taken that scene from a long shot, employing his double to do the skipping! That was the final straw for Rudy, already harassed by other troubles. And he hit the ceiling. He told the producer what he specifically thought of his promises and then went to the head of the studio and explained that the scene would be omitted, or else. That individual was as astonished as Rudy and the sequence was, to be sure, promptly eliminated. But how many new and none-too-secure stars would have dared defy the producer, taking a chance on being blacklisted as temperamental? For Rudy was none too secure as a picture star at that time. Caution flew to the winds, however, when it came up against Rudy's conviction of right. He lost his temper, spoke his piece, won his point and went back to work. Temper? Yes. Temperamental? No!

Beauty Advice

(Continued from page 17)

with a good waving lotion; and those new coil curlers which are so comfortable for overnight wear are additional wave coaxing helps. Incidentally, the latter are grand for taking care of "scraggly" ends.

DON'T you think that I fail to realize how difficult it is for many of you to sandwich in those precious minutes that have to be spent on one's daily grooming chores, but do your best to work out a system where you can accomplish the most in the fewest minutes. Plan to take just a few minutes each night to freshen up for the next day. While your bathwater is running, for example, you can pop your hose and underthings into the bowl, and swish them around in warm, sudsy water (always use the tissue thin soap flakes that dissolve so quickly), rinse, and hang up. You'll have fresh underthings ready for the morrow almost in the time it takes to say, "Your bath is ready." Of course you know better than to put on a new pair of silk stockings before you've washed them out. They wear much longer that way. Remember, too, that feet give off impurities and perspiration which makes hose-washing a nightly requisite. A salesgirl gave me a hint recently about making hose wear longer. A few drops of vinegar in the rinse water once every several washings seems to strengthen the silk fibre.

Your before-going-to-bed routine should include any nightly laundering that is necessary for the next day's daintiness. It should include a brushing and mending of clothes for the morrow, too, if you're going to the office, or if, as a housewife, you have any early morning plans. And it should, of course, include a thorough face and neck cleansing with cleansing cream, and then with soap and water. Many an unhappy case of blackheads is directly due to neglect of the nightly cleansing routine. Every night or morning take a cleansing, refreshing bath. A clear skin is a fragrant skin. When you're drying yourself after bathing, remember to push back the cuticle of your nails (hands and feet). The latter will help you save time when you come to your weekly manicure and pedicure.

Have a regular deodorant schedule. It doesn't have to be summer for perspiration to mar the wholesome fragrance of your skin. Perspiration continues, even when we're unaware of it. As a matter of fact, I think we make too much fuss about it in the summer, and too little in the winter. Right now when the weather is so changeable, and we're apt to dress warmly for a cold day in the morning, and find that the cold day has turned "fair and warmer" by noon, a deodorant is supremely important. You may want to keep a small size of that cream deodorant in your desk drawer at the office. But, at any rate, experiment with the different types of cream and liquid deodorants, and find out which one is the best protection for you. Then use it regularly, according to instructions.

Your best safeguard against perspiration unpleasantness is cleanliness, internal and external. Make your plan of beauty include a sane routine of eating, exercising and sleeping. Drink plenty of fruit juice every day . . . any kind of fruit juice that you find easiest and cheapest to secure . . . pineapple, grapefruit, or orange juice every day . . . any kind of fruit juice quota: eight to ten glasses for a well regulated system. Avoid foods that are hard to digest such as heavy pastries and starchy foods. Fresh fruits and vegetables do a

It's a Sign You're Not Reaching that Hidden Dirt, that Dirt that Lies Buried Beneath the Surface!

By Lady Esther

One thing women notice about the use of Lady Esther Four-Purpose Face Cream is that it seems to lighten their skins—actually makes them look shades lighter after a few days' use.

This is not due to any bleaching action on the part of Lady Esther Face Cream. It contains no bleaching agent.

The explanation is that Lady Esther Face Cream cleanses the skin so thoroughly it does away with that grayish cast caused by embedded dirt. It is just like half-washing a white handkerchief and thoroughly washing it.

That penetrating dirt and greasy soot that works its way into your skin will not only cause your skin to look much darker than it really is, but it will cause a number of other blemishes.

It will give root to blackheads and whiteheads and cause the skin to become coarse and canvas-like.

It Calls for a PENETRATING Face Cream!

To give your skin a thorough cleansing, to get at the dirt that buries itself deep in the pores, you must use a face cream that gets to the bottom of the pores! In other words, a penetrating face cream!

Lady Esther Four-Purpose Face Cream is penetrating. It is reaching and searching. It does not merely lie on the surface of the skin, but penetrates the pores to their depths.

Almost instantly, it dissolves the waxy grime that lies buried in the pores and floats it to the surface where it is easily wiped off.

When you cleanse your skin with Lady Esther Face Cream you immediately know it, for your skin tingles as it never did before.

It Benefits Your Skin Four Ways

Lady Esther Face Cream does four things of definite benefit to your skin.

First, it cleanses the pores to the very bottom.

Second, it lubricates the skin. Resupplies it with a fine oil that overcomes dryness and keeps the skin soft and flexible.

Third, because it cleanses the pores thoroughly, the pores open and close naturally and become normal in size, invisibly small.

Fourth, it provides a smooth, non-sticky base for face powder.

Prove it at my Expense!

I want you to see for yourself what Lady Esther Four-Purpose Face Cream will do for your skin. So I offer you a 7-day supply free of charge. Write today for this 7-day supply and put it to the test on your skin.

Note the dirt that this cream gets out of your skin the very first cleansing. Mark how your skin seems to get lighter in color as you continue to use the cream. Note how clear and radiant your skin becomes and how soft and smooth.

Even in three days' time you will see such a difference in your skin as to amaze you. But let Lady Esther Four-Purpose Face Cream speak for itself. Mail a postcard or the coupon below for the 7-day trial supply.

(You can paste this on a penny postcard) (11) FREE

Lady Esther, 2010 Ridge Avenue, Evanston, Ill.

Please send me by return mail your 7-day supply of Lady Esther Four-Purpose Face Cream.

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

*City*_____ *State*_____

(If you live in Canada, write Lady Esther, Toronto, Ont.)

Copyright by Lady Esther, 1935

IT CORRECTED MY CONSTIPATION IN NO TIME!

Thousands Now Get Safe Relief from Indigestion, Skin Troubles, "Nerves" with this Pasteurized Yeast

DO you want to stop indigestion, pimples and boils, "jumpy" nerves, and all the other annoying ills caused by a sluggish system? You do? Then try this improved pasteurized yeast. Thousands have found that this remarkable corrective food ends constipation and related ills for good!

Science now knows that in countless cases of constipation the real cause is insufficient vitamin B complex. The stomach and intestines, deprived of this essential element, no longer do their work properly. Elimination becomes incomplete and irregular. Digestion slows up. Poisons accumulate in your system.

Yeast Foam Tablets supply the vitamin B which is necessary to correct this condition. These tablets are pure pasteurized yeast — and yeast is the richest known food source of the vitamin B complex. This improved yeast quickly strengthens your internal muscles and gives them tone. It stimulates your whole digestive and eliminative system to normal, healthy function.

With the true cause of your trouble corrected, constipation soon goes. Indigestion stops. Pimples disappear. Pep returns. You really live again!

Don't confuse Yeast Foam Tablets with ordinary yeast. These tablets cannot cause fermentation in the body. Pasteurization makes Yeast Foam Tablets safe for everyone to eat.

Any druggist will supply you with Yeast Foam Tablets. The 10-day bottle costs only 50c. Get one today.

YEAST FOAM TABLETS

better job of keeping your system wholesome and sweet.

I don't know of any more appropriate expression of daintiness and femininity than the new dance and dinner frocks of filmy chiffon and airy ruffled nets. The other day as I was shopping, I chanced upon an old product in a new box; although the product itself might be termed better "new" since it features an entirely new and long-hoped for innovation which is a truly safe protection for personal daintiness at those times when you're afraid to wear sheer, light frocks. It seems to me a particular blessing that it should be introduced now (they've been working to perfect it for two years) when spring is so close at hand, and we can enjoy the prospect of dancing through carefree evenings in a frock light as a spring breeze, without even a shadow of worry or fear. We can wear dainty, light colored dresses to the office without any of the old nagging, self-conscious doubt. You'll be grateful for information about it.

Before your wardrobe starts annexing new spring frocks, give your clothes closet, down to every last sweater and hat, a good airing. If you do this frequently, your clothes won't acquire that stuffy odor that sometimes spoils their freshness. Little sachets pinned to your clothes hangers are helps to fragrant grooming. Some sweet day we're going to devote a whole article to sachets and perfumes. Write me if I can help you with any problems of personal daintiness. I think you'll like my beauty bulletin this month. It's yours for clipping the coupon, and sending along a stamped, self addressed envelope.

MARY BIDDLE,
MODERN SCREEN,
149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Please send me your Pre-Easter Beauty Bulletin, absolutely free.

Name.....

Address.....
Street

.....
City State

Between You and Me

(Continued from page 6)

Tips to Stars

Gloria Swanson: Don't look as if posing for a tooth ad.

William Powell: Relax your facial muscles and let your weary eyebrow droop down to its natural level.

Jean Harlow: Use more material for your clothing.

Pola Negri: We tank you should go home (not Garbo).

Ruby Keeler: Donate a part of your eyebrows to Marlene Dietrich who could very well use them.

Rudy Vallee: Consult a physician about your adenoids.

Bing Crosby: Eat less carbohydrates.—"Winchell Twins," Omaha, Neb.

He-Man Holt

I have a small picture of Jack Holt stuck in the corner of my mirror. I'm not a hero worshipper—I do not worship clay—but the personality behind it. I really marvel at his picture for this reason; at a distance his face looks extremely wild, like a lion's after having a big meal, and then close up he almost threatens you to come any closer. He's all the strongmen you read about—both good and bad. To me his face represents strength and I admire that in anyone. If I were an artist, I'd aspire to do Mr. Holt in oils. The picture would suggest solitude, quiet and, oh, what strength!—D. H., No address.

We're interested to know how YOU will answer these fifteen questions. The results of this questionnaire will be published in a future issue of MODERN SCREEN. Fill it out and send it to: Between You and Me, MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

1. The most beautiful star on the screen is.....
2. The most handsome man on the screen is.....
3. My favorite female star is.....
4. My favorite male star is.....
5. The best dressed woman on the screen is.....
6. The best dressed man on the screen is.....
7. The musical I've liked best to date is.....
8. The most enjoyable film I've seen recently is.....
9. My favorite team is.....
10. I'd like to see.....and.....teamed.
11. I'd like to see.....starred.
12. The "bit" player I like best is.....
13. I'd like to see more pictures with.....
14. My favorite comedian is.....
15. My favorite comedienne is.....

My name is.....

Address.....
(City) (State)

Is This Gratitude?

(Continued from page 41)

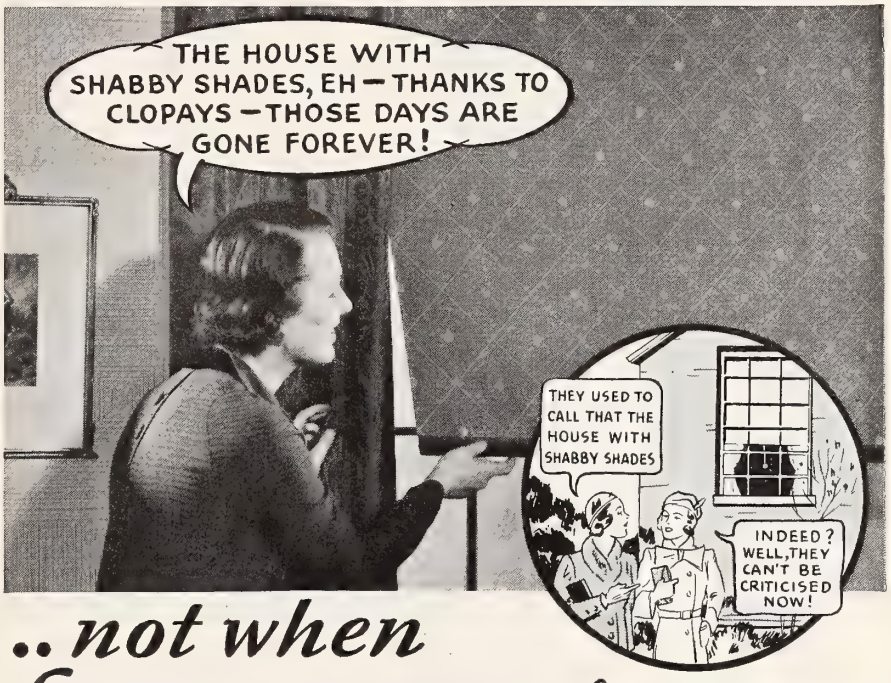
and venom filled his erstwhile cup of gratitude and spilled over in some mighty nasty remarks about the same producers who had kept him a star while his pictures were losing money. He intimated that there was a conspiracy against him and that the industry was ungrateful to him. He was so bitter in his denunciations that the publicity department kept interviewers from seeing him. And then he was given another chance—and Hollywood again was second only to Paradise.

CHARLIE BICKFORD was alreadv a stage star when he came to Hollywood—not a very brilliant star, maybe, but still a somebody. Why he ever condescended to accept the terrific salary Hollywood offered him is beyond anyone's ken. For he blasted the stupidity of producers, raved against their established methods of production, condemned the roles that were offered him, and went on salary strikes. It was all very amusing for awhile, but, finally, Hollywood lost patience—and Bickford lost his contract.

En passant, a word of advice to fan magazine writers: Don't attempt to interview Connie Bennett on that good old bromide, "What Hollywood Has Done for Me." I know a scribe who tried it once and was told, "Hollywood hasn't done a thing for me, except to give me money!"

Hollywood is used to it, Hollywood expects it, and Hollywood can take it! Hollywood has taken it on the chin from at least fifty per cent of the people whom it has showered with favors. Hollywood will probably go on taking it on the chin—for human nature is human nature, gratitude is rare, and Hollywood makes the mistake of pampering its favorites too greatly.

HOLLYWOOD finds its solace in the few who are loyal. For instance, there's Joan Crawford.



"Hollywood has given me everything I have in the world," she says—and says it with feeling. "I'm deeply grateful to the people who have liked me and I want to prove my gratitude in every way."

And what did she do but endow a private charity clinic in a great hospital and then spend a goodly portion of her Charming Josephine Hutchinson is now Mrs. James Townsend, and here is the happy bridegroom.

"No More Shabby, Cracked Shades at My Windows!"

..not when Lovely CLOPAY Shades are Only 15¢ EACH

"How deeply embarrassed I was when I accidentally overheard someone call my home 'the house with the shabby shades'! But what could I do? I simply couldn't afford to buy all the shades I needed. Luckily I found Clopays, the remarkable fibre window shades that cost only 15c each. Now there are no smarter, neater windows in town than mine. Clopays are simply wonderful. Not only all the popular plain colors, but so many lovely chintz patterns that harmonize with any decoration scheme. What amazing wear, too! Clopays actually outlast shades that cost me 3 or 4 times as much."

Clopays offer many features found in no other shades. Patented gummed strip makes attaching to old rollers easy. No tacks or tools. Patented creped texture makes them hang straight—roll straight—wear longer. Being solid fibre instead of filled cloth, Clopays will not crack, pinhole or ravel at the edges. No other shade regardless of price can give you all these features. Clopays are sold at all 5-and-10c stores and most neighborhood stores. Send 3c for color samples to Clopay Corporation, 1355 York St., Cincinnati, Ohio.

And . . .

"HOW DID I EVER KEEP HOUSE BEFORE I FOUND FABRAY?"

New FABRAY Gives You Every Advantage of Oilcloth at ⅓ to ½ Lower Cost!

And think of finding a revolutionary new kind of material that serves every purpose oilcloth can serve—does it as well or better—yet costs ⅓ to ½ less! There's real economy. FABRAY—another CLOPAY product—actually outdoes oilcloth. Has an oilcloth surface on a fibre backing. Looks, feels and wears like the best oilcloth but will not crack or peel even when creased because it has a solid fibre backing instead of flimsy cheesecloth. Many lovely new patterns. Comes in 46-inch width for tables, also 12-inch widths for shelves. See FABRAY at leading 5-and-10c stores, or send 10c for a 2½-yard roll of 12-inch shelving. State colors preferred.

CLOPAY CORPORATION, 1362 York St., Cincinnati, Ohio

You'll never know how BEAUTIFUL
you can be!

UNTIL YOU DISCOVER THIS SECRET OF MAKE-UP!

It isn't enough, today, that the color-tones of your various cosmetics match your own skin. The important thing is that they match each other! Powder, rouge and lipstick should be of complementary shades, so harmonized that they achieve a perfect Color Ensemble.

That's what you get when you use OUTDOOR GIRL Olive Oil Beauty Aids. Regardless of which shade of OUTDOOR GIRL Face Powder you choose, you can be sure of finding an OUTDOOR GIRL Lipstick and Rouge of the same tonal quality.

No clash of colors! No cheap, gaudy effect! Your make-up is free of all artificiality... natural. OUTDOOR GIRL Beauty Aids not only make your skin seem lovelier than ever before, but because of their exclusive Olive Oil base, they protect it, too!

At leading drug and department stores for only 50c. Also in handy trial sizes at your favorite ten-cent store. Mail the coupon for liberal samples.

POWDER

The only face powder with an Olive Oil base! Light and fluffy, yet clings for hours. Creates a youthful, transparent effect. No rice starch! No orris root! 7 smart shades.

ROUGE

Smooth and satiny in texture. Made with pure Olive Oil. Will not break or crumble. Lasts for hours. Pure, harmless colors. 7 skin-blending shades.

LIPSTICK

Goes on smoothly; spreads evenly. Prevents lips from chapping or cracking. Pure, harmless colors. Waterproof and indelible! 6 captivating skin-tints.

TUNE IN—SATURDAYS, 7:30 P. M., E. S. T.
"The Outdoor Girl Beauty Parade"
Over the Columbia Broadcasting System

OUTDOOR GIRL
OLIVE OIL BEAUTY AIDS

CRYSTAL CORPORATION, DEPT. 50-D
Willis Avenue, New York City

I enclose 10c. Please send me liberal trial packages of OUTDOOR GIRL Face Powder, Rouge and Lipstick. My complexion is Light ☐ Medium ☐ Dark ☐.

Name .....

Address .....

City ..... State .....

energy in seeing that needy patients were ensconced therein.

And there's Norma Shearer, who says: "Where else in the world could I have been given all of the things which have been given me here? I'd still be a nobody without the miracle of pictures. Grateful? I can't find words to express my gratitude or my sense of obligation to all the people whose favors have done so much for me!"

And there's a guy named Gable, who says, more simply: "I'm a fool for luck—and never think that I don't know it darn well!"

Grateful guests. And ungrateful guests.

Be careful how you answer that question. Would you be grateful?

Hollywood, in the light of its past experiences, has its doubts!

Strong-Minded Woman

(Continued from page 65)

that you are one player who dictates the terms of her contract. That is, certain parts of it. And the studio says 'Yes, ma'am.' Is that right? No little, dribbling vacations of a week-end, but weeks on end, and the privilege of spending them all, consecutively, in New York. That's the way your contract reads, isn't it?"

YES," she answered, through a clap of thunder. "Six months here and six months in New York. I do four pictures a year, and when they are done, I hurry to New York. But four are really too many. I'd like to do one or two, and do them awfully well. I think the arrangement of my time is quite nice, don't you?"

"But this time arrangement is novel, isn't it?" I asked as a mock Jupiter Pluvius knocked his storm clouds together. "No other actress has quite the same provision in her contract, has she?" I continued.

"I don't believe so," answered MacMahon. "You see I insisted upon it when my contract was signed. I made eleven pictures in Hollywood before I finally signed with Warner Brothers, ten of them for that company and one for Universal. Each time I came West because Mervyn LeRoy, the director, for some reason or other, liked my work. Each time I would be invited to sign a contract and each time I said, 'No, the distance is too far from New York, and New York is my home.'

"All of my interests are in New York. My husband, my family, my friends, my activities. As much as I like Hollywood, I could never utterly abandon New York and work out here. That was why we arranged this contract."

"If you are so fond of New York, Miss MacMahon," said I, gossiping like a fish wife, "what do you do for diversion in Hollywood?"

"Ride horses, and walk. There are nice hills in Brentwood, where I have a house. And I read."

"And in New York, how do you live?" I pried, shamelessly, editor, because I knew you'd be curious, too. I was, and I wanted to know all about her.

"In New York, I . . . well, I do about the same things. I walk, and read, and see my friends, and go to concerts and the theatre. And shop! I love to shop," MacMahon said with a rush of girlish enthusiasm.

"I love to buy things. Not clothes, but bits of embroidered linens, things like that. Our apartment in New York is full of discoveries I've made, and bought. I don't keep to period. That's too dull. But I am fond of Early American things, and some of the modern art. Not all of the latter."

You can see, editor, that life, and the shops, are full of infinite variety for MacMahon. The secret of this (and it is no secret at all, because like all well-married women her contentedness is a shining armor), is that MacMahon as Mrs. Clarence Stein, wife of a New York architect, is entirely happy.

Her life (and that may explain the smooth brilliance of her performance) is completely wrapped up in the brown-haired, pleasant-faced, forty-ish man, with glasses, to whom she has been married for a number of years. You ask about this man and whether she, with her flare for decorating, works with him in his craft, planning suitable interiors for his exteriors, and a warmth, a radiance, creeps into her tones (which are correctly Eastern, not Iowan, not Western). "No," she says, with a shake of her seal-brown head, and a little wall, invisible, but protective, arises. Behind this wall is her happiness, guarded carefully from prying outsiders. "He's very clever," she says. "And I am terribly proud of him."

MACMAHON is a strange blend of types. She is at once cool and distant; vivacious, with a giggle as infectious as a schoolgirl's; profoundly moved at the name of an excellent book; radiantly lovely at the mention of her husband. I have seen her walk, mink-clad and alone, into the studio's Green Room Café, and she looked as frostily poised as a duchess at a boat christening. On the set, this day, she was far from frosty. She was, at will, amused, a little bored, faintly embarrassed, even slightly shy. She samples all the human moods, and that's probably why she is forever turning in competent performances.

For four years she has been pursuing the even, uneventful life of a film actress who works in Hollywood and lives in New York. She does not bother much about local night spots, premières, gossip, but within the closely-knit community that is professional Hollywood, she manages to find a few congenial souls with whom to visit and dine.

She has travelled little and would like to travel more, and just because it seemed the correct thing to do, I asked her what was the most dramatic occurrence in her life. With amusement she gazed into the hurricane of the set, trees whipped almost to the ground in the intensity of the gale, thunder crashing. With that a bolt of artificial lightning spun down toward her and instinctively she threw her long, slim, expressive hands to her face. In a moment, they were down and she was laughing:

"That was, I think!" she said, as the rain continued in torrents. So you can see, editor, that strong-minded as she may be in some things, there are moments when MacMahon is just a weak woman.

The next moment she was on her sensible Oxford-clad feet, her right hand extended toward mine. Just thirty-five minutes had elapsed in the equinoxal display. "Good-bye," she said with a firm smile, and handclasp. "I hope I have given you a good story and that you have enough information about me." With these words she turned abruptly, decisively, and walked toward the rioting weather. And I stood in a puddle and watched her.

To My Wife, Bella!

(Continued from page 66)

keeps out petty irritations and annoyances which she knows would wear him out. In her, Paul Muni has his greatest asset.

She senses his every mood, his every whim. She knows them so well that she can see the storm approaching when no one else can even detect a cloud. She arranges all his interviews (an ordeal which he detests) without his knowledge, and informs him of them only five minutes before they take place. If he knew about an interview a day ahead, he would work himself up into a lather. Every reporter who interviews Paul Muni is warned that he will speak only on subjects which are of primary interest to him. He will talk about his travels; he'll talk about intellectual books; he'll talk about his work, but he'll glare or blow up if he's asked what kind of toothpaste he uses or what his favorite breakfast food is. Bella sees that he does not have to waste his time with the petty questions that other stars are bothered with.

NO other wife of an actor holds the position on the set that Bella Muni does. Her opinion counts more than the director's. Taken entirely for granted, she sits quietly by while her husband does a scene and watches every detail of his characterization. Make-up, portrayal, diction—all these and more must have her okay before the take is finished. At the end of every scene he turns to her and asks, "Okay, Bella?" If she says "Well, I think you can do better," the scene is taken over again. If her answer is, "Okay," then he knows he has done well, whether the director agrees or not. Directors and studio officials, he has observed, are all too often "yes-men," but Bella tells him the plain truth, and he knows that he can rely on her judgment.

You see, Paul Muni made a picture in Hollywood many years ago. It was called "Seven Faces" and though his characterizations were masterpieces, the picture itself was a flop. He vowed he would never return to make another one. He held fast to that promise until "Counsellor-At-Law," the play in which he scored his greatest success, again brought him to the attention of the motion picture producers. After much persuasion, he finally signed a contract. But he insisted that this time it must be on his own terms—two pictures a year. Whether it is in the contract or whether there is a tacit agreement to that effect, Bella Muni has the final say on them. And more than this, she chooses his vehicles as well. It was she who insisted that he make a light comedy like "Hi-Nellie!" after a tragedy like "The World Changes" so that he wouldn't become typed.

They lead an unpretentious life. Money in itself holds no interest for them. Their house is a simple one. It is not a huge mansion and it has no swimming pool. It is a home that has every comfort without being ostentatious. Their car is a moderately priced one. They eat simply and well. Bella still cooks the dishes that he like best at the Café Royal—sour cream salad and scrambled eggs. They like to travel—that is Muni does and Bella goes along just to be agreeable, like a good wife will. Mostly though, they share the same interests. Both like to read good books and both have simple tastes. Looking at them, and observing the way they live, one would never suspect that their income runs into four figures every week. Their scale of living is like that of any

Another family discovers the safe way to End CORN SUFFERING

The Safe, Scientific Way to End CORN SUFFERING

• If you are one of the thousands of corn sufferers who have tried ineffectual ways of getting rid of corns—or if you are one of those who still use the dangerous method of cutting or paring corns—we urge that you try safe, scientific Blue-Jay. For 35 years this easy, sure treatment has ended corn suffering for millions. It will do the same for you.

Blue-Jay stops the pain instantly. The soft, snug-fitting pad cushions the corn against painful shoe pressure. The pad is held securely in place by the Wet-Pruf adhesive strip (waterproof—soft kid-like finish—does not cling to stocking). Then Blue-Jay safe medication gently undermines the corn without your knowing it—and after 3 days you lift out the corn completely.

Every drugstore sells Blue-Jay—25c a package.

Read These Letters from Users

Nurses Must Have Easy Feet . . . Miss Sarah Tryeus, Media, Pa., says: "It was really due to Blue-Jay that I am now a registered nurse. About a month after entering training my feet started. I got larger shoes—that didn't help. When I heard of Blue-Jay I got a box. And oh, the blessed relief! After that, nursing was a real joy."

Even the Worst Corns Disappeared . . . "My husband is an ex-serviceman, and due to the long marches in ill-fitting shoes, his feet were covered with hard corns and soft corns. I purchased a box of Blue-Jays. Gradually, even the worst corns disappeared until now he is seldom bothered, though on his feet continually."—Mrs. Andrew Brown, Portland, Ore.

Fast . . . Effective . . . Comfortable. Writes Mrs. Claude M. Breneman, Hudson, Wisconsin: "For removing corns, I have never found any remedy equal to Blue-Jay. I like the speed with which they relieve all pain and soreness, and their efficiency in removing every trace of a corn. I like their perfect fit, which enables me to be comfortable and inconspicuous in my daintiest shoes."

"Bon Voyage now means Blue-Jay," writes Miss Ruth Jacoby, teacher of Alton, Illinois. "Among the prized souvenirs of my trip across the Atlantic this summer is a Blue-Jay Corn Plaster. From France to Italy, Holland, Wales, we had many interesting experiences—Blue-Jay, by protecting my feet, gave me a confidence in well-being and carefree enjoyment."

BLUE-JAY
BAUER & BLACK SCIENTIFIC
CORN PLASTER

EXERCISE BOOK FREE Illustrates valuable exercises for foot health and beauty. Also free booklet "For Better Feet," contains helpful information for foot sufferers. Address Bauer & Black, 2500 South Dearborn St., Chicago. (Pasting coupon on government postcard saves postage.)

MS-4

Name.....

Street.....City.....

© The Kendall Company

The Best Groomed Woman in Hollywood?

Mary Biddle nominates three of Hollywood's most glamorous actresses for the title of the best groomed woman in the film capitol. The beauteous Norma Shearer is first on the list. Turn to page 16 for the other nominees, and for advice on how to acquire that just-stepped-out-of-a-bandbox look. Personal daintiness is of supreme importance to the woman who would star in the role of business woman, wife or sweetheart.

You will want the Pre-Easter Beauty Bulletin Miss Biddle has prepared for you, so fill out the coupon at the conclusion of the article.

Read Mary Biddle Every Month in fairly well-to-do business man's. Both enjoy good music—Muni has a passion for the violin, and it is his greatest pleasure to pack up both wife and fiddle and spend a few quiet days in some out-of-the-way corner where no one will molest them.

MODERN SCREEN

THEY take no part in the gay, noisy life of Hollywood. The scandals and divorces have not even touched them. They live in a world apart from all of that. They have made very few real friends there. For him, his wife is companion enough. What greater compliment can any man pay a woman?

Here is an incident which I think best illustrates the utter unpretentiousness of Bella Muni. The last time they arrived in New York, she wore a seal coat and carried one of mink on her arm. Photographers were waiting to take pictures. Muni's press agent admonished Bella to take off the seal coat and wear the mink. But Mrs. Muni demurred.

"Everyone knows I've a mink coat," she said. "Why should I bother wearing it?" But the press agent insisted that the public demanded mink coats of their stars' wives.

"All right then, if it will make you happier," said Bella good-naturedly, "but I'm sure it won't make any difference in Muni's acting whether I wear a seal coat or a mink coat." She changed from the seal to the mink, just as she does many things that she doesn't want to do—to be agreeable.

It is Muni's ambition to get enough money together to be able to produce and act in plays that please him whether they happen to be box-office successes or not. Bella does not say whether she would like to give up her post of manager of her husband's very successful screen career, but when the day arrives that will see Muni realizing his ambition, you will doubtless find Bella at his side, still smiling, still helping with the casting, advising him about his role—still content to be his silent partner in anything that will make Muni happy. Bella has made sacrifices before and I'll wager she'll still be good at it ten years from now.

It takes a mighty big and unselfish character to give up one's own identity and center it upon someone else's even though that someone happens to be one's own husband. But Muni's success, and the happiness that he and Bella have achieved together, have proven her choice of ten years ago a wise one.

The Most Romantic Story Ever Told

(Continued from page 74)

public back to the theatres but a great novelty.

Yet when William Fox and his chief engineer, Theodore W. Chase, launched the sound-track-on-film idea and Warner Brothers introduced the disk recordings, other film magnets heard the squeaks and squawks, shook their heads nobly and said, "It isn't good enough for our public."

HOW high the movies had flown! Not good enough for the public, indeed. Yet the public had flocked to see "The Great Train Robbery," when the film was so bad that it looked as if it were raining indoors and the actors jumped around the sets like monkeys. But the movies had, since these early days, grown fat and sleek. They were sated with lavishness and expensive mountings and, as always, they ignored the fact that you, you and you—the public—wanted something different, something completely novel.

Oh, at first you protested violently that you had loved the comfort and calm of the silent movies. You said that this new screaming from the screen annoyed you.

Will you ever forget hearing Conrad Nagel suddenly lisp from the screen, "Bet-thy, oh Bet-thy?" The noise seemed to come from his vest pocket. Nagel, being one of the few Hollywood actors who could speak lines, had been hastily grabbed for the part. But his exceedingly presentable diction was spoiled by mechanical imperfections.

For the most part, the early talking films were comedy shorts—acts of old-time vaudevillians—and news reels. Shortly thereafter, talking sequences were added to the silent films in which, with a noise that nearly knocked you out of your seats, the actors, who had been mute before, suddenly burst into loud dialogue.

Conservative theatre owners, thinking that the talkies were merely a passing novelty, refused at first to spend money on "wiring for sound." However, when they contemplated the empty seats and then looked across the street at the other theatres, whose managers had greater vision and were turning customers away, they soon fell in step.

As always, everything happens quickly in Hollywood. Just a few months after the coming of sound, the whole town was in an upheaval.

THE physical aspect of Hollywood changed. The old rambling "silent" stages (which had never been silent) were torn down and great, cool, padded edifices were erected in which the drop of a pin sounded like the report of a gun.

Hundreds of song writers were imported to Hollywood during the "musical" flurry. And when musicals were—too quickly—overdone, almost as many hundreds went back to Tin Pan Alley.

When the talking pictures were mewing in their cribs, one star arose to astonish the world. His success was an accident—like the success of so many. When a story called "The Jazz Singer" was bought by Warner Brothers as their most pretentious bid for talkie fame, George Jessel was approached as a candidate for stardom in it. But something went wrong during the negotiations and Al Jolson was given the contract instead.

Immediately upon the release of "The Jazz Singer" Jolson was the man of the hour, the white hope of the talkies, an entertainer snatched from Broadway's declining show business. There was more excitement over Jolson than over any other star since Garbo. He actually gave the talkies the terrific impetus needed to make the producers go on.

The talkies not only created stars. They snatched the crowns from stars, too. Emil Jannings, deemed the greatest character actor of them all, was forced to go back to his home in Germany (although he was Brooklyn born) because of the thick accent which it was thought, would not record.

TALKIES threw certain stars into the ash-heap of obscurity. It brought others forward miraculously. Bessie Love had been in pictures since 1918. She was, for several years prior to talkies, considered a has-been. She had been playing in vaudeville—the last stand of the star on the way out. But in vaudeville she learned to sing, dance and play the ukulele and when M-G-M was looking about for a girl to appear in "Broadway Melody," one of their first great musicals, Bessie Love presented herself. Her come-back was spectacular and golden.

Bebe Daniels suddenly blossomed forth with a beautiful singing voice and was given a place in the sun. Conrad Nagel —a "creditable" leading man for years— was at once so much in demand, because he had had stage experience and could "talk," that he could hardly get from studio to studio fast enough. And Betty Compson who—after her popularity in "The Miracle Man" had waned—had resorted to "quickies," was discovered anew and was in constant demand.

Maurice Chevalier came from Paris, to fight for honors with Lawrence Tibbett, the singing son of a California sheriff. Warner Brothers kept John Barrymore under lock and key. Stage stars, lured by fantastic stories, boarded the Century. Some of them clicked and remained to make the movies something of which to be proud. Some of them didn't click—because you didn't like them—and they returned to a sadly depleted Broadway, making sniffish remarks about those too, too childish movies. Beauty took a back seat, to watch talent and training and artistry succeed.

The great stars of the silent days who really had pluck and will power—we think especially of Shearer and Garbo and Crawford—buckled down and learned how to speak lines. Not one of those actresses had ever had stage experience, remember, and they went to the top in the talkies. Determination will do things after all.

When we think back on the best pictures which were made ten—even five years ago, and contrast them with the best ones which are being made today, we become increasingly indignant with the snobbish Smart Alecs who persist in regarding the movies as the poor white trash of the arts. Of "The Barretts," "Of Human Bondage" and "The House of Rothschild" and "David Copperfield" and "Lives of a Bengal Lancer." "Broadway Bill." "It Happened One Night." The great musical productions—fantastic and furbelowed, if you will, but so polished in every mechanical detail!

What will be next? What will happen when once more you demand something different? Talkies have reached a high state of perfection. Where do we go from here, from here—where do you want them to go?

Half industry, half art—all make-believe. The history of the movies is certainly the most romantic story ever told.

The smiling young man with Marian Marsh is Carl Brisson, Jr., son of the popular Danish actor. Doesn't Marian look sweet?

Your Eyes... LIKE A PICTURE... Need a Frame

TO BRING OUT THEIR FULL BEAUTY

Eyes are like a picture without a frame . . . dull and uninteresting . . . if lashes are pale and scanty . . . if lids are colorless or if brows are scraggly.

BLACK, BROWN AND BLUE

So . . . transform your eyelashes into the appearance of long, dark, lustrous fringe, instantly and harmlessly with the famous Maybelline mascara. Blend a soft, colorful shadow on your eyelids with Maybelline Eye Shadow, and see how the color and sparkle of your eyes are instantly intensified. Form graceful, expressive eyebrows with the smooth-marking Maybelline Eyebrow Pencil.

BLUE, BROWN, BLUE-GREY, VIOLET AND GREEN

BLACK AND BROWN

BLACK OR WHITE BRISTLES

Keep your lashes soft and silky with the pure Maybelline Eyelash Tonic Cream, and be sure to brush and train your eyebrows and lashes with the specially designed Maybelline Eyebrow Brush. Maybelline preparations are approved by leading authorities for absolute harmlessness. Their sixteen-year reputation for highest quality is your guarantee of complete satisfaction. Introductory sizes of all Maybelline eye beauty preparations can be had at any leading 10c store.

COLORLESS

Maybelline

. . EYE BEAUTY AIDS . .

Revealed!

THE SECRET OF HANDS THAT CREATE COMPLIMENTS

Hands, velvety smooth, that excite flattering comment, are yours surprisingly easy, by using Chamberlain's Lotion. It quickly youthifies your hands, makes them white, lovely. Containing 13 different, imported oils, it revitalizes the skin, restores beauty. Clear liquid, not gummy, Chamberlain's Lotion is absorbed in 37 seconds without bothersome stickiness. Let your own hands prove what it can do. Two sizes—at all drug and department stores.

USE THIS COUPON

Chamberlain Laboratories, Des Moines, Iowa.
Please send free trial size of your lotion.
M.M.-2
Name.....
Address.....

Chamberlain's Lotion

BLACKHEADS!

NEVER SQUEEZE BLACKHEADS. IT CAUSES SCARS, INFECTION!

Dissolve Blackheads scientifically with amazing KLEERPLEX WASH. This wonderful NEW DISCOVERY contains 5 scientific ingredients. Also refines Large Pores, stops embarrassing Greasiness, "Shine". Clears Muddy, Sallow, Tanned Skin. Has marvelous medicated pore purifying powers. Gets at the cause. QUICKLY! SAFELY! RENEWS! LIGHTENS! BEAUTIFIES your skin. Gives you that clean-cut attractive look. SEE INSTANT IMPROVEMENT. No chemicals. No staying home. A guaranteed pure natural product, approved by Health Authorities and thousands of happy users—Men and Women. Nothing like it! Stop wasting time and money on ordinary products. Your skin deserves the best. Get your 2 mos. supply of Kleerplex Wash TODAY. Just send $1.—(plus 10 postage) direct to KLEERPLEX (Dept. MR10) 1 W. 34th St., N. Y. C., or pay postman (plus C. O. D. charge). Outside U. S. $1.25 and no C. O. D.s. MONEY BACK GUARANTEE! (Copyright 1934 Kleerplex.)

Hair OFF Face Lips Chin

Unloved

I once looked like this. Ugly hair on face...unloved...discouraged. Nothing helped. Depilatories, waxes, liquids...even razors failed. Then I discovered a simple, painless, inexpensive method. It worked! Thousands have won beauty and love with the secret. My FREE Book, "How to Overcome Superfluous Hair," explains the method and proves actual success. Mailed in plain envelope. Also trial offer. No obligation. Write Mlle. Annette Lanzette, P.O. Box 4040, Merchandise Mart, Dept. 139, Chicago.

MY EYES ARE KEPT Clean and Clear

by using Murine daily. It soothes and refreshes tired, irritated eyes. Dependable for 40 years.

ASK YOUR DRUGGIST

MURINE FOR YOUR EYES

Marriage of Convenience

(Continued from page 49)

"It's a little wild, but I like it." And she ran the smooth white palm of her hand along a flat chromium surface, looked at it and admired aloud, "See, not a speck of dust."

Maxine met Bartlett Saunders when it became inevitable that talking pictures were here for good. She had submitted to a voice test, and even she had been bewildered by the nasal raspings which had resulted. Indeed, it was later told that she had rushed from the projection room with sobs tearing at her slender body, screaming at the top of her lungs, "I'm through. Oh, My Gawd, I'm ruined." And had not come back to the studio for a week.

When she did, Abe Goldstein sent for Bartlett Saunders, who also had been treated to a running of the test.

"You t'ink you can make a fine talker from Mexine, Mr. Saunders?" Abe asked.

"If Miss Vane will put herself completely in my hands," he said, "for a month—six months, perhaps—I believe that I shall be able to correct the—er—defects, if I may say so, of her voice and English."

"I'll do anythin' you ast," she murmured huskily.

"'Anything you ask,' Miss Vane," Bartlett corrected. But he laughed, too, and his eyes crinkled pleasantly at the corners. Maxine thought, "He's a funny duck, but I like him."

In learning to speak the King's English, Maxine Vane applied the same unflagging persistence which had lifted her from the station she might so easily have inherited. She took his criticism avidly, was pleased as a schoolgirl when she won his praise, grateful for the time he gave her. She took him to her home, even tried once to give him money for what he was doing.

"But you see," he said, "I'm being paid by the studio."

"That!" she cried. "That measly . . ."

"Stipend," he supplied.

"Stipend," she repeated. "What does that mean?"

"A salary that affords a bare livelihood," he quoted.

"Livelihood!" she snorted. "Why, it ain't even cigarette money!"

"Isn't," he corrected.

"Isn't, then. You've got to let me do something for you. Don't you see, you're making it possible for me to go on and make a living?"

"I hope so," he said. "But you don't understand, Miss Vane."

"Don't call me 'Miss Vane'. Don't you like me? Everybody, from the juicers up, calls me Maxine."

"All right. It's Maxine, then," he said, and blushed. "You don't understand. I couldn't take money from you."

"You're a funny little guy," she said, but she never again tried to force money upon him.

HE stayed on the set with her all during the shooting of the first picture she made under the terror of that new monster, the microphone. Each line she spoke she had rehearsed many times for his private criticism. He meticulously extracted the superfluous "r" from such words as "boil" and "foil" in her speech, and insisted upon it in "verse" and "first." That was easy compared to the hard "g" which was the last to go from words like "long" and "sing." She hung onto those "g's" like a bull pup to a street urchin's pants, but he finally wrenched them loose from her vocabulary. It was not until long after her first picture was released that he even mentioned the nicer refinements of the letter "a." Which no one in the studio would have known or cared about, but Saunders was determined that Maxine's speech should be as nearly perfect as he could make it.

No one knew how much or how little Saunders knew of Maxine's personal life. He never mentioned it to anyone, though each succeeding suppliant for her affection was subject to widespread and exaggerated discussion at the studio. His own dog-like but obvious devotion to her came under the microscope too, though he pretended not to be aware of it. Once one of the writers on the lot, eager for information of the star's love life, said to him,

"You know Maxine Vane pretty well, don't you?"

"I have that honor," Saunders answered.

"Is there any truth in the rumor that she's having an affair with Michael Robertson? If she is, somebody ought to warn her—his wife's a fiend out of hell."

Saunders drew himself up to his scant five-feet six-inches and withered his interrogator with a professorial glance,

"I'm sure I'm not interested in Miss Vane's personal affairs any more than she might be interested in mine. What she does with her life is quite her own affair. Certainly it is none of mine. Nor yours, as I see it."

That remark travelled like lightning about the studio—even to Maxine Vane's own dressing room. It elevated Bartlett Saunders, voice teacher, to an eminence of which he was innocently unaware. Yet there was a simple dignity about the little man that stopped wagging tongues when he entered a room, and he never heard the informal title one of the wags gave him—"Galahad to a Lost Lady."

Nor did Maxine Vane. For Maxine, whatever her morals, was loyal to a fault, and her importance to the studio made the job of anyone who might slander one of her friends as shaky as a Balkan throne. And that Bartlett Saunders was perhaps her best friend Maxine Vane never doubted, even though there were a great many things about him she did not understand. That matter of his not taking money from her, for instance. Almost everyone else took money from Maxine. Money—or other things. And Saunders asked nothing, expected nothing, even refused what she had to give. A funny little man, but she wouldn't tolerate anyone else saying that.

It was some three years after they had become friends that Maxine Vane met Michael Robertson, an English author, recently imported by the studio. Robertson came to Hollywood, alone, and took an apartment for the term of his contract at the Wilshire Arms Apartments where, it was said, he would be joined later by his wife, a fairly prominent English actress.

It happened that Maxine was quite fancy free at the time. She really took him up—though none of her friends would have believed it had she told them, so she did not tell them—because she thought it would be good for her speech to be around a cultured Englishman and listen to him. Besides, he seemed a good enough sort. She had never known any Englishmen before, except a few impoverished members of an entourage left in Hollywood by a hastily departing literary exponent of sin on a tiger skin.

But Robertson was not that kind. He was a gentleman, and it flattered Maxine, too, that he liked her. Just how much or why he liked her, no one ever knew, but it was presumed, by those in the know, that her flamboyancies, her ready, if somewhat vulgar wit, amused him. Sometimes an onlooker would catch him gazing at Maxine, flashing in her satins, ermines and diamonds with the long ruby pendant at her throat, as if he simply could not believe what he saw. He was to be in Hollywood for only a few months, and if this were Hollywood—well, why not make the most of it?

He would not have introduced her to his friends in England except as a curiosity, but here she was accepted, indeed, was something of a social catch. And none of Michael Robertson's friends lived in Hollywood.

Maxine went everywhere with him, to openings at Grauman's, Wednesday night dances at the Grove, parties at Malibu. It was even said (gossip is seldom whispered in Hollywood) that he was seen leaving Maxine's mountain home, upon occasion, early in the morning. Of course, mornings in California are often foggy, and it is rather difficult to identify anyone at a distance of a hundred feet before ten o'clock.

IT was a Tuesday night that Michael Robertson told Maxine his wife was arriving on The Chief the following Saturday.

"I hope you understand, Maxine," he said, "there can't be any more of this—this sort of thing, I'm afraid."

"You needn't be afraid," Maxine answered.

"You've been 'swell,' isn't that the word? I shan't forget you."

"Let's not go into that. You didn't seduce me, you know."

"Good girl."

She went up to him and kissed him lightly on the mouth, threw her furs about her shoulders, and, without another word, left.

That would be the last of Michael Robertson. That should have been the last of Michael Robertson.

She was at home, of all places, and dozing, at nine o'clock Thursday night when Bill Wilson, head of the publicity department, called her on the telephone.

"Maxie," he said, "I'm down at the foot of the hill. I've got to see you right away. If there's anyone there, get rid of him."

"Listen, Bill," she said, "I'm dead. I can't have you coming up here tonight. I'll leave a bottle of Scotch on the doorstep and you come get it and go away. Do you hear?"

"Can it, Maxie. This is important. I'll be right up."

Five minutes later he arrived.

"What the hell?" she said as he brushed past her and into the room. "Now that you're here you can take off your hat and coat."

She saw that he was excited, and reached for her purse. That usually helped any emergency.

"If you need money, Bill, why of course . . ."

"It isn't that. It's that so-and-so's wife."

"I don't know so-and-so," Maxine said, "but you have my interest."

"That—that Robertson's. She's going to sue him."

"So what?"

"So you're going to be named co-respondent."

"That's a nice name. This should be exciting."

Bill Wilson exploded: "Exciting! Say, for God's sake, Maxie, don't you know this is serious? She's arriving tomorrow night,

Read this Glorious News about Gray Hair!

A Startling New Development
now makes coloring gray hair no more trouble than a manicure! No more costly than a jar of good face cream! Yet transforms gray hair with youthful lustre...We invite you to TEST IT FREE in 10 short minutes on a single lock from your hair . . . Read this unusual news. Then mail the coupon and find real freedom from gray.

Now, in an unheard of short space of time, you can transform the gray in your hair into youthful lustre and loveliness. You can start this morning and before evening the gray in your hair will be gone. You can do it easily, quickly, yourself at home. No experience needed. No "skin-test" required. Medical authorities pronounce it SAFE—harmless to hair and scalp.

Just the three simple steps above are necessary. No delay or waiting except for the hair to dry.

No matter what the natural color of your hair, (black, brown, auburn, reddish, or blonde) Mary T. Goldman's new method blends with natural shade so evenly that detection need never be feared. It will not wash out, fade, nor rub off on clothing and linens. You can wave or curl your hair just as always.

This new method was developed by a leading scientist after special research. His results place gray hair coloration on an entirely new plane. You are not asked to take our word for it, nor to believe a single statement in this advertisement without a fair, free trial.

Send us the coupon below. We will supply you FREE with a sufficient quantity in an unmarked package to test on a small lock snipped from your hair. You can judge the results for yourself.

If you prefer, your druggist or department store can supply you with the full-sized bottle for complete treatment. Money-back guarantee.

Mail the coupon now. The day you receive your FREE Single Lock Test Package, you will realize that your gray hair problem is ended for good.

THE NEW IMPROVED
Mary T. Goldman
COLOR FOR GRAY HAIR

FOR FREE TEST PACKAGE

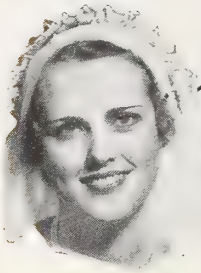
MARY T. GOLDMAN ✓ ✓ 2393 Goldman Bldg. ✓ St. Paul, Minn.
Please send me your FREE Single Lock Test Package as checked below.



Name.....

Street.....

City.....State.....

CHECK COLOR OF HAIR ✓ ✓ ☐ Black ☐ Medium Brown ☐ Auburn and Reddish ☐ Dark Brown ☐ Light Brown ☐ Blonde

Constipated Since Her Marriage

Finds Relief At Last-In Safe ALL-VEGETABLE METHOD

IT DATED from about the time she was married—her trouble with intestinal sluggishness, chronic tiredness, nervousness and headaches. Nothing gave more than partial relief until she tried a product containing a balanced combination of natural plant and vegetable laxatives, Nature's Remedy (NR Tablets). The first dose showed her the difference. She felt so much better immediately—more like living.

Your own common sense tells you an all-vegetable laxative is best. You've probably heard your doctor say so. Try NR's today. Note how refreshed you feel. Note the natural action, but the thorough cleansing effect. NR's are so kind to your system—so quickly effective in clearing up colds, biliousness, headaches. And they're non-habit forming. The handy 25 tablet box only 25c at any drug store.

FREE 1935 Calendar-Thermometer, beautifully designed in colors and gold. Also samples TUMS and NR. Send stamp for postage and packing to A. H. LEWIS CO., Desk 148DZ, St. Louis, Mo.

Nature's Remedy NR TO-NIGHT TOMORROW ALRIGHT GET A 25¢ BOX

"TUMS" Quick relief for acid indigestion, sour stomach, heartburn. Only 10c.

IF YOU HAVE GRAY HAIR and DON'T LIKE a MESSY MIXTURE.... then write today for my FREE TRIAL BOTTLE

As a Hair Color Specialist with forty years' European American experience, I am proud of my Color Imparter for Grayness. Use it like a hair tonic. Wonderfully GOOD for the scalp and dandruff; it can't leave stains. As you use it, the gray hair becomes a darker, more youthful color. I want to convince you by sending my free trial bottle and book telling All About Gray Hair.
ARTHUR RHODES, Hair Color Expert, Dept. 3, LOWELL, MASS.

Roll Your FAT Away

NO DIET • NO MEDICINES • NO EXERCISES •

AN AMAZING invention called Rollette, developed in Rochester, Minnesota, makes it possible for you to rid yourself of unsightly pounds of fat and have a beautiful, slender form. This remarkable patented device takes off fat quickly from any part of your body without strenuous diets, dangerous drugs, exercise. Leaves the flesh firm and gives a natural healthy glow to the skin. Makes you feel years younger.

A FEW MINUTES A DAY ROLLS FAT AWAY

Take off many inches from the spots where you want to reduce most. ROLLETTE is an effective, scientific principle for reducing which is receiving the approval of physicians everywhere. Just send name and address for Trial Offer—Today FREE

Rollette Co., 3826 N. Ashland Av. Dept. 201 Chicago, Illinois

ALICE WHITE Universal Film Star

Harold Lloyd is an interested bystander while Glenda Farrell, left, tells a bit of gossip to Mildred Davis Lloyd and Marian Nixon Seiter. This group was snapped by Scotty at a recent party at the Trocadero.

and it'll be in Saturday morning's papers—I just got the tip from one of the boys on the Examiner. We can't let 'em do it. Abie Goldstein's having fits right this minute, tearing his hair out in chunks. We've got to do something."

"All right. You're the bright boy. What is there to do?"

"Do?" he cried. "It's not up to me. It's you who've got to do it. And there's just one thing you can do—get married—fast!"

Maxine laughed. "Bill, you always were funny, but I never knew quite how funny before. Tell me some more of your jokes."

"You'll think it's funny when your contract's cancelled."

"Still joking, eh?"

"The devil I am." Wilson was shouting now. "You get into that kind of a headline and Goldstein will take advantage of that morality clause so quick you won't know where you've landed."

Maxine had forgotten that clause in her contract. Nobody paid any attention to those things. They were just in there to keep the Hays office quiet. But, true enough, they were in every Hollywood contract. Still . . .

"Listen, Bill," she said, "I'm too valuable a property for Abie to do me that way. My pictures make too much money. He wouldn't dare."

"He'd dare. Who knows how much money your pictures would make after a scandal like that?" Words failed him for a moment and he paced up and down the room. "Maxie, why do you go and get yourself in such a mess?"

"That's my business."

"It's not any more. It's mine and Abie Goldstein's and Will Hays', and it will be the business of every paper in this country Saturday morning. Unless you get married tomorrow."

"All right. Suppose I do get married. What good will it do? I'm not saying I will, mind you. But if I should."

"Why, it'll fix everything up. You get married tomorrow, see? Mrs. Robertson arrives, with the Saturday morning papers announcing your marriage. What chance has she got to name you as co-respondent in the face of a romantic elopement and wedding bells. It's a cinch!"

"But I don't know anybody I'd marry. Nobody'd want to marry me." The whole thing was so ridiculous, so like a nightmare. And it was true, she didn't want to marry anybody. She hadn't wanted to marry anybody for years. She knew what marriage was. Hadn't most of her friends been married three or four times?

Wilson thought that at last she was listening to reason, and jumped in now that he had the advantage:

"There's plenty of men would jump at the chance. And Lord, you don't have to stay married. A little Reno divorce between pictures in four or five months—incompatibility, wife-beating or something—and everything's fine. It may cost us a few thousand, but what the hell? It'll be worth it."

"But I don't know a soul." It was so mad to be awakened at nine o'clock at night and be told that she had to get married. It was so crazy to be thinking over all the men she knew, counting them over on her fingers, trying to pick one of them as a husband, that she began to giggle. Of course, she did not intend to go through with the thing, but it was funny to think about.

Wilson was looking at her quizzically, a little disgusted with her mirth, when she saw a light dawn in his eyes. She stopped laughing.

"Don't tell me," she said, "that I'm in at the birth of an idea in that colossal brain of yours?"

"Maxie!" he cried, leaping from the steel-backed chair. "I've got it! I've got it! Oh, baby, it's perfect."

"You tell me. Let me be the judge."

"Why—Bartlett Saunders! He's nuts about you, has been for years. It'll set him up, too, make a man of him."

Maxine stiffened and glared at him. "Stop that right now," she said. "Right now, you hear? I won't even listen to such a suggestion. Why, he's—he's the only decent man I know."

"Sure he's decent," Wilson said. "He's perfect. He'll be only too glad to do it for you. Where's the telphone?"

"Who're you going to call?"

"Goldstein."

AFTERWARDS we always know what we should have done. Maxine knew a few minutes later that she should not have allowed Wilson to use the telephone. She had been in tight spots before and had always mastered them somehow, and she thought she was doing the right thing now.

So she left Wilson completing the call, dashed out to the garage in her negligée, backed out her roadster, and slid quietly down the mountain road. She did not stop, did not even think very much until she drew up in front of the little bungalow court where she knew Bartlett Saunders lived. She only hoped she had reached there before Wilson or Goldstein had got him on the telephone.

She had not.

Saunders, in a black dressing gown, greeted her.

"I was expecting you, Maxine," he said.

"They've called you." She sank into the one easy chair in the small room.

She was silent a moment. There was so much she wanted to say, yet she did not know how to begin. While she waited Saunders came over and stood in front of her, shyly took her hand.

"They've hurt you, haven't they? You're afraid. Please don't be."

She looked up at him, and suddenly she saw him through a blur, her arms were around his thin waist, and she was sobbing.

"You're so good," she wept. "You'd let them do this to you. You'd marry me to save me."

He stroked her tawny hair shyly, like a boy. "Of course I would. I will," he said, "if you'll have me."

That made her sob the harder. "If I'll have you!" she cried out. "No, you deserve someone fine and splendid, and noble like you are, not a—a—"

"Hush!" he whispered. "Please don't say those things."

"But I will! I won't let them make a fool of you. What do I care for a contract? I don't need any more money. And I don't owe Goldstein anything. I've made enough for him."

SHE suddenly realized that the doorbell was ringing, that it had been ringing for quite awhile. "Now remember, when they come," she warned, pulling herself to her feet, "you're not to let them do this to you."

The doorbell jangled again. "Leave it all to me," he said.

He started for the door, but she pulled him back, and looked at him rather fiercely, her eyes on a level with his own, her negligée gathered close about her.

"Before they come," she blurted out, "I want you to know I think you're the finest man I've ever known." And kissed him on the mouth, shyly, like a girl kissing her first lover.

He turned from her and opened the door. He let them in, Wilson and Abe Goldstein. They were red of face and puffing from the excitement.

"So you're here," said Wilson. "The Lord be praised."

"Listen, Abe," Maxine began, but Saunders interrupted. There was something rather magnificent in his voice, a ring of authority.

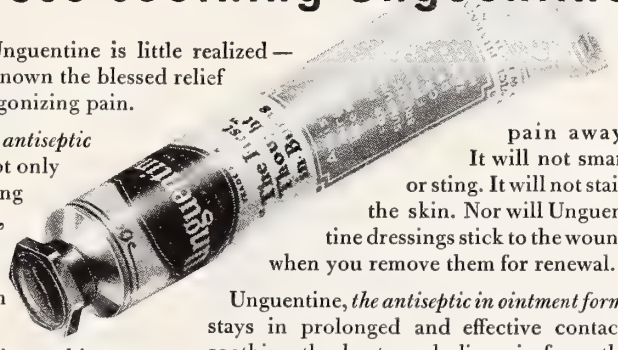
"Maxine and I are ready whenever you gentlemen are," he said.

They were married in a little town in Arizona at six o'clock the next morning, after a justice of the peace had been routed out of bed. Abe Goldstein and Bill Wilson were witnesses. After it was over Goldstein said to Saunders: "We'll make it right by you. You'll be rewarded."

"I have been rewarded already, Mr. Goldstein. Here is my reward."

They say now that something has happened to Maxine Vane, that she is not the same woman she was. There is a sincerity and a tenderness in her work before the camera—perhaps you've noticed—that was never there before.

And she has eyes for no man except funny looking little Bartlett Saunders, whom she worships. She says now that she is happy for the first time, that, at last, she knows what peace and contentment and devotion really mean. They aren't empty words any longer. And for that she is thankful to Hollywood.



Because it could never have happened anywhere else.

pain stops

and burns and wounds heal quickly when you use soothing Unguentine

The unique feature of Unguentine is little realized—even by those who have known the blessed relief it brings in moments of agonizing pain.

Unguentine is powerfully antiseptic and germicidal. Thus, it not only stops the searing, stabbing pain of a burn or wound, but destroys any germs that may be present and prevents new germs from getting in.

pain away. It will not smart or sting. It will not stain the skin. Nor will Unguentine dressings stick to the wound when you remove them for renewal.

But more: Unguentine is soothing, non-irritating. It promotes healing. Under its protection, the hurt area heals rapidly, naturally . . . without forming an ugly scar.

Unguentine, the antiseptic in ointment form, stays in prolonged and effective contact, soothing the hurt, excluding air from the sensitive area, and safeguarding against infection and dread re-infection.

A SOOTHING ANTISEPTIC

For burns, scalds, cuts, scrapes, scratches, pimples, irritations, any skin injury.

Apply Unguentine at once. Children do not object to it—for it doesn't hurt, but takes the

CONTAINS PARAHYDRECIN

Unguentine contains powerful antiseptic ingredients, notably, Parahydrecin. This remarkable substance is destructive to germs in a dilution as great as 1 part to 10,000 parts yet does not harm or irritate human or animal tissue. Parahydrecin, the discovery of the Norwich laboratories, is exclusively confined to Norwich products: Unguentine, Norforms and Norwich Nose Drops. No other products contain it. Remember that.

Unguentine

The Norwich Pharmacal Company, makers of Unguentine offer a variety of other medicine cabinet necessities bearing the famous Norwich seal. They are of known high standard and uniformity.

1885 Fiftieth Norwich Anniversary 1935

FIFTY YEARS IN THE SERVICE OF BETTER HEALTH

Don't let an UNSIGHTLY SKIN

rob you of ROMANCE, HAPPINESS

DO MEN LOOK your way—or do they look away? An attractive complexion, naturally fresh, unmarred by sallowness and ugly blotches unlocks the door to the romance every woman wants. Thousands of happy women have regained the fresh skin of their childhood with Stuart's Calcium Wafers. Magic, they call it. But there's nothing magic about it. Stuart's Calcium Wafers simply rid the system of bodily wastes and supply the system with the little calcium nature needs to create a healthy, glowing skin! Even stubborn cases often show marked improvement in a few days. Isn't it worth a trial?

STUART'S CALCIUM WAFERS

AT ALL DRUG STORES, 10c AND 60c

TYPEWRITER ½ Price

Easy Terms
Only 10c a Day

Save over ½ on all standard office models. Also portables at reduced prices.

SEND NO MONEY

All late models completely refinished like brand new. FULLY GUARANTEED. Big free catalog shows actual machines in full colors. Lowest prices. Send at once.

Free course in typing included.

10-day Trial

International Typewriter Exch., 231 W. Monroe St. Dept. 461, Chicago

DEAFNESS IS MISERY

Many people with defective hearing and Head Noises enjoy Conversation, Movies, Church and Radio, because they use Leonard Invisible Ear Drums which resemble Tiny Megaphones fitting in the Ear entirely out of sight. No wires, batteries or head piece. They are inexpensive. Write for booklet and sworn statement of the inventor who was himself deaf.

A. O. LEONARD, Inc., Suite 986, 70 5th Ave., New York

PHOTO Enlargements

Clear enlargement, bust, full length or part group, pets or other subjects made from any photo, snapshot or tintype at low price of 49c each; 3 for $1.00. Send as many photos as you desire. Return of original photos guaranteed.

ONLY 49¢

3 for $1.00

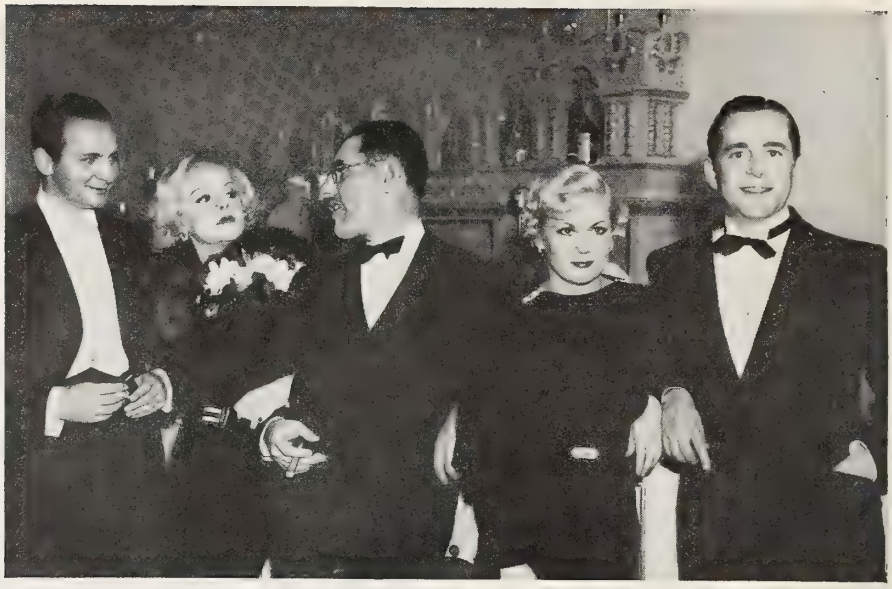
SEND NO MONEY!

Just mail photo with name and address. In a few days postman will deliver beautiful enlargement that will never fade. Pay only 49c plus postage or send 50c—8 for $1.00, and we will pay postage ourselves.

11 x 14 inches

BEAUTIFULLY CARVED FRAME FREE! To acquaint you with the HIGH quality of our work we will frame, until further notice, all pastel colored enlargements FREE. Illustrations of beautifully carved frames for your choice will be sent with your enlargement. Don't delay. Act now. Mail your Photos today. Write NEW ERA PORTRAIT COMPANY 11 E. HURON STREET, DEPT. 654 CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

EASY with a BUESCHER



CHARLES STRICKFADEN plays a Buescher Saxophone in Paul Whiteman's orchestra. (10-8-34)

Loads of fun, right from the start, because a sweet-toned Buescher is so easy to learn! You play tunes right away. Surprise your friends. Join a band or orchestra. Fit yourself quickly for one of the many big pay jobs now open.

FREE on trial. Any Buescher instrument will be sent without obligation. Write now for details and handsome Free Book. Mention instrument: saxophone, cornet, trombone, etc.

BUESCHER BAND INSTRUMENT CO.
447 BUESCHER BUILDING ELKHART, INDIANA

Where's Rudy Vallee? Here's Alice Faye, done up in gardenias and flanked, left by Jack Donahue, right by Sol Wurtzel. Patricia Lee and Jimmy Dunn, far right.

Hollywood Sets the Tempo

(Continued from page 64)

know. Most of us laboriously plan our wardrobes around one single coat, sometimes an old one from the year before, sometimes a new one which has been bought in advance. Although I think there is merit in the latter, especially if you dress to a budget, I was tremendously interested in what Madge had to say.

"I hardly ever think of a coat until after I have bought my dresses and accessories. You see, I like to be able to indulge in whatever color scheme appeals to me, I don't like to be limited constantly to thoughts of a coat. The coat can be adjusted to my new dresses just as easily. Of course, I never go very far away from a definite color scheme each season, mainly because I look best in blue and like to wear it in all shades."

YOU could understand this readily if you could see Madge's coloring. She has reddish gold hair and very bright blue eyes.

Since she wasn't having any pictures taken of her new clothes until she returned to Hollywood, you will have to wait for a later issue to see them. And that's when you will be most interested in them because they are more suited to your summer needs. However, don't miss the smart rain costume she is wearing on page 64. She has another one, too, which is not shown. It's an all-white ensemble of galoshes, umbrella, rain cape and hat. You know, it does rain in Hollywood despite what the old residents say!

We started talking about fabrics, too, and Madge told me that she isn't interested in a costume unless the fabric has some texture or surface interest. This is right in line with all the stylists' reports on your new season's fabrics. Everything from silks, and rayons to woolens have some distinguishing weave or surface characteristic. And a good material with a distinctive weave or patterning can make all the difference between a smart costume and an ordinary one.

Rene Hubert, the clever French designer at Fox, says that all design begins with the fabric. That is why he goes back to his native France every year to see what new ideas the great fabric designers and manufacturers have evolved. Just after a recent trip, he showed me some of the fascinating discoveries he had made. He never selects anything that he doesn't have some forthcoming production and one of his stars in mind.

It is to the studio designers that we look for advance tips at the turn of a new season. They set the pace, often anticipating a season by six months, regardless of what restrictions California's climate may put upon the off-screen dress of their stars.

But to get back to Rene Hubert, he showed me some fabric swatches which he had brought back with him. All of them had exotic textures. Some were shaggy with cellophane threads woven through the materials to give them a hairy look. Others were skillfully executed in stunning patterns. All his costume fabrics are selected with a camera eye—they are chosen in textures that will photograph well and that will give you some idea of "feel" to the fabrics.

Hubert brought back a collection of hats that would have delighted you. They were so giddy, yet so flattering. Most of them had been selected with one of his stars in mind. But the one I adored was a bonnet type that he had picked out for Janet Gaynor. The crown slid back on the head and the brim was drawn up to a peak above the forehead, much like the old-fashioned, scoop-brimmed bonnet of years ago.

Incidentally, you who like the off-the-face hat but find the very bare forehead types severe, are going to be enthusiastic about these bonnets because they give your face a frame while still showing the brow. Sailors will be smart with suits and tailored dresses. And your old favorite, the little Breton hat with the turned-up, childish brim, is good.

The belt, shown on page 63, is another version of one Hubert bought for Janet while abroad. Hers had her name cut into the leather, while the white one illustrated, has the name written on it in colored metal. He considers accessories a very important part of every spring costume. Even buttons and buckles must have individuality. For instance, he showed me some of the most amusing leather beer barrel buttons to be used for a sports costume. And the scarf, bag and glove set in tie silk, shown on the same page with the belt, is a favorite accessory scheme of his for suits and simple tailored dresses—these should be in interesting contrasting or harmonizing shades. For instance with navy blue, choose lighter blue accessories. And with brown, try a dash of dusty pink for refreshing contrast.

HUBERT sums up spring trends for you by saying, "There will be lots of blue, especially lighter shades often with white as contrast. The draped skirt is gradually insinuating itself into the evening picture. Evening bodices are very decolleté with a veiling of tulle or net. I am going to use a lot of starched collars and short straight sleeves on my daytime creations. Wide belts will be smart. My stars and their fans should dress to appear lady-like and quietly but beautifully groomed."

Suits will be one of the biggest daytime items in all our wardrobes. Of course, Hollywood loves suits better than almost any other costume with the possible exception of pajamas and evening gowns. There isn't a smart star in the town who doesn't have suits in all styles.

Suit jackets are as variable as the wind. You can wear very short, fitted jackets like the one Carole Lombard is wearing on page 63. This is what is known as the tailleur and it appears with the first crocus every year because it can be worn under winter coats long before you wear it alone. Carole uses a nice contrasting idea in her skirt and jacket. The jacket is black men's suiting, while the skirt, also black, has a fine pin stripe in white running through it. A suit like this can achieve infinite variety by having several skirt changes—one to match the jacket and one or two in a contrasting fabric. Carole suggests a nice color scheme, too, with her choice of a maroon blouse and a fresh carnation in her buttonhole in the identical shade. She is creating quite a rage for carnations, preferring them to the more customary gardenias and orchids chosen by other stars.

Then, the long, almost tunic length, jacket is excellent. Anne Shirley's brown and white check one is particularly flattering to slender, youthful figures such as hers. Checks are very important for suits from the small Shepard's check to the bolder size of Anne's. Notice that Anne's coat buttons up the front—one of the newer details. And the childish turnover collar is very flattering. All you young things will look charming in this type of suit.

A SPORTY type of suit is Steffi Duna's choice this spring. It is a grand style to keep in mind, too, when you shop—as good in town as in the country. It has the short box jacket without fastening which is popular this season. Steffi cleverly combines her fabrics by using plaids for vest and coat, a mixed tweed for the skirt. Notice her accessories; they are beautifully chosen to complement the suit.

Besides these three types of suits, the swagger style is still very good. Also the suit with medium-length jacket which is a length between Carole's and Anne's and not quite as short as Steffi's. Capes are in again which brings the becoming cape

Poor Complexion?

Nurses now tell how famous medicated cream Corrects ugly skin faults

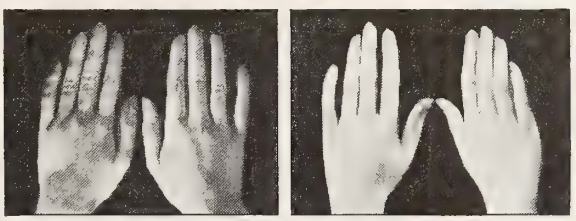
Thousands use it for Pimples, Large Pores, Blackheads, Cold Sores, Chapped Skin

OVER 2 million women today use this famous medicated cream to relieve skin irritations, to help clear up blemished complexions—to help restore their skin to normal healthy loveliness.

Of this vast number of women, thousands are nurses, whose training and experience have taught them what is best for the skin.

What it is

This famous medicated cream is Noxzema Skin Cream—a dainty, snow-white, greaseless formula that doctors first prescribed to relieve eczema, sunburn and other skin irritations.



Nurses discovered its value in helping to correct skin faults. "It clears my complexion as nothing else does," one nurse wrote. "It's the best thing ever for rough, chapped face and hands," wrote another.

If your skin is Rough or badly Chapped—if you have Cold Sores, Pimples, Blackheads, Large Pores, just try Noxzema Cream—and see what a big improvement it makes in your skin.

Apply Noxzema at night. Wash it off in the morning with warm water first, then cold water or apply ice. Apply a little Noxzema during the day—as a foundation for powder. Use Noxzema until skin is relieved or blemishes disappear.

Special trial offer

Ask your druggist for a small trial jar—if he cannot supply you send only 15c for generous 25c jar—enough to make a big improvement in your skin. Address Noxzema Chemical Co., Dept. 54, Baltimore, Md.

Red Chapped Hands Relieved Overnight . . . OR NO COST

Make this test tonight on badly Chapped Hands. Get a jar of Noxzema from your druggist—apply it tonight—as much as the skin will absorb. Notice them in the morning. If soreness has not disappeared—if hands are not softer, whiter, your druggist will gladly refund your money.

CORNS
CALLOUSES—BUNIONS—SORE TOES

INSTANT, SAFE, SURE RELIEF!

EASES NEW OR TIGHT SHOES

New De Luxe Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads for Corns, Callouses, Bunions and Sore Toes instantly relieve pain; stop shoe pressure; soothe and heal; prevent sore toes and blisters; ease new or tight shoes, and quickly, safely remove corns and callouses.

CALLOUSES

BUNIONS

SOFT CORNS

New SKINTEX Covering

De Luxe Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads have the marvelous new, velvety soft, flesh color Skintex covering which does not soil, stick to the stocking or come off in the bath. Hides foot blemishes. Get a box today. Sold everywhere.

NEW De Luxe FLESH COLOR WATERPROOF
Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads
Put one on—the pain is gone!

5¢ EACH LITTLE BLUE BOOKS
Send postcard for our free catalogue. Thousands of bargains. Address: LITTLE BLUE BOOK CO., Catalogue Dept., Desk 361, GIRARD, KANSAS

Gray Hair

Best Remedy is Made At Home

You can now make at home a better gray hair remedy than you can buy by following this simple recipe: To half pint of water add one ounce bay rum, a small box of Barbo Compound and one-fourth ounce of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it yourself at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until the desired shade is obtained.

Barbo imparts color to streaked, faded or gray hair, making it soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy and does not rub off.

DISFIGURING SKIN OUTBREAKS
Helped Remarkably By New SCIENTIFIC TREATMENT!

NOT ASHAMED OF MY SKIN NOW!

NOT a mere cosmetic! Hydrosal is a scientific skin treatment, successfully used by doctors and hospitals for over 20 years. Here now is real relief from the itching, burning irritation of rashes, eczema, ringworm, pimples and similar skin outbreaks. Almost instantly you can feel it soothe and cool the tender, inflamed skin. Its astringent action refines the coarsened skin tissues. Promotes healing in burns and hurts, too. At all druggists in Liquid and Ointment forms; 30c and 60c. The Hydrosal Company, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Hydrosal for Common Skin Outbreaks suit back on your shopping list. Your cape may be short or fingertip length. And for you who love your big revers and lapels, they are to be had also. In fact, you can wear just about any sort of suit that becomes you, the main point to keep in mind is that you must have at least one!

Blouses for your suits can be chosen in practically any fabric or style. I think you will like the taffeta ones, especially, and some in glazed chintz—yes, very much like your best chair or sofa slip-cover!

Travis Banton, Paramount's designing genius, gives you some grand tips to guide your spring shopping, too. He says sagely, and do follow his good advice, "The evening mode will be a trailing, floating, flowing trend with loads of chiffon, tulle, net and all sorts of diaphanous fabrics. Ruffles and flounces will be used in abundance and panels of chiffon will descend from the normal waistline. Tiers, brief peplums and various variations of the tunic will be highly favored as they will be an outgrowth of the tunic of the past season."

Three Banton-designed dresses on page 62, are grand examples of his ideas. Carole Lombard's printed dinner gown follows the long tunic silhouette. Her black gown is another—it has diaphanous black soufflé, embroidered with paillette discs, posed over a satin sheath. A cape composed of the paillettes on net is an added detail. And Gail Patrick's graceful gray chiffon introduces, not only the trailing and floating silhouette, but employs tiers and ruffles to heighten the flowing line. A cape is part of this costume, too. You will be wearing lots of them for evening. And don't you adore them?

Banton says, also, "I am terribly interested in the Spanish trend which Marlene Dietrich's costumes in "Caprice Espagnol" are bound to provoke. These gowns have already influenced me in many of the modern clothes I am working on. Flowers, fringe and lace are inevitable and offer countless ways of introducing a Spanish note which combines a romantic suggestion with a modern significance in these gay costumes."

What with Rene Hubert telling us to be lady-like and Travis Banton advising great femininity, it looks as if we can go on quite a romantic binge for our more formal moments. And that is where the fun really lies in our new clothes, I think. We can be such fragile, romantic, floating creatures at night and then the next morning, we can be as outdoorish and sporty looking as we wish.

That's why I have finished off my pictures, this month, with some really active outdoor shots of the clothes Hollywood wears at play. Jean Harlow looks utterly charming in the simple sweater and skirt classic that we all wear. And it is a pet costume of hers. Madge Evans looks like any girl who loves to dash about in the rain, provided she has a good-looking rainy day costume. Anne Shirley, to me, is one of the sweetest of the very young starlets. Doesn't she look carefree in her jodphurs, short sweater and blouse? The hand embroidered monogram on her blouse is something to copy. Her riding habit is just the informal sort all young girls adore. And doesn't Rosalind Russell look the picture of trim, tailored chic in her brimmed felt hat and perfectly fitted tweed reefer coat? It's a grand topcoat for town or country and one that will stand a lot of wear.

Time limits further spring clothes chat but since there is so much more to talk about, I have prepared a Spring Color and Clothes Chart for you. The Clothes Chart is planned with an eye to your pocketbook. It lists a well-rounded wardrobe but not an extravagant one. And it gives you a scale of prices for each item so that you can approximate your expenditures. Just send me your request, together with a self-addressed and stamped envelope and both charts are yours. Write to Adelia Bird, MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Good News

(Continued from page 39)

later was that the Fields' driveway is made of good, hard concrete! Wotta faker, that Bill!

■ ■ ■

There are some people who feel that Virginia Cherrill and Cary Grant may make up, but our guess is the other way 'round. For, though Virginia appeared at the preview of Cary's latest, "Wings in the Dark," and stood about to catch a glimpse of her husband, that young man finally approached, gazed a full moment directly into her pretty face without registering recognition, and walked deliberately away. Except for the few bystanders who caught the silent scene, no one seemed more surprised than Virginia.

■ ■ ■

When "Kid Millions" was finished, Sam Goldwyn invited Eddie Cantor and his wife and children to Palm Springs for a glorious and expensive week-end. After it was over and the host and his guests were about to check out of El Mirador, Sam challenged the star to some penny ante. Eddie won the fifty cents, so his boss induced him to "shoot" again. The actor again landed the money. Sam, now at his wit's end, persuaded Cantor to try once more. And they kept at it until the executive finally won his coin back. "You've gotta be careful of money," he explained, after footing the huge bill for the trip.

■ ■ ■

That family skeleton from the Brisson closet is due for an airing! The "skeleton" happens to be a six-foot, husky male one, whom Carl introduced around Hollywood, these many months, as his brother. Now we understand that gleam in the actor's eyes, for—shhh—Carl is, in reality, his proud papa!

■ ■ ■

Bing Crosby's in the market for either a violin or a dog collar. He says that romantic hair-cut, which he sports in "Mississippi," matches well enough with his green velvet frock coat and purple satin cravat on the set, but somehow, something seems wrong when he gets togged up in his own best clothes—corduroy pants and a baggy sweater. Being an actor, Bing wants to look the part at all times, so these two items head his shopping list.

■ ■ ■

Some meanies around this town are saying that, since her association with the talented writer, Bob Riskin, Carole Lombard is becoming high hat. If that is so, 'twould seem that Bob's success has gone to Carole's head! Mr. R., if you recall, is the gentleman who penned "It Happened One Night" and is partly responsible for "The Whole Town's Talking," two Columbia hits. Miss L. is an actress who dresses beautifully.

■ ■ ■

Since Arline Judge and Wesley Ruggles have moved near the Sam Goldwyns, they get a lot of Sam's guests by mistake. Strangers ride up, ring the bell and, on beholding the cute little door-answerer, become baffled. Mrs. Ruggles is used to it now and invites the Goldwyn guests in for a drink before she sends 'em further up the hill to Sammy.

And speaking of entertaining, Director James Cruze keeps such an open house that a lot of people actually think his place is an inn. They appear unasked and order things and, when they discover they are in a private home, do their faces turn a beautiful shade of vermillion? Well, yes!

■ ■ ■

When the heretofore infant industry began to gurgle, her enterprising bosses announced with much pomp: Garbo Talks! And, upon the recent release of "The Painted Veil," we all were edified to learn via the billboards: Garbo Smiles! But, you fans have yet to officially hear that: Garbo Bathes! Honest Injun, she does, for our beautiful blue eyes—which are far too big for pictures—witnessed the Famous One purchasing a bottle of bath salts at a Palm Springs drug store. After the sale, the clerk had himself a bottle of smelling salts "on the house," so thrilled was he to have taken the lady's dollar. As a matter of fact, we've never been considerate enough to inquire as to whether the boy recovered from the nervous shock.

■ ■ ■

And speaking of Greta quite naturally reminds us of George Brent. He is still very much around, so wouldn't the joke be on us skeptics if theirs is an honest-to-goodness romance and not a publicity stunt after all! Yep, although George, while at Palm Springs, did not stay at La Quinta, where Garbo checked in, he did park his trunk five miles away at Del Taquitz, from where he flew each morn to spend the day with the object of his affections.

■ ■ ■

This is worth a good guffaw! Little

It's a two-dollar bet on the hosses for that canny Scotsman, Jimmy Durante!

The Wrong Shade of Face Powder Will Give Your Age Away Every Time!

By Lady Esther

A woman's age is a woman's secret. Even the election laws acknowledge this when they require only that a woman state that she is over 21.

Every woman is entitled to look young—as young, frankly, as she can make herself look. That is a woman's prerogative and no one can deny it her.

But many a woman betrays her age in the very shade of face powder she uses. The wrong shade of face powder makes her look her age. It "dates" her skin—stamps on it her birthdate. She may feel 21, act 21, dress 21, but she doesn't fool the world a bit. To calculating eyes she is 31 and no foolin'.

Why Advertise Your Age?

Color creates the effect of either age or youth. Any artist, any make-up expert, will tell you this. Even a slight difference in shade will make a big difference in years so far as appearance is concerned.

The wrong shade of face powder will not only make you look your age, but crueller still, years older than you really are!

If you want to find out whether your shade of face powder is playing you fair or false, make this unfailing test: Send for all 5 shades of Lady Esther Face Powder which I offer free, and try each on your face before your mirror.

Don't try to select your shade in advance, as flesh, natural or rachel, etc. Try each of all the 5 shades. In other words, don't try to match your skin, but, rather, to flatter it. Merely matching your skin won't help. What you want to do is enhance it in appearance!

The Shade for You Is One of These 5

The 5 shades of Lady Esther Face Powder will answer all tones of skin. (I could just as well have made 25 shades, but I know from scientific tests that only 5 are necessary for all colorings of skin.) One of these 5 shades, probably the one you least suspect, will instantly assert itself as the one for you. It will prove your most becoming, your most flattering. It will "youthify" rather than age you in appearance.

When you get the supply of Lady Esther Face Powder which I send you free, test it also for smoothness. Make my famous "bite test". Place a pinch between your teeth and bite on it. Note how grit-free it is. Mark also what a delicate beauty it gives your skin and how long it clings and stays fresh. In every way you will find this the most flattering powder you ever tried.

Copyright by Lady Esther, 1935

(You can paste this on a penny postcard) (11) FREE

Lady Esther, 2010 Ridge Ave., Evanston, Ill.

Please send me by return mail a liberal supply of all five shades of Lady Esther Face Powder.

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

*City*_____ *State*_____

(If you live in Canada, write Lady Esther, Toronto, Ont.)

MUSCULAR RHEUMATIC PAIN

It takes more than "just a salve" to draw it out. It takes a "counter-irritant"! And that's what good old Musterole is—soothing, warming, penetrating and helpful in drawing out the pain and congestion when rubbed on the sore, aching spots.

Muscular lumbago, soreness and stiffness generally yield promptly to this treatment, and with continued application, blessed relief usually follows.

Even better results than the old-fashioned mustard plaster. Used by millions for 25 years. Recommended by many doctors and nurses. All druggists. In three strengths: Regular Strength, Children's (mild), and Extra Strong, 40¢ each.

Good Housekeeping Bureau

MUSTEROLE

BETTER THAN A MUSTARD PLASTER

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

NRA CODE

the PURE KNITTED COPPER CHORE GIRL

INSTANTLY CLEANS POTS AND PANS

No More Kitchen Drudgery!

~ ~ Patented parallel outer layers provide—

"Double the Wear, where the Wear comes"

CLASS PINS·35¢

RINGS·$1.60

PINS handsomely Silver Plated, enameled 1 or 2 colors, any 3 or 4 letters and year. Doz. Price $3.50. Sterling or Gold Plate 50c; Doz. $5. RINGS, Sterling Silver, similarly low priced

BASTIAN BROS. CO.
76 Bastian Building ROCHESTER, N. Y.

LOWEST PRICES Oldest LARGEST MAKERS Write for FREE Catalog

....OVER 300 DESIGNS.....

ECZEMA TORMENTS quickly pacified. For efficient help use concentrated POSLAM

Send for FREE SAMPLE Poslam Station G New York

U. S. GOVERNMENT JOBS!

START

$1260 to $2100 Year

Steady Work
Short Hours

Many Spring Examinations Expected

MEN—WOMEN 18 to 50

Mail Coupon today sure

COUPON

FRANKLIN INSTITUTE
Dept. N308, Rochester, N. Y.

Sirs: Rush to me without charge (1) 32 page book with list of U. S. Government steady Jobs. (2) Tell me how to get one of these jobs.

Name.....

Address.....

The Jolsons, Ruby and Al, sing and step together for the first time in "Go Into Your Dance"—and here they are!

George Breakston and his mother were coming to Los Angeles by train. They happened to meet a man who was bemoaning the fate of his three beautiful wolf-hounds, who had to sleep in the baggage car. George's mother, a softie where dogs are concerned, suggested that he sneak them into George's berth, and that her youngster could sleep with her. The next morning a brilliant thought struck her. She wired her husband, "Will be home at 9 P. M., just gave berth to three dogs."

■ ■ ■

For nonchalance, you can't beat Bill Powell! They do be saying it's the very trait that is capturing the fickle Harlow fancy, too. Bill wandered over to her house the other day, and was told that Jean was busy. Nothing daunted, he announced his intentions of remaining until he could see her. The "business" which was so urgent with Jean turned out to be cleaning all her bureau drawers and puttering around as gals will on off days, immersed in cold-cream and curl-papers. Bill chatted comfortably while she puttered, and finally took his nonchalant way home. And the platinum star takes it—and loves it.

■ ■ ■

If you don't think little Freddie Bartholomew, America's newest male starlet, is the answer to a maiden's prayer, then something's out of order in your cardiac regions. He's only ten years old, but as David in "David Copperfield" he displays more charm than Don Juan. They tried to tell us that this was Freddie's first acting experience, but our trusty nose snooped out the news that he's appeared in several English pictures. He's no sophisticate, though, in spite of his experience—which was proved on the night Dickens' story was to be previewed. Freddie suddenly dropped to his knees while dressing and prayed earnestly that both he and the picture might meet with approval.

■ ■ ■

Here's an idea for bringing up father. Elliott Nugent, directing "Win or Lose," has to direct his own Dad, J. C. Nugent, in the part of Dixie Lee's good-for-nothing old pappy.

"If all our kids would encourage our acting this way instead of trying to improve our grammar, we parents would have a happier lot of it," J. C. sighed contentedly the other day on the set. Eddie Nugent is another member of this famous family.

■ ■ ■

The rise and fall of one dancer in Hollywood is worth noting. Rosita, by name, and partner of the noted Ramon of late-spot fame, was suddenly promoted to a featured part in "All the King's Horses." Rosita has extremely long arms and legs, and when she begins waving them around, it's dancing—and swell dancing, too! But t'other day, she kicked too high, and landed kerplunk, with more speed than dignity. Rushing to pick her up, everyone asked anxiously, "How do you feel?"

Rosita gingerly patted the areas on which she had landed. "Well," she said gloomily, "I feel like 'All the King's Horses and All the King's Men' could never get me together again!"

■ ■ ■

"Quiet, pleez!" hissed around the set means just that! When singing or talking scenes are to be recorded, a deathly calm instantly settles down on everything and everybody. Even the metronome on the piano is enclosed in a sound-proof box!

■ ■ ■

Five dazzling blondes were used in the finale of a dance number in "All the King's Horses." But when Director Frank Tuttle saw the "rushes," he announced the entire scene would have to be retaken, as he preferred brunettes. Why, Mister Tuttle, and here we thought you were a gentleman, sure enough!

■ ■ ■

But neither the blondes nor the brunettes are the most dazzling thing about that set, by a long shot. For the entire dancing floor is made of mirrors—at a cost of $500 a slice! Seeing's how there are at least thirty-five pieces in all, you can draw your own conclusions as to what Paramount drew on their bank. But, annahoo, 'twas worth it, since these mirrors will make the scene twice as beautiful.

■ ■ ■

Well, Jimmy Durante still has his famous nose left, even though the Santa Anita racetrack has gotten a lot of his shekels. In fact, he took such a walloping there that he moved his gambling activities to another spot and then further on to an exclusive club featuring the reds and blacks. However, Bad Luck went with him, and finally Jimmy handed over what was left to his wife, who promptly cleaned up. "Beginner's luck," moaned Durante, loath to give credit where it was due.

Carlyle Blackwell, Jr., is taking screen honors like his famous dad but as a dancer. Winifred Shaw is his partner in "Golddiggers of 1935."

■ ■ ■

There were so many awards handed out to the aristocratic "pooches" at the recent Palm Springs Dog Show that their owners, Alice White, Bill Gargan, Glenda Farrell and Joan Blondell are all swelled up to beat heck.

■ ■ ■

Almost everyone knows that before Fred Keating became a legitimate actor, he was classed A-1 as a magician, his famous bird cage trick being now almost legendary. And so, at a recent Hollywood gathering, Fred's prowess in this direction was being discussed and praised.

"Well," finally contributed Inez Courtney, "I've known him for years and it seems to me that if he was so hot as a magician, he'd have changed my Japanese mink coat into a real one long ago!"

■ ■ ■

There's a little rustic roadhouse near Palm Springs called "The Canebreaks," which features a Hill Billy orchestra. Often of an evening, just by way of giving vent to the "Iturbi" in him, or to hand the natives a treat or sumpin', George Brent goes and plays the piano there. Another unprogrammed artist among those present on the night our scout appeared was Paul Lukas, who danced with a pretty little waitress as long as her heart desired—and her heart wasn't a bit backward either!

And by the way, since the famous pianist Iturbi's name has been brought up, while he was playing in concert at Los Angeles, he was seen everywhere with Ruth Chatterton, George's "ex."

■ ■ ■

Charlie Farrell and Ralph Bellamy have built a beautiful tennis court on their property at Palm Springs with a view to sorta "making a little" on the side. The boys even went so far with their enterprise as to put Mr. Gledhill, a famous tennis expert, in charge. It soon developed, however, that that gentleman's most difficult task was to keep his employers off the court, so that some cash customers could take a shot at the game once in awhile.

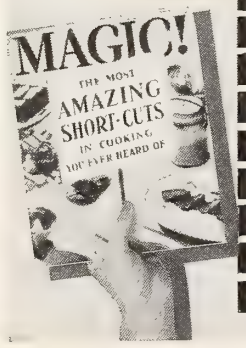
But, all is well now, for two more courts have been added and a beautiful clubhouse, too, is in process of construction.

■ ■ ■

Director Woody Van Dyke has this particular type of humor. He took twenty of his "Naughty Marietta" chorus gals out on a real binge the other night—with dinner, dancing and the whole works. The revelry lasted 'til about five, and as he waved goodbye to them in the cold, gray dawn, he shouted cheerfully, "See you all at nine on the set!" Stunned, but helpless, they had to stagger some way to the studio—which they did, only to be sent home immediately by Woody, who reprimanded them severely for showing up so haggard-like.

Of course, there is no woman but what wants the last word—and when there's twenty of them, it means business! So they invited Mr. Van Dyke to a party at the Clover Club a few nights later. They had asked the waiter not to provide a chair for him, as he was the only gentleman invited, and would be busy dancing all evening.

Fool-proof Chocolate Frosting



EAGLE BRAND CHOCOLATE FROSTING

2 squares unsweetened chocolate
1⅓ cups (1 can) Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk
1 tablespoon water

Melt chocolate in double boiler. Add Eagle Brand Sweetened Condensed Milk. Stir over boiling water 5 minutes until it thickens. (Imagine! Takes only 5 minutes to thicken perfectly!) Add water. Cool cake before spreading frosting.

● Only 5 minutes' cooking instead of 15! And it never fails! Never too thick nor too thin. Goes on in lovely rich swirls. ● But remember . . . Evaporated Milk won't—can't—succeed in this recipe. You must use Sweetened Condensed Milk. Just remember the name Eagle Brand.

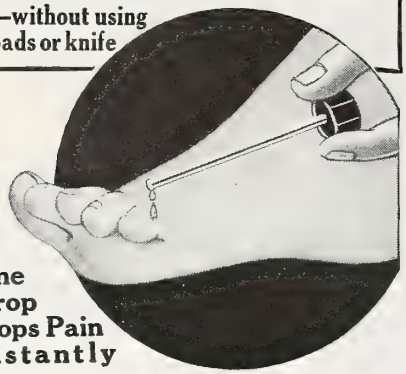
FREE! World's most amazing Cook Book!

Rotogravure picture-book (60 photographs) showing astonishing new short-cuts. 130 recipes, including: Lemon Pie without cooking! Caramel Pudding that makes itself! 2-ingredient Macaroons! Shake-up Mayonnaise! Ice Creams (freezer and automatic)! Candies! Refrigerator Cakes! Sauces! Custards! Cookies! Quick Breads! Address: The Borden Co., Dept.MM45, 350 Madison Ave., New York, N. Y.

Name_____
Street_____
City_____ State_____
(Print name and address plainly)

Borden Quality

FASCINATING HAIR



Gorgeous new highlights brought out in one shampoo!

WHY let drab, lifeless hair add years to your appearance—dull the charm of your face? In one single shampoo with Blondex you can bring out the sparkling lustre, the alluring softness your hair now lacks. Thousands report that their first Blondex shampoo made their hair look softer and prettier than in years. Originally made especially for blondes—brunettes have found it puts fascinating glints in drab, dark hair. Blondex is a delightful shampoo rinse—not a bleach or dye. Good for the scalp—removes every bit of dust and oil-film. Try Blondex now, and see it bring your hair new life, new loveliness, and many a compliment. At all good drug and department stores. Two sizes, the inexpensive 25¢ package, and the economical $1 bottle.

HOW TO GET RID OF CORNS

—without using pads or knife

One Drop Stops Pain Instantly

Just one little drop of FREEZONE on that aching corn will stop all pain instantly and for good. Then a few more drops of this safe liquid and corn gets so loose you can lift it right off with your fingers, core and all! It's the quickest way known to get rid of hard and soft corns and calluses. Get a bottle from your druggist and try it.

FREEZONE

NO JOKE TO BE DEAF

—Every deaf person knows that—

Mr. Way made himself hear his watch tick after being deaf for twenty-five years, with his Artificial Ear Drums. He wore them day and night. They stopped his head noises. They are invisible and comfortable, no wires or batteries. Write for TRUE STORY. Also booklet on Deafness.

Artificial Ear Drum

THE WAY COMPANY
717 Hofmann Bldg. Detroit, Michigan

PSORIASIS ECZEMA

And other obstinate skin eruptions? PSORACINE, a wonderful new discovery now relieving many stubborn cases where other treatments failed. Try it no matter how long afflicted. Write for sworn proof and FREE information.

ILLINOIS MEDICAL PRODUCTS
519 N. Central Park Dept. 901 Chicago, Ill.

GRAY FADED HAIR

Women, girls, men with gray, faded, streaked hair. Shampoo and color your hair at the same time with new French discovery "SHAMPO-KOLOR," takes few minutes, leaves hair soft, glossy, natural. Permits permanent wave and curl. Free Booklet, Monsieur L. P. Valligny, Dept. 39, 254 W. 31 St., N. Y.

"HUSH" FOR BODY ODORS AT ALL 10¢ STORES

REMOVE HAIR THIS QUICK, NEW WAY

Charmette removes unsightly hair quickly, easily, safely. No messy chemicals nor sharp razors to irritate your skin. Does not stimulate regrowth . . . nor coarsen the hair. Try it.

At Leading Chain Stores.

NOW 10¢
Charmette
HAIR ERASING PAD

Guess who this white-haired old gal is who makes the suave Menjou tear at his pate in "Golddiggers of 1935"? None other than Alice Brady!

Which he was! Also they requested that every time Woody ordered food, he was to be brought beans—also which he was!

The next morning, pale and wan, he appeared for work—and was soundly reproved for not getting a good night's rest.

■ ■ ■

Tullio Carminati's made a record! A singer of genuine note, this is the first time that his voice has ever been recorded. The song which his fans may now tune in on their phonographs is "Love Passes By" from his recent picture "Let's Live Tonight."

■ ■ ■

"Love me, love my dog," says Charles Farrell, to friends who visit him in his Beverly Hills home. Now, under ordinary circumstances, that wouldn't be so difficult, but—you should see Charlie's dog! It's that great Dane purp that was presented to him after "Seventh Heaven" by an admirer, and its name is Chico. Quite a number of dog biscuits have been devoured since that time, and Chico now resembles an overgrown lion. Unfortunately, he still has hallucinations that he's a lapdog. And Charlie is genuinely hurt because his friends prefer to stand up and visit with him, rather than sit down and let Chico leap into their laps for his snooze.

■ ■ ■

Never look a gift-horse in the mouth—nor pat it on the back, Wynne Gibson will tell you. Wynne, who is among the colony's better horsewomen, was given a new saddle horse recently, and immediately got a party together and all set out over the trails. After a while, Wynne turned to the rider following, to rave about the docility of her steed, and in doing so placed her hand on its back. Like a shot, the horse bucked six feet into the air, sending its fair rider sprawling over its head! Undaunted, Wynne determined to find the cause of this—and sure nuff, every time a hand was placed on that horse's back, he proceeded to buck. So now, Wynne's birthday present can buck to its heart's content in a wide, green meadow of its own.

■ ■ ■

Like the famous prairie flower, Bob Armstrong's garden grows wilder every hour! Bob doesn't agree with most of these Hollywood natives who order a house built, and don't move in 'til every last fixture is in running order—including the garden. So his Mexican ranch house really expresses individuality. And the flowers and shrubbery simply run riot all over the place, because he believes that Mexican landscaping should give an effect of carelessness and age. Well—it does, all right!

■ ■ ■

Yet they say that all husbands are jealous brutes! Just lend an ear to this tale of a husband—Minna Gombell's to be exact, who also happens to be Mr. Joseph Sefton, a big financial figger in San Diego.

Mr. Sefton never introduces his wife other than in this manner. "Meet my wife —Miss Minna Gombell."

When questioned by startled friends (particularly other husbands) he says, "Why not? I believe it's her right to be introduced as Miss Gombell. After all, she established herself as an important person long before she ever knew me, and I'd be pretty selfish to belittle her accomplishments by introducing her by her married name."

■ ■ ■

Some movie actors confine their talents to histrionics—but not David Manners! He goes in for words, too. In fact, he's pounded enough of 'em out on the old typewriter to fill two books and several short stories. Proof—well, a New York publisher has okayed the proof! So any day, now, you can expect to see the results of David's brain waves at your book shop.

■ ■ ■

Bleeve it or not—and we don't think you will—but the little blonde, who looks "sweet sixteen and never been kissed" and plays opposite Joe Morrison in "Win or Lose," is the mother of a strapping three-year-old son and twin boys! Yep—it's Dixie Lee, proud mama, and wife of Bing Crosby, too. She looks young enough to need that nurse-maid for herself instead of for her trio of sons.

■ ■ ■

There's more truth than fiction in these amazing tales of Fred Keating's magic. F'rinstance—on a recent automobile trip, difficulties developed over Fred's colored chauffeur. Seems the hotel managers didn't care to put him up in comfortable quarters.

Richard Dix is the most enthusiastic prospective pa in Hollywood. Here he is with Mrs. Dix and the dogs.

But this did not phase the astute Keating! With two turkish towels and a dime-store brooch he decorated his man Friday, and presto! Racial and social status were changed. The next hotel was "honored" to rent their two best rooms to Mr. Fred Keating and "The Hon. Arbrur Jodphur Singh, cousin of the Maharajah of Rajputana"! Ingenious, what!

■ ■ ■

The "back to the land" movement has hit several of the Hollywood stars. When Adrienne Ames and Bruce Cabot returned from merrie old England, the first thing they did was scout around for a country estate, agreeing with the Englishy idea that home sweet home must be in the country.

Paul Kelly has a hankering for a New England farm, and recently he received an advertisement of one, stating that the house dated back to pre-revolutionary days; in fact, its Colonial owners were among those awakened by Paul Revere on his memorable ride. Looking up the location of said house on a map, he found it was over two hundred miles from Boston. Mr. Kelly couldn't resist the temptation of writing to inquire as to just when Paul Revere swapped his horse for that motorcycle!

■ ■ ■

Douglass Montgomery had all the ladies of the cast of "Merrily We Roll Along," simply gaga over him, by his daily presentation of gorgeous corsages of red and white camellias and purple violets. Fearing that he was driving himself to the verge of bankruptcy, Erin O'Brien-Moore did some sleuthing on the side. Come to find out, Doug's estate, "Edgecliffe," is simply running wild with camellia bushes and acres of violets! So-o-o-o.

■ ■ ■

Billie Burke's charm enslaves men of all ages. Recently, her agent was frantically trying to have some pictures of Billie sent over from the photographer's, to use in the next day's newspaper. An eighteen-year-old lad in her office overheard the telephone conversation. "Say, lissen," he said, "if you want some pictures of Billie right away, I'll just run home and get some—they're plastered all over my entire room!"

■ ■ ■

Discovered—a Hollywood screen actor who balks at being called a "clothes-horse!" 'Tis none other than Joel McCrea, who in recent months has had the reputation forced upon him. But he's happy again, now, wearing shabby, ill-fitting clothes and an ear-to-ear grin. This apparel is for his new role in "Private Worlds" and Joel claims it's simply grand to feel "back to normal" once more.

■ ■ ■

Here's a tip—not on the market but on nursery walls. Sally Eilers believes that young mothers can be individualistic in spite of all those set formulas about everything from sun-baths to strained spinach for their young hopefuls. So in place of Mother Goose, the Three Little Pigs and Jack and the Beanstalk on the walls of her son's nursery, she has decorated it with a border of photographs of all her friends' babies. Young Master Harry Joe Brown, Jr. is going to get acquainted with his gang rather early! It's a right cute idea, don't you agree?

Clear up sniffly little noses—help to prevent many colds, too—with* VICKS VA-TRO-NOL

THE next time you hear a sniffle in your home, mother, don't wait until it grows into a bad cold. Promptly, apply Vicks Va-tro-nol—just a few drops up each nostril.

Va-tro-nol reduces swollen membranes and clears away clogging mucus. That annoying stuffiness vanishes—normal breathing through the nose again becomes easy.

Especially designed for the nose and upper throat—where most colds start—Va-tro-nol aids the functions provided by Nature to prevent colds, or to throw them off in the early stages. Used at the very first sign of irritation, Va-tro-nol aids in avoiding many colds altogether.

Vicks Va-tro-nol is real medication—yet is absolutely safe—for children and adults alike. And so easy to use—any time or place. Keep a bottle handy.

Note!* For Your Protection

The remarkable success of Vicks drops—for nose and throat—has brought scores of imitations. The trade-mark "Va-tro-nol" is your protection in getting this exclusive Vicks formula.

Always ask for Vicks Va-tro-nol.

TWO GENEROUS SIZES—30¢ and 50¢

Have you wondered about the young David of "David Copperfield"? Do you want to know all about this remarkable youngster, Freddie Bartholomew, who practically stole the show from all the full-fledged stars in the picture? You're right, he is different from other kids. Read about him in the May issue of MODERN SCREEN.

Also in the same issue, an enlightening story about a certain quality that all of us would like to possess—GLAMOR. Glamor is not a gift, it is acquired. So, get your copies early and learn how to be glamorous.

Three New OLIVE OIL CREAMS—

Three new creations by Vi-Jon! Fine, delicate Vi-Jon Creams blended with pure, imported Olive Oil, with its soothing, nourishing effect on the skin. For amazing results, try these new Vi-Jon Olive Oil Creams. A thorough, complete facial treatment for a few cents.

Sold at the better 10c stores

If your 10c store has not yet stocked Vi-Jon Olive Oil Creams, send us 10c for full size jar. State whether for cleansing or finishing. Larger sizes at 20c and 35c.

VI-JON LABORATORIES, 6300 Etzel Av., St. Louis

A LARGER CAN OF BETTER WALL PAPER CLEANER for 10¢

BIG CAN 10¢

SOLD EXCLUSIVELY IN THE 5¢, 10¢, 25¢, and $1.00 STORES

BECOME AN EXPERT
ACCOUNTANT

Executive Accountants and C. P. A.'s earn $3,000 to $15,000 a year. Thousands of firms need them. Only 12,000 Certified Public Accountants in the U. S. We train you thoroly at home in spare time for C.P.A. examinations or executive accounting positions. Previous experience unnecessary. Personal training under supervision of staff of C.P.A.'s, including members of the American Institute of Accountants. Write for free book. "Accountancy, the Profession that Pays."
LaSalle Extension University, Dept. 4318H, Chicago
The School That Has Trained Over 1,200 C. P. A.'s

HELP Wanted in INSTITUTIONS & HOSPITALS
• MALE & FEMALE • INEXPERIENCED & EXPERIENCED
All kinds of Positions Practically Everywhere. Help constantly needed, so why remain unemployed? Write now enclosing stamp.
SCHARF BUREAU, Dept. 4-43, 145 W. 45th St. NEW YORK

LINCOLN AND INDIAN HEAD
PENNIES WANTED
WE PAY $2 EACH IF MORE THAN 11 YEARS OLD UP TO
and up to $500 for certain U. S. Cents
Send 10c today for 16-page fully illustrated catalog
NATIONAL COIN CO.
BOX 731-Y MILWAUKEE, WIS.

Jan Kiepura, of "Be Mine Tonight" fame, in another musical, "My Heart Is Calling," with blonde Marta Eggerth.

BUNIONS Reduced Quickly
Pain Stops At Once! Write for Free Sample of Fairyfoot Treatment.
No obligation. Dept. 2714 Fairyfoot Company
1223 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

2 Perfumes

SUBTLE, fascinating, alluring. Sells regularly at $12.00 an ounce. Made from the essence of flowers:—

Two odors:
(1) Admiration
(2) Gardenia
A single drop lasts a week!

Send only 20¢

To pay for postage and handling send only 20c (silver or stamps) for 2 trial bottles. Only one set to each new customer. 20c!

Redwood Treasure Chest:
Contains 4-50c bottles of perfume selling at $2.00 an ounce—(1) Hollywood Bouquet, (2) Persian Night, (3) Black Velvet, (4) Samarkand. Chest 6x3 in. made from Giant Redwood Trees of California. Send only $1.00 check, stamps or currency. And ideal gift. $1.00!
PAUL RIEGER, 176 First Street, San Francisco

A Chance to Live an Ideal

(Continued from page 31)

"Mr. Zanuck was very frank when he first told me of his decision to assign me this part. He even mentioned the fact that most of his associates were quite dubious about his plan to give me the role. Well," she laughed, "so was I until I had read the book and the script over many times. I realized immediately, though, that I wanted to play this role as I have never wanted to play another. I wanted to play Meg because I loved her so and, most of all, because it would give me a chance to live the life of my ideal woman. I decided that, at thirty, I should want to be like Meg.

"Then I began to wonder. So many things she did were so foreign to our conventional ideas. But still I was forced to admire her, even though I might disagree at first, because she had the strength and the honesty to live her life as she thought best, without particular regard to the copy-book versions."

AS Loretta talked, I thought she was not only revealing the characteristics of the amazing woman she portrays in a film—but something, as well, of her own ideals and aims in life. And when I suggested this to her, she nodded slowly.

"I have, in a way, compared my own reactions to Meg's and, as far as we go in ages, I think we are not unlike. It is only when Meg matures and makes such courageous and daring decisions in her life that I begin to wonder if I will have the same magnificent courage in facing things.

"For instance, in the early part of the film, she shows a strong sense of adventure when she comes to India to meet Clive, whom she has never seen in her life. He has fallen in love with her photograph and written her asking her to come. She marries him. She has led a quiet, sheltered life, but there was something in Clive's letters, some undercurrent of real love that causes her to ignore the conventionalities under which she had been brought up.

"I can't help but think that there was something of that same feeling of adventure in my own romance and marriage four years ago. Of course, mine was not the daring adventure of going to a strange country to marry a man I had never seen before. But, in a way, it was a stupendous adventure to me. I, too, had been brought up conservatively, sheltered in the heart of my family. It was a terrific step in my life to run away, cut myself off from my mother's guidance at seventeen—for what I thought (just as deeply as did Meg) must be true love. There, our mutual experience ends. For Meg's was an ultimate success, mine a failure. I came back to the shelter of my family, Meg remains to share the tumultuous experience of life with a man who became a military idol of India and a great political figure in England.

"In time they have a child, and for the moment Meg's life seems ideal. Of course she has to put up with the society gossip that says she is not the type of woman who can help advance the career of such a brilliant man as Robert Clive. But it falls on deaf ears. She is too wrapped up in her home, in her husband, in her child. She is a devoted mother. But here again Meg's character becomes surprising. When Clive is called back to India because he is the only man who can quell an uprising, it is up to Meg to choose between staying with her sick child and accompanying her husband. It is a moment of turmoil and indecision in her life. But when the last minute comes, she goes with her husband!

FRANKLY, I'm going to admit that this surprised me. I'd always felt that nothing, not even a husband, could possibly come before a child. I'd always thought I would feel that way about my own child. Even now, I am not sure. I'm not positive what I would do under the same circumstances. I don't know that I can ever reach that point of love that will allow me to put my husband before my child, especially a sick child. Perhaps you will say Meg's maternal instinct was not as deep as it seemed to be. But that is not the case. Meg loved her husband with an almost maternal love. He was a child to her. So, when it came to a choice, it was really between two children. She chose the boy whom she believed needed her most, the one who had the most vital and terrific problems to solve. The child died while they were in India, and it was only that great love for Clive that sustained her.

"I wonder if I would have the courage to put such a strain on modern marriage? I have always thought it a mistake to wrap one's life completely about one person—to the extent that if that one person fails there is nothing left. I would be frightened to trust so much of my life and happiness to another. But Meg is not afraid to test love to the fullest—and, after all, isn't a tested love the only love worth knowing? The modern version of love that says, 'Well, if anything happens, I have this to fall back on or that to fall back on, is a pretty poor substitute, isn't it?

"Playing this part has convinced me of at least one thing for the future—I shall never fall in love—or marry another man—with mental reservations. I have Meg's inspiration for the folly of that.

"Even later in the story, when it comes Clive's turn to choose between Meg and another alternative . . . and he puts adventure and duty before love and home . . . she does not think he has really failed her. She knows Clive too well. She knows it is merely a matter of waiting, waiting until his little-boy world of glamor and military uniforms crashes before him. She has infinite patience with him.

"Could I do that? If I made a great sacrifice in the name of love, I wonder if I wouldn't expect that great sacrifice to be repaid in kind—pound for pound and tear for tear? We women, especially those of us who have careers grow a bit selfish in our outlook. Through Meg's eyes I have come to wonder if Hollywood women ever really give marriage a fair chance. We are so wrapped up in our own problems that we seldom have the time or the inclination to understand someone else's. Through public adulation and critic's cheers, our false pride grows so strong in us. Meg had pride, too. But it was a pride within herself, not a fearful worry about what people would think. We modern women are constantly afraid of what people will say.

Meg doesn't care if the gossips do say that Clive has left her in preference for adventure in India. And when his castles fall and they try to sweep away all his splendor and glory with slander, she knows her place is at his side. She is the one thing in life that doesn't fail him when he needs her the most. She is as when he needs her the most. She is as fresh and lovely and strong in her love as she was when she first came to him as a young girl."

Loretta spoke with such real feeling and sincerity that I was amazed. It was the first time I had ever known a young actress to be so deeply swayed by the character she portrays on the screen. But Loretta is a serious little girl. So mnay things have recently happened in her life to make her serious. At twenty-two, when most girls are just starting to meet life's battles, Loretta has come through three unhappy romances with flying colors. Her head is up and her strong, youthful chin is out.

"I hope when I am thirty I am such a woman as Meg," she said quietly. "I hope I have found such a love as she found . . . and the high courage to be true to it!"

Modern Screen-Warner Song Contest

(Continued from page 43)

complete list of fifteen pictures, but you will be judged on a basis of three out of five.

Remember, you must tell who sang the song which you designate as the most popular hit from each of the pictures which you choose.

Keep each set of five until the contest is complete. DO NOT SEND THIS SET NOW—KEEP IT UNTIL YOU HAVE FULFILLED THE REQUIREMENTS FOR NEXT MONTH. If you misunderstood last month and have already sent in last month's installment, we will try to keep your contribution on file, but we assume no risk.

With your complete set of nine (or more) answers—three chosen from each set of five—you are asked to write one hundred words telling which Warner musical you have liked the best to date—and why. You may use less than a hundred words, but don't use more. The words "a," "an," and "the" will not count.

ASIDE from winning one of the prizes in this contest, do you know the big feature? Yes, you are right. It is writing a set of lyrics. The best of those submitted will be set to music and published by a real music publisher and used in a forthcoming Warner Brothers production.

You undoubtedly have some one—may

It's boxing now that engages the fancy of that merry pair, Mickey Mouse and Pluto!

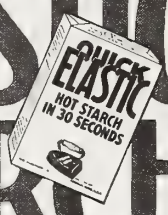
"AFTER OFFICE HOURS"

A thrilling love story with an exciting newspaper background and a murder mystery thrown in for good measure . . . this new M.G.M. production presented in complete story form will give you an evening of real entertainment. In addition to this romantic story, the April issue of SCREEN ROMANCES presents thirteen love stories from the screen.

PRIZE CONTEST

Win this I. J. Fox Fur Cape

A LUXURIOUS SILVER FOX CAPE, DESIGNED BY THE WELL-KNOWN FIFTH AVENUE FURRIERS, THE I. J. FOX COMPANY, IS THE GIFT OFFERED BY IRENE DUNNE, STARRING IN RKO-RADIO PRODUCTIONS. READ FULL DETAILS OF THE CONTEST IN THE CURRENT ISSUE OF SCREEN ROMANCES, NOW ON SALE EVERYWHERE.



SCREEN ROMANCES

The Love Story Magazine of the Screen

April issue now on sale

Your Iron Fairly Glides!

ELASTIC STARCH

This modern way to hot starch offers you advantages worth knowing. Simply add boiling water to dissolved Quick Elastic—no mixing, no cooking, no bother as with lump starch. Ends sticking and scorching. Restores elasticity and that soft charm of newness.

TRY THIS FREE

THANK YOU

THE HUBINGER CO., No. 918, Keokuk, Iowa.
Your free sample of QUICK ELASTIC, please, and "That Wonderful Way to Hot Starch."

Stoves AT FACTORY PRICES!

SALE CATALOG—FREE

Over 200 Styles and Sizes of Stoves, Ranges, Furnaces at Factory Prices and Easy Terms—as little as 18c a day. More Bargains than in 20 Big Stores. New styles, new features, new colors. Year to Pay—30 days free trial—360 days approval test—24-hour shipments. The Kalamazoo Stove Co., Mfrs. 405 Rochester Avenue, Kalamazoo, Michigan.

Over 900,000 Satisfied Users
35 Years in Business
Write for FREE Catalog

"A Kalamazoo Direct to You" Trade Mark Registered

ANY PHOTO ENLARGED

Size 8x10 inches or smaller if desired. Same price for full length or bust form, groups, landscapes, pet animals, etc., or enlargements of any part of group picture. Safe return of original photo guaranteed.

47c

SEND NO MONEY Just mail photo or snapshot (any size) and within a week you will receive your beautiful life-like enlargement, guaranteed fadeless. Pay postman 47c plus postage—or send 49c with order and we pay postage. Big 16x20-inch enlargement sent C. O. D. 78c plus postage or send 80c and we pay postage. Take advantage of this amazing offer now. Send your photos today. Specify size wanted.

STANDARD ART STUDIOS
104 S. Jefferson St. Dept. 1325-D CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

LEARN TO PLAY PIANO BY EAR*

NO NOTES-NO SCALES-NO EXERCISES

If you can whistle, sing or hum—you have Talent. Let a popular radio pianist train your hands in THIRTY DAYS. TEN LESSON METHOD sent postpaid for $1.00 or pay postman $1.00 plus postage. NOTHING MORE TO BUY. Be your own TEACHER! Results Guaranteed. Accordion charts included free.

COURSE $1 COMPLETE

MAJOR KORD Dept. 21. Del Rio, Texas

Be a Nurse

MAKE $25-$35 A WEEK

You can learn at home in spare time. Course endorsed by physicians. Thousands of graduates. Est. 36 years. One graduate has charge of 10-bed hospital. Another saved $400 while learning. Equipment included. Men and women 18 to 60. High school not required. Easy tuition payments. Write us now.

CHICAGO SCHOOL OF NURSING
Dept. 234, 26 N. Ashland Blvd., Chicago, Ill.
Please send free booklet and 32 sample lesson pages.

Name _____
City _____ State _____ Age _____

we surmise a sweetheart, wife or husband?—who has awakened within you a feeling that you could write a poem about them or to them. Well, when you come down to it, a set of lyrics is really a poem which is set to music to make a song. We bring this up as a hint here, because Mr. Julius P. Witmark, Jr., the one who arranged this contest for you has had so much experience with some of the great song writers and he has told us that the most successful lyrics ever written have always been due to some such inspiration. Imagine the great thrill of writing such an inspired lyric, having it accepted, taking the one and only to the movies and having your lyric, written about him or her, sung to you from the screen. Yes, sir, it would be a tremendous thrill for both of you and we are sure that under the above conditions you can produce.

You stand just as good a chance of winning one of the prizes—the first prize of $250; the second prize of $100; the third prize of $50! the fourth prize of $25! one of the five fifth prizes of $10 each; or one of the five sixth prizes of $5 each—if you stop at the list of songs and singers and the one-hundred-word description. BUT—an extra added honor goes to the person who writes, in the opinion of the judges, the best set of lyrics. He may or may not win one of the prizes—that depends upon how accurately and aptly, in the opinion of the judges, he fulfills the above requirements. The special honor reserved for the writer of the best set of lyrics is the inclusion of these lyrics—set to music and everything—in a forthcoming Warner musical production.

So get busy, not only in answering the questions in this contest, but also with your lyric. Keep your three sets of answers, composition of one hundred words or less, and lyrics, if you wish to submit a set until after you have completed the three parts of the contest, and send them all to the MODERN SCREEN-WARNER Song Contest, 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y., mailing them no later than midnight on May 15, 1935, when the contest closes. All entries must be mailed by that time.

For the lyric which will be used in a Warner production, the usual royalties on music publication and commercial, mechanical instrument use will be paid by the music publishers.

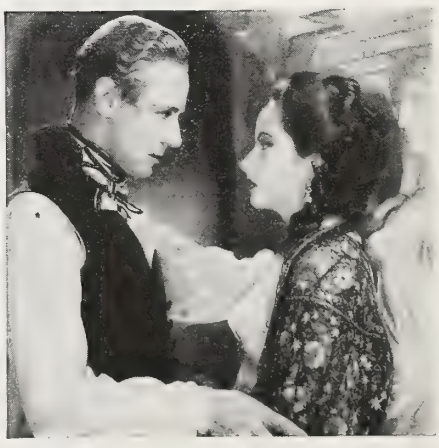
No entries will be returned. All lyrics submitted will be returned, if not accepted, upon receipt of your request together with a stamped, self-addressed envelope. Remember, we assume no risk for the return of same. We advise you to keep a copy of the lyrics you submit.

Send all entries and lyrics to MODERN SCREEN-Warner Song Contest, 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Everyone is eligible to compete in this contest except the employees of MODERN SCREEN and employees of Warner Brothers-First National Studios.

The judges of this contest are the editors of MODERN SCREEN and Julius P. Witmark.

Please do not send elaborate, pretentious entries. They stand no better chance of winning a prize than accurate, simple entries. Neatness is important, of course.



Reviews—A Tour of Today's Talkies

(Continued from page 47)

and too far apart. The Battle of Waterloo, staged at great and very evident cost, is muddled and not as exciting as it should be. To be sure, after each dull spot, Mr. Arliss somehow contrives to snap up your attention with sure and succinct acting and make you feel that this is a pretty good picture, after all. We liked an English actress named Norma Varden in the role of the dignified Duchess of Richmond. We found the acting of Gladys Cooper as the unhappy Duchess D'Angouleme, niece of Louis XVIII, commendable. We did not like a pretty but irritating young woman, Leslie Wareing, in the ingenue role of Lady Frances. Of course, we still like Mr. Arliss, no matter what he does.

A: The Scarlet Pimpernel
(United Artists)

You'll love this, if you have a spark of romance and adventure in your soul. Made in England, with Leslie Howard, whom we have come to regard as our own, in the leading role, magnificently directed by Alexander Korda, aptly cast, down to the smallest role, it is indeed a story which will spirit you away from the humdrum cares of 1935 to the dramatic and dangerous days of the French Revolution. To tell you much would spoil your enjoyment in

"The Scarlet Pimpernel" gives you a thrilling pair, Leslie Howard and Merle Oberon.

Chester Morris, Virginia Bruce and Robert Taylor in "Society Doctor."

Together again—Ed Lowe and Vic MacLaglen with Marjorie Rambeau in "Under Pressure."

the thrill and suspense which this story contains. We will only say that it is all about a reckless, brave Englishman who, as the secret leader of a secret band, spirited away brutally condemned French aristocrats from under the very knife of the guillotine. Leslie Howard is called upon to play, in a sense, a dual role. As the daring leader, he is one person. As the too, too elegant, foppish Sir Percy Blakeney, who hides his brave work behind a seemingly idle and worthless life, he brings much wit and comedy to the picture. Merle Oberon, as his wife, is beautiful.

C: Red Hot Tires
(Warner Brothers)

Zoom; They're off! And if you're a race-track fiend, you, too, will be off in a cloud of dust for some scalp-tingling entertainment. But for the rest of us softies, the snail's pace plot dims the flying start. Not that there's any dearth of thrills, what with prison escapes, hectic love affairs, murder trials and airplane stuntings! Still, at the risk of being considered pretty persnickety, we'll take our thrills in somewhat smaller doses, thankin' ye just the same!

Lyle Talbot is convincingly reckless as the racer with nerves of cast-iron and heart of pure gold, but somehow the lovely Mary Astor doesn't seem to fit those mechanic's overalls. Roscoe Karns faithfully flips his customary wisecracks and Frankie Darro grins his grin.

However, if you or yours are on the lookout for a powerful antidote for chronic race-track fever, here's your medicine.

B: Society Doctor
(M-G-M)

Ever since "Grand Hotel," we've all yearned for dramatic tales involving the lives and loves of many people, and their strange influence on one another's destinies. And here's another picture to satisfy that craving for more cross-section squints at life.

With a great city hospital as a background, and characters from every strata of society, the story is intensely interesting—even to the chronic triangular love affair. For Chester Morris and Robert Taylor are such attractive rivals that you'll be as much a-dither as Virginia Bruce, the beautiful blonde nurse.

Billie Burke is good as the prettily helpless and completely brainless patient, who simply adores operations! At that, having one's appendix removed a coupla times by such a handsome doctor as Robert Taylor might be a treat.

What this picture lacks in "big names," is more than compensated for by the excellent acting.

B: Under Pressure
(Fox)

"Under Pressure" presents some good, red-blooded, he-mannish entertainment with just a dash of the educational thrown in for good measure. Are you interested in tunnel-building? Have you ever thought about it? Well, you'll do a little of each when you see what men go through to dig a passage way down deep in a river bed. The risks that are run and the lives that are lost!

The story built about this great structural feat is bright enough to hold your attention, with those two friendly enemies, Edmund Lowe and Victor McLaglen, supplying laughs and love interest and plenty of action. The popular team give their by-now familiar, but nevertheless capable, performances. Marjorie Rambeau, long in love with Victor, does a fine piece of acting and Florence Rice, the object of Eddie's affections, turns in a nice portrayal.

B: Wings in the Dark
(Paramount)

This is another airplane picture and, even if it does tax your credulity a bit, it is all in the interest of good, clean thrills, so who are we to complain?

The plot reveals Myrna Loy as a stunt-flyer—which type of role is outside of her usual cinematic "beat," you'll agree—and Cary Grant as an aviator who is blinded on the eve of his great flight.

Miss Loy gives a nice, even, though by no means sparkling characterization, and Mr. Grant does a fair job. Roscoe Karns, as the high-powered manager and press agent, is simply slick.

C: The Winning Ticket
(M-G-M)

Metro should hang its head in shame and both Leo Carrillo and Louise Fazenda blush a beautiful crimson, and the gent who should run out and jump off a cliff is the picture's author. The Honor System and a Girl Scout attitude prevent us from disclosing that unworthy's name.

As its title tends to indicate, this one deals with the Irish Sweepstakes. The winning ticket is held by Leo—for an instant anyway—after which time the baby hides it so that the fun (?) may begin. If the Little One could only have mislaid the

Roscoe Karns, Cary Grant and Myrna Loy in "Wings in the Dark."

Griffin Manufacturing Co., Brooklyn, N. Y.

BREED CANARIES FOR US
WE SUPPLY BIRDS AND BUY ALL YOU CAN BREED
We need thousands--paying you highest prices! Breeders ship us birds from all parts of the country. Large illustrated Canary Book catalogue and list of prices sent; 10c (coin) to cover cost of mailing.
KRAFT BIRD CO., Dept. GG5 EAST 14th STREET, NEW YORK

I SUFFERED WITH asthma FOR 22 YEARS
Suddenly I found Amazing Relief

After suffering from Asthma for 22 years and getting relief through Nacor, I am glad to add my testimonial about this fine medicine. I had been extremely weak, but my strength came back. The Asthma has now left me entirely.—Mrs. John Scudera, 3155 E. 130th Street, Cleveland, Ohio, September 28, 1934.

Nacor is so effective and safe that druggists of highest standing recommend it to their customers. Write for helpful booklet—also letters from happy users and name of druggist in your locality who can supply you. Address Nacor Medicine Co., 255 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Indiana.

REMINGTON PORTABLE
ONLY 10¢ A DAY
FREE TYPING COURSE

Buy this beautiful brand new Remington Portable No. 5 direct from factory for only 10c a day! Standard 4-row keyboard, standard width carriage, margin release on keyboard, back spacer, automatic ribbon reverse—every essential feature found in standard type-writers! Carrying case, typing course free. Special 10-day free trial offer. You don't risk a cent! Write Remington Rand Inc., Dept. 25, Buffalo, N. Y. Don't delay. Act now!

10 DAY FREE TRIAL OFFER

Doctor Finds

BLACKHEADS GO

in as little as 3 DAYS

BLACKHEADS are caused by clogged pores. Clear them quickly with Ambrosia, the pore-deep liquid cleanser. You feel Ambrosia tingle; you know it is cleansing as nothing has done before.

Doctor who studied the use of Ambrosia by women with blackheads reported: "In as little as three days blackheads tend to go, complexions are clearer and brighter."

Get a bottle of Ambrosia today. Only 75¢ at drug or department stores. In smaller sizes at 10¢ stores.

AMBRŌSIA

THE PORE-DEEP CLEANSER

Glamorous! WATERPROOF Eye Make-Up

● An eyelash and brow make-up that refuses to smudge or flake off. Guaranteed waterproof—no matter how much you wet it. "I" LAST stays on all day and evening. Simple to apply. Remove with vaseline or cold cream. Truly safe. Will not smart the eyes. Four shades — Black, Brown, Blue and Green. $1.00 at toilet counters or send 10c for trial size bottle—a month's supply. Mention shade desired.

WILLARD CO. Dept. 30
516 Diversey Parkway
Chicago, Illinois

"I"-Last

AMAZING CLEANER FOR WHITE KID SHOES! IRENE MARCHANT

I mean Amazing! ColorShine White Kid Cleaner (10c) actually dissolves dirt from shoes—instead of scrubbing it off with a white abrasive. It preserves the original kid finish, polishes beautifully, (or leave dull if you prefer) and "won't rub off."

For other white shoes, I use the Special ColorShine White Cloth and Buckskin Cleaner (10c). Get both at the 10c store and many other stores. For valuable information write Irene Marchant, c/o The Chieftain Mfg. Co., Baltimore, Md.

No. 11—Special Cleaner for White Kid Shoes

No. 12—Special Cleaner for Cloth, Buckskin Shoes

Each One Does its Own Job BETTER

"Carnival" is a circus tale with Lee Tracy and Sally Eilers starring.

plot somewhere! But no, Life is not that kind!

Mr. Carrillo is pretty awful as the Italian barber who mixes his English phraseology along with the shaving soap and Miss Fazenda, as his Irish wife, had better stick to co-called comedy, for her emotional moments are rather horrible. Ted Healy alone, playing her ne'er-do-well brother, shows signs of ability.

C: Night Life of the Gods
(Universal)

Well, you don't have to be goofy in order to enjoy this picture, but it'll certainly help! Never have we seen such a conglomeration of pseudo-sophisticated nonsense on any screen at any time. This celluloider, we dare say, was intended to abound in ultra-smart "touches," but the intentions somewhat went the way of the place that is said to be paved with 'em.

The mad—and literally that—yarn deals with a scientist who brings the Greek gods to life and they, associated with some slightly better than nutty moderns, go on a binge around New York City. No, we mean it! At the risk of being thought gaited too low mentally to "get" such sophistry we beg to state that we've attended as many "intelligentsia" soirées, where sentences are left unfinished and licker completely finished, as the next one. And even so, we pity Alan Mowbray, Florine McKinney, Peggy Shannon and Uncle Carl Laemmle for getting into this!

B: Notorious Gentleman
(Universal)

Believe it or not, Mr. Ripley—but this picture is really a mysterious mystery story! If it doesn't keep you wide-eyed and wondering to the very end, then you're the one who could make Sherlock Holmes look like a numb-skull.

Though too many conflicting motives are dragged into the murder, suicide hate and love cases, the originality of the situations sustains your interest. Charles Bickford is back in a suitable role—that of the lawyer-murderer who is always on the lookout for a loop-hole in the law and finally hangs himself in it. Onslow Stevens, as the district attorney, proves again that he can deliver the goods, while Dudley Digges is excellent as the old lawyer, steeped in the traditions of the South, suh—and its corn whiskey.

Helen Vinson's character isn't as smooth as her appearance. Seems like she takes a little too much advantage of women's right to change her mind—indulging as she does in three "grande passions" in about as many reels.

B: Life Returns
(Universal)

Here is an entertaining picture, the story of which has been woven around the immensely interesting experiment of bringing the dead back to life, which experiment was conducted recently by the California scientist, Dr. Robert E. Cornish.

The youthful hero's dog has been asphyxiated and is actually "brought back" before your very eyes, in a series of close-ups. There is nothing squeamish or morbid about this; in fact, the preview audience applauded when the first sign of restored breathing was disclosed.

Dr. Eugene Frenke directed, and gleaned a workmanlike job from a slim story and a cast of competent players. Onslow Stevens is sincere as the physician who sacrifices everything for his "great experiment," and young George Breakston proves excellent as the desperate, heart-broken boy whose pet is restored to him at the eleventh hour. Yes, we think there is much in "Life Returns" to interest you.

B: Carniva'
(Columbia)

Bearded ladies, tattooed gentlemen, midgets, monsters and Jimmy Durante, is a good enough cast for any picture, you'll admit. But Lee Tracy and Sally Eilers are among those present, besides!

This yarn of the hard-boiled, soft-hearted folk of a traveling circus, is packed with lotsa plot, laughs and mascara-threatening moments. The trials and tribulations suffered by Lee Tracy, to keep his small son out of the clutches of the welfare authorities, provides plenty of action. You won't wonder that Lee is quite frantic, when you see little Dickie Walters—for the director has let him act as a little boy should and not like a child prodigy shouldn't.

Florence Rice is attractive as the prospective mother of the child, while Sally Eilers, who finally wins the honor of being the mother, does an excellent bit of acting.

When this picture comes to town, it's guaranteed to answer that "what to do this evening" question satisfactorily.

B: The Best Man Wins
(Columbia)

This is a nice entertaining film if you like deep sea divers—and it's pretty good, too, even if you don't go near the water. For, there's a thrill every time

Jack Holt and Edmund Lowe in a polite moment from "The Best Man Wins."

Douglass Montgomery and Valerie Hobson play Dickens' roles in "The Mystery of Edwin Drood."

a man dons a metal contraption and goes down among the seaweed with the oxygen giving out and the villain up top on the drydock cutting tubes and such-like. Yes, there's a great deal of suspense, all right! Of course, the story itself won't give you brain fag, but then, who wants that?

Edmund Lowe and Jack Holt, good men and true—at least Jack is—are in love with the same girl, the lovely Florence Rice. Being an average young lady, she is "that way" about the wrong man. However, Fate steps in and sets her right and you leave the theatre fully convinced that virtue triumphs—in the celluloid, anna-hoo! You'll be pleased with the leading characters' performances and the diving stuff.

B: The Mystery of Edwin Drood
(Universal)

Here is another dish for you Dickens relishers! It isn't guaranteed to be as palatable as "David Copperfield," but Stuart Walker has directed with care, and not attempted to replace the Dickens flavor with any of the modern substitutes. For the rest of us, though, goodly dashes of salty wisdom don't entirely satisfy. We'll take a bit more spice in our entertainment, since the painstaking, slow plot developments and character build-ups drag pretty badly in spots. David Manners, as Edwin Drood, provides the mystery in the story by his strange disappearance. Douglass Montgomery, the young man from Ceylon, is given plenty to think about when he becomes the object of suspicion, while Heather Angel, his poor little fiancée, is simply cuh-razy, what with worrying about it all. Claude Rains adds to the uniformly good work of the cast with his performance of the wicked old uncle.

In short, this is a movie that's to be praised in part, but not at length.

B: Women Must Dress
(Monogram)

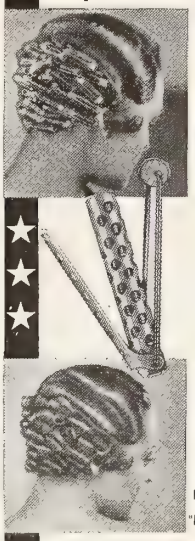
If you doubt the veracity of this title, don't miss seeing the picture! Particularly if you're looking comfortably forward to becoming forty and fattish, secure in the affections of your better-half. For, like Minna Gombell, you may discover, like a bolt from the blue, that friend hubby prefers 'em young and slimmish. Still worse—if it's a choice between a paragon of all the virtues and a cute little clothes-horse, he's apt to favor the latter, just as does Gavin Gordon, her erring spouse.

Here, at least, the home-breaker (Lenita Lane) proves beautiful but dumb compared to the wife and model of all the virtues, whose actions when aroused surprise not only her husband, but her ultra-modern daughter, and even Grandma who has long since refused to be surprised by anything. What's more, Minna's tactics will take you by surprise, too!

C. Rumba
(Paramount)

Do you remember the one about the fabulously rich sassiety gal, the petulant lit-tul thrill-seeker who frequents dives just for a lark and, pardon us, even gets the bird from the beneath-her-socially gent she chases? Well, in case you don't, the familiar plot is once again unreeled in "Rumba." Of course, the story serves as a big build-up for the sequence in which George Raft and Carole Lombard execute the intricate steps of that colorful dance, and very beautifully they do it, too. But when you've seen that, you've seen about everything the picture has to offer. Indeed, the theme is about as phony as its papier mache-looking sets, with the hero's behavior being more like that of a Bowery baddie than a Mexican dancer. So little suspense is managed that one can even anticipate ensuing situations.

Miss Lombard, looking lovely, does what can be done with a very stupid character, which isn't much. Lynne Overman, as the wise-cracking newspaperman, is good in that very familiar role and Margo, as the Lombard foil, dances beautifully and photographs atrociously. Indeed, even if the order were "On with the dance," it wouldn't be Paramount's "Rumba" for us.



A: My Heart Is Calling
(Gaumont-British)

It is a certified Czech named Jan Kiepura —you may remember him in "Be Mine Tonight"—who makes this picture as enjoyable as it is. His voice is truly magnificent and he sings a generous number of songs. Three new ones—"My Heart Is Calling," Serenade" and "You, Me and Love." There are two arias from "La Tosca," cleverly presented, and other operatic pieces. As for the rest of the picture—the story is well enough, but we find English comedy pretty unfunny. The girl, Marta Eggerth, is attractive and spirited and has a pretty good voice herself, but she really should lose about twenty pounds for her American audiences. Sonnie Hale works himself up into a perspiration in his efforts to be killingly funny all the time and doesn't succeed very well. We forgot everything when Kiepura sang.

Minna Gombell and Hardie Albright in a scene from "Women Must Dress."

YOURS! Alluring Curls of the Hollywood Stars

Hollywood Stars set the hairdress styles of the world. Hollywood Rapid-Dry Curlers—"the Curlers used by the Stars"—bring to smart women everywhere the alluring, soft, lovely coiffures that are the style. With Hollywood Curlers you can easily achieve a flattering hair dress of better and more lasting curls. Hollywood Curlers feature a soft rubber lock that keeps hair and curler securely in place. Perforations permit abundant air circulation to aid swift drying. Available in two models and three sizes to suit your need. For the best curling results, use Hollywood Curlers.

At 5c and 10c stores and notion counters 5c ea

Kathleen Burke, featured in Paramount's "Lives of a Bengal Lancer"

HOLLYWOOD RAPID-DRY CURLER
"THE CURLER USED BY THE STARS"

FREE VALUABLE NUMEROLOGY CHART

COMPLETE SCIENTIFIC NUMEROLOGY CHART sent FREE to you by the makers of the two famous lipsticks—REJUVIA at 10c and FLAME-GLO at 20c each. Have you an Artistic Nature? Are you Mysterious, Passionate? Are you intended for Great Love, Adventure, Success? Define your own type with this Complete Numerology Chart. Study your Sweetheart, your Friends! Does your name fit your personality? Do you vibrate to 7-9-14-6? Intriguing, Mysterious, Exciting. You will be amazed at what the numbers show. Mail your name and address on penny Post Card. No Cost, No Obligations. Send now to REJUVIA BEAUTY LABS. Inc., 395 Broadway, Dept.D42, New York City

REJUVIA LIPSTICK 10c. FLAME-GLO LIPSTICK 20c. The only really automatic Lipstick as fine as the most expensive. America's Famous Lipstick Sensations. Three times as indelible as most other lipsticks. Why pay $1 or more? Get the finest for only 10c and 20c at most 5 and 10c stores.

YOUR FACE CAN BE CHANGED

Straight regular features! Charming new beauty! They can be yours. Dr. Stotter (grad. of University of Vienna) reconstructs faces by famous Vienna Polyclinic methods. Unshapely Noses, Protruding Ears, Large Lips, Wrinkles, Signs of Age, etc., are all quickly corrected. Low cost. Write or call for Free Booklet "Facial Reconstruction," (mailed in plain wrapper.)

Dr. Stotter, 50 East 42nd St., Dept. 9-C, New York

The Secret of a New Enchantment

RADIO GIRL

PERFUME and FACE POWDER

Few can resist the alluring fragrance of RADIO GIRL PERFUME. And you can enjoy this exquisite French odeur because domestic manufacture reduces the cost. You'll want RADIO GIRL FACE POWDER, too—its skin blend tones and its soft texture, are so flattering.

Use this COUPON for FREE SAMPLES

"RADIO GIRL", Saint Paul, Minn. Send me FREE Regular Size Radio Girl Perfume and Trial Size Radio Girl Face Powder. I am enclosing 10c (coin or stamps) for cost of mailing. (Offer Good in U. S. only.) M-4

Name.....

Address.....

A REAL RUSSIAN DINNER

IF YOU would like to give your family a real treat by serving them a complete Russian dinner consisting of authentic dishes suggested by Anna Sten, be sure and read this month's Modern Hostess Department. Even the names of the different foods in this month's Russian menu sound exciting, and the meal itself, after you have carefully prepared it, will prove just as interesting.

A surprise Russian dinner will certainly break the routine of every-day meals. Too, your family will thank you for this treat and probably clamor for its early repetition.

Read the Modern Hostess Department every month in

MODERN SCREEN

Amazing Things Have Happened to Her

(Continued from page 53)

no other way to reach home, except by following that death-dealing steel.

The blonde daredevil drew in her breath sharply. She gripped the arm of her brunette chum. "Come," she whispered, "we must follow them. It is the only way! Don't show you're afraid!"

For what seemed an eternity the two chums continued their march of horror, managing to keep about ten paces between themselves and the terrible bayonets. And always the cruel, mask-like faces of the soldiers leering at them silently and evilly. At last they reached the home of the blonde Anna, and darted in to collapse on the floor for a good spell of hysteria.

For that blonde Anna, that daredevil of Kiev was none other than our own Anna Sten, alluring lady of a thousand and one screen moods.

As I gazed on her, stretched out on a couch in her dressing-room in that frilled and flounced organdie dress which she wore as Katusha in the Russian Easter scene from "We Live Again," she seemed the very epitome of shy maidenliness. Her crown of golden braids and a demure sky-blue sash completed the illusion of angelic purity and shrinking modesty. I could scarcely believe that this was the same person who had defied part of the Communist army, and risked death not once, but many times, with a devil-may-care pluckiness that could be envied by many a professional hero.

Take the incident of her defiance of a military command. Again she was walking down the twisted streets of Kiev. And again she shouldn't have been. All at once, she found herself face to face with a squadron of grim looking soldiers, this time marching forward in circular formation around a group of prisoners they were taking to the parade ground for execution. She knew very well that she should have stepped aside to allow this deadly escort to pass, but something in her rebelled.

"The officer in command yelled at me to step back, but I didn't. Why didn't he shoot me?" She looked at me with childish wonderment in her blazing blue eyes. "I don't know to this day, for I know he had instructions to shoot any citizen who interfered with his progress. Maybe some instinct told me he wouldn't, for I continued to walk on in the middle of the street, actually making my steps slower so that he wouldn't reach the parade ground so soon.

"It was madness—I, walking along calmly—that man behind me, yelling to me to step aside or he'd shoot!"

She shook her head solemnly. "Perhaps it was the abnormal life, the terrible happenings every day which made me so—soldiers, battles, executions, flights!"

AS a matter of fact, it was the Cossack blood which ran in her veins that made her "so."

More than any other member in her family, she inherited the dauntless courage and the recklessness of her colorful forebears, who, for generations, had guarded the wild and luxuriant country around Kiev from all invaders. They were born rebels. Actually never happy unless they were defying some law. The stories of their incredible deeds and misdeeds have become the legends of the Ukraine countryside. The very word Cossack spells romance and adventure.

No wonder then that Anna's childhood and youth, endured through the turbulent period of the Russian Revolution, are packed with more exciting suspense than the adventures of "The Count of Monte Cristo." Most children study the history of their country but Anna lived hers, she was raised on revolution and civil turmoil.

Time after time her family, more timorous than she was, would send her out to forage for food. Giggling, she described to me the preparations for those treasure hunts. Each member of the family would bring out some queer article of clothing and bundle her up in it until she looked like a padded barrel with a curly head stuck on top. Tied up in those queer rags, she would crawl down the dark road to the turnip fields, on the outskirts of the town—sometimes on her hands and knees to escape detection. Like a savage animal, she'd dig in the frozen earth for a mouldy turnip that might have been overlooked by other ravenous townspeople, for the Ukraine was faced with famine.

"Aren't you afraid of anything?" I asked. She laughed.

"If you keep it a deep secret, I'll tell you what I'm afraid of—it's staircases and steps! Every new staircase is my mortal enemy." Again she laughed that infectious laugh, covering her wide, laughing mouth with her hands—and looking at me from between spread fingers. She has the mannerisms of a child, gay, unselfconscious and very sensitive to any new stimulus.

And then she told me of her staircase complex. She just can't help either falling up or down stairs. Just present her with a new set of stairs and she's off her feet, in a hurry. Laughing so hard that she could hardly speak, she told me of the time she was invited as guest star from Moscow to act the star role in a picture they were making in Leningrad.

"The day I arrived in Leningrad I was invited to a big party at the motion picture club there. It was to be a celebration in my honor. I didn't know a soul in the city and they didn't know me. I was taken, in great state, by the director of the picture. We arrived late, in order to make a grand entrance into the ballroom where they were waiting to meet me. He took me into an ante room first which led down into the main ballroom by three innocent stairs.

WELL, I was terribly excited and confused by this great affair in my honor—and when I saw the staircase, it was too much!

"All I know was that the door opened from the outside as was planned, but instead of those people seeing me enter the room grandly on the arm of the great director, they saw me sitting on the bottom step, my legs and arms flying out in four directions and my eyes blinking at them like a foolish sheep. Imagine a guest of honor greeting her hosts from that position on the floor. I think I have never since been so terribly embarrassed!"

"When I think back over some of those experiences," she told me with a distant look in her eyes, "I sometimes believe that I have lived five lives in one! That is why, in Hollywood, where people always look for new excitement, my pleasures today seem a little dull." She was thoughtful.

Compared to the adventures she related to me at random that afternoon, her off-screen life does seem somewhat uneventful. Her marriage is an exemplary one. And she admits if she weren't an actress she would be a gardener or a farmerette. (Imagine! She got up four times one night recently to apply hot water bottles to a colic-y brood of baby chickens. Do you think any other Hollywood siren would do this?)

"I suppose you will laugh when I tell you that I am never bored. I would be perfectly content for the rest of my life to putter around my garden, to take care of my husband and my menagerie." The aforementioned husband is the brilliant German, Dr. Frenke. The menagerie consists of a family of turtles, a brood of chickens, various and sundry ducks, cats, and her two beloved Siberian sleigh dogs —Driook, Little Pal, and his daughter, Prishok, Swansdown—now the proud parents of five puppies.

"It is because I have been through so much, too much, that I can so well appreciate such quiet satisfaction as a home, a husband and a garden now."

Once again she laughed. Her laughter is very characteristic—full-throated, compelling and slightly hysterical. It seems to burst from her wide, parted lips and to shiver her body with mirth. "I hope you won't think that this makes me too uninteresting! You see, I reserve my dramatic scenes for the screen!"

And if you've ever seen her act, you'll know she does!

My Cards Are On the Table

(Continued from page 51)

and I don't want anyone to do it to me.

"I'm eternally amazed that people ask for your opinion and don't want it. All they want is to be 'yessed.' For instance, a girl I know asked me once if I liked her new hat. I didn't and I said so. She asked for my opinion, didn't she? Why had she asked me if she didn't want it? Yet she was peeved at me because I had said I didn't like the hat. If I had bought a hat that I adored and that I knew looked well on me, I wouldn't ask anyone what she thought of it. If I were sure how I felt, why should I? But if I didn't know, if I were doubtful, I'd certainly ask advice. And I'd most certainly want the truth. I'd want another person's opinion. Then suppose that person said, 'Oh, my dear, why the hat is lovely. It looks adorable on you,'—and all the time she was thinking—'it's a dreadful hat'—well then, why should I waste words asking?

"And if anyone has done something I don't like—I'll tell the person, himself, about it. I hope people do the same to me. I want to know. It's only fair, for if there is some legitimate explanation, it should be given.

"I can't change my character. I'm not defending myself. Nor saying that's the best way. I'm not giving anybody advice. But it's my way, that's all. Perhaps other people are much more popular than I by saying one thing to a person and meaning another. So probably I'm wrong."

"So much for your private life," I said, "But what about it at the studio? How do you get away with not 'yessing' the director?"

WHEN I'm bad in a picture," she answered immediately (Connie always answers immediately), "it's my own fault. I have no alibis. I can't blame it on the director, because I can't do a scene in which I feel no sincerity. I couldn't do it, honestly, I couldn't. When arguments about how a scene should be played arise, I'll fight to the last ditch if I think I'm right. Sometimes there is a compromise and we do it two ways, one his way, one mine. Then we'll look at it in the projection room and take the best one. Lots of times I'm wrong about scenes I do. Well then, it's my own fault. I haven't anyone to blame but myself and I'll take the responsibility. But I can't do a piece of acting well in which I don't believe."

"And how," I asked, "do you cope with it when you're given a just plain, rotten story to do?"

"I can't do anything about that, except try to get out of playing in bad stories. And I don't always succeed. It's difficult then to believe in a character that isn't real.

"But I'm sure I've never been able to figure out why there is so much 'yessing' in Hollywood. I think we'd all be a lot better off if people said what they really meant."

They called her just then to go on the set. That reminded me of something. I very much wanted to see Clark Gable that day. He was working with Bennett but when I had asked to go on the set to see him, there had been a great deal of fluttering and many shocked faces. "Oh no," everyone had said, "You can't possibly even set foot on Bennett's set. She won't allow anyone except those actually working on the picture. No, no, it isn't possible."

I'M a docile soul and had accepted that in spite of the fact that I had a deadline to meet and that it was very important for me to see Gable.

Connie had said she believed in frankness and that she treated others as she wanted to be treated. I put it to the test.

"Look," I said, "I know you don't like to have anyone on your set but it would be a great favor to me if I could see Gable this afternoon. I've a deadline to meet and there's no other time. If you say 'no,' that's okay with me. If you say 'yes,' I'd be very appreciative."

She gave me a long steady look. "The reason I won't have people on my set is because I hate to be stared at aimlessly while I'm at work. Wouldn't you hate having somebody looking over your shoulder all the time you're writing a story? That's all. I have to make the rule good and strong or it wouldn't be taken seriously. You'll be there on business. You'll be talking to Gable."

"Then it's okay?"

Her face broke into that nice Bennett smile. "It's okay."

Some months ago I had asked a star's permission to come on her set. She gave it graciously, but later she had raised her own particular brand of Cain with the publicity department and had said I inveigled her into giving permission.

I went on the Bennett set. I saw Gable. Connie didn't mention the incident to anyone.

Thinking it over, I believe it's pretty swell to be frank!

Relieves Teething Pains Within 1 Minute

WHEN your baby suffers from teething pains, just rub a few drops of Dr. Hand's Teething Lotion on the sore, tender, little gums and the pain will be relieved within one minute.

Dr. Hand's Teething Lotion is the prescription of a famous baby specialist, contains no narcotics and has been used by mothers for almost fifty years. It is strongly recommended by doctors and nurses instead of the unsanitary teething ring.

JUST RUB IT ON THE GUMS

DR. HAND'S Teething Lotion

Buy Dr. Hand's from your druggist today

BACKACHES Need Warmth

Thousands who suffered from backaches, pains and chest congestion, now put on an ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTER and find soothing relief. It's simply wonderful for muscle pains of rheumatism, neuritis, arthritis, sciatica, lumbago.
ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTER gives a glow of warmth that makes you feel good right away. It draws the blood to the painful spot. Be sure druggist gives you ALLCOCK'S 25c. No porous plaster has ever been made that goes on and comes off as easily, or that does as much good.

Gayanne
THE SOFTEST POWDER PUFF

SOLD EXCLUSIVELY AT ALL S·S·KRESGE STORES

NEW EASY WAY 10¢

KEEP WIRES OFF FLOOR
(LAMPS AND RADIO)
A neat job instantly. No damage to woodwork. No tools needed. Set of eight colored clips to match your cords. 10c.
At Kresge's
JUSTRITE PUSH-CLIP

A Guide to BETTER BUYING Your New LARKIN CATALOG!

INVEST 1c wisely. Send a postcard for this great money-saving book for home and family.

NEW, smart apparel, and new, attractive home furnishings are pictured in this book for home-lovers. It tells about the new Larkin Cozy-Home Club with little 50c weekly shares. Learn of our big Rewards for Larkin Secretaries.

Larkin Co Inc. 664 Seneca St. BUFFALO, N. Y.

ALL JOKING ASIDE—by Oscar Howard

Printed in the U. S. A. by Art Color Printing Company, Dunellen, N. J.

Maddening Hues

FOR LIPS AND CHEEKS

A NEW KIND OF LIPSTICK . . . A NEW KIND OF DRY ROUGE WORK MIRACLES IN RED

Maddening hues, yes! Colors that thrill, taunt and tempt! Truly enough (and you'll know it the instant you try them) such rapturous, wicked reds have never been used in lipstick or rouge before. But there's more reason than that for the soul-stirring madness so generously imparted by SAVAGE Lipstick and the new SAVAGE Rouge.

SAVAGE Lipstick works differently from ordinary lipstick. Its gorgeous color separates from the cosmetic after application to become an actual part of the skin. Wipe the cosmetic away and see your lips teasingly, savagely red . . . but without the usual discouraging pastiness. Imagine a lipstick like that! Better yet, experience its magic on your own lips. One or more of the four luscious SAVAGE shades is sure to be exactly yours.

SAVAGE Rouge . . . an utterly new kind of dry rouge . . . so much finer in texture than any other that it blends right into the skin itself . . . to stay, with full color intensity, throughout the exciting hours it invites, instead of quickly fading away as ordinary rouge does. You'll love it, and the shades are identical to those of SAVAGE Lipstick so that your cheeks and lips will be a thrilling, perfect symphony of maddening, meaningful red.

Then . . . SAVAGE Face Powder

And what a different face powder this is; so fine, soft, smooth and so surprisingly different in the results it gives. Apply it, and it seems to vanish . . . but the skin-shine, too, has gone. Imagine it! Everything you want from powder, but no "powdered" look; just caressing soft smoothness that is a feast for eyes and a tingle for finger tips it makes so eager. Four lovely shades.

20¢ AT ALL TEN CENT STORES

SAVAGE

LUCKY STRIKE
"IT'S TOASTED"
CIGARETTES
LUCKY STRIKE
Luckies
LUCKIES USE ONLY THE CENTER LEAVES
—THE CENTER LEAVES GIVE YOU
THE MILDEST SMOKE.
They Taste Better
Copyright 1938
The American Tobacco Company

LARGEST GUARANTEED CIRCULATION OF ANY SCREEN MAGAZINE

Modern Screen

May

10 cents

Earl Christy

See Our MOVIE SCOREBOARD

ONE GIRL'S Hopeless Love FOR BILL POWELL

NIGHT and DAY

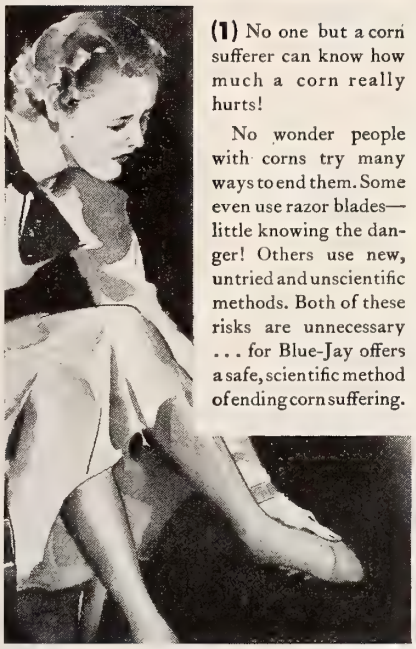
Be utterly Irresistible

You, yes you, can become divinely Irresistible. Use the lure that has always won love for famous, enchanting women...tempting, exotic perfume. Such is IRRESISTIBLE PERFUME. Wear it night and day to thrill...excite senses ...madden hearts...with its haunting, lasting fragrance.

To make yourself even more fascinating, use all the IRRESISTIBLE BEAUTY AIDS. Each has some special feature to make you exquisitely lovely. Irresistible Lip Lure, the new, different lipstick, melts deep into your lips making them vibrant, glowing with soft, warm, red ripe color. Irresistible Face Powder is sifted through silk...it clings for hours...conceals blemishes... gives your skin a youthful petal-like, kissable softness.

Be Irresistible today...now...forever...with Irresistible Beauty Aids. Guaranteed to be pure. Only 10¢ each for full sized packages at your 5 and 10¢ store.

THESE MARK BIG CONTAINERS TOO



Irresistible Perfume and Beauty Aids

FIFTH AVENUE NEW YORK

ONLY 10c EACH AT YOUR 5 and 10c STORE

This SAFE treatment stops the pain of an ACHING CORN instantly

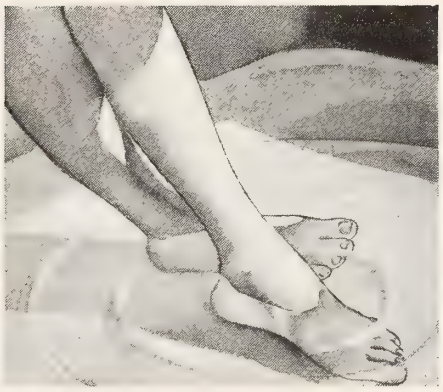
removes the corn safely and scientifically in 3 days . . .] METHOD USED WITH SUCCESS BY 30,000,000 FORMER CORN SUFFERERS



(1) No one but a corn sufferer can know how much a corn really hurts!

No wonder people with corns try many ways to end them. Some even use razor blades—little knowing the danger! Others use new, untried and unscientific methods. Both of these risks are unnecessary . . . for Blue-Jay offers a safe, scientific method of ending corn suffering.

(2) WHY A CORN HURTS

Perhaps you have wondered why such a small thing as a corn can cause such excruciating pain. A corn is shaped like a cone, with the small end pointing into the toe. This inverted cone, under pressure from the shoe, presses against sensitive nerves, which carry pain sensations to the brain and nervous system. That is why the corn seems to hurt "all over."

(3) But there is no need to go on suffering corn pain at all. This safe, easy, Blue-Jay method has ended corn suffering for millions of people during the past 35 years. It will end corn suffering just as surely for you. Made by Bauer & Black, world-famous surgical dressing manufacturer.

No muss or bother when you use Blue-Jay. It's as simple as A, B, C. First, you soak the foot for ten minutes in hot water, then wipe it dry.

(4) Then, apply a Blue-Jay Corn Remover, centering the pad directly over the corn. The soft, snug fitting pad stops the pain instantly by removing shoe pressure. Does not show under the smartest shoes. Wet-Pruf adhesive strip holds the pad exactly in place . . . allows free bathing . . . does not chafe the stocking. You walk in comfort . . . forget you have a corn.

(5) In the meantime, the mild, gentle Blue-Jay medication is slowly undermining the corn without your knowing it. At the end of three days take off the plaster, soak the foot again in hot water, and the entire corn lifts right out. (Old, tough corns may need a second application—Blue-Jay, though sure-fire, is mild in its action.)

Read these typical letters from BLUE-JAY users!

Recommendation to Nurses. "Blue-Jay is the most effective corn plaster I have ever used," writes Mrs. Clara Werner, Minneapolis. "It will remove a corn for me in three days, without the least pain or discomfort. I am a nurse and on my feet most of the time, so it is very important to have well feet. I recommend it to all nurses."

Do You Do This, Too? "When I see a woman hobbling along, or surreptitiously slipping off a shoe in a movie, restaurant or church, I have the inclination to lean over and whisper, 'Why don't you use Blue-Jay?' Long ago I resigned from that 'suffering sisterhood' by using Blue-Jays as soon as the need for treatment of a corn arose."—Myra Cline, Denver, Colo.

Corn Pain Shows in Face, says Miss Gladys Marie Hobart, San Francisco. "I cannot be happy if my entire nervous system is upset because of the misery of an aching corn. Besides, I want to look fit. I don't want my complexion marked with the irritable lines that suffering from a corn can give. Since corns are inevitable, I am thankful to Blue-Jays for their cure and instant relief from pain."

No Soreness or Irritation says O. M. Hux, Essex, Mo. "I like Blue-Jay for the things it does not do. It does not hurt. It does not leave the toe sore and irritated, and does not injure the tissue surrounding the corn. Last but not least it does not cost much."

Every drug store sells BLUE-JAY • It is the most popular corn remover because the millions of corn sufferers who have used it have recommended it to their friends. Doctors and nurses often write in to say that they use Blue-Jay themselves because it is so safe and so easy. No muss or bother. Blue-Jay goes on in an instant . . . and that very instant the pain stops. In 3 days the corn is gone.

If you are one who has risked the danger of infection by cutting corns or using unscientific methods, just use Blue-Jay once. You, too, will be convinced.

Blue-Jay costs but 25c a package. (Special sizes for bunions and calluses.)

BLUE-JAY BAUER & BLACK SCIENTIFIC CORN PLASTER

© The Kendall Company

FREE! FOOT EXERCISE BOOK WITH PICTURES

"For Better Feet"—Free Booklet contains very helpful information for foot sufferers. Also valuable exercises for foot health and beauty. Mail coupon to Bauer & Black, 2500 S. Dearborn Street, Chicago.

(Pasting this coupon on a government postcard will save postage)

MS-5

Name.....

Street.....

City & State.....

©C1B 257331

MODERN SCREEN

NOW SHOWING

WE SALUTE "DAVID COPPERFIELD" A new screen honor 8
ONE GIRL'S HOPELESS LOVE FOR BILL POWELL But they're still friends ... T. B. Fithian 26
GLAMOR IS NOT A GIFT Proving that you can acquire it ..... Adele Whitely Fletcher 28
LOVABLE GENIUS Meet "David Copperfield" Bartholomew ..... Roberta Ormiston 30
GARBO VAS DERE And so was our Scotty to catch her ..... J. B. Scott 32
THE WOMAN IN HIS LIFE Why Tullio Carminati is a bachelor ..... Martha Kerr 33
VERY DIFFERENT, OFF SCREEN Kitty Carlisle's really a swell nut! ..... Katherine Albert 34
I WORK IN A FACTORY Gene Raymond has no time for romance ..... Elizabeth Ellis 42
ESPECIALLY FOR REDHEADS Tips from red-haired Nancy Carroll ..... Adele Clinton 43
MODERN SCREEN-WARNER SONG CONTEST Last chance to win a prize 44
SOREHEAD? NO, BUT— George Raft has a genius for trouble ..... Helen Louise Walker 50
WAS IT RIGHT TO FILM THE HAUPTMANN TRIAL? What do you think? Robert Eichberg 52
BECKY SHARP A thrilling fictionization of Thackeray's heroine ..... Ethel Pomeroy 54
SIX MONTHS IN HELL The early tragedy of Grace Moore's life ..... Dell Hogarth 56
A LITTLE CHILD SHALL LEAD THEM BY THE NOSE Introducing Sandy Burns Sara Hamilton 58
I BET I STAY MARRIED Una Merkel tells you why she thinks so ..... Ruth Biery 60
THE MAN FROM DEAD PAN ALLEY Champion dead panner Sparks ..... Kay Osborn 61
IS IT A DREAM? Joe Morrison wonders ..... S. R. Mooks 62
YOU OUGHT TO BE IN PICTURES Or should you, this author asks? ..... Paul Van Sloun 63
"SMOOTH" CLOTHES FOR YOUNG GADABOUTS Fashion's younger side ..... Adelia Bird 64

SHORT SUBJECTS

Information Desk 6
Patterns 10
Picture News 11
Modern Hostess 12
Modern Screen's Movie Scoreboard 14
Beauty Advice 16
Exclusive Portraits 19
The Academy Awards Banquet 35
Good News 36
Reviews 46
Happy Birthday to You! 48
More Fun! 51
Modern Screen's Dramatic School 68
All Joking Aside 122

MARY BURGUM, EDITOR
APRIL LAMARQUE, Art Editor
ADELIA BIRD, Associate Editor
REGINA CANNON, Hollywood Editor

Published monthly and copyrighted 1935 by Dell Publishing Company, Incorporated. Office of publication at Washington and South Avenues, Dunellen, N. J. Executive and editorial offices, 149 Madison Avenue, N. Y. George T. Delacorte, Jr., President; H. Meyer Vice-President; M. Delacorte, Secretary. Vol. 10, No. 6, May, 1935. Printed in the U. S. A. Price in the United States $1.20 a year, 10c a copy. Canadian subscriptions, $2.40 a year. Foreign subscriptions, $2.20 a year. Entered as second class matter, September 18, 1930, at the Post Office at Dunellen, New Jersey, under act of March 3, 1879. The publishers accept no responsibility for the return of unsolicited material. Sole Foreign Agents: The International News Company, Ltd., 5 Breams Building, London, E. C. 4, England.

The VICTOR HERBERT'S GREATEST— BIG MUSICAL OF ALL TIME!

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer rings up the curtain on its greatest achievement ... a glamorous pageant of drama, mirth and beauty... mightier than any musical yet seen on the screen! You'll thrill to its glittering extravagance... you'll laugh at its bright comedy... and you'll cheer those new sweethearts, Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy, who found their love under the creole moon. It's the screen's musical masterpiece!

Jeanette MacDONALD • Nelson EDDY

NAUGHTY MARIETTA

a W. S. VAN DYKE PRODUCTION
Book and Lyrics by Rida Johnson Young

with
FRANK MORGAN
Douglas Dumbrille
A Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Picture
Produced by HUNT STROMBERG

★ STARRING IN "SWEET MUSIC"

ANN DVORAK, WARNER BROS.

How movie stars guard the natural beauty of their hair

Hollywood's loveliest screen stars guard the natural beauty of their hair like a precious jewel. For this reason DUART PERMANENT WAVES have become the choice of the stars and are featured in the finer Hollywood Beauty Salons. These salons take great pride in offering their famous patrons the protection of genuine Duart Waving Pads that now come in INDIVIDUAL SEALED CARTONS.

Duart and only Duart offers you this protection when you buy a permanent wave. When the operator breaks the seal before your eyes you know the waving pads are genuine Duart and never before used on another person's hair. For your next wave insist on Duart—the choice of the Hollywood stars.

FREE BOOKLET

Now you can wear a movie star's coiffure

Send for this booklet containing smart new Hollywood Hair Styles. 24 pages of photos showing how to dress your hair the way the movie stars do. Sent FREE with one 10-cent package of Duart Hair Rinse. Choose from 12 shades listed in coupon. It does NOT dye or bleach.

SEND COUPON

DUART

Choice of the Hollywood Stars

Duart, 984 Folsom St., San Francisco, Calif.
I enclose 10 cents for one package of Duart Hair Rinse and the FREE Booklet of Smart new Movie Star Coiffures.

Name.....

Address.....

City.....State.....

Mark your shade of rinse.

☐ Black ☐ Dark Brown ☐ Titian Reddish Brown
☐ Golden Brown ☐ Chestnut Brown ☐ Titian Reddish Blonde
☐ Light Golden Blonde ☐ Henna ☐ White or Gray (Platinum)
☐ Ash Blonde ☐ Medium Brown ☐ Golden Blonde

INFORMATION DESK

What do you want to know next?

Questions asked most frequently and the most interesting ones rate first preference. Don't ask questions which require too much research or infringe upon good taste, and not too many at a time, please. Address: The Information Desk, Modern Screen, 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

NOTE: The Desk has been fairly swamped with questions about the one and only DICK POWELL. Since it is impossible to list all the names and addresses and still have enough space left for the answers, please look for your answer in the following:

Richard E. Powell, whose real name is just that, was born a country boy in Mountain View, Ark., on November 14, 1904. (Which makes him just 30.) When he was 12, his father, mother and two brothers, Howard and Luther, moved to Little Rock where he attended grammar and high school and Little Rock College for one year. He learned, at this time, to play the saxophone, cornet and clarinet and organized an orchestra. He sang in a church choir, and for weddings and funerals. He made an unsuccessful try at vaudeville in St. Louis, after which he returned to Little Rock and married Mildred Maund. Dick was having a pretty tough time of it until a visiting orchestra, the Royal Peacocks, signed him to a contract and carried him and his wife off to Louisville, Ky. He had various other positions after that, finally ending up as master of ceremonies in a theatre in Pittsburgh, where he stayed for over three years. Then a Warner Brothers scout spotted him, arranged for a screen test and a contract. His first picture was "Blessed Event" which he made in 1932. Outside of film work, he is interested in music, flying, golf, swimming, horseback riding, bridge and football games. He collects musical instruments and enjoys making home-made movies. He is six feet tall, weighs 172 pounds, has blue eyes and auburn hair. Shortly after Dick came to Hollywood Mildred Maund divorced him, and since then he has been seen most frequently with Mary Brian. Whether they will ever be married is a question only they can answer—and they won't. At present Dick broadcasts every Friday night at 9:30 P.M. on the Columbia network. After "Gold Diggers of 1935" in which Gloria Stuart is his leading lady, he will take the part of Lysander in "A Midsummer Night's Dream." He is also scheduled to appear in "Broadway Gondolier" and "Radio Jamboree of 1935" with Ruby Keeler. He is under contract to Warner Bros. Studios, Burbank, Calif., where you can write him for a photo.

JACK McMAHON, Brooklyn, N. Y.—Let the argument cease! Alan Hale was the driver of the Ford and the lusty singer in "It Happened One Night."

HELEN LITTLE, Grantwood, N. J.; ADDIE BROWN, St. Louis, Mo.; ETHEL MARTINEZ, Bronx, N. Y.; JO ANN BARR and LOUISE PRATT, New York City; PHYLLIS FONTAINE, Chicago, Ill.—Since the "Invisible Man" has become visible, he has attracted a great deal of attention. Claude Rains was born in London, England, on November 10, 1889, and made his first stage appearance at the age of 11. From that time on, until the war, Rains appeared in plays in England, Australia and in New Haven, Conn., where he made his American debut. After the war he resumed his career in London and then returned to America where he became well known on Broadway. "The Invisible Man" was his first picture and "Crime Without Passion" his second. He has recently made "The Man Who Reclaimed His Head" and "The Mystery of Edwin Drood." His next will be an English-made picture, "The Clairvoyant" with Fay Wray. Mr. Rains is an impressive person. While he is not tall, he is well built. His hair is black and unruly and his features strong. He has mysterious and commanding eyes. He has been married three times—to Isabel Jeans, Marie Hemingway and Beatrice Thompson. He is under contract to Universal Studios, Universal City, Calif., where you may reach him.

CLARENCE THOMPSON, Memphis, Tenn.—You're quite right. Doris Kenyon was in "Voltaire" with George Arliss.

KATHERINE ENTAS, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; GLORIA GRANT, Bronx, N. Y.; RUTH HERMANN, Rochester, N. Y.; CHARLOTTE CEKALA, New Britain, Conn.; FRANCES DE LEONARDO, Ellwood City, Pa.; LOIS LEVY, San Francisco, Calif.—Did you know that Phil Regan is none other than the one time "Singing Cop" of radio? Well, he was just that before the movies claimed him. He was really a cop, too, on the New York Police Force, and probably would be still if it hadn't been for that marvelous tenor voice of his. He was born in Brooklyn, May 28, 1908. This handsome young Irish-American is 5 feet 10 inches tall, has hazel eyes and black hair—to say nothing of his charming smile. He has appeared in "The Key," "Housewife," "Sweet Adeline," and is also in "Go Into Your Dance" and "Caliente." After these, he is scheduled for lots more, for Warner Brothers like him. You may reach him at their studio, Burbank, Calif., and maybe he will send you a photo.

BLAKE STEADMAN, Thorold, Ont.—Robert Montgomery and Norma Shearer have played in the following pictures together: "Their Own Desire," "The Divorcee," "Riptide" and "Private Lives," a play by Noel Coward first produced on Broadway under the same title. Okay?

PAULINE KELCH, Windsor, Ont.; LEONORE HEFLIN, Philadelphia, Pa.; ANN RAPIER, Waverly, Ky.; BETTY POLONIATAKIS, Pawtucket, R. I.; MARIAN MAREVKA, Chicago, Ill.; ELAINE GAMBLE, Somerville, Mass.—It is only fitting, we suppose, that Ruby Keeler's history should be given almost in the same breath as that of Dick Powell. So here goes. On August 25, 1909, our Ruby took her first look at Halifax, Nova Scotia, and continued to look at it for three years until her family moved to New York. Here she attended public school and later the Professional Children's School, making her stage debut at 13 and appearing in choruses of Broadway musicals while still going to school. She came into the public eye in Texas Guinan's floor show, and Ziegfeld signed her as chief tap dancer for "Whoopee." In 1928 she met Al Jolson and became his missus, after which she was starred in "Show Girl." "42nd Street" first presented her to screen audiences, and since then life has been just one big musical after another. Off the screen she is shy and retiring, dresses modestly and is a grand little wife, according to Al. She likes to fish, play golf and ride horseback. A typical Irish beauty, Ruby has brown, wavy hair and blue eyes. Her weight is 105 and her height 5 feet 4. Right now she and Al are making their first picture

(Continued on page 13)

Dick Powell decked out for Spring.

THE PICTURE OF THE MONTH

GO INTO YOUR DANCE with Ruby Keeler in the swellest stepping she's ever done!

GO INTO YOUR DANCE as Al Jolson sings his heart out to Ruby in 5 new ballads!

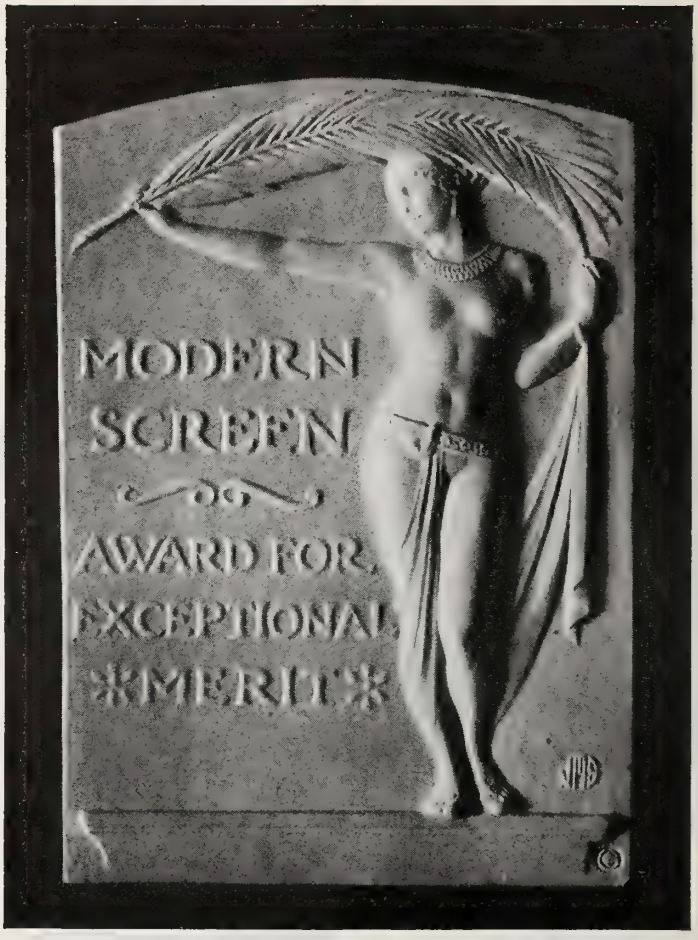
GO INTO YOUR DANCE to the lilting tunes of 8 grand songs by Warren & Dubin!

GO INTO YOUR DANCE with Glenda Farrell, Patsy Kelly, Helen Morgan, Benny Rubin, and other big stars!

GO INTO YOUR DANCE with 100's of girls in ravishing Bobby Connolly spectacles!

☆

Clap Hands for Another Honey from Warner Bros.—a Lyrical Miracle that Runs Away with April's Blue Ribbon! Even if Its Drama and Music Weren't Blended So Magically into Entertainment That Is Sheer Enchantment, You'd Still Insist on Seeing It Because It Teams for the First Time on the Screen



Al JOLSON and Ruby KEELER in "GO INTO YOUR DANCE"

Famous "42nd Street's" author, Bradford Ropes, wrote this story of a girl who played with death for her man's life—staged against the thrilling backdrop of New York's hot spots. And you'll like Archie L. Mayo's smart direction for First National Pictures.

☆

we salute
'DAVID COPPERFIELD'

With this issue MODERN SCREEN inaugurates a series of awards for exceptional motion pictures. We take great pleasure in making our first award for exceptional merit to M-G-M's magnificent production, "David Copperfield"

WE salute "David Copperfield" and all those who had a part in making it the great achievement it is. Millions of hearts have felt a great deal warmer, millions of lives have been brightened, as audiences witnessed the beloved characters of Dickens' novel so truthfully portrayed on the screen. It is a picture to see, not once, but many times, for each time one finds something new to laugh over, some new touch of pathos to stir the heart, some new memory to cherish. We are happy to join in the universal acclaim of "David Copperfield."

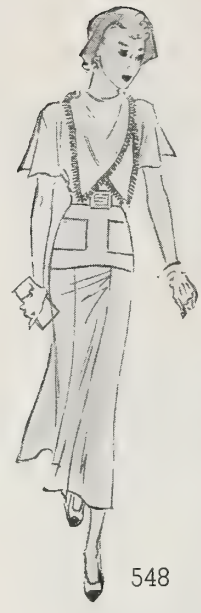
HOW AM I DOIN'?

Mae West acclaimed Belle of the 1930's, as thousands cheer!

WE'D say, Miss West, that you're doin' okay!

You proved yourself the undisputed "Belle of the Nineties" a while ago. But why limit things? Why don't we acclaim you the "Belle of the 1930's" right now? The five gentlemen who seem so anxious to light your cigarette have already cast their vote. Paramount, blissfully remembering box office receipts on your past pictures, has cast its vote. And we herewith cast ours.

Mae, you were swell in bustles and passementerie, but we've always wanted to see you in some streamline, airflow, 1935 clothes! If you could make husbands absent-minded in puffed sleeves, what could you do to 'em in a Patou? In "How Am I Doin'?" we found out!



In this picture the girl with the hair-trigger wit sets a few new styles. She is as modern as next season's hat. She wears clothes that will make wives absent-minded, too. And she talks a Westian line of wisecracks that will be quoted by comedians, amateur and professional, for months to come.

Scallions to those who hinted that you needed an hour-glass silhouette and ostrich plumes, gentlemen in peg-top trousers, rococo furniture, and the bad, bad background of the Mauve Decade to set you off. Orchids to you for doing something different. Our hat (last season's, we must, with some sorrow, admit) is off to you!

(Advt.)

MODERN SCREEN PATTERNS

Remember how you loved the Janet Gaynor Hungarian blouse? Well, this month we have another one for you that we think you will be equally as crazy about. It's number 544, worn by Mary Brian. It's a Russian type of sailor blouse with effective full sleeves and contrasting braid trimming. You may wear the collar either up or down. The flannel skirt is part of the costume and is straight with kick pleat. Pattern 541 is a smart two-piece ensemble of jacket and short-sleeved dress worn by Frances Drake. Polka dotted silk for the fabric and plain crêpe or cotton piqué for the smart collar and jacket trim. Pattern 548 is Gail Patrick's good looking two-piece white dress with a scarf collar that is draped like a bib. The fabric is a waffle weave silk. Cape-like sleeves and fringe edge for the scarf. The skirt has a stitched-down box pleat at front. All of these patterns come in sizes 14, 16, 18, 36, 38, 40.

548

544

541

MODERN SCREEN Pattern Service
149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

I am enclosing.....(in coin or United States stamps) for which please send me the following:

Pattern No.....Size.....Pattern No.....Size.....
Pattern No..... Size.....

Do you want our new Spring Pattern Book?.....
Patterns are 15c each. Books 10c when ordered with pattern; 15c when ordered separately. Patterns are 20c if you live outside of the United States. Books 20c separately, 15c with pattern. No foreign or Canadian stamps accepted.

Name .....

Street Address .....

City and State.....
(Please write in pencil)

PICTURE NEWS !

The Fred Astaires arrive in high spirits for Kay Francis' nautical shindig. Mrs. Fred was Phyllis Potter and she is pretty enough to be in pictures, don't you think?

Above, Scotty gets around. This time he's at the Cocoanut Grove in time to snap the Cedric Gibbons (need we say Dolores Del Rio?) and Whitney De Rham upon arrival.

Back to the Kay Francis party. Above, the hostess and a guest help Joan Bennett aboard. Below, Kay graciously poses with a dirty, bearded deckhand named Cagney!

Above, more Francis party guests. Admiral Ed Robinson with distinguished lipstick insignia on cheek! And Anna Sten. Below, the Charles Boyers (Pat Paterson).

Above, you see the living-room of Janet's studio bungalow. She eats her lunch here rather than in the commissary because it is so restful. Right, Janet all decked out as a cook, and very pretty, too!

by Marjorie Deen

The MODERN HOSTESS

"MOMMIE," said the little girl at the movies, as a trailer flashed a vivid description of a forthcoming feature, "Mommie, what is 'glamor'?"

"Glamor," replied her mother slowly, trying to decide on a simple definition, "glamor is—well, it's what women on the screen have that makes them so popular."

"Oh," replied the very young miss with satisfaction, "then Janet Gaynor has glamor, hasn't she?"

Well, no, my dear, Janet Gaynor is not said to have glamor—nor is she ever described as "seductive," "exotic" or "intense." Why, she is not even supposed to be style conscious! But is she popular? She is, in fact, according to box office receipts, the most popular of all the women stars.

The secret of Janet's success is in the simple things that lie close to the heart. Not for her are stories that are a bit questionable, or roles that call for strange creations of the costume designers and coiffeurs. And because of this very simplicity, little girls, like the inquiring young miss of whom I just spoke, hope they'll "grow up to be like Janet Gaynor," while older women love to think of themselves as having resembled her in their youth. She is what every young man thinks his future bride will be like—and what every father hopes his daughter will resemble.

WHILE other stars "with glamor" flash like meteors across the sky and disappear into the darkness, our little Janet continues to hold the enviable position she has earned in the hearts of millions of fans.

Strange, isn't it, that despite our much vaunted sophistication and modernity we still idealize and idolize a person who typifies exactly the opposite? And since I am dedicating this article to (Continued on page 70)

Home-baked foods are Janet Gaynor's culinary pets

Ruby Keeler, screendom's sweetest star.

Information Desk

(Continued from page 6)

together—"Go Into Your Dance." After that Warner Brothers' little pet will probably be in "Radio Jamboree of 1935," again reunited with that Powell boy. Burbank, Cal., is W. B.'s Studio address.

KAY LANDERS, Boston, Mass.—Joan Crawford's first (very first) picture was "Pretty Ladies," in which she was merely an extra by the name of Lucille LeSueur. Her next was "Old Clothes" with Jackie Coogan. She was, however, also in "Across to Singapore" in 1928 and in "Four Walls," "Rose Marie" and "Our Blushing Brides," as you suspected.

JOANNA, Waxahachie, Tex.; ANNE JORDAN, Syracuse, N. Y.; TED KALE, Central Falls, R. I., DOROTHY MORROW, Decatur, Ill.; MARJORIE GROSS, Chicago, Ill.—Next we have Joe Morrison, a young man who is going places in a hurry. Grand Rapids, Mich., was Joe's birthplace on November 19, 1908. There he attended grammar school, Catholic Central High School, and afterwards spent four years at St. Joseph's Seminary in preparation for priesthood. He decided, however, that his future happiness would best be guaranteed if he pursued a vocal career instead. At 18 he joined a quartette on the RKO vaudeville circuit, and finally landed in Hollywood at the Music Box Theatre in "Nine O'Clock Revue." His hopes that the producers would notice him were shattered, and there he was, in Hollywood, without a job. He flipped a coin, and decided to return to New York, where, for 17 weeks he sang as the "Beloved Vagabond" over WOR. Then followed a year as soloist with George Olsen's orchestra, and finally the successful launching of "The Last Round-Up" which Joe sang to perfection. Then Hollywood came to him, and he made his first picture for Paramount in 1934—"The Old Fashioned Way," followed by "Home on the Range," "One Hour Late" and "Love in Bloom," his latest. His next will be "Four Hours to Kill." Joe has dark brown hair and twinkling blue eyes, weighs 150 pounds and is 5 feet 10 inches tall. He isn't married yet, but just wait until the Hollywood gals get wise!

JOHN WAYNE, Sheridan, Pa.—The student nurses who supported Loretta Young in "The White Parade" were Dorothy Wilson, Muriel Kirkland, Astrid Allwyn and Joyce Compton, who took the part of Texas. She was born in Lexington, Ky., and moved to Tulsa, Okla., where she attended high school. (No, the Southern accent wasn't a fake.) A newspaper beauty contest was her ticket to the movies and Hollywood, where she stayed, taking extra parts. She is 5 feet 5 inches tall, weighs 116 pounds and has flaming red hair and blue eyes. Sounds (and looks) good! She is a free-lance player, but her next picture will be "Mr. Dynamite" for Universal Studios, Universal City, Cal., where you may be able to reach her.

TELVIS WALLACE, Evarts, Ky.; MARY GAILBREATH, Washington, D. C.; CECELIA RYNIEC, South Amboy, N. J.; JEAN HIRSCH, Detroit, Mich.; MARIAN E. RYAN, Sennett, N. Y.—Ever heard of Mae Green? Oh, yes you have, only you know her as Jean Parker. Originally (August 11, 1915), of Deer Lodge, Mont., her education was received in Los Angeles and Pasadena, where she attended high school. Jean actually floated into the movies on a bed of roses—she was riding a float in a Pasadena Tournament of Roses when a movie executive saw her. Her first picture was "Divorce in the Family" in 1931. Ambition is this young lady's middle name. She has only five; interpretive dancing, acting, painting, music and writing. She speaks French fluently and likes to dance and swim. Her favorite color is jade green, which goes beautifully with her dark brown hair and blue green eyes. She is only 5 feet 3 inches tall and weighs 105 pounds—no wonder her friends call her Robin. She is rumored engaged to a childhood sweetheart—Francis Lucas. She is rarely seen with anyone else. Her most recent picture is "Sequoia" and her next will be "Princess O'Hara" for which Universal borrowed her from M-G-M Studios, Culver City, Cal. "Have a Heart" was an original story.

FULTON A. KING, Weyers Cave, Va.—Doris Davenport is the gal you mean, who took the part of Toots in "Kid Millions." Information about her is scarce, but she is not under contract to any studio, although you may take a chance and write her at Samuel Goldwyn Studios, 7210 Santa Monica Blvd., Hollywood, Cal. That's all, but you're right about her looks.

Sally is a little gossip...and I'm glad she is!

"I'm glad you came over to visit me while you wash your dolly's clothes, Sally. Let me lend you some soap."

"No, thanks—I brought my own kind along—'cause I don't want Arabella's clothes to do any tattling on me."

"Why, clothes can't tattle, Sally."

"'Deed they can! My mommy says the little bride across the street works real hard—but her clothes are full of tattle-tale gray—'cause she uses a soap that doesn't unstick all the dirt."

"But my mommy's clothes are white as anything—'cause she's smart. She uses this Fels-Naptha Soap! Smell? That's naptha, mommy says—heaps of it."

"M-m-m! So that's why Fels-Naptha gets all the dirt. I wonder if . . ."

Few weeks later: "Goody! Goody!—strawberry ice cream!"

"That's a treat for you, Sally. You're a little gossip—but I've got to thank you for making me change to Fels-Naptha. My washes look lots whiter now!"

Banish "Tattle-Tale Gray" with FELS-NAPTHA SOAP

LITTLE gossips are cute—but you would not want any grown-up gossips to see "tattle-tale gray" in your clothes.

So change to Fels-Naptha Soap—it gets clothes gorgeously white!

Fels-Naptha, you see, is richer soap—good golden soap! And there's lots of naptha in it. When these two cleaners get busy, dirt simply has to let go—ALL OF IT!

Fels-Naptha is so gentle, too—you can trust your daintiest silk undies to it! It's kind to hands—there's soothing glycerine in every golden bar.

Try Fels-Naptha in tub, basin, or machine. Get a supply at your grocer's! Fels & Co., Phila., Pa. © 1935, FELS & CO. NRA CODE

MODERN SCREEN'S

Name of Picture and Company	Modern Screen	N. Y. Times	N. Y. Herald Tribune	N. Y. American	N. Y. Evening Journal	N. Y. Post	N. Y. Sun	N. Y. Daily News	N. Y. Daily Mirror	World-Telegram	Chicago Herald-Examiner	Los Angeles Examiner	Hollywood Reporter	Film Daily	Variety	General Ratings
Anne of Green Gables (RKO)	4★	4★	2★	4★	4★	4★	3★	3½★	4★	4★	4★	4★	4★	4★	4★	4★
Babes in Toyland (M-G-M)	3★	4★	3★	3★	4★	3★	4★	3½★	4★	3★	4★	4★	4★	4★	4★	4★
Babbitt (First National)	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	2½★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	2★	3★
Baboona (Martin Johnsons)	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	4★	3★	4★	4★	4★	0	0	3★	4★	3★
Behind the Evidence (Columbia)	2★	1★	1★	2★	1★	1★	2★	2★	2★	1★	0	2★	2★	2★	1★	2★
Behold My Wife (Paramount)	3★	1★	3★	2½★	2★	2★	1★	2★	2★	1★	3★	3★	3★	2★	2½★	2★
The Best Man Wins (Columbia)	3★	2★	2½★	3★	2★	2★	0	2½★	3★	2★	0	3★	3★	2★	2★	2★
Big-Hearted Herbert (Warners)	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	2½★	3★	3★	4★	3★	3★	4★	3★	3★
Bordertown (Warners)	3★	4★	4★	4★	4★	2★	3★	3★	4★	2★	0	4★	4★	3★	4★	3★
Bright Eyes (Fox)	3★	3★	4★	4★	4★	4★	4★	3½★	4★	3★	3★	4★	3★	4★	4★	3★
Broadway Bill (Columbia)	5★	4★	5★	5★	5★	4★	5★	3½★	4★	5★	5★	4★	4★	4★	5★	5★
By Your Leave (RKO)	3★	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	2★	3★	2★	3★	3★
The Captain Hates the Sea (Columbia)	4★	2★	3★	4★	4★	4★	2★	3½★	3★	3★	4★	4★	4★	4★	3★	3★
Car 99 (Paramount)	3★	3★	3★	2★	3★	3★	0	2½★	3★	3★	0	0	3★	3★	3★	3★
Carnival (Columbia)	3★	2½★	2★	3★	2★	2★	2★	2½★	2★	2★	0	2★	4★	3★	3★	2★
Charlie Chan in Paris (Fox)	3★	2★	2★	3★	4★	4★	3★	2½★	4★	3★	3★	3★	4★	4★	3★	3★
Clive of India (20th Century)	4★	4½★	4★	4★	4★	4½★	4½★	3½★	4★	4½★	4½★	4★	4½★	4½★	4½★	4★
College Rhythm (Paramount)	2★	3★	2½★	3★	3★	3★	3★	2½★	0	2★	3★	0	4★	3★	4★	3★
The County Chairman (Fox)	3★	4★	4★	4★	3★	3★	4★	3★	3★	3★	4★	4★	4★	4★	3★	3★
Dangerous Corner (RKO)	3★	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	0	3★	3★	3★	3★	2★
David Copperfield (M-G-M)	5★	5★	5★	5★	5★	5★	5★	4★	5★	5★	5★	5★	5★	5★	5★	5★
Devil Dogs of the Air (Warners)	3★	3★	3★	4★	4★	3★	3★	2½★	4★	4★	4★	4★	4★	4★	3★	3★
Enter Madame (Paramount)	3★	2★	3★	2★	2★	2★	2★	2½★	3★	2★	0	0	3★	2★	3★	2★
Evelyn Prentice (M-G-M)	3★	3★	3★	4★	4★	2★	3★	3★	4★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★
Evensong (Gaumont-British)	3★	3★	3★	4★	3★	2★	4★	3★	3★	2★	0	0	3★	2★	4★	3★
Evergreen (Gaumont-British)	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	4★	3★	0	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★
Father Brown, Detective (Paramount)	2★	0	0	2★	0	0	0	2★	2★	0	0	3★	2★	2★	2★	2★
The Firebird (Warners)	3★	3★	2½★	3★	3★	2★	2★	2½★	3★	2★	3★	3★	4★	3★	2½★	2★
Flirtation Walk (Warners)	3★	3★	3★	4★	4★	2★	3★	4★	4★	4★	4★	4★	3★	4★	4★	3★

Accurate reports of your favorite critics' ratings of current pictures

Modern Screen
Regina Cannon

New York American
Regina Crewe

New York Daily Mirror
Bland Johaneson

New York Daily News
Kate Cameron

New York Evening Journal
Rose Pelswick

New York Herald Tribune
Richard Watts, Jr.

MOVIE SCOREBOARD

Name of Picture and Company	Modern Screen	N. Y. Times	N. Y. Herald Tribune	N. Y. American	N. Y. Evening Journal	N. Y. Post	N. Y. Sun	N. Y. Daily News	N. Y. Daily Mirror	World-Telegram	Chicago Herald-Examiner	Los Angeles Examiner	Hollywood Reporter	Film Daily	Variety	General Ratings
Folies Bergere (20th Century)	3★	3★	2★	3★	3★	2★	3★	3★	3★	2★	0	0	3★	3★	3★	3★
Forsaking All Others (M-G-M)	3★	3★	3★	4★	4★	2★	3★	3★	3★	2★	3★	3★	4★	4★	3★	3★
Gambling (Fox)	2★	2★	2★	2★	2★	2★	2★	2½★	3★	3★	3★	2★	1★	3★	2½★	2★
The Gay Bride of the Rackets (M-G-M)	1★	2½★	2★	1★	2½★	2★	0	2½★	2★	3★	0	3★	1★	2★	2★	2★
The Gay Divorcee (RKO)	5★	5★	5★	5★	5★	5★	5★	4★	5★	5★	5★	5★	5★	5★	5★	5★
Gentlemen Are Born (First National)	3★	3★	2½★	3★	3★	3★	2★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	1★	2★	3★	3★
The Gilded Lily (Paramount)	4★	3½★	3★	4★	3½★	3★	3★	3½★	3★	3½★	4★	4★	4★	2★	4★	3★
Grand Old Girl (RKO)	3★	2★	2★	2★	2★	3★	2★	2½★	3★	2★	2★	2★	3★	3★	2★	2★
The Great Hotel Murder (Fox)	2★	2★	2★	3★	2★	2★	2½★	2½★	2★	1★	0	0	3★	3★	2★	2★
The Good Fairy (Universal)	3★	3★	3★	4★	3★	3★	4★	3½★	4★	3★	3★	4★	4★	4★	4★	3★
Great Expectations (Universal)	4★	0	0	4★	0	0	0	3★	0	0	3★	0	4★	3★	3★	3★
Helldorado (Fox)	2★	3★	2★	2★	2★	3★	2★	2½★	2★	1★	2½★	2★	3★	2★	2★	2★
Hell in the Heavens (Fox)	3★	3★	2½★	3★	2★	3★	3★	2½★	3★	2★	2★	0	3★	3★	2★	3★
Here Is My Heart (Paramount)	3★	4★	3★	4★	4★	4★	4★	3½★	4★	4★	4★	3★	4★	4★	4★	4★
Home on the Range (Paramount)	2★	1★	2★	2★	2★	1½★	0	2½★	3★	1★	0	0	2★	3★	2★	2★
I Am a Thief (First National)	2★	1★	2★	2★	3★	2★	2★	2½★	0	1★	0	2★	3★	2★	2★	2★
Imitation of Life (Universal)	3★	3★	2½★	3★	3★	2★	3★	2½★	4★	2★	3★	0	0	4★	4★	3★
The Iron Duke (Gaumont-British)	3★	3★	3★	2★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	2★	0	0	3★	3★	3★	3★
I Sell Anything (First National)	3★	2½	2½★	2★	3★	3★	3★	2½★	3★	3★	2★	0	2★	2★	2★	2★
It's a Gift (Paramount)	3★	4★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	2★	4★	4★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★
Kansas City Princess (Warners)	2★	2½★	2½★	3★	3★	3★	2★	2½★	3★	2★	0	0	2★	1★	2★	2★
Kentucky Kernels (RKO)	3★	2★	2★	3★	2★	3★	2★	2½★	3★	1★	0	0	4★	2★	3★	2★
Kid Millions (Sam Goldwyn)	4★	4★	4★	4★	4★	4★	4★	3½★	4★	4★	4★	4★	4★	4★	4★	4★
Lady by Choice (Columbia)	4★	3★	2★	3★	3★	2★	3★	2½★	3★	2★	2★	2★	4★	3★	3★	3★
Limehouse Blues (Paramount)	2★	1★	1★	2★	0	1★	0	2★	0	2★	2★	0	2★	1★	2★	2★
Little Men (Mascot)	3★	2½★	2★	3★	2★	2½★	2★	2½★	2½★	2★	0	0	4★	3★	0	2★
The Little Minister (RKO)	3★	4★	4★	4★	4★	4★	3★	4★	4★	4★	4★	4★	3★	4★	4★	4★
Lives of a Bengal Lancer (Paramount)	5★	5★	5★	5★	5★	5★	5★	4★	5★	5★	5★	5★	5★	5★	5★	5★
The Man Who Reclaimed His Head (Uni.)	3★	3★	2★	4★	2★	2★	3★	3★	4★	2★	3★	3★	3★	3★	4★	3★

(Continued on page 74)

5★, extraordinary; 4★, very good; 3★, good; 2★, fair; 1★, poor; 0, no review

New York Post
Thornton Delehanty

New York Sun
Eileen Creelman

New York Times
Andre Sennwald

New York World-Telegram
William Boehnel

Chicago Herald-Examiner
Carol Frink

Los Angeles Examiner
Louella Parsons

Beauty Advice

Madge Evans, beautiful as she is, isn't above wishing for what a million other girls desire—long, heavy eyelashes. And clipping them does the trick.

Is your hair drab and oily? See page 98 for a personal service.

by Mary Biddle

MADGE EVANS is the kind of a girl who represents most any woman's wistful dream of the grown-up daughter she would like to have, or the sweetheart she would like her son to marry. Not so many years ago Madge walked into the hearts of the screen public as an adorable, curly-headed child star and now she is just the kind of a person that that child star should have grown up to be. She is lovely. She is unaffected. There's nothing artificial or made-up about her. She is one of the few actresses who is lovelier off the screen than on, because her flawless complexion is one of her outstanding charms. In other words, she's a "natural" for a selfish beauty editor's column, and I felt pretty lucky to have had an interview with her so that I might be able to tell you all about her.

This was Madge's first good-sized vacation in New York for several years, and she was having a beautiful time. Her suite at the Waldorf-Astoria was literally a bower of roses, so many were the bouquets that graced the tables, the desk, and the fireplace mantel. Some of the roses were a warm cream color with deep golden hearts that seemed to paint their petals with an inner glow . . . an appropriate background for Madge, as her own fair blonde skin has a very lovely golden tinge to it, a sort of radiant underglow that complements her golden hair and blue eyes. She has graceful hands (photographs don't do them justice), and small, milk-white teeth that remind one of the perfect teeth of a child.

EVEN though you love hearing about such Hollywood perfection, perhaps you're getting discouraged right off the reel at hearing about all this "natural-born" charm, so far as your emulating it is concerned. Well, just you wait a bit. It's a little encouraging to know that the Hollywood goddesses are only human after all. Madge is a very modest person, and her modesty isn't put on; it's a genuine, refreshing thing. She honestly doesn't consider herself at all glamorous. She never wears any sort of bizarre or out-of-the-ordinary make-up effects, because she doesn't feel that she can "carry them off." Now, here's the point. Madge isn't above wanting new "eye-deas" about the very same thing on which I receive hundreds of queries from you. She isn't above wishing for what a million and one other girls wish for—long, heavy eyelashes.

Lovely skin and lustrous hair can be yours, says La Evans

The thing that brought up the discussion was when Madge said she wanted to explain why her eyelashes looked so "chopped off." As a matter of fact, we hadn't even noticed. Anyhow, she explained that a year or so ago she decided to find out if there was anything in the theory of cutting one's eyelashes in order to make them longer and more luxuriant. As she was about to have a vacation after months of hard work at the studios, and the camera wouldn't be there for a while to catch her with its wicked eye, she cut off her eyelashes to about one-third their natural length, and went gallivanting away on her vacation trip. Well, the lashes didn't grow back longer than they were before, but they did grow thicker, so after one successful trial, she was going through the stunt again during this vacation. Madge was highly amused at herself and her experimentation for "more glamorous" eyelashes. She laughingly told about the night she was dressing for a party, and thought the occasion called for some special eye make-up; she started to apply her mascara when her mirror woke her up to the realization that her lashes had gone on a vacation, too.

NOW before you rush madly for the scissors (manicure scissors if you please), remember that it may take your lashes a good long time to grow back in again to their natural length, so unless you're having an extensive vacation, you had better not cut your lashes without due consideration. Some people's lashes grow in much more slowly than others. But if you don't mind the drawbacks, it's well worth trying. Incidentally, after the cutting, I would recommend the morning and nightly application of an eyelash grower, applied with a tiny eyelash brush and a gentle upward brushing motion.

If you want to have heavier eyelashes to sweep down over your cheeks, it naturally follows that you'll want a complexion worthy of the added glamor. Every once in a while I have to raise considerable fuss about the (Continued on page 98)

OUR "HOPE CHEST"

-it tells you why you shouldn't try an untried laxative

AT the Ex-Lax plant is a big box containing 522 little boxes. Each one contains a laxative that "hoped" to imitate Ex-Lax, and get away with it.

For 28 years we have seen them come and seen them go . . . while Ex-Lax has gone along growing bigger and bigger year by year . . . simply by giving satisfaction to millions of people who turned to it for pleasant, painless, thorough relief from constipation.

WHY EX-LAX HAS STOOD THE TEST OF TIME

Ex-Lax is a chocolated laxative . . . but it is so much more than just chocolate flavor and a laxative ingredient. The way it is made . . . the satisfaction it gives . . . these things apparently can't be copied. They haven't been yet!

Of course, Ex-Lax is thorough. Of course, it is gentle. It won't give you stomach pains, or leave you feeling weak, or upset you. It won't form a habit . . . you don't have to keep on increasing the dose to get results.

AND . . . THAT "CERTAIN SOMETHING"

So many imitators have tried to produce a chocolated laxative that would equal Ex-Lax. But they couldn't. Why? Because Ex-Lax is more than just a chocolated laxative. Because the exclusive Ex-Lax process gives Ex-Lax a "certain something"—a certain ideal action that words just can't explain and that no other laxative has. But once you try Ex-Lax, you'll know what we mean, and nothing else will ever do for you.

Ex-Lax comes in 10c and 25c boxes—at any drug store. If you would like to find out how good it is . . . at our expense . . . just mail the coupon below for a free sample.

MAIL THIS COUPON—TODAY!
EX-LAX, Inc., P. O. Box 170
Times-Plaza Station, Brooklyn, N. Y.
MM55 Please send free sample of Ex-Lax.
Name .....
Address .....
.....

When Nature forgets—remember

EX-LAX

THE CHOCOLATED LAXATIVE

IT'S TOPS.. this year more than ever!

Take it from me—this new Scandals is 365 times greater than last year's . . . and what swelegant entertainment that was! Only George White himself could have outdazzled his 1934 creation.

You're going to zoom from loud "ha-ha's" at the comedy to gasping "a-ah's" at the beauties to thrilled "o-oh s" at the romance. And you're going to dance out both your shoes this spring to the swingy rhythms of six hit tunes!

STARS
GIRLS SONGS DANCES LAUGHS SPECTACLE

Keep your eye on Alice Faye, Fox Films' new glamour gal. She has what it takes to hit the cinema heights.

FLASHES from GEORGE WHITE'S 1935 SCANDALS

by Jerry Halliday

A frolicking foursome bubbling with the gaiety of the Gay Nineties number

with

ALICE FAYE
JAMES DUNN
NED SPARKS

Lyda Roberti Cliff Edwards
Arline Judge Eleanor Powell
Benny Rubin Emma Dunn

GEORGE WHITE

Entire Production Conceived, Produced and Directed by George White

Alice plays her grandest role in this picture. And what a marvelous singin'-steppin' duo she and Jimmy Dunn make! • As for Lyda Roberti . . . well . . . team up Poland's gift to Hollywood with Ned Sparks and Cliff Edwards . . . then look out below! • Fox Studios have staged this musicale with a lavish hand. And what a great, big hand YOU will give it!

Watch the sparks fly!

Sumptuous settings! Spectacular Dances! Gorgeous girls including 30 beauty contest winners!

Hollywood cheered this masterpiece of that master showman, George White

HUM-ABLE, SING-ABLE, DANCE-ABLE TUNES!

"According to the Moonlight"
"It's an Old Southern Custom"
"Hunkadola"
"Oh I didn't know (you'd get that way)"
"I was born too late"
"I got shoes—you got shoesies"

FOX

GINGER ROGERS

Meet Lizzie Gatz putting on her act of being the Countess Scharwenka! Otherwise, our old pal Ginger Rogers out-glamoring the glamor girls for her latest role in the tuneful "Roberta." Ginger and Fred Astaire have a high old time in this opus and you are going to have great trouble keeping your feet still when they dance to the haunting strains of "I'll Be Hard to Handle." It's colossal!

RICARDO CORTEZ

Ricardo's popularity is something many more meteoric stars can envy. Quietly, deftly, he handles the parts given him and each picture shows him to have greater polish and charm. His role of the debonair Sim in "Shadow of Doubt" was just cut to order for the dashing Ric.

HELEN HAYES

Everybody breathlessly awaited "Vanessa," not only because it gave them their beloved Helen Hayes but also because it gave Bob Montgomery a serious role. Although Helen hasn't said much about future plans, she's scheduled for "The Awakening of Helena Ritchie."

JOHN BOLES

Despite the wicked looking shotgun, John Boles seems like a pretty kind-hearted hunter. John is resting between pictures, if you can call tramping around the woods a rest! Having finished "Music in the Air," there's nothing on his schedule until "Redheads on Parade."

MAUREEN O'SULLIVAN

Rest of any kind doesn't seem to fit into Maureen's hectic schedule. She's so much in demand that she rushes from M-G-M's "West Point of the Air" to United Artists' "Cardinal Richelieu" as a loan to George Arliss. Her spare moments are loaned to one Mr. John Farrow, as you know.

CHARLES BOYER

We talked with Pat Paterson, Charles Boyer's lovely English wife, the day before he was landing from Europe. She was incoherent with excitement, for he had been abroad for six months making pictures. All she could talk about was what a marvelous person he is. And her enthusiasm seems to match that of his fans! Charles is the lucky young gent who replaces Francis Lederer as Hepburn's lead in "Break of Hearts." It's his second American picture.

There are so many feathers in Irene Dunne's cap these days that it ought to look like a war bonnet! Not content with scoring a great hit with her singing role in "Sweet Adeline," Irene packed her make-up kit and hurried back to RKO for "Roberta." And in it, Irene draws her first modern breath in months—she doesn't have to wear stuffy period costumes; instead she revels in an ultramodern Paris couture salon setting. Hear her sing "Smoke Gets In Your Eyes."

IRENE DUNNE

(Left) The screen's most sophisticated actor, with a young man who shows no sign of sophistication yet—Bill, Jr. (Right) Carole Lombard, who was Bill's wife not long ago and who is not the girl in this story.

A bittersweet story of a girl who fell in love and a man who didn't. And of a friendship which flourished because there was no fault on either side

ONE GIRL'S HOPELESS

TO understand a man completely, he must be seen through the eyes of a woman—a woman who loved him once and still loves him, even though he cannot love her. A woman who, in spite of this, remains his friend and counts him as a friend, too.

A certain girl—a close friend of mine—allows us this searching glimpse into the character of Bill Powell. She is not Carole Lombard—no—who loved him and was loved by him and who, since the light of that love has failed remains his friend, also. This girl's story is more enlightening than Carole's could be, because this girl suffered the heartache of hopelessness—and found a remedy. As much of a remedy, at least, as a woman can find for such sickness. I am not, of course, going to divulge her name. We will call her Georgia.

It is not easy to explain Georgia's sentiments. Mood is more important than a simple statement of fact. It would be too easy to make the girl sound less intelligent than she is. It would be too easy to make Bill Powell sound less fine and sincere than he is. And so, since the mood which brought all this into focus occurred quite recently, I must tell my story backwards, but I do not think that you will find fault with me for doing so.

Georgia and another young lady—Valerie—had gone out to Bill's at his urgent request. They had just arrived from New York. Georgia went, secretly wondering if this brief reunion would prove much of an emotional strain. Valerie went, confessing with breathless excitement, that she was on tenterhooks at meeting her favorite star. Each jittery for a different reason, they set out.

(Left) The perfect Mr. and Mrs.—on the screen, that is. Bill with Myrna Loy. (Center) The dazzling Jean Harlow, who is busy dazzling Mr. Powell these days, if we are to believe the gossip columns.

by T. B. Fithian

LOVE FOR BILL POWELL

Bill was at the telephone when they arrived. He gayly flipped a kiss to Georgia and saluted a welcome to her companion without a check in his conversation. He gestured to them to remove their wraps and take a seat. He did not, during this dialogue of hands and eyes, lower his voice with tell-tale discretion as he talked over the phone. There was, Georgia ruefully decided, a female at the other end of the wire. Bill brought one hand to his smiling mouth and tilted back his head. The gesture was eloquent. Would his guests like a drink? The houseboy brought in three tall glasses with clinking ice during this continuous pantomime and Georgia marveled, when Valerie pinched her arm to express her delight, how one man could keep three women so thoroughly amused. Then the one on the phone finished. Bill strode over.

HE swept Georgia into his arms—in a gay, unloverlike way, of course. As he bowed before her friend and hauled up a chair, Georgia felt, for a swift instant, that she should resent his kiss. It had been too friendly. So casually friendly. Don't men ever remember those other occasions when . . . But Bill was talking. He recalled the happy times they had had together. That last time, he chuckled, when they had gone fishing. Off Laguna in a rowboat. Not a nibble all day. But it had been so peacefully indolent as they relaxed to the gentle heave of the ground swells. And a sunset which, for a few magical minutes, changed the ocean to wine . . . Then these reminiscences came to an abrupt end. Bill turned to Valerie. "This is no fun for you," he apologized. "Come on. Let's take a look at (Continued on page 76)

GLAMOR IS NOT A GIFT

Rules for glamor by four knowing stars. Left to right below: "Be understanding," says Anita Louise. "Stay away from the wall-flowers," warns Kitty Carlisle. "Lack of beauty doesn't bar you from glamor," is May Robson's heartening word. And Norma Shearer begs all women, of all ages, "Hold on to your interest in men!" Such wisdom, such workable axioms, for us all.

Glamor, Hollywood's highest priced commodity, is right within the grasp of every one of you!

by Adele Whitely Fletcher

WHEN a girl or a woman has it, she doesn't need anything else. Glamor, I mean. There are some who are born with it. And that's their good fortune. There are others who never do have it. And that's their fault, their lack of gumption.

Glamor is a warm magic, a brilliant sort of charm. It is something in you which ignites people's imaginations. It is a quality which makes the things you do and say colorful, provocative and appealing. And nine times out of ten, no, nine hundred and ninety-nine times in a thousand, it is a quality born of your point of view.

You can learn to be glamorous. Beauty, for instance, isn't necessary to glamor.

"Watch the Pretties, the Beauties lose out when a girl with a glamorous personality arrives at a party," Peggy Hopkins Joyce said to me once. "I've seen men leave pretty girls high and dry dozens of times to join girls not nearly as attractive who had a warmth and personality which the others lacked."

Because of the glamor Peggy Joyce always has possessed for men, she has become internationally famous. And, if for no other reason than this, she is glamorous to women, too.

Wealthy men have given Peggy diamonds, emeralds and sapphires so large and so flawless that they are known by name to jewellers. Hard-boiled newspaper men meeting Peggy have remembered they were rather sentimental, too. Theatrical and movie producers have paid Peggy terrific sums to appear in their productions. And they have written in roles to suit her.

The day Peggy talked about glamor, I asked her what she felt is the greatest mistake women make in their relationship to men, as far as attracting them is concerned. And I pass on her answer to you as being advice from an expert.

"Girls and women should be careful not to act silly and cold," Peggy said. "Too often a girl, who is terribly intrigued by a man, will hurt his feelings by being defiant, over-independent and cold in an effort to hide her interest and protect her pride.

"The girls and women most glamorous to men are those who have an easy, warm manner, those not eternally on the defensive lest they appear to like a man more than he likes them.

"After all, no matter how lovely a girl may be, she's not going to have a chance at seeming glamorous if she's all tied up with defensive pride."

Excellent advice that, which forms rule one:

Don't act silly and cold with men. Don't forever be afraid you're going to seem to like them more than they like you.

IN Hollywood there are girls besieging the casting offices who are much prettier than the girls who occupy star dressing-rooms. But the girls, who make the grade of star dressing-rooms, have glamor.

There's Norma Shearer. I remember Norma in New York one summer's day, coming into her hotel apartment after a visit to the zoo with little Irving. She scaled her floppy panama hat on a chair, ran quick hands through her crisp hair and kicked off her white kid slippers. Then, twisting her legs under her on the sofa, she told us about a big black bear at the zoo who had showed off while she and Irving stood before his cage. Laughter washed her words bright. And she was glamorous, as glamorous as I've ever known her to be.

Norma, you see, finds life exciting. So she's exciting —and glamorous. For glamor is an imparted excitement among other things.

I've talked to Norma about Hollywood's glamorous girls. And her analysis of these girls is fascinating.

"They're girls who follow their instincts," Norma said. "They do things because they want to do them. They don't dam themselves up all the time.

"People for the most part, it seems to me, would do well to let themselves go a little, and get a thrill out of it.

"Being glamorous is not a matter of a décolleté gown and long earrings. I don't mean externals are not important—just that in themselves they're insufficient. The thing that counts most is the interests which stimulate us."

She jumped up and emptied a small silver ash-tray, with an easy little, "Let me fix that." Not as if to save the arm of the chair from an overflow of ashes, but as if to give her guests comfort.

"Another thing," she said (Continued on page 120)

LOVABLE GENIUS

At the age of ten, Freddie

THERE'S no explanation, as far as inheritance goes, for Freddie Bartholomew, the little chap you saw as "David Copperfield." No family record divulges one actor, artist, writer, clergyman or barrister, one professional or artistic grandparent or ancestor upon whom you can put your finger and say: "There! That's where Freddie gets his greatness!"

Freddie's father, Cecil Bartholomew, is in the Ministry of Agriculture. His grandfather is a retired accountant. His mother did nothing but grow up, fall in love, and get married.

Yet here is Freddie throwing critics, producers, directors, stage and screen stars into a dither of amazement by the consummate charm and the histrionics he displayed in "David Copperfield." And this in spite of the fact that his entire previous experience had been limited to appearances at charity bazaars and concerts together with two or three professional engagements in English films.

It is seven years ago now that old Mr. and Mrs. Bartholomew, Freddie's grandparents, took a cottage at the sea for the summer.

"Wouldn't it be nice," Mrs. Bartholomew asked her daughter Myllicent, called Cissie in the family, "if we could have little Freddie down for a bit, a fortnight say?"

Freddie came. And the proposed two weeks lengthened into six, seven weeks. Seven months. Seven years.

by Roberta Ormiston

At left, top to bottom, you see Freddie with his beloved Aunt Cissie who is his guardian as well as boon companion in all adventures. Next, a picture taken several years ago showing his two sisters, Eileen and Dimples, with his cousin, Peter, his great pal. Of course, you recognize Freddie's curls at the far right. And below them is the side door and gardens to the house of Freddie's grandparents at Warminster where he spends most of his time when in England. And right, Freddie himself, the lovable younger "David Copperfield."

Bartholomew is a little boy with fame in his hands

Always it was Cissie Bartholomew, a little thing with reddish brown hair and crinkly autumn-colored eyes, who pleaded with Freddie's mother and father that he be allowed to remain with them a little longer.

"You have Eileen and Dimples," she would say to them. "Do let Freddie stay for another week or two. He's such a winning child. And so very affectionate. We can't bear to have him go."

In September, when the Bartholomews returned to Warminster, to their little ivy-covered house with its quaint black and white iron fence and its flower-bordered walks, Cissie Bartholomew fixed up a room for Freddie. It seemed to her he must remain with them, always. She had no sense at all of life going on without him.

Freddie returned his aunt's devotion. Whenever he came into the house to find her reading, he climbed up beside her and coaxed her to read the words out loud—even when he was told that it would be too difficult for him to understand.

"Always, however," says Cissie Bartholomew, "Freddie seemed to sense the terror of what I read. Always he knew whether it was happy or sad and whether or not it was amusing.

"I used to read him nursery rhymes. And there would be emotion in his little face. Despair enough to bring tears to your eyes when the kittens lost their mittens. Gleeful laughter when the cow jumped over the moon.

"There was an emotional response from him always."

Gradually other books took their place on the low white shelves in Freddie's room, propped up beside his brown Teddy with one shoe-button eye missing, his leaden soldiers with bright red coats, and the gay kites he loved to sail from the lawn. There were A. A. Milne things, Lamb's "Tales from Shakespeare," Kipling's "Just So Stories." Then came "David Copperfield." David Copperfield, who was to be Freddie's very favorite book person. Dear Peggotty, horrid Mr. Murdstone, the Micawbers—all were real.

At five Freddie knew Portia's speech from "The Merchant of Venice." And when he recited it, those who heard him knew it, too, better than they ever had known it be-

(Cont. on p. 111)

Garbo, after spending an evening at the Trocadero, snapped by Scotty at some expense to his dignity. Below, the Garbo of the screen.

(Below) Has the mediocre success of "The Painted Veil" induced Garbo to seek publicity by means of public appearances?

GARBO VAS DERE!

An eye witness—Scotty to youse—relates the lowdown on Garbo's night out by J. B. Scott

THREE months ago an important executive of one of our big newspapers made this prediction to me: "Garbo is at the crossroads of her career. She faces a crucial point in her professional life that may spell even greater success or complete oblivion. If 'The Painted Veil' doesn't live up to the expectations of Garbo fans and the American public in general, she will be compelled to take desperate measures to recapture the place she has held in their hearts so long. My guess is that she is through, but I expect to hear of her throwing aside this mask of secrecy that has covered her life in the past and begin making public appearances. You may expect to see her at the popular night clubs, the opera, the races and, in fact, any spot where her fans may see her. Then with much of her old following regained and new converts in addition, as a result of the publicity she will no doubt receive, she will just as suddenly resort to her old tricks—secrecy and silence."

I couldn't agree with him. Garbo might be through. I didn't doubt his mature wisdom there, but to appear boldly in public—never. She lives in fear of the public. I know that. I have witnessed her reactions to crowds and people many times. She is haunted by the fear that they'd literally tear her to shreds, snatch her clothing from her body—understand—I am a cameraman.

She may be justified in her belief. Autograph hounds and souvenir seekers can be utterly thoughtless when caught in the excitement of seeing their idols within easy reach. Garbo is fully aware of this human instinct I was positive in my belief that (Continued on page 72)

Does Tullio imagine The One and Only in his arms when he embraces these glamorous sirens —Tala Birell, above, and Lilian Harvey, below, in "Let's Live Tonight"?

THE WOMAN IN HIS LIFE

Though convention keeps them apart, Carminati's love will go on forever

by Martha Kerr

WHEN you saw Tullio Carminati making such suave and deft screen love to Grace Moore in "One Night of Love," I wonder if it seemed strange to you that such an obvious Don Juan had never married and had never, in spite of the fact that he has many women friends, been seriously rumored engaged.

Certainly he has a way with women. Certainly women are interested in him, but Tullio always remains polite, reserved, aloof.

I know why. I discovered the secret not so long ago and the story is so beautiful, so tender, so gallant that I think it will make you admire Tullio even more than you do now.

He is the victim of a great and abiding love, but the name of the woman he loves must forever be shrouded in secrecy. She is married. And neither she nor Tullio believe in divorce.

In fact, it was one day when Tullio and I were talking about divorce that I discovered the secret of his hitherto unrevealed love.

We were sitting quietly together in Tullio's apartment, a restful place with its walls decorated with pictures of the greatest European actors and actresses. An autographed photo of Sarah Bernhardt. Another of Lina Cavalleri.

"I do not believe in divorce," this smart, sophisticated man-of-the-world said to me. "I can recognize its importance when two people, thrown together by marriage, find it absolutely necessary to (Continued on page 98)

She looks so poised, so continental. Yet she runs, in terror, from autograph hounds

by Katherine Albert

Kitty Carlisle, after apprenticeship in two Bing Crosby pictures, will appear in "Rose of the Rancho."

VERY DIFFERENT, OFF SCREEN

KITTY CARLISLE'S life is as glamorous and exciting as the crown jewels of Russia. Just listen to this!

Winters in Paris, summers on the Riviera at her mother's villa, finishing school at the Princess Mestchersky's in Paris, a year in Rome—simply because she wanted to learn Italian—smart holidays in Switzerland, winter sports at St. Moritz. That's an extremely brief and kaleidoscopic glance at Kitty's activities before she came to Hollywood.

And, hearing this, what would you expect a girl with that background to be like? Elegant? Smart? Chi-chi? Just too, too divine, my deah, and will you have cream or lemon in your tea?

As a matter of fact, Kitty Carlisle is just a nut, but she's swell. And she's the only person in Hollywood who doesn't take the place seriously. She used to sit in the Beverly Wilshire Hotel thinking she was going quietly insane. Now she sits in her garden and reads and wonders when they will come and take her away.

YOU see," she explained, "I don't know anyone here. Mummy and I didn't know we were going to stay long so we didn't bother getting letters of introduction."

Letters of introduction in Hollywood! In a place where all you have to do to get acquainted is to say, "Hi, pal, what picture are you working in now?"

All this, as you can see, is a holdover from the Chateau Mont Choisi at Lausanne where Kitty went to school when she was a child, a breath of swank from the American colony in Paris. Letters of introduction in Hollywood! My word!

"It's a border town," she laughed, "simply a border town. What does everyone do?

"My mother is no help. She's never seen anything like it before. When people come up to me and ask for my autograph as if I were some great celebrity, my mother just giggles and runs away from me."

"And you?" I asked. "What do you do?"

She opened her eyes very wide, "Why I just put my head down and run, too."

THE picture of the statuesque Kitty Carlisle butting through a crowd of autograph seekers as if she were an All-American halfback bucking the line is one I can conjure up and laugh over in moments of stress. I tell you, the girl is nuts!

"I never wanted to come here. I really didn't. When I was singing on the stage in New York strange people used to walk up to me and say, 'You ought to be in pictures.' But I always answered, (Continued on page 104)

After much controversy by Hollywood and the fans, The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences presented its 1934 awards at a large banquet. Clark Gable and Claudette Colbert, above left and right, were voted to have given the best screen performances in "It Happened One Night." A special award was voted to Shirley Temple. Claudette, enroute to New York, came to the banquet long enough to be given her award by Shirley. Among the guests who attended were Jean Harlow with Bill Powell, lower left. And Anna Sten with husband Dr. Frenke and a friend, Tai Lackman, lower right.

The ACADEMY AWARDS BANQUET

Gene Raymond and his mother depart for New York and Trouble. One of our spies saw him in N. Y. Story on page 42.

An unusual shot of Charlie Ruggles, Arline Judge and Wesley Ruggles at the Hollywood preview of "Ruggles of Red Gap."

GOOD NEWS!

by Regina Cannon

If you don't believe that history repeats itself, here is an ite over which you may ponder. Remember, in the not-so-long-ago, his pre-nuptial-to-Chatterton days, to be exact, George Brent wa cuhrazy about Loretta Young. They made a personal appearanc tour together and played in a couple of pictures. Well it ende with wedding bells for George. But this is 1935 and a new de is in order and, despite all that hectic discussion about Brent an Garbo, the gentleman often calls the beauteous Loretta for a dat He hasn't landed one at this writing, but since "If at first you don succeed" is his favorite adage he feels there's hope.

■ ■ ■

Much speculating has been done as to the seriousness of th Jean Harlow-William Powell romance. Suffice it to say th the servants at the Powell manse are worried. It seems th are averse to having "women folk" in the house. A bachel is so darn easy-going, you know. Report hath it that if B takes unto himself a bride, the below-stairs gentry are reat to give notice. Nothing against the fair Jean, y' understan it's her sex in general that they're agin.

■ ■ ■

Poor Lyda Roberti! She has so much trouble keeping hers organized! When the wardrobe woman approached her recen with an armful of luscious creations and the photographer came to snap her in them, Lyda was that pleased and proud. However, when the proofs were ready for okay, there appeared the peppy comedienne, elegant in her finery, but beneath the hem of each gown, she stood—pigeon-toed!

■ ■ ■

Everybody likes Ginger Rogers and, when you see her in "Roberta," you're going to be enthralled. At a recent première the little Rogers was all set to sign autograph books when Lew Ayres, her new husband, pulled her away. Ginger looked dismayed and her admirers looked disappointed; but her lord and master had spoken and she obeyed.

Speaking of autograph collectors, there is one ambitious young lady who has rung Ronald Colman's doorbell for close onto a month and as yet had no luck in finding her hero at home. However, she is still undaunted.

■ ■ ■

It looks to his friends as if Franchot Tone has gone hypochondriac! He is so careful of himself these days. Doesn't eat this and won't drink that and warns you against acid if you swallow the other thing. It must be too awful to keep track of your alimentary canal like that! At any rate, it certainly is hard on the neighbors who are constantly reminded what a potato and lamb chop might do if they should meet each other in one's tummy.

■ ■ ■

Constance Bennett and Gilbert Roland entered the Trocadero recently and hadn't been seated long when the lady spied the Marquis parked quietly in a corner with the lovely Joan Marsh. During the first dance intermission, Miss B. approached her husband and some brief, though perhaps serious, dialogue ensued. Anyway, Connie hadn't returned to her table ten minutes before Henri and his friend departed. If this were a contest, we'd ask you to send in the best answer to "What did Miss Bennett say?" But spare the pencil and save the time, we're just wondering ourselves.

■ ■ ■

And, while on the subject of the Troc, let us say that it is just about the gayest spot in Hollywood. Undoubtedly the guests make it so, for, once in a while it becomes that informal. F'rinstance, just before dawning the other day, Peggy Fears, Bill Haines and Prince Felixe Rolo sat around on the floor in the foyer (see page 38). Now, you know, they're too big for that, really! Probably it can all be charged to joie de vivre—or just plain joy.

■ ■ ■

Caesar Romero is the town's latest beau. All the girls are having dates with the handsome dark gentleman. And he doesn't seem to play favorites either, which makes it gay for the fair ones. The other evening, after taking Sally Blane home, he returned to the Clover Club with a pretty blonde. They danced until the wee sma' hours and then departed.

■ ■ ■

Was Virginia Bruce's lovely face red! It happened thisaway. She was called to the studio to make some still photos with Pinkie Tomlin, composer of "Object of My Affections" and now an M-G-M

The Gary Coopers (Sandra Shaw) and Mrs. Hathaway at "Bengal Lancers."

Mrs. Virginia Parrott, Eddie Lowe and Tullio Carminati, at the opera.

Zasu Pitts and husband John Woodall, dolefully attend the Santa Anita races.

More GOOD NEWS

"After Office Hours" preview. Connie Bennett and evasive GilbertRoland.

player. Virginia arrived on the minute and for half an hour she waited, frowning and fidgeting. Finally she turned to an awkward young man whom she thought was a studio electrician. "These newcomers," she exclaimed, "make me simply ill! Take that Pinkie Tomlin, for instance. He must think the sun and movie stars rise and set just for him! Don't you hate people like that?"

The bashful boy chewed his gum reflectively. "Wa-al, now," he drawled, "as a general rule these writin' fellers are a purty stuck-up outfit. But now that Pinkie Tomlin! He's one swell guy; in fact, I'm him."

Coming! One smelling salts for a beautiful blonde!

■ ■ ■

It could only happen in Hollywood. Not so long ago, Fox declined to re-sign George O'Brien to a contract because the handsome lad desired to appear in Westerns only. And so they parted —the studio and its star. George's fan appeal was so great, however, that he decided to produce Westerns independently in which he would feature himself. The pictures are money-makers and who do you suppose is releasing them? Fox!

■ ■ ■

Well, they're up to their elbows in accents over on the "Midsummer Night's Dream" set, most of 'em German, of course. Max Reinhardt, incidentally, thinks James Cagney is a guh-rand actor, and compliments him after each scene is shot. Jimmy plays Bottom in the opus and, just to be generous or to improve on Will Shakespeare or sumpin', the scenarists have written in a character called Mrs. Bottom. No, we're not fooling! Just wait and see. Anyway, Reinhardt's chauffeur relays to Cagney the Maestro's high opinion of him. Yes, the "yah" system is present on this set, too. Must be an old international custom!

■ ■ ■

The highest praise Hollywood can bestow on a player isn't "the most beautiful" or "the most talented" or any other "most" —it is simply "a swell trouper." We had a sample of why May Robson has been so honored. On the "Strangers All" set, cameras were grinding as Miss Robson was saying her lines. With a sweep of her hand, she emphasized a statement, and in doing so knocked into a large camera. With a resounding clunk, the large glass lens fell on the actress' gray head—but not even a gasp interrupted the smoothness of her lines. A grand trouper, this May Robson, and a great grandmother!

■ ■ ■

In "Village Tale," you'll be treated to a scene of a village church, with worn pews and a genuine old-time organ that has to be "pumped" while played. The beauteous Kay Johnson, who has spent the last few months in England and the handsome Randolph Scott, Joan Crawford smiles her wide smile. With Franchot Tone at the opera.

Bill Haines, Prince Rolo and Peggy Fears go a bit quaint and informal at the Trocadero.

Dixie Lee Crosby protects her eyes with glasses and Bing threatens his figure with hotdogs — at Santa Anita.

Madge Evans and her undiscussed beau, Tom Gallery, at the professional football game.

Christine Lee quenches her thirst and husband Ric Cortez smokes his pipe. Also at the "pro" football.

who has spent the last few years in Westerns, have the leading roles. It took exactly four hours to photograph one scene satisfactorily—where Randy nails a hymn program on the wall, while Kay marvels how clever he is. Our hero just murmurs modestly, "Oh, that's simple!"

■ ■ ■

"Mr. Cobweb" seems an appropriately fantastic name for the head cameraman on the set of "Midsummer Night's Dream," doesn't it? But in private life with Evelyn Venable, who's Mrs. Hal Mohr, he's Hal. To everyone in the cast, though, he's just Mr. Cobweb—since his recent and brilliant idea of photographing forest scenes to their best advantage. This is done with a special "gum" which spins cobwebs on trees, on which diamond dust is sprinkled to make them glisten with an altogether enchanting effect.

Hal confesses he's pretty sick of cobwebs by now, particularly after coming out of the studio commissary the other day to find his entire car enveloped in a huge cobweb! Joe E. Brown and Jimmy Cagney just happened to be standing nearby, and rushed up to offer their sincerest sympathy!

■ ■ ■

Even studios come to blows once in awhile! Paramount and RKO were the last to exchange words—and some pretty hot ones, too. Seems that RKO was all set to star Anne Shirley in "Spring in Paris," when lo! Paramount announced their new picture was to be entitled "Paris in Spring!" Each studio changed its title—and then changed back again. We can't foretell the finale on this nor if either studio will see Paris in warm weather.

■ ■ ■

Most movies are so easy to look at—but photographing them is a different matter! In "Strangers All," you'll see May Robson and Preston Foster walk quickly from the kitchen to the living-room, through the dining-room. Simple enough—but one of the most intricate "shots" the cameraman ever ran into! You see, the camera must precede them through the three rooms —which doesn't mean a man holding a camera just backs up. It means that fourteen men must pull backward the huge crane on which the camera is hung—and it must be done noiselessly, without the slightest jerk. With such a big contraption, there's no room for furniture in the room—but this problem is solved by several more men, each in charge of a chair, davenport or table, which is snapped into chalk-marked locations on the floor, the second the crane moves from that spot. The camera, you see, being swung out overhead a couple of feet. It's called a "boom shot," if you want to be technical.

More GOOD NEWS

Fred Keating didn't mind being ill so much after he saw Jean De Mars, R.N.

And now it's Florence Rice that Laemmle, Jr., is escorting—at the Troc.

Ann Dvorak, friend Helene McAdoo and two other friends. at Dvorak ranch.

Lyle Talbot and Peggy Walters at the Mayfair Ball. Lyle hates his ladies' man publicity, so we won't say anything.

And here are Colleen Moore, Joan Blondell Barnes and George Barnes at the second Mayfair Ball.

Edward Everett Horton is this kind of a Californian. It was raining pitchforks the other day when Vic McLaglen, head bent against the wind, passed him and yelled, "Wotta storm!" Eddie turned and cried after him, "Storm, nothing! This is just a high fog!"

■ ■ ■

Katharine Hepburn has a new car! No longer does she drive around the set in that big yellow truck picking up all the studio workers for a free ride. The day after the purchase of her elegant means of transportation, Katie drove up to the studio gates with a swish, and imperiously honked the horn for admission. The gatekeeper came running up and looked carefully over the new car and its driver. "Sorry, Miss," he said, "but we've a rule here that anyone we don't know can't enter, unless they've a pass."

Miss Hepburn smiled reassuringly. "But it's all right to pass me—you see, I'm doing a small part in Katharine Hepburn's picture, 'Break of Hearts.'"

The gate-keeper appeared a bit doubtful, but finally allowed the car to pass.

More GOOD NEWS

■ ■ ■

Charles Vidor is fast acquiring a reputation for his excellent work. On the RKO lot he's known as the "robot director" because of his mechanical actions. He is quiet, thoughtful and methodical about every bit of direction he gives—no yells of rage, tearing of hair nor wild exultation for him over any actor's performance! The other day while directing a scene in "Strangers All," he had ordered one scene shot seventeen times, when the assistant director, much exasperated, cried, "Well, that scene's perfect now! It ought to be."

"Not for me," said Mr. Vidor, who in private life is Karen Morley's husband, and forthwith quietly ordered another shot of the scene.

■ ■ ■

Brrrr—the shivers run up and down our spine at the thought of "Star of Midnight," RKO's new mystery thriller. 'Tis said that even Ginger Rogers and William Powell, the stars of the picture, are suffering from chronic creeps. "It's a "closed set" on the lot, which means that no one is allowed to see the picture being made—and for the main and simple reason that the solution to all the mysterious goings-on is so very unexpected and hair-raising that the studio doesn't want any news of it to leak out. Bill Powell swears that the whole business is making a nervous wreck of him, so it must be an honest-to-goodness thriller when you consider the ordeal Bill managed to live through in "The Thin Man."

■ ■ ■

"Three times a bridesmaid and never a bride" seems to be working its fatal charm on Mary Brian. Mary's one of the most popular girls in Hollywood, and has accompanied many a friend to the altar, the last one being Ginger Rogers. And she's equally popular with the unfair sex, with proposals enough to make Peggy Joyce hang her blonde head in shame. But so far, Mary hasn't been noticed poring over any "Marriage vs. Career" literature, or even a cook book. Some say that domesticity was rearing its ugly head, though, these last few Alice White smiles a Mona Lisa smile and husband Cy Bartlett meditatively smokes. At the Troc.

Bob and Betty Montgomery, Chester and Sue Morris, in their best bibs and tuckers at the Mayfair Ball.

The battling Weissmullers. Lupe looks fiery and Johnny looks wary. But maybe it's love—we wouldn't know.

"Naughty Marietta" MacDonald and "West Point of the Air" Beery come through for dear old M-G-M at the President's Ball.

More GOOD NEWS

Lupe and Johnny Weissmuller were that surprised the other day to be the recipients of a crate of big, red apples. A card attached read, "If an apple a day keeps the doctor away, why not try these on your lawyers?" Which just about voices the feeling of most of Hollywood—except those who know the fiery little Mexican actress and her muscular spouse. It's simple to understand their antics, these friends claim—why, Lupe and Johnny could stand anything but monotony! Therefore, this spontaneous combustion, which results in broken dishes and splintered furniture every few days, and ends in the divorce courts where the happy couple kiss and make up, is quite to be expected. But Lupe and Johnny weren't a bit displeased with the apples. Indeed, they're probably throwing them at each other.

■ ■ ■

months when Dick Powell looked so-o-o-o ardent—but Mary remains unsnared.

■ ■ ■

It may be a blessed event for Gloria Stuart and Arthur Sheekman, but it's a cussed event for her studio. You see, Universal and Gloria were quite unsuspecting when she renewed her contract with them recently. But my, my, wotta fuss a few days later when the glad tidings were announced that Gloria would not be able to make a picture for some time now. She offered to break her contract, but the studio weren't satisfied with that suggestion, either, since the blonde actress is too valuable to allow out of their clutches.

■ ■ ■

The dark, voluptuous Katherine De Mille doesn't look like a chip off the old block, for Cecil B. is white-haired and benevolent. But they say out on the "Crusades" set, that she's as good a trouper as her dad is a director. What's more—Katherine got a leading role in this picture through hard work and not parental "drag."

It was hard to believe, watching the crusaders steaming in their armor under a blazing sun, that Loretta Young, the star of the picture, was snowbound. Production had to be held up while waiting for the Oregon mountain snows to melt, where Loretta was on location for "Call of the Wild."

■ ■ ■

There "jest ain't no justice, nohow!" Grace Bradley didn't need to inherit that goodly sum a-tall. She just looks like a cool million. On the "Stolen Harmony" set a few days ago, Grace appeared too demure for words, with her golden hair in little ringlets on her forehead and a simple black dress with a childish, round collar. On closer inspection the dress turned out to be chiffon velvet and the collar ermine—and lo! even the gold in her hair was genuine!

■ ■ ■

Our personal nomination for Hollywood's most glorified barroom is in "Paris in Spring." It's enough to make "Wonder Bar" look like the crockery section of the ten-cent store. This resplendent thirst-quenching spot (Continued on page 77)

All photos by Scott

We haven't seen Ruth Chatterton for a long time. Her escort is Miriam Hopkins' ex, Austin Parker. At the opera.

Kay Francis, in very smart black and white, and David Nevins say howdy as they enter the opera.

"I WORK IN A FACTORY"

Gene Raymond, eligible bachelor, can't find time for romance!

by Elizabeth Ellis

Gene relaxes between pictures. He has just finished "The Woman in Red" with Stanwyck.

THE first time Gene Raymond and I met, we slid down the side of a snow-covered ravine together, balancing trays of hot dogs in our hands. Recently we met again in New York with a blizzard raging outside!

Waiting for him in the hotel lobby, I wondered what Hollywood had done to him. It was more than possible that it had spoiled Gene for he is one of the most engaging young men I have ever met and I knew Hollywood must have turned upon him all the flattery and adulation that it bestows upon personable young male stars.

Suddenly, in the midst of my pessimistic musings, the revolving door whirled around gustily and snow flew about the lobby as a ruddy cheeked gent divested himself of his trappings. It was obvious that Mr. Gene Raymond had been wading through every drift he could find without benefit of warm limousine or taxicab. No Hollywood fanfare in the traditional manner, certainly.

"Hello, swell weather, isn't it?" he called across to me. Then shaking my hand vigorously in an icy clasp, "So sorry to be late but I had to walk in this snow. You don't know what a treat this is after months of California's well-known sunshine."

At lunch we went into the snowy reminiscences of our first meeting at the ravine weenie roast, several years ago. Gene was then Raymond Guion and had just made his first big stage hit in "Young Sinners." He had been acclaimed the promising juvenile of the season. Every matinee was sold out to ga-ga girls and fluttery old ladies who thought he was too, too handsome and thrilling. Hollywood wasn't even in his thoughts those days and he was too shy to admit he had matinee idol potentialities. His great aim then, as it is now, was to become a really fine dramatic actor.

Mutual friends of ours, who had a charming house perched on the edge of a deep ravine, had invited a great crowd for this Sunday weenie roast. The snow was drifted high but the hardy guests were not daunted by the feat of carrying hot dogs and other ingredients from the warm house, down the side of the ravine, to a cleared place below where an outdoor fireplace was built. No one was invited who would be subject to sissy chilblains or such. Virility was the order of the day. The host had thoughtfully twined a rope around the trees for guests to use as hand support on the slide down—but Gene and I had been such dopes that we had loaded ourselves down with food and couldn't have held onto anything even if an escalator had been provided!

Gene lugged the firewood, cut off frozen twigs to use as roasting spears and got himself unromantically blackened by smoke. Later, he (Continued on page 95)

ESPECIALLY FOR REDHEADS

Redheaded Nancy Carroll tells you why you are often criticized

by Adele Clinton

GO BUY a bottle of henna rinse, girls—all of you, at least, who are not natural redheads! Hollywood's platinum tresses are in the dye pots, and the red wave is fast spreading. A new picture "Redheads on Parade" is in production and so scarce are real redheads around Hollywood that a quest is being conducted for the five hundred most beautiful redheads in the country. An octette of these beauties will be chosen by judges who comprise the most famous titian-tressed stars in Hollywood. Who are the judges? There's Janet Gaynor, Myrna Loy, Ginger Rogers, Jeanette MacDonald, Clara Bow, Grace Bradley and Nancy Carroll.

And it is one of these judges, Nancy Carroll, who broke down the other day and told me she had suffered much unkind criticism—all because she is a real redhead!

As you recall, it was only a few years ago that Nancy was constantly getting unfortunate publicity about her temper, her high-and-mightiness. She was constantly rumored to have walked off this set in a huff, to have fought with that director and generally made her coworkers detest her. She was a pain to newspaper and magazine writers. All this because of the good old garden variety of redheaded temper. In fact, Paramount's not renewing her contract, and fewer roles in ensuing years have all been attributed to the well-known Carroll tempestuousness.

Nancy smiles, and she has that nice, broad smile of a good-natured Irish lass, when you mention her temperament. She declares that if she has temperament it is because publicity and press wished it on her!

"You see," she said, "all redheaded women, unfortunately, are immediately dubbed combustible. We're never given a chance to show the nice sides of our dispositions because everybody is on the defensive, imagining that we are going to break right out in a pyrotechnic display.

I THINK it is too bad," she continued, "that redheads are not given a break. All temper isn't expressed in an ugly fashion. Being redheaded is to be endowed with unusual spirit. Haven't you noticed that redheaded girls have more spirit and intensity than the average person?"

I agreed.

"And what's more," Nancy was beginning to glow with some of that very intensity which she was trying to describe, "a redhead will flare up and fight for what she thinks is right. There is no anguish that I can suffer like that of thinking an injustice is being done. I get so wound up trying to prove (Continued on page 83)

(Below) Nancy in "I'll Love You Always." Red haired, and her true vivacious self.

And now look at her, below, as a blonde—can you believe this demure person is she?

MODERN SCREEN-WARNER Song CONTEST

Win part of the $500 prize money! Read about the extra honor for original lyrics!

HERE ARE THE RULES:

The Modern Screen-Warner Song Contest commenced in the issue before last of this magazine—the one dated March. If, by any chance, you missed the March or April issue of Modern Screen, and cannot obtain a copy elsewhere, we will be glad to forward you a copy. Send your name and address and ten cents to MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

The winning contestants in the Modern Screen-Warner Song Contest will be those who fulfil accurately and aptly the following requirements: 1. You are to name the most popular song from three out of each set of five pictures, given in three consecutive issues of this magazine, and tell who sang the song in the picture. For example: "Why Do I Dream Those Dreams," from "Wonder Bar," sung by Dick Powell.

In the paragraph below, you will find this month's list of pictures. This completes the contest. Send in all three installments together, please.

Here is this month's list: ON WITH THE SHOW, BIG BOY, HAPPINESS AHEAD, THE CROONER, and FASHIONS OF 1934.

2. Write 100 words—or less—telling which Warner musical you have liked best to date. Give your reasons. The words "a," "an" and "the" do not count.

3. The person, who, in the opinion of the judges, most accurately fulfils requirement number 1 and most aptly fulfils requirement number 2, will win the First Prize of $250. The subsequent prizes of Second Prize, $100; Third Prize, $50; Fourth Prize, $25; 5 Fifth Prizes of $10 each; and 5 Sixth Prizes of $5 each will be awarded in the order named, to those persons, who, in the opinion of the judges, come nearest to fulfilling the requirements correctly.

4. Each contestant may send as many entries as he wishes.

5. In case of ties, duplicate prizes will be awarded.

6. No entries will be returned.

7. Contest closes at midnight, May 15, 1935. All entries must be mailed before that time to be eligible for the contest.

8. The judges are the editors of MODERN SCREEN and Julius P. Witmark, Jr.

9. Send all entries to Modern Screen-Warner Song Contest, 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

10. Everyone is eligible to compete in this contest except employees of MODERN SCREEN and Warner Brothers.

Elaborate entries stand no better chance of winning a prize than simple ones. Neatness is important.

The five pictures above give you some clues to solving this month's installment of the contest. (Top, left and right) Al Jolson in one of his earlier roles and Ethel Waters putting over a hit. (Bottom, left and right) You ought to guess the Dick Powell one in a minute. And the William Powell-Verree Teasdale one ought to be easy, too. (Large picture) David Manners and Ann Dvorak in—you tell!

Here is an Extra Honor for All Contestants:

Have you ever tried your hand at writing the words of a song? We'll bet you often felt that you could. Well, here's your opportunity to try your luck at writing a set of lyrics and having them used in a forthcoming Warner musical production. The article on this page tells you in detail about this optional part of the contest—please read it carefully. The rules are listed below, as follows:

1. Each contestant may send in a set of lyrics along with his selection of songs, singers and 100-word description. This part of the contest is entirely optional—you may try it if you like, or leave it out, and still stand an equally good chance of winning one of the prizes. You may send in the lyrics without entering the contest.

2. The lyric which, in the opinion of the judges, is the best will be used in a forthcoming Warner musical production.

3. For the lyric which will be used in a Warner production, the usual royalties on music publication and commercial, mechanical instrument use will be paid by the music publishers.

4. Keep a copy of your lyric for your own use. If it isn't accepted and you wish it returned, merely send a stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request. We will try to comply with your request, but we assume no risk.

5. Remember the contest closes at midnight, May 15, 1935. All lyrics, like entries, must be mailed before that time to be eligible for this contest.

6. The judges of the lyrics are the editors of MODERN SCREEN and Mr. Julius P. Witmark, Jr., formerly a member of the music publishing firm of M. Witmark and Sons.

THIS is the last lap in the epoch-making MODERN SCREEN-Warner Song Contest! It commenced in the March issue. If, by any weird chance, you missed either or both the March or April issue of this magazine, and cannot beg, borrow or steal copies elsewhere, send ten cents (for each issue) to MODERN SCREEN, 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y., with your name and address and your request for the copy or copies you wish.

The mails have brought us, in great quantities, one burning question during the past month from our readers: Many of them want to know if they may send in a set of lyrics without entering the contest proper. Sure—if you want to pass up a chance of winning part of five hundred dollars, you can submit a set of lyrics without entering the contest. Remember, the chance to write a set of lyrics is an extra added attraction. You may enter the contest without sending in the lyrics, you may do both, or you may simply send in the lyrics. Okay?

The rules for this contest are set forth on the opposite page. The rules governing the submission of lyrics are set forth on this page in heavy type. We will explain in a bit more detail here.

You have been given, in three consecutive issues of MODERN SCREEN, the names of three sets of five picture titles. This month's list—the (Continued on page 75)

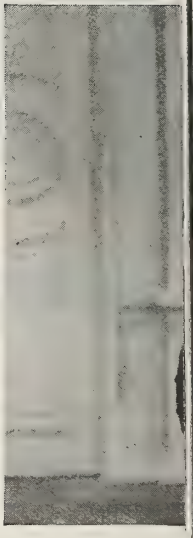
REVIEWS

A TOUR OF TODAY'S TALKIES

by Regina Cannon

★★★★ Roberta (RKO)

Dust off the volume of superlatives, for you're going to need it as a reference book now. Yes, "Roberta" is crammed full of the stuff that goes to comprise perfect picture entertainment. A 14-karat cast giving fine performances, tunes calculated to tantalize the ear, dances created by Fred Astaire and expertly executed by him and Ginger Rogers; well, now, you have at least an idea that as good fun, "it's the tops!"



The story itself is punctuated with laugh-inducing gags and just enough emotional moments to bring it down to earth and give it some semblance of plausibility; for, you'll admit that having a football hero suddenly become owner of a swanky gown shop lends itself more to gaiety than to sound sense. But Randolph Scott, out of "westerns" and into dressmaking, makes the transition beautifully and proves he's sorta been wasted on "them thar plains." Fred Astaire is as perfect a comedian as he is a dancer, which is saying plenty, Irene Dunne is divine as a Russian princess "in trade," and Ginger Rogers makes a pert and peppy Indiana native posing as Polish nobility.

Helen Westley plays "Roberta," the famous dressmaker, with her usual skill but, unfortunately, only lives for a few reels! And Claire Dodd, as the shallow American girl loved by Randy Scott, is okay.

★★★★★ Ruggles of Red Gap (Paramount)

You not only won't want to, but you cannot afford to miss this picture. It boasts one of the finest characterizations ever seen in celluloid—Charles Laughton's interpretation of the English valet who is lost by his titled master in a poker game and travels across the sea to a Western town to work for the rich and rowdy American who won him. His adjustment to his new life, while fraught with laugh-inducing experiences, reveals an underlying pathos that at once wins the sympathy of the spectator. And, when Mr. Laughton recites Lincoln's Gettysburg Address to the inhabitants of a frontier saloon, a highlight in drama, seldom witnessed on the screen, is reached. The first-nighters shrieked with glee when Ruggles let out his first American "Yippee!" Never has there been more spontaneous laughter in a theatre. We could go on for pages about this film and the characterizations of Roland Young, Charles Ruggles and Mary Boland, but it will all be unreeled for you when—not if—you see "Ruggles."

★★★ After Office Hours (M-G-M)

The producer was going to "make sure" when he put his hand to this one, and so we have a lively tale laid among the lively socialites and the still more lively newspapermen. Besides all this, we have Clark Gable in his best role since his characterization in "It Happened One Night," that of a breezy gent of the Fourth Estate who would sell anybody down the river in order to get a scoop. In fact, the gentle business of double-crossing is an art as far as he is concerned. However, since Clark solves a murder mystery as a result of imagination and snooping, all is forgiven and his reward for effort turns out to be—Constance Bennett.

The picture has its quota of laughs, although some of the gags are strained to the breaking point. The lines are bright and the thrills are plentiful. Besides the fine performances by the stars, Gable and Bennett, there is some excellent acting by Stuart Irwin and a priceless sequence of fluttering by Billie Burke, with Henry Armetta inevitably coming in for his "bit" of praise. Indeed, in the lives of this gay troupe, there isn't a dull moment "After Office Hours."

★★★ Life Begins at Forty (Fox)

Right at the outset, Will Rogers philosophizes that, "At forty a man is as old as he feels and a woman is twenty-six." Which is just about the keynote to the picture's gaiety. Of course, a Rogers picture is a Rogers picture and is invariably guaranteed to ring the box-office bell, and this one is no exception to the rule. It is rural and homespun and homely, studded with as many sentiments of sound sense as giggles. Will has a way of "righting the wrong" so as not to make good scout deeds seem sticky. In this one, a hog-calling family inject the hilarity and indirectly help to save the day for the unfortunate youth unjustly charged with robbery.

Besides Mr. Rogers, who takes top honors, you are going to deal out credit to Slim Summerville as a drowsy whittler who unwittingly

Top-notch comedies, stirring romances and swell musicals to entertain you.

(Above) A touching scene from "Vanessa," with Bob Montgomery and Helen Hayes. (Below) Laughton and Mary Boland in "Ruggles of Red Gap."

(Above) There isn't a dull moment in "After Office Hours," co-starring Gable and Constance Bennett. (Below) Cooper and Sten in "The Wedding Night."

(Above) It's "Roberta," with Fred Astaire, Ginger Rogers and Irene Dunne. (Below) Dick Cromwell and Will Rogers in "Life Begins at Forty."

saves a situation or two, Jane Darwell, the portly matron who "puts up with" Will, and Rochelle Hudson and Richard Cromwell, the youthful sweethearts. If you are a Rogers fan, of course you won't miss this one, and even if you aren't, "Life Begins at Forty" still offers you top-notch diversion.

★★★ The Little Colonel (Fox)

It looks as if Baby is slated to take still another bow, for as the Little Colonel, Little Temple is as sweet and delectable as ever. Her acting opportunities are big and Shirley comes through once again as the little trouper. Then, there are two dancing sequences in which the Fox starlet tears off a few mean routines with Bill Robinson, who knows something and to spare about tapping. Indeed, Bill's famous stair number is now preserved in celluloid for posterity.

The story, a childhood classic, when viewed through the adult's experienced eyes, creaks a bit and is punctuated with some rather heavy melodrama which, if one went into it in a big way, would prove pretty hard to take. But, it's all in good clean fun and as such, you'll enjoy it. Lionel Barrymore is fine as the stubborn ole "Cunnel" and Evelyn Venable, sweet and capable, as the equally stubborn young mother, and Shirley—well, she's too, too lovely. Youngsters especially will devour this cinema sweetmeat.

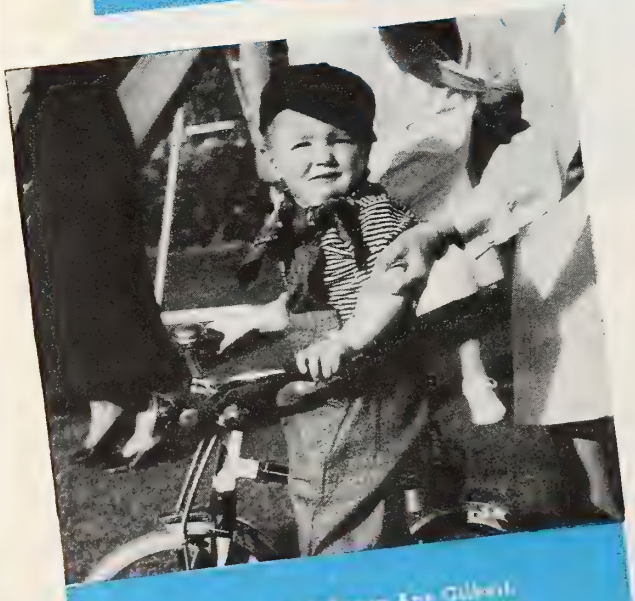
★★★ All the King's Horses (Paramount)

This picture is just light-hearted nonsense, but worth while because of the presence of Mary Ellis and Carl Brisson. No wonder those European rumors about this Brisson persist—he has personality plus and good-natured good looks, to say nothing of a pleasing voice. Mary Ellis will charm you, too, for what she may lack in beauty is more than compensated for by her lovely singing.

It's one of those stories with a plot based on a shoe string. Even the prince and the pauper (a movie actor, in this case) who swap places, are dragged in, with Mr. Brisson obligingly playing both roles. Edward Everett Horton doesn't let down his many fans this time, either, and Eugene Pallette is still pleasingly plump.

If you are looking for the means of (Continued on page 78)

Read our Movie Scoreboard (page 14) for critics' ratings of current pictures

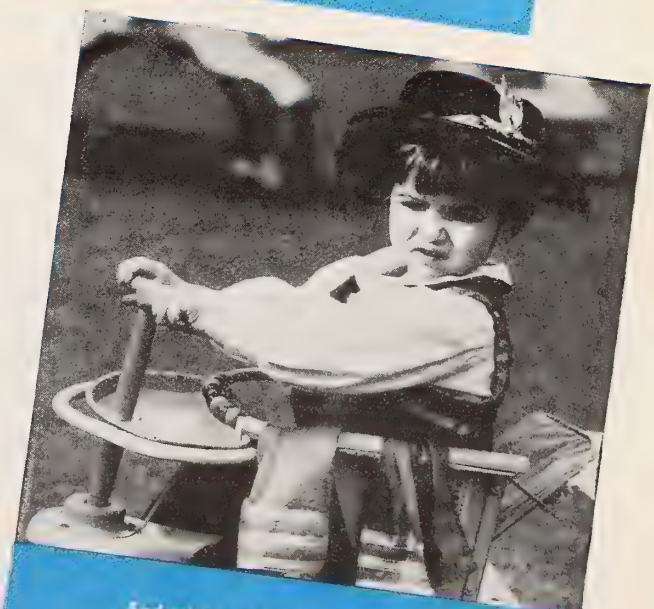


Annie, with her arms full of Cheery twins, Gary Evans Crosby and her own son, who consider themselves too much all at her feet.

That's the merry red car. You get in at the top and slide down. Michael son of Karen Morley and Charles Vidor, finest I can.

No—it's a girl. Susan Ann Gilbert, daughter of Joan Gilbert and Virginia Bruce. No guess which parent she will resemble.

You know the saucy lady on the left—Carol Ann Beery. And meet Marlene, the adopted son and chief delight of Miriam Hopkins.



Wild scene silhouette. Meanda, daughter of Jean Bennett and Gene Markey, is goin' to town on a wooden rooster as big as herself.

Connie Bennett's adopted son, Peter, and Joan Bennett's oldest daughter, Diane. It was a circus party—therefore the rowboat and ballet tutus.

Charles Wesley Ruggles reminiscing: "I am two years old. This is a party for the Hollywood youngest set. You've met my mother? Arline Judge."

And who is this? Look at the mouth. And the eyes. And the expression. It's Monty Robinson, son of Edward G., of course.

SOREHEAD? NO, BUT—

Things are always happening to George Raft, somehow. Fights, for example

by Helen Louise Walker

THINGS just seem to happen to Georgie Raft. He has won quite a reputation in the public prints of late as a flinger of fists . . . and yet, in these encounters, George has not struck a blow. Moreover, despite these reports of fistic encounters, you will find few young men more peaceable, more amiable, more genuinely eager to be liked than is George. He's actually a friendly person.

"I don't try to start anything," he told me. "Honestly I don't. I want to get along with people and I try to be polite to them. But . . . things just sort of seem to happen to me!"

Things do "seem to happen" to George. I think there is a psychological reason for it. There is a certain type of male who resents a man like George. He is handsome and sleek and women pursue him. He has risen, by his own efforts and ability, from the sidewalks of New York to be a "big shot" . . . first as a prize fighter, then as a dancer, and now as an actor. He is "in the money" and that is cause for jealousy in any circle. Moreover, because of an excessive shyness and reserve, he is almost forbiddingly aloof. There is none of the genial, Jack Oakie, life-of-the-party, in George. He moves about Hollywood silently, accompanied always by his friend, Mac "Killer" Gray. That dead pan of his which actually masks a boyish lack of self-confidence, gives an impression to strangers that he is being haughty.

There was that time at the fights at the Hollywood Legion Stadium. George and Mac were sitting in the second or third row. A chap in front of them turned and spoke over George's shoulder to someone behind him, wanting to bet on the next event, boasting that his boy would lambaste the stuffing out of his opponent. The enthusiast could find no takers.

"Now, I like to bet as well as anyone," said George speaking of that occasion. "I leaned forward and tapped him on the shoulder, politely, and said, 'I'm willing to bet with you if you like. . . .' He whirled round and snarled, 'Who the h— do you think you are?' Just like that!

"So I said, 'I'm sorry, if (Continued on page 105)

George Raft and Iris Adrian, above, step through a dance sequence in the Raft-Lombard "Rumba."

"I never want to start anything," says George. But he's not averse to finishing things when he's challenged.

MORE FUN

A day in the private life of La Belle Temple

Little Shirley believes that all work and no play is very dull indeed, so after finishing "The Little Colonel" she decided to have herself some fun. Above, right, we meet the lady on her tricycle and, left, she's busily engaged in feeding the fish. Then, with the irresistible Temple twinkle in her eye, she poses on the swinging gate and, below Shirley's off in her 1935 streamline mode Off to the "Heaven's Gate" set, no doubt, capture the heart of Joel McCrea.

WAS IT RIGHT TO FILM

See if you agree with these famous lawyers,

THE GREATEST drama of the age was played in a little, old courtroom at Flemington, New Jersey, where an alien ex-convict waged a desperate but futile fight to save himself from a death sentence for kidnapping the little baby of America's best-loved hero.

And out of that quiet, country courtroom came the newsreel film that has overturned the motion picture industry and aroused nearly as much controversy as did the question of Bruno Richard Hauptmann's innocence or guilt.

Attorney General David T. Wilentz (Does that "T" stand for Tiger? If you've seen the picture, you'll agree) has threatened the producers with contempt of court proceedings. Newsreel men, on the other hand, publicly deny accusations that "subterfuge, trickery and broken promises" enabled them to get the film.

What's the real story? Only the men who made the picture know. Let's ask them.

Charlie Ford was the man who edited the film and arranged the coverage of the trial for Universal, so I went to his office. He told me the whole inside story, and showed me signed documents to back up salient points.

"There was no trickery at all," he said, as he pointed to a photograph of the courtroom. "Here's the camera, right up in the front of the balcony, and that's Dave Oliver, the cameraman, standing next to it. The camera was housed in a blimp—that's the very one, over there in the corner." He pointed to a big felt-lined wooden box, nearly four feet square and two feet thick.

"You couldn't hide that, could you? And do

Below, four great newsreel companies line up outside the Flemington courthouse—Pathé, Hearst, Universal and Paramount. Roy Edwards, Universal's ace cameraman, second from right.

Below, Hauptmann tells Attorney General Wilentz, "No, I never saw that board before!" This was a tense moment when Hauptmann was on the stand.

THE HAUPTMANN TRIAL ?

newspapermen and expert radio commentators

by Robert Eichberg

you think they would have made us soundproof the camera with that, and with rubber mountings and special, silent fibre gears, if they didn't expect it to be used during periods when silence was necessary?" Everyone could see it plainly.

"But," I countered, "how about the microphone? Winchell says it was hidden under the judge's desk."

"I'll let you talk to George Graham, the man who recorded the sound for the picture," said Ford, and called Graham into his office.

"Why," said the sound technician, "anybody who said that doesn't know sound recording! If it had been under the bench, you would have heard a muffled drone, with lots of courtroom noise drowing out the testimony, instead, it was clear.

"Our microphone was hanging up on the wall facing the witness stand, in full view of everybody. We had to put a piece of curved cardboard in back of it to catch the sound, and I know that some court attendants knew it was there, because one morning when we came in, the cardboard was gone, and we gave one of the attendants two dollars to put it back."

Mr. Ford resumed the story, "All five newsreel companies got together before the first witness took the stand. Here's a copy of the agreement we all signed, showing how we had a schedule of operation worked out, so that we could all take turns on the three cameras we had rigged up, one in the courtroom, one (Continued on page 114)

Below, John F. Condon (Jafsie) tells Wilentz, "'John' is Bruno Richard Hauptmann!" Note that Judge Trenchard's chair is empty.

Below, left—the courtroom with the unconcealed camera to the left of the light on the balcony—plainly in sight.

Below, Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh. His appearance in court and his testimony is believed to have had great influence on the final verdict.

Copyright 1935 by Universal Newsreel. Further reproduction prohibited.

BECKY SHARP

She was a woman to be noticed, to be admired—to be feared. And in the end, to be reviled!

ALL men, it seemed, were destined to be her victims. And to that end her snares were set with careful skill. She must have learned guile in her very cradle. Learned with her earliest lessons that wit must give her what fortune had denied. But guile and wit were not Becky Sharp's only weapons against an unkind fate. Eyes whose conscious craft seemed gentle innocence. Lips whose skillful lies seemed utter truth. Glamorous vivacity. Languorous charm Swift subtleties of thought and speech and act. And the stillness of a stalking tiger. Yes, she was a woman to be noticed, to be admired, to be feared. And in the end to be reviled. For like all who count neither cost nor credit in attaining the heart's desire, she herself was destined to be at last the most tragic victim of her own cupidity.

The meagre existence which her father, a starveling artist, was able to provide was not enough for Becky Sharp. She should have high fortune, she decided long before her father's death in the sorry garret which was their home. Lords and ladies, she resolved while still a despised pupil-teacher in Miss Pinkerton's select school, should be her equals, not her superiors. And these haughty, aristocratic daughters of the rich, who were her schoolmates, should envy her.

Her first chance came through Amelia Sedley, whose sweetly pliant nature made her treat Becky more kindly than did the others. And, with confidences wisely calculated to impress, Becky succeeded in winning an invitation to visit the Sedleys.

THERE she tried out her powers on Amelia's brother, Joseph. And there she met her first defeat. Fresh from school, she had not yet acquired the technique, the finesse, which were to be her defense, her flashing weapons. True, Joseph himself was easily captivated. He was fat and rather dull, but he would, she was sure, propose. And she intended to marry him. But George Osborne, Amelia's suitor, frustrated that fond hope. He warned the elder Sedleys of the snare that was being set. And how-

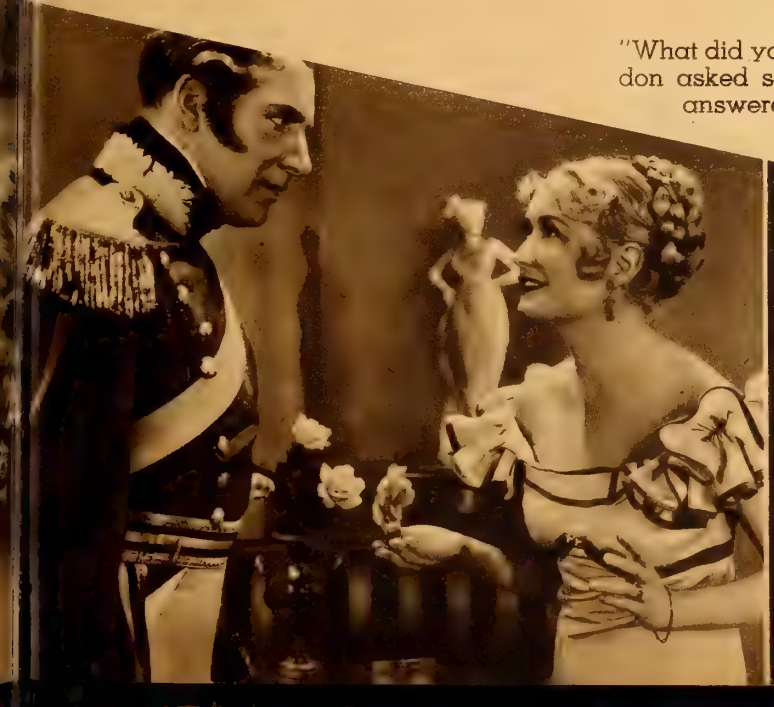
George Osborne losing to Rawdon Crawley. But Rawdon's luck was not to last. . . .

"You and I are going away," George Osborne pleaded with Becky.

Becky, with false sweetness, laughs away Amelia's worries about George's debts.

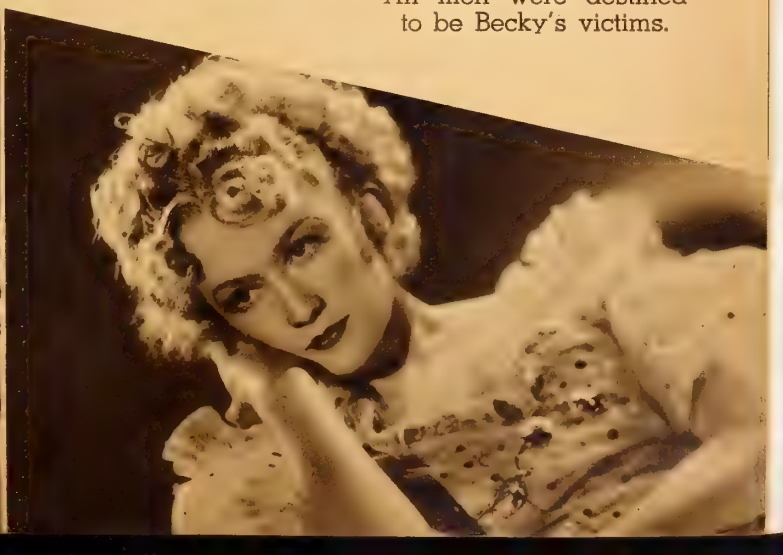
Too late, old Sir Pitt pops the question. Becky might have been Lady Pitt!

ever they might amuse themselves with Amelia's poor little orphan friend, they did not intend that their son should marry a penniless nobody. And Joseph was shipped forthwith to India.



George should pay for that treachery, Becky resolved. Captain Dobbin, too, whom she despised and who was hopelessly in love with Amelia, must have had a hand in that fiasco. He looked on her with disconcerting, cold eyes—the only man she was ever to meet who did not succumb to her calculated charm.

From the Sedleys' Becky went to Queen's Crawley, to be governess to the daughters of Sir Pitt. And there she continued her campaign. Even the old baronet neglected his forlorn wife to spend hours in Becky's company. And the younger Pitt, assuring himself that it was her soul that appealed to him, inveigled her into reading sermons with him. Neither Sir Pitt nor his elder son guessed that the younger son, Rawdon, who came now on more frequent visits from London where he was an officer in the Guards, also found Becky necessary to his happiness.



Rawdon, Becky decided after careful thought, would do. He was an amiable weakling, and the pet and favorite of his wealthy aunt, Miss Julia Crawley. It was no secret that he was to be her heir. And Miss Crawley also seemed to like Becky. On one of her rare (Continued on page 87)

Becky Sharp.....MIRIAM HOPKINS
Joseph Sedley.....NIGEL BRUCE
George Osborne.....G. P. HUNTLEY, JR.
Rawdon Crawley.....ALAN MOWBRAY
Amelia Sedley.....FRANCES DEE
Marquis of Steyne.....SIR CEDRIC HARDWICKE
Lady Bareacres.....BILLIE BURKE
Miss Crawley.....ALISON SKIPWORTH
Captain Dobbin.....COLIN TAPLEY
Sir Pitt Crawley.....GEORGE HASSEL
Pitt Crawley.....WILLIAM STECK

—Adapted from the RKO-RADIO picture, produced in technicolor by PIONEER PICTURES. Directed by ROUBEN MAMOULIAN. Based on the play by LANGDON E. MITCHELL. From WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY'S novel, "VANITY FAIR." Fictionized by ETHEL M. POMEROY.

"What did you play?" Rawdon asked sternly. "Dice," answered Becky.

All men were destined to be Becky's victims.

Grace Moore sang in cheap cafés before she got a break in opera or even musical comedy. Below, a painting, done when she was in the "Music Box Revue."

SIX MONTHS IN HELL

by Dell Hogarth

The golden voice gone! The great physician said, "One chance in a thousand—if.." Grace Moore's fame rested on that "if"

HOW lucky she is! Any woman born with a voice like that couldn't help but be famous."

Such a remark often follows the deafening applause which acclaims the singing of Grace Moore. And Grace will smile when she hears it. Smile? It would be more accurate to call it a look of tragic amusement.

The best vantage point from which to consider the darkest episode in the life of any celebrity is from the shining pinnacle of her career. Her moment of supreme triumph.

The crown of laurel was placed on Grace Moore's head at the party given in her honor by Condé Nast. The New York papers proclaimed it the greatest social event since the depression began. It celebrated the première of her picture, "One Night of Love."

Vincent Astor, Lawrence Tibbett, Mr. and Mrs. Al Smith, Harold Lloyd, Amy Vanderbilt, Maurice Chevalier, Mr. and Mrs. Chrysler, and Nelson Rockefeller are just a few of the illustrious names who assembled to pay her tribute.

The two hundred guests occupied the "golden horseshoe" of the Radio City Music Hall Theatre to view her picture and afterwards progressed, in a caravan of limousines, to the famous penthouse apartment of the host for dinner and dancing. There, high above the hum of Park Avenue traffic, praise was spread at the feet of this Venus of Song. Champagne popped. Miss Moore was radiant with felicity. But for one brief instant, that look of tragic amusement returned. It was just nine years before . . .

NINE brief years! An excited Southern girl was jammed in a crowded New York subway that was rushing downtown. Her eyes sparkled with joyous expectation. Unheard by the other passengers, she kept humming the bars of the musical scores which she clutched tightly under her arm. Now and then her nervous fingers found the small mirror in her bag which she held up critically before her face. She didn't know much about make-up then, but she tried desperately to bring out the generous warmth of her mouth, the naïve blueness of her eyes. The stations roared past. Times Square at last. She jostled toward the door and almost ran up the stairs.

For three solid weeks she had practiced day and night for the tryouts for "Hitchy-Koo." To be sure, she had come to New York to go into opera. But one didn't just walk into the Metropolitan, she ruefully discovered, and immediately become a prima donna. So she grimly stayed on in New York, refusing her father's plea to come home, and eked out a lonely existence by singing in a cheap café. Then she was called for this tryout; a lyric soprano was needed for Raymond Hitchcock's new musical comedy.

Grace hurried along the street and turned into the alleyway toward the stage door of the theatre. The doorkeeper watched the willowy girl sweep down upon him with her face flushed and her head erect. She was the picture of confidence. Grace smiled and paused to say "hello" to the old man. Her lips opened, but no sound came forth.

Her hand flew to her throat as astonishment sprang into her eyes. Once again her lips moved. Her voice fell soundlessly on the cold air. Funny little puffs of mist, and nothing more. The doorman was gaping at her now. He stared at her face which began to convulse in frantic efforts to evoke her voice. The expression in her eyes was painful to watch. She stood motionless, transfixed by panic.

The doorman came to his senses and dashed inside to phone a doctor. When he returned she was gone.

After the lonely desolation of a sleepless night, Grace was sitting in the outer office of Dr. Mario Marafioti. Her haggard eyes implored the girl primly ensconced behind the desk to let her see the one man who, she was convinced, could restore her life. But the girl had given her no encouragement.

Dr. Marafioti's position was unique. A graduate M.D. he had long since devoted his time and talents to the first love of his Italian boyhood — the opera. He was now the

(Continued on page 100)

(Below, left) Grace Moore with her teacher and discoverer, Dr. Mario Marafioti, who virtually saved her voice by recommending a six-month silence. (Below right) An amazingly young and happy Grace Moore preparing for her next film, "On Wings of Song," which promises to be equally as fine as "One Night of Love."

A LITTLE CHILD

Sandy Burns finds herself pos-

Illustrated by Hoecker

On account of it's Easter, Gracie hung up a little mistletoe as a surprise for George! Their next is "Love in Bloom."

by Sara Hamilton

GEORGE and Gracie, known for a very good reason, to millions of fans as Burns and Allen, have a baby.

A real, live, beautiful baby. And never have you seen such a pair of doting and adoring parents as these two. If Gracie was slightly "teched" in the head before, you should see her now. It's "Sandy did this" and 'Sandy did that" till friends beg for mercy. And George is just as bad. I tell you papa and mama Burns are a team of Sandy rooters and no use trying to get a word in edgeways.

Whether Sandy, now six months old, said "goo goo" or just plain "da da" that morning, is more important to this team of comedians than the number of scenes they have in their new picture or the number of laughs they reap in their weekly broadcast.

And that, boys and girls, is somepin'.

Of course, anyone in their right mind, first gets the baby, then the name and then the nickname. Anyone that is, but Gracie. Gracie, nitwit-like, simply began at the wrong end, as usual, and worked up. First, Gracie got the nickname.

"Don't you think Sandy would be a cute nickname for a baby, George?" Gracie one day asked her patient and harassed husband.

"Yes, I think so, Gracie."

"Sandy Burns would be cuter, wouldn't it? Only what name would Sandy be a nickname for?"

"Gracie, I think 'cuckoo' would be a swell nickname for you, so figure it out."

"Oh George, you say the sweetest things. And I think 'sugar cookie with raisins' would be perfect for you."

"Gracie, you call me that just once and mind, I warn you, I—"

"Oh, I know, George. Sandra. Sandy could be a nickname for Sandra."

"And who's to be called Sandra, may I ask, Gracie?"

"Why, a baby, of course, George. What do you say

SHALL LEAD THEM BY THE NOSE

sessor of Hollywood's nuttiest parents, Gracie and George

Already Sandra Burns has achieved a perpetually bewildered expression at the strange goings-on of her parents, George Burns and Gracie Allen.

we get one? I'll begin saving the coupons today."

"Gracie, you don't get them by saving coupons. And now will you please jump off the nearest bridge and let me read my paper in peace?"

BUT Gracie did no bridge jumping. She immediately wired a Chicago nursing home for something cute that would go with her little blue hat. Weeks later, they wired Gracie, who was then in New York, to come for her baby. The wire came at 12 noon. At two o'clock, Gracie and a friend, were on a train, Chicago bound. "But, Miss Allen, we had no idea you were so tiny," they told her at the home. "From your pictures we imagined you much larger. I'm afraid the six months old baby we selected for you will be too large to handle."

"Well, maybe it will shrink when it's washed," Gracie comforted.

"Now, here's a little five weeks old baby we feel sure you'll love," they told her. And thus came Sandy to the loving, hungry arms of George and Gracie.

But first, Sandy must be transported from Chicago to New York. A large wicker basket for carrying purposes was secured and a traveling outfit was purchased for the baby. The Chicago shops, of course, aren't over this event yet, with Gracie asking what the younger set were wearing that season and to show her something that went well with bubbles as her daughter blew lovely bubbles.

Finally, dressed in her new outfit, complete from bib to tucker, and all four sizes too big, Sandy, in her basket, and with her traveling tray of milk bottles, set out with Gracie for New York.

"Now what do we do?" Gracie asked her friend, once they were settled in their drawing-room on the train.

"Now we fold the diapers," the friend said. "Remember what they told us. They must be folded just so."

For hours Gracie struggled to fold the diapers. "I always have one end left over," she wept, "let's call the conductor."

"Can you help us with these things?" Gracie asked the wide-eyed conductor. "We can't get them to work."

For another hour Gracie, her friend and the conductor struggled with the diapers to no avail. "Now don't cry, miss," he told Gracie when all seemed lost, "when the train makes its next stop, I'll get the engineer back. He's a new father and he'll know how to do this, don't you worry."

"Stop the train now," Gracie wailed, "this is an emergency." Five minutes later, the engineer had flipped together a neat stack of folded diapers and the train proceeded on its surprised way to New York.

All night Gracie sat, white and tense, beside the sleeping baby, afraid to close her eyes for fear the baby would disappear. At five (Continued on page 86)

They must be one happy family to live under one roof—Pa Merkel, Una and husband, Mc Merkel.

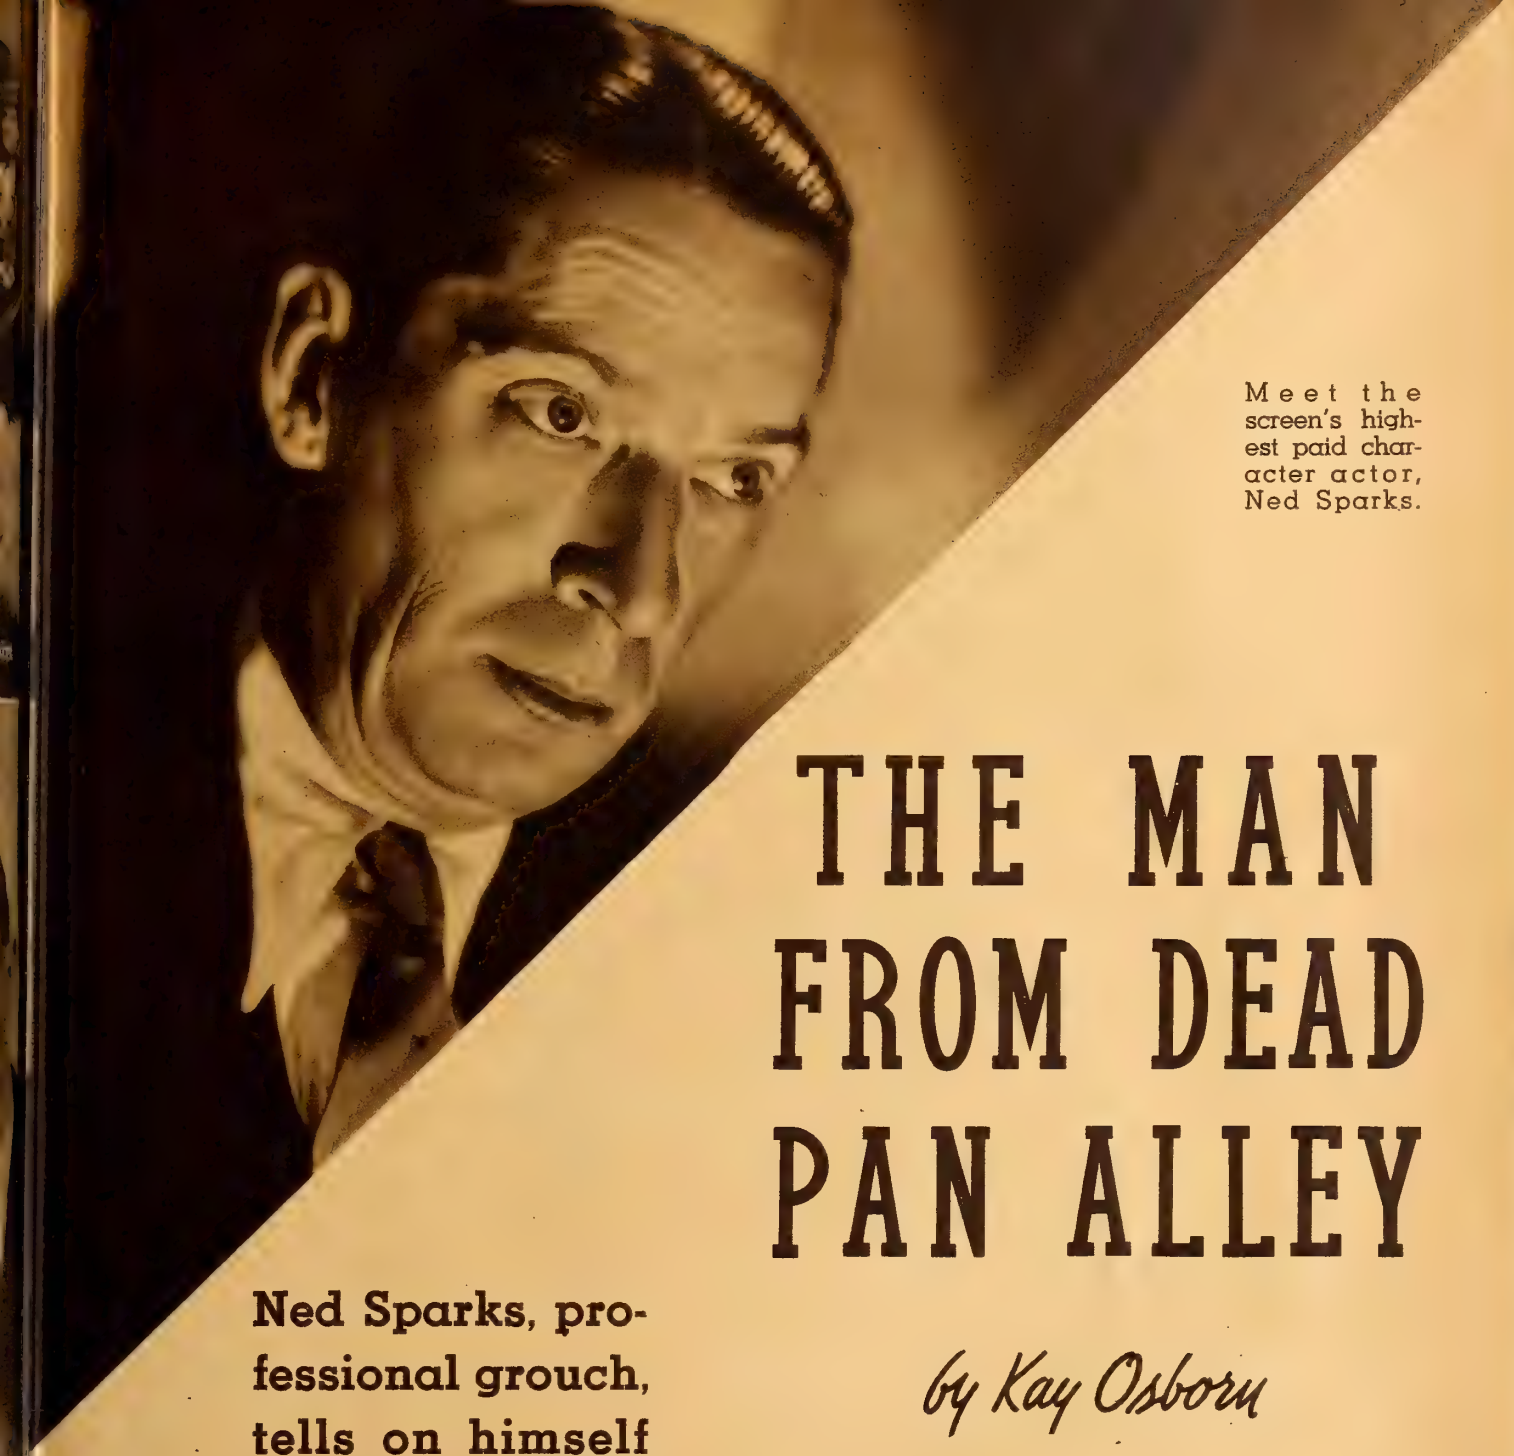
The versatile Miss Merkel as a dancing girl in the musical, "The Night Is Young."

"I BET I STAY MARRIED"

by Ruth Biery

Una shares acting honors with that other ace comedian, Charlie Butterworth, in "Public Enemy No. 2."

THIS story is to be read aloud, with the reader using Miss Merkel's cunning, completely natural, soft, Southern drawl. Just replace all "r's" with "h's" and lilt the voice at the end of each sentence. Personally I haven't the courage to reproduce Una's accent in print.



"I promised myself never to talk about my marriage because—no, don't laugh at me—I'm awfully superstitious about it. (She knocked on wood.) You see, I thought I would never get married. I don't believe the gods give one person too much. They sort of balance things up. So I thought I'd never have a husband.

"That's why I said I'd never talk about it. I don't want to tempt those gods. But if you'll be awful careful not to get me in wrong with them—I do think it's sort of nice that some of us in Hollywood aren't afraid we won't stay married. Of course, I'd actually bet on mine lasting if it weren't for that little superstition. Betting is sort of making it a gamble. (She knocked on wood.)

"Of course, to understand about Ronni and me and why I sort of keep thinking about those gods, you have to begin at the beginning. You see, we got married first and went together afterwards. Just like my mother and father.

"My mother was seventeen and my father under twenty when I was born. They just met and got married on January first without any courting and then, in about a year, I came along. You see, I (Continued on page 84)

Knocking on wood at every turn, cute Una Merkel tells why

Meet the screen's highest paid character actor, Ned Sparks.

THE MAN FROM DEAD PAN ALLEY

Ned Sparks, professional grouch, tells on himself

by Kay Osborn

MEETING the world's greatest grouch at the day's grouchiest hour—nine o'clock in the morning, to be exact—appealed to me not in the least. In fact, I must admit that I was a bit nervous about it. I could laugh at Ned Sparks on the screen and really feel quite chummy toward him as long as there were several theatre rows between us. But face to face with him for the first time, in his own apartment . . . I wondered!

I knocked very boldly and loudly to hide my stage fright. Then I heard the friendly, familiar sound of a typewriter, and my heart leapt. A typewriter, bless its heart, would make me feel right at home. Furthermore, I write on a typewriter . . . Mr. Sparks writes on a typewriter . . . that would be at least one bond between us.

Yes, the voice was gruff, all right, when it said, "Come in!" but I had little chance to examine the face, for as I opened the door I was practically knocked over by the friendly onslaught of a little bull terrier as she leapt into my arms.

Such an enthusiastic greeting bowled me over mentally as well as physically. I could only sit down and take the dog on my lap. "That's Betsy Ann," said Mr. Sparks.

"How do you do, Betsy Ann?" and with this little encouragement the dog brought a rubber ball to throw for her.

"Isn't she cute?" I said, and I really meant it.

"She's the light of my life, the apple of my eye, and the center of my universe," he said in that hard nasal tone of his, and only then was I able to look at him. I found him looking at Betsy Ann with that fixed, unblinking stare. What I used to think was a glassy look in his eyes I now saw was only a moist mirror of affection.

WHAT did you think of my angle for a story on you?" I asked him. "I wrote in my letter how one night years ago, when you were on the stage, you had indigestion, and looked so pained and sour and sad that, the moment the audience saw you, they literally rolled in the aisles. And so you have been purposely looking as though you had indigestion ever since, and have been cashing in on it?"

(Continued on page 108)

IS IT A DREAM?

Years of struggle preceded Joe Morrison's climb to the top

by S.R. Mook

SEVERAL years ago I wrote of Clark Gable: "Meaning no disrespect, he reminds me of nothing so much as a mongrel pup who has been kicked around all his life, making shift as best he can. Then suddenly, one day, instead of the customary kick someone gives him a pat and takes him home. He capers around, trying to make friends, unable to believe his good fortune. But, always, in the back of his mind, is a haunting fear that it's all a dream and shortly he's going to wake up and find himself rummaging for a living in life's back alleys again."

The only other person I have ever met who affects me that way is Joe Morrison. Despite his recent success, despite his cheerful grin and unfailing good nature, he has, it seems to me, something pathetic about him. He can't believe his good fortune is real.

Not long ago we sat in his living-room in front of a crackling fire. "I wonder," I speculated idly, "where we'll be five years from now—what we'll be doing?"

He glanced at me curiously but there was no answering smile on his face. "I'm afraid to think," he answered simply. "I haven't the courage to look ahead."

He was born in Grand Rapids, Michigan. His mother died when he was three and his father promptly remarried.

HE remembers little of his childhood and, from the scraps I have pieced together, I don't blame him. The biggest thrill of those years, he says, was being allowed to go out into an open field with his cousin and play Indian. I don't believe he has ever had any childhood!

When he was about twelve he entered a seminary to study for the priesthood. There, again, I cannot tell where loyalty stops and fact enters in. I have often wondered if it weren't just that a family in straitened circumstances took that as the easiest way out. I cannot visualize a person of Joe's temperament voluntarily choosing that life. Joe loves life, lights and laughter. But he insists that his embarking on such an undertaking was not a matter of expediency. "Early training, perhaps," he admits, and then shuts up.

During his second year in the seminary his father died. After the second year's training, he had to live at the seminary. The rigid rules and regulations had a depressing effect on him. He stuck it out until he had been in training for four and a half years. Then he went to the head of the seminary and told him that he didn't think he was temperamentally suited to the priesthood. It was with a feeling of vast relief he heard the priest say, "If you hadn't come to me, I was (Continued on page 118)

Later, when I returned to meet the producer of the show, I found them making selections for show girls.

YOU OUGHT TO BE IN PICTURES

When friends tell you this, read why it's best to forget it!

by Paul Von Sloun

Cartoons by Riveron

YOU'VE heard that song, "You Ought To Be In Pictures!" If anyone ever sings it to you, don't pay any attention. I know.

I am the son of a well known character actor. Naturally, at college, I took part in all the college theatricals. After every performance friends came up, slapped me on the back and began, "You ought to be in pictures." Eventually, I came to believe it, particularly when their advice simply added fuel to the flame of a private opinion of my own.

It had been tacitly accepted by the family that I was to follow one of the more substantial professions but I had long cherished different ideas. Reared in a theatrical atmosphere, it was only natural that the theatre should be the breath of life in my nostrils. The bite of the theatrical bug is worse than that of the tarantula. From the latter you either recover or it brings a swift merciful death. From the former you never recover.

About midway of my third year I couldn't stand it any longer so I wired Dad, "Please send me $200 Stop Leaving for Hollywood Thursday Stop Love to Mother Stop Paul." Dad was, by the way, in Hollywood.

While I hadn't said anything in the wire about wanting to get out because I felt I "ought to be in pictures," he must have suspected something of the sort because his reply consisted of only one word—"Why?" It wasn't necessary to answer that at the time. He sent me the money and I was off to fame and fortune.

WHEN I had partaken of the "Fatted Calf" the inevitable question couldn't be postponed any longer. "Why did I want to go into the movies?" There was no answer except that I wanted to. No argument could change that. Dad somewhat sadly accepted it.

Accordingly he took me around to see his agent, introduced me; and from there on I assured him his obligations were over—I would stand on my own feet. The agent appeared to like me at once. I was of the accepted juvenile type much in demand. He immediately called a casting director who was looking for a juvenile. When the latter learned who I was he was most anxious to meet me.

An interview was arranged for the following day. The casting director, in turn, seemed pleased with me and made an appointment for me (Continued on page 101)

(Left) To impress the producer I must have their photographer "shoot" me at $8 per dozen!

(Right) Thinking I was somewhat a "collegiate" type, I figured this job was up my alley.

"Smooth" CLOTHES for young Gadabouts

BY ADELIA BIRD

Hollywood's young set dates in clothes like these . . .

Above, left, Wendy Barrie's quilted evening coat. Right, a printed silk frock of Marina Schubert's. Below, left, Wendy in white satin. Right, Maureen O'Sullivan's white organza with blue trimming.

IN YOUR secret moments you may cherish a burning desire to look like Marlene Dietrich —you may mimic her expressions in the mirror and startle your family by looking rather far away and mysterious as she does! But in your clothes, it is far better for you to copy the sprightly young Maureen O'Sullivan, the gay Wendy Barrie, sweet Anne Shirley, Jean Parker or Anita Louise. They're more your type and they are every bit as exciting as Marlene, Joan Crawford and Jean Harlow.

These younger stars are exciting to you because they live much the same sort of life you do only in that glamorous town called Hollywood. Their mothers watch and advise them, they go to tennis matches, roller skate, dance and date with the young beaux in town. And many of them don't have half the fun you do, actually, because they can't indulge in a double chocolate pecan sundae on account of their strict diets—and they have to work hard when often they feel like playing!

YOUNGER Hollywood fashions shelve glamorous sophistication for "smoothness." In fact, according to these youthful stars your whole appearance must be "smooth." No heavy make-up, rather a well-scrubbed looking skin with a light dusting of powder and just enough rouge to give your face a naturally rosey look. Your hair either boasts a fluffy, high-off-the-forehead bang or is brushed smoothly back, often tied with a ribbon, or in the evening, held by a flower. No nails dripping with bright red; instead a natural shade that imparts just the faintest glow to them. No heavy perfumes; rather something light, spring-like. And then your clothes—they will be either boyish looking sports clothes or feminine silks by day. In the evening, you will be a fragile, feminine creature in yards of misty chiffon, gay prints or organdies.

Above, Wendy Barrie's three-piece woolen suit with plaid jacket. Below, Anne Shirley's cute plaid taffeta shirtwaist frock with velvet bow.

Above, Toby Wing in a smart knitted cape costume. Below, Wendy, again, in an unusual printed silk with velvet trimming.

Above, left, Marjorie Reid's navy straw with white. Right, Maureen's dotted hat. Below, Virginia Reid's white straw. And last, Marjorie Reid, again in an off-the-face model.

There's your picture—the picture of you and your favorite young star. And here is what you buy to get the effect. Remember that salaries for Hollywood's youngsters aren't the staggering ones of their more glamorous sisters, they haven't grown up to that yet. So a bit of budgeting isn't amiss for either you or them!

You are going to love the colors this spring. They are just your dish, so to speak. Pinks in that flattering dusty tone, violet which you haven't seen in years—and all tones of it, too—and your great favorite, navy and white. Then there's all the other blues like Hyacinth, Aqua and the misty tones. Also yellows and rosey red that look elegant in sweaters and tweeds.

YOU can do all sorts of things with these colors in combining them. For instance, Anita Louise wears a dusty pink cardigan sweater over a Parma violet pull-on. And Madge Evans wears a navy blue cardigan over a plain white sports dress. Wendy Barrie, with her dark hair, looks knockout in a rosey red jacket with the palest of pink sweaters beneath.

And while we are on the subject of colors, have you thought how easily you can revive some of your last summer's dresses and sweaters by using one of those little dyeing wafers that gives a fast color without boiling? You can combine parts of different wafers to get just the newest color scheme. It gives you the feeling of being quite an expert and the results are very professional looking. This goes for underwear, too. Since blue and pink are showing up in lingerie fashions as well as in costumes, you (Continued on Page 107)

FIGHT LINES, WRINKLES, BLEMISHES WHERE THEY BEGIN—IN YOUR UNDER SKIN!

What happens under your skin

Underneath your outer skin is the true skin or corium. Here myriads of tiny blood vessels, elastic fibres, fat and muscle tissues, oil glands create the beauty of your outer skin. When they grow sluggish, look out for blackheads, coarseness, blemishes, lines.

LINES, WRINKLES, signs of wasting of the underskin—impaired nutrition—lack of invigorating oils.

COARSENESS is made worse by clogged pores, improper cleansing.

BLACKHEADS come from pores clogged by thick secretions from overactive skin glands.

DRYNESS is often due to poorly functioning underskin, insufficient oil.

BLEMISHES. Many factors lead to blemishes—among them, inactive circulation, improper cleansing.

SAGGING TISSUES, due to loss of nerve tone, impaired circulation, fatty degeneration of the muscles.

Mrs. Crawford Blagden, Jr., says: "Pond's Cold Cream cleanses thoroughly."

Mrs. Francis Grover Cleveland says: "Pond's Cold Cream seems to wipe away lines and blemishes, gives the skin a fresh look."

SEE SMOOTH GLOWING CHEEKS RETURN AS DEEP-REACHING CREAM STIRS UNDER SKIN BACK TO VIGOROUS ACTION

WHERE do skin faults first begin? In the under layers of your skin.

You see, the under layers of your skin are full of little nerves, fibres, cells, oil glands, fat and muscle tissues. Keep them actively at work, and your outer skin just blooms beauty.

But once the teens are past, oil glands begin to dry up. Circulation slows. Nerves and fibres lose their snap. Result—little blemishes, blackheads—as you grow older, wrinkles, sagging tissues!

Cleanse deep—keep underskin active

That is why it is so important to choose a cream that goes deep and keeps your underskin active.

Pond's Cold Cream goes right to the underskin. Its specially processed oils sink deep. As you pat it into your skin, you feel the circulation freshened, stimulated. Dirt, make-up, impurities from within the skin itself, are softened, loosened, lifted from the pores by these light, deep-reaching oils. Your underskin is liberated, free to function actively again.

Look in your mirror, after a thorough, deep-skin cleansing and stimulation with this cream. How much fresher and clearer your skin is! With just one treatment!

Pond's Cold Cream is pure, germ-free. Use it every night before retiring to flush impurities away, free the skin, stimulate its under layers.

In the daytime, too, to freshen your skin for the day, give it the satiny surface that takes your rouge and make-up so smoothly.

See what 9 treatments will do

It is very easy to try Pond's. Send the coupon for a tube containing enough for 9 treatments! Remember, the healthy, vigorous underskin Pond's Cold Cream gives you is a sure means to the lovely, satiny outer skin every woman wants.

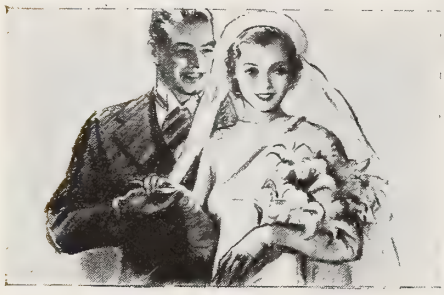
MAIL COUPON TODAY—for Generous Package including 9-treatment tube of Pond's Cold Cream and other beauty aids.

POND'S, Dept. F–50 Clinton, Conn. I enclose 10¢ (to cover postage and packing) for special tube of Pond's Cold Cream, enough for 9 treatments, with generous samples of 2 other Pond's Creams and 5 different shades of Pond's Face Powder.

Name_____



Street_____

City_____ State_____

Copyright, 1935, Pond's Extract Company

SAD AND BLUE

NOW "I DO"

Blue Waltz brought me happiness

I used to be so sad, so blue. Secretly I was starving for good times, dates. It seems like a miracle to think that all those dreary days are gone and that now I'm a happy bride. And all because I discovered what alluring charm Blue Waltz Perfume can give!

It's almost magic how this exquisite perfume creates a world of enchantment around you... how, like a dreamy waltz in moonlight, it inspires romance and tender yearning.

And you can look lovelier, too. I got the thrill of a lifetime when I tried all of the Blue Waltz Cosmetics. You can get the same thrill!

Make up carefully with Blue Waltz Lipstick and Blue Waltz Face Powder. See how temptingly luscious your lips look. Notice how perfectly this fine powder blends with the natural tone of your skin, making it radiantly fresh and youthful. Your mirror will tell you honestly how beautiful you are and what a glorious improvement Blue Waltz Cosmetics have made!

You are really unfair to your beauty if you don't buy Blue Waltz Perfume and Cosmetics today. For your protection, they are "certified to be pure" and they are only 10c each at your 5 and 10c store.

Now you can ensemble your beauty preparations. You find the same alluring fragrance in Blue Waltz Perfume, FacePowder, Lipstick, Cream Rouge, Brilliantine, Cold Cream, Vanishing Cream, Toilet Water, Talcum Powder. Only 10c each at your 5 and 10c store.

Blue Waltz
PERFUME AND COSMETICS
FIFTH AVENUE · NEW YORK

MODERN SCREEN DRAMATIC SCHOOL

Directed by Katherine Albert

Some practical advice on the subject of crashing the stage or the movies

I WAS so thrilled at the marvelous response I got when we decided to organize dramatic clubs throughout the country. Hundreds of them are now flourishing nicely and that's very cheering news. But there is always room for more. And if you want to have the most fun you ever had just fill in the coupon below. And please, please don't forget to enclose that self-addressed, stamped envelope.

The many requests I've had for club information make me realize just how interested in dramatic art people are everywhere. This is your very own department and I am completely guided by your letters. I do so want to tell you what you want to know.

This month hundreds of letters have come to me asking the question, "How can I get the breaks? If I am anxious to make the step from the amateur stage to the professional stage and thence to pictures, how can I do it? What is my first move?"

WHAT a question! How can it be answered? You see, there are no cut-and-dried rules. There is no golden path to success. It all depends so definitely on circumstances, individual breaks and luck. But it is a question that I cannot shirk. And I will tell you everything I have learned about this subject.

I seriously recommend that all of you content yourselves with the marvelous fun of amateur dramatics, of MODERN SCREEN'S Dramatic School or of Little Theatres. But many people have the urge to do professional acting and so I am going to discuss this with you.

First, I'll tell you the mechanics of it. Get all the amateur dramatic training possible. Specialize in every dramatic course your schools give you. And then, if possible, attend a first-rate (Continued on page 97)

Do you want to organize a dramatic club in your own community? Katherine Albert, the director of MODERN SCREEN'S Dramatic School, has prepared complete, detailed instructions about organizing such a club. Here is an opportunity to have a lot of fun and to do something really worth while. Fill in the information asked for below (please type or print plainly) and send it, with a stamped, addressed return envelope to Katherine Albert, MODERN SCREEN Dramatic School, 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Please send me your instructions for organizing a dramatic club.

Name.....

Street.....

City and State.....

YOU'VE WON HIM— NOW YOU MUST KEEP HIM...

Don't let COSMETIC SKIN spoil your good looks!

SO much of a woman's charm depends on keeping her skin clear — appealingly smooth. Yet many a woman, without realizing it, is actually spoiling her own looks.

When stale make-up is not properly removed, but allowed to choke the pores day after day, it causes unattractive Cosmetic Skin. You begin to notice tiny blemishes —enlarged pores—blackheads, perhaps—warning signals of this modern complexion trouble.

Cosmetics Harmless if removed this way

In Hollywood the lovely screen stars protect their million-dollar complexions with Lux Toilet Soap —the soap especially made to remove cosmetics thoroughly. Its rich, ACTIVE lather sinks deep down into the pores, carries swiftly away every vestige of dust, dirt, embedded powder and rouge.

Before you put on fresh make-up during the day—ALWAYS before you go to bed at night—give your skin this protecting, beautifying care. Exquisite smooth skin is a priceless treasure. Don't take chances!

ELISSA LANDI
PARAMOUNT STAR

NRA CODE

ANY GIRL CAN HAVE A SMOOTH, REALLY LOVELY SKIN. YOU CAN USE COSMETICS AS MUCH AS YOU WISH IF YOU GUARD YOUR SKIN AS I DO—WITH GENTLE LUX TOILET SOAP

NOTE FREE OFFER BELOW

AMAZING!

WHAT A SINGLE BOTTLE OF

Hires EXTRACT WILL DO

1 Makes 40 bottles of sparkling Hires Root Beer, easily, quickly with yeast. Economical—8 glasses for 5c!

2 Instant Hires Root Ade can be made, using a teaspoonful of Hires Extract to a quart of ice water. Sweeten to taste. Add juice of half a lemon.

3 Nutritious Hires Milk Shake brings a new appeal in flavors, winning both children and adults. Makes children like milk.

Hires Root Beer is delicious, wholesome and economical—accepted by the American Medical Association's Committee on Foods and approved by the Good Housekeeping Bureau.

To avoid oil flavored imitations, insist on

Hires R-J ROOT BEER FOR REAL JUICES

FREE—a generous trial bottle of Hires Extract—enough to make 4 quarts of Hires Root Beer—to all who mail the coupon, enclosing 3¢ to cover postage and handling.

FREE

The Charles E. Hires Co., Philadelphia, Pa.
Please send me free bottle of Hires Extract. I enclose 3c for postage and packing. M-5-35

Name.....

Street.....

City..... State.....

Canadians should mail coupon to The Charles E. Hires Co., Ltd., Toronto

The Modern Hostess

(Continued from page 12)

Janet Gaynor, I am going to profit by her example and stick to the old-fashioned simple type of things that always have been popular, still continue to be popular and, I'm sure, will go on being popular for countless years to come. I refer to the delicious home-baked foods that come out of the family oven, filling the air with the appetite-provoking aroma of "sugar and spice and everything nice."

"Cakes like Mother used to bake" (and pies, biscuits and breads as well) are famed in song and story and take precedence in Janet Gaynor's affections over any other form of home-made foods. That's why, in one form or another, they so often find their way into the basket that Janet's German cook packs to send down to her at the studio.

"I never eat in the studio commissary," petite Miss Gaynor informed me as we settled down for a chat, each in our own corner of the chintz covered divan in the living-room of her little bungalow at the Fox Studios. "I don't mean that as a reflection upon the food they serve there," she continued, "but I find it so much more restful to eat in here."

AND no wonder, I thought, as I looked about me. For Janet Gaynor's dressing-room is just too adorable for words. The same pattern of chintz that covered the divan hung in graceful folds at the window. Framed flower prints hung upon the wall, and still another note of color was brought in through gay dishes standing upright on the shelves of the buffet and the corner cupboard.

In the actual dressing-room of the bungalow, however, which had been shown to me before we sat down, I was interested to observe that Janet had discarded Colonial simplicity and indulged in truly feminine coquetry. Windows on either side of her dressing table were shaded by Venetian blinds with satin pulls, if you please. Curtains of gossamer sheerness on either side of the dressing-table, were held back by bows of satin. A true setting for a Dresden shepherdess—or a French frame for Janet's cameo-like quality. Feminity on the one hand, tasteful simplicity on the other, in short, a visual example of the secret of Janet's success.

And these same qualities should characterize your home-baked goods, according to Miss Gaynor. No strange concoctions for her, no unusual fillings or combinations—just a cake put together with a light feminine touch and a simple icing.

The baked things Janet told me that she likes are certainly not one bit complicated to make, either. Gingerbread, for instance—just plain good old-fashioned gingerbread. Janet's cook often includes a generous square of it in the basket lunch that the chauffeur brings, straight from the Gaynor home, to the Gaynor dressing-room bungalow. Sometimes, the cook puts mounds of sweetened whipped cream on the gingerbread—at other times it is taken hot from the oven, wrapped and delivered quickly, so that it is still warm when served. (Janet also has facilities for reheating things in her bungalow, but gingerbread, somehow, seems to taste better when it retains the original flush of its heat!)

To accompany the gingerbread, when hot, the cook sends a covered glass container of icy cold apple sauce. The contrast of hot and cold foods is always a welcome one, you know.

Another luncheon dessert made by the Gaynor cook is Cheese Tarts—little, flaky pastry bites made with cream cheese for shortening and with dabs of jam for sweetening.

JANET also is particularly partial to Fruit Cake, I learned, but feels that it is too heavy for noonday consumption, especially when she is working in a picture.

"That's a treat I forego until dinner time," she told me. "Fruit Cake makes a frequent appearance on my home menu," she went on, "not because I order it, for I let the cook plan the meals, but because that worthy soul realizes that I'm so fond of it."

This Fruit Cake favorite turned out to be a simplified version that is neither too hard on the digestion nor on the cook's patience.

No mention of baked products is complete without referring to home-baked breads and biscuits, I feel. And when I expressed that conviction to Janet she agreed with me heartily. A novel bread made its appearance one day on her cute little, drop-leaf luncheon table. (The table and four chairs make a real dining-room group, as you will notice in the picture accompanying this article.) It was Banana Bread—and I found, after getting the recipe, that it does not require yeast! That's a feature which makes this bread easy enough for the most amateur cook to attempt with almost certain success crowning her efforts.

At tea-time little cakes or cookies are served, if Janet is home, or knows she will be getting off the set early. I am including a recipe for a rich tea cooky of the type she favors.

The other four recipes for Janet Gaynor's favorite cakes are included in our monthly recipe leaflet. Fill out the coupon, send it in, and recipes for Janet's Spice Gingerbread, Favorite Fruit Cake, Cheese Tea Tarts and Banana Bread are yours! Of course they're FREE—like many other good things in life.

Right here, let us leave Janet Gaynor, and go on to other more prosaic things, not nearly so pleasant to talk about but very important for successful home-baking.

There are four major points about baking to be considered. I have only enough room here to go into them very briefly.

THE first is your mixing, of course. Under this heading would come the use of first class ingredients and measuring equipment. (Gracious me, here I am, riding my pet hobby again and urging you, as before, to use only standard measuring spoons, standard measuring cups and lots of A-1 care. And you will, with these recipes, won't you?)

The second is your oven—including an oven thermometer as part of your cooking equipment. (They may be purchased for as little as 20c.) Another consideration, under this heading, is the correct placing of your baking pans so that they do not touch one another or the sides of the oven. This insures a free circulation of air during the baking.

A third heading is utensils. A well-equipped baking kitchen would include pie pans, layer cake pans, cup cake pans, loaf pans, deep baking dishes for thicker types of cakes, cooky sheets, a cake rack for cooling cakes and, if purse and room permit, such luxuries as an angel-food pan and a spring form. With that baking equipment you should be positively inspired!

The fourth heading is the time required for baking. Nowadays baking time generally is included in the recipe directions—I know I try never to omit time requirements from Modern Hostess recipes. But, unfortunately, baking time varies for one reason or another—a different temperature than that called for in the recipe, a different size in cake or pie pan—these are but two of the many possibilities. So, besides watching your clock, you must watch your cake. A five cent cake tester will be a blessing, too.

Here, then, is a new recipe with which to try out your skill and the truth of my statements. The recipes in the leaflet will make Janet Gaynor's name even more popular with you than ever which is saying a good deal for them, is it not?

Chocolate Tea Patties

2 squares unsweetened chocolate
1 can sweetened condensed milk (1⅓ cups)
¾ cup fine graham cracker crumbs
¼ cup chopped nut meats
½ teaspoon vanilla
A pinch of salt

Melt chocolate over boiling water in top of double boiler. Add sweetened condensed milk. Stir and continue cooking over boiling water for 5 minutes until mixture is smooth and thickened. Remove from heat. Roll out enough graham crackers to make ¾ cup fine crumbs (or put crackers through food grinder). Add cracker crumbs, chopped nut meats, vanilla and salt to chocolate mixture. Blend together thoroughly. Spread to ½ inch thickness in well-greased muffin pans. (This will take approximately 1 tablespoonful of batter to each cup). Bake 15 to 20 minutes in moderate oven (375° F.). Cool. Makes about 18 patties.

Quick Date Cake

½ cup soft butter
2 eggs
½ cup milk
1¾ cups flour
3 teaspoons baking powder
⅛ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon cinnamon
¼ teaspoon nutmeg
1⅓ cup brown sugar (packed firmly)
½ cup dates, chopped

Allow butter to stand in bowl at room temperature until very soft. Add eggs and milk, sift in the combined flour, baking powder, salt and spices, add sugar and chopped dates. Mix together thoroughly. When mixed, begin beating and beat for 4 minutes. Pour into greased loaf pan and cook in moderate oven (350° F.) until cake shrinks from sides of pan and cake tester inserted in cake comes out clean (40 to 50 minutes). Or turn batter into greased muffin pans or square cake pan and bake in moderate oven (375° F.) 20 to 30 minutes.

MODERN SCREEN STAR RECIPES

HOME SERVICE DEPARTMENT
149 Madison Avenue, N.Y., N.Y.
MODERN SCREEN Magazine

Please send me Janet Gaynor's recipes for May, 1935.

Name .....
(Print in pencil)

Address .....
(City) (State)

.....
(Street and Number)

What a surprise when I tasted its marvelous sauce!

"I'd always felt that no ready-cooked spaghetti could ever come up to the home-cooked kind. But I certainly changed my mind when I tasted Franco-American. What a delicious sauce it has—mine simply can't compare with it. Can you wonder I always serve Franco-American now? It means less work for me and better spaghetti for all of us."

Franco-American isn't the ordinary ready-cooked spaghetti. One taste will tell you how different it is. Its sauce contains eleven different ingredients. Luscious, flavorful tomatoes . . choice Cheddar cheese . . delicately piquant spices and seasonings . . blended by the skilled hand of the trained chef into a delectably smooth, rich, savory sauce that good home cooks declare is the best they ever tasted.

No cooking or fussing; simply heat and serve. Saves time and money, too. You never pay more than ten cents for a can holding three to four portions —less than it costs to buy dry spaghetti and other ingredients and prepare at home!

TEST...the PERFOLASTIC GIRDLE
. . . at our expense!

. . . . Read how Miss Jean Healy reduced her hips 9 INCHES!

"I read an advertisement of the Perfolastic Co. and sent for their FREE 10-day trial offer."

"They actually allowed me to wear the Perfolastic for 10 days on trial . . .

"and in 10 days, by actual measurement, my hips were 3 INCHES SMALLER"

"In a very short time I had reduced my hips 9 INCHES and weight 20 pounds"

WE want YOU to test the Perfolastic Girdle and Uplift Brassiere at our expense! Test them for yourself for ten days absolutely FREE! We are so sure that you can be your slimmer self without diets, drugs or exercises, that we make this unconditional offer . . .

REDUCE Your Waist and Hips 3 INCHES in 10 DAYS

. . . or no cost

Massage-Like Action Reduces Quickly

■ Worn next to the body with perfect safety, the tiny perforations permit the skin to breathe as the gentle massage-like action removes flabby, disfiguring fat with every movement . . . stimulating the body once more into energetic health!

Don't Wait Any Longer — Act Today

■ You can prove to yourself quickly and definitely in 10 days whether or not this very efficient girdle and brassiere will reduce your waist and hips THREE INCHES! You do not need to risk one penny . . . try them for 10 days . . . at no cost!

DON'T WAIT! MAIL COUPON NOW!

PERFOLASTIC, Inc.
Dept. 535, 41 EAST 42nd St., New York, N. Y.

Please send me FREE BOOKLET describing and illustrating the new Perfolastic Girdle and Brassiere, also sample of perforated rubber and particulars of your 10-DAY FREE TRIAL OFFER!

Name _____
Address _____
City _____ State _____

Use Coupon or Send Name and Address on Post Card

Garbo Vas Dere

(Continued from page 32)

she'd never appear in public. But I was wrong! Garbo did step out, and, as ever, the venture was surrounded with an aura of deep, dark mystery.

I know that you have read that she smiled weakly at Dietrich; that she didn't look at Dietrich; that she glared and glowered at Dietrich; that she didn't know that Dietrich was in the place; that she was nervous and shaky; that she was perfectly at ease; that she was ill at ease; that she sat at her table like a scared rabbit, ready to flee any moment.

I know exactly how you feel sitting by your fireside after reading these conflicting reports. You'd like to know the truth, the real truth, about Garbo's night out.

BUT it is a long and mysterious story and so that you won't be denied any precious little detail, I must begin at the very beginning.

Some said it was a clever publicity stunt engineered by the studio. Others said, "Garbo's getting smart. She isn't so dumb, that Swede. She has mapped out a publicity campaign all her own. And she'll get away with it."

Others recalled her flirtation with her director. "Remember the time she went on a skiing party to the Grand Canyon with Mamoulian. There wasn't a flake of snow within hundreds of miles of the place not to mention the fact that it was out of season for snow. As the story broke in the headlines, 'Queen Christina' was released."

Someone else chimed in with, "Yeah, and then all those phoney romance stories with George Brent and the Palm Springs trips broke simultaneously with the showing of the 'Painted Veil,' I'll say that gal isn't dumb."

This was the type of conversation I heard on all sides. It made me furious. No one, it seemed, was willing to give her credit for wanting to be just human.

It happened this way—and I got it straight from members of her party—during an informal gathering of her small, select circle of friends, Garbo expressed the desire to visit the Trocadero. Sincerely believing that a gay evening would do her good, the entire group prevailed upon her to go ahead with her plan. A date was set for Friday, January 25th. The party plans included Max Reinhardt, his son Gottfried, Garbo and her closest friend and adviser, Salka Viertol, a writer at M-G-M. They had a quiet dinner first at Lucey's, a small café on Melrose Avenue across the street from Paramount. At ten-thirty they arrived at the Trocadero.

But wait, I must take you back to the first party, for it was on this occasion that her female friend (not Salka), unable to restrain the desire to let the whole world in on the secret that the great and glamorous, silent Garbo was going to appear in public, got on the phone and called another woman friend. And that little friend wouldn't tell a soul. Oh, no! You know the rest. Five minutes later she had me on the wire. This was about two-thirty in the afternoon.

She was terribly excited.

LISTEN, Scotty," he said, "be at the Troc' tonight at ten-thirty without fail. The greatest thing that ever happened in Hollywood will take place. You'll get the scoop of the year."

She must have told a dozen others the same thing.

Intrigued, I inquired what would happen.

"Oh, I can't tell you over the phone," she replied, breathlessly, "but I'm so excited I can hardly wait. I'm taking a party of stars to see it all and you'll be sorry if you don't show up. Don't say I didn't warn you."

As the afternoon wore on I became highly interested. At least fifteen friends of mine admonished me to be there. I called the maitre d'hotel and asked him what was coming off.

"Nothing special," he said. "The usual Friday night crowd. Not many reservations so far."

A flurry of telephone warnings kept me busy all afternoon. I called him again.

"Say," he said, with high elation, "I don't know what has happened. The house is sold out, more than New Year's Eve. Everybody is here or on the way. Joan Bennett, Alice White, Lupe and Johnny, the Joe E. Browns, Peggy Fears," he rattled the names off rapidly.

I checked my camera equipment and rushed over. The place was filled with celebrities.

The guests were nervous, more so than the employees. They eyed each newcomer with eager expectancy. Some jumped up from their tables every few minutes to run outside and inquire of the doorman or hat check girls, in a decided whisper, "Has she arrived yet?"

All this secrecy was getting too much for me.

"Has who come?" I asked the hat check girl, rather disgustedly.

She flashed me a look of disdainful surprise. "Haven't you heard? Garbo is due at ten-thirty."

"Phooey," says I, with as much nonchalance as I could muster.

Then Felixe Rolo came. He is the wealthy Egyptian who escorted Dietrich places for so long, and incidentally hoaxed Hollywood into believing he was a Prince. He said to the proprietor, "When she comes I want a guard stationed near our table to keep people away. I want the hired help to treat her as if they were accustomed to waiting on her every day. I want her visit to be enjoyable in every way, and if she doesn't show up (ah, ha, I thought there would be a catch), and there is a strong possibility that she may not, then I don't want it mentioned that she was scared away, but rather that she comes here all the time. Don't inform any newspapers (there were eight different press representatives in the house at the time waiting for the big moment) under any circumstances."

The owner agreed.

I STUBBORNLY refused to believe and parked my camera behind some window drapes, which I later regretted.

Promptly at ten-thirty I wandered out to the front curb. I saw a black, dilapidated Lincoln sedan draw up. It bore a California license number, I-P-6108. I knew that Garbo was inside.

Max Reinhardt was the first to step from the car, followed by his son, Gottfried. Then came Salka Viertol. She helped Garbo alight.

She stood there dressed in a neat gray, tailored suit, covered by a light, loose polo coat. The usual black beret graced her head. Her hair was combed straight as in "Queen Christina." And me without a camera! I could have kicked myself.

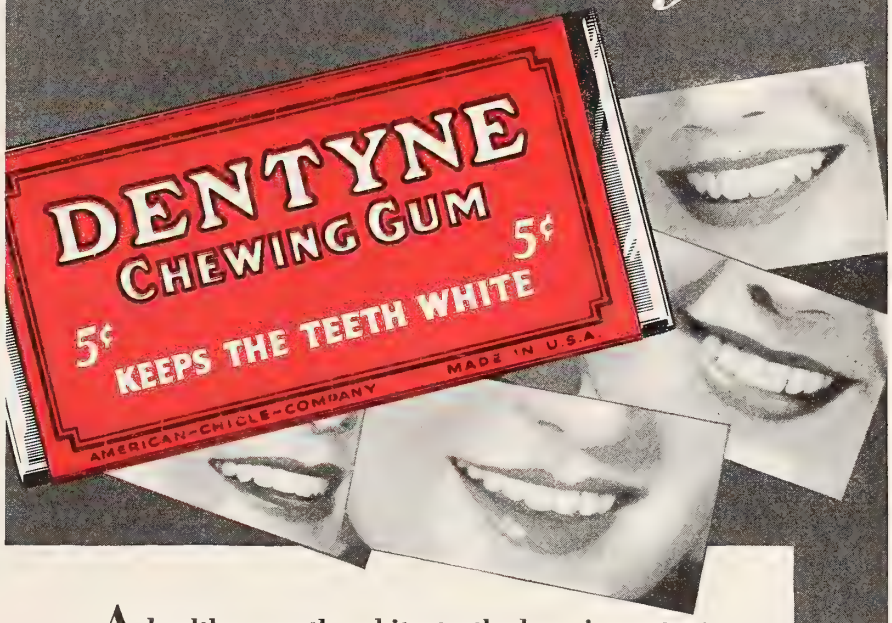
The station attendant shouted to me, "Garbo ain't comin', is she?"

I "shushed" him as best I could, making grimaces with my face, trying to warn him that she stood at his elbow.

But she had heard his remark and walked hurriedly toward her car. My heart sank as I saw the last glimmering hope of a picture going away from me. She planted one foot on the running board and resorted to woman's oldest artifice—powder. She daubed carelessly here and there at her face in the meager light of the car. Salka took her by the hand and led her into the café. I followed at a discreet distance.

At this point, few inside believed that she was coming. The nervous tension had eased up. The house was gay and happily boisterous. As she appeared in the inner doorway to the room a hushed silence fell over the place. Alice White's eyes almost popped out of her head; Joe E. Brown's mouth snapped shut and for once the incessant chattering of Lupe came to a stop, while Johnny just grumbled something and went on about the serious business of eating. The eyes of Joan Bennett, Dietrich, Fears, Marian Nixon, the Chico Marx', everybody in fact, was directed to the table in the center of the floor. GARBO HAD ARRIVED!



She made her way to the table with the utmost ease, apparently unaware of the furore she had created. She and her party joined Felixe Rolo, accompanied by Princess Natalie Paley, daughter of the Grand Duke Paul of Russia. A few feet away Dietrich sat with an old friend and admirer of Garbo's, Fritz Lang. Despite all assertions to the contrary, she nodded recognition and smiled graciously in Dietrich's direction. She smiled at many others as if she had known them for a long time. Perhaps it was only a lovely gesture to let them know she had seen their work on the screen, but she smiled. She chatted animatedly, laughed freely, smoked almost constantly. During the course of the evening she shook her head negatively to proffers of dancing. The only actual words I heard her express were when someone made a suggestion that she might like to leave and she replied, "Oh, no. Not yet. I'm really enjoying myself."

THE management prevailed upon Frances Langford to sing "Night and Day," to which Garbo responded with much applause.

From the moment she arrived until she departed, my eyes never left Garbo's face. While I enjoyed every moment and considered myself pretty lucky to have seen her, nevertheless I realized that, after all, Garbo is no different from other stars whom we see every day.

Her chauffeur sent word at two-thirty a. m. that the car was ready. I rushed around to the back exit, setting my camera distance as I ran. Fortune favored me, so I thought, by placing a huge, empty wine barrel within ten feet of her car door, where she would have to face me to enter. This was an erroneous impression for fate decreed otherwise. As she left by way of the fire escape, one overanxious cameraman leaped out of the darkness and ran toward her. She saw him in time to cover her face. As she struggled with the door handle I fired my flash and the barrel collapsed simultaneously, leaving me sprawled on the ground at her feet. As Garbo vanished into the night, four weary cameramen scurried toward dark rooms to see how much of her Royal Ladyship had been captured for posterity on photographic plates.

Healthy mouths now come in packages labelled Dentyne

A healthy mouth, white teeth, how important they are to any woman and to all well-groomed men, too! Here's an easy way to have them . . .

DENTYNE IS AN AID TO MOUTH HEALTH
The extra firm consistency of Dentyne provides just the vigorous mouth exercise everyone needs — the exercise lacking in modern soft-food diets. This chewing stimulates the circulation in the tissues, and keeps the mouth and teeth clean. It prevents flabby muscles, too. Many doctors and dentists recommend it as a regular health habit.

AND A DELICIOUS GUM, TOO — Chewing Dentyne is a pleasant health habit because it is such a delicious gum . . . At the first taste of its spicy, tempting flavor you congratulate yourself on having found a chewing gum that is different . . . thoroughly satisfying. Dentyne has a characteristic, handy, flat shape which makes it easy to carry in your purse or pocket . . . an exclusive feature for many years.

DENTYNE

KEEPS TEETH WHITE · MOUTH HEALTHY

Modern Screen's Movie Scoreboard

(Continued from page 15)

Name of Picture and Company	Modern Screen	N. Y. Times	N. Y. Herald Tribune	N. Y. American	N. Y. Evening Journal	N. Y. Post	N. Y. Sun	N. Y. Daily News	N. Y. Daily Mirror	World-Telegram	Chicago Herald-Examiner	Los Angeles Examiner	Hollywood Reporter	Film Daily	Variety	General Ratings
The March of Time (First Division)	4★	4★	4★	0	0	4★	4★	0	4★	4★	0	0	4★	0	4★	4★
Marie Galante (Fox)	2★	2★	2★	2★	2★	3★	2★	2½★	3★	2★	3★	0	1★	2★	2★	2★
The Marines Are Coming (Mascot)	2★	1★	1★	2★	1★	2★	1★	1½★	2★	1★	0	3★	2★	3★	2½★	2★
Maybe It's Love (Warners)	3★	2★	2★	2★	2★	3★	2½★	2½★	2½★	3★	0	2★	2★	2★	2★	2★
Menace (Paramount)	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	2★	2★	3★	3★	0	0	4★	3★	3★	3★
The Mighty Barnum (20th Century)	3★	4★	4★	4★	3★	3★	4★	3★	4★	4★	4★	4★	4★	3★	4★	4★
Mills of the Gods (Columbia)	0	0	0	2★	0	0	0	2★	2★	0	0	2★	0	2★	2★	0
Murder in the Clouds (First National)	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	0	2½★	3★	4★	0	0	3★	3★	3★	3★
Music in the Air (Fox)	3★	3★	3★	4★	3★	2★	4★	3★	3★	4★	2★	3★	3★	3★	2★	3★
Mystery Woman (Fox)	2	2★	3★	3★	3★	3★	2★	2½★	3★	4★	0	0	3★	2★	2★	2★
The Night Is Young (M-G-M)	3★	2★	2★	2★	2★	2★	2★	2½★	2★	2★	0	0	2★	2★	2★	2★
Night Life of the Gods (Universal)	2★	2★	2★	2★	2★	3★	2★	3★	2½★	2★	3★	0	3★	3★	3★	2★
A Notorious Gentleman (Universal)	3★	3★	2★	0	2½★	3★	3★	2★	2½★	2★	0	0	3★	3★	2★	3★
One Hour Late (Paramount)	3★	0	0	2★	0	0	0	2★	0	0	0	0	0	0	2½★	0
One More Spring (Fox)	3★	4★	4★	4★	3★	3★	4★	3★	4★	4★	0	4★	4★	3★	4★	4★
Outcast Lady (M-G-M)	2★	2★	2★	2★	2★	2★	2★	2½★	3★	2★	0	0	0	2★	2★	2★
The Painted Veil (M-G-M)	4★	3★	4★	4★	3★	4★	3★	3★	3★	4★	2★	3★	2★	3★	2★	3★
The President Vanishes (Paramount)	5★	5★	5★	5★	5★	5★	5★	3★	5★	5★	0	0	5★	5★	4★	5★
The Private Life of Don Juan (United Artists)	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	2★	0	0	2★	2★	3★	3★
The Right to Live (Warners)	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	2★	3★	3★	4★	2½★	0	3★	3★	3★	2½★	3★
Romance in Manhattan (RKO)	4★	3★	3★	4★	3★	4★	2★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	4★	4★	3★	3★
Ruggles of Red Gap (Paramount)	5★	5★	5★	5★	5★	5★	5★	4★	5★	5★	5★	0	5★	5★	0	5★
Rumba (Paramount)	2★	2★	2½★	3★	2½★	2★	2½★	2½★	3★	2★	2★	2★	4★	2½★	3★	2★
The Scarlet Pimpernel (United Artists)	4★	4★	3★	4★	4★	4★	4★	3½★	4★	4★	0	0	4★	4★	4★	4★
The Secret Bride (Warners)	3★	2★	3★	3★	3★	2½★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	2½★	2★	3★	3★
Sequoia (M-G-M)	4★	4★	3★	4★	4★	4★	4★	3★	4★	4★	0	4★	4★	4★	4★	4★
Shadow of Doubt (M-G-M)	3★	0	0	3★	0	0	0	1½★	3★	3★	0	0	3★	4★	2½★	0
The Silver Streak (RKO)	3★	2★	2★	2★	3★	2★	3★	3★	3★	2★	3	3★	2★	3★	3★	3★
Sing Sing Nights (Monogram)	2★	2★	2★	3★	2★	2★	2★	2★	0	2★	0	2★	4★	3★	2★	2★
Six-Day Bike Rider (Warners)	2★	3★	3★	3★	3★	2★	0	2½★	3★	3★	0	0	3★	3★	2★	3★
Society Doctor (M-G-M)	3★	2½★	3★	2½★	2½★	3★	2½★	3★	3★	2★	0	0	3★	3★	2★	3★
Sweet Adeline (Warners)	3★	3★	3★	3★	4★	4★	4★	3★	4★	4★	4★	0	3★	3★	3★	3★
Sweet Music (Warners)	3★	3★	3★	4★	4★	2½★	3★	3★	4★	4★	0	4★	3★	3★	4★	3★
There's Always Tomorrow (Universal)	3★	0	3★	0	3★	3★	3★	3★	0	4★	0	0	3★	3★	3★	3★
365 Nights in Hollywood (Fox)	2★	2½★	2★	3★	2★	2★	2★	1½★	3★	2★	0	0	3★	2★	2★	2★
Under Pressure (Fox)	3★	2★	3★	2½★	2½★	2½★	2½★	2★	3★	3★	0	0	3★	3★	3★	3★
Unfinished Symphony (Gaumont-British)	3★	3★	2½★	3★	3★	4★	3★	2½★	3★	3★	0	3★	4★	3★	4★	3★
The Wandering Jew (Twickenham)	4★	4★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	2★	2★	3★	0	0	4★	4★	4★	3★
Wednesday's Child (RKO)	2★	4★	3★	3★	3★	3★	2★	3★	4★	3★	3★	0	3★	3★	3★	3★
We Live Again (20th Century)	3★	3★	4★	4★	4★	3★	4★	3★	4★	3★	4★	4★	3★	4★	4★	3★
West of the Pecos (RKO)	3★	2½★	2★	3★	3★	2★	0	2½★	2★	2★	0	2★	3★	4★	3★	3★
When a Man's a Man (Fox)	2★	2½★	2½★	3★	0	2½★	0	2½★	3★	2½★	0	0	3★	3★	2★	2★
The White Cockatoo (Warners)	2★	2★	3★	4★	2★	2★	2★	2½★	3★	2★	0	3★	0	3★	2★	2★
The White Parade (Fox)	4★	0	3★	0	3★	3★	4★	3½★	0	4★	0	0	4★	4★	4★	3★
The Whole Town's Talking (Columbia)	4★	4★	4★	4★	4★	3½★	4★	3½★	4★	4★	4★	4★	4★	4★	4★	4★
A Wicked Woman (M-G-M)	3★	3★	2★	2★	3★	0	2★	2★	0	3★	0	3★	2★	2★	2★	2★
Wings in the Dark (Paramount)	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	2★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★	3★
The Winning Ticket (M-G-M)	2★	2½★	3★	2★	2★	2½★	2½★	2½★	3★	2★	0	2★	1★	2★	2½★	2★

Modern Screen-Warner Song Contest

(Continued from page 45)

final list—is set forth in the box containing the rules on page 44. This list completes the total of fifteen picture titles.

You are asked to tell what was the most popular song in three out of each set of five pictures. That is to say, three from last month's list, three from the list in the issue before that, and three from this month's list. That makes nine in all. You must choose three from each set of five—not any nine from the complete set of fifteen. You need not necessarily have seen the picture to be able to fulfill the requirements. You need only to have heard the song and to have known who sang it in the picture. Of course, you may, if you wish, fill out the complete list of fifteen pictures, but you will be judged on a basis of three out of five.

Remember, you must tell who sang the song which you designate as the most popular hit from each of the pictures which you choose.

We have asked you, in the two preceding installments of this contest, to keep each list until you have completed the contest. If you misunderstood and have already sent in the previous installments, we will try to keep your contribution on file, but we assume no risk.

With your complete set of nine (or more) answers—three chosen from each set of five—you are asked to write one hundred words telling which Warner musical you have liked the best to date—and why. You may use less than a hundred words, but don't use more. The words "a," "an," and "the" will not count.

Aside from winning one of the prizes in this contest, do you know the big feature? Yes, you are right. It is writing a set of lyrics. The best of those submitted will be set to music and published by a real music publisher and used in a forthcoming Warner Brothers production.

You undoubtedly have someone—may we surmise a sweetheart, wife or husband?—who has awakened within you a feeling that you could write a poem about them or to them. Well, when you come down to it, a set of lyrics is really a poem which is set to music to make a song. We bring this up as a hint here, because Mr. Julius P. Witmark, Jr., the one who arranged this contest for you has had so much experience with some of the great song writers and he has told us that the most successful lyrics ever written have always been due to some such inspiration. Imagine the great thrill of writing such an inspired lyric, having it accepted, taking the one and only to the movies and having your lyric sung from the screen.

You stand just as good a chance of winning one of the prizes—the first prize of $250; the second prize of $100; the third prize of $50! the fourth prize of $25! one of the five fifth prizes of $10 each; or one of the five sixth prizes of $5 each—if you stop at the list of songs and singers and the one-hundred-word description. BUT—an extra added honor goes to the person who writes, in the opinion of the judges, the best set of lyrics. He may or may not win one of the prizes—that depends upon how accurately and aptly, in the opinion of the judges, he fulfills the above requirements. The special honor reserved for the writer of the best set of lyrics is the inclusion of these lyrics—set to music and everything—in a forthcoming Warner musical production.

So get busy, not only in answering the questions in this contest, but also with your lyric. Keep your three sets of answers, composition of one hundred words or less, and lyrics, if you wish to submit a set, until after you have completed the three parts of the contest, and send them all to the Modern-Screen-Warner Song Contest, 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y., mailing them no later than midnight on May 15, 1935, when the contest closes. All entries must be mailed by that time.

For the lyric which will be used in a Warner production, the usual royalties on music publication and commercial, mechanical instrument use will be paid by the music publishers.

No entries will be returned. All lyrics submitted will be returned, if not accepted, upon receipt of your request together with a stamped, self-addressed envelope. Remember, we assume no risk for the return of same.

Send all entries and lyrics to Modern Screen-Warner Song Contest, 149 Madison Avenue, New York, N. Y.

Everyone is eligible to compete in this contest except the employees of Modern Screen and employees of Warner Brothers-First National Studios.

The judges of this contest are the editors of Modern Screen and Julius Witmark.

Please do not send elaborate, pretentious entries. They stand no better chance of winning a prize than accurate, simple entries. Neatness is important, of course.

Pretty on the TABLE . . . and grand for BAKING in the OVEN

YES, those platters and serving dishes, those round and oval bowls, those cute little French one-handled casseroles, even the cups, saucers and plates, will all stand oven heat.

So bake in them . . . pies, puddings, meats, vegetables, anything you like. And whisk them from oven to table. They save work in serving. Save dishwashing.

Next time you're in a Five, Ten or Dollar Store, look over OvenServe dishes. They cost but a trifle. And you can do with them what you can't do with any other table dishes . . . use them in the oven!

Guaranteed To Withstand Changes of Oven and Refrigerator Temperatures
OVENSERVE
"The Oven Ware for Table Service"
The Homer Laughlin China Co.
Newell, W. Va.

OVENSERVE

SOLD AT MOST 5¢—10¢ AND $1.00 STORES

One Girl's Hopeless Love for Bill Powell

(Continued from page 27)

the house."

Glasses in hand, they were ushered about the house. Into the bar, the study upstairs, and, heads together, they pored over the blueprint of the new home he was building. How typical of Bill, Georgia thought! When she had presented him to her friend, she had proudly mentioned that Valerie was an up-and-coming interior decorator of New York. Now Valerie was in her element. Her eyes sparkled and Bill, prodding her enthusiasm, asked her advice on the furnishing of his new home. In his usual effortless, charming way, he was making her feel important. They gabbled like a couple of children with a new toy. Then Bill straightened up. "Say," he smiled, "this is work for you! And look at that sunshine outside. Let's take a swim." Valerie blinked up into his face. "But we haven't any bathing suits!" she declared. "That's all right. Show her, Georgia." As the bewildered Valerie was led downstairs, Bill called after them, "I'll beat you in." He dashed into his bedroom.

In the commodious dressing quarters hard by the swimming pool, Georgia pulled back panels and opened drawers to show her friend a complete array of bathing suits, pajamas, and robes. On the vanity and dresser were powders and rouge of every shade. Valerie caught her breath. She stood motionless, gaping about her, until Bill's voice came from the balcony.

"Is everything all right?" he called. With a squeal of joy Valerie started to rummage frantically for a suit of her size.

Bill, however, didn't beat them into the pool. A director arrived for a conference. So when the ladies dashed out, Bill met them in his old bathrobe and trotted them up to the loggia where introductions to the director were quickly made. Then the men went to work.

GEORGIA'S mind was reviewing the things which had taken place since their arrival. Her friend poked her with her elbow. "What's the matter," Valerie complained, "can't you hear? I just said that any woman who married him wouldn't have a dull moment all of her life."

"I know," answered Georgia. "Excuse me. I was thinking."

"Why didn't you tell me you knew him so well? I thought I was your friend?"

"There's nothing to tell. I just knew him, that's all."

Good old Valerie. She would understand. She left her friend to her memories. Later, perhaps, she would know. Georgia cupped her chin on the back of her hands and peered through half-opened eyes toward the spare figure talking so earnestly in the shade of the loggia. Two men. And one of them Bill.

She remembered the first time that they had gone out together. On that memorable evening, years ago, she recalled the misery she felt before he arrived. Her head was splitting. A throbbing ache brought on, no doubt, by her nervous excitement. She knew that she would be poor company. And Bill, she felt sure, wouldn't care to see her again. So when he arrived, blandly smiling, she did her best not to spoil the occasion. Tried desperately hard to be gay and amusing.

But Bill, she soon discovered, is too sensitive a nature not to sense immediately the mood of any person he is with. She had to confess the intolerable ache. His hand reached over and folded gently around hers. "After all," he said, "we can't stand this." He swung the car to the curb. They bustled into a drug store. There, perched on high stools, he watched her drink two bromos. "Now do you feel better?" he asked.

From that time on her heart was not quite her own. They went on to their party only because she refused to return home to spend a quiet evening. And for three miraculous hours, she was unconscious of the agony in her head. She floated on a roseate cloud, supported by the envious glances of women, the flattering attentions of men. All because, she understood afterwards, her popular cavalier never relaxed his solicitude. He took her home early. Next morning she was awakened by the fragrance of his flowers, which her maid had quietly brought into the room. And that day he phoned three times to inquire how she was feeling.

AH YES, Bill was so sweet. Always attentive. And his manners had that careless quality of one who is confident in his heart that he won't hurt the feelings of another person, even unintentionally. But were these the reasons why she fell in love?

Now, as Georgia's eyes caressed the figure on the loggia, she had to admit that they certainly were not. Silly, even to think so. So many polished gentlemen are frightful bores. What Valerie had said was exactly right. There was never a dull moment with Bill. Whenever she went out with him, she never failed to have a glorious time. Behind his bland exterior was a robust sense of adventure. Always ready for anything. That night, for instance, when she had said to him, "Bill, I feel like raising the devil. Let's cut loose. Let's do something really wild." Without a word, Bill called for his check and they left the night club. Leaving his car they hailed a taxi. . . .

But Georgia's chain of memory was rudely broken. Valerie was speaking close to her ear. "Say," she exclaimed with hushed enthusiasm, "I've just discovered something. It's been troubling me all the time. You know, this is the most livable house I've ever been in. Yet it's sumptuous. Almost lavish. Know the secret? It's Bill. He is so informal. Look at that old bathrobe. Makes you feel you can be yourself. And at the same time you feel that all good things are not just ornaments. They're to be used and enjoyed."

"I know," replied Georgia absentmindedly. "Yes, I know."

"Look," said Valerie excitedly. "I think that man is going. Good!"

Georgia looked up to see the director rise to his feet. Bill arose also to pace back and forth. Odd, the way he does that when he tries to settle some irritating point in a discussion. Talking so softly, the other person has to walk beside him in order to hear. Talking so indifferently, as if it really didn't matter anyway.

Had she always had a good time with Bill? Rubbish! True—every moment with him had been crowded with enjoyment because he was never bored. Never bored even with himself. But every time she was with him she felt miserable inside. That was the reason she loved him. He made her experience a constant hurt.

His indifference! The most captivating and the most irritating quality a man can possess. A sweetness that warms the heart, little attentions that flatter, and then the blank wall of emotional indifference. How many times had she beat against that wall in vain! Flattery was a useless weapon. Bill was immune. He always flattered the other person just a little more than he was flattered. With his tongue in his cheek. Then—that time just before she left for New York. In a rowboat off Laguna. That heavenly half-hour when the ocean was changed into claret . . . She wanted to say something then . . . To prod him, but she didn't. Bill was the type who had to make up his own mind.

No. A woman would never know just how much he cared for her until he asked her to marry him. Only then would she fully enter that secret life which he must have. The secret life which must hold fretful worries about tomorrow while he enjoys today.

Well, Georgia reflected sadly, even if she had been excluded from so much of this, it at least was worth a try. Bill was not a man to pride himself upon conquests. And a man who really loves, seldom expresses that emotion in empty words. For a moment, she thought wildly, "Perhaps—I haven't failed. Perhaps it needs time!" time!"

Valerie was on her feet. Bill was dashing across the lawn letting his old robe fall off behind him.

"Beat you into the pool," yelled Bill.

Two lithe bodies plunged in simultaneously. Georgia pulled on her cap.

"Be content, old girl," she chided herself firmly. "There's no 'perhaps.' And Bill makes a dandy friend."

Good News

(Continued from page 41)

is made of shining copper, and decorated in scarlet and black, while the bottles are of every shape, size and color. Mary Ellis, the star of the picture, was heard to moan on seeing the display, "Bottles, bottles, everywhere—and not a drop to drink!"

■ ■ ■

Wouldn't you expect a stony-faced, ultra correct valet of English extract to be hovering in George Raft's background? Wrong again! George is shadowed by a small cullud boy in sloppy overalls and sweater, with a disreputable cap on his kinky head, who attends to all the gentleman's wants. Sambo was hanging around the studio gates one day and George was so attracted by his amiable toothy grin that he hired him on the spot. "Ah sho nuff had a rabbit foot in mah pocket dat day!" says Sambo, rolling his chocolate eyes.

■ ■ ■

"Go West, young man" is easy advice to follow for any young man after seeing the beauteous Mae. But in the star's recent picture even an elephant became enamoured of her! Sneaking up behind her one day, he encircled her with his trunk and swung her high into the air. Mae was quite composed when finally set on terra firma, only remarking pleasantly, "Just try that once more, baby, and I'll break every bone in your body."

And did you know that the public's palsy-walsy is actually trying to out-Garbo Garbo? Yep—Mae will have no one on her set while emoting, any more. Says she's getting too bashful!

■ ■ ■

No wonder Joe Morrison gets ahead with such leaps and bounds—he's always on the jump! He'd be a swell example for the perpetual motion theorists, too, aside from his present important position as a feminine pulse-pounder. On the "Small Miracle" set, Joe was busy every minute, singing, running up and down steps, tap-dancing, doing all kinds of gymnastics, talking and laughing—and always chewing gum. And if you want to see a team which we feel justified in calling "cute," see Joe and little Helen Mack together. Helen, by the way, married Charles Irwin recently.

"Who's afraid of the big baboon, the big baboon," caroled the cast of a recent picture out at Paramount, where said baboon, securely caged, was waiting to appear in a picture with Carole Lombard. But one day there was no singing—everyone was too busy climbing adjacent trees. Seems that while the trainer was lost in admiration of Carole, the wily animal decided to have some fun. Being a creature of initiative, he loosened the catch on his cage, and then it began! For his first playmates he chose two portly ladies who were visiting on the set, and gayly chased them all over the lot before he was finally corralled. Which all clears up the whys and wherefores that visitors ask nowadays when they have to sign a statement that the studio is not responsible for any ill effects suffered while looking about.

■ ■ ■

Wild Indians may be a thing of the past, but scalping is still prevalent in Hollywood! You aren't a bit more stunned than we were on seeing the gentle art revived. It happened to Henry Wilcoxon, whom we were admiring while a hair-dresser arranged his blond locks for a scene in the "Crusades." Suddenly a shrill call came for him from the set. He leaped up and rushed off—and we were that amazed to see those blond locks dangling from the hair-dresser's hands!

■ ■ ■

Jean Arthur's capital has gone up, but her stock's hit a new low out at Columbia, since a recent pool was made up among the studio workers—electricians, script girls and extras, among others. Jean was the lucky winner of fifty dollars, and promised the whole gang a real blow-out as she tucked the booty into her purse. So, all in the party mood, the gang waited and waited—and waited. Finally, someone stopped her on the lot and asked about her party plans. "Party?" inquired Miss Arthur, perplexed, "Why, I've never mentioned a word about a party!"

■ ■ ■

Rejoice, all you Tom Mix fans! For the handsome, fearless hero of many a "wild western" is planning to stage a comeback. Tom has been financially embarrassed for the past year, due to spending all his for-—You can't whiz along the road to health on fresh air and exercise alone. It takes a well-balanced diet to really keep you going at full speed. And here's my recipe for a breakfast that gives you a flying start: Delicious Shredded Wheat and milk, heaped high with fresh fruits or berries."

Crisp, golden-brown Shredded Wheat gives you a perfect balance of Nature's vital health elements in their most appetizing and digestible form. Try it tomorrow morning.

SHREDDED WHEAT

Ask for the package showing the picture of Niagara Falls and the red N.B.C. Uneeda Seal.

"Uneeda Bakers"
NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

NOW the season's
NEWEST UNUSUAL
PARIS COLORS
for old frocks
Shades never possible before in tinting and dyeing

Send for FREE Silk Samples of the 10 Newest PARIS COLORS and exclusive RIT "Color Recipes"

• See how easily you can give old frocks delightful unusual Paris Colors—just like those shown in the smart dress shops. Simply mix colors as directed in Rit Color Recipes (one part of this to two parts of that), and presto! you have the season's latest stunning shade!

FAST COLORS WITHOUT BOILING!

Only RIT offers this advantage! RIT is the modern dye—easier and surer—far superior to ordinary "surface dyes" because it contains a patented ingredient that makes color soak in deeper, set faster and last longer.

NOT A SOAP!

RIT
TINTS and DYES
Rit is a convenient scored wafer; easier to measure; won't sift out of the package

FREE PARIS COLOR SWATCHES
Miss Rit, 1401 W. Jackson Blvd., Chicago
Please send me FREE Silk samples of Newest Paris Colors and your Booklet D74.
Name.....
Address.....
City.....State.....

The youngest Young steps out. Georgiana Young with sister Sally Blane and Monte Bell at the Opera.

tune on monograms. Shirts, shorts, houses, horses, automobiles and airplanes—all bore the gleaming letters T. M.!

■ ■ ■

Our cameraman was attending the preview of "All the King's Horses," Carl Brisson's new picture t'other evening, when the small boy next to him tugged at his sleeve. "Y'know," he whispered, "these sure are swell seats, ain't they? I never sat in preview seats afore, have you?"

Scotty admitted that he had, but asked the boy how he happened to come by this honor. "Well, y'see," came the confidential whisper, "Mr. Brisson told me I could sit here, so's I could start the applause when he shows up. "Course," he added hastily, "I promised I wouldn't tell nobody—and I won't neither."

■ ■ ■

In his private dining-room adjoining the dressing-rooms at M-G-M, Louis Mayer was entertaining some distinguished guests for luncheon. His final hospitable gesture was to invite Jeanette MacDonald to warble a few notes for the party. She selected an aria from "La Boheme," and on reaching the chorus, a rich baritone voice joined in the singing—seemingly pouring from the walls! On investigation it developed that Nelson Eddy's dressing-room was next door.

Reviews—A Tour of Today's Talkies

(Continued from page 47)

killing an evening painlessly, this picture might serve as a good weapon.

★★★ Devil Dogs of the Air
(Warners)

This is an excellent picture if you've ever craved to be a marine or an aviator. In fact, it's a good picture even if you haven't had such suppressed desires. The government has obligingly coöperated with the studio by furnishing the use of their training camp in San Diego and the studio has done its part by furnishing Pat O'Brien, Jimmy Cagney and Margaret Lindsay, so you can figure on a good time.

Jimmy is the dare-devil aviator who decides that the air corps needs him. Therefore, it takes some time for him to become convinced that it can really get along quite nicely without him. Pat O'Brien and Margaret Lindsay join forces to squelch the young man, with some hilarious results.

The photography is remarkable, showing the best pictures of stunt flying and war manoeuvers that we've ever seen.

★★★ The Good Fairy
(Universal)

To be sure, it's a little on the "whimsy" side, but this picture is so rapidly paced and boasts such excellent characterizations that its decidedly fairy-tale tone is somehow lost in the shuffle of probable reality. It is the one about an orphan, just emerged from the protective asylum, intent upon doing the good deed she has long been trained to perform.

Cinderella, herself, was never thrown into such a contradictory wonder world of men, some of whom mean no good by a gal and others who are overanxious to lend protection! First acting honors go to Frank Morgan as the wolf in millionaire's clothing, although Reginald Owen, Margaret Sullavan and Herbert Marshall all give splendid accounts of themselves,

Some call it glamour

I call it FAOEN

Miss Williams is well known both here and abroad not only for her excellent stage and screen characterizations, but for her keen perception for what's correct in fashions and things fashionable. She is now featured in the current Broadway musical success, "Life Begins at 8:40".

says FRANCES WILLIAMS

"To be successful, an actress must possess that subtle something that accentuates her charm," says lovely Miss Williams. "Some call it glamour—but I call it FAOEN! Naturally, I have tried many expensive perfumes and cosmetics but frankly, I find that FAOEN beauty aids are more beneficial to my complexion. They've kept my skin smooth, firm and fine. As for the perfume . . . . glamourous . appealing . compelling . . . call it what you will—I prefer it!"

In her inimitable way, Miss Williams has deftly expressed the preference of many fascinating women for FAOEN perfume and beauty aids. Let FAOEN show you the way to glamour!

FAOEN Beauty Aids
in tuckaway 10c sizes

FAOEN perfumes and beauty aids in compact sizes as illustrated, are on sale at your local five and ten cent store.

FAOEN
(FAY-ON)
Beauty Aids
PARK & TILFORD

"My 15c CLOPAY New SHADES
Surely Gave Me One Big MONEY'S WORTH"

"I'VE found that the amazingly low first cost of Clopay window shades is only part of the saving. They stay presentable much longer . . . never crack, ravel or pinhole as ordinary shades do. Besides, they hang and roll straight so that edges don't get scuffed up. Attach to old rollers with a patented gummed strip—no tacks or tools! And how handsome they are, either in plain colors or those attractive chintz-like patterns." No wonder millions prefer CLOPAYS even when they can afford costlier shades! Buy Clopays at all 5-and-10c stores and most neighborhood stores. Send 3c for color samples to CLOPAY CORP., 1399 York St., Cincinnati, Ohio.

"Yes Clopay Shades Save Me Plenty . . . But FABRAY SAVES ME EVEN MORE on ALL Oilcloth Needs!"

. . Costs ⅓ to ½ Less!

"I thought Clopay Shades were the last word in economy until I found FABRAY. It's marvelous! It looks, feels and wears like the best oilcloth, yet I can use it longer because it never cracks or peels. Best of all, I can afford to use FABRAY many more ways than I ever did oilcloth because it costs ⅓ to ½ less!"

Fabray is a new and entirely revolutionary product—made on tough, solid fibre instead of cheesecloth backing. New lovely patterns—in standard table and shelf widths. See FABRAY at leading 5-and-10c stores or send 10c for 2½ yard roll of shelving. Would cost 25c in oilcloth. State color preference.

CLOPAY CORPORATION
1400 York Street Cincinnati, Ohio

too. The story is replete with excitement and laughter and Director William Wyler occasionally stresses pathos by accenting the näivete and sincerity of the refreshing heroine.

★★★ Murder on a Honeymoon (RKO)

If the enterprising RKO doesn't arrange to team Edna May Oliver and James Gleason in another as good as this very soon, they are not doing right by the fans. While the story chiefly concerns itself with a murder committed in an airplane, it is the Grade-A comedy rather than the interesting and morbid details of the plot which will thrill you. The principal characters glean almost a laugh a minute through lines and situations. Miss Oliver, you see, is an amateur detective and, while Mr. Gleason rates the status of professional, his "gumshoeing" is more often calculated to warn the criminals than to apprehend them. Of course, although the most unlikely member of the cast is the guilty one, the suspense is maintained until the very last sequence.

Besides the expert playing of Miss Oliver and Mr. Gleason, there is an excellent piece of acting turned in by Dorothy Libaire, the bride on her honeymoon.

★★ Transient Lady (Universal)

With a sleepy town of the Old South as a background, this picture ambles along too slowly. There is a thread of plot, but it becomes sadly tangled by darky dialect, illogical love affairs, political skullduggery and some more darky dialect.

The actors, one and all, give convincing performances, as far as the meandering story will allow. June Clayworth embodies all your ideas of what a charming southern girl should be, and Frances Drake shows possibilities of becoming a comet in the cinema skies, if she is provided with a suitable role. Gene Raymond, as the young lawyer who is torn between two loves and a political machine, does as well as might be expected under the circumstances. A really humorous touch is given the story by Helen Lowell and Clara Blandick as the strait-laced, kindly spinster sisters.

★★★ Shadow of Doubt (M-G-M)

You won't know until the last sequence is run who steals the gun, but you do know before the first reel is over who steals the picture! She is Constance Collier, famous stage recruit from New York and London, who makes her cinematic bow in this fast-moving mystery which is punctuated with hilarity and murders; yes, plural, for before it's all over, three bad men and untrue pass on to their doubtful rewards.

Miss Collier enacts a testy, rich spinster who plays jazz on the organ, drinks champagne in night clubs and disapproves of her nephew's intentions to marry an actress. In a scene in which she pretends to be feeling the effects of a quart of the very best, she solves the guh-rate crime. Yes, the story is a bit hard to swallow, but it's such fun that you somehow get it "down." Ricardo Cortez gives his famous polished performance as a scion of millions, Virginia Bruce makes a pretty leading woman, Isabel Jewell is as good as usual, and Regis Toomey rates a bow or two.

★★★★ Naughty Marietta (M-G-M)

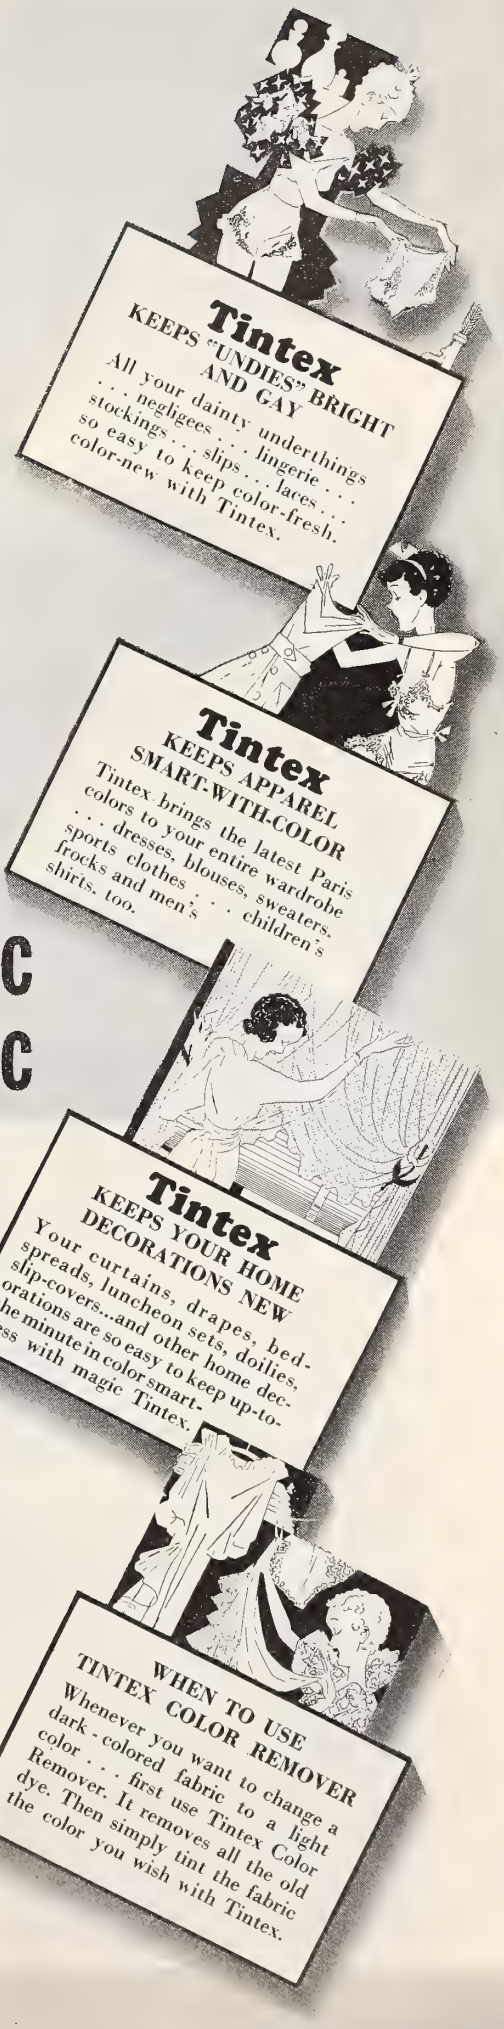
When a picture is as good as this one, it is difficult to review. Everything concerning "Naughty Marietta" is well-nigh perfect. The enchanting, lilting Victor Herbert tunes, their delightful renditions by Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy, the charming, light story of the naughty, adventurous princess, and the usual fine direction of W. S. Van Dyke.

Miss MacDonald looks simply luscious and is in especially good voice. Her acting is deft and sure, and so—let's go on to Mr. Eddy. He has become a sort of "man of the hour" in movies. The concert and opera stages know him well; the radio, too. And now it is our chance at Mr. Eddy, who has everything it takes, and a little bit more for good measure. The movies gave him the run-around for nearly two years and now they've returned to pray. Do not miss this picture.

★★★ The Wedding Night (Samuel Goldwyn)

Insofar as plot is concerned, this story seems like a hangover from the Scott Fitzgerald days, days when the giddy young set tossed off cocktails and highballs, while one in their midst recorded their activities for posterity. Gary Cooper does just that in this picture. He is having a book turned down by a publisher when the film begins to unreel, so he and the lit-tul woman, Helen Vinson, have "another" on the bad news. Because of lack of funds, they move to their Connecticut farm house and, as next-door neighbors, find Anna Sten and her Polish family. Helen departs. Gary remains to work—and love. There is drama—much drama, some of it even great; all of it truly touching. Somehow one feels that the picture should have been better, that King Vidor did not make the most of his directorial opportunities. Scenes that should have been colorful, somehow are not. Miss Sten's performance is simple and sincere. It is indeed her best work to date. Cooper tries hard, but seems to be too impressed with his surroundings. Helen Vinson is excellent as the rah-rah wife, who learns to appreciate what she has had only after losing it.

★★★ Folies Bergere (Twentieth Century)



Glamor, glitter, girls and Chevalier; that's "Folies Bergere." And let it be said that the gentleman from Paris hasn't fared so well cinematically in many a movie moon. Yes, Maurice has come back and in a sure-fire dual role, which gives him every chance to sing, clown, act and exude his famous charm. The story is as light and frothy as champagne without the morning-after effect. It's all good fun—most of it clean, too. There are divine dancing routines staged by Dave Gould and peppy melodies and plenty of cuties, for much of the "plot" is laid backstage at France's favorite girl show.

Ann Sothern is splendid as the tempestuous dancer in love with the star of the Folies (Chevalier). She doesn't believe in sparing the rod—in this case her small, pink palm—when her sweetie becomes recalcitrant. Merle Oberon, made up to look like a celebration in Chinatown, is seen as the other woman. Wotta woman! If this is exoticism, let us root for the blue-sashed ingenue. But the picture is fun and exciting and colorful.

Tintex

BRINGS COLOR MAGIC TO EVERY WASHABLE FABRIC

eeps Your Wardrobe and Home Decorations p-to-the Minute in Color-Smartness

The millions of smart women who are never without Tintex in their homes have learned this vital fact: Tintex Tints and Dyes give you the color you want . . . when you want it...where you want it!

Tintex always gives professional tinting and dyeing results . . . in a jiffy . . . without muss, fuss, or bother. Simply "tint as you rinse" and Tintex brings fashion's latest colors . . . or restores faded colors . . . to everything in your wardrobe...or home decorations. Try Tintex today! 35 brilliant, long-lasting colors from which to choose.

PARK & TILFORD, Distributors

Avoid Substitutes . . .
Tintex quality never varies! Perfect results every time. That's why millions of women
INSIST ON TINTEX

Tintex

The World's Largest Selling TINTS & DYES

SIX years ago Gerber began saving young mothers hours of daily tiresome work . . . began giving babies strained vegetables richer in vitamins and minerals, more scientifically prepared than home equipment permits.

This year's babies have a special treat in store. They'll find their Gerber's Strained Vegetables finer than ever in flavor . . . fresher-tasting, brighter in color, more uniformly cooked because of Shaker-Cooking, an exclusive new Gerber process that shortens cooking time 50% to 60%.

Gerber's Strained Vegetables are specially grown—fresher, richer in vitamins. Air-excluding equipment further protects vitamins. Moisture regulation conserves mineral salts. Straining is through monel metal screens, five times as fine as kitchen sieves. Gerber's Strained Vegetables are unseasoned. Serve as they are or season slightly if the doctor directs.

Strained Tomatoes . . . Green Beans . . . Beets . . . Vegetable Soup . . . Carrots . . . Prunes . . . Peas . . . Spinach . . . 4½-oz. cans. Strained Cereal . . . 10¼-oz. cans.

Ask Your Doctor

Gerber's

Shaker-Cooked Strained Foods

MM-5h

MOTHERS! Send for these helpful books. "Baby's Book"—practical information on daily care of baby, by Harriet Davis, R. N. "Mealtime Psychology," by Lillian B. Storms, Ph. D.—widely distributed to mothers by physicians for its practical suggestions in developing normal eating habits.

GERBER PRODUCTS COMPANY
FREMONT, MICHIGAN
(In Canada: Grown and Packed by Fine Foods of Canada, Ltd., Tecumseh, Ont.)

Check book wanted:
☐ "Baby's Book." Enclose 10c
☐ "Mealtime Psychology." FREE
(Enclose 10c additional if you wish picture of the Gerber Baby, ready for framing.)

Name . . . . . .
Address . . . . . .
City . . . . . State . . . . . .

★★★ One More Spring (Fox)

Those who like "realism" will have a field day in this one. It is life in the "roar," emphasizing what we mortals, devoid of the world's goods, must go through in this vale of tears. It reveals suffering, privation, kindliness, rebellion and a host of traits people are wont to display when things persist in going wrong.

A bankrupt auctioneer, a jobless musician, a helpless actress and a cheerful street cleaner are the humans comprising the vortex of life's whirlpool insofar as this story is concerned. How they survive and manage to help each other and do good are pointedly emphasized by Henry King, the director. First acting honors go to Roger Imhof as Mr. Sweeney, the street cleaner who wants to play the violin. Walter King, who feels that the world owes him a living, comes in for goodly praise, as do Warner Baxter and Janet Gaynor.

★★ The Devil Is a Woman (Paramount)

If the outcome of this celluloid opera doesn't convince both Marlene Dietrich and the Powers That Be over Paramount way that the star needs another director—or perhaps merely a director—well then they'll never be persuaded. Von Sternberg is responsible for the indifferent direction and the excellent photography of this picture. As a cameraman, Joe is something to cheer about, but as a megaphone-wielder—the less said the kindlier. Once again, he has subserviated everything—plot, characterization and dialogue—to endless sequences of pictorial effects.

La Dietrich is gotten up like something you warn your son against at sixteen—a frowsy little number you would think that any man with the intelligence of a Lionel Atwill would run from and not towards. But, for the purposes of plot (if any) Atwill ruins himself over her. Caesar Romero, handsome, personable and talented, is about to do likewise as "finis" is written to this dull piece. Poor Marlene!

★★★ Vanessa (M-G-M)

If, once in a while, you enjoy a good cry—but a good one— here is your meat and gravy, with perhaps a vegetable or two for good measure. "Vanessa" was undoubtedly fashioned for women who weep. It is a love story—love, suffering; love, enduring; love, triumphant and just plain love.

Helen Hayes plays the title role, that of a young woman who knows her man and, despite advice, sticks to him. Through a misunderstanding their ultimate marriage is delayed until the final sequence. There are several sacrifices to be made and impulsive moral debts to be paid. There is the hero's hasty marriage to be undone and the heroine's obligations to her insane husband. Well, you at least get the idea, by now. Miss Hayes, as usual, is excellent—sincere, direct and convincing. May turns in a good performance. Bob Montgomery is better than adequate.

★★★ Car 99 (Paramount)

Here is a thriller and, while it may have been designed to give the young boys a treat, everyone is going to share in and enjoy the excitement. It's all about the operations of the Michigan State Police, how they get their man and how Old Man Law will catch up with you if you have anything in your past or present that warrants being caught up with.

The picture gives you an opportunity to see Sir Guy Standing in the role of a smooth, confident, cruel master mind of a gang of crooks. He can burn thousands of dollars worth of marked money—which he didn't risk his life to get—without batting an eyelash. But he and his pals come to a bad end, for there is one Fred MacMurray, who saves the day and wins the girl. There is a thrilling automobile-motorcycle race to make the blood chase up and down your spine and, besides the performances of Standing and MacMurray, an excellent characterization of a dull-witted sheriff, played by Frank Craven, that is calculated to entertain you.

★★★ The Casino Murder Case (M-G-M)

If this thriller doesn't make your blood run cold, you can give yourself credit for cast-iron nerves. For these murders aren't committed by such trite methods as guns or strangling, but mysteriously administered doses of poison. Paul Lukas does the Philo-Vancing for this unhappy situation. Very efficiently he manages his sleuthing, too, but gets himself in for some unsuspected emotional entanglements.

An excellent setting for the strange occurrences is the wealthy family, with its assortment of hysterical sons, daughters, uncles, aunts and servants—any one of whom might be suspected of ulterior motives. Alison Skipworth is splendid as the domineering mother, Rosalind Russell makes a lovely, harassed secretary, while Donald Cook and Isabel Jewell are outstanding as the spoiled offspring.

★★ Mississippi (Paramount)

Somehow, it all seems like a bad dream and we heartily wish, for the sakes of director, players and producers, it was. But no, there is "Mississippi" right up there on the screen for the fan to contemplate its tangibility! There is Bing Crosby "stooging" for W. C. Fields, and poor Bill Fields doing what he can with sets of hopeless, time-worn gags and little Queenie Smith, recruited from the New York stage, where as a comedienne, she is something to reckon with, permitted to do nothing. Joan Bennett is as graceful as a young maple—and just as sappy! There are songs—and even Rogers and Hart didn't come through here—and the famous "Swannee River," warbled rather effectively by Bing.

★★★ West Point of the Air (M-G-M)

Seems like the studio execs can't keep their feet on the ground anymore when selecting stories, for here's another aviation tale! But from the flying start to the final happy landing, this one is good entertainment, though packed with some too, too familiar emotional devices—triangular passions and patriotic fervor. Wallace Beery and Lewis Stone are the fond fathers of two budding aviators, and give sincere, convincing performances. Robert Young, Maureen O'Sullivan and Rosalind Russell manage the heart-involving quite capably.

Randolph Field is the army training school locale where West Point men come for their aviation training. The photography of air activities is the best yet, with some thrilling escapades that will stir up the most sluggish blood pressure and make every last one of you yearn to don a snappy uniform and do a few somersaults and swan dives up in the ozone. This picture is as good an antidote as we can suggest for "that tired feeling."

Especially for Redheads

(Continued from page 43)

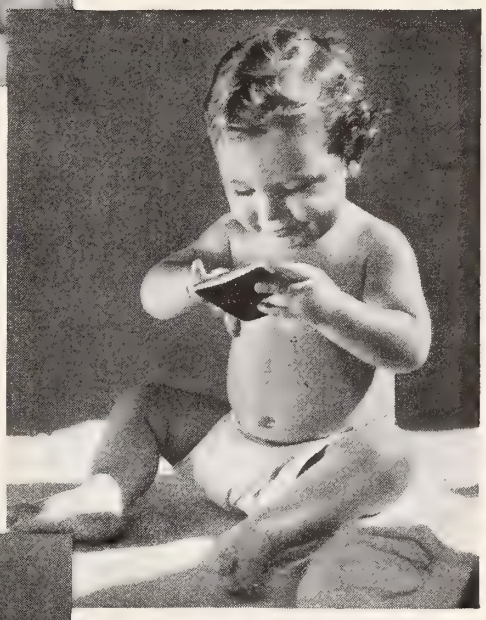
something is unjust that I always end up by having my intensity act as a boomerang. We redheads start out being the heroes of a fight but end up being the detested heavy—the real villain of the piece!"

Can't you see some of the youthful Carroll emotion and vim being interpreted as over-zealousness and downright temperament? Can't you imagine the fiery hair adding an extra emphasis to any point? I asked her if she felt her red hair had caused her unhappiness. She said yes. She feels that she has been frightened into losing much of her native Irish spirit. She feels that the many unkind jibes about her temperament have caused her to check her emotional, volatile spirit with the result that she appears less colorful and dynamic upon the screen.

"I seem to play roles now in which I worry about everyone in the story. If I am not looking out for my little brother or an aging father, I am trying to untangle some other difficulty. I like gay parts, light comedy in which I can express the person I really am."

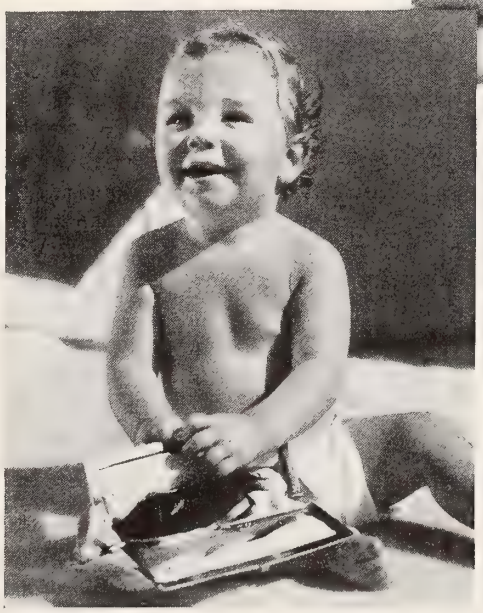
She is a gay soul, just made for parts that call for light, skillful comedy. Let's hope, now that she is staging a come-back, (you'll see her soon in "I'll Love You Always") that producers will appreciate this side of her.

EVEN though Nancy is a natural redhead—she has been a blonde and brunette, too! And here is where her story takes an unusual twist. Nancy is an individualist, she believes in doing what she wants regardless of silly criticism. Haven't you felt that you could make a magic change in your life if you could just become another person for awhile? The same feeling of change struck Nancy Carroll. Right at a time when things weren't running so smoothly and she was beginning to feel that her red hair wasn't such a crowning glory after all, she decided to become a blonde. So off to the hairdresser she trotted—she does everything impetuously and worries later. She emerged a blonde.



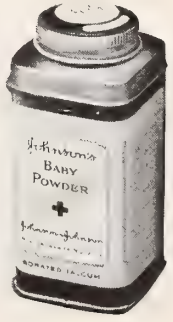
"I didn't notice that my change from redhead to blonde made such a difference with people who knew me well, but the change in the attitude of people who didn't know me was amazing. Especially among the men. They became so solicitous, they wanted to wait on me, protect me. No one ever bothered to protect red-haired Nancy Carroll, I can tell you; she could fight her own battles was the thought. I never experienced such a lovely, languid feeling—I could feel myself mentally relaxing, not wanting to express myself quite so forcefully. In fact, I felt sweet! A sissy.

"One of the most amusing experiences I had when I was a blonde was in a golf tournament. A prominent society woman, who is an expert golfer, was instructing a group of us on our weak points. Turning to me, she said, 'Now here's a little girl who will make a grand golfer. She has an easy swing and no temper.' Needless to say, she had never heard of Nancy Carroll!"

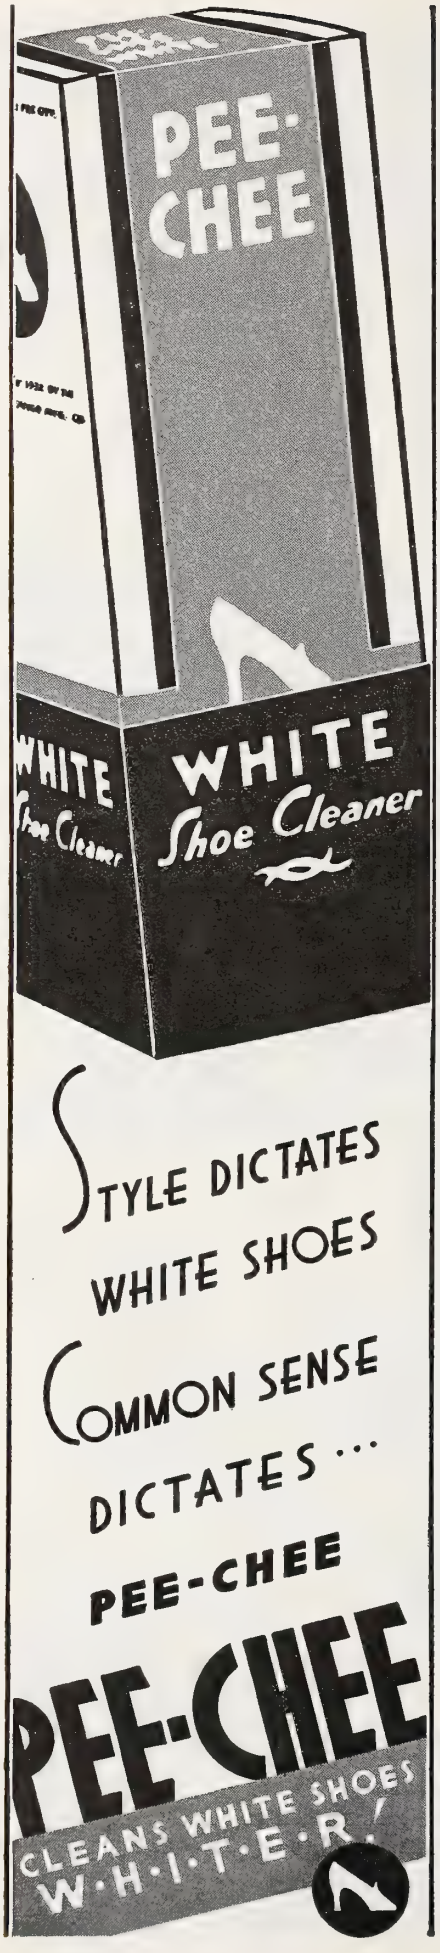


Even Nancy's husband felt that she was somehow different as a blonde. "He hated my blonde hair," Nancy explained. "He didn't complain about it but I knew that he thought it unbecoming, unlike me. Then one evening, when we were out dancing, I made some little complimentary

"I knew if I kept my eye on this thing Aunt Patty would leave it around some time where I could get it! Let's see—what does she do to this dingleberry on top to make it come open? Ah... that's the trick!"



"Look what I found! Contraption with a looking-glass! (I'm looking very well today.)... And what's this? Powder! Oh, I know what to do with that!... Put it under my chin and arms and where I sit down!"



"Hi, Aunt Pat! I tried your powder... but honest, it doesn't feel near as soft and fine and snuggly as mine. You ought to use Johnson's Baby Powder, Auntie... and then I'll bet you'd be a smoothie just like me!"

"I'm Johnson's Baby Powder... a real protection against chafing and rashes. Your thumb and finger will tell you why... I'm made of fine satiny Italian talc—no gritty particles as in some powders. No zinc stearate or orris-root either... Be sure to try Johnson's Baby Soap and Baby Cream, too!"

Johnson & Johnson
NEW BRUNSWICK NEW JERSEY

remark to him. He stood away from me, viewed me with surprise and made the astonishing remark, 'Now I know why I don't like you as a blonde, Nancy. I don't believe you when you say such sweet nothings. I keep thinking you are just giving me a line! You don't seem like yourself.'"

And that was when Nancy hastened back to the hairdresser to return to her own natural coloring!

A YEAR or so later, the need for change struck Nancy again—she loves change in everything. Her nature doesn't enjoy any very static state. This time it was jet black hair. Nancy said she looked like a hybrid. Not daunted by its peculiar hue, the first thing she did upon emerging from the dye, was to go shopping for every wild color she had never been able to wear as a redhead. Cerise and pink headed the list. However, people told her she looked demure and the Carroll individuality couldn't stand that. So, back to red again—and red it stays.

And here is a thought from Nancy who has been blonde and brunette but is redheaded. "Whenever boredom with yourself becomes too much to bear, go ahead and change your type. If you decide to dye your hair, be sure to go to an expert and have it done gradually so that your hair won't suffer. And be more than sure that you are brave enough to suffer the consequences of its growing back to its normal color when you are tired of the dyed shade."

In the matter of make-up, Nancy advocates the following for redheads. Use a yellowish powder, one on the yellow-copper side, this to tone down the blue-whiteness of the skin nearly all natural redheads possess. Use an orange-red lipstick. And wear colors so neutral in themselves that they make your hair stand out in contrast. Beige and brown are two of her favorite costume shades. She never wears more than two colors at a time.

Nancy's going to click again in Hollywood—and when she does it will be because of that bright red hair and the gay, fiery spirit that goes with it. Nancy's a redhead, all dye pots and experimental changes to the contrary, and Hollywood wants more of them.

I Bet I Stay Married

(Continued from page 60)

sort of raised my parents and that's one reason I thought I'd never get married. We are just a part of one another. I remember bringing them up. I'd tell mother, 'Now, father didn't mean that, mother. He'll say he's sorry later.'

"Of course, they quarreled. Any family that doesn't quarrel must get awful bored with each other. Only Ronni, my husband, has the disposition of an angel. He couldn't live with me if he hadn't. It's awful hard to quarrel with Ronni. He won't! He just goes out and slams the door as a climax, when he's had enough of what I'm saying.

